Disabled ask for support

A preliminary draft submitted by the ASU Disabled Student Organization (DSO) for federal funding may never reach final stages without student support, according to Mike Martena, founder and president of DSO.

"If we don't get people to get together and contribute ideas for the grant we aren't going to get the funds," Martena said.

Martena emphasized the need for disabled students support and form those students not physically handicapped.

The draft has undergone preliminary examination and stands a good chance of being accepted in final form, he said.

If the draft is accepted, federal funds would originate directly from the Office of Education in a grant to the University. This would necessitate the creation of a special University office to distribute the funds properly, Martena said.

Grant selection is a highly competitive process as colleges across the country submit drafts for consideration. Martena said that an unusual grant idea would aid in the final allocation of funds.

"Each person has their own thing and may not want to get involved, but if all people felt this way we would be in great trouble," he said.

The primary purpose of DSO is to aid disabled students in maintaining some independence. With federal funds problems presently facing disabled students could be alleviated Martena said there are nearly 300 disabled students attending ASU.

"The more things you can do for yourself, the higher the degree of independency," he said.

"Presently, for someone who wants rehabilitation, there are limited facilities that are good for some, but not for all," according to Martena.

College Inn provides limited facilities for the disabled person. An attendant lives with the disabled person as a roommate, aiding him whenever necessary. Martena finds, however, that a disabled person physically capable to perform simple hygiene practices must be carried bodily into the bathrooms. This dependence upon others is a problem he hopes to be solved.

"PV West is a lot more accessible than that place (College Inn).

"I went over there (College Inn) with federal authorities from the Veterans Administration last year and they don't have the necessary facilities," said Martena.

Martena hopes to use the funds to provide for a centrally located dorm on the campus.

Term papers made easy

With a little help from a 'friend'

By LESLEY RONSON

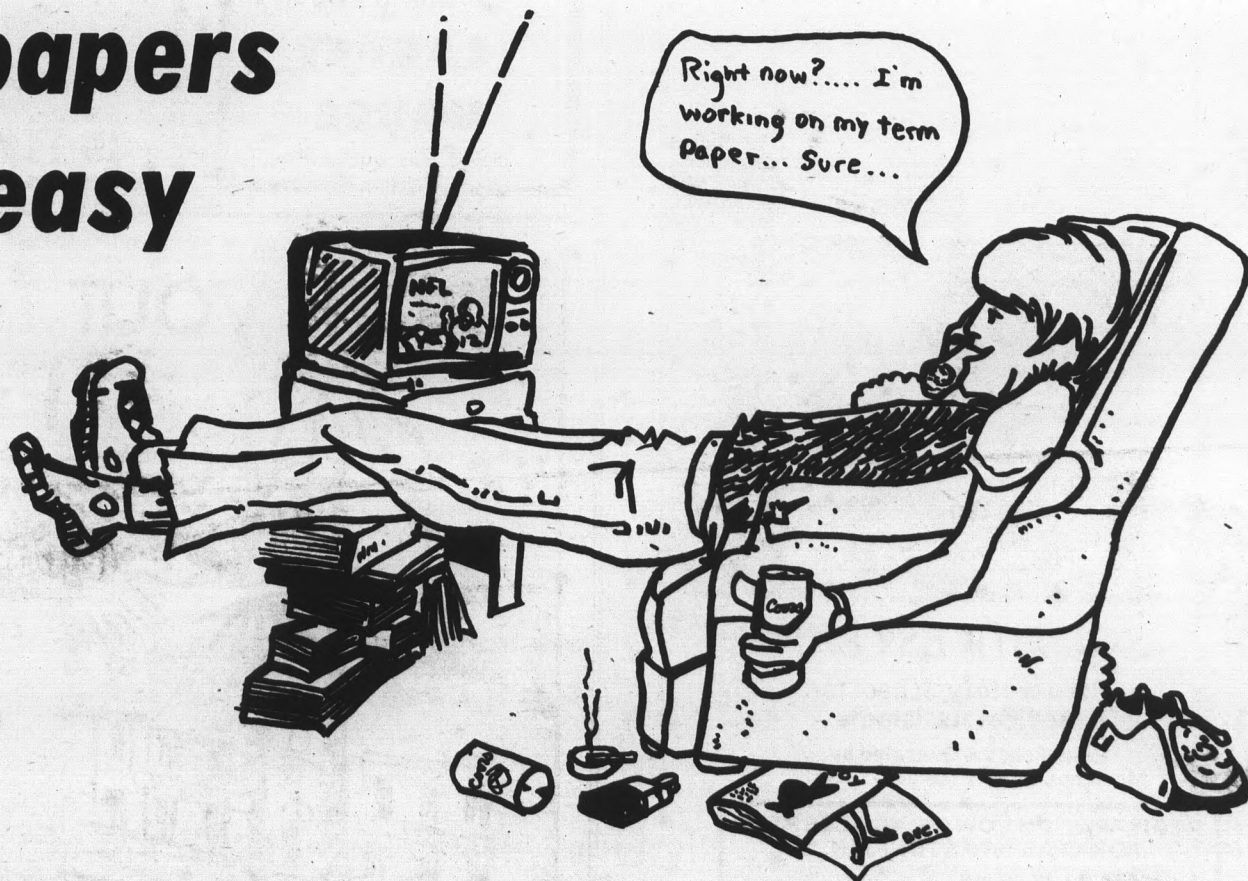

Students wait till the last minute to buy their term papers, just as they do to write them.

Termpaper Researchers Inc. of Arizona (TPR), a company which provides research and reference material in a finished term paper format, is engulfed in the end-of-the-semester rush, according to Ross Horwitz.

Horwitz manages the Tempe business, which is part of a national chain.

"There is never any time in which a student is justified in resorting to either a term paper writing company or what has now become a research production company. Under no circumstances is it legally or morally justifiable," said Dr. Ted Humphrey, assistant professor of philosophy.

• Term papers

New York State passed a law prohibiting the operation of term paper companies.

"If it required such a law (in Arizona) in order to eliminate such corporations I would be in favor of it," he said. "But I don't feel that the issue is a legal issue. I feel it's a moral issue."

"The fact that students ever feel justified going to such a corporation indicates a failure on the part of the faculty to convey to the students what it means to engage in the intellectual life."

Humphrey said he thinks the problem could be alleviated by a smaller faculty-student ratio. He said he has received three papers he thought were "bought" papers. He refused to accept them.

Most students, even if they wouldn't buy a term paper, do not think it's morally wrong to do so.

Steve Carr, a history major, said, "I would not consider writing away for a paper of that sort. It gives me a feeling of insecurity that somehow, somewhere, that professor might have come in contact with that same paper. I guess it's a guilt complex."

Carr said he thinks many professors can pick out bought papers.

Horwitz counters criticism with the fact that is not illegal.

"It's not in violation of any law," he said.

TPR does not encourage plagiarism, he said. If it's done the fault lies with the student, not with TPR.

He said most people using the service are in large lower division classes which they have to take, regardless of interest.

Horwitz doesn't think they should have to write a paper for it, especially when a teaching assistant will grade it instead of the professor.

Horwitz said few students in upper-division classes use the business.

"If they're in that class (upper division), they're probably interested in it," he said, "so why should they want help with a term paper?"

The cost of a paper is about $3 per page for delivery within two weeks. For rush orders, it's $4 per page. Horwitz said the company has 30,000 papers on file.

"Ninety per cent of the papers get B's or better. They're really good papers," he said.

The person who writes the paper gets 50 or 60 per cent of the fee.

The writing staff is small, Horwitz said. Most of the writers are recent college graduates who cannot find a job. He said even professors moonlight for TPR.

TPR guarantees that a professor will never see the same paper twice. If several people come in from the same class wanting the same paper, the first person gets the paper on file and the others must order an original paper, he said.

All dealings with TPR are confidential, Horwitz said. Many of the students who come in are "a little paranoid," as if they expect to see their professors walk in the door.

The business paper is requested most at TPR, he said. They do not get many requests for theses or dissertations though it's been done, according to Horwitz.

Many newspapers will not accept TPR's advertising so the company depends on word-of-mouth advertising, he said. TPR hires people to distribute their business cards. They get a commission for every customer they send in to order a paper.

Phoenix, ASU plan for study projects

Independent study projects connected with the City of Phoenix may be available to ASU students next semester, according to Mark Wilson, ASASU president.

A final decision has not been made, but Wilson said the city and the University are in favor of the idea.

Wilson presented the proposal a few weeks ago to the President's Advisory Committee.

"All the deans were in favor of it. Their only reservation was that they cannot promise credit until they know what will come out of it," he said.

Whether a student gets credit for independent study depends on the professor, Wilson said. "Without their support it's dead."

Wilson said he has been working with John Wentz, Phoenix City Manager, since August with this idea.

"ASASU has acted as kind of a facilitator, but we can't do the program, because it's in the area of academics. We just opened the door."

The program will start with six projects. Wilson said he did not know what the projects will be, but there is a list of ideas.

There could be projects in engineering, technical writing, public relations and anything a student would like to suggest.

Wilson sees the projects as an expansion of the intern program. He said some of the projects might not require a student's presence on the job. For those without transportation, a project only requiring research could be done in Tempe, he said.

"The city will gain some new material and ideas, and the student will gain from a growth experience in their discipline and hopefully, the credit," Wilson said.

ASU frosh beat average

Averages on entrance examinations of ASU incoming freshmen were higher in the 1971 fall semester than average scores at other universities.

Average test scores on the American College Testing (ACT) examinations taken by the 1971 freshman class at ASU exceeded the national average of students entering other doctoral-degree universities by the following margins: English, 20.95 to 20.65; mathematics, 23.35 to 22.36; social studies, 23.16 to 22.40; natural sciences, 24.45 to 22.98; composite, 23.10 to 22.23.

Among ASU 1971 freshmen, those planning to major in the physical sciences outscored their classmates in every academic area except social studies.

Freshmen men outscored the freshmen women in all categories except English.

Analysis of scholastic records of the 1971 ASU freshmen reveals that 83 per cent ranked in the upper half of their graduating high school classes, 51.2 per cent ranked in the top quarter, 63 per cent in the top third and 25.1 per cent in the top 10 per cent.

Freshmen entering ASU in 1971 duplicated the efforts of students in the fall of 1970.

These statistics are based on figures released by the ACT program and are not yet available for comparative analysis of freshmen who entered ASU this fall.

Prof addresses education confab

An ASU professor of secondary education is the featured speaker Friday at a conference for the Far Western Philosophy of Education Society.

Dr. James J. Jelinek, president of the society, will speak on "Competency Based Education." The three-day conference will be at California State Polytechnic University, Pomona, Calif.

Other ASU faculty members participating in sessions during the conference include: Dr. Ariene Metha, assistant professor of secondary education; Dr. Samuel Burkhard, professor emeritus of education; and Nicholas Appleton, assistant professor of secondary education.

Committee selects State Press editor

Dan Huff, ASU junior in journalism, was elected editor of the State Press for the spring semester Monday.

Huff is now the news editor of the State Press. He has been a reporter, staff writer and photographer for the campus paper.

Maintaining a 3.27 cumulative grade point average, Huff was named outstanding freshman journalism student at ASU and holds a Sigma-Delta Chi-Eugene C. Pullium scholarship.

Editor selection is done by the State Press advisory committee. The committee is made up of faculty, students and professional journalists.

"In the Heart of Sun Devil Country"

Louisiana governor ignores vital facts of Southern deaths

By PAUL PERRY

On Nov. 16th, police in Baton Rouge, La. shot two black students at Southern University and the country added another student-police tragedy to its record.

The facts of the confrontation were that students had assembled in President Leon Netterville's office to discuss the problem of more student control of administrative affairs.

When they went into the office, they were told by Dr. Netterville that he had a State Board of Education meeting at 10 a.m. and they couldn't meet with him at that time.

The students said they would wait in the building until he returned. He said they could wait and left. The students had not taken over the building.

State Troopers then moved in and the rest of the story is easily recalled history.

Less than two weeks after this confrontation, the Governor of Louisiana, Edwin Edwards, has come out in condemnation of student militants at the campus who he claims must be held responsible for the deaths.

"The so-called student leaders who refuse to obey duly constituted authority are responsible," he said, to a group of black students meeting at the Louisiana Capitol. "As to the question of whether the students were non-violent, go and look at the building they left."

Gov. Edwards seems content to ignore a few facts here:

1. There was no student takeover. That part of the story has been proved to be a mistake.

2. That the police were supposed to be firing only tear gas cartridges from their shotguns, not number 3 buckshot which killed the two students.

3. The shambled condition of the building when the students were finally routed was quite possibly due to the tear gas cartridges—fired by police—through the building's windows.

Gov. Edwards should apply the question he asked black students at the capitol Monday, to himself.

"Is violence only what others do? Is there a double standard?"

Married housing issue gets red tape treatment

They're sending out questionnaires on married student housing. Again.

Gil Cady, ASU's business affairs vice president, says a non-profit organization which specializes in married student housing will do the research.

Gil originally had planned to do the study himself, but after examining his manpower situation decided the pros could do a better job.

It's a welcome sight, this professional approach to a serious inadequacy, but I wonder if it really means anything.

I shudder to think that this survey with concrete and accurate results will be turned over to Gil and the bureaucracy boys.

I can't help but remember the day two years ago when the mailman arrived at my family's high-priced hovel bearing a bulky envelope.

Overjoyed that the school acknowledged my presence, that of my wife and that of our hut, I attacked the missive to find a questionnaire on married student housing.

It was no simple affair, and I spent considerable time in consultation with mama ensuring that we made well-reasoned, serious and complete answers.

We returned it, and that's the last we ever heard of the thing.

Oh, there were faint rumblings from the student president, and Schwad-Schwad made a few non-committal noises.

But we still live in the high-rent district—Tempe—just as a lot of other married students do.

It's too late to go to the legislature for the housing funds this year, and survey-the-second won't be completed overnight.

And even when it is, assuming it doesn't get lost in Cady's labyrinth, and that it receives the regents' approval, what priority will it be given when ASU asks for construction funds from the legislature?

Will it be accorded as great importance as the new athletic fieldhouse which required funds from not one, but three legislative appropriations?

Perhaps I am unnecessarily cynical. Perhaps duplication of effort, red tape and priority reversals are the University's most effective building blocks.

But I hardly think so. Still, I won't be surprised when, as an octogenarian, I hear that my old alma mater is considering a new proposal to build married student housing.

Letters Indian student's critic feels tribal pressure

Editor:

In response to a letter in last Tuesday's State Press by a Prof. Ronald Smith (whose name I have never heard of either) and his superficial attempt to discredit the virtuous efforts of a fellow Indian, Rick St. Germaine to awaken the concerned, as well as the apathetic individuals, to the unreasonable and inequitable manner in which the Indian students here at ASU have been dealt with, I would like to comment.

First, Prof. Smith referred to a faculty-elected committee from Liberal Arts creating a University Survival course "after careful scrutiny of the needs of the students with deficient backgrounds."

This statement seems presumptuous however, when one considers how few minority representatives, Indian, as well as other groups, there are on the faculty to fashion a knowledgeable and capable committee to truly reflect and express the feelings of minority students on campus that have this so-called "deficient background."

Secondly, Prof. Smith used the preposterous example of an athletic director doing his homework to inadvertently enforce the valid and potent truth that this institution has chosen to ignore, but has been clearly evident to the Indian students here at Arizona State.

He states that the athletic director "saw that any student athlete with communication difficulties should work to make up deficiencies as a positive step for success in college training." That is precisely what the article concerning St. Germaine and the Indian students here at ASU is about and is hopefully trying to solve.

This is also why we Indian students are trying "to take a positive step for success in college training" as it was put by Prof. Smith, by demanding a more responsive Indian Education Center, an Indian Studies Program, and a straightforward and trustworthy relationship with better communication lines between this institution and ourselves.

Finally, I would like to share a thought of a Native American echoed long ago, but which can be very meaningful here. "If a man loses anything and goes back and looks carefully for it, he will find it, and that is what the Indians are doing now when they ask you to give them the things that they were promised in the past!" (Sitting Bull, 1876).

It is the misinformed people who give us the opportunity to say what is right. What is right is all we want, and if this is termed "ignorance, incompetence, and bush league megalomania," by some individuals, then I feel sorry.

My people call standing up for what one believes is right integrity and self-determination.

Singer recalls year tour

By DEBBIE ELLISON

At a time when black nationalism was a new experience Jean Miller, a black junior at ASU, auditioned for a spot in Up With People, a nationally known multi-racial group of high school and college youngsters.

"School did not interest me at all . . . in fact, I hated it," recalls Miller, who at the time of the audition was a freshman at Northern Arizona University.

Miller completed 30 hours of college credit with the aid of a tutor while touring with the group.

"With four shows a week, at two hours each, plus a 15-hour semester load, it was a forced situation which helped me a lot in reaching maturity," she said.

Her classes began at 8 a.m., followed by a three-hour rehearsal.

Six student poets will read to the world of life and love tomorrow at 3 p.m. in the MU Pima Room.

Miller also did much of the public relations for the group and now plans to concentrate her studies in public relations.

"Often times, I and others of the group went ahead to make arrangements for accommodations, ticket sales and general publicity," she said.

During her year with the group, Miller, an only daughter, saw her family for only three weeks. Her travels included such places as Belgium, Germany, France, Canada and Mexico.

"The main function of Up With People is communications," she said.

Being a black woman singing of togetherness when many colleges were experiencing campus turmoil, changed her.

"I matured a great deal while singing with the group. I found myself depending on members of the group, and they in turn depended on me," she said.

"In singing with the group, I had to be idealistic, yet at the same time quite realistic in terms of sticking it out."

Don't appreciate freedom

Pole says free societies lax

Oppressed people maintain a higher regard for freedom than people living under a free system, according to Dr. John Olejniczak from Poland.

Olejniczak is researching measurement philosophy here.

"The American people don't profit from their liberty, because they don't appreciate it and they take it for granted," said Olejniczak.

The Polish researcher is doing his work through the International Research and Exchange Board, which is affiliated with the Ford Corporation.

Olejniczak's introduction to the United States came in New York, where he stayed four weeks while taking a crash course in English.

"New York was very warm and I felt tired all the time. It also has more smog than my country," he said.

Olejniczak said pollution is also a problem in his homeland, but factories are required to follow strict pollution laws in Poland. Water pollution seems to be the major problem, he said, because of Poland's numerous chemical factories.

From New York, Olejniczak flew directly to Arizona and here he had his first look at an orange tree and the large native cactus.

"In my country we like cactus, but they live in our homes. Here I see cactus that live in large areas," said Olejniczak.

A graduate of Poland's Politechnik engineering school, Olejniczak specializes in electronic measurement.

BYU favored in WAC cage race

By JIM FINN

The WAC basketball press meeting in Denver last week picked Brigham Young as favorite to repeat its conference titles of the past two years, giving the Cougars 12-1/2 of the possible 15 first-place votes.

ASU's Cagers finished last in the voting, but the fact that no Phoenix representatives were involved in the voting probably had a lot to do with that.

ASU picked last

Sun Devil coach Ned Wulk said, "Of course you don't like to be picked last, but since we lost all five inside men from last year's team, it's to be expected."

The key men lost from Wulk's team last season, which tied with Texas-El Paso for second place in the WAC, include Paul Stovall, Rhea Taylor, Bill Kennedy, Mike Hopwood and Dave Hullman.

Wulk said BYU will definitely be a good choice to keep the conference crown, but the ASU coach said he feels UTEP will be the team to beat.

The Miners were picked for second place in the preseason voting and the Texans have never finished lower than second in their three years of WAC competition.

Leading the Miner effort this season will be Olympian James Forbes, who drew praise from head U.S. Olympic coach Hank Iba for playing "as well as any sophomore ever in the Olympics."

Forbes' knee worries

A knee injury to Forbes has UTEP coach Don Haskins worried however.

"We won't know how it affected his quickness until he gets back in mid-December. He's one of the quickest 6-7 men in the country," Haskins said. The major obstacle in the Miners' path will be 6-11 BYU All-American center Kresimir Cosic, the only returning first-team All-WAC performer.

Cosic led the Cougars to a 12-2 conference mark last year and a 21-5 overall record.

Picked to finish third in the voting was New Mexico, under new head coach Norm Ellenberger.

Ellenberger said the Lobos are changing their playing style this year to a two-guard attack instead of a point-man wing-man style used previously. The key for a successful Lobo campaign appears to hinge on Ellenberger's success in molding his veterans and newcomers into a solid unit.

Wyoming, picked fourth in the poll, could be the surprise WAC team this season. Coach Bill Strannigan said, "This is the biggest team I've had in recent years. We'll be good on the boards and will break on offense."

New look for UofA

The program at Arizona has taken on a completely new look with the arrival of coach Fred Snowden. The new Wildcat coach said, "We will run this year and be exciting. Arizona should be considered a contender in the WAC unless otherwise proven."

The 'Cats won just 6 games last year and wound up next to last in the conference race. In order to turn the program around, Snowden recruited a group of frosh rated second-best in the nation.

"Without the freshman rule, I might have cancelled my schedule. Freshmen will play for us this year and one, Al Fleming, will start," Snowden said.

Colorado State, picked sixth in the WAC voting, will depend on backcourt play this season. Ram coach Jim William's preseason comment was: "Our biggest problem is height and ruggedness up front. We are also lacking experience there but should have better shooters than last year."

Seventh place pick Utah will be in the midst of a rebuilding season as the Utes try to improve on last year's sixth place finish. Ute coach Bill Foster

Jackson and Nate Drayton, both 6-5, are also expected to see more action to help compensate for the loss of Lloyd.

Wulk said with 6-11 Ron Kennedy and 6-9 Mark Wasley starting up front, the Devils won't give away size to anyone, but the loss of the three big men's insurance will force the ASU cagers to depend more on Wulk said the major weak point in the ASU game at this point is the defensive rebounding. With the ASU fast-break offense, the defensive rebounding is a key.

The Devils will try to work with a pressure-type defense to help compensate for the weakness Wulk said.

Looking ahead to the start of his sixteenth season as head ASU coach, Wulk said the key to his squad's success will be the ability of Kennedy and Wasley to stay out of foul trouble and stay in the game, giving the Sun Devils enough size on the inside.

The ASU cagers open the season at home Saturday against North Texas State.

Senior guard Mike Contreras is the lone starter returning from the '71-'72 Sun Devil team.

said, "We won't be very tall or very physical this year and will have to compensate for these problem areas."

Reworking ASU plans

On the ASU cage scene, the Sun Devils have been reworking plans with 6-10 sophomore Scott Lloyd out with a broken ankle.

Wulk said the loss of Lloyd will force the Devils to work more with three guards on the floor. Freshman forwards Gary the strength of the guard play. Backcourt strength.

Veterans Mike Contreras and Jim Owens lead the backcourt attack and junior swingman James Brown has looked strong in preseason. Wulk also feels the improved play of outside man Rudy White will add to the ASU strength at guard.

"Our strength is definitely the guards," said Wulk, "and we will have to work to complement that strength."

Delbridge gets WAC nomination

ASU linebacker Larry Delbridge has been named WAC defensive player of the week for his efforts in ASU's 38-21 win over the University of Arizona Saturday.

Delbridge, a 6-2, 212-pound senior from Coolidge, Ariz. was in on 15 tackles, five of them unassisted.

Pete Van Valkenburg was the offensive player of the week in the WAC, leading BYU to a 21-7 win over New Mexico. He carried the ball 35 times for 190 yards and ran a kickoff back 93 yards for the Cougars first score.

It was the first time a Sun Devil has been named defensive player of the week this year.

Devils move to 16 in poll

Arizona State advanced only in the Associated Press college football poll this week. The Sun Devils moved to the No. 16 spot, two positions better than last week.

In the United Press International poll, the Devils remained No. 14 despite their win over Arizona 38-21.

There was a lot of shuffling of positions in both polls, with the exception of the first two spots. Southern Cal and Alabama hung on to their 1-2 rankings.

Missouri, ASU's opponent in the Fiesta Bowl dropped out of the AP Top 20 and fell from No. 16 to 19 in the UPI poll. The Tigers lost to Kansas 28-17.
