Panel investigating police to begin interviews

By MIKE BURGESS
State Press

An independent panel investigating the ASU Police Department's handling of a racial brawl on Alpha Drive in April is expected to begin interviewing witnesses next week and will submit its findings by late November, a panel official said.

The panel, formed by the University in June, was originally expected to report to interim ASU President Richard Peck by mid-October, but the investigation was hampered by the resignation of panel member Jerry Oliver.

Oliver, an assistant Phoenix police chief, resigned in August due to a possible conflict of interest when panel chairman Gerald P. Richard, a former Maricopa County attorney, joined the Phoenix Police Department as a legal adviser.

A replacement and two additional panel members have been selected.

Richard said the five-member panel met last week and has been gathering information about the fraternity row incident.

"We're shooting to get it done before Thanksgiving,"

Richard said of the investigation.

Meanwhile, acting ASU Police Chief Doug Bartosh said he is not concerned by the delay in the panel's investigation.

"I believe the outcome will be the same," said Bartosh, who said he believes his officers acted properly and will be cleared.

He also said he is more interested in the FBI's civil rights investigation, which was forwarded to the U. S. Justice Department in late July. The case is still open, said Deborah Burstion-Wade, a Justice Department spokeswoman.

ASU student seeks seat on Phoenix City Council

By MICHELLE HENRY
State Press

ASU student Frank Straka said he is willing to perform a juggling act — if it means he can serve on the Phoenix City Council.

On Oct. 3, Straka, a senior economics major, will find out if he will become a member of the council from District 1.

Straka, who already has a degree in business administration from UofA, is the youngest of five candidates seeking incumbent Bill Parks' seat in Northeast Phoenix.

The ASU student said that if he wins the election, juggling classes and politics would not be difficult.

'It would actually give me more mobility to take classes.'

— Frank Straka

for me because a lot of it is meeting with people from your district, and you can schedule that around classes," he said.

Straka said he decided to run for the seat because the incumbent was not representing the residents and said his chances for winning are good.

However, ASU assistant political science professor John Geer said first-time candidates like Straka face many obstacles.

"He faces a major hurdle of name recognition," he said, adding that Straka's chances might be better if he had grown up in the area.

The ASU student has lived in Northeast Phoenix since 1980 after moving from Philadelphia.

"Incumbents usually win races like these," Geer said. "But if he is able to overcome the lack of name recognition, he might have a chance."

Straka is not the first University student to run for the Phoenix City Council.

Straka said at least one other student has run for a council seat. Mark Madison sought a council spot in 1987 but was narrowly defeated by District 7 incumbent Mary Rose Wilcox.

Straka said he has learned that financing an election is not cheap.

"I've spent about $1,100 on my campaign so far," he said. "Most of it came from family and friends."

Associated Students of ASU President Paul Larson said he admires Straka's ambition.

"For someone whose schedule is as demanding as a typical student, I think it is certainly a challenge for him if he can handle it," Larson said. "To campaign is the most challenging thing."

Straka admitted that he does not have much political experience, but he is eager to do a good job.

Hurricane strikes fear into student from South Carolina

By JOIE ANN LaPOLLA
State Press

The fury of Hurricane Hugo was thousands of miles away for most ASU students, but for senior Trinette Cays the devastating storm was right in her own back yard.

After Hugo slammed into the South Carolina coast last week, the 23-year-old journalism major and Charleston resident worried for days until she heard from her family back home.

"It was scary not to know where everyone was," Cays said. "I didn't leave the couch and watched TV all day long and kept waiting for a phone call to see what damage was done to my family and home."

As Hugo approached the coastal city of Charleston during the night of Sept. 21, whipping up 135 mph winds and surging 17-foot waves far over the shoreline, Cays kept a constant eye on national news reports. This was also the last time before the storm that she would hear from her family, who had evacuated to Aiken, S.C., to escape the storm's fury.

"I heard the storm was heading toward Charleston and I called my family," Cays said. "They were trying not to alarm me. They were boarding and taping windows to prepare for the storm."

"It was unsettling and I had a sinking feeling."

Cays' father, stepmother and stepbrother, along with the rest of her extended family, live in Charleston. She attended her first two years of college at Winthrop College in nearby Rock Hill, S.C., which also was in the hurricane's path.

"Not to mention worrying about all my friends back home (in Charleston) but I also have friends in Charlotte that I was worried about," she said.

After Thursday, Cays played a "waiting game," she said. She cut out all the newspaper articles about the hurricane and watched every news report.

Bush sees 'fundamental change' as education summit begins

CHARLOTTESVILLE, Va. (AP) — The nation's governors assembled Wednesday for a summit conference with President Bush to combat mediocrity in U. S. schools. Bush predicted "fundamental changes" would result but ruled out a hefty increase in federal aid to education.

Controversy over spending rumbled just below the surface at the start of a day and a half of closed sessions on the historic campus of the University of Virginia, whose establishment was the proudest accomplishment of Thomas Jefferson — America's first "education president."

Bush spelled out his expectations before leaving Washington to join the governors, his wife and his Cabinet at the first meeting ever of a president and chief executives from the states to discuss education — historically a local matter. The president said he was looking for agreement committing the states "to restructure and to make those fundamental changes that are needed if we are going to improve educational performance."

But, he stressed: "We're not going to quintuple spending." He brushed aside calls for a vast expansion of the Head Start program to prepare poor children for school.

Refugees refuse to exit embassy in Prague, demand emigration

PRAGUE, Czechoslovakia (AP) — Hundreds of East Germans ignored spreading illness and pouring rain Wednesday as they crowded into the West German Embassy compound to press their demands to emigrate to the West.

Newcomers scaled the fence of the embassy garden, and refugees told reporters that about 1,500 were inside the embassy compound.

The East German government Tuesday offered them guaranteed emigration with impunity within six months if they would return home, but only 177 people accepted the offer.

The East Germans are hoping they will have the same luck as hundreds of East Germans who crowded the West German Embassy in Budapest, Hungary, in hopes of winning permission to leave their hard-line communist homeland. The refugees had been drawn to Hungary since May, when the reformist nation began dismantling its barriers along the western border.

In West Germany, border officials said more than 500 East Germans arrived overnight from Hungary via Austria. Since Hungary decided on Sept. 10 to allow East Germans free passage to the West, more than 22,000 refugees have arrived in West Germany, where they are given automatic citizenship.

West German Foreign Minister Hans Dietrich Genscher arranged to meet East German Foreign Minister Oskar Fischer at the United Nations in New York on Wednesday night, with the refugee situation high on their agenda.

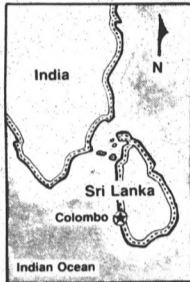

Hundreds of beds were made available Wednesday to accommodate the swelling crowd in the Prague embassy. Conditions were deteriorating for the East Germans.

Several of the more than 250 children were said to have fallen ill with diarrhea and colds following heavy rain that began during the night.

Some refugees said the crowd included many people with criminal records who were not trying to emigrate for political reasons.

Government cease-fire begins, but radicals kill 3 in Sri Lanka

COLOMBO, Sri Lanka (AP) — Sinhalese radicals shot and killed three people Wednesday, the military said, the same day the government began a cease-fire aimed at encouraging the radicals to begin peace talks.

The victims were a train driver, a government labor officer and a bodyguard of a provincial council member.

Soldiers halted military operations against Sinhalese militants at 6 a.m. and said the cease-fire would last three days.

Less than four hours later, Sinhalese militants shot and killed a bodyguard of Jayasinghe Bandara, a member of the government's Provincial Council, military officials said. The gunmen ambushed Bandara's car in the Baddula district, 80 miles east of Colombo, but Bandara escaped unharmed.

The officials, who cannot be identified under briefing rules, said the radicals also shot to death a train driver and a government labor officer and torched 10 government buses in central and southern Sri Lanka.

Bush confirms increased security for his kids, denies direct threat

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Bush said Tuesday that he won't be "deterred by rumors" that Colombian drug lords have threatened to kidnap one of his five children if the U. S.

and Colombian governments don't grant the drug lords amnesty.

"I can't do my job if I get deterred by rumors," Bush told reporters in the Oval Office.

However, the president confirmed that Secret Service protection had been increased for his children.

"But that to the degree security has been stepped up in accordance with the law on the Bush kids, it is not because of a specific, hard piece of intelligence — hard threat — and I'm confident of that," Bush said.

New York Newsday quoted unidentified intelligence sources in Tuesday's editions as saying that they believe Bush's 30-year-old daughter, Dorothy LeBlond, is most vulnerable to an attack.

The sources told the newspaper the kidnap threat also applied to top U. S. officials involved in anti-drug efforts. The sources declined to elaborate.

The threats surfaced about two weeks after Bush's Sept. 5 speech outlining his strategy against drug smuggling and abuse, the sources said.

Police battle anti-base protesters during Quayle visit to Philippines

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — Police hurled tear gas Wednesday to disperse 2,000 leftists demonstrating against Vice President Dan Quayle and American military bases in Manila. President Corazon Aquino accepted a U. S. offer to discuss the bases' future.

Quayle called the ambush-slayings of two American civilians on Tuesday "cowardly murders" and said a majority of Filipinos want the bases to remain.

"Let me be direct — terrorists will not drive Americans from the Philippines," he told U. S. troops and dependents at Clark Air Base and the Subic Bay naval base, the largest of the six American installations here.

Police fired tear gas after demonstrators refused to end an anti-base rally near the presidential palace. Riot police also drove back hundreds of others who tried to march to the main gate at Clark during Quayle's appearance.

Police arrested 157 people for joining anti-Quayle rallies in the capital.

Opposition to the bases is increasing among Filipinos, who see the facilities as an infringement on national sovereignty.

Rec Center

ASU uses building fund to pay operating costs

Lynn Vavreck
Editorial Asst.

Wednesday was the official ribbon-cutting ceremony for the student Rec Center. Yeah. All the responsible administrators were present for this enormously joyous occasion. Finally, they have given students something they really want and really like.

But actually, there's an oxymoron here — the words "responsible administrators" create a problem, especially in regard to the Rec Center.

Everybody loves the Rec Center. But if you haven't had the chance to use it yet, you better hurry up, since the University neglected to secure money to run it.

It seems there has been slight error in the planning for this facility. Actually, forget slight, this is about as big as they come.

The facility was built with money from students. That's why we are all paying $25 extra each semester. But, the deal was, if students built the facility, the University would run it.

This is not happening.

It seems there has been a misunderstanding between students and administrators about what our money is to be used for.

The University promised students that it would come up with the money to operate and program the facility. Students promised the University they would come up with the money to build it.

Sounds simple enough.

But the University didn't follow through on its end of the deal. Now we have an incredible Rec Center on campus — and no money to keep it running.

In a poor attempt to solve this dilemma, the University, led by former Vice President for Student Affairs Betty Asher, decided that using the students' money to run the building would not be bad at all.

But they were wrong.

'Everybody loves the Rec Center. But if you haven't had the chance to use it yet, you better hurry up, since the University neglected to secure money to run it.'

After payments are made on the Rec Center each year, there is about $400,000 in student money left over. This money was supposed to be put aside so that students could expand the facility, buy new equipment or repair the building in the years ahead. This money was never supposed to be used to pay for salaries, electricity and air conditioning — the basic costs of running the facility.

But it is.

How could University administrators stand around and watch the Rec Center being built, knowing all along that there was no money to operate it?

All along, administrators promised students that they would deal with the issue of budgeting. Students were appeased throughout the entire process by promises like, "We'll come up with something," "Don't worry, it will work itself out." Well, they certainly did come up with something, it just wasn't what the students expected — or were promised.

This prompts me to believe that the University never intended to ask the Legislature for an adequate amount of operational money. Officials planned on using students' money all along.

This is perhaps a good example of that old saying: It is much easier to beg forgiveness than it is to ask permission.

After all, now that the Rec Center is built and students love it, what would happen if the administration tried to shut it down? Moreover, what would the reaction be if the reason for shutting it down was because some students didn't want their $25 to go toward operating costs?

Yes, the University has really tied this one up nicely.

I hope that the responsible parties are sitting behind their desks somewhere on campus feeling deeply satisfied that they have managed to lie and deceive students.

In reality, they should be deeply ashamed. The fact that this entire episode appears to have been premeditated by administrators makes it even worse.

If you haven't become irate about the regents using our money to pay for a $100,000 lawsuit or the faculty using our money to build their prestigious club, then now is the time to get upset.

Now, for those of you who may be thinking, where was the student input? How did this happen? Did administrators think students wouldn't be upset? These are all good questions.

'After all, now that the Rec Center is built and students love it, what would happen if the administration tried to shut it down?'

But think about this.

There were, and still are, students who serve on the Campus Recreation Board of Governors, the committee that dictates Rec Center policy. These students voiced their opinions over and over, only to be given the standard administrator's "pat on the back" with a sly smile and a slick comment like, "well, we all just want to get the building running."

Sometimes students can get used by administrators this way. It happens all the time, actually. The problem is, most students don't know it is happening to them.

But the students on the Recreation Board of Governors were well aware of this plot against students. But they were strung along until, well, until they graduated. It works out nicely for administrators that way. If a student is causing a "problem" — by voicing student concerns — then they can be assured that eventually he or she will graduate and move on.

It's too bad ASU can't "graduate" some of its administrators.

It's not too late to stop the administration from breaking yet another promise to students. ASU should be forced to live up to its end of the bargain and find a way to pay for the operating cost of the Rec Center.

After all, that was the deal.

Letters

Goodbye

Editor:

I have been a faculty member in the Department of Foreign Languages for 12 years, and I will be leaving ASU to accept a position at another university. I have had the chance to thank and to bid farewell to colleagues, but I would like to state (for the record, so to speak) that during my time at ASU I have been impressed by the quality of students I have had.

I have taught 300-500 level courses in Spanish language and literature, as well as a number of courses in literature in translation. With almost no exceptions, I found students to be conscientious, intelligent, challenging and courteous.

I can only hope that my students at Indiana University will be as hardworking and gracious as their counterparts at ASU. My thanks to those ASU students whom I have had the opportunity to teach and from whom I have learned so much.

Larson's conciliatory stances weaken the presidency

Carolyn Höfig

Remember Paul Larson's campaign slogan?

Last semester, when Larson was running for the Associated Students of ASU presidency, his signs proclaimed: "A politician does what is popular; a leader does what is right." It was a promising motto in April.

But now, five weeks into the fall term, Larson has yet to emerge as a leader — or even a politician, by the definition on his signs. He has issued plenty of statements and given assorted speeches, but he has failed to establish the kind of leadership students had come to expect from the student government during the past year.

The kind of leadership the University is going to need this year.

Ask him to define his perception of his position, and Larson replies with a well-delivered — if prepackaged — statement. "My job is to articulate the needs and concerns of ASU students to the University administration, the Board of Regents and the state Legislature," he said.

Larson approaches his position from a firmly pragmatic perspective, the standpoint of a man well seasoned in government. Therein lies the problem.

Larson, who became student body president after two years as an ASASU lobbyist working in state relations, is a little too practical for students' own good. His extensive experience with both the Arizona Board of Regents and the state Legislature has taught him to understand the "other side" and its limitations.

But while this "understanding" may have made for happy lobbying, it has led to a presidency that sounds conciliatory at best — and weak-spined at worst.

How can the leader of ASASU take a hard-line stance on an issue if he walks into the discussion with such empathy for the other side that his starting point is the "logical compromise"?

He can't, as Larson's performance has shown.

To Paul Larson, the office of chief executive of the student government is no place for utopian visions.

"You have to have a strong sense of idealism and you have to convey that," he asserted. "But whether you can reach the goals depends on what issue you're working on, who you're working with and what the resources are."

'Larson approaches his position from a firmly pragmatic perspective, the standpoint of a man well seasoned in government. Therein lies the problem.'

"Resources" seem to concern Larson greatly. Consider the Arizona Board of Regents, which is currently appealing a court decision that would require the release of the 240 names of the candidates for the ASU presidency. The board wants the university system to foot the bill for the legal fees.

"I'm not pleased that any of us has to pay for it," Larson said. "That's been my position for a long time."

Only the cement of that conviction hasn't quite set.

Although Larson asserts that "the regents should be responsible for the fees themselves," he concedes that "they currently don't have the resources."

So he's ready to work out a lesser-of-all-evils deal that would see each of the three Arizona universities paying 33 percent of the tab, which could run as high as $300,000. What's wrong with this picture?

Recall the leader from Larson's campaign signs — the one who does what is right. Larson refuses to establish who is right in the regents case, preferring instead to straddle the proverbial fence. While he agrees with the board that the whole list of candidates need not be released, he also contends that more names should have been made public.

He doesn't know that "magic number," he admitted. But he knows the regents don't budget for things like lawsuits. It's those "resources" again.

What's a pragmatist to do?

Another issue that looms large is a tuition increase — Larson's pet theme from election '89. Consider, however, the rhetorical politician from Larson's presidential campaign, with his eye to the popular. It's fair to assume that a hard fight for a 0 percent tuition increase — coming on the heels of a substantial increase last fall — would be popular among students.

It's not entirely unthinkable. Like last year: The regents wanted a $156 tuition increase, student representatives initially said no increase; they agreed at $84.

But Larson seems to enter in compromise mode, and his convictions don't appear strong enough to withstand the give and take of the political process.

"I would love to go in and ask for a 0 percent tuition increase," Larson said Wednesday. "However, I know that to ask for a 0 percent increase would be irresponsible on my part."

How so? Well, the University will need the added revenues one way or the other, what with the governor's impending budget cuts and all on the horizon. Of course the students will have to chip in a little . . . If this sounds vaguely familiar, it should. It's the administrative justification for a tuition hike — just out of the mouth of the ASASU president.

Larson said he has made a lot of phone calls about the issue — but don't leaders do more than make phone calls? It's a curious notion of public service.

He has no specific numbers right now, he said, but "I'd like to see (the coming increase) considerably lower than $84."

There must be a position in here somewhere.

Larson vacillates similarly on other issues:

•On the possibility of an enrollment cap at ASU, Larson said he would rather see the University opt for a third campus.

"(Branch campuses) are generally a positive step," he said. But he added, "When we can start supporting the campuses that currently exist, we can think about branching out."

He will go so far as to say he thinks "a cap is a very negative way to curb enrollment." What will he do about it? He said he is "planning to be more vocal now that the issue has come up." Whatever that means.

•The nascent Faculty Club poses another point of potential contention. Larson doesn't like the latest funding plan — a proposed loan of sorts from "investment income" — but, he said, "I'm supportive of the program, generally."

"I'm less dissatisfied," he said. "I'm still mad but not as mad as I used to be."

See, Larson understands the administration's problems with the Faculty Club or skyrocketing enrollment. He knows the Arizona Legislature is not singling out the university system, that things are tough all over. He understands that the regents' lawsuit leaves the board in a "resource" conundrum.

Understanding the "other side's" position is important in government; it ultimately leads to comfortable middle ground for all parties.

But Larson understands too well — too well to get much done.

Ticket premiums OK

Editor:

In regard to your Sept. 22, 1989 editorial "Frieder era to cost students," I wish to point out a slight error. As a strong supporter of ASU athletics, I certainly agree that to penalize the students by moving their seats is most unacceptable. It is too often forgotten that the students are the backbone of the University, not the general public.

I do wish to point out that the Cardinals are not "The only other sports team in town that charges premiums on seats . . ." The fact is that ASU football developed this unique practice many years ago, well before the Marmie, Cooper or Rogers era. The Sun Angels organization charges such premiums which give members such luxuries such as a decent seat and parking. Nobody is screaming about these monies which have brought the University millions of dollars and facilities such as the track stadium and help pay for the top deck of Sun Devil Stadium. The athletic programs would definitely not be where they are today without their help.

The University needs to find a happy medium, as in the case of football seats. In football, both the students and the general public share in the opportunity to enjoy great seating. Condemning this committee for these premium prices is not the answer and is somewhat shortsided. After all, the "premium" system works fine for football. Those of us who supported ASU football should equally share the blame for not complaining about football premiums.

Also, your editorial board certainly should not associate the blame with Bill Frieder, possibly tarnishing his local reputation before he has any chance to prove his worth. I would hope your editorial board will better review all the facts in the future before passing judgment.

The Key to Happiness

No 2

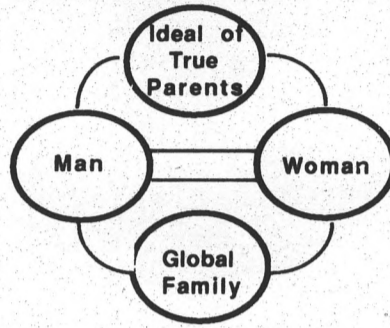

1 Everyone, without exception, is struggling to gain happiness. Deep within the heart of all individuals is an ideal of love. The challenge is to do what is right, not just fantasize or talk about love or other spiritual qualities.

The desire for true love can only be fulfilled through substantial action. This requires the body to perfectly unite with the mind.

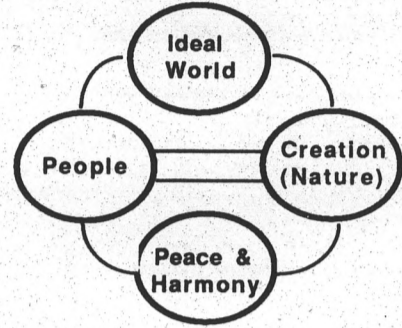

2 The family should be the school of true love; The father should demonstrate how a man ought to live and how he is to care for a woman and vice versa.

The parent-child relationship is the backbone of the universe. The children should be taught to look at all people as one family. To be brothers and sisters is only possible because of our common parent, God.

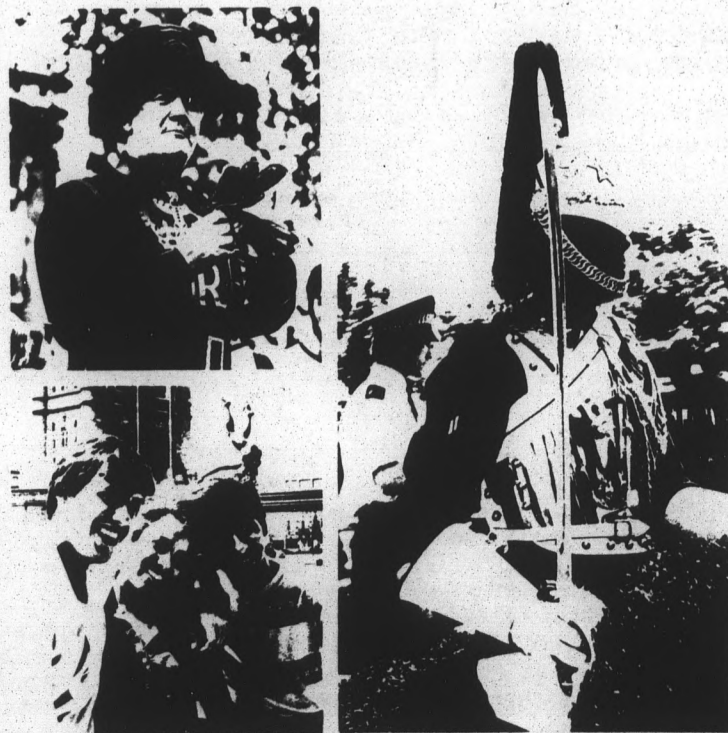

3 The ideal world (Kingdom of God, Utopia) is a place of harmony in which each grown-up cares for nature as we should love one another. Nature is actually your parent; It supplied all ingredients that make up your physical body.

Ultimate fulfillment will be when the one family of man takes care of planet earth as his own home. This path is happiness.

Safety Escort Service requests increase; new supplies needed

By ELISE ELSBERRY
State Press

In its first week of operation, ASU's Safety Escort Service has received almost twice as many requests for escorts as it averaged last year.

Tami Willingham, Associated Students of ASU campus affairs vice president, said the increase in requests has prompted a need for more equipment and maybe two "satellite stations," one at Palo Verde Main and one at Saguaro residence halls.

"The number of requests last year averaged 39 a week last year," she said. "This first week alone, we had 65 students call and receive safety escorts."

To accommodate the increase in demand, the Safety Escort Service is asking the ASASU Senate for an additional $1,800 in funding for the 1989-90 school year.

Last year, Safety Escort Service had a budget of $6,500. The bill, which was presented to the Senate on Tuesday, would increase the current $7,200 budget to almost $9,000.

Safety Escort's proposed budget for the 1990-91 school year would increase by $2,144 to accommodate the additional number of weeks the service would be in effect for the fall semester.

If passed, the additional money would pay for two more base managers to run the satellite stations on the north and south ends of campus.

Also, Safety Escort Service will need more walkie-talkies for its volunteers.

Currently there are 30 volunteers that are escorting between 7 p.m. and 12:15 a.m. Sunday through Thursday, including five female volunteers that answer the phones at the dispatch center and occasionally pair up to escort students.

David Harber, director of the safety escort program, said escorts can only transport up to five groups of people at a time due to a shortage of radios.

Harber and Willingham agreed there is a need for more radios, but the purchase is being held up by the cost of the walkie-talkies.

"The walkie-talkies cost around $500 a piece," Willingham said.

Willingham said DPS currently has "around" 30 old radios it is replacing in October and she is hoping the department will donate the walkie-talkies to the safety escorts.

"Hopefully, we will be able to get them for no cost," she said. "Then all we would have to pay for would be any repairs and changing the frequency."

Safety Escort Services is also trying to get permission to use one of the Disabled Student Resources' golf carts to help transport disabled students.

"One (disabled) student calls and requests an escort from Payne Hall to the parking structure near Rural after class," Harber said. He added that he hopes the number of requests for the service increases.

"The hot spot now seems to be between 8:30 p.m. and 9:30 p.m.," he said. "There are a lot of girls going to the Student Rec Center at night."

Willingham said she hopes more students will use the escorts.

"Girls are starting to realize it's not safe to walk at night alone," she said.

Panel

The ASU chapter of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People has said the University is taking too long to report its findings.

The panel was formed last spring by former ASU President J. Russell Nelson, who commissioned the panel as part of a 13-point plan to combat campus racism after students protested an incident in which two black students were handcuffed and taken into "protective custody" April 15 in front of the Sigma Alpha Epsilon fraternity house.

The students were the only people arrested in a brawl that began when they were attacked by white fraternity members who mistook them for suspects in an earlier assault on a SAE member. The students said ASU police bullied and humiliated them in front of a mob of white fraternity members who were chanting racial slurs.

The University panel will determine if ASU police broke any department policies, law enforcement standards or laws during the incident.

Experts to discuss media, business, government ethics

By RICHARD LAMPING
State Press

Arizona experts in media, business and government will be on campus Friday to give their perspectives on ethics in the three fields.

Eric Farber, an ASU senior and the associate director of Arizonans for Campaign Ethics, said "Ethics On Trial," which will be broadcast from the KAET-TV (Channel 8) station, is the brainchild of Dick Mahoney, former executive director of ACE.

Farber said the program originally began as a conference at the ASU College of Law, but the television station expressed an interest in taping it.

Farber, who has been organizing the taping for the past six months, said ethics will not be handled by the panelists simply saying "everyone should do good," adding that they will delve into the real issue of "where to draw the line."

"They're going to be covering different, specific ideas in the ethical realm of each section," Farber said.

Funding was provided for the program through grants from the Arizona Humanities Council and the ASU Lincoln Center for Ethics.

The panel discussions will be aired in one-hour segments at 2 p.m. for four consecutive Saturdays beginning Oct. 14.

The first panel will address media and will include editors from The Arizona Republic and The Phoenix Gazette, as well as reporters from The Associated Press and KTVK-TV (Channel 3).

The second panel will address business ethics and will include Republic columnist John Kolbe as mediator and Jack Pfister, general manager of Salt River Project.

The third panel will deal with government ethics and will feature Richard Kleindienst, former U. S. Attorney General under former President Richard Nixon.

The fourth panel will be a combination of all three areas called Ethics in Action.

A live audience will be present during the KAET taping. The taping will be free to students, while the public must pay $10.

Asher: Rec Center resulted from the 'power of students'

By KELLY JAIN
State Press

A former ASU official congratulated students for turning a dream into reality during a dedication ceremony Wednesday.

Betty Turner Asher, former vice president for student affairs and current president of the University of South Dakota, spoke to an audience of about 250 at the Student Recreation Complex.

Asher, who has been an advocate of the recreation complex, said the building of the center resulted directly from the "power of students."

In 1985, students voted in a referendum to pay a fee that would assure construction of the complex. Full-time students will pay $25 per semester for the next 30 years, while part-time students will pay $12 per semester.

"The administration really did not have to do a lot for this building," she said, adding that it did lend its support to the project.

Gerald Maas, ASU's director of recreational sports and student activities, agreed, adding that the complex is "of the students, for the students and by the students."

Keith Jacobson, associate director of recreational sports and student activities, said, "students clearly had a leadership role in a commitment to a building and in the design of the components in the building."

In addition, Jacobson said former Associated Students of ASU President John Fees played a key role in launching the construction of the structure on the south end of campus near the Business College.

Jacobson received a recognition plaque for his 15-year involvement in the recreation center concept during the dedication ceremony.

Interim President Richard Peck said he was "especially pleased" that a center requested by students is now a reality.

Christine Wilkinson, ASU vice president for student affairs, echoed his sentiments.

"Fifty-one thousand individuals can't be wrong," she said. "That's how many individuals participated in the activities in this complex just during the first two weeks," she said.

ASASU President Paul Larson, right, presents a plaque to Keith Jacobson, associate director of recreational sports and student activities, at the Student Recreation Complex dedication ceremony.

ASU Police Report

ASU police reported the following incidents that occurred between 7 a.m. Tuesday and 7 a.m. Wednesday:

- A bus driver was assaulted by an unknown man, possibly an ASU student, police said, in Lot 51 at 2:30 a.m. last Saturday after driving a group of students to a formal dance at Gainey Ranch in Scottsdale. He allegedly received a black eye from an altercation that started with name calling at the dance.
- A man not affiliated with ASU was arrested for allegedly possessing marijuana and drug paraphernalia at his trailer house.
- An ASU employee reported receiving threatening phone messages at her office at the Business Administration Building between 6 p.m. Monday and 8:20 a.m. Tuesday.
- A thief stole a mens silver and blue 21-inch Bridgestone mountain bicycle, valued at $450, from the bicycle racks on the north side of the Engineering Research Center where it was locked with a cable and padlock.

• A thief stole a student's purse from the third floor of the Music Building between 9 p.m. and 9:30 p.m. Saturday while it was left in the hallway unattended.

• A thief stole a beach bag and its contents from a practice field blockhouse while it was left unattended between 4:30 p.m. and 5:30 p.m. Tuesday.

Hugo

Jack W. Beasley Jr./State Press

Trinette Cays, an ASU journalism major, describes the damage done to her home and neighborhood in Charleston, S.C., by Hurricane Hugo. Cays said her father described Charleston as a "war zone."

Last Friday morning, the massive storm ripped into the historic city, leveling buildings and throwing trees. Power lines toppled and boats along the coast were scattered about like miniature toys. The roof of Charleston's City Hall was swept off by the pounding wind and the state's nearby Barrier Islands were washed completely away.

Meanwhile, Cays was awakened at 7 a.m. Friday by a friend's phone call that brought her the bad news.

"My girlfriend from work called and said, 'I hate to tell you this, but it (Hugo) is at Charleston,'" Cays said. "I felt devastated. I didn't know what to expect or how severe the damage was."

Similar to the days before the storm, Cays watched the unnerving television reports that broadcast Hugo's aftermath.

"They had just started showing damage that was done to Charleston," Cays said. "King Street, one of the most historic sights in Charleston, was gone. Then they showed the Barrier Islands, where I would go in the summer, and they were gone."

"Can you imagine them telling you Tempe was gone?"

Charleston, with a population of about 500,000, is a port city located on the central coast of South Carolina. More than 30 buildings were leveled by the storm, and electricity and water supplies were cut off. At least 21 deaths were reported in the Carolinas, Virginia and New York, and damage costs are expected to run into the hundreds of millions of dollars as a result of the storm.

Hugo is reported to be one of the worst storms to hit that area in the past 30 years.

As Cays continued to watch news reports, the fear for her family's safety mounted. But the most frightening part of her vigil was when she saw a neighbor on the national news.

"I began to cry," Cays said. "I was in shock because you had no idea what was going on there."

Cays frantically tried to reach her parents in Aiken but could not get a phone line to South Carolina. She also wanted to go home, but there were no flights into Charleston.

Finally, Cays' parents called on Saturday.

"I cried I was so thankful that they were OK," she said. "My dad sounded incredibly sad, but he was willing to talk about it."

"He told me the house was still standing."

Cays' home had minor damages compared to the other houses in the neighborhood. The roof had been torn and many windows were broken, but the structure still stood.

The next day, Cays' father began to work on repairing the house and stayed in it to protect it from looters. But he said the rest of Charleston looked like a "war zone."

Cays' entire family has returned home but is living without electricity.

ASU Office of Student Life reported that they have not been contacted by any other students who were affected by Hurricane Hugo.

Cays calls her family every day since the storm hit Charleston.

"It was a long three days until I got in touch with everyone I was close to," she said. "This makes me more aware of how natural disasters can happen — and there is nothing you can do about it."

BERGEN, Norway (AP) — The Norwegian State Railroad's luck was on the wrong track this week. The trouble started Monday when sparks from a bonfire lit by railroad workers set fire to a wooden structure used to keep snow off the tracks. Workers rolled out fire hoses only to find that a defective coupling had cut water pressure. They fixed the coupling, but the old hoses ruptured when the pressure increased. The blazing structure then collapsed onto the tracks, and the heat warped the rails. The newspaper Bergens Tidene said about 1,000 passengers were stranded for hours in the mountains outside Bergen and finally put onto buses.

Former GCC athlete returns as Tiger starter

By PAUL CORO
State Press

Three years ago, a diminutive Damon Mays was watching his Phoenix Central High School football team from the stands.

Saturday night, Mays will be starting at wide receiver for the University of Missouri as they battle ASU at Sun Devil Stadium.

Mays played only basketball at Central because of his former lack of size and interest for football.

"Not playing (in high school) hurt me at first," Mays said. "I didn't know a lot about football. It's not that easy."

Although his father played football at Michigan State, the elder Mays emphasized an education over a football career.

After graduating, Mays chose to begin his football career at Glendale Community College in a most unusual manner.

"I looked in the paper one day and tried to find the sorriest team, since I was just starting out," Mays said.

That sorry team turned out to be the undefeated 1988 national junior college football champion in Mays' sophomore year.

Unfortunately, Mays missed most of the season. He initially injured his shoulder by landing on it in a scrimmage.

Later in the season, Mays tried to come back too early and broke his collarbone when he again crashed to the ground. He underwent surgery in the fall.

"I am still a little timid about diving after the ball," Mays said. "I'll do it, but I am going to be hesitant until I get used to it."

In the four games he did play during the 1988 season, Mays was instrumental in breaking games open with seven catches that were good for an average of 37.5 yards per reception.

"I really missed being out there," he said. "It was still a lot of fun being part of a national championship team."

"D-Ice", as ASU junior strong safety Phillippi Sparks and other GCC teammates dubbed him, did not receive many scholarship offers at the conclusion of the 1988 campaign due to his injury.

"Missouri heard about me so I took a trip out here (Columbia) with (Tiger quarterback Kent) Kiefer and I liked it a lot," Mays said.

Kiefer, who began his football career at ASU, and Mays played against each other when Kiefer was Phoenix College's signal caller. The two Tigers did not know each other until the flight.

Mays said he probably would have gone to ASU if an offer was made but added that he is happy at Mizzou.

"They just didn't show any interest, but I don't have a grudge," Mays said.

Mays, a 5-foot-9, 169-pound junior, made an early start for himself at Missouri by enrolling in January so that he could participate in spring practice.

In the spring, Mays beat out former flexbone quarterback Skip Leach in new Tiger Head Coach Bob Stull's pro-style offense.

"Playing in the spring helped out a lot," Mays said. "It was the best thing I could have ever done."

Mays has started off the season in impressive fashion. In Missouri's three opening contests, he completed nine receptions for 97 yards.

Although still football young, the 4.4 second 40-yard dash flier said he feels his play has really taken shape.

"I have tried to be a complete player," Mays said. "I just try to help the team in anyway I can."

Mays attributes his continued success to his hard work over the summer. He said it has paid off in helping him adjust to a new situation.

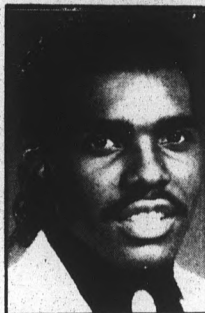

"We're starting a new program here, and we'll be good one day," Mays said. "We could be good right now. As soon as we get rid of the bad breaks, we will be OK."

Mays is majoring in educational studies at Mizzou. He said he hopes to coach basketball, his true sport, someday.

Since leaving Arizona, Mays has found settling in to be difficult because he is such a long way from home.

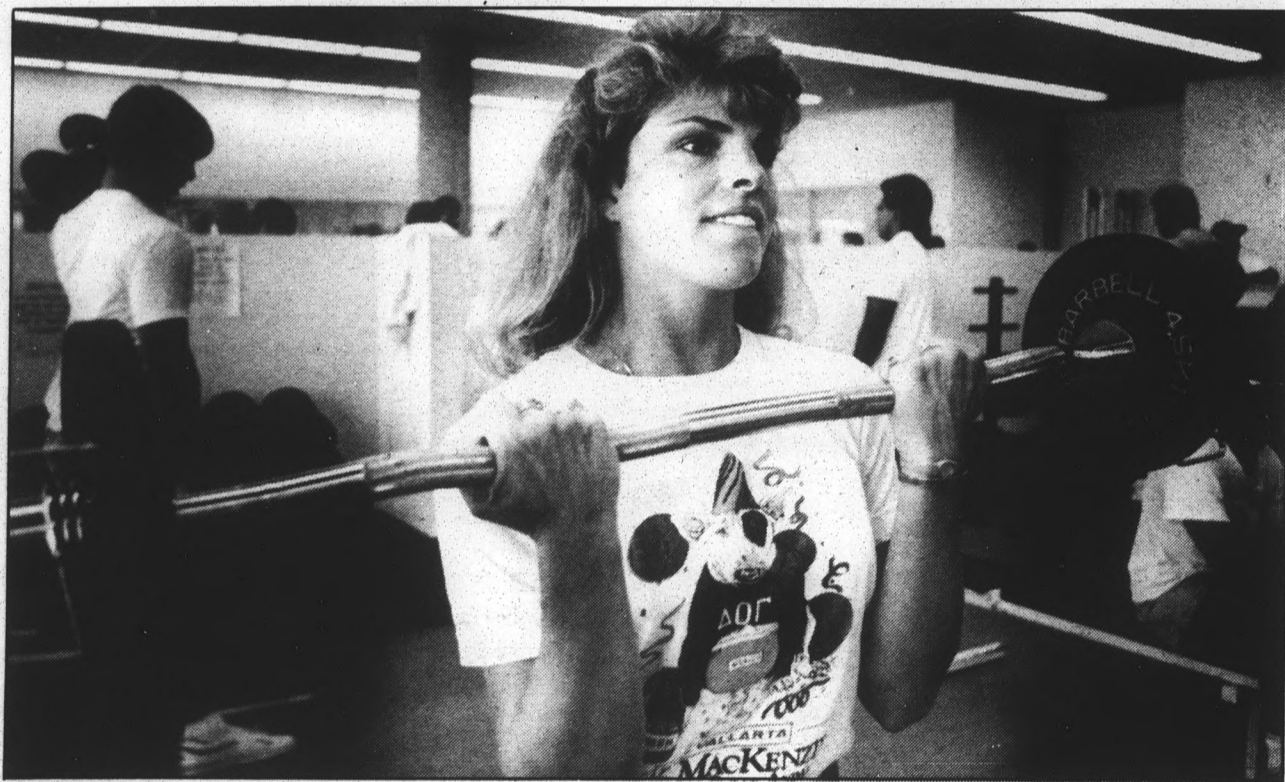

Mays said he is hoping Saturday night's game will be an exciting one for all the friends and family that he will be reunited with.

"Everybody who knows me is not going to miss it."

Cross training becomes latest trend: 'Just do it'

Kelly Karol, ASU coordinator of fitness and sport skills, advocates cross training.

By SONJA LEWIS
State Press

ASU students and people nationwide are turning to cross training and utilizing its advantages in an effort to make exercise fun and effective.

American Health, a fitness magazine, calls cross training America's newest fitness trend. By alternating two or more forms of exercise, cross training can help to alleviate boredom that often comes with repetitious exercise.

Also, cross training can minimize injuries, which happens if people push parts of their body too hard, the magazine stated.

Kelley Karol, ASU coordinator of fitness and sport skills, advocates cross training and said she sees it frequently at the Student Recreation Complex.

"I alternate my routine, and I think it is exciting to know that you can do all of those things," Karol said. "We are seeing a lot of cross training in our own weight room."

Karol said the weight room, which includes various machines, is similar to cross training because people alternate exercises. For example, people rotate between the weights, the rowing machine and the Life Cycle.

Kathy Moran, a freshman business major, takes advantage of the weight room and other services the center offers.

"I workout, swim, and play racquetball, so I don't get bored," she said. "If I don't, I feel really mushy."

Another business major, sophomore Brian Martin, agreed that cross training prevents boredom and said he cross trains in order to exercise different parts of his body.

"I swim for the cardio-vascular, and lift weights for muscle tone," Martin said. "I sometimes play racquetball for fun."

Rugby club prepares for battle

By LARRY NEWELL
State Press

With the most pivotal matches occurring later in the season, the Sun Devil Rugby Club is using its early season matches to fine tune the team's performance.

"Although the early season matches do count on our record, the major part of the season is in the spring, and our fall matches serve to prepare us for this competition," said Gary Lane, ASU rugby president.

The Sun Devils won one of their three matches Saturday at the Michelob Northern Arizona Tens Tournament in Flagstaff.

In the first match, ASU trounced the Sierra Vista Rugby Club, 40-3.

"We played very well in our first game," Lane said. "Our team used its quickness to pull ahead early, and the match was never in question."

ASU's principal offensive threat was sophomore scrum half Robert Day, who scored eight points and was the team leader Saturday.

"Robert performed very well and played very hard throughout the day," Lane said.

In the second game, the Sun Devils engaged in a defensive struggle against the Tempe Old Devils, with Tempe winning 8-6 in the waning seconds.

After taking a 4-0 lead into halftime, the Sun Devils pulled ahead, 6-4, on a goal by Robert Day with six minutes remaining. But ASU was unable to maintain the lead as the Old Devils scored in the last 30 seconds, winning the match 8-6.

"This was a very controversial match," Lane said. "We were to get the ball out of bounds, but play was stopped as the referee tried to quiet the sidelines. When play resumed, the referee mistakenly awarded the ball to the Old Devils and they scored on the following play."

As the third match approached the skies around Flagstaff turned grey. The Sun Devils lost 27-3, battling the elements as well as a top caliber team from Whales.

"As a team we were not disappointed with our play," Lane said. "Overall, we played well defensively and we got a chance to play against some very good competition."

ASU's next opponent will be Oct. 7 against the Camelback Rugby Club on the ASU bandfield.

Members of the ASU rugby team, in action last season, are currently preparing for competition this season.

Stump Mitchell hints possible comeback

PHOENIX (AP) — Phoenix Cardinals running back Stump Mitchell has a new knee and also a new outlook about continuing his nine-year NFL career.

Mitchell, who injured his left knee in last Sunday's 35-7 road loss to the New York Giants, underwent reconstructive surgery Tuesday at Good Samaritan Regional Medical Center here.

He told reporters Monday that he was leaning toward retirement at age 30 instead of going through 12 months of extensive rehabilitation.

But Wednesday, Mitchell was hinting about a possible comeback next season.

"I'll work hard to rehab my knee and make it as strong as possible," Mitchell said in a telephone interview from his hospital bed. "The trainers think I can have a strong knee with the proper rehab. We'll just have to wait and see."

Mitchell, the Cardinals' all-time combined-yardage leader with 11,988 and No. 2 career rusher at 4,649 yards, severely injured his knee while trying to cut back upfield early in the second quarter.

His foot caught in the artificial turf at Giants Stadium in East Rutherford, N.J., and New York linebacker Carl Banks also hit Mitchell's knee with his helmet while trying to make the tackle.

A magnetic resonance test done Monday showed "the ligaments were stretched real bad but they didn't detect any tears," said Mitchell, who started hoping that he might play again "in eight or 10 weeks."

Team trainers feared the worst, however, and Mitchell realized it Tuesday on the operating table.

"It was like they thought — torn (medial collateral) ligament, cartilage and anterior cruciate (ligament)," Mitchell said. "After surgery, I was like a little baby. I cried for about an hour."

"I was crying because I had lost something. Football is a No. 1 love. I knew there was a possibility I may be through playing."

"But I feel pretty good now. I'm a little sore. Today was the first day I was able to sleep. The other days, there was excruciating pain. It's all right now and I think I'm getting out Friday."

Mitchell said team orthopedic surgeon Dr. Russell Chick "says it will be six months before we can tell where I might be. The trainers want me to have a healthy knee, not just as a football player but as an individual."

National League: No games scheduled

OAKLAND, Calif. (AP) — Oakland clinched the division title Wednesday night with a 5-0 victory over the Texas Rangers.

Meanwhile, Bo Jackson hit his second career grand slam Wednesday as the Kansas City Royals, who were eliminated in the title race, beat the California Angels 8-3.

DETROIT (AP) — Toronto maintained a one-game lead in the American League East Wednesday night as Kelly Gruber drove in four runs and led the Blue Jays past the Detroit Tigers 8-1.

Second-place Baltimore beat Milwaukee 4-0 so the Orioles and Blue Jays will decide the title this weekend in a three-game series at Toronto. Jeff Ballard, 18-8, will start the series for Baltimore and Todd Stottlemyre, 7-7, will pitch for Toronto.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The San Francisco Giants matched their longest losing streak of 1989 Wednesday night, suffered a series sweep for the first time this season — and won the National League West.

While the Giants were losing their third straight, 1-0 to Tim Lincecum and the Los Angeles Dodgers, the Cincinnati Reds beat San Diego 2-1 in 13 innings to eliminate the Padres.

The Giants needed a victory — or a Padre loss — to win the West, but Lincecum pitched four-hitter to deny San Francisco a chance of doing it on its own for the third straight day.

MONTREAL (AP) — The Chicago Cubs, fresh off clinching the National League East title, kept their momentum going Wednesday night with a 7-2 victory over the Montreal Expos despite hitting into a triple play for the second time this season.

Cards sign running back

PHOENIX (AP) — The Phoenix Cardinals signed free-agent running back Tony Baker to a contract Wednesday, one day after Stump Mitchell underwent reconstructive knee surgery and was lost for the rest of the NFL season.

Baker, a third-year pro, was waived earlier this month by Cleveland.

The 5-foot-10, 190-pound Baker was signed by the Browns as a free agent in 1987 but spent all of that year and most of last season on injured-reserve.

Mitchell, the Cardinals' all-time combined-yardage leader and No. 2 all-time rusher, suffered a severe injury to his left knee in Sunday's 35-7 loss to the New York Giants. He tore both the anterior cruciate ligament and the medial collateral ligament and also tore cartilage in his knee.

His knee was reconstructed during arthroscopic surgery Tuesday at Good Samaritan Regional Medical Center here by team orthopedic surgeon Dr. Russell Chick, who said Mitchell will need extensive rehabilitation.

The 30-year-old Mitchell, a nine-year pro in the option year of a contract that pays him $440,000 this season, said Monday that he likely will retire rather than spend the next 12 months trying to rehabilitate himself back into football shape.

Warriors trade Sampson

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Center Ralph Sampson, twice the College Player of the Year and the NBA's top rookie in 1984, was traded by the Golden State Warriors on Wednesday night for Sacramento Kings forward-center Jim Petersen.

The trade is contingent upon both players passing physicals.

Sampson, the league's fifth-highest paid player with a salary of $1.9 million, underwent knee surgery last season and ended up sitting on the bench for the year.

Petersen underwent successful surgery on his right knee on Dec. 18. He has begun a rehabilitation program and should be participating in on-court basketball drills by mid-November.

Sampson and Petersen were teammates with Houston.

The 7-foot-4 Sampson, a star at the University of Virginia, was the first pick in the 1983 draft. He was the NBA Rookie of the Year in 1984 and Most Valuable Player in the NBA All-Star Game in 1985 when he had his best season, averaging 22.1 points a game.

Acquired by Golden State with Steve Harris for Joe Barry Carroll and Sleepy Floyd on Dec. 12, 1987, Sampson appeared in 90 games as a Warrior and averaged 9.3 points, 6.6 rebounds and 22.7 minutes.

Petersen, 27, was selected by Houston in the third round of the 1984 draft and spent his first four pro seasons primarily as backup to the Rockets' "Twin Towers" of Sampson and Akeem Olajuwon. He was traded with Rodney McCray to Sacramento for Otis Thorpe on Oct. 11, 1988.

In 66 games with the Kings last season, he averaged 10.2 points, 6.3 rebounds and 24.7 minutes.
