Employment Reaches High

Student part-time and summer employment obtained through the placement center has thrived, according to a recent report prepared by Dr. Robert F. Menke, director of the ASU Placement Center.

Although part-time employment was off slightly due to the recession which slowed business activity, more than 2,000 off-campus jobs were made available. Four hundred employers in 41 states and three foreign countries responded to placement center efforts.

Both part-time and summer employment obtained through the ASU office provides an estimated one half million dollars of income to students, much of which returns to the university in form of fees, housing and activity expenses.

The 1960-61 academic year saw placement recruiting boom with interviewing on campus hitting an all time high. According to the report, teacher interviews increased by 37 percent more representatives and 34 per cent more individual interviews. Commercial recruiting expanded by 23 per cent more recruiters and 26 per cent more applicants.

Combined there were 425 recruiters interviewing 3,688 candidates.

Dr. Menke also reported that educational and registration showed an increase of four per cent. Reported vacancies were up, totaling 9,257; total placements rose to 1,036 or 72 per cent of all registrants and 77 per cent of all new graduates.

Median starting salaries surpassed last year's by an average of ten dollars per month in Arizona and 30 dollars per month outside the state. California starting salaries averaged about 40 dollars per month more than Arizona.

Though California's school-recruiting on campus topped Arizona two to one, the placement center still managed to effect four placements in Arizona for every one out of state.

A shortage of candidates continues for lower elementary, art, vocal music and girls' P.E., with overages of social sciences and men's P.E.

The College of Liberal Arts led the overall registration growth with an increase of 30 percent. According to the report, the "big jump" in campus interviews indicated tow trends. . . Knowledge of ASU and its product has become more widespread; more companies were forced to compete for college trained personnel months in advance of their availability; salaries moved upward in keeping with the national trend; improved quality of the institutional product particularly in accounting stimulated higher salary offers and the increase to $5,400 of median salary for all commercial placements was a solid five per cent over last year.

As a footnote to the placement year, Dr. Menke revealed that on June 14 an engineering graduate married an education graduate; with jobs obtained through the Placement Center, their gross income during the first year of marriage will be $11,600. "Even Horatio Alger might be surprised at the opportunities today," adds the center's director.

A grant of $10,042, given by National Institutes of Health, public health service, Bethesda, Md., has been awarded Arizona State University for a research project entitled "Synthesis of Amino Acid Analogs."

Student Receives Goodyear Award

An ASU senior, F. Grant Allen, is the recipient of a $1,000 scholarship to Arizona State University, presented by Goodyear Foundation.

Allen is a former Phelps Dodge scholarship holder and recently completed a mission for his church.

In addition to the fellowship money, Goodyear also has awarded $375 to the university for unrestricted student grant-in-aid.

V. H. Brommelhaus, personnel manager of the Arizona division of Goodyear Aircraft Corporation, in making the presentation, said ASU is one of only six universities in the country which receive these non-technical scholarships from Goodyear.

Student Workshop Now In Session

The fifth annual Student Council Workshop is currently in session here, according to John V. Schoolland, director of the workshop and West Phoenix High School director of guidance.

Seventy-two high schools throughout the state are represented at the week-long session by more than 150 student body officers. Also attending are six junior counselors, who are former student body officers, and eight faculty sponsors.

The workshop, ending tomorrow, is sponsored by the Arizona Association of Student Councils, of which Schoolland is executive secretary, and it is endorsed by ASU and the Arizona Association of Secondary School Principals.

The workshop consists of daily lectures by Schoolland, study periods, general assemblies, and group discussion sessions. Also recreational activities, including swimming, dances, movies, talent show and a banquet, all of which are arranged by the students.

"Designed to give participants the opportunity to exchange ideas and information, the workshop also provides them an opportunity to learn more about living in a democratic society," said Schoolland.

Students attending the workshop are being housed in Sahuaro Hall.

Parting Words . . .

Our nation's military man-power is being strengthened . . . planes are being hijacked right and left . . . Russia has achieved another space victory . . . and here we are—about to face the worst traumatic experience of all—summer session final exams.

Pracrastination, the great old stand-by of students the world over, seems to be a little more persuasive in this sizzling land of sun and sand.

While you are attempting to cover a multitude of sins by cramming through the wee hours, notice the coolness of the early morning atmosphere.

Since it is so much easier to study during these hours, why not have classes then? . . . What, you don't like this idea? Where is your pioneering spirit, your courage? . . . yes, I know the story, I lost mine somewhere in first session too.

Congratulations to the Memorial Union staff for planning so many activities for us "professional students" and helping to make the summer a little more bearable!

As this is the last issue of the STATE PRESS for the summer, we would like to thank everyone for their cooperation and wish you the best of luck on finals. See you in September — I hope . . . C. O.
