ASU athletes owe $60,000 debt to U.S. Postal Service

By Cheat Barfup

Six ASU baseball players who owe almost $60,000.78 in unpaid postage bills to the federal government have been ordered into U.S. District Court in Phoenix for ignoring previous court summons.

Lawsuits have been filed against the players for fraud and abuse of the postal service, said Walter Zipp, a Tempe attorney who represents the U.S. Post Office's collection agency.

"Every one of these jerks owes the government at least $10,000.13," he said.

Zipp said junior Bobby Horny was probably the worst offender. The post office has been after him for years, he said.

"That guy's probably never licked a stamp in his life," Zipp said.

Other first-stringers who have charges pending include Jerome Vaseline, Kriss Banaid, Boobie Hooks, Dave Hudgpudge and Jimi Alien.

"People always try to rip off the post office here and there, a few cents at a time," Zipp said, "but we've never run across a bunch of guys all in one group like this."

All the guilty ball-slingers were recruited from out of state, he said.

"They said that during recruitment, the ASU coaches promised they could mail anything anywhere and not have to worry about paying.

"In other words, it was an incentive to come and play ball with ASU," Zipp said.

According to court records, earlier this month Horny mailed his girlfriend and a cousin from Tennessee to ASU, postage due.

"They just let themselves out of the box when they heard Horny's voice," Zipp said. "It's hard to collect the postage when the contents of the package are gone."

Records indicate Vaseline and Banaid both m³ furniture from their out-of-state apartments to their Tempe homes.

Hooks, an accomplished pianist, mailed himself a baby grand piano from a New York warehouse.

Alien tried to mail himself to a Colorado ski resort earlier this semester, but failed when a post office driver heard noises coming from the box, opened it and found the baseball player eating a bag of potato chips.

Athletic Director Ferd Mauler denied charges that free mailing was part of the ASU recruiting package.

"They can make all the free phone calls they want. Why should we give them postal privileges too?" he said.

SWAT makes first daring seize

The newly formed ASU SWAT team scaled the walls of the Math Building late Saturday night to capture a sniper who had terrorized pedestrians and bicyclists for nearly 20 minutes.

Police Chief Sonny Daze said the sniper, nine-year-old Timmy Pike, had nearly exhausted his supply of rubber bands when the capture was made.

"We tried to talk him down first, but he wouldn't listen. We told him he could put someone's eye out with those things.

"Then he opened fire again on me and my men. A close shot nearly grazed my ear. That's when I gave the order to move in."

The team lit the night sky with flares and attempted to flush the assailant down with teargas, Daze said, but failed when the men could not hit the rooftop.

Daze said the sniper's mother was called to the scene in an attempt to bring him down peacefully.

Despite threats of no dessert and limited TV, the mother's pleas were in vain, Daze said.

"She tried to reason with him, but he wouldn't listen. Said he was just 'having a little fun.' His 'fun' could have blinded all of us," he said.

Once on the rooftop, one officer bravely drew fire from the lad while the other two grabbed him from behind.

"The first thing they did was to wash his mouth out with soap. We would have used the paddle on the little punk, but we don't need any more brutality suits against us," Daze said.

Although this was the first sniper attack the team has handled, Daze praised his men for their courage and level-headedness, and said the team is trained to "expect the unexpected."

"I told those dildos at the Bored of Rejects that they'd get their money's worth out of these boys. Now I hope they'll listen," he said.

Daze said the incident demonstrated the need for the $800,000 police helicopter he has requested.

Boys will be boys

The ASU dean of students office and the Interfraternity Council launched an investigation Monday to look into additional allegations of gross cruelty in hazing practices made by a member of the Eye Graba Thi fraternity.

"Our last investigation established the use of hazing during hell week activities, but these new accusations go beyond the realm of mere practical jokes," said Ole McDonald, ASU assistant dean of students.

In a second letter to the Stale Mess, former ASU student Jollie Olstad claimed the inhumane treatment to which he was subjected included being forced to wear a soiled rugby shirt and spaghetti-stained tennis shorts, while having his SuperMax blow dryer unplugged.

"My perm was shot," Olstad said. "Then they stole my Joe Sharino tickets and my genuine puka-shell necklace."

Mark Pispanti, fraternity president, said, "I can't tell you anything about what goes on during hell week because I live with my mom and dad."

Rush director Snot Lispy said, "The biggest problem is to get everybody to agree on a definition of the word 'hazing.' We can't find a dictionary. With our test files, we don't have much use for reference books."

GERONIMO'S REVENGE
WASHINGTON — The Food and Drug Administration today banned the use of tap water in the United States, claiming the substance has been found "unusable, fouled and, of course, cancer inducing in all parts of the nation. Citizens are advised to refrain from use, and to search for similar substitutes until another variance of tap water can be isolated and determined as safe, spokesmen said.

GIRL SCOUTS GET COOKIES FROM PARK
WASHINGTON — Tongsun Park, the leading figure in the Congress' Korean influence-buying scandal, today named top officials of the Daughters of the American Revolution and the Girl Scouts of America as leading money getters in the recent spending spree. "Ah so. Girl Scouts really have dishonorable hands in cookie jar this time," Park said to the House Ethics Committee. The reason the scouts are pushing for "new leaders" is an effort to clean house, since many of the former girl scout mothers have resigned in disgrace, Park said.

BEGIN DENIES GROUNDBREAKING
TEL AVIV — Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin denied charges today that his government is building large subdivisions for residential living in newly occupied Lebanese territory to make it tougher for Palestinian guerrillas to reclaim areas marked "Ben Gurion Estates." "This is preposterous. The land is too rocky." Begin would not comment on other possible uses for the land, including some strange metallic towers being erected in the area.

"That may come as some sort of relief to those apathetic snobs," he said, "because if I had won, I wouldn't have accepted it anyway." Rumors have been circulated he would have donated the award, if he had won, to the George C. Scott Foundation for the Bewildered.

"We have examined many Holiday Inn locations and have come to the very definite conclusion that not only are they easier to guard, but have much stricter security measures than Florence ever had."

Paraplegics strike again

By Walker Smelley

In a daring daylight attack Monday, the ASU Wheelchair Vigilantes struck down their 14th victim in two weeks.

Senior David Fruitbreath was savagely beaten by several masked persons in motorized wheelchairs after he illegally parked in a handicapped parking space in lot 22.

Fruitbreath said his car only was in the space about 10 minutes while he ran an overdue term paper in to a nearby class building.

"When I went to get back in the car I heard this terrible whine. They came out of nowhere. They were on me like killer bees. There was nothing I could do.

"I couldn't tell what they were saying. Their voices kept going 'Peep-peep.' Then, I just blacked out, I guess," Fruitbreath said.

Police detectives are taking tread samples from Fruitbreath's back. They said they hope to match the prints with those in the master files of the FBI.

The Stale Mess has received several phone calls from a person who claims to be a member of the Wheelchair Vigilantes.

"We're just tired of getting pushed around, if you know what I mean," "Mr. X" said.

X also said there was little fear among the vigilantes of capture. According to X, former ASU Police Officer Macho Morones works for the Wheelchair Terrorist Front.

Morones was suspended from the University Police last month after an incident in which he forced a student to eat his skateboard for making an improper turn signal on the bike path near West Mall.

Underground subway line to handle shuttle overflow

By Spawn Sammons

Due to the tremendous success of ASU's shuttle bus system, University administrators plan to build a $50 million subway system in its place.

Flack Panic, vice president for student affairs, explained the logic behind the administration's bold move to solve the campus parking problem.

"There were almost eight people using the shuttle bus weekly, so we figured there was a need for the subway," he said. "The system will put an end to the parking problem for good. Besides, we're sick of all this bitching."

Panic said his office received numerous complaints that the air conditioning on the two Greyhound luxury liners often malfunctioned, and that only one rest room per bus was inadequate to handle the long ride from lot 59.

"We evaluated all the alternatives, and a subway system is definitely the cheapest way to go," he said.

During construction of the system, which will take approximately five years, all campus transportation will be halted and commuting students will be required to put in two hours of hard labor daily, he said.

"We will furnish shovels and flashlights," Panic added.

"Commuting students owe a little something to this institution. We're just giving them a chance to work off their debt," he said.

Panic said, the proposed subway will feature exotic Soggy food to be served daily in subterranean splendor.

Seafood casserole, chipped beef on toast and hot dogs au gratin will be among the meals featured in the dining car.

"We feel this dining car is quite an innovation," Panic said with a gleam in his eye. "And by the way, students on the work gangs, er... I mean construction teams will be treated to a free lunch."

"Hungry workers don't perform," he chuckled.

Once completed, the subway will leave from lot 59 and stops will be at strategic points around the campus, Panic said.

Panic said he is looking forward to the subway's 1983 christening.

"I personally will drive the first subway train through the bowels of the campus at an average speed of 100 miles per hour," he beamed.

Students who perform most valiantly in construction of the system will have the honor of accompanying the vice president on his wild ride.

"I can't wait to get the pedal to the metal and see what that mother will do," he said. "I don't think she'll crack until around 150 mph."

Sneaky beavers construct dam

A concrete-and-steel dam that has mysteriously sprung up at the convergence of the Salt and Verde rivers was built by beavers, not humans, a Salt River Project spokesman said Monday.

"Those cute little devils will build dams out of anything they can get their paws on," said Ray Malarkey, former head of the waylaid Orme Dam Project.

But Valley zoology experts claim there are few, if any, beaver families in the area, and even if there were, the animals would lack the materials and technical skills necessary to construct the 350-foot structure.

"That's nonsense," Malarkey said. "How do you think the expression 'eager beaver' came about?"

"The beavers in the area probably realized the site was a perfect spot for a dam," he said.

Malarkey said beavers probably stole the construction materials from passing trucks.

"They're quick as hell, and they usually strike at night when no one is looking," he said.

Freebies end

Price goes up; staff to benefit

No more freebies for ASU students.

The Stale Mess, previously a bargain at zero cents per copy, will begin charging 50 cents per issue next week.

Profits from the price hike will support the induction of one-half of the campus newspaper's staff into detoxification centers.

A University spokesman termed the price increase "progressive." He later commented that he wouldn't mind participating in the program himself.

Complaints by members of the community and University staff members sparked the price hike. "Droning, mushy-sounding voices and moronic insults" by reporters apparently irked some administrators.

Also, bodies lying prostrate in hallways near the Stale Mess office around the newspaper's deadline time caught the eye of a few irate observers.

"We decided to meet the problem head-on," said the spokesman. "The staff was living just a little too high-off-the-hog," he quipped.

With the increase in the newspaper's price, most of the troublemakers will be dried out in a two-week session involving electro-shock therapy.

The staff members will file their daily stories by telephone to the Stale Mess office while undergoing treatment.

The new, high-priced, unimproved newspaper will be pawned off by vendors from a local school for the blind. The paper will also be available by subscription at about $32 per year.

"It's a real burn," admitted one staff member, who will begin treatment as soon as the dollars come rolling in.

"I type better when I'm loaded anyhow, it's just hard to get the paper into the machine."

I can't stand a bunch of drunks.

Leave me alone

This is it. I've had it. I've had it with always being "journalistically correct" and "ethnically responsible" for this damn fishwrapper. I'm tired of it and all the fricking letters to the editor by all those self-righteous pseudo-minds who think they know it all.

Well, let me tell all of you clowns the real truth about ASU for once this year, while I'm buzzed enough to do it.

There's no "internal struggle" between students and administration. Our University president and his staff are the greatest bunch of guys you'd ever want to bring home to meet Mother.

And some wino who wanted to be student body president years ago thought up the parking mess, too, just to get votes.

And the Greeks? Well, if they want to pants a bunch of fluffs and dump vodka all over each other's cars, that's their goddam business. Other than that, they're perfectly innocuous.

And the blacks' major argument at this University really boils down to their assumption that they've got to sit in the back of the bus. Well, they can come in the front and stand with us anytime.

To top it all off, all those football players never made those phone calls. Hell, they don't even know how to dial. It was all a stunt to get you to buy more tickets to the Fiesta Bowl (C'mon, admit it, you went to that game just to focus your field glasses on all those "bums who screwed Mountain Bell").

Well, that's all I've got to say. Maybe I've said too much and busted all your little bubbles. I hope you're as happy as I am with the inescapable fact that there's really nothing controversial at this University worth chewing the bacon fat about. You know what it's like to run a newspaper at a place like this? You try it sometime, see how you like it.

Guest gripe — "Bark" Marnes

Backscratch Fever

The usual every Tuesday at 9:30 a.m. It's up to Dr. Swata's office for our bimonthly "ASU In Review." But this time I wasn't about to take any of his crap about not being able to meet student interests.

I found Swata in normal form: feet propped up on his desk, his Kinney loafers with holes still showing from his days as President at Missouri. He had a lit Benson and Hedges 100 in his hand.

"All right Marnes, I'm ready to settle this matter with any method or by any test you wish to employ."

"Well," I said, "I'm not one for violence, but I'll go for a game of foosball at the ASSASU Activities Center."

"Fine," he said. "But I want Dr. Pork to officiate, just to make sure this is not another one of your Shell games."

As we were walking out the door he shouted, "Lori, please call a cab for us." I asked him why we needed a cab to get to the MU and he said, "Listen Marnes, I'm a busy man. Do you think I have the time to know where everything is on this campus?"

As we arrived at the foosball table, Dr. Pork had just finished slapping the back of a student so hard the lad was vomiting. "Pork always was a politico," commented Swata.

At game time, quite a crowd had gathered. Swata was putting up a big fuss because the bar handles for his goalie and forward guards were not sufficiently lubricated.

I suggested he give vice president for business affairs Flak Panick a call and have him send over a Physical Breakdown SWAT team to take care of it.

"No way," he related. "Those SOB's took six months to fix my door after students tore it down during that Affirmative Action protest last year."

After a few minutes of consulting with Athletic Director Ferd Mauler, he decided to play anyway. As he perked up Swata said, "All right Marnes, what are we settling and what are the stakes?"

"The Whole Thing," I replied. "You mean . . ." Swata appeared amazed. "That's right, Jon, the whole thing. A radio station, concerts and student activities controlled by students, family planning, women's health care, academic appellate procedures, control of student fees, coed housing, a liquor license, a credit union, day care . . . The Whole Thing."

"Jesus!!" yelled Pork. "Marnes must have . . . (everyone gasped) Backscratch Fever!!"

"That's right George," I said calmly. "I'm tired of this bullshit. I've cooperated on Swata interests for such concerns as diploma mills, the University budget and general public relations without ever receiving any cooperation in return."

Mauler ran over to Swata to tell him the Son Angles had just switched their bet in favor of Marnes.

"What!!" he screamed. "They can't do that. Have they no loyalty?" Mauler replied with something about money not begetting morality.

"Very well, Marnes, I know that when the students get Backscratch Fever I'm going to have to meet their student interests, but promise me one thing," he said, looking my way.

"What's that?" I replied. Swata grimaced and looked me straight in the eye. "Promise me, just promise me that you won't go to the Regents or the Legislature anymore."

"I wouldn't promise that if you tied my tongue to a horse and dragged me forty miles," I retorted.

Pork looked longingly at Swata and finally, with a bit of moisture plainly clear in his eyes, he spoke in a soft tone.

"Well, at least we don't have to deal with the Tribkien-Bratten-Ditchway machine anymore."

Swata, taking a last puff on his Benson and Hedges, tightened up and spoke quickly. "I know, George, but this is worse."

Stephen Saeed — Another look from somewhere south of Ajo

Nihilistic Nazis demand minority abortions

The Cubans have been warmly welcomed and helped by United States authorities and praised as courageous politically persecuted victims of a despotic communist regime.

But the decision to comply with the Illinois Board of Education was not met with total acceptance. Anti-busing advocates took to the streets and as a result Chicago has been the scene of violence and increased racist polarization over the issue.

Hence, we discover professors who institute 'rap sessions' and propaganda seminars as substitutes for the traditional classrooms.

If one dares to go beyond and suggest that the function of the University is to search for truth, one incurs the wrath of the semi-enlightened and is stamped with the label, "beyond hope."

With this remarkable discovery of modernity, mere mortals can now fulfill gnostic dreams of occupying the place of God by literally, with their butcher knives in hand, passing life or death judgment on the fate of future generations.

These ideas have coalesced at the college level to form a situation that is indeed a marvel of liberal wizardry. Nothing is more violent than the stifling of a man's spirit, and the hunger of a child.

Violence is all the aforementioned and much more. It is being perpetrated daily on both racial minorities and poor whites alike. It is relegated people to the status of second class citizens without the mobility afforded the majority population.

This disease, which certainly affects all of us here at ASU, manifests itself in the form of both a structural malaise and a content deficiency.

When one comprehends the dimensions and seriousness of the above degradation one can understand why a great number of our courses merely reinforce the nihilistic and egalitarian thrusts of modernity.

The whole power struggle was built in the name of efficiency but this arrangement didn't turn out to be as effective as it was expected to be.

The five permanent minority members have behaved no better than any other members. They have invaded foreign lands, waged colonial wars, obstructed the expression of the will of the majority, defied the United Nations resolutions, killed their own students, workers and citizens, imprisoned their own intellectuals and dissidents, manipulated the making and unmaking of the foreign governments and have defied the sovereign equality that they had promised to respect and honor.

The mere sight of a swastika serves as a flashback of the mass destruction and their individual sufferings at Nazi concentration camps.

So what's the solutions? Drop your pen suddenly as if startled by a loud noise, then abruptly stand, throw up your arms and shake, as though possessed by a demonic spirit, and at the top of your lungs, with a bit of hysteria in your voice, scream the words, Richard Nixon.

Officials (at least some of them) realize that academic discipline requires appropriate action against such behavior.

This intellectual vanguard reflects an awareness that the system has become repressive and it's time to take some action.

The first statement of principles, in this proposal, stated that "the organization is based on the principle of sovereign equality of all peace loving states."

But why are many establishment figures so willing to intercede? They did so for the same reason that so many rightwing columnists today claim that ASU is not a barbarous dictatorship, despite evidence to the contrary.

Letters to the Editor

Buzz off

Editor:

I am writing this letter in an attempt to rectify the widespread defamation of birds and bees by the University community.

Your two photographs in the March 24 issue of Stale Mess, along with the traditional "birds and bees" sexual innuendo portrayed in the photo caption, only serve to further the stereotypes of out two species.

For the record, we do not refer to ourselves as "birds" and "bees". In our culture, we are respectfully known as "featherites" and "buzzbutts." You, however, in your human publication, run by human staff members at this human University continue to refer to us by your human names.

Furthermore, we are tired of being associated with the seasonal sexual promiscuity of your species. We have only a banal hunger-drive interest in the "flowers and the trees" and generally couldn't give a rat's ass about "the moon up above and a thing called love."

Week after week, I (a buzzbutt), buzz over open copies of the Stale Mess, only to be insulted and stereotyped by your paper and indeed, by all members of your species.

Did you know that there are more "birds" and "bees" (as you call us) on this campus than humans?

Yet, what percentage of the ASU faculty is made up of "birds" and "bees"? Specifically, how many "birds" or "bees" are instructors in the mass communications department... or aren't we part of the masses to be communicated with?

We buzzbutts have been viewed as being ill-tempered, sting-happy pests and worse, our featherite comrades have been portrayed as being flighty, pebble-pecking creatures who would rather shit on your head than engage in intelligent conversation.

The prolific appearance of our chirping and pollinating species at this time of year represents over two million years of dignity and pride in our heritage. Too bad your "springtime" activities ("catching some rays" or "playing frisbee") don't offer your kind the same hubristic attitude.

We have been swatted, shot, sprayed and bumbled, and we are fed up.

My friend, the Lord of the Featherites was too angered at your insensitivity to write; he merely raised his middle claw and flipped you a human.

I can only ask: "how long... how long must this buzzshit go on?"

Jim "the Buzzbutt" Gill
(not a bee)

Romans

Editor:

Once again, the Stale Mess has chosen to pick on us, the Romans. I suppose this is inherent to amateur, rank reporting in which you pride yourselves, but this time you really went too far.

Your front page story entitled "Roman rites revealed" contained several examples of blatant sensationalism. For example, it's been years since we've used real lions in Orcus Week sacrificial rites. And we seldom use whips and chains, despite requests from our pledges.

Anyway, you've really got a lot of nerve criticizing us, Stale Mess. Why don't you ever write about the good things we do? And when was the last time a Stale Mess editor raced tricycles all day? When was the last time one of your people was involved in a Marathon Sunbath Fest?

We don't think these activities are worth shit either, but we do them!

Despite your latest attempts to play Woodstein, you have not dampened our spirits with your nasty, malicious reporting. We will continue to be the largest and most innocuous student group on campus. But watch out, Stale Mess. If you don't cut it out, we might do something really drastic, like call our daddies.

Raging heathens

Editor:

I am the Way, the Truth and the Life. Yea, though you ASU students walk the paths of sin, lust and diseased perversion, I can heal you of your wounds, purge you of your transgressions, cleanse you of all your sins.

To all of your misguided charges of my being a "rabble-rouser" I say anathema. Thou sayest it, not I.

Though I insult your habits, your lives, and what you are, know always that I love you. I love you with the love of all loves, the love that loves more than love can love, the love of loving love that loves until love itself stops loving.

I forgive all of you your sins, even though some of you young women profane the dignity of Almighty God by having the effrontery to wear pants in public, I still forgive you.

I know what forgiveness means.

God has forgiven the fact that I run a women's dress shop.

That's the beauty of God, my friends. We can have ulterior motives, but He doesn't.

More Letters to the Editor

Editor:

Count me in. I'm adding my voice to the mass outcry of open-mouthed Arizona taxpayers who find it disgusting that this school's paltry parking place provisions which yield thousands of annual profit dollars from ASU's parking spaced-out commuter students.

It's just not good enough. Imagine a tax-supported institution bodiced by all the buck backing our legislative mouseketeers can muster, is barely making money the the vehicle victimization biz.

True, ASU has done an admirable job of selling at least five commuter student parking decals for every three available parking places in an effort to increase ticket proceeds.

But even with tow trucks and wheel-locking devices employed against parking place poachers, the ASU administrators haven't even begun to pop the pimple of profits simply oozing with the dollars of unknowing commuter students.

I however, having carefully contemplated the situation for upwards of ten minutes, have formulated the following three phase plan, which will deal with offenders in manners ranging from subtle coercion to total obliteration.

In order for this plan to be properly implemented, procedures must be based upon the two major suppositions by which, presumably, the ASU parking administrators now abide.

Supposition #1: Commuter students prefer to park in unauthorized areas. Illegal parking is, to their kind, a symbol of independence, rebellion and peer group status. Given the choice between a legal and illegal parking place, a commuter student will always choose the latter.

Supposition #2: Commuter students inherently possess lower than average intelligence and are, therefore, unable to ascertain or act against situations that take advantage of their mental deficiencies. Thus, administrators may ignore their few muddled protests and proceed in the manner most financially beneficial to the University.

With these prerequisite postulations in mind, we may proceed with: OPERATION PARKING PROFIT; PHASE I (in which the commuter students get their oats).

I. In this, the mildest phase of the operation, a twofold approach will be utilized to "create" more parking violators and therefore, more parking citation profits.

For a nominal amount of money, ASU would purchase the hulks of 1,000 or so junk cars from local wrecking yards. Then, after being equipped with surplus commuter student parking decals, these driverless autos would be dispatched to permanently occupy parking places throughout the commuter lots.

The amazingly slow-witted commuter students would simply assume that the same people parked in the same spots every morning and hence, would never realize that a thousand more of their ranks were being ticketed each day for being without a legal parking spot.

In the second portion of Phase I, a special team of electronics experts known as "the Juice Squad" would hunt down illegally parked autos. Then, by means of a portable electric generator, squad members would wire the metallic door handle of the offending car to conduct a moderate current of 200 or so volts.

When the car's owner attempted to open the door by grabbing the "hot" handle, they would be shocked into a paralytic stupor until, by vocal submission, they agreed to allow their insulated electric ambushers to extract a $25 "turn off the juice" fee.

As an extra source of income for ASU, the bookstore could begin marketing rubberized "commuter gloves" for those rebellious students seeking non-conductive protection while they persist in their illegal parking habits.

PHASE II

In this portion of the plan, a specially-trained ASU demolition team would implant hundreds of anti-vehicular exploding land mines in all unauthorized parking areas. Subsequent parking violators would simply be blown into submission (as well as through the roof of their car).

Fellow commuter students, upon seeing the charred remains of their fallen comrades strewn indiscriminantly across campus, would flock to the Memorial Union's Arizona Room where, at great expense, they would be able to purchase an official ASU automobile mine sweeper to be used in detecting the deadly devices.

For the less wealthy, more risky commuter student, survey maps would be sold showing the exact location of not less than 75 percent of the undetonated mines, giving the map holders only one chance in four of being immediately withdrawn both from their classes and their bodies.

PHASE III

In this ultimate "no-nonsense" portion of the master plan, the ASU parking security team would man a specially-constructed radar tracking station and command post high atop Gammage Auditorium. From this "Eagle's Nest," commuter students could be electronically tracked within a three-mile radius of the campus.

Upon detection of a parking violator, one of a fleet of three recently purchased surplus army helicopter gunships would be dispatched from "Parking Control." The aircraft would each carry three air-to-ground missiles with conventional warheads guided by a laser targeting system capable of hitting anything from a Winnebago to a Honda Civic.

The parking violator subsequently would be erased from the face of the Earth as would fifty or so surrounding legal parking places.

The profit angle is simple: commuter students would be forced to purchase, at ASU prices, an entire array of protective paraphernalia, ranging from radar jamming devices and anti-missile missiles to "conventional warhead accident insurance."

It may be argued by critics, tightwads and humanitarians that this three-phase campaign against parking lot nomads is farfetched, expensive and cruel.

However, in examining alternative solutions such as the construction of multi-level parking facilities or the improvement of bus service to and from campus, it seems obvious that neither plan would be as profitable or effective as the aforementioned creation.

As I've always said: the only good commuter is one you can make money from.

Happy Motoring

DESCRIPTION OF THE COLLEGE READING PROGRAM

The College Reading Program is a comprehensive fifteen (15) hour non-credit course designed to increase comprehension, speed and retention of reading materials. The course focuses on comprehension as the key to rapid and efficient reading. Reading is defined as an active decision-making process whereby the reader selectively looks for those clues which will enable him to reconstruct meaning from print. Therefore, no special eye or finger movements are stressed. Within the framework of large group, small group, and individual experiences, the student will actively participate rather than be lectured to by an instructor.

Students can benefit from the program as study becomes more productive through increased speed and comprehension. Also, those students who may have to take aptitude or qualifying examinations will find that increased speed and comprehension aids them in sections where reading ability is tested.

On the basis of past experience and research, improvement in reading is promised by the program. Classes in the past have attained average increases of fifty (50) to one hundred thirty (130) per cent. The question is not whether the student can improve but how much he can improve.

All candidates disqualified but elections will continue

Violations of the Assimilated Stooges election code have hit an all time high this spring, according to elections manipulator Larry McClingon.

"They're really going to a lot of trouble this year," he said. "It's good to see all the enthusiasm."

McClingon said most of the squealer reports filed with the Disrupts Bored are against presidential candidates. Presidential hopeful Grand Goodytwo shoes has been charged with attempting to threaten students. The complaint was made by Bunnie Bubblehead, of Hi Guy sorority.

"He approached a group of us sunbathing in front of Green Stick dorm and threatened to turn off the sun if we didn't promise to vote for him," she giggled.

Another complaint cited Goodytwo shoes for entering the Open Road Cafe and refusing to stop singing a Carpenters medley until he had secured 57 votes.

"We would have done anything," a bystander said.

Charges also have been brought against presidential candidate Rank Loss for allegedly attempting to bribe key student leaders. The complainant said Loss had been attaching car keys to campaign buttons and passing them out on the mall.

"I was only trying to help out with the transportation problem," Loss said. He also is under investigation for allegedly trapping Gov. Goose Rabbit in a Phoenix elevator for 18 hours last week.

Slick Oafson, a third presidential candidate, has been charged with hiding. Oafson, who says he is patterning his campaign after his favorite administrator, said he thought he would have a better chance of winning if he kept quiet, letting the other candidates "make fools of themselves." Oafson said he will continue to be a recluse, if elected.

A write-in candidate, Brave Hartless, was charged Monday for parking a World War II tank, painted with campaign slogans, near the fountain.

"I didn't know it was wrong," he said. "I was planning to get a parking decal for it, anyway." The tank was towed by University Police officers, who plan to repaint it and use it for their new SWAT team.

Hartless also has been cited for attempting to stop the Stale Mess presses when he learned about this story.

McClingon said although there is a possibility that all candidates will be disqualified, it will not affect the elections.

"Most students won't know the difference," he said.

"The candidates are really getting dirty this time," he said. "There hasn't been this much blatant corruption since Alph Ragknew ran a few years ago."

Ragknew, who currently holds the record for the most violations, was cited for intimate fraternization with sororities, using University vehicles for joyriding and taping signs to trees.

Professor demands library's fourth floor

By Fern Wino

An ASU professor who attempted to check out a whole floor of books from Hayden Library was apprehended by ASU police Monday night.

Vern "Max of Swaziland" Lemmings, a 52-year-old journalism professor, was dragged by security officers from the circulation counter while screaming, "You can't do this to me!"

ASU Police Captain Norman "Little Bo" Peep said Lemmings, who is a habitual Texan, wandered into the library and gave a note to a student employee at the circulation desk. Peep said the note demanded borrowing privileges for the 250,000 books on the fourth floor.

"It shook the student up a little," Peep said. "She went to circulation director Dallee Slowantall for help."

Slowantall then contacted University Librarian Ronald Inept, who said he tried to reason with Lemmings, but had no success.

"He was extremely irrational. I told him that we have very strict policies on faculty use of the library, and that they are rigidly enforced."

"I described the shame and embarrassment expressed by the few professors who disobey, but he wouldn't listen."

"Finally, with tears in my eyes, I pleaded with him. That was when he hit me with his library card."

While Inept was attempting to negotiate with Lemmings, Slowantall was busy calling campus security.

"The police got here very quickly, and were helpful in taking Mr. Lemmings away. I had to ask them only once to be quiet," she said.

Lemmings said the charges made against him "are drummed up." "They thought they could make an example of me," he snarled from behind the bars of his cell. "But I'm mad as hell, and I'M NOT GOING TO TAKE IT ANY MORE."

Lemmings said he didn't violate the library's policy of allowing professors to check out an unlimited number of books and keep them as long as they want.

"They can't get me for taking advantage of the privileges granted to me as a professor," he said.

Lemmings said he doesn't feel he would cause other library patrons any inconvenience by checking out the entire fourth floor.

"Hell, most of the students on this campus can't read," Lemmings said.

Killer pot epidemic ravages University

By Spawn Sammons

Paraquat-infected pot is spreading across the campus leaving in its wake a mass of mangled students, a group of confessed stoneheads said Monday.

The weed killer was declared harmless early last month by the Tempe arm of the Drug Enforcement Agency.

"That's when the fun started," said Bucky "Red" Iris, a 10-joint-a-day weed man who says Paraquat ruined his sex life.

Iris said he and a group of mellow friends "copped a bag of really blond buds" a little more than a week ago.

"We broke into it right away and bonged ourselves into oblivion," Iris explained.

"I was just buzzing along listening to Ian Drury and the Blockheads, when I got this really weird feeling between my legs, man."

Iris said he examined the forementioned area and found his genitalia had receded into his body.

"It feels like it's somewhere around my stomach region now, ya know, I mean what a drag," he drawled.

In order to keep his mind off his weed-induced mutation, Iris said he stays "stoned to the max."

Friends of Iris, who also smoked the metamorphosing weed, said they have begun to feel and act differently.

"Jimmy, over there in the corner developed an American flag fixation. He became catatonic, rolled himself up in the flag and has been humming Portuguese war songs ever since," Iris explained.

Tempe drug enforcement officials reaffirmed their stand that Paraquat is harmless.

"It's just tough shit if these little rascals can't handle their smoke," said P. C. PaAddiction, Tempe drug enforcement chief.

Soggy Foods Corp. has been declared the national winner in the Skippy Dog Food $100,000 Challenge, Soggy Director Rank Noodler announced Monday.

Skippy President Fido Weimeraner said, "There was just no contest. The minute we tested the Soggy sample we knew we had a winner. We hate to admit it, but they do make a better dog food."

"We're proud as punch about the award," Noodler said. "And the money will come in handy. We plan to funnel the funds back into our products."

Wheelchair breaks down; Amazing Towers 'help'

By Mack Scrap

A disabled ASU student was towed away, wheelchair and all, from Dumpy Center Monday when the chair's batteries went dead, stranding him in the parking lot for more than three hours.

Walston Farina, a sophomore necrophology major, said the tow truck driver was a large, unshaven, overweight man wearing "mirror" sunglasses and a dirty T-shirt with the inscription, "We Tow The Line," who identified himself as a "sales representative" of Amazing Towing, Inc.

"He told me to 'move it along,' but he didn't listen when I told him I was a paraplegic and couldn't get up from my chair. All he did was snort and chuckle.

"He came back with his truck and told me if that was the way I wanted it, he'd tow me along with my chair," he said.

The tower then ordered Farina to "put it in neutral," he said.

"When I told him I didn't have a 'neutral' he got real sore and started to swear. He said, 'All right, ya bum, I'll do it myself.'

That's when he took out a coat hanger and tried to yank off the battery terminals."

Farina was towed to Amazing Towing's headquarters in the Salt River bed.

The type of vehicle towed isn't important if it is in violation of the law, said "Puttyface" Ratwhiskers, day supervisor for Amazing Towing.

"Look, we've gotta job to do here and we do it the best way we know how," said Ratwhiskers, squeezing a zit.

"We once towed away an ambulance that parked in the Center. The drivers ran across the street with a stretcher. That was our cue to tow the thing away."

Ratwhiskers said, "It sure was funny" to see the drivers, returning with a heart attack victim on the stretcher, trying to find the ambulance.

"This job ain't all that bad. It's got its lighter moments too," he said.

Swata to perform caged feats at zoo

ASU President Jon Swata will place himself on public view at the Phoenix Zoo every day this week to give visitors a leisurely look at a University administrator.

"Dr. Swata will receive no special treatment," said Marvin Gherkins, zoo curator. "He will be fed and cared for during his stay with the same concern we give all our furry friends."

Swata will sit behind a replica of his desk in a 12- by 16-foot cage. The cage will be made up to resemble Swata's office, but won't look exactly like it, Gherkins said.

"We couldn't run in a pipe for his wet bar, and the gorillas (who live not far from where the cage will be placed) may become disturbed at hearing Wagnerian opera from his stereo system," he said.

However, Swata's golf clubs and indoor putting green will be installed so he can facilitate the "busy day of a university bigshot," Gherkins said.

A sign will be placed in front of the cage, bearing Swata's picture and a brief physical description. The sign also will list an average day for a university president: 8 a.m., breakfast with other administrators; 9 a.m., signing "important" papers; 10 a.m., mid-morning nap; 11 a.m., lunch; 2 p.m., back from lunch, golf practice; 3 p.m., refuse to see student representatives; 4 p.m., afternoon nap; 5 p.m., awakening by secretary to go home in official ASU limosine.

Gherkins said many ASU students probably will come to visit Swata just to see what he looks like, and to dispel rumors that he is nothing but a "Pong" machine.

ASU anthropology specialists have listed Swata's generic name as Administratus Ignoratus, "a common breed," according to Jack Custard, leading naturalist and discoverer of a line of national brand health cereals.

ASSASU molds students; president OKs practice

By Entebbe Balogny

Assimilated Stooges president "Bark" Marnes Monday refuted charges that he is a "self-serving political animal."

"I adamantly deny these juvenile accusations," he growled. "My only goal is to mold students of this University in my image. What's wrong with that?"

Marnes also refuted allegations he seized office last spring as a political move toward securing the gubernatorial seat in 1982.

"That's ridiculous," he retorted. "Hell, I don't care about this state, I'm a resident of Guam. The state of Arizona will just have to rough it without me."

Marnes, whose term expires in June, said he will hold the traditional "cleaning out the cage" ceremony to make way for the next administrative puppet.

Sources close to the president say the likely successor is the result of cloning experiments conducted by a freshman biology class.

Controversy arose earlier this year when it was believed that Marnes himself was the result of a recent cloning experiment in San Clemente.

When Marnes leaves ASU, there will be no hard feelings and he will not leave empty-handed, he said. In a 9-2 vote, Last Chance decided to let him keep

Finals early; playhooky till May for $150

Because of student complaints that the fall final exams fell too close to Christmas vacation, spring finals have been moved up to the week of April 10, the University registrar said Monday.

"Maybe now they'll quit bitching," said Willy Raid.

Classes will continue until May 19, but students can waive the last month of attendance by paying a special $150 "Hooky fee," he said.

his collection of whips and Flair pens, although they were paid for with student fees.

But until his term expires, Marnes will continue to fight against a constitutional amendment that would prohibit the president from looking at other executive officers or having direct contact with students or administrators.

The amendment was proposed by Mave and Dike Crownsey, the first Siamese twins to hold an executive office. The pair said they are sick and tired of having their office infiltrated by someone who was elected with the same amount of bought votes.

Campus terrorists blamed for bombing

By Fern Wino

Friday afternoon's fire and explosion, which destroyed the Physical Sciences Building, was caused by a terrorist's bomb, not a gas leak, the University fire marshal said Monday.

Sylvester Banderson said the explosion was caused by a bomb that had been planted in the basement of the C-wing by a campus terrorist group.

Campus Police Chief Sonny Daze said remains of the bomb are being investigated by his department.

Daze said the bomb, which was constructed of "a precise mixture of MU chow, Coors, and inter-office memos," was planted by a militant, leftist, nihilistic band of junior politicians.

"I received a telephone call from the group's leader. I can't remember his name, but he claimed responsibility for the explosion.

"He said he and his henchmen planted the bomb to demonstrate how serious they are about getting a representative on the Arizona Bored of Rejects."

Nail Fartridge, University safety officer, said rumors of a gas leak causing or contributing to the fire were false.

"I've never heard anything more ridiculous since coming to ASU," Fartridge said. "There is absolutely no reason to think that."

Fartridge said "twice as much gas is produced in the Physical Sciences Building by students than by any leaks."

But an ASU chemistry student, who refused to be identified, said he suspects the fire was caused by "Old Faithful," one of several regular gas leaks in the building.

"I noticed Old Faithful had been a little more active a few days before the explosion," he said.

Health Lo-Lites

Illness revives ASU sex lives

From the Student Sickie Service

A widespread epidemic of necrophilia has hit the campus, causing thousands of students to revive dormant sex lives.

The disease is characterized by erotic obsession with a corpse and is quite common among 18- to 25-year-olds.

Symptoms of the disease are excessive graveyard visitation, kissing corpses at funeral parlors and visiting the county morgue during happy hour.

As the symptoms progress, victims have been known to frantically dig up graves in an attempt to find a stimulating partner. The person also loses all interest in anything living.

Medical experts say one advantage victims enjoy is saving on contraceptive costs.

Lunch time in the patio of our La Rojeña distillery.

When our workers sit down to lunch they sit down to a tradition. When they make Cuervo Gold it's the same.

Every day at just about eleven the wives from Tequila arrive at the Cuervo distillery bearing their husbands' lunches.

Lunches that have been lovingly prepared in the same proud manner since men first began working here in 1795.

It is this same pride in a job well-done that makes Cuervo Gold truly special. Any way you drink it, Cuervo Gold will bring you back to a time when quality ruled the world.

ASU miners plan to go all the way to China if they have to in their search for copper. Excavation began last week and officials say the quest for the mineral may include plans to excavate half of the present campus.

ASU to be first college to dig own copper mine

Construction of ASU's first open-pit copper mine north of the Physical Education Building East began during spring break, and the project foreman said the University should have its own copper supply by the year 2000.

"It's a great idea," Blob Failure of the Physical Breakdowns department, said. "If we mine the stuff ourselves, it will save ASU at least $25 a year."

Failure said the odds were at least "1 in 100" that a substantial amount of the metal could be excavated from the ASU mine.

But so far, crews have found nothing except an old drainage pipe from the days when ASU was a teacher's college.

The site originally had been intended for construction of a new office/classroom complex, but Herb Gay, head of the department, said once the crews started digging, "they just couldn't stop."

Gay said the Physical Breakdowns department uses large quantities of copper in toilet plumbing, and costs of buying the metal wholesale have skyrocketed.

'Ratyr' writing disability wastes undercover work

By Fart Poor

Diligent investigation by staff members of the ASU student publication, Ratyr, has uncovered a system of hazing used to initiate new reporters of the Stale Mess.

"We really raked some good stuff," said Grand Goodytwo-shoes, Ratyr editor. "Too bad nobody on our staff knows how to write, or else we would have a great story."

Goodytwo-shoes said his investigation uncovered such acts as forcing rookie reporters to type with their eyebrows, clean typewriter keys by licking them and to inhale great quantities of rubber cement before turning in story ideas.

"Actions like these are intolerable," Goodytwo-shoes said while signing autographed photos of himself. "I'm just glad other campus organizations don't put their members through such immature rituals."

Goodytwo-shoes, self-proclaimed Greek god, said the investigation took months and was hampered when Ratyr co-editor Countess Von Dipstick, who was planted on the Stale Mess as a "stoolie," turned against her former mates.

"God, I could have just shot that bitch," Goodytwo-shoes moaned. "That was no way for one of our sisters to act. She just didn't have it here," he said, pointing to his heart.

Goodytwo-shoes said he first saw evidence of unusual activity in the Stale Mess newsroom one day while he was hanging around being a general nuisance.

"It was ghastly," he exclaimed. "I saw this tall, bearded person take a pica pole and stick it in the ear of some poor reporter who told him his story had fallen through. Then he made him wipe the floor with his shirt."

Among the other heinous acts uncovered by Ratyr:

- Requiring female reporters to submit to having nude photos taken before being hired. It was done under the guise of 'security.' "Hell, we had to make sure those damn things on their chests weren't bombs," one editor said.

- Requiring female staffers to go to sleazy bars "so they know what we expect from them," one male said.

- Rampant use of drugs in the darkroom. "Well, hey, it gets kind of dark back there. I like to see what it's like in the real world," one photographer said.

Goodytwo-shoes said he later discovered the editors forced rookie reporters to supply them with beer and drugs by telling them to go out on the mall and attack students in wheelchairs to get money.

"I don't know who those damn journalists think they are,"

Goodytwo-shoes bellowed. "They should leave the drinking and dope to the pros — the fraternity men."

Goodytwo-shoes broke off the interview to cruise the campus singing campaign songs on his own behalf.

The Bored of Student Publications, after hearing the evidence against the Stale Mess, declined to investigate or press any charges.

"Hell, they didn't find out anything we didn't already know," said one bored member while reading the National Inquirer. "Now, this is a newspaper," he said.

Be a terrorist in one easy lesson!

Students can experience oppression and terrorism firsthand while learning about President Carter's human rights' campaign during a summer study program to be offered by ASU.

Leaving May 20, the program will tour countries blacklisted by the President for their revolutionary social reform programs.

Highlights will include days with Ede I'm-in and John Worster. Participants can take part in an actual interrogation of a Russian dissident, join forces with Rhodesian guerrilla groups and patrol the West Bank with Yessir You're-a-rat.

Swata ends reign as office recluse

It was revealed Monday that administrative recluse Jon Swata has escaped from his office where he had been trapped since the beginning of the semester.

Upon his release, Swata was pale and emaciated. Doctors were amazed he had survived on graphite, rubber cement and lizards, which he trapped in a device fashioned out of rubber bands and paper clips.

"Thank God I'm out," Swata said. "I never thought I'd see the light of day again. I yelled and tried passing urgent messages under my office door, but my secretary kept telling me I wasn't in."

"I wanted to get out and discuss salient issues with the students, but I was afraid to jump (from the second-floor window). Campus police frown on that sort of thing," Swata explained.

However, his absence from daily activities was not noticed because he had instructed University officials not to bother him over trivial issues.

'Heavenly gifts' drop from sky

A freak hail storm sent students scampering for shelter Friday. The "hail stones" were birth control pills dropped from an aircraft.

The control tower at Sky Harbor was unable to identify the origin or destination of the plane, but an anonymous caller claimed the aircraft was hired by the Women's Affairs Board to protest the refusal of the Student Sickie Center to distribute birth control devices on campus.

On a second pass the aircraft dropped a load of prophylactics in tiny parachutes monogrammed with the message, "Welcome to the Monkey House."

Students were seen with bushel baskets and rakes collecting the devices from the lawns.

RESEARCH NEWS

Physics student Ben Wallyenda died last weekend while testing the effects of an 80-foot fall on the human body. The fall was part of his master's thesis titled, "The Impact of G-Forces Upon the Face." Wallyenda reportedly went to pieces over the success of his experiment. [Stale Mess staph foto by Dave, Dave, Dave]

Experiments by the Biology Dept. in the area of genetic research have resulted in the creation of a three-legged human. Two of the legs are female while the remaining is male. John Mary Franklin, the three-legged wonder, said, "I really have a hell of a time finding pants to wear." [Stale Mess staph foto by Wanda Platz]

Another case of an experimental mishap on campus involved Liberal Arts major Ellie Ham [right] who volunteered for one of the psychology department's on-going study of "mind-bending" drugs. Grad student Becky Barr [left], who conducted the experiment, commented, "The growth of mold was a totally unexpected side-effect that has never been documented before." [Stale Mess staph foto by S. They threw the concert but nobody showed because 'kids today just don't give a toot'

By Greg Colombian

Everyone was there. The Grateful Dead, Jefferson Starship, Marshall Tucker, Willie Nelson, Jackson Browne and dozens of other equally great performers with tons of outdoor sound equipment nestled in the shadows of Mingus Mountain.

Booked as the biggest rock festival since Woodstock, the Jerome Jam of last week had everything.

Borrowed Bard

Lousy prose by any other name . . .

Shakespeare who? That's likely to be the first question to rattle in the average head. Actually, Shakespeare is his last name, and if Mr. Toby Peasbrane is any hand at carving literature to current taste, by this time next year he may well be the talk of the town.

Peasbrane has taken Shakespeare, once only an historical footnote, and is trying to boot him into the spotlight via punched up, modernized versions of his works.

Peasbrane, in humble allusion to those scholars whose labors of translation produced the King James Bible, refers to his own work as "parody" — a corruption from the French "par dieu," that is, "by (the grace of) God."

In illustrating his method of up-dating this arcane author to the realities of rural America ("the Tractor Factor"), Peasbrane took as an example a romantic work, Ramona and Julio. "Actually," he explained, "it was called, uh . . . oh, scusi moi, the name escapes me, but it

Except an audience. "I can't figure it out," a disappointed Jerry Garcia of the Dead said, after finishing a set with Doc Watson and Vassar Clements before 23 persons and six dogs. "I mean, I looked forward to this week more than anything on earth and where is everybody?"

Ron Reek, a coke dealer from Aspen, Colo. also expressed distress at the low turnout. "Man, I dropped all the bucks I had on three ounces of Bolivian blue flake for this. Kids these days just don't give a toot, I guess."

Promoter Frank Fiasco of Burbank was unavailable for comment about the Jam, having incapacitated himself with a .38-caliber bullet in his right temple. Aides indicated Fiasco seemed a little despondent about the turn of events.

Residents of Jerome were thrilled by the number of celebrities in their ghost town.

"Hey, this is great!" Will Stone, a local miner, said. "I've always had to sit a mile from the stage at other rock concerts but at this show I got to rub shoulders with Elvin Bishop, Linda Ronstadt, Charlie Daniels, . . ."

What apparently went wrong with the Jerome Jam was a mixup in Los Angeles and all the advertising for the show said "Fredonia" instead of "Jerome."

Subsequently, thousands of youths from Denver, San Francisco and Phoenix invaded the small northern Arizona town looking for a rock show residents knew nothing about.

"I'm so upset," Mrs. Gertrude Stien, Fredonia resident said. "All those mangle long-haired kids trampling my petunia beds and asking me where they can score dope. What have we done to deserve all this?"

Randy Coquespune of Newark, N.J. trudged down the long road leading toward Kingman, his backpack hanging low on his shoulder, his weathered Stetson pulled down over his grim face.

"I thumbed all the way here from New Jersey. I hocked my Martin guitar in Omaha to raise some more bread. Here I am in Fredonia and not one group showed. It's a drag, man," he said, shaking his head. "What a drag!"

was very exotic and was set in Algeria. We're truncating it (that's a literary term and means lit. ally, "packing the scenery in a trunk") to the Mexico of Pancho Villa."

"Gee, that sounds exotic." "When was the last time you were in Nogales?" Peasbrane asked wryly. "Anyway, lots of changes were necessary. One scene in particular, known as the "ramada scene," had to be totally revised. As it stands now Ramona goes out in the middle of the night to milk a cow . . .

"Milking cows in the middle of the night?" I interjected.

Peasbrane waved his hand impatiently. "That's what's called poetic licentiousness. Anyway, she runs into Julio who is trying to steal the cow — and well — (snicker) hilarious complications arise."

Peasbrane was nearly choking with laughter.

Well, as the old proverb has it, "The cook who tastes his porridge gets just desserts."

Man's film presents men as being human — finally

By Slim Mulesheen

Fugitive filmmaker Polar Romanski announced today that he will return to the United States next week to face a conviction on a charge of sodomy with a 13-year-old girl.

The announcement came in the wake of reports that Romanski had made a dramatic religious conversion three weeks ago following a conversation with teenage sex goddess Tatum Carter O'Neal at Cannes.

Romanski was arrested at his mother's home last October after the girl's father notified police that the actor had lured his daughter to the home of actor Jack Nicholson, telling her that he intended to take photos that he would distribute to modeling agencies and film companies.

Instead, the mother said, Romanski drugged the girl and forced her to have sex with him.

Romanski apologized to the

press for changing the originally scheduled 8 a.m. conference to 4 p.m., but said his lawyer was unable to obtain her mother's signature on a pass from morning classes at her nearby elementary school.

Romanski, accompanied by his lawyer, Gia Galeaux, fielded questions from some 40 reporters at a press conference at his villa near Marseilles, France, Monday afternoon.

Gia Galeaux said that Romanski will enter a plea to the court upon his return to accept his plans to create a Center for Crimes Against Children in lieu of the charges that stand against him.

The lawyer explained that the purpose of the Center would be to counsel both child offenders and children considering sexual relations with middle-aged foreign directors.

She added that future plans of the Center include a "Sex With a Kink" clinic and a zoo where members of the diaper-set and their partners can actually touch the animals.

The zoo will be equipped with individual rooms and showers where couples may take an animal of their choice for shower and massage. However, she said, there will be a towel fee.

Romanski to submit blueprint for short peoples' sex center

It is, Eric thinks, a happy marriage, although perhaps he doesn't think about it too much. His wife is a successful New York stockbroker, he works in an art gallery. They live in a high-rise and jog along East River. Could he have bargained for more?

One day, swiftly and cruelly, it all comes to an end. His wife, while jogging, soils her immaculate Addidas in fashionable poodle droppings. She breaks down in phony tears and confesses she has fallen in love with a younger man — her interior decorator.

And so Eric's happy marriage — the kind every college boy dreams of — has come to an end.

These are the first crucial passages from Raoul Nazursky's new film, "A Divorced Man," which stars Bill Playdough in the title role. They are crucial scenes, because we must understand this is finally a man's film; a film in which men are treated as intelligent, sensitive human beings rather than as sex objects or husbands who do nothing but take out the garbage all day long.

In the film, Eric's growth begins with some deterioration. His wife's announcement hits him like a karate kick in the groin. In one of the film's many fine scenes, Eric goes to his wife's Wall Street office and tells her off. But more interesting than his anger is a question he asks her: "Did you fall out of love with me, Estelle, or did you fall out of love with my body?" Atta boy, make the jerk feel like a real heel.

The rest of the film follows Eric's adjustment to unmarried life. He spends a lot of time drinking white wine with his men friends, discussing his problem. He checks into Elizabeth Arden for a makeover.

All during the film, Playdough's portrayal of Eric shines through, as though he's showing the world that men, too, are capable of dealing with complex emotions.

Playdough has an odd appeal, visible even in films as slight as "Soft-Boiled" and "Gray Train."

He looks like the conventional Hollywood bombshell who can't quite get it all together. He is handsome, but he always seems to have a cold. And his nose is very sad. In sum, it's hard to figure Playdough out, which makes him a challenge to watch.

Although "A Divorced Man" couldn't be accurately described as a masculinist film, it certainly is leading the way for more men's films and better parts for men since the days of the James Bond films.

Timely tale of temptation in hot Torrid Zone titillates

Violet Winspear, author of such works as "Love in a Stranger's Arms," "Forbidden Rapture," "Dearest Demon," and others in the Harlequin Romance series has recently released a new book, "Time of the Temptress;" and a timely book it is.

Set in contemporary Africa in the midst of a rebellion against the government, it concerns the fortuitous meeting between a London debutante, who is spending the season peeling potatoes at a convent, and a jungle-toughened Irishman who hires out as a mercenary to put his illegitimate son through medical school.

It's not all brilliantly leering innuendo, however. There is a real element of danger, as when the mercenary assures the "dear deb" that, if overrun by natives, he will do the honorable thing. "... (I will) blow your pretty head off rather than see it chopped off." "Ugh! You don't spare the rod, do you?"

Winspear of course is not one to leave off with telling a smashing good story. There is the metaphysical aspect, as when the heroine notes with a kind of acute irony which recalls Pirandello, "Oh God, sometimes it seemed as if she were thinking and loving like some heroine in a romantic story."

A good read and one worth hunting down at the next church rummage sale.

Boone injects life into the late Janis

"A Tribute to Janis," Debby Boone [Berserkley Records LV2468]
This two-record live album is certainly a step in the right direction from Debby's "You Light Up My Life." Boone really gets down in a concert environment, especially using the formula hits of the late Janis Joplin.

Backed aptly by Bob Seeger on lead guitar, Ron Wood on bass, Leon Russell on keyboards, Phil Lesh on drums and Shawn Cassidy as backup vocalist, Debby seared the stage with numbers like "I Need A Man to Love," "Summertime," "Piece of My Heart," "Ball and Chains" and "Lord, Won't You Buy Me a Mercedes Benz."

Debby seems to have taken lessons from the lady herself on this album. A must in every old hippie's record collection.

"Environments - Silent Sounds" [Atlantic Z000-Z]

A new album has been added to the "Environment" series from Atlantic. This album, entitled "Silent Sounds," supplements the original issues that involved only nature sounds.

Of the fifteen tracks, highlights are "Philodendron Growing," "Evaporation of a Rain Puddle," "Flight of the Butterfly" and "Pet Rocks Dozing in the Sun."

The recording techniques used for this album are highly effective and result in a clean sound, enhancing the unique differences in each setting.

A new direction is taken on this album with the inclusion of different types of environmental settings. "Molding Cheese," "Drying Sox" and "Flat Beer in a Mug" are excellent examples of the preservation of new types of environmental soundations.

"DIESEL DAMNED," FLANKSTEAM FULLER [Cowpie Records AS243]

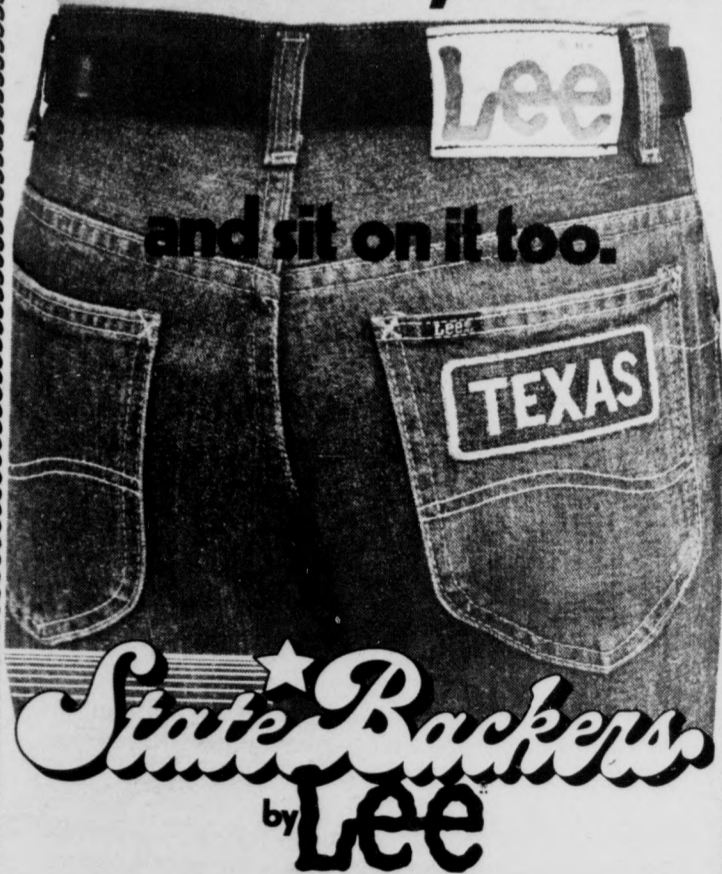

Country fans have a new star to focus in on with the arrival of Flanksteak Fuller, a former janitor in a bus depot in Amarillo and Bible belt preacher.

With such hits as "Tire Iron," "This Diesel Man's Love Life's a Blow-out," "Bisbee Breakdown Boogie" and "Jesus Beats the Bennies in My Life," Fuller rubs axle grease in the face of other stars like Waylon Jennings and Charley Pride.

The color Fuller puts into each song brings the smell of a feedlot and the graffiti off a Lubbock gas station wall to the listener in the comfort of his own latrine.

True story — names not changed; no one innocent

By Wheat Thins

This is the city — Lumpe, Ariz. A busy young metropo-something hard by Phenus. It boasts one of the country's most spacious and beautiful funiversities — USA (University of Social Aggats) — which has an enrollment of some 15 trillion.

Nine tenths of that enrollment are athletes with dark tans. Only one millionth of those said athletes go to school.

The remainder occupy their hours by breaking the law — stealing, defrauding, defacing and generally being acute pains in the ass.

When they do, I'm usually there.

My name is Swata. I carry a cannon.

(Da-dada-dum. Da-dada-dummmmmmmmm)

The captain's name is Wednesday. My chief's name is Thursday. It was Friday. We were planning to meet Saturday to eat sundaes.

I was working the day shift out of student suicide. It was 11:16.506743523897658909876-547864538778947565658724343.

My Timex watch was still ticking. I only wish I could decipher the damn thing.

"Why don't you soak it in water," My partner, Joe Phukface, said. "I soak these raw eggs in water for five minutes and they taste greaaaaat. Here wanna try one????"

"Cram it Phukface," I said in stoic Jack Webb demeanor. "Go soak your head in some water. Then dry your hair with a soldering iron."

"Hey," Phukface said. "That sounds greaaaaat. I think I will."

It was raining. Phukface didn't have to travel far to find any water. Throwing open the squad car door, he slipped on one of his own rotten banana peels and fell headlong into a parking lot puddle.

But before one hair of his head touched the oily crest of that puddle, Jean McMaim was there "Live."

"Phukface's hair hit... the oily puddle... and burst into flames... killing his toupee. Police say... the tragedy... could've been avoided... if Phukface never was born... Jean McMaim-TV 12½ Action Fools..."

I felt like barfing. But instead I took two hits of Junior Mints and closed the door. "Goodbye, Phukface," I said with a Connie Stevens wave.

A screech of rubber and I was on the road again, Phukface far behind, peeling the wrapper off a Charleston Chew. I hoped he'd choke.

I shifted my pimpmobile into second and drooled at the sleazes out the side window. Just as I was focusing on this one blonde with jugs like watermelons, I got a call. Dammit.

It was Sarge. He wanted me to meander over to the Inactivity Center. Something — as they say everywhere except the Salt River — was fishy.

I walked into the main concourse of the Inactivity Center at precisely 11:43.09876786578675. I got a migraine just trying to read those little red hands on the face of my Timex and popped two more Junior Mints at the nearest water cooler.

A short, chunky man with a gap between his two front teeth cussed at me under his breath.

"Those are... er... a very fine... er... pair of shoes you got there... er... son," said the man, who I immediately identified as ASU's recently canned football coach Rank Lush, now the Inactivity Center's hat check girl. "But they're a bit... er... too salty for me... and my floor. Get the hell out of here."

"Hold on, shorty," I said, throwing down my box of Junior

Pay to see what's hidden at slim meets

By Euell Gibbons

Free Robberson, ASU slimnastics coach, has dollar signs in his eyes these days.

A penny pincher from way back, "1943 to be exact," Robberson has scrapped his "FREE, FREE, FREE" policy for all Fun Devil slimnastics meets at the Inactivity Center and has begun charging prices.

Attendance, which in the past encompassed two consistent figures — near zero and zero — has ironically skyrocketed.

"Fans are coming from all over," Robberson said. "They must think that if we're charging admission, we must be trying to cover up something. They probably think we're having a Fun Devil peep show or something of that nature."

"All we do offer is a heckuva great slimnastics show and former ASU slimnastics coach Johnas Tightwadass having his face broken by the bearded lady (Ferd Mauler's secretary) at halftime."

READING PERSONALITY

THROUGH GEMS

[Part II]

The change in color preferences at different stages of our lives may be allied to personality development. In my last article I discussed some of the personality traits attached to preferences for red, pink, blue, blue-green and green. I continue now with other hues.

If purple is your favorite color, you would enjoy wearing amethyst, almandite or andalusite. This is the color of distinctive and unusual taste. Purple suggests affection, pomposity and solemnity and is often the choice of people of royalty.

Yellow is the hue of imagination and the search for self-fulfillment. You whose eyes are drawn to topaz, golden beryl, amber, citrine or golden sapphire are inclined toward the intellectual and the ideal and are probably involved with cults and reforms.

Orange depicts an interest in life similar to the "red" personality but without the great passion of the latter. Your cheery spirit and easy manner reflect your desire to like and be liked. The gemstones suited to your temperament are padparadscha (orange) sapphire, coral, carnelian, amber and Mexican opal.

Brown is the color of earth people who are sincere and unostentatious. You do not like taking the spotlight but do voice your views and are very responsible. Your gemstone choices are sardonyx, smoky quartz, tourmaline, aventurine, amber, tiger-eye and chrysoberyl.

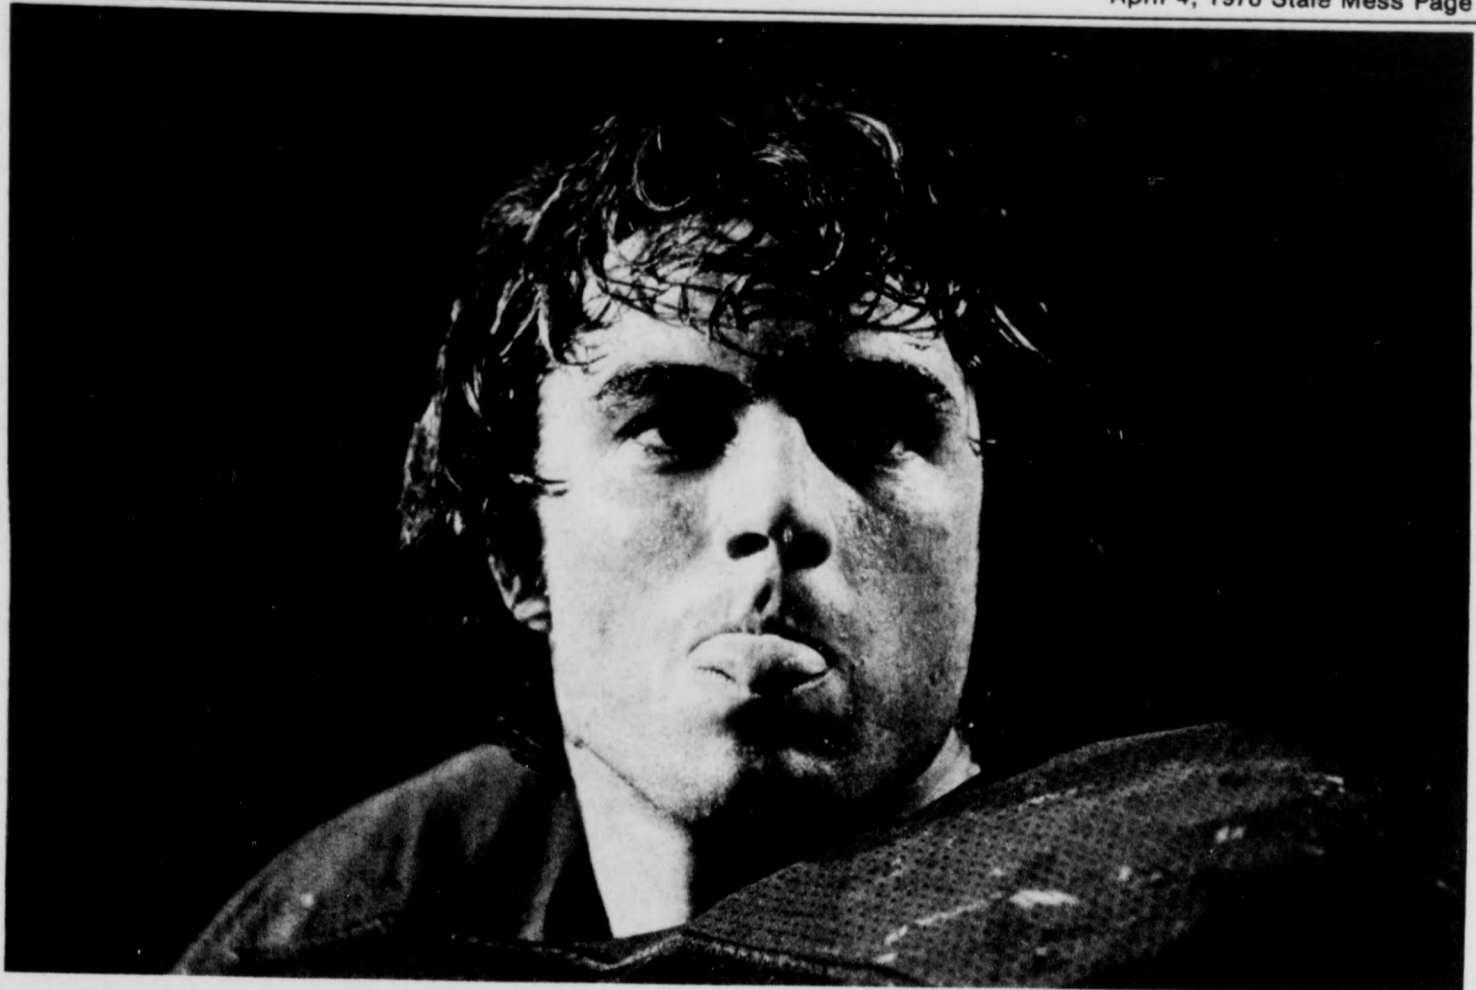

If you are looking for a unique gift for a special person, why not present a stone that reflects his or her personality? Include a note on the color significance. The gift will gain added importance and will always be remembered.

More about Mauler meets hat check girl

Mints and sticking my thumbs under my beltloops a la Arthur Fonzarelli. "I'm a law-abiding U.S. citizen and an officer of the law. I am also a pedestrian. What's your line, small fry?"

"I used to be . . . er . . . a football coach . . . but not anymore," Lush said with conviction. "I used to be a football coach . . . I used to be a football coach . . ."

The man was on the brink of hysteria, but at least he had stopped stuttering.

I tiptoed past him and his sweat socks strewn all over the athletic coaches' office and approached the headquarters of Ferd Mauler, Fun Devil athletic swindler, beach boy and all-around clod.

"Hi, how ya doing? Great day for anything, isn't it," Mauler said even before I was one step into his crummy little dungeon.

"Cut the crap, Ferd," I said tersely. "I came to talk facts, JUST facts. Save the plastic smiles for your season ticket holders."

F.M.: Great day for swearing, isn't it?"

ME: "What's this deal about the phone bills, Ferd. Is Mountain Well giving you something on the side?"

F.M. "Great day to go dial long distance!!!"

I felt like busting him in the teeth, but I didn't have the heart. Besides, my hands were clean.

ME: "What about this hotel business with Nick-o-lie, Ferd? Don't you know he's connected with the underworld?"

F.M. "Great day to take the subway, isn't it?"

ME: "You're hopeless, Mauler."

F.M. "Great day for rehabilitation, isn't it?"

ME: "Why did you leave Long Reach State to come to ASU, anyway, Ferd? Did you hear the footsteps of the NCAA coming?"

F.M. "Great day for a possee chase, isn't it?"

ME: "What about all this talk about you being fired?"

F.M. "Great day . . . grea . . . What the hell are you talking about?"

ME: "Now we're back on the same wavelength, Mauler. I got the ball. You play by my rules."

F.M. "Your ball? Your rules? Hmmm. You ever think of being a football coach. We need one, you know . . . And it's a GREAT day for hiring . . . You can go far in this world, Swata. Leave your cannon and your Junior Mints behind and join me and Nick-o-lie. Someday, we'll own the world. But lately, we've had to settle for just the east side of Lumpe . . ."

ME: "Where does that leave Phukface?"

F.M. "Give him some Clearasil and tell him to take a hike. Here, here's five hundred bucks. Tell him to keep the change, after he buys me a pound of candy, that is."

ME: "What kind you into, Ferd. Payday? Hollywood?"

F.M. "Naw. Trident."

ME: "Why???"

F.M. "It's the only gum my mom let's me chew."

Lush replacement excited about leaching off ASU

By Blatre Werry

Louie "The Leach" Myers a.k.a. Mack and Myers has finally found a way to freeload on ASU football road trips.

Monday, he was named new Fun Devil head coach, replacing Rank Lush who has been sentenced to Florence for extensive drug rehabilitation.

Lush was addicted to himself.

For Myers, who just last month was hired to mop the floors of the Inactivity Center, the hiring was a dream come true.

"Now I won't have to scrounge around for a new coach's hat every fall, or bum field passes off Moon Mars," he said, clinging to his maroon and gold windbreaker. "I may even get to eat training table at P.U. Mess. I'll have all kinds of freebies."

Myers, 33, possesses an intellect of a man far younger than his time. He has yet to pass his high school entrance exam, but doesn't consider it a setback.

"The way I figure it," Myers said, "all I have to do is consult Jon Hayfield — our athletic academic counselor — and he'll get me through both ASU and high school, probably in the same week."

"Jon's good at that. He's got three degrees — all through the mail. I guess if you sell so many bottle tops or collect a certain number of green stamps, they'll send you whatever degree you want."

trumpet.

"But with a little practice," he said, "I may catch on with the New Yuk Filharmonic. They need a guy who can play 'Charge' on the xylophone."

Or, There's a Little Siglinda Steinfüller in All of Us.

Fellow Beer Persons,

Have you ever thought of becoming a Dean of Beer like me, Siglinda Steinfüller? It may be easier than you think. Just answer these two easy questions:

1. Have you found that if you don't have pizza once a week, you lose your appreciation for Italian art?

2. If you don't have time to party, does studying clog your brain?

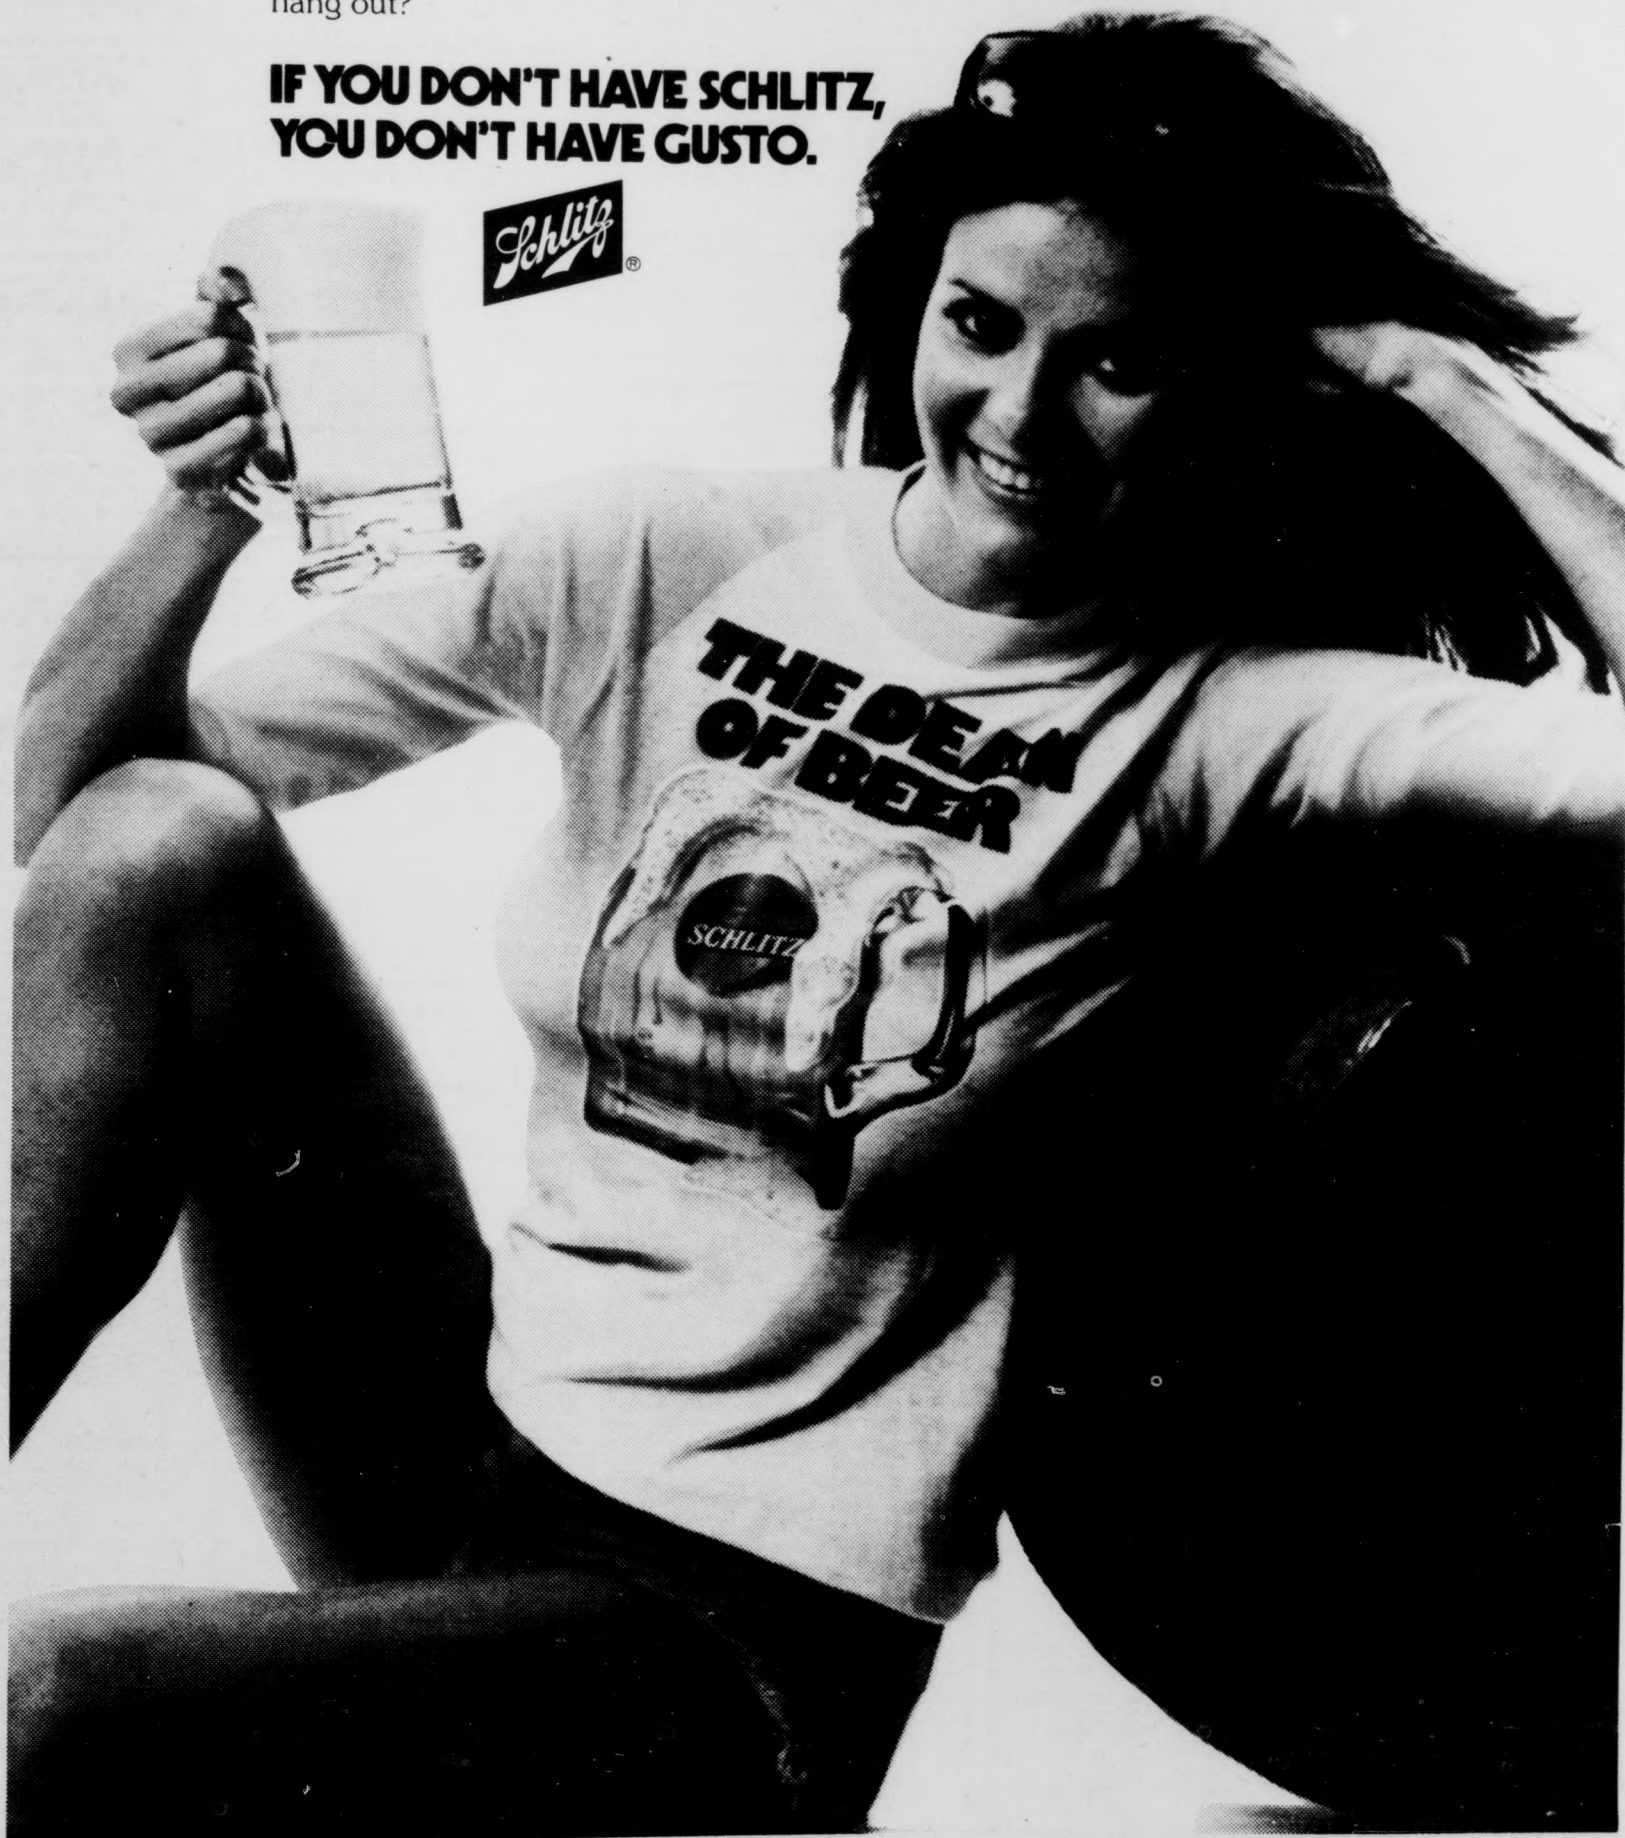

If you answered "YES" to either of these questions, you have the makings of a great Dean of Beer.

Now, to further your education, take one average beer mug and add the great taste of Gusto. Which we Deans know can only be found in Schlitz.

Which can only be found at the best pubs in town.

But then, where else would we Deans hang out?

IF YOU DON'T HAVE SCHLITZ, YOU DON'T HAVE GUSTO.

Laughing like a damn hyena, Mauler reports Wulkus quits

By Dick Van Dyke

ASU head basketball coach Nedus Wulkus has quit, Athletic Director Ferd Mauler happily announced Monday.

"I'm proud to announce that Nedus Wulkus has finally seen the light and decided to stop fighting a losing battle," Mauler grinned. "Naturally, I'm pleased that he's made this decision. In fact it's the happiest day of my life."

Wulkus said, "Ug."

He added, "Until somebody can come up with something more than just what they can call 'a reliable source,' I won't believe I've quit."

Assorted hints, innuendos and rumors about Wulkus' resignation have been circulating around the Inactivity Center for a long, long time.

They included pasting photos of Booby Night (likely successor to Wulkus) on the windshield of Nedus' maroon and gold 1957 Packard (Nedus' lucky car he has driven since coming to ASU), anonymous phone calls to Wulkus' house (the caller, breathing heavily, reportedly implored "quit ... quit ... quit"), and throwing beer bottles collected from center Kurt Nimpho's front yard on Nedley's front lawn.

Mauler, the ASU basketball team, and the 19 ASU basketball fans all denied responsibility for the hints.

"As far as I'm concerned, my hands are clean in this matter," Mauler laughed. "However, my elbows got a little dirty from poking Wulkus in the anus.

"I'll have to say though, that his resignation makes today a red letter day in ASU history," Mauler said with conviction. "It certainly offsets the day Clyde B. Smoothy hired him. I really don't know what anybody saw in Wulkus as a coach.

"It's certainly a great day for a resignation."

Nimpho, whose thumbprints were found on a beer bottle — presumably once a cold Budweiser — that landed in Wulkus' living room, also declined responsibility.

"I don't know what happened, but I'm glad he's gone. He's a real pain in the you-know-where," Nimpho said.

Night, reached in Bloomington, Ind. via satellite, where he currently is coach on the Indiana Whosiers, said, "Now I've got a chance to make things miserable for ASU — especially the press. I've heard they've got some jerk on TV there named Dud Cates. I'll show him his arse from a hole in the ground."

Following the interview, while the boyish-looking Forrest is trying on some suits for a promotional firm someone makes a crack on how he looks like he's from Annapolis because of the straight erect way he stands. Somehow, as the small smile reveals itself through his stoical structure, you can feel that this is exactly the type of image he tries to portray in every aspect of his life.

While there's no need for Howard Cosell to start worrying about his job, he'd be wise to study up on the game that 90 percent of the countries in the world call the only sport.

The soccer seeds have been planted at ASU.

Football team is flying high

By Moon Mars

ASU's spring football practice is in full swing once again under new coach Louie "the Leach" Myers, and the Fun Devil running backs have found the sudden secret of success.

Strange drugs.

"Let me tell you, they've been smoking since camp began," ASU offensive backfield coach Don Faker said. "I'm not even sure what they're stuffing into their bongos, but it's sure working. I'm proud of 'em all."

The list of backs under the drug program include Muck Hairless, Brain "Baby Face" Elixir, "Turdle" Lame, Newt Willies, and quarterback Merk Melon.

Drugs are administered to the players one hour before practice by team trainer "Dime Bag" Hypo, who keeps the list of substances under guarded secret.

Each back is allowed to toke for one hour, and then must dress for practice, but Hairless, leading rusher of last year's Fresca Bowl team, said he'd like to see two hours of toking action.

"Yeah, man, two hours would really get us up for practice," Hairless said matter-of-factly. "But I can't complain because practice seems to float by the way it is now."

"Floating" is an excellent way to describe the Fun Devil running corps so far this spring. Faker said all the backs on the drug program hit their holes with "effortless ease."

"The key to Arizona State football is speed," Faker said — obviously letting one of Hypo's secrets out. "When they're on, and they usually are, there isn't a headier set of backs than ours."

However, all isn't rosy for the "heady" ballplayers. Faker said the biggest problem with the drug program is missed assignments in the huddle, caused by billowing clouds of smoke. Faker said the smoke blocks from view the plays ASU quarterback Melon draws with his finger on the ground. Faker said he'll have to ban smoking in the huddle.

Also, sophomore Gorge Ferry, heavily counted on to bolster the ASU running attack, has quit the team and school, complaining of a "burnt-out" feeling.

"Gorge just couldn't take it," Faker said.

The other backs apparently can take it, and they're taking full advantage of what Faker calls an "old breakthrough in football training."

"Oh yeah," Faker said. "Drugs were pretty common years ago and they produced some really good junkies. But then colleges decided to go for the 'rah-rah-all-for-the-Gipper' bit and drugs were phased out. But they're back in vogue again. I don't know why. Maybe a new wave of something is coming football's way."

It's probably a plane load of Colombian.

Athletic director resigns, gains secure 10-year post

By John Junkie

ASU athletic director Ferd Mauler, who expertly guided the Fun Devil sports program from national prominence into bankruptcy during the past three months, has quit, interim athletic director Toni Nick-o-lie said Monday.

Mauler refused to reveal the reason his motive for "throwing in the beach towel," but it is believed to be due to one main factor.

He is going to jail.

"Yep, he sure is," Nick-o-lie said. "Great day for a sentencing, eh?"

Nick-o-lie, a construction magnate ("Hotels and 'fencing' are my specialties"), will inherit all of Mauler's worldly possessions, ranging from his lawn chair to his 12 sets of golf clubs — the tools of his trade.

Mauler — dressed in a cashmere sweater, sandals, a wide-brimmed beach hat and Fun Devil sunglasses — was led from his old office by Lumpy police, blindfolded with dollar bills and chained by maroon and gold handcuffs.

"What are you guys doing? What are you guys doing?" Mauler said. "You guys are disturbing the peace and disturbing my hair."

"Great day for an arrest, eh, Ferd," Lumpy police captain Harry Handcuffs replied.

"What is he going to do in jail?" a spectator asked as the squad car peeled away from the Inactivity Center's no-parking zone.

"Five to ten son," Nick-o-lie said with a grin. "Five to ten."

Coach Pinko hits the deck for ten count

By Sans Sams

Party Pinko, ASU tennis coach, had a brush with destiny over the weekend.

A gust of wind knocked him on his ass.

"It was the greatest experience of my career," said Pinko. "It was a strong serve from the west, I believe. It came at me faster than one of Eric Afro's serves. He has one of the fastest serves in all of intercollegiate tennis, you know."

(I know, Party. You've only told me a trillion times.)

"Anyway," Pinko added, "it came at me from the side, a lot like a baseline shot. I tried to return it, but my breath gave out. It was the greatest match of my life, bar none."

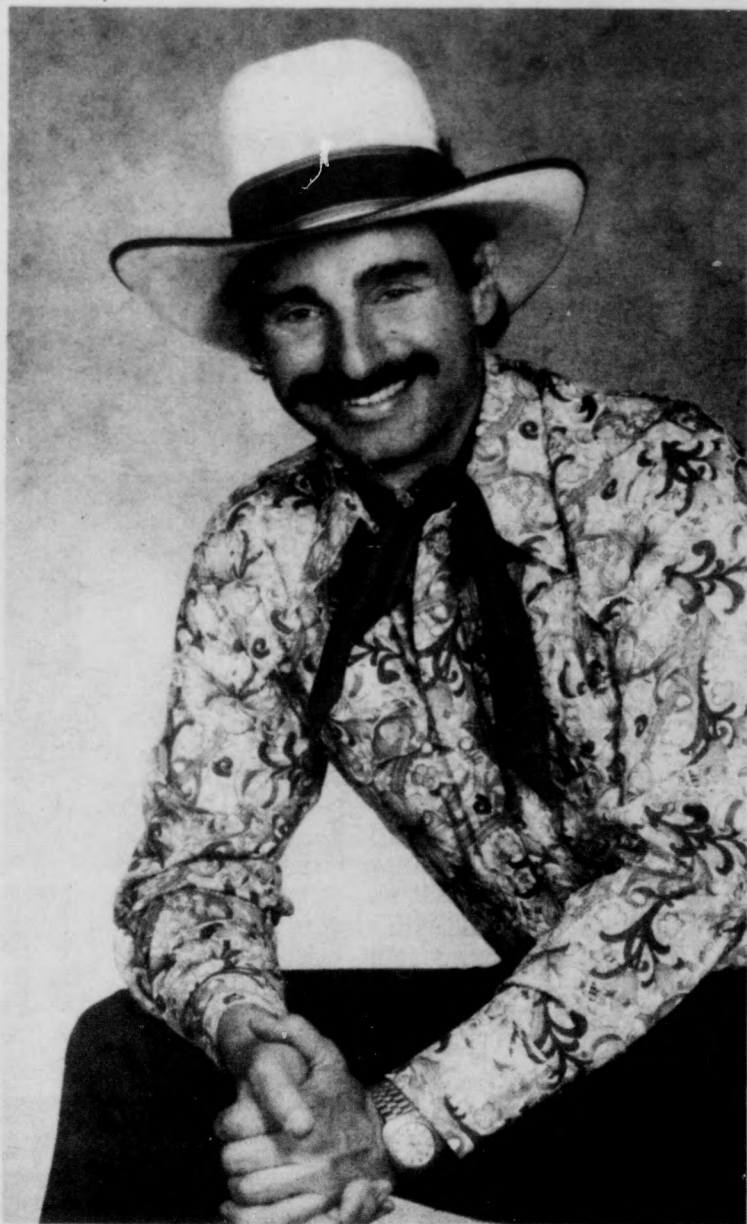

Pinko changed his surname from Finkus to Pinko "because I like the color and it matches both my socks and shower curtains."

He joined the pro tour in 1706, but lasted only one week. By accident, he had enlisted on the women's circuit.

"I was surprised I lasted as long as I did, but I guess the socks and the name through them a bit," Pinko said. "I guess I was the first Rennee Bitchards. It was a great experience while it lasted."

Pinko also appeared in several TV shows, most notably Mayberry D.O.A., in which he played the part of Howard Sprague — a bumbling fool.

"I've found it very hard to live down the image of being a famous Hollywood celebrity," Pinko said. "Whenever somebody sees me, they keep saying, 'I don't know about that, Goober.' I guess that's the price you have to pay for being immortal."
