Scenes like this are expected to be repeated across the Valley today as Salt River Project releases water from reservoirs filled by heavy rain and snow that has fallen across the state. It will be the third time in 10 months the Salt River will flow with floodwaters from heavy rains. All but three river crossings are expected to be closed today. ## Salt flows again; crossings closed by heavy runoff

By Jim Muhlstein

Heavy runoff from thunderstorms in northern Maricopa County Wednesday forced the closing of all but three Salt River crossings.

Lon Miller, Salt River Project spokesman, said that by midnight Wednesday only the Mill Avenue, Central Avenue and Maricopa Freeway crossings would remain open to traffic.

Water was released from the Bartlett and Stewart Mountain Dams at the combined rate of 55,000 cubic feet per second, slightly more than half the rate of runoff pouring into the reservoir.

The advancing waters, stemming from the first release of 15,000 cfs Wednesday morning, reached Country Club Drive in Mesa at 3:30 p.m. Wednesday.

Miller said Hayden Road was the first crossing expected to succumb to the on-rushing floodwaters.

"Hayden bridge can only take 25,000 cfs, so we don't expect it to last through rush hour," he said.

Miller said Scottsdale Road, designed to handle no more than 35,000 cfs, would probably be inundated shortly after midnight.

Lt. Bob Enright of the Tempe Police Department said his best advice to motorists is "to be patient."

"People should anticipate it taking as much as two hours in crossing the Mill Avenue bridge today, and should take plenty of gas."

Enright said police expect traffic across the Mill Avenue bridge to number as high as 100,000 vehicles.

He warned that motorists experiencing mechanical failures should stay in the vehicle, and wait for an officer, to avoid having it towed away.

The U.S. Weather Bureau Wednesday predicted a 50 percent chance of rain Wednesday night and a 20 percent probability for today.

Birth control ban lifted; clinic to open next month

By Tricia Reeson

ASU will finally be putting its rubber-stamp approval on birth control when the first prescription for contraceptives is written on campus in February.

As a result of a December decision by the Arizona Board of Regents to drop the ban on contraceptives, a new birth control clinic will open on campus some time next month, according to Dr. Richard Jones, director of ASU's Student Health Center.

The six-member staff at the clinic will include a part-time gynecologist, and will be authorized to write prescriptions, Jones said. However, students must still have those prescriptions filled off-campus.

The clinic, to be located within the Student Health Center, will be self-supporting. Students will pay $18 to cover all examinations and lab fees.

The vote by the regents in December ended seven years of efforts by women's groups to have the contraceptive ban lifted from Arizona's three state university campuses.

A new board policy states the regents will not interfere with a doctor's decision to prescribe birth control to a student on a state campus, according to University of Arizona's Associated Students' president Doug Ehrenaranz.

"In campus health centers, birth control can now be prescribed by doctors," Ehrenaranz said. "However, state money cannot be spent in the filling of that prescription."

The "conservative" attitude of the regents and the state Legislature has made Arizona one of the only states where birth control is not provided on campus, Ehrenaranz said.

"It's going to be a long time (before birth control prescriptions are filled at ASU)," he said. "The regents are just not ready to do that. Politically it's a bad decision, and I don't think the regents or the universities can live with that sort of decision right now."

"The Arizona Legislature is going to have to be liberalized. It won't be changed until the majority of regents and the legislators are modern, progressive people," Ehrenaranz added.

In the news briefly

from the Associated Press

CARTER CONFIDENT OF IRAN'S FATE

WASHINGTON — President Carter expressed confidence Wednesday that the Iranian people would be able to restore a stable government and economy to their strife-torn nation following the departure of the shah. Carter also called on exiled Iranian religious leader Ayatollah Khomeini to support the new civilian government headed by Prime Minister Shapour Bakhtiar. He said the prime minister has won the support of the Iranian military "and many of the religious opponents" following the departure of the Shah of Iran on Tuesday, ending his 37-year rule of the Persian Gulf nation.

HEPATITIS EPIDEMIC CONNECTED TO COMMUNE

PHOENIX — Several persons from Pima, Cochise and Graham counties have contracted infectious hepatitis after recently visiting the Healing Waters Commune at Indian Hot Springs, near Eden, the state Department of Health Services said. The health department said the illness apparently has been occurring in the central Graham County community for the past several months. Several of the 30 or more residents of the commune are ill, officials said.

STRONGER CIGARETTE WARNING ASKED

WASHINGTON — Less than a week after the latest surgeon general's report on smoking, the Federal Trade Commission asked Congress Wednesday to strengthen the existing health warning required on cigarette packs. The current required message says, "Warning: The surgeon general has determined that cigarette smoking is dangerous to your health." Among FTC suggestions for strengthening the language of the warning statement, first required in 1969, is: "Danger! Tests prove cigarettes can kill you."

STOCK MARKET REACTS TO NATURAL GAS FINDS

NEW YORK — The stock market got off to a weak start Wednesday, but recovered most of its early losses after the discovery of traces of natural gas was reported off the New Jersey coast. The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials, down nearly 6 points at one stage in mid-session, finished with a loss of 1.39 at 834.20.

HOSPITALIZED PRISONER ESCAPES

PHOENIX — An Arizona State Prison inmate, hospitalized at the Maricopa County Burn Unit, remained free after cutting a restraining strap Tuesday and fleeing, officials said. James Warde, 24, was taken to the hospital after being involved in a disturbance last weekend at the prison. He was being treated for smoke inhalation and burns after allegedly setting fire to his mattress in his cell.

BILL TO CUT SOCIAL SECURITY TAXES INTRODUCED

WASHINGTON — Legislation was introduced Wednesday calling for a one-third reduction in the Social Security payroll taxes that workers pay. Rep. William Brodhead, D-Mich., proposed using general revenues to finance a portion of the Social Security system to head off scheduled future increases in the payroll tax. The maximum payroll tax a worker will pay this year is $1,404, a jump of $333 from last year. Next year, the maximum Social Security tax will go to $1,588, with annual increases planned thereafter for several years.

TEACHER CHARGED WITH HARASSMENT

SOUTH HAVEN, Mich. — A high school teacher made harassing telephone calls to School Superintendent Harold Gaarde when students got the day off because of snow but teachers didn't, police charge. Gary Scott, 36, of South Haven, appeared Tuesday in Van Buren District Court on a charge of making harassing calls. Another hearing was set for Jan. 24 and he was freed in his own recognizance. There was no indication what was said in the calls.

GOLD SOLD TO BOOST DOLLAR

WASHINGTON — The sale of 1.5 million ounces of gold at an average price of about $219 an ounce raised $328.8 million, the government said Wednesday. The gold sales are among measures the Carter administration has been taking to support the dollar against foreign currencies. The sale Tuesday was the ninth in a series of auctions conducted by the General Services Administration. The next gold sale of 1.5 million ounces will be held on Feb. 20.

QUADRUPLETS BORN IN JAPAN

TOKYO — A 30-year-old Japanese woman who took fertility drugs for three years has given birth to quadruplets at a hospital in the western Japanese city of Osaka, a doctor said Wednesday. The three boys and a girl ranged in weight from 4.5 to 5.6 pounds and they are all doing well, said the physician at Osaka medical college hospital. The mother, Michiko Honda, gave birth Tuesday and also is doing well, he said.

Third shuttle decreases round trip service time

A $30,000 tram, added to ASU's shuttle system, will cut round trip time by five minutes, the assistant vice president of business affairs said Wednesday.

Barry Bruns said the tram, the third at ASU, was purchased to meet the growing number of passengers. All three trams are expected to transport more than 2,500 students per day from parking Lot 59 to the center of the campus.

"Basically, it will improve the service,"

Bruns said. "There will be less waiting and we'll have an extra one in case one of them breaks down."

Bruns said the idea of using trams was inspired by the use of buses last year. The bus service was discontinued because "the buses were too big, they took too long to load and the streets are too narrow."

ASU began the tram program last August. Trams run from 7:20 a.m. to 5:15 p.m. and carry 60 passengers each.

OK you kiddies, put away those nasty beer bottles

It's wonderful to live in a state where lawmakers are so concerned about the public's well-being they feel they have to protect us themselves.

A good example is Senate Bill 1014, which proposes raising the legal drinking age from 19 to 21. Sponsored by Sen. Trudy Camping, R-Phoenix, and backed by other conservatives in the Senate, this bill exemplifies an attitude that since people don't seem to be able to take care of themselves, the Legislature had better do it for them.

Camping and another Phoenix Republican, Sen. Anne Lindeman, claim passage of the bill would reduce the number of traffic accidents involving youths. Their concern is admirable, but their position shows a total disregard for the sentiment of young people in the state.

The attitude that college-age men and women need to be baby-sat rears its ugly head in every session of the Legislature.

Last year, in defending the tuition hike, Rep. Pat Wright, a Glendale Republican, told the State Press students would be able to afford the higher costs if they merely cut out "drugs and booze."

Now Camping tells us young people will be better drivers if the Legislature makes bars off-limits.

What's next? A 10 p.m. curfew for everyone under 25?

While it's true that most college students enjoy having a cold pitcher at their favorite pub, the most flagrant abusers of alcohol are not 19- to 21-year-olds, but rather middle-age persons who habitually use alcohol as a way to escape from themselves.

There are hundreds of thousands of college-age men and women who drink, but who do so with better judgement than their own fathers and mothers. SB 1014 represents a slap in the face, a wrap on the wrists from repressive legislators who don't understand young people and don't seem to want to.

Passage of this bill, which goes before the Senate Judiciary Committee next week, could be a fatal blow for dozens of establishments within walking distance of ASU — bars and restaurants that depend on the college customer.

Tavern owners and managers also are worried — and justifiably so — that raising the legal drinking age to 21 could cause a flurry of believable phoney IDs, thus subjecting owners to penalties for serving minors.

No one wants to see increases in alcohol-related traffic accidents. But the answer is to toughen enforcement of existing laws, not to deprive 19- to 21-year-olds who, incidentally, are voting, taxpaying, adult citizens of the state, of the right to set foot in establishments where liquor is served.

THE START OF ANOTHER SEMESTER. Letters to the Editor

Boys in blue are bullies; where's all the protection?

Editor:

Since my arrival to Arizona State University, I have been appalled by the conduct of the Tempe Police Department. The constant harassment of students through petty and irrelevant arrests and the obscene rate of unnecessary ticket giving makes me doubt the credibility of the police department.

As in the case of poor Ms. (Brodie) Friedenbach, (State Press, Nov. 22) it is obvious exactly what kind of justice prevails in our local police. The treatment that Ms. Friedenbach received during her visit to the police station was of a cruel and unusual (not to say inhuman) nature.

As for her "complaining to the booking officer," I have never heard such a bluntly irresponsible and shallow comment in my life. Any reasonably educated person would not dare make a comment in a situation such as her's for fear of being harassed even further.

As for the department in general, I am most concerned by its lack of interest in students in need of services. The phrase, "There's nothing we can do" comes out of the Tempe Police Department too often for comfort. If they are not here to protect and aid a citizen in need, what are they here for? Surely it is not to use their power to toy with the ASU community.

With such a powerful (and legal) force prevailing in the ASU area, I worry greatly about the misuse of this power. The students of ASU should let the case of Ms. Friedenbach stand as a test case and an example of the criterion and principles by which the Tempe Police operate.

How many other cases of abuse inflicted by the police department have gone by unnoticed? And how much longer are the students of ASU, who are a minority in the city of Tempe, going to permit this unfair and unjust treatment to continue?

I feel it is high time something be done about this offensive situation.

David A. G. Misrock

Faculty must salvage dignity to fight 'inferiority complex'

Editor:

I read Susan Clark's article on the possible withdrawal of the Phi Beta Kappa charter from ASU with great interest. I think it points out a fundamental problem at ASU, which the faculty is going to have to solve if it ever wants to be able to say it has a respectable integrity and that ASU is a true institution of higher learning.

From what I have observed at ASU, most of the faculty suffers from an academic inferiority complex because its University is not ranked academically on a level with schools like the University of Chicago or the University of Calif. at Berkeley.

As a result of this inferiority complex, many faculty members sometime overcompensate and treat their students in an authoritarian way. Differing opinions therefore are not tolerated and the climate for growth of the intellect and mind suffers.

I can understand now why Professor (Morris) Starsky should be reinstated, and this University and its faculty should be ashamed for what they did to him way back. I think it is right for this University to be on the watch list of the Phi Beta Kappa national organization until the day comes when faculty members at ASU learn a sense of fair play and do not take their insecurities out on the students.

English ain't always perfect, prof 'sez'

By Lori Medigovich

It ain't necessarily so that people use the English language incorrectly, an ASU English professor said Wednesday.

J. J. Lamberts said such phrases as "ain't" and "worse" are grammatical uses of the language. They are simply a little outdated.

Lamberts said words not considered grammatical today were at one time popular and accepted ways to use the language.

"We don't really worry about some old-fashioned ideas people have, so why worry about old-fashioned words? There's nothing wrong with these words, they simply reflect our style and tell us something about ourselves," Lamberts said.

Lamberts said every occupation or social group has its own style of language that reflects personality as much as anything else.

"We tell people who we are or who we think we are by the way we talk," Lamberts said.

As a professor Lamberts said he tries to teach people how to listen to others and appreciate the way the English language flows.

Some people, like Edwin Newman and John Simon publish books and articles picking apart the improper usage of the English language, but Lamberts said these people are insecure.

"They are terrible bores," Lamberts said. "Their picking apart of the English language shows an insecurity on their part as they are always worrying about what they say."

"The language has so many resources, it is so beautiful and can do so many things, but instead we pick at people for things like split infinitives and using ain't and worse."

Misconception keeps students away from ASU counseling

By Kathy O'Donnell

Only 2,000 of ASU's 35,000 students utilize the ASU Counseling Services per year, Director Dr. Lawrence Cummings said Wednesday.

The services, which are free to full-time students, consist of a staff of 10 licensed psychologists.

According to Cummings, one major misconception among students is the assumption the Counseling Services are available only for the mentally unstable.

"We work with normal students with normal developmental problems," Cummings said. "You don't have to be hanging from a cliff to come in. Everyone has problems at certain times in their lives. It's good to talk about them. It's productive to talk about them."

Cummings said no records concerning counseled students are kept. Psychologists discuss any subject desired by the student and let the student determine if and when he wants to return.

"I'm not here as a judge. I'm here to help the student find his way," Cummings said.

Cummings said certain times during the school year are more stressful than others. More freshmen realize the need for advisement in the fall when adjusting to the University, and seniors tend to utilize the counseling services prior to graduation.

"This is a free service for students, which would cost them an appreciable amount of money off campus," Cummings said.

He emphasized the need for students to air their feelings with a "safe, neutral person."

"It's important not to deny feelings. Learning how to deal with them is very important," Cummings added.

'Putting a lid' on rising inflation improbable for 1979, writer says

By Susan Clark

Runaway inflation and ever-increasing interest rates paint a drab and "not too exciting" economic picture for 1979, an ASU mass communications professor and financial columnist said Wednesday.

"You can read almost any kind of prediction these days that you want to about the economy," said Donald G. Campbell. Campbell, whose syndicated columns appear in about 70 newspapers nationwide, including the Arizona Republic, said he doesn't see much hope of putting a lid on inflation in 1979.

"The classical way to halt inflation is to bring about a recession, but I can see no political desire to bring about something like that. Unless the Federal Reserve Board stops pitching out dollars and it doesn't show any inclination to do that," Campbell said.

Stopping the flow of new dollars into the economy is a prime consideration in bringing the inflation rate into proper perspective along with a concentrated effort to cut back the national deficit, he said.

Campbell compared the problem to daily life. "I get a little irritated because you just can't be spending more than you take in, in the same way that an average household cannot exceed its income," he said.

Campbell said Carter's voluntary price and wage control program is "a thinly disguised involuntary thing. There is a grey area in-between — is it voluntary or involuntary?"

They've never worked before and I don't see anything so radically different about Carter's approach," he said.

"Overall it doesn't look like the most exciting year. The first six months will have a slight resemblance to 1978. We'll probably have a mild dip in economic growth with possibly a spurt at the end of the year," Campbell said.

72% increase in assaults

Officers receive survival training

By Lori Grzesiek

A woman's shrill screams came from behind the closed door: "Leave me alone, don't hit me!"

Police officers Gary Gregory and Alex Mendia burst through the door in response to the report of a family fight.

The physical struggle of the quarreling couple was similar to approximately 17,000 other family feud calls the Phoenix police department receives each year.

But after the officers separated Bruce Anest and Donita Onusko, the woman said she was leaving. She then reached for her purse, unexpectedly pulled out a gun, and shot the two officers.

Fortunately for Gregory and Mendia, 25 other policemen witnessed the event, which was only play-acting as a part of an Officer Survival Training Program for policemen seeking the rank of sergeant.

Capt. Ben Click, bureau commander at the Phoenix Police Academy, said the role-playing is an important part of the program that also includes courses on management and disciplinary techniques.

"It gives the officers a chance to put into practice what they have learned in the classroom," he said.

He said the dramatizations teach policemen to sharpen their perception and to keep their guard up at all times.

"It's always those innocent-appearing situations where officers get hurt or killed because they let their guard down," Click said.

He added that policemen are injured most often in family feuds and routine vehicle stops.

Lt. Gerd Kurtenbach said officers are injured because they develop "tunnel vision" in stressful situations.

He explained that "tunnel vision" results when an officer focuses his attention on what he perceives as a threat and forgets his surroundings. The result can be gunfire from an unexpected person.

Kurtenbach said there was a 72 percent increase in the number of Phoenix policemen assaulted with a firearm from 1976 to 1977. The statistics for 1978 aren't available yet.

He added that the cause of the increase is unknown.

About 25 officers from Phoenix, Mesa, Tempe and Scottsdale are participating in the Officer Survival Training Program at the Academy at 10001 S. Seventh Ave.

The program has been in existence for two years.

Training sessions to be held

Volunteers needed for music projects

Volunteers are needed as docents at ASU's Laura Boulton Collection of Musical Instruments.

Two informal orientation meetings are scheduled on Jan. 26 in the gallery from 9:30 to 10:30 a.m. and from 2 to 3 p.m. for those interested in participating.

Friday morning training sessions, taught by the collection administrator J. Richard Haefer, will be held throughout February. They will be from 9:30 to 11 a.m. and are designed for volunteers to proceed at their own pace.

Among the subjects covered will be: the original and musical history of the instruments, which were collected from around the world; techniques for making and playing them, and procedures for conducting tours of the collection.

Docents are needed to lead school tours, assist with special monthly exhibits and security at the gallery, and to help in clerical and public relations activities including making reproductions of the instruments.

Interested persons should contact Haefer at 965-7576.

The Boulton Collection is open to the public from 11 a.m. to 4 p.m. Mondays through Fridays.

Indian relocation causes hardships

Navajo woman's integr

By Lori Grzesiek

A tear streamed down one of the creases of Emma Nelson's terra cotta skin as she spoke in Navajo about her fear that she would lose her home. A road map of wrinkles radiated from her round, coal black eyes.

"I'm getting fed up with government men coming by and trying to get me off my land," she said. "The only way I'll ever move off this land is if they shoot me and carry me dead out of my house."

The 76-year-old widow cannot speak English. She is one of the approximately 10,000 Navajos who have been ordered off land in the northeast corner of Arizona that was granted to the Hopis in 1974 as a solution to a hundred-year land dispute between the tribes.

A specific site for relocation hasn't been found by the government yet, but Mrs. Nelson said she wouldn't move out of her home even if she were offered a million dollars.

Her two-room house is built of a patchwork of scrap wood. There is no electricity or running water. The nearest water is 10 miles away.

But she said her home means more to her than its monetary value.

"This land I was born on is my mother's burial site. This land is my birthplace — a place I grew up on and lived on to this day. Where in the world will the government give me a land and ties exactly like this land? This is where I will remain forever," she said.

"I want to hold on to my family tradition, my culture, my history and my religion like any other human being."

Mrs. Nelson is living on land that the government promised to the Hopis nearly 100 years ago.

In 1882, President Chester A. Arthur issued an executive order that granted almost 2½ million acres of land to "the Hopi and such other Indians as the secretary of interior may see fit to settle thereon."

Since then, there has been controversy over the meaning of the "such other Indians" clause.

The Hopis have said the major purpose of the executive order was to keep intruders, particularly the Navajos, out of Hopi land.

The Hopi farmers and the Navajo sheepherders have had a long history of disputes resulting from Navajo livestock crossing Hopi fields.

The Navajos have argued they are the "other Indians" mentioned, because at the time of the order, about 300 Navajos were living on the land with the Hopis.

The federal government tried to calm the storm in 1962 by designating part of the land for joint use by both tribes.

After complaints by the Hopis, the area was partitioned and a line was drawn between the two tribes in 1974.

As a result, about 3,400 Navajo families are living on Hopi land, and about 60 Hopi families are living on Navajo land.

Relocation will be completed five years from the date when Congress approves a plan. Currently, a dispute about the southern and western boundaries of Navajo and Hopi land must be settled in U.S. District Court before a relocation commission can submit a plan to Congress.

Percy Deal, director of the Navajo-Hopi Land Dispute Commission, said many Navajos couldn't cope with life away from their land.

"There are elderly and uneducated people who have their roots deep into the land," he said. "The people we're talking about don't speak English. How can they have a livelihood anywhere else?"

Deal said the governmental bureaucracy has failed to see the inhumane aspect of relocation.

"The government thinks it can put a solution on paper without considering it's the elderly and uneducated people they are dealing with," he said.

Nelson, like many elderly Navajos, is hoping for the passage of an amendment introduced by Arizona Sen. Dennis DeConcini, which allows people 40 years of age and older to remain on their land for the rest of their lives.

The amendment was approved by the Senate but was rejected by the House in October.

The Navajos are hoping the amendment will be reintroduced next year.

Barry Welch, superintendent of the Phoenix Bureau of Indian Affairs, said there is no injustice in the relocation.

"It's more than a fair deal," he said. "The people who have to move will get a $5,000 bonus if they move within a year after the relocation begins. They will get paid for improvements on their homes and moving expenses. A household of three or less can purchase a house that doesn't cost more than $17,000."

"The older people are starving. Livestock was the only thing they depended on for food and income and now it's gone."

Nelson said she would be unable to make a living if she were taken off the reservation.

"I am uneducated. Only my children and grandchildren are educated. They have the opportunity of learning the white man's way of life. They can adapt to other ways of making a living, but I cannot," she said.

She also said she doesn't want to leave the reservation because it has religious significance for her.

"We, the Navajo people, think of the land as our mother," she said. "There are four sacred mountains surrounding the Navajo reservation. These we also call our mothers. The water springs are our religious shrines. We make special offerings to these in time of distress."

Livestock is also sacred to the Navajo and is the central point of their way of life.

The District Court ordered the Navajo's livestock to be reduced from 120,000 sheep to 8,139 sheep in 1972 to allow the Hopis to use more of the land in the joint-use area.

egrity defaced by Feds

Deal said the livestock reduction has meant extreme hardships for the Navajos.

"The Navajo way of life is centered on their livestock," he said. "If you take that away, you are also minimizing a livelihood, a culture and a tradition."

"They rely on livestock for an income, food, clothing, ceremonial purposes and trading purposes."

Nelson said sheep are collateral to get credit at the trading post.

Since the government ordered her livestock to be reduced from 385 to 20 sheep, she has been unable to get credit at the trading post to buy food.

She said before she could get credit at the trading post for $300 during the winter when she expected to sell the wool of 50 sheep in the spring.

The wool she didn't sell was used to make Navajo rugs, which she sold for $200 each.

But since the livestock reduction, she doesn't have enough sheep to sell and rarely has enough wool to make a rug. Her only source of income is $80 a month from Social Security.

"It's like a penny in a bucket," she said. "One truckload of firewood costs $70. If it's cold, it doesn't last more than a month."

That leaves her $10 a month to buy food at the trading post, which isn't much since groceries are more expensive at the trading posts than off the reservation.

Louise Begay, community health representative for the Navajos, said most of the elderly people don't have enough money to buy groceries since the livestock reduction.

"The older people are starving," she said. "Livestock was the only thing they depended on for food and income and now it's gone."

"Some of the older people died right away after the livestock reduction because of the shock. Shepherding was the only thing they knew and they felt they didn't have a reason to live anymore."

Nelson said Navajo women's favorite craft and major source of income has almost been eliminated since there is so little wool to make rugs and blankets.

"With Navajo women, there is nothing left since they took away the livestock and sheep," she said. "We used to weave rugs and Navajo blankets, but now there's nothing to do."

"Before, I was always busy weaving lots of rugs and used the money to buy a wagon and furniture."

In addition to eliminating an income, Nelson said the livestock reduction has broken up her family of eight children.

"When you have sheep and horses it holds a family together. My children have no interest in herding sheep since there is no money to be earned by it. Now they must go to work somewhere else, and I only see them on the weekends."

Dale Pete, field representative for the Navajos, said Navajos love their livestock like children.

"Navajos love the animal and it is sacred because they say it was given to them from the creator of the world," Pete said.

Nelson said she still cries when she remembers the day government workers loaded 365 of her sheep in a truck.

"When they first took my sheep away I was unable to eat for weeks," she said. "The sheep were yelling and crying when they hauled them away and I cried as loud as the sheep cried."

"I used to look out and see hundreds and hundreds of sheep. I go to the horse corral and remember when I had horses in there. But now they're all gone and there's nothing left but memories."

"When they took my horses away they took my transportation away. I can't go anywhere anymore."

She said government men have come back again trying to take away more of her livestock.

"One time the truck that hauled my sheep away came back. There's only 20 sheep left and they came back for more," she said.

"It's worse today because we're living in the twentieth century and we're supposed to have human rights."

"I was so mad I grabbed a big stick and I wanted to beat the two white men up. But something told me not to, and I just told them they couldn't take away any more sheep."

"Then they came for me to sign a piece of paper. I can't speak English but I know it said I would have to sell my last head of livestock."

"I told them I was not going to put my name on any piece of paper and they cannot take away any more sheep. So they left."

Nelson said she won't be as nice the next time government men come to her house.

"If those men ever come to try to take me off my land or ask me to reduce my livestock again, I will have a big stick waiting and this time I'm going to use it," she said.

Deal said the hardships from relocation and livestock reduction are reminiscent of the Navajo captivity in Fort Sumner, New Mexico, from 1864 to 1868.

Troops had destroyed Navajo homes and farms, as well as their crops and livestock. Then the soldiers forced nearly 8,000 Navajos to walk 300 miles to Fort Sumner.

However, Deal said the situation is more tragic now.

"It's worse today because we're living in the twentieth century and we're supposed to have human rights," he said.

Nelson said she has turned to prayer for help, since she can't turn to the government.

"I pray to the Mother Earth to bless me for my land and the few livestock I have. Some of the Navajos don't have any sheep anymore. Maybe some people don't consider this matter or the hardships we are going through, but my feelings have been really hurt," she said.

Business director elected president

ASU's Director of the Center for Executive Development at the College of Business Administration, Dr. Thomas Inman, has been elected president of Pi Omega Pi, the national business education honor society.

Inman has served on the society's national council for eight years. He has been with the College of Business Administration since 1975 and has previously held teaching and administration positions in

Guaranteed jobs threatened

Tenure law challenged by Legislature

By Mary Perry

Guaranteed jobs for Arizona teachers may be a thing of the past. The current tenure law promising permanent jobs after three years of employment has been challenged by Arizona's 34th Legislature.

The House of Representatives began the new session with the introduction of House Bill 2032 that would repeal the current tenure law and replace it with a three-year contract program.

"This bill would upgrade the teaching profession," Pete Corpstein, R-Paradise Valley, said.

The public and Arizona educators are aware that we have a few problems in our schools. We need to help the situation," Corpstein, the bill's sponsor, said.

The current law establishes a permanent position for primary and secondary teachers who have worked for three years.

"Under the current law, it is almost impossible to dismiss a teacher unless he has been convicted of a felony," Corpstein said. "The new law would save money and paperwork. There has to be a cause, forms to fill out and a hearing under the current law."

Under the proposed law, teachers would be evaluated after an initial three-year contract. If the teacher passed the evaluation, a new contract would be given. A probationary period is provided in the bill for those not issued new contracts.

"I think it's something that needs to be changed. It would work toward the betterment of education. The bill would allow the districts to get rid of inferior teachers," Corpstein said.

Dr. David C. Annala, Tempe high school principal, said he favors the new bill and it would not threaten the personal security of teachers.

"Individual rights are covered by our legal system," Annala said. "One of the problems with the tenure law is that teachers tend to become complacent. Not all teachers are guilty of complacency, but it's a problem.

"It is a question of accountability. If your job is guaranteed by state law then who is the teacher accountable to?" Annala said.

The courts deal with process and not the competency issue, Annala said. He said he expects the bill to fail.

"Tenure has been challenged before and our Legislature has a record of not passing new tenure legislation," Annala said. "Quite frankly, I believe it is because teachers represent a large segment of the voting population."

The bill excludes state universities. However Dr. George A. Peek, ASU political science professor, said a committee has been formed to set up new rules in ASU's current policy.

ASU has a "stability of employment" policy which provides assistant professors a continuous contract after five years if the professor's work is adequate. It is three years for a full or associate professor.

"The Board of Regents is setting up new conditions of employment and they have requested the faculty to respond," Peek said.

Peek said an ASU committee has been formed to suggest revisions to the board.

ASU lands $74,000 grant for research

ASU has received a $74,000 grant from the Department of Labor to study the changes in municipal employment opportunities for Mexican-American and Spanish surnamed people over the past five years.

The study, coordinated by Dr. Albert K. Karnig, associate professor at the ASU Center for Public Affairs, and assistant professor Dr. Richard A. Eribes, will focus on 125 Southwestern cities and will survey the demographic characteristics of the selected cities.

More detailed research will concentrate on the five Western metropolitan areas of San Antonio, Los Angeles, Denver, Phoenix and Albuquerque.

Home pregnancy tests

Odds of birth defects rise, experts say

By Tricia Reeson

A woman who uses one of the new home pregnancy tests is increasing the chance of birth defects in her child because the test's results are not always accurate, according to local gynecological experts.

The danger lies in the woman who is pregnant and should start proper prenatal care, but continues taking medications or birth control pills because she had an incorrect negative test reading.

"There are a lot of border-line tests," Dr. James Busch, a Tempe gynecologist, said. "The results are not quite as clear-cut as the advertising leads you to believe.

"There's a big danger because a woman could go on taking birth control pills because she doesn't think she's pregnant (when she really is), and in early pregnancy this could lead to birth defects."

Three brands of in-home pregnancy tests are available in Tempe drug stores: E.P.T., Acutest, and Predictor. They range in price from $8.20 to $9.50, and each kit is usable only once.

The test duplicates the urine pregnancy test that is usually done in a doctor's office. It uses a sample of the woman's urine to detect the presence of HCG, a hormone produced early in pregnancy.

Urine pregnancy tests are usually attributed an accuracy from 95 to 97 percent, but an incorrect reading is possible, according to Dr. Ulista J. Brooks, who handles gynecological services at the ASU Student Health Center.

"The accuracy of urine tests is good, but you can have a negative result on Day 11 (after the missed period), and a positive result on Day 12," Brooks said.

"If a woman has a negative result, she's going to go ahead and act like she's not pregnant, and she can damage the fetus."

"The tests are probably pretty accurate, 97 percent accuracy sounds reasonable," Dr. James B. Scott, a Tempe gynecologist, said. "But most often those sort of tests are more inaccurate in the negative than in the positive. If they are inaccurate the results usually say you are not pregnant when you really are."

"The disadvantage is if a woman has a false negative test, since proper prenatal care is very important. There are a lot of hazards of being pregnant and taking medication, antibiotics and drugs."

Scott said there are many factors involved in the testing that could cause an incorrect "not-pregnant" reading, such as collecting the urine improperly, or taking the urine sample at the wrong time of day.

It is this human capacity for error when untrained women are doing the test that leads to many incorrect readings, according to gynecologist Dr. Ted M. Giese.

"The test itself is good, and the commercial preparation of it is good. But someone not used to reading the tests could make a mistake," Giese explained.

Some women buy the in-home pregnancy kits because they incorrectly assume that a urine test in their doctor's office would be more expensive, Scott said.

"I think the women using them have some misconceptions about cost. They have a feeling that office tests are quite expensive, and they think they'll have to have other tests done."

"Some doctors do require you also to have a physical exam, but some will just do the (urine pregnancy) test. Most urine pregnancy tests in a doctor's office are cheaper than doing it with an in-home pregnancy kit."

The cost of a urine pregnancy test ranges from $5 to $10 in most doctors' offices, and can be done for $4 at both the Student Health Center and at Planned Parenthood in Tempe.

"Most women will doubt the results of the test," Brooks said. "I've had girls tell me they've used a home test, and they're not sure if it's right. Then they may have to do it over again, or have us do it, at more expense to them."

A disadvantage of using the home kits is that some women may not follow up the pregnancy test with a thorough physical examination, according to Sally E. Boyd, the clinic director at Planned Parenthood in Tempe.

"All a pregnancy test is going to tell you is probably yes, or probably no," Boyd said.

"We strongly recommend that a woman come in and have a physical within 10 days either way. If she has a negative result, and she hasn't had a period, she should find out what's going on in her body. If she has a positive result, she should find out how far along she is."

Using the home pregnancy test could be dangerous if the woman waits too long to see a doctor after a positive result, Busch said, because any complications in the pregnancy should be dealt with right away.

"There is a big danger in a woman waiting too long," he said. "Knowing you're pregnant just isn't enough. You have to have a doctor's physical examination."

The tests can be useful for women who are uncomfortable about seeing their doctor for a urine test, or for women who regularly skip their menstrual periods.

"A lot of women have irregular periods and they are chronically wondering if they are pregnant or not. For these women the tests are a distinct advantage because they don't have to go to a doctor all the time," Busch said.

Hawaii's Bonzai Pipeline:

Surfing mecca of the world

A local Hawaiian [top] walks through Ehukai Beach Park to check the surfing conditions. The park is the home of Hawaii's Bonzai Pipeline on the north shore of Oahu. On almost any morning at Pipeline [right] perfect waves can be seen breaking during the winter months in which large swells are churned up by storms.

A surfer [left] has to wait for a lull in the waves in order to paddle out safely through the pounding whitewash. Once out in the water [below], surfers try to improve their style on waves that have reached 20 to 25 feet at Pipeline.

Devils' hopes 'go to the line' against USC

By Bob Petrie

Probably the most startling thing concerning tonight's Pac-10 game between ASU and Southern California is that it'll be the first time this season the Trojans will play under a lame duck coach.

Bob Boyd, who has coached USC basketball for 13 years, announced Tuesday that he will step down as the Trojans' coach after this season. He gave no indication as to why he was quitting, or what he plans to do after he leaves USC.

Boyd's decision to quit smacks of the timing that former USC football coach John McKay used in 1975 when he announced he was leaving the USC football program. However, after McKay made his announcement midway through the '75 season, his team proceeded to lose four of its last five games. USC backers hope a repeat of the McKay debacle is not in store for Boyd's team. USC is 4-1 in the PAC and tied with UCLA for first.

But even the thought of that can stir some hope into the Sun Devils, who need a sweep of their homestand — a tall order considering ASU will also face UCLA Saturday night — to stay in the PAC race. ASU is 3-3 in the conference.

The trojans can be had. In fact, ASU beat them last year in Los Angeles 87-76. But both the Devils and USC have improved tremendously since then.

USC is led by its 6-foot-9 center, sophomore Cliff

Robinson, who is averaging 19.7 points and 11.5 rebounds per game. An all-Pac-8 and all-West Coast team selection last year, Robinson was the star of USC's tough 89-86 loss to UCLA Saturday night as he scored 32 points and pulled down 14 rebounds.

Another face to watch may be 6-foot-7 sophomore forward Purvis Miller. Although he owns a mere 8.2 scoring average and a 5.8 rebounding average, he tossed in 26 points and grabbed 11 rebounds in the Trojans' loss to ASU last year.

Expected to start for the Sun Devils are Blake Taylor and Greg Goorjian at guards, Tony Zeno and Bill Kucharsky at forwards, and Kurt Nimphius at center.

ORDERS TO GO

894-2021

894-2022

The ambulance crew brought the man into the emergency room of the hospital at 7:40 p.m. They'd answered an anonymous call and found him wandering aimlessly on Mill Avenue, talking to lamp posts and trying to interest a cocker spaniel in a game of cribbage.

"Not much to go on," replied the ambulance driver. "Just some loose change and an NC-double-A basketball schedule in his hip pocket. And he was wearing this tag around his neck."

The doctor read the inscription on the tag aloud and began to wince at every word. "I am an ASU basketball fan and no longer responsible for my actions. If found, please bury me in the gutter — next to my team's title chances . . ."

The doctor shook his head. "Another one of those, eh? It's close to an epidemic. We're running out of room here. If they keep coming in, we'll have to set up some cots in the state armory."

Quickly, the doctor motioned for the nurse.

"Give him the usual," he said. "Twenty cc of Sun Devil fever and some Schwada sasparilla. Maybe that'll revive him enough to tell us his name."

The nurse plunged a hypodermic needle into the unfortunate's arm. The man began to stir immediately.

"Never . . . should . . . take out . . . Taylor," he muttered spasmodically. "Sit down, Nedley. Keep . . . Blake . . . in. Keep . . . Kurt . . . out."

"He's the same as the rest," the doctor nodded. "As soon as the serum takes hold, they all begin talking about ASU's 1974-75 season and their opening round win over Alabama and Leon Douglass in the NCAA regionals. Here, help me sit him up."

In unison, the nurse and doctor gently propped the man into a sitting position. Almost simultaneously, he began shaking uncontrollably and chanting, "Lionel, the Train. Lionel, the Train, we need you. Come back, baby. We need you."

The nurse hurriedly grabbed a nearby blanket and threw it around the man's shoulders, attempting to keep him from going into shock. "Steady," she said. "You're among friends. Try to relax and say anything that comes into your mind."

The man opened his eyes. "You look like Ned Wulk," he said to the doctor and tried to punch him in the conservative tie. It took two orderlies to get the man under control. The doctor stayed at a safe distance as the man lapsed into a steady stream of consciousness.

"They come into a game they gotta win and it's that stiff Nimphius starting at center again — the only guy who can be in serious foul trouble during pre-game warmups. Right away, he loses the tip, starts causing turnovers and the Devils are behind, 4-0. Alton Lister, the shade-under-seven-foot center, isn't intimidating and/or aggressive enough to box-out the opposition and gets cleaned on both backboards. Tony Zeno still hasn't scrapped the habit of dribbling once before he shoots and either coughs it up or launches a weak one-hander from the corner a la Dr. J. Oooooooooooooo, that drives me c r a a a a a a a a zzzzzzzzzz-z-yyyyyyyyyyyyyy.

"Greggy Goorjian — the freshman — still hasn't learned that you have to be good before you can be great in college ball. Where the hell is Bill Kucharsky — the big blond with the flyaway hair from Trotwood, Ohio — this year? Or Derek Davis? Or Roy Joshua? Those guys play so seldom, they need a Rand McNally map to find the foul line. Ooooooooooh, my head hurts . . ."

The physician frowned.
"This is as advanced a case as I've ever encountered," he said. "Give him the never-say-die pill — that big maroon and gold one with the money in the middle and Gen. MacArthur's characture on the sides."

The nurse forced the pill down the man's esophagus, but he babbled some more nonetheless. "ASU has 100 chances to put the game away. But nooooooooooooooooooooo. Their offense knows only one speed — sputter. They put up more prayers than an average day at the Vatican. Yet when they're 10 points down, they play like they're 10 points ahead. When will they learn that field goals only count two and there is no such thing as a 30-point play? Miracles only happen on 34th street.

"Why doesn't Johnny Nash slam dunk anymore? Why does Sam Williams try to dunk everything. Why? Why? Why? When will ASU have a winner? Every year, they're great on paper. Every year, they melt like ice cubes in August. Ned must go. Ned must go. Where are you, Bobby Knight?"

The man began frothing at the mouth as the nurse whispered sweet somethings into his ears.

"The Sun Devils won. They beat UCLA," she hissed. "Nimphius didn't foul out by the half. Zeno's jumper from downtown Chandler at the buzzer grazed the scoreboard clock, UAC announcer Bob Baker's sideburns, gained momentum off referee Irv

Devil bowlers roll to top ten ranking

By Jim Elsleger

The men's and women's bowling teams rolled into the Top Ten over the holidays, the men by virtue of a first place finish in the Los Angeles Active West Tournament on Dec. 27 and 28, and the women by taking the Las Vegas Invitational a couple of days later.

Gary Blatchford anchored the men's team in Los Angeles as it won the team-all-events category by 76 pins.

Blatchford took all the individual titles and concluded the tourney with a 212.2 average for all events.

The 24-team tournament had several top teams present in its first year, including second place finisher San Diego State, ranked fourth nationally.

The women's team finished second in both team-all-events and team-event, while the men took third in the team-event.

Peggy McAbee finished third in individual-all-events with a 184.5 average.

Hillsborough Junior College won the women's title in the two-day event. The Florida team was second in the nation going into the tournament.

ASU hosted the Las Vegas Tournament on Dec. 30 and 31, and the women's victory in the team-event category marked the first time the team has won there.

The women were led by Mary Douthat, who averaged 190 for the tournament and ended up fifth in team-all-events.

All top ten teams in the country in both the men and women's divisions were at the Showboat Lanes except for Penn State.

The tournament offered $5,000 in scholarships, and ASU will receive $500 of that because of the women's first place showing.

Hillsborough won the team-all-events again, but shared the title with San Jose State, who took the event the three previous years.

The women finished fifth in the team-all-events division, 10 strokes behind fourth place finisher Wichita State.

Judy Shaw took sixth in the individual scoring with a 618 total.

The men didn't fare as well as they did in Los Angeles, but did manage to grab the ninth spot in the team-all-events among the 60 teams that competed.

"There were unusually high scores in the men's division," Coach Tony Meresca said. "There were a couple of 300 games and several games in the 290's. What the men rolled would have normally won by looking at past scores for the tournament. But with so many of the top teams showing up, the competition was unusually keen."

Warren Eales led the team with a 215 average in the country's gambling center, and then teamed up with Blatchford to finish fifth in the doubles competition.

"The team's bowled real well in both tournaments," Meresca said, "and should be ready for the regionals on Feb. 22, 23 and 24."

"I think we have a pretty good shot at a national title in both divisions," he said.

The wretch threw off his blanket and broke into an Irish jig — the kind Archie Bunker goes into everytime he realizes he successfully rooked the IRS.

"Whoop-te-doo. We're still in it," he yelled. "One game back and it's a six-game season. Half at home. Aw-right. aw-right."

Merrily, the man stood up, combed his eyebrows, ran a hand through his tousled curls, straightened his disheveled clothes and strolled jauntily out the door and into the darkness — rhythmically clapping all the while.

"Huh," the doctor said to himself, itching the nape of his neck in disbelief as he watched the modern day Lazarus walk again. "And they call penicillin the miracle drug..."
