

Story--so please get ready to laff:

You see, two rube Germans went through the futurist department of the art gallery here, with a big catalogue in their hands. They paused before a painting and one said:

"Now what can that be?" "A landscape or a portrait?" one asked.

"Look in the book", the other said.

They did, and read "Kornfeld".

"Still me don't know if it is a portrait," the first one complained--for he thought also of Kornfeld the writer.

They went to another room and there paused before a painting of two nude figures, a man and a woman.

"Now what do you suppose that is?" one asked.

"Look in the book!"

They did so, but go the wrong number--732 instead of 832, and read:

"Besuch der Englische Gesandte bei Königin Wilhelmina".
