

Hardhats enjoy local 'scenery'

By TOM JOURNEY

A university campus isn't a bad place to work.

Some construction workers at the University may disagree about certain features of their work—wages, hours and working conditions—but most agree about one thing: the scenery on campus is better than other places.

Construction workers at the University have an uncanny ability to speak of hours and wages in one breath and girls in another.

And as skirt lengths are shortened, more eyes are diverted from tape measures to girl watching.

Workers don't spend all their time watching girls, but it's a good way to spend a lunch break and other idle moments.

A superintendent for the Donovan Construction Co., who asked that he not be identified, said simply, "They forgot to allow ten per cent for girl watching."

Most of his men don't feel long hair is "synonymous with hard work," he said.

And his men don't like placard-carrying demonstrators on campus, either. "We'd like to use baseball bats on them," the superintendent said.

As he talked, a blonde in a short skirt walked by. "See that?" he asked. "That's what makes it nice working here."

He said one problem encountered by most construction crews is the lack of space.

Where there are trees the University wants to save, he said; they must be protected with barricades. This takes away from already limited space.

This isn't the first job at ASU for the superintendent. He said he worked on the Palo Verde residence hall complex ten years ago, and the campus and the girls have changed a great deal.

Al, an employe for M.M. Sundt Construction Co., working on the Life Science Center addition, refused to give his last name.

He said the "scenery is much more attractive than other places."

He agreed with the Donovan company's superintendent that space here is limited. "This the closest job I have ever worked on," he said. "There is no place to store things."

Tino Vasquez, also an M.M. Sundt employe, said the atmosphere at ASU is "terrific. . . the surroundings are pleasant." "We don't bother anybody," Vasquez said, and workers haven't had any problems from students.

Most of the workers interviewed agreed there is no problem from radical students.

Another M.M. Sundt employe, William Rosepiler, said there are a few longhairs working on the Life Science Center addition and they "work all right."

"One guy chimed off at a girl once and she chimed right back. . . he learned his lesson. . . I don't blame her."

Dorms will combine staffs

By JOHN NOCK

The management and personnel staffs in each University residence hall will be combined next September under a more efficient, unified system, Gayle Shuman, director of housing, said yesterday.

"Where we've kind of had two people in charge of the residence halls, we now will have one person," said Shuman.

Shuman said the personnel staff, at present responsible to the vice president of student affairs, would be answerable to his office under the reorganization.

The unification will result in an "ideal structural operation" that will better serve the students, he said.

"You can't take kids—with 400 of them in a building—and take care of them adequately with two separate staffs," said Shuman. "You can't really have two persons in full responsibility."

At present, the personnel staffs advise the hall councils and are responsible for program activities, such as dances and refreshments during final examinations.

The management staffs, now responsible to Shuman's office, take care of such services as housekeeping, desk operations and mail distribution.

Shuman said final plans for the reorganization had not been worked out and it was impossible to say if any staff member would be let go.

Scarla, SMC call for moratorium

A moratorium aimed at classes and business activities on campus has been planned for tomorrow in memory of the students killed last year at Kent State University and Jackson State University.

Dennis Scarla, chairman of the University Student Mobilization Committee, said the moratorium will also mark approximately one year since the United States' invasion of Cambodia.

Laurence Lynn, administrative assistant in the office of student affairs, stated yesterday that final approval for the use of the podium has not yet been issued by his office.

Locally, Scarla said, the SMC and the Tempe Peace Center (TPC) are encouraging students not to go to classes, but alternate things instead.

There will be evening activities as well as "alternate" classes during the day, Scarla said.

The alternate classes will take place on the administration lawn and at the Mall podium, he said.

The classes include: 9:30 a.m., the Arab Israeli Conflict and Civil Disobedience; 10:30 a.m., Political Prisoners, Women and the War; 11:30 a.m., a memorial service at the Mall podium.

Other classes are: 12:30 p.m., Ecology and the War and a Chicano Workshop; and 1:30 p.m., High School Organizing and Political Prisoners.

There will be continuous showings of anti-war films in the MU, Scarla said.

The evening activities will include: 4:30 p.m., music on the Palo Verde Complex lawn; 7 p.m., a speaker from Kent State; and from 7:30 p.m. to 8:30 p.m. a candle light procession through Tempe and the University.

Scarla said that on a national level the SMC, the Association of Student Governments (ASG) and the National Student Association have called for strikes and other alternatives to class attendance.

The organizers and supporters of the local action include the SMC, Tempe Peace Center, Phoenix Area Draft Resistance, the Angela Davis Defense Committee and the Young Socialist Alliance, Scarla said.

Nursing College is one of best, says new dean

By GABIE GREEN

Dr. Juanita Murphy views her position as the new dean of the University's College of Nursing as being a "facilitator" to University students.

Her job will aid "people's growth as human beings and as educators," he said.

Dr. Murphy came from the University of Kansas Medical Center, where she was director of the graduate nurse's scientific training program.

Her impression of the University since her arrival last week was that "this is one of the best nursing facilities in the country."

She added, "...and my im-type of operation this office is going to need to carry out this expanded responsibility," he said.

"We assume that most, if not all, will come from the existing personnel staff," said Shuman. "But to say that someone is out of a job, that hasn't even been determined right now. We don't even know what kind of a staff we will need."

Shuman predicted the unified staff would result in greater efficiency and would be "of greater benefit to the students of the resident halls."

ID's distributed at Hayden Library

Distribution of photo ID cards will move to the Hayden Library circulation desk beginning today, announced Robert Peshall, supervisor of photo services.

The cards can be claimed after presentation of a second semester fee card during regular weekday library hours, 7 a.m. to 11 p.m.

Peshall added that if the original fee card has been lost, a duplicate must be obtained at Adm 107.

There are still about 2,500 ID cards left to be distributed, Peshall said.

pression has national validation which I found at the nursing convention I attended last week in Las Vegas."

The new dean said she was "more concerned in continuing programs in the present framework" of the nursing college than in making any changes.

"More research is needed, but in the next three to five years, we are looking at the picture of offering PhD.s in nursing," she said.

Dr. Murphy was asked if she felt more men would be entering the nursing field.

"If men are interested and can compete, we would like to see them enter into nursing. We would welcome them," she said.

There have been schools of nursing just for males, "but I doubt that segregation is a real way of enticing more men" to enter nursing, she said.

Men and women can do equally well in the field, she said.

"If they are able to do well scholastically and in the clinic," that should be the criteria for holding a job, "rather than sex differences," she added.

Dr. Murphy has met a few of the girls involved in the present nursing programs and said "they seemed very enthusiastic about what they are doing and in the program they are enrolled in."

According to students' reports, she said, the program is challenging, exciting and the students are having fun.

"Knowledge should be challenging," she said.

The new dean's area of clinical specialization had been rehabilitation nursing and nursing of the geriatric patient.

"At that time, I liked that profession more. It was rewarding," she said.

The position of dean at the College of Nursing is "not a part of my planned career," Dr. Murphy said, "but it is something I am looking forward to doing."

Q. What can interested students do to extend (considerably) the Hayden Library hours for the last month of school? — B. A. E.

A. University Librarian H. W. Axford said the library can finance such a project to stay open on an experimental basis.

A request will be made to extend the library hours to midnight during the weeks of May 24 to 28 and May 31 to June 2, Axford said.

Axford said the request will be made to, and must be approved by, the University President's office.

"I should have an answer to the request by the middle of next week," Axford said.

Q. Why doesn't the MU play more popular music that students want to hear?

A. When the building opened a student survey was taken for the records and tapes students wanted to hear, according to Mrs. Cecilia Scular, a list was compiled from the survey. The MU is temporarily using records they already have until the new ones can be purchased. chased.

"That's a lot of 'bull' if those Ag. boys think they're going to rope my ears off." Preceding was an excerpt taken from the memoirs of a calf at the Fun Day activities sponsored by the University's agriculture department. The festivities, which are an annual event, are used to introduce new University students to the agriculture department and the University's experimental farm, where the "fun" was held. California 'vacation' follows harsh edict

By DAVID JENSEN

The way things look, President Nixon spoke with forked tongue when he stated that the administration would not be intimidated by anti-war protesters.

Not long after this harsh edict, the President departed for San Clemente, California, not due to intimidation mind you, probably just for a little rest and relaxation from the Washington wars.

Still, things smell much like the old bucket of fish.

Nixon may well have had excellent reasons for leaving the nation's capitol when he did, but it can rather easily be construed as a move on the part of a very unpopular man who feels the sting of his unpopularity and decides to bail out for a while and let the whole mess blow over.

Meanwhile, in Washington there are more attendance records being broken than at a first-run movie showing.

The only problem is that the records are being set in the area of arrests, and the attendance is somewhat more restricting than at your average run-of-the-mill movie house.

So, while the president conducts "business" with relative safety in California, the police of Washington, D.C. continue to pick up more and more people and an equal amount of overtime pay.

But, when it's all over, it's certain that Tricky Dick will resume his rightful post in the White House and the protesters will again take to the streets.

Confusing mess? That it is!

Bowls and bolos

Arizona football fans had an up and down time last week as they became the recipients of a major post-season bowl game, then promptly lost national television coverage for the Sun Devils' opening game next season.

The brighter side of last week's news was, of course, the NCAA's acceptance of the bowl game, now scheduled for Dec. 27.

Those in charge of trying to bring a bowl to Phoenix had done just about everything but fall down on their knees and beg, and had received little more than the promise to consider the proposal up to now.

Then, out of the clear blue, the NCAA up and okayed the proposal, so all looked like roses... at least for a while.

Roses do have a tendency to fade, however, and the Sun Devils' bubble popped later on in the week when word came down from ABC that the Devil opener, originally scheduled for a network airing, was being dropped.

The reason? Because ASU had the game scheduled for evening, and the ABC crew felt that it would cost them too much money for the game to be profitable.

ABC was quick to suggest that the game be rescheduled so that it could be played during the afternoon, but the athletic department felt that with temperatures the way they are at that time of year it would be too hot to change it from night to day.

What was reached was, at best, a standoff. ASU couldn't reschedule the game due to the heat and ABC couldn't do live coverage because of the cost.

The monetary loss, estimated at about $75,000, was a hard blow to ASU, but since ABC couldn't see its way to doing a nighttime telecast, it is probably just as well.

Last season's national recognition in the form of the Peach Bowl was great for the school, and a season opener on national television would have done a lot for next year's team.

But it just goes to show what happens when circumstances arise that force two large entities to butt heads. In the long run neither one of them wins.

Oscar a mouse? he didn't know

By RICK SNEDEKER

People said Oscar was a mouse, but he never thought about it.

His wife, Mildred, called him Casper Milktoast sometimes and fed it to him when he was sick.

Yesterday morning Oscar got up on the wrong side of his single bed. Unfortunately, that was the side the wall was on.

Holding his head in pain, listening to Mildred split a gut, Oscar felt a little like Walter Mitty. But, he wasn't one to get mad — he didn't know how.

With a lump on his head he appeared at breakfast and threw down a generous portion of Mildred's usual green scrambled eggs. When they started talking to him from the depths of his stomach, he drowned them with coffee, which, in turn, burned his tongue.

He smiled at Mildred. She didn't know that his head, his stomach, and his tongue were all in trouble; also she didn't care.

"What time will you be home tonight, Oscar?" she quizzed, "I need the car to go to my bridge club and you have to watch the dogs. Be home early, Oscar."

Oscar nodded and smiled.

He stood up and kissed his wife on the cheek she casually thrust his way while buttering a piece of toast.

He pushed his glasses further up his nose before they slid off the end, placed his derby lightly atop his head, and bounced comically on his toes to the front door where his briefcase awaited.

Oscar had a half-smile on his face when he walked out the door.

Slipping noiselessly into his car, he carefully guided it down the driveway and into the street. Then he glided into the misty 8 o'clock world of streets and crowded freeways.

Oscar calmly ran down the first child he saw walking across the street to school.

Continuing down the maple-shaded street, he still had a Mona Lisa smile on his face.

Approaching a newly painted stop sign that faced a four lane highway, Oscar chuckled and never slowed down. When the authorities came, they didn't have enough plastic bags to put him in.

Today, a "drive defensively" sign appeared aside the highway and everybody saw it as they sped past on their way to something important.

Letters to the Editor

Respects protests

Dear Sir:

The April 30th editorial by David Jensen referred to "gutless wonders" who have been protesting the Vietnam war in Washington, D.C. the past few days. Perhaps I would not agree with all the tactics of the protestors (if I knew all the details), but, at least I respect the protestors there for acting out the words that they espouse.

I don't hold the same respect for Mr. Jensen.

Mr. Jensen, I believe, is one of those people whose patriotism is all in his mouth. I would suggest that Mr. Jensen put his patriotism where his mouth is, drop immediately out of school, enlist in the infantry, and volunteer for Vietnam. As the situation now exists, Mr. Jensen has little ground to call anyone a "gutless wonder."

Roland James

Ethics questioned

Editor:

In your editorial of April 21, you argue that there is nothing unethical about printing anonymous letters as long as the original submission is signed. I find little with which to disagree in such a position—though I do reject as a rash generalization your assertion that "the only people who can complain about anonymous letters are those who feel the pinch of unearthed truth comfortable when it stares them in the face in print."

What troubles me is that the unnamed persons "the great majority of the newspapers in the United States" seek to protect, apparently see nothing wrong in "speaking out" anonymously.

Do our unidentified friends believe that "job security" takes precedence over courage of conviction? Or is it simply that they have so little faith in the truth of what they write that they fear their arguments will not survive the ordeal of open debate?

Women to discuss other lands' roles

"The Role of Women in Foreign Countries" will be discussed by a panel of women foreign students at 7:30 tonight as part of International Week.

A fashion show of native dress for both men and women will follow the discussion. Both events will be conducted at the Arizona Room of the MU.

Tomorrow's activities will be left open for those who wish to celebrate Cinco de Mayo (Mexican Independence Day).

Thursday's International Week activities will include a "Travelogue" from 10 a.m. to 12 noon at the Cochise Room of the MU.

Student killed in auto accident

Ronald Douglas Olson, 22, a University junior in the liberal arts college, died last Thursday night at St. Joseph's Hospital in Phoenix.

Olson, a radio-tv major in the department of mass communications, was involved in a "one car roll over" Tuesday night on Scottsdale Road north of Via Bona, Maricopa County Sheriff's Department reported.

According to the sheriff's department only Charles Skinner, also a University student, was in the car driven by Olson. Skinner was treated and released from Scottsdale Baptist Hospital the night of the accident.

Olson is survived by his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Harley L. Olson, and two brothers, James and Richard, all of Phoenix.

Services took place yesterday at St. Mary's Episcopal Church and burial followed at Memory Lawn Memorial Park.

The India Association and the Organization of Arab Students will present films at 1 and 2 p.m., respectively. The day will conclude with a Model United Nations forum at 4:30 p.m. at the Cochise Room.

International music and dance will be presented by University foreign students at Gammage Auditorium at 8 p.m. Friday. The students will be celebrating International Night.

The University foreign students' soccer team will play a visiting team at 3 p.m. Saturday at the soccer field behind the MPE building.

The final day of International Week will feature an International Dinner at 6:30 p.m. at the Maricopa Room of the MU. Reservations are necessary.

Dr. Dumke speaks

Political insulation urged

Dr. Glenn Dumke, chancellor of the California state college system, urged that America's campuses remain "insulated" and "above the battle" in relation to political questions of the day.

Dr. Dumke told the regional session of the Western Association of College and University Business Officers that campus activists "look upon academe as the soft under-belly of American culture."

The audience of about 200 college and business personnel met in the Coronado Room of Del Webb's TownHouse yesterday morning.

If the nation's campuses become centers for activists, the chancellor said, then the country would be losing a valuable problem-solving agency.

"I am convinced that the campus is the place for reason and debate," Dr. Dumke emphasized. He added that some people have become irrational in presenting their arguments.

Dr. Dumke said it has been made clear to the California state colleges that "campus violence will not work" in determining solutions to problems.

In discussing the California system, Dr. Dumke lauded its "wide open communication."

The Board of Trustees' meetings, he said, include the board members, college presidents, student body presidents and alumni representatives.

He questioned the California college students' demands to have a vote on the board as being either a "desire for a voice in policy or power and control. I suspect it is the latter," Dr. Dumke said.

He also spoke out against the idea of campuses as "miniature democracies." Dr. Dumke said, "Campuses by necessity must be run by a hierarchy of administrators."

Dr. Dumke observed a change in solving campus crises as illustrated by the San Francisco State College turmoil of 1968.

"The president of the college had the support of the administration, the faculty senate and the students," Dr. Dumke said, "and that was the reason the president could not solve the campus conflict."

Having everyone's support required the president to seek every constituency's approval before making a decision, Dr. Dumke said. This, he added, led to indecision and ultimately the president's resignation.

The traditional methods of consulting every faction on campus before making a decision did not work in a crisis situation, the chancellor observed.

Surfing class is first of many new PE courses

The only inland surfing class in the world is making a big splash at Big Surf in its first semester at the University.

Dr. James Odenkirk, associate professor and chairman of the men's Physical Education department, initiated the idea for the surfing class with William Chrisman, president of Big Surf where the classes are held.

The class meets at 7:40 to 9:15 a.m. Tuesday and Thursday for 10 weeks, Odenkirk said. The first five weeks are spent in classroom work while the last five are spent in the water at Big Surf, he added.

A $20 lab fee includes use of the facilities and rental of a board for 10 one-hour sessions, he explained. Each of the 49 students in the class ride eight to 10 waves during the hour, Dr. Odenkirk said.

"The water is still a little cold," he said. "Some of the students wear their wetsuits—including their teacher."

Odenkirk said the "class is running smoothly and there has been general improvement by everyone. I took a spill for them Thursday."

The chairman said he has plans for other additions to the University P.E. schedule. Among the new classes scheduled for next fall is a scuba diving course which is being taught for the first time in summer school, he said.

A lab fee will cover the use of the equipment and pay for an excursion to the coast of Mexico for practical experience, he said.

Other new classes will be judo, yoga, karate and fencing, he said. Plans are also being discussed for courses in mountain climbing and court tennis, he added.

Court tennis, played in the East, is like regular tennis, only played on a wooden floor, he said. The two new courts will be located by the present handball courts, he added.

Plans are being discussed for a skiing class using artificial snow on the butte, Dr. Odenkirk said. He emphasized that the main problem in initiation of the ski class is construction costs because artificial snow machines are expensive.

Yoga club proposes health of body, mind

People interested in getting high in life and health through yoga are invited to attend the sessions of the 3-H-0 (Healthy, Happy and Holy) club at 6:30 p.m. every day in Tempe Beach Park at 14th Street and Mill Avenue.

Jack Sokol, sophomore at the University and member of the group, has been studying yoga for a year, and said "it is much more than physical exercise, it's a religion."

"It is a combination of physical and mental exercise and chanting," he explained.

When the club was first organized last year, about 50 people attended. But gradually, attendances lagged because "people are afraid to feel pain," Sokol said.

The exercises require concentration and "you have to just let yourself go," he said. "It's a way to get high."

Lecture slated by art expert

An internationally known art connoisseur and historian from Italy, Dr. Federico Zeri, will lecture at 4:30 p.m. today at the Renaissance Room of Matthews Center Art Galleries.

Dr. David Bershad, assistant professor of art history, said Zeri will discuss aspects of connoisseurship and forgeries. The lecture is open free to members of the University and the public.

Author of some 200 articles and 20 books, Zeri currently advises some of the world's foremost art collectors, including J. Paul Getty.

Formerly a visiting professor at Harvard University, he has served as editor of "Gazette des Beaux Arts" in France, and of "Paragone" in Italy.

3 1/2 games ahead in WAC South

Devils top 'Cats in second sweep

By BARNEY HUTCHINSON

Just when it started to look like a legitimate pennant race, Arizona State's baseball team came on like a shot out of the dark.

The simile is well chosen in view of the Sun Devils putting up with two total dark blackouts to win a 7-3 game Friday night and then coming back to take both ends of a doubleheader Saturday, 11-2 and 9-8.

Taking the full force of the three-game sweep was a familiar face in an unfamiliar role—arch rival Arizona. Combined with a similar trio of victories two weeks ago in Tucson, the unprecedented six straight wins put ASU in solid control of the Western Athletic Conference Southern Division.

The Devils are 8-1 in league play (41-9 overall) and hold the lead over the UofA, 6-6 (and 26-14-2 overall), New Mexico, 3-6 and Texas El Paso, 4-8.

In fact, the A-State magic number to cinch the Southern Division title is now five. Any combination of five ASU wins or UofA-UNM losses would guarantee a playoff spot against the Northern Division winner later this month.

So while Sun Devil coach Bobby Winkles is reluctant to admit that a portion of the pennant race belongs to the mathematicians, he is eager to add a qualifier.

"I'm just no good at that type of arithmetic," Winkles jokes. "Both the team and I know that you have to win the thing on the baseball field. We have a three and one-half game lead now but that could really shrink if we have a lot of trouble at New Mexico this weekend."

Winkles and Arizona State had little trouble with Arizona over the weekend. In completing the first six-game sweep over the Wildcats, the Devils were behind their opponent in scoring for only one-half inning of the 27 innings played.

In contrast to the Tucson series where the Devils had minor problems hitting, the latest outing produced some spectacular offensive results.

As a team, the Devils hit .358 compared with the Wildcats' .228. Eleven of the Devils' 38 hits went for extra bases.

The oddity of the opening game Friday was not so much the baseball action as the unusual circumstances. A light, single engine plane ripped through a 69,000 volt power line south of Washington along 48th Street about one-half hour into the game. The result put the stadium and much of Tempe and west Phoenix in total darkness for around 40 minutes.

After the Devils finished the bottom half of the third inning, fire officials cut the power to the stadium in order to put out a small fire and the 50 minute wait turned the crowd and both teams into a restless group of over 6,800 people.

After the lights came on for good, ASU exploded for five runs in the fourth inning to put the game away. The inning was highlighted with run-scoring triples by Roger Schmuck and Jerry Mantlo.

Craig Swan picked up the win, his 11th in 14 decisions. Saturday he was hospitalized for stomach pains but was released when it was determined no operation was in order.

In Saturday afternoon's 11-2 romp, the Devils got home run power from both Mantlo and Schmuck in a 13-hit barrage. Mike Hansen (6-0) was the benefactor in the game, collecting his third win over the 'Cats this season.

Arizona came to life in the final contest long enough to tie the game 8-8 going into the bottom of the ninth. But Kenny Reed's bases loaded single insured the sweep. Freshman Ed Bane got the win in relief of senior Ken Hansen. Bane, who also picked up the save in the afternoon tilt, is now 8-1.

Gary Atwell scores another run for the Devils in Saturday's nightcap victory over Arizona. ASU's 8-9 win gave them their second straight three game series sweep over the Wildcats.

Wesson takes U.S. bow title

Donna Wesson, University woman archer, turned in three new tourney records at the U.S. Intercollegiate Archery tournament last weekend.

With new marks in the NAA "900" and in the short FITA, Mrs. Wesson posted a new individual women's total of 1,979 points. This gave her first place in the individual women's competition, allowing her to keep the national women's crown for another year.

Mrs. Wesson's 1,979 points, Carol Jurn's 1,933 points and Carrie Tamarin's 1,848 points all added up to another new tournament record in the women's team standings and means the women's team trophy will stay at ASU another year.

In mixed competition, Wesson, Jurn, Steve Lieberman and Tim Bonnet pooled their points for a new record and claimed another victory.

Lieberman turned in 2,271 points for a win in the men's individual standings.

Second place in the women's team contest was San Bernardino Valley College with 5,372 points. Third was the UofA with 5,360 points.

In mixed competition, San

The series was filled with hitting stars not the least of which was the UofA's J. Ray Rokey. For the third time, the All-American catcher pounded out a .583 series average with five runs batted in.

Rokey was not individually high, however. Gary Atwell checked in with a phenomenal .727 average with Schmuck (.636), Mantlo (.500) and Al Bannister (.417) close behind.

MU announces Socko tourney

The Memorial Union has announced it will be holding a Socko (alias Foosball in some establishments) tournament from 12 to 1 p.m. daily, running May 10-14 in the Recreation Center for all students, faculty and staff.

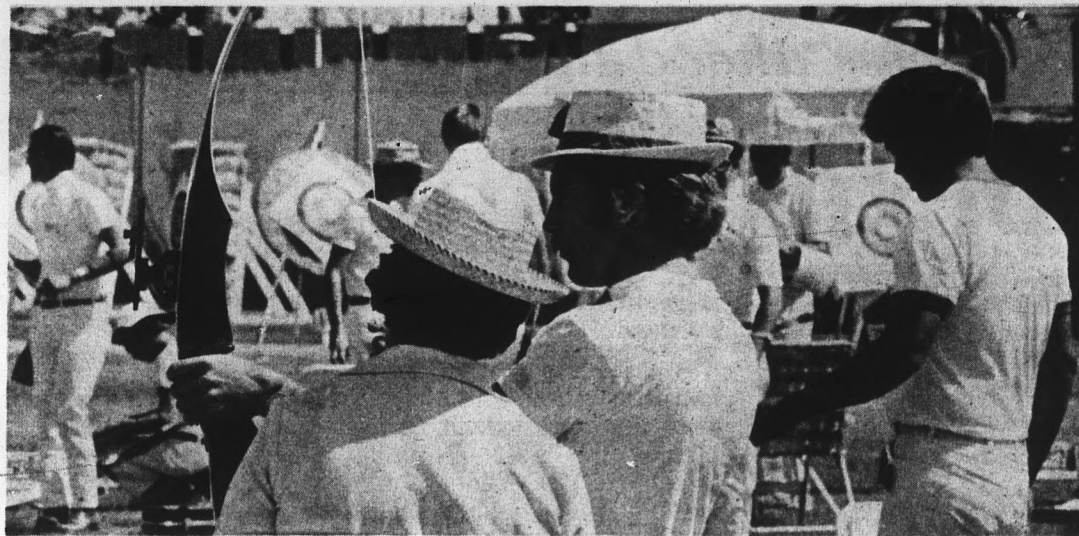

A 50 cent entry fee will help defer the cost of trophies. The deadline for registration is 5 p.m., May 7 Friday.

For further information, call 965-3646.

Bernardino was second again, while the UofA was also third.

In the men's individual standings, Gale Cavallon of SBVC was second and Chuck Trafford of UofA was third.

Second place in the women's individual standings behind Mrs. Wesson went to Miss Jurn with 1,933 points. Rose Svarc of Cal State at Long Beach was third with 1,910 points.

CERRITOS ARCHERS

Sam Barbera and Joan Schutz of Cerritos (Calif.) College both saw action in this weekend's U.S. Intercollegiate Archery tourney. Donna Wesson of ASU set three new tournament records.
