Schwada calls building unsafe

Gas leaks endanger students

By Lori Grzesiek

ASU President John Schwada says he's asking $723,000 from the state Legislature to rid the "potentially dangerous" Physical Science Building from "noxious fumes and vapors."

"The University's first priority should be the safety of the chemistry facility because it is not meeting the basic safety requirements," Schwada said.

He said the Physical Science Building is hazardous because of overcrowding and a substandard ventilation system that fails to quickly rid the air of noxious fumes.

"The $723,000 is required for a fume-removal system," he said. "But that is a temporary solution. The ultimate answer is to build additional laboratories to relieve the overcrowding."

Regent Andy Federhar said older structures should be renovated quickly.

"There are serious health and safety standards being violated at Arizona's universities," he said. "The time is coming quickly when the older buildings will become dangerous. The buildings are like time bombs waiting to explode and I don't care to be around when one does."

"This is a disgrace to the state that we're having our teachers operating under these conditions," he added.

Regent Thomas Chandler said Arizona's universities should emphasize building repair rather than expansion.

Ruth Deacon, a sophomore engineering major, uses various chemical reactions to find an "unknown" substance in her beginning chemistry lab. Alleged gas leaks in the Physical Sciences Building have sparked interest in construction of a new building. [State Press staff photo by Sam Jones]

"If we are endangering the life and health of the students, we better take care of the old buildings before building new ones," he said.

Michael Goodwin, a Tempe architect who was hired by ASU to complete a study of the Physical Science Building in 1977, said it is a "fire hazard" and doesn't meet standards of the state fire marshal, uniform building code and the Occupational Health and Safety Administration.

"It's the most critical building on campus and money needs to go there in a hurry," Goodwin said. "When a university doesn't meet federal health and safety standards, it risks losing federal grants for research."

He said the building was built in the mid-1950s and has almost become obsolete because building standards have changed "drastically" since then.

James Birk, chemistry professor, said students suffer from "bad odors and clouds of white smoke" during labs because of inadequate ventilation.

Joseph Harris, associate chairman of the chemistry department, said poor ventilating causes irritation to the respiratory system. Symptoms include watering eyes, dry throats and wheezing.

"The building wasn't built to accommodate the more than 6,000 students enrolled in chemistry classes in a year. We now have to turn down students who want to take classes because there is no room," he added.

Regulation of diesel fuel

Electricity rationing possible, authority says

By Mary Perry

If the state's diesel supply does not improve Arizonans might experience rationing of electricity this summer, a dispatcher for a local petroleum distributor said.

"It takes diesel to produce electricity," Chuck Carlise of Sieman Petroleum Products Inc. said. "If things do not get better there is a strong potential for electricity rationing."

Regulation of diesel fuel was discussed at a special governor's conference Friday. Gasoline wholesalers, construction companies and utility companies discussed the possibility of diesel rationing, Carlise said.

Salt River Project spokesman Lon Miller said the situation can only be evaluated on a month-by-month basis and there is no way to predict whether Valley residents will face hard times this summer.

"We (SRP) use 50,000 barrels of diesel per month," Miller said. "In December, because of unusually cold weather, we burned 242,000 barrels."

"Instead of the normal 50,000 we tried to purchase 300,000 barrels for this month."

He said SRP was able to purchase most of it and is seeking more.

Miller said customers could go all summer, if it is a mild one, without suffering a pinch in their electrical supply.

But according to Carlise, regulating gasoline stations in the state is possible.

"For months to come there is going to be a hardship on the Valley area," he said. "The idea of closing stations on Sunday was discussed at the governor's conference."

Business hours for service stations may be shortened from 14-hours a day to 10-hours a day, Carlise said.

"It will be left up to the individual companies to determine their own policy," Carlise said. "Unleaded gasoline is much tighter in supply than other fuels."

He said the supply has remained the same while the demand has grown.

Presently there are no regulations for diesel fuel. He said both the SRP and Arizona Public Service said the fuel could be in short supply because of overspent diesel supplies due to winter weather.

APS spokesman Charles Boyd said the utility has purchased an emergency supply of natural gas to burn in its plants instead of its diesel supply. This move would offset any tight supplies this summer, he said. The supply is currently below normal.

"Our cold winter has depleted our usual storage," Boyd said. "We must start building our inventory now for the summer. In January we did not get all the fuel we needed by a large degree because it just wasn't available."

Boyd said much of the problem is with the refinery. Southern Pacific Pipelines Inc. pipes both diesel and gasoline into Arizona from California and Texas.

Boyd said, "It's a trade off. You can't produce both products at the same time, make a profit and keep a balance."

According to Carlise, station managers are selling gasoline at a loss just to keep the stations open for customers. Unleaded gasoline costs from 69.9 cents to 71.9 cents a gallon wholesale, he said.

"The state is trying to apply a ceiling price to unleaded gas where independent stations can't make more than eight cents above cost per gallon," Carlise added.

AMERICANS TO EVACUATE IRAN

WASHINGTON — The Carter administration plans to resume mass evacuation of Americans from Iran this weekend with the ultimate goal of airlifting 5,000 from the embattled country, it was learned Wednesday. U.S. officials said 1,700 of the nearly 7,000 Americans still in Iran are prepared to leave immediately. The Tehran airport, shut down by the new regime of the Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini as it tries to solidify its control, is expected to be reopened Saturday after observances of religious holidays.

IRAN GUERRILLAS TAKE U.S. EMBASSY

TEHRAN, Iran — Renegade guerrillas shot their way into the U.S. Embassy, anti-American gangs were reported roaming the streets and bloody factional fighting erupted in a provincial city Wednesday as Iran's new government struggled to keep control of this troubled nation. Fighting in the northwestern city of Tabriz took hundreds of lives, Iranian journalists reported.

OIL SHORTAGE PREDICTED

WASHINGTON — Deputy Energy Secretary John F. O'Leary predicts a shortage of imported oil within two to six years and says the United States is in bad shape to deal with a resulting energy crisis. O'Leary, meeting with reporters Wednesday, predicted Iran's new government will restrain oil production to save some of its one major resource, petroleum, for its future economic development. Other present or potential oil exporters, including Saudi Arabia, Kuwait and Mexico, might make similar decisions, O'Leary said.

AFGHAN AMBASSADOR KILLED

NEW DELHI, India — The American ambassador to Afghanistan, Adolph Dubs, was fatally wounded Wednesday when police firing automatic weapons stormed a hotel room where Moslem gunmen were holding him hostage in the Afghan capital of Kabul. U.S. diplomats in Pakistan said the kidnappers, who were not identified, sought the release of three Shiite Moslem clergymen who were recently arrested by the leftist Afghan government. Official Kabul Radio said the four kidnappers shot Dubs when police charged into the room, reportedly after firing a 60-second barrage through the door and from across the street.

CUBANS CONVICTED OF MURDER

WASHINGTON — Two anti-Castro Cubans were convicted of murder Wednesday in the assassination of Chilean dissident Orlando Letelier, and a third was found guilty of lying to U.S. authorities about the crime. Family and friends of the defendants began crying uncontrollably when a U.S. District Court jury returned its verdict after nearly nine hours of deliberations which began Tuesday afternoon.

PRESCOTT BROTHERS CONVICTED OF ARMORED CAR ROBBERY

TUCSON — A federal jury Wednesday convicted two Prescott brothers on charges that they robbed an armored van of $288,000 and kidnapped the van's two guards north of Phoenix in May 1977. Michael K. Poland, 37, and his brother, Patrick G., 28, showed no emotion as U.S. District Judge Thomas Murphy read the verdict. Murphy then polled the jury of six men and six women, quickly set an appeal bail and sentencing date and adjourned court. The jury deliberated a total of about 10 hours Tuesday and Wednesday in reaching its decision.

CARTER ARRIVES IN MEXICO

MEXICO CITY — President Carter was greeted Wednesday by 5,000 flag-waving Mexicans and said his state visit is an opportunity to resolve differences "in a spirit of peace, friendship, and mutual respect." First in Spanish, then in English, the president told Mexican President Jose Lopez Portillo: "We have a great deal to accomplish. I cannot imagine a more appropriate day for our reunion. Happy St. Valentine's Day. Long live Mexico."

ASSISTANT ATTORNEY GENERAL LEAVES POST

PHOENIX — Jack LaSota,

Arizona's chief assistant attorney general, is leaving that post on March 2 to enter private law practice, he said Wednesday. He explained that it's more advantageous for him to enter private law now — having just served as attorney general — than to put it off for another two years or so.

IRAN TO UP OIL PRODUCTION

WASHINGTON — The United States has received informal word that the new government in Iran will increase oil production by enough to permit a resumption of exports to other nations this year, a top Energy Department official said Wednesday.

Budget tripledBoard loosens grip on fees

By Tricia Reeson

The Student Affairs Board unanimously approved a recommendation which would dissolve its control over $430,000 in student fees and almost triple the Associated Students budget for next year.

In a special meeting Monday, the board decided its function should be to address student issues only, and recommended to ASU President John Schwada that management of student fees it had controlled be given to three ASU factions.

If the proposal is approved, a $260,000 account for five campus programs would be controlled by ASASU. In addition, the Fine Arts Activities account of $120,000 would be handled by the dean of the College of Fine Arts, and a $66,000 State Press fund would be under the Student Publications Advisory Board.

Schwada said Wednesday he had not officially received the recommendation, but that the proposal "looks reasonable."

The board's recommendation would effectively triple ASASU's budget, raising it from approximately $140,000 to about $400,000 annually.

The additional funds would give ASASU control over monies for the intramurals program, cheerleaders and legal assistance, as well as ASASU's own emergency fund and administration.

ASASU President Lance Ross said the change is needed to eliminate an "inefficient" system of dual budgeting in which clubs and organizations are funded through both the Student Affairs Board and ASASU.

"We won. This is exactly what I've been asking for in earlier meetings and discussions," Ross said.

"This brings everyone into one channel. There'll be students deciding what students need."

The transfer of State Press funds to the Student Publication Board will have "no effect" on the newspaper's operation, said Edward H. Peplow, manager of student publications. The dean of the College of Fine Arts was unavailable for comment Wednesday.

The decision by the Student Affairs Board was initiated by a letter of recommendation on the issue by board chairman Dr. George Hamm, who was in Washington, D.C. this week.

The board's subsequent vote for approval was a reflection of "a political reality," according to the chairman of the board's budget committee.

"ASASU has pressed very hard for these funds. This is a reflection of their activities," Dr. John Schlacter said.

"I think Dr. Hamm came to realize that this change was the future. There seems to be a trend in many major universities to give the student associations more responsibility in funding student projects," Schlacter said.

Schlacter said there was some concern over whether ASASU would be able to handle an account as large as intramurals, which was given $129,000 in the 1977-78 budget.

We did it; how 'bout y'all?

The South fell again Sunday night. Right on television.

The telecast of the classic movie Gone With The Wind brought the Civil War into your living room.

See the snotty South. Wanting to preserve an agricultural way of life. Wanting to preserve slavery. Damn Yankees!

The leaders of the South were willing to go to war to preserve what they thought was right. And, of course, they lost.

See General Sherman march through Atlanta and leave a trail of desolation on his way to the sea. Damn rebels. Burn everything in sight, that'll teach them.

When the war ended in 1865, the South was left with little of anything. The slaves were freed and the economy of the South was ruined.

This brought about the glorious era of Reconstruction. Complete with carpetbaggers and scalawags.

The South was forced to adopt whatever the provincial leaders of Reconstruction wanted. No ifs, ands or buts.

That attitude still prevails to this day.

In 1954 the Supreme Court ruled that segregation in schools was unconstitutional. No more "separate-but-equal."

It took a while for the courts to begin enforcing this doctrine, but eventually the era of busing arrived in the late 1960s.

Despite Gov. George Wallace's efforts to block the schoolhouse door at the University of Alabama, desegregation came of age.

And where was desegregation pushed the hardest? Why in the South, of course, the bastion of bigotry, redneckness and everything else un-American.

School districts in the South were put under the gun by the courts in the late 1960s and early 1970s to desegregate or else.

They desegregated. How? By busing, the only real practical means available.

Unfortunately, the courts forgot one very important fact: segregated schools aren't confined to the South.

A report issued Tuesday by the U.S. Civil Rights Commission found that nearly half of the minority children in this country still go to segregated schools — mostly in the Northeast and North Central regions.

The very same regions that dictated the terms of reconstruction to the South after the Civil War.

The report indicates that in the nation overall, 46 percent of minority children attend segregated schools. In the Northeast, 65 percent of minority children do and in the North Central region the figure is 68 percent. No figures were given for the South alone.

In their zeal to clean up the South, the courts neglected to clean up the rest of the nation.

School districts in the South were forced to spend countless amounts of time and money devising desegregation plans and purchasing buses to transport children cross-town to meet the fancy of the courts.

Meanwhile, segregation went on in most of the North while the South was put under the microscope.

When desegregation has been forced upon northern school districts, violence often has erupted. Boston is the best example.

The South accepted busing more readily, Louisville being the key exception.

Some people in the South may not have agreed with it, but they went along with it.

It is about time the rest of the country followed suit. Separate-but-equal education just doesn't cut the mustard. Not in the South, the North, or anywhere else.

The courts and others must realize quality education (that is, not segregated) should be offered to all children.

The attitude of the South being a backwards place just doesn't hold water anymore. The South and Southwest both are booming in population and growth of industry. The plantation economy is long dead.

The South is a major industrial center now, with cities like Atlanta and Miami leading the way.

The North should realize the South can't be pushed around any more. And practice what it preaches.

As the sign at Fat Johnny's Bar-B-Q in Fort Lauderdale, Fla., says, "Put some South in your mouth."

The North should do the same. Or else stick it in its ear.

Letters to the Editor

'Give us the (real?) facts!'

Editor:

The State Press is misleading both the businessmen of the community (such as Representative Cooper) and students concerned about the "rich" stereotype.

In order to encourage additional advertising, the State Press gives out a four-page published brochure of statistics stating how ASU students live:

•Example: The brochure states that ASU students "own more than 26,000 cars . . . (and) have access to another 7,000."

•Example: The brochure states "members of the campus community make some 232,500 visits to nightclubs, lounges, etc. per month . . . They attend a movie 86,400 times a month . . . They eat at a medium- to high-priced restaurant 28,125 times a month."

•Example: The brochure states "recent studies show conservatively that 32,350 State Press readers spend $540 each, annually, for their own (and their families') clothes."

•Example: The brochure states "94.6 percent of them spend an average of $4.20 a week on packaged liquor — or $158,928 a week, $8,264,256 a year." Yes, that's more than $8 million a year spent on packaged liquor.

When the State Press publishes figures like these for taxpaying businessmen to be misled by, it's no wonder our tuition fees are going up!

Finally, I suggest the State Press publish the set of figures that it lists in the brochure (hey, how about the ones that claim 27 percent of ASU students are from families with $30,000+ annual incomes — gosh, your Feb. 9 article said it was only 12 percent. What a difference!). Let's not be so subjective towards the crowds we want to please . . . GIVE US THE FACTS!

Marriage policy

Church & politics: a bad combination

Editor:

I first read about the Roman Catholic Diocese of Phoenix new marriage policy in The Arizona Republic, Jan. 30. I read about it again in the Feb. 8 issue of the State Press. Now I feel a need to express my opinion.

I couldn't agree more — the present divorce rate is a very serious problem. I admire the initiative taken by the Diocese to combat it. But should marriage be regulated in the same manner as is much of today's society?

In The Arizona Republic, some of the specifics of the policy are as follows:

" . . . If a lack of maturity or compatibility is revealed by the PMI or by interview, the priest or deacon who is responsible for the couple's marriage preparation will, if he intends to permit the marriage, refer the couple to Catholic Social Services for premarital education . . ."

Sound like the governmental red tape that we all have to go through now and then?

I suggest that the Diocese change its entailed policy to a voluntary program, and that it encourage, rather than impel its members to participate. After all, is marriage a privilege to be granted?

My point is this: Let's leave the making of policies to our governments and businesses, and not mix God with bureaucracy.

Open Letter

Rep. Bill English: 'I agree with Cooper'

Editor:

Recent articles in your paper have led to a great deal of confusion as to the intent of some of the legislators sponsoring the proposed increase in out-of-state tuition for the Universities. Mrs. (Juanita) Harelson, for example, does not speak for me when she indicates a concern about student demonstrations should an increase be proposed for in-state resident tuition.

My position is and always has been that I oppose any substantive increase of in-state tuition. I do believe, however, that an increase in tuition for out-of-state students is indicated in order to bring Arizona's subsidy of such students down to a reasonable value comparable to that of publically (sic) financed schools in other states.

While I agree with Mrs. Harelson and Mr. (Jim) Cooper on this need for increasing our out-of-state tuition, our opinions are widely divergent in other areas.

With respect to birth control information, etc., being available on campus, I tend to take a very pragmatic viewpoint. It is a clinical fact that once a person becomes sexually active, that activity can be expected to continue throughout the greater part of their life. This is not, in my view, a matter of morality as much as it is an established fact.

I believe we would be remiss in not allowing our university medical departments to provide birth control information and any necessary prescriptions to those who are sexually active. I cannot, however, support the use of state monies for the dispensing of birth control devices.

That's not funny, sexism

Editor:

In the Feb. 8 issue of the State Press you reported on a criminal act, specifically committed against women living on campus.

The seriousness of the problem was cited by ASU detective Gene Jones: "These calls can cause a lot of anxiety in girls."

However, the accompanying cartoon only serves to minimize the trauma of obscene phone calls. In its portrayal of a woman carrying on a conversation and telling her caller to "speak up," the cartoon effectively destroys the validity of the article.

This sexist treatment of a potentially damaging crime is totally unacceptable to this reader. When will people learn that sexual privacy invasion is not funny?

Please be more responsible to your readers, female and male.

Blatant racism

U.S. marshal travels abroad

By Chet Barfield

It's no big deal for a U.S. marshal to travel abroad to extradite an American prisoner . . .

Unless the foreign country is South Africa and the marshal happens to be black.

Lee Limbs Jr., a federal officer from Phoenix, flew to South Africa this month to retrieve Donald Clarke, 32, a white mercenary who had deserted the Rhodesian Army. Clarke was wanted in Phoenix on charges of manufacturing firearms and threatening to assassinate an FBI agent.

In Rhodesia, where hundreds of American mercenaries are fighting in the country's racial strife, Clarke was arrested for allegedly blowing up a farmhouse after his desertion.

Last week, after four months in a Rhodesian jail, Clarke was deported to Johannesburg, South Africa, for extradition to the United States. He arrived in Phoenix on Tuesday and appeared before the U.S. magistrate on Wednesday. He is being held on $100,000 bond.

But bringing him back wasn't easy.

Limbs said when the South African police saw he was black, they felt sorry for his prisoner.

"They were surprised and shocked to see me," he said. "Clarke said, 'I'm going to be flying back with this nigger,' and the major became real sympathetic to his cause."

"To them, Clarke (who was fighting for Rhodesian whites) was kind of a hero," Limbs said. He added the South African authorities only cooperated as much as they had to by law, because they resented turning a white prisoner over to a black officer.

Limbs and his two deputies, a Mexican-American and a white, ended up spending a week in South Africa while Rhodesian officials allowed Clarke to dispose of property in that country. The layover gave Limbs a chance to experience what blatant discrimination feels like.

He was banned from a movie theater because it wasn't the day of the week blacks were allowed; a cab driver taking him to the ambassador's office put tape over his "blancos only," (whites only), sign so he wouldn't be arrested by traffic police; a man in a restaurant came over and complimented him on such good English — for a black man.

Limbs said South African newspapers, which are censored heavily by the government, try to keep blacks in their place — at the bottom.

"All you read about blacks is that they got arrested, terrorized somebody or raped some white woman," he said.

Yet Limbs said he believes his visit might have "opened some eyes" of South African bigots.

"A lot of people have been taught that blacks are inferior, that we stink," he said. "People could see I was a presidential appointment and that I could read above a first-grade level."

"What really impressed them (South Africans) positively was that blacks can do things other than shine shoes or be houseboys or servants," he said.

When he got the South African assignment last month, Limbs said he called Justice Department officials in Washington, D.C., to ask why he was chosen.

"They said, 'He (Clarke) is wanted for an alleged crime, and he's wanted in your district."

"As far as we're concerned, your color is red, white and blue, not black."

Campus skaters roll away woes

By Mary Perry

Being on time to class can be a breeze when there are wheels on those feet.

Using sidewalks, bike paths and almost any other available concrete, students are cutting time short between classes by roller skating.

"It is not really that hard and it is a lot of fun," Carol Friedman, an ASU business administration major said. "People look at you funny sometimes, but it is never a negative thing."

ASU has no regulation for skaters.

On weekends the campus fills up with skaters, Friedman said and space and asphalt invite the students to roll their woes away.

The University also has a new ASU Skate Club. The club's president, Cheri Holland, said the club aims to rid shy skaters of embarrassing stares from non-skaters on campus.

"At first it was designed to get people together who were too embarrassed to skate alone," Holland said. "The group members are really good skaters and we plan to work on competitive events."

Skating to classes is not always convenient the club's president said.

"Even though it really is fun, the skates don't come off that easy and I think students may get complaints," Holland said.

"My teachers are really great about it though. The skates are just a little tough to take on and off all day. You have to tie them up, untie them, tie them up, untie them," she added.

The club plans to take a twirl around the Phoenix Zoo soon. It also plans to skate around Permanent Wave Park, 55 E. Southern Ave., Mesa, on Feb. 21.

Although the club plans to do fund-raising events she said the main intention is just to have fun.

Counseling provides help for life's daily problems

By Jacqueline Gaillard

Students can simply pick up the phone to find an answer to their daily problems, a spokesman for a local hospital said.

The Camelback Hospital, 5055 N. 34th St., Phoenix counsellor is a professionally prepared tape library designed "to assist people to better understand various aspects of mental health and some of life's challenging problems," said Ralph Alden, the hospital's director of planning and development.

The tapes provide information in 11 areas of human emotion with 50 subjects ranging from depression and stress to divorce and loneliness.

Alden said approximately 40 people call every hour on the five available lines which operate from 10 a.m. to 7 p.m. Monday through Friday.

"We didn't have any idea of the response we were going to get. It's just been fantastic," he said. "It shows a tremendous need for this kind of service. Possibly we're even saving some lives here."

According to Dr. William McGrath, medical director at the hospital, some of the most requested tapes are those dealing with depression, sexuality, infatuation and love.

"One of the most important factors of the counsellor lies in the fact that the individual makes the call, disclosing that he has a need," McGrath said. "Then he has won half the battle, some simply deny that anything is wrong."

McGrath, a specialist in psychiatry, said the hospital plans to continue and expand the counsellor, gradually replacing the tapes with some of the hospital's own in-depth material.

The tapes now used were developed at the University of Texas.

Study to resolve fate of Orme Dam

Sen. Dennis DeConcini, D-Ariz., expects "some sort of structure" to be built at the proposed Orme Dam site, but is unwilling to endorse any alternative plan until a federal study is completed, a DeConcini spokesman said Wednesday.

"The senator said he wouldn't be surprised if the alternatives did include some sort of structure at the Orme Dam site (the confluence of the Salt and Verde rivers)," said DeConcini Press Secretary Bob Maynes.

Maynes added that DeConcini will not make any final decisions before the alternative study is finished.

At a press conference Monday, DeConcini said he doesn't expect the Orme Dam study to be completed before May 1982.

"It would be rather foolish to prejudge a study that will cost a lot of money," Maynes said.

Maynes added that DeConcini does not advocate any particular alternative and has not proposed any specifics.

"The Senator specifically has not endorsed any alternative," he said. "But he acknowledges several alternatives, some of which don't include a dam at the Orme site."

Applications available for 'day on the job'

55 mph safer

Prof opposes bills to alter speed limit and violations

By Ann Flynn

The Legislature should let the current 55 mph speed limit stand, an ASU transportation professor said.

"I disapprove of both bills that have been introduced to the Legislature," Dr. Norman E. Daniel said.

The first bill Daniel referred to would have hiked the speed limit on state freeways to 65 mph, but died in the Senate.

The other bill, still in the house, would make speeding a petty misdemeanor. No points would be recorded for a violation and insurance rates would not go up.

Safety and conservation are the two main reasons Daniel is opposed to repealing the 55 mph speed limit.

Although it cannot be proven the slower speed limit has resulted in a reduction of traffic fatalities nationwide, Daniel believes this to be the case.

"There is strong statistical evidence to suggest that the speed limit was a factor in saving 5,000 lives," Daniel said.

Other factors have also contributed to this figure, he said.

"Improved seat belts, better made cars and fewer people on the roads have all contributed to this lower statistic."

The need for increased conservation efforts is still a very real problem, especially with the crisis in Iran, which Daniel said will force people to conserve more.

"There is no doubt that you do get more miles per gallon when you drive slower," he said.

"There are a variety of other ways to maintain fuel efficiency, such as keeping your car tuned up or using radial tires. But the point is why not do all of these things. As I see it, it's not an either-or proposition," Daniel said.

Daniel said he believes the federal government will make good on its threat to revoke $155 million in highway funds if the states raise their speed limits, but he doesn't consider this blackmail.

"At this stage I think the government will act. It's not blackmail, but coercion.

There is an important distinction here. Blackmail is a loaded term which has bad connotations. Coercion, on the other hand, doesn't refer to anything illegal. Once you accept federal money, you are subject to what it dictates to you," Daniel said.

Police patrolling north campus after assault

By Lori Medigovich

An ASU police officer is patrolling the north side of campus to protect women students from sexual assault, the ASU police chief said Wednesday.

In response to the recent assault of Heidi Anderson, a Manzanita resident, Chief George Bays said a security officer will patrol the dorms and parking lots from 11 p.m. to 3 a.m., Monday through Thursday.

The patrolman will be in addition to part-time student police aids now patrolling parking lots and dorms from 7 p.m. to 11 p.m., Bays said.

In addition to the police aids, the Sigma Nu fraternity offers an escort service to faculty, staff and students who are on campus late at night and request rides to their dorms or cars, he said.

"Because we don't have a fence surrounding the campus we get drifters coming on campus," Bays said. "Now, with police aids and the patrolling officer, we're working at keeping a high visibility to discourage attacks."

Since October 1975, the police department has been offering a course entitled, "Women's Resistance To Assault" to teach women how to avoid and fight off possible attackers.

Sgt. Bill Maughan, who teaches the defense course for women, said the course runs in 5-week periods, meeting at the University Activity Center's wrestling room every Thursday from 7 p.m. to 9 p.m. The course is free and open to all students.

To avoid being assaulted, he said a woman should tell others where she is going when she leaves her home, and when she expects to return.

"We teach women to avoid any patterns," Maughan said. "She should vary her times of arrival and departure. She should also avoid walking alone late at night and should stay out of poorly lit areas."

A variety of simple techniques are taught to help physically resist an attacker.

"We teach a woman she should attack the bottom portion of the body with vigor and strength to get away from the assailant," Maughan said.

It is not true all women are weaker than men, he said.

"In the course we try to accentuate the woman's strengths and point out the man's weaknesses."

If a woman cannot get away from the attacker and is raped, the course teaches her how to collect data for prosecution of the criminal.

"We teach her how to look for and gather physical evidence from a rape," he said, "she should look for such things as torn clothing, finger prints, the attacker's facial features, and possible the license of the assailant's car."

The final chapter of the course centers on teaching the female how to deal with the trauma associated with a rape.

"We remind the woman she is not to blame for the rape," Maughan said. "She just happened to be at the wrong place at the wrong time."

He said about 18 women who had completed the course have successfully resisted an attacker.

State residency rulings assailed by Tempe lawyer

By Roger Ridey

Guidelines for obtaining Arizona residency place too much emphasis on a student's source of financial support, a Tempe lawyer specializing in fee status appeal cases said Tuesday.

Steven B. Yarbrough, a graduate of ASU's College of Law and a member of the original Fee Status Appeals Committee from 1971 to 1975, said, "It is totally erroneous to assert a student loses the ability to select Arizona as a state of domicile simply because they receive support from out of state."

Source of support is only one piece of evidence required by the fee status guidelines, and should receive equal weight with other evidence, he said.

"It's almost like the guidelines say there are two prerequisites instead of one," he added. "Not only do you have to be present in the state for 12 months, you must also be self-supporting."

Yarbrough said too many students are being denied residency solely on the financial support issue, and hopes to do something about it.

"I've prepared a memorandum for the University Fee Status Appeals Committee arguing financial support cannot be the major criteria for denying residency."

The attorney said he hopes to alleviate some of the overzealousness he claims dominates the entire fee status system.

Noting the greater number of residency applications denied at ASU compared to the State's two other universities, he said, "There is no uniformity in application of the guidelines across the state. That's not right."

Yarbrough cited that Northern Arizona University does not even have an appeals committee authorized by the Board of Regents because most students simply obtain residency after a one-year domicile. He also claimed the University of Arizona grants a higher percentage of residency requests than ASU.

Although the guidelines for obtaining residency are ambiguous, he still believes in "playing the game by the rules you are stuck with."

He said until the entire system is overhauled, little else can be done.

Commenting on the proposed bill to raise out-of-state tuition and revise residency requirements; "There are numerous Supreme Court decisions from various states concerning residency status, but whoever wrote that bill obviously didn't read them."

The new system would grant residence to those meeting five of seven evidence requirements.

He added it would be interesting to see how long it would take for the law to be struck down by the courts if it manages to pass the Legislature.

Wrestlers to tangle with UA Wildcats

The ASU wrestling team concludes its 1978-79 dual meet season this week with two matches.

First, the Sun Devils travel to Tucson to tangle with UA tonight and then return to the Activity Center and host Cal Poly-San Luis Obispo on Friday.

The pair of encounters are re-matches for ASU. Earlier in the year, the Devils of Coach Bobby Douglas defeated the Wildcats, 27-18, in Tempe and also beat Cal State-SLO, 22-13, in California.

"We're a much improved team since those two meetings, though," said Douglas, whose squad stands at 7-3 in dual meets so far this season. "But that fact won't make this week's meets any easier."

Last weekend, ASU saw action in the Midwest — defeating NCAA Division II champion Northern Iowa, 18-13, then bowing to the reigning Division I titleholder Iowa, 34-6.

ASU tennis visits Tucson

The ASU women's tennis team will be in Tucson today to play in the Cal-State-San Diego Tournament to compete in the Arizona Invitational Friday. The three-day event includes 16 schools from California, Arizona, Texas and Utah.

The team has a perfect 4-0 spring record defeating Mesa Community College, Scottsdale Community College, Nevada Las-Vegas and Phoenix College. They are 11-1 overall.

Coach Anne Pittman will be using her front line in the tournaments in Tucson, including Jeannine Balbiers, Sue Clark, Jodi Ricketts, Cheryl Hawkins, Jerri Leavitt, Tracey Stern and Debbie Brown.

In matches against Mesa and Scottsdale, Pittman went with her JV squad, which responded with impressive 9-1 and 11-0 wins respectively.

The Cal-State tournament is scheduled for 2:30 p.m. this afternoon.

The team will be home Feb. 20 against Grand Canyon College at the Whiteman Tennis Center.

Devils are back in action

ASU's men's gymnastics team will be back in action tonight after a week layoff, facing Odessa College at 7:30 p.m. in the Sun Devil Gym.

The Sun Devils haven't seen action since Feb. 3, when they defeated Chico State 215.3-194.35.

They will also host a triangular meet on Saturday at the Activity Center against Washington and California. That meet is scheduled for a 7:30 p.m. start.

The team stands at 4-5 overall in both dual and invitational competition.

ASU will be led by Pac-10 all-around leader Lindsay Nylund and nationally top ranked, R.D. Webster, in the floor exercise.

Nylund won the all-around competition in the Chico State meet, while Webster came off a shoulder injury and took the floor exercise competition.

With the meet Saturday and a triangular meet scheduled against USC and UCLA on Feb. 24, the Sun Devils will get a good preview of the type of competition they will be up against in the Pac-10 championships scheduled for late March.

Is Greg Goorjian going elsewhere next year?

Greg Goorjian

By Walter Berry

Like Dorothy, whose exciting adventures in a fairy-tale land lived only in her mind, Sun Devil guard Greg Goorjian could be forgiven for feeling that the ASU basketball program was nothing but one big Oz.

The backcourt whiz from La Crescenta, Calif., came to Tempe with more solid credentials than Mae West and the credibility of a Walter Cronkite. His statistics spoke for themselves — a 43.4 point-per-game average in high school, consensus first team All-America, and more records in his senior yearbook than Contac has tiny time capsules.

So what happened?

ASU's first season in the Pac-10 — one which was supposed to contain more promises than a Valentine — instead resembled the aftermath of the Chicago massacre. And Goorjian looked like he was going to become the school's greatest casualty.

Or at least the Los Angeles Times thought so.

"I never said that. Naw, I'm not leaving. There are definitely things I want to accomplish here," the freshman said Tuesday over a steak dinner at Palo Verde West's training table. "They (the Times) like to cause controversy. The Daily Trojan (USC's campus newspaper) even called me up and asked me if I was taking off and I told them 'no'. It was blown out of proportion."

"The whole thing is I said something like, 'after this season is over, I'm going to sit down with my dad (who is the head basketball coach at Glendale

Talk to us last.

Ask the other computer companies some tough questions about their training programs, their attitudes about 'going by the book', promotions, profit-sharing and the importance of the individual.

Then ask us the same questions.

Careers in computer marketing.

At Hewlett-Packard, our computer sales are growing dramatically. So career opportunities are wide open for sales representatives, systems and customer engineers. We're looking for people with a science degree, plus an MBA. Or a marketing degree with some computer background. Or an engineering degree with an interest in marketing.

Terri Gilstrap
(BS, Univ. of Tenn./Chattanooga)
Staff Systems Engineer

"I'm very impressed with Hewlett-Packard's products and policies. With 'Management by Objective' as long as you get the job done, you don't have someone constantly breathing over your shoulder. They also let you grow in the direction that suits your interests and background. That's one reason there's such a small turnover. The longer I'm here, the more I like it."

There are a lot of things about HP you'll like. For instance, it's our policy to promote from within rather than hiring over your head from outside. We share profits with everyone. (The last semi-annual bonus was more than $24 million.) We've never had a lay-off in our 40-year history. And our sales are approaching $2 billion.

But you can't learn very much about us from an ad. So representatives from Hewlett-Packard will be holding interviews at your school on February 22.

That gives you enough time to check out the other computer companies. And to check with your placement office to arrange an appointment. Or write to Hewlett-Packard, Attn. Larry Amsden, 11000 Wolfe Road, Cupertino CA 95014.

Then let's talk.

Preston Ford (BSEE, MIT; MBA, Harvard)
HP Sales Representative

"There's a lot of difference from one company to the next as to whether they treat sales people as order takers or as important people . . . HP does a good job of giving you the support and training and guidance you need to do the job right."

HEWLETT  PACKARD

Strong Bruins looking past Devils?

By Bob Petrie

You have to congratulate ASU basketball coach Ned Wulk for saying he thinks UCLA might be looking past ASU tonight in Los Angeles because the Bruins have just played two "very emotional games."

Because strong teams usually look past the weaker ones before the big games come up, not after the big ones.

But then Nedley has to look for some semblance of an excuse for UCLA, ranked No. 1, UPI; No. 2 AP, to lose to the Sun Devils.

"They could take us very lightly under the circumstances," Wulk said. "They've just beaten Notre Dame in South Bend (56-52 on Sunday) and USC, in overtime (102-94). I don't know how they'll be against us."

The last time UCLA played ASU was not one of Wulk's red-letter days. It was in Tempe, Jan. 20, and after the Sun Devils dropped a 95-79 bomb to the Bruins, the Activity Center fans did likewise to Wulk, letting him have it with numerous catcalls which suggested he step down as ASU coach.

But Wulk survived that outburst reasonably well, he is still the coach, and he will be on hand to coach the Devils (6-7 Pac-10, 15-10 overall) and against USC

Saturday night.

And now back to the pipe dream, that's for ASU to knock off UCLA, which is first in the Pac-10 at 10-2, and 18-3 overall.

Wulk says he'll try and do it with youth, the strategy which clicked last Saturday night in the Devils' 85-72 defeat of Oregon State.

Two freshmen — guards Greg Goorjian and Fat Lever, and three sophomores — frontliners Sam Williams, Alton Lister and Johnny Nash — will make up the starting lineup. Of those five, Goorjian, with 22, Williams, with 16, and Lever, with 13, scored career high point totals.

And that pleased Wulk immensely.

"I think Greg, in playing a lot more, was allowed to relax more," Wulk said. "He needs playing time and we want Fat to get that opportunity too. The young kids we have are the players of the future."

In stark contrast, UCLA's lineup will consist of three seniors and two juniors, with four starters averaging in double figures.

They are senior guards Roy Hamilton and Brad Holland (both averaging 16.8 ppg), senior forward David Greenwood (17.9 ppg), and junior forward Kiki Vandeweghe (13.5 ppg).

It was Vandeweghe who spearheaded a 18-4 Bruin scoring spurt late in the first half of the ASU-UCLA game in Tempe, which did the Devils in. The 6-foot-7 forward scored 10 of the 18 points in the tear, which transformed a 32-29 ASU lead into a comfortable 47-36 UCLA advantage. And that, folks, was the ballgame.

Vandeweghe was also named the most valuable player of the UCLA-Notre Dame game Sunday, pulling down 10 rebounds and scoring eight points.

If UCLA weren't enough for the Sun Devils to cope with on their West Coast swing, how 'bout adding USC to this weekend's action?

The Devils also lost to the Trojans at the Activity Center Jan. 18, 69-65, but ASU almost pulled the game out after trailing by as much as 22 midway in the second half.

In that game, it was USC's lightly-regarded guard, Don Carfino, who caused severe damage to ASU. Carfino, normally a 9.9 per-game scorer, tossed in 18 against the Devils, who held the extremely dangerous Trojan center Cliff Robinson to just four points.

USC is 8-4 and second in the Pac-10, 13-8 overall.

ASU golfers go to Nogales for tourney

The ASU women's golf team is headed for Nogales, but not for some nacho-flavored corn chips.

The occasion is the annual University of Arizona Invitational, which this year is being staged at the Rio Rico Country Club in Nogales.

The 36-hole tournament starts today and ends Friday.

It will be the second outing of the season for the Sun Devil female "swingers" of coach Judy Whitehouse. ASU placed second in the Lady Aztec at San Diego in January.

Expected to play for the Devils will be Jeannette Kerr, Pia Nilsson, Kelly Fuiks, Vicki Singleton and Cathy Hewitt.

A School of Engineering representative from the University of Southern California will be on campus Thursday, Feb. 15 to interview students interested in graduate study at USC. See the Career Services Office for appointment.

More about

ASU program is no 'Land of Oz' for Goorjian

Community College in Calif.) and evaluate everything that's happened this year," Goorjian said. "Everybody took it to mean that I was leaving."

"I don't know if it's the Times. You're a writer. Don't you like to stir up some controversy? Sure you do. It's the business. It gets people to read your stories. If a guy's not careful of what he wants to say and doesn't want to say, he deserves to be quoted. That's the only way he'll learn."

Goorjian has had to learn the hard way, as evidenced by his recent run-in with a Pac-10 official during Saturday night's game against Oregon State at the Activity Center. But in his mind, it was all a misunderstanding.

"They came downcourt and there was this foul underneath," he said. "I knew one of OSU's players from summer leagues in LA. I said 'c'mon, This is Arizona State.' I guess he took it seriously and said: 'Don't start on me, Goorjian.' One ref overheard us and warned me about it, but it was all very harmless. I like to have fun out there. I take the game seriously, definitely. But hey, there's always time to smile and joke . . ."

Goorjian's shooting last Saturday was anything but humorous to Oregon State. The freshman netted a collegiate career high of 22 points — 16 of which came in the second half.

"I played my game against OSU. I took the open shots, penetrated and moved the offense. I thought we played well. I know I did," said Goorjian with Lou Grubb sincerity. "I played my way and got to play my style of basketball. That's the way I want it from here on out."

The air of cockiness is evident in every sentence Goorjian speaks. But back when the season started, most of his peers agreed that his brashness still couldn't cover for his erratic defensive play.

"Yeah, my defense still isn't what it should be. I had a bad name for defense in high school. I don't want to get that up again on the college level," said Goorjian, who is sporting the stubbled beginnings of a moustache and accompanying mutton-chop sideburns these days.

"But in the last game, I felt a change in the attitude of the other guys toward me. This time, when I made a bad pass or something, it wasn't, 'Oh, gosh. There he goes again.' It was,

'That's alright. C'mon. Let's go.' The guys are encouraging more."

Goorjian is his toughest critic, however. Upset by his offensive output of late, the wiry 6-foot-2, 165-pound guard adopted a new practice policy last week. It was literally for the (early) birds.

"I started getting up around 6 o'clock every morning and go over to the Activity Center to work out," he explained. "I'd lift weights until quarter after seven, shoot until 10 minutes of eight, go eat and then go to class. I thought I needed more strength and stamina."

In spite of "scaring the shit out of the security guards" as one ASU trainer put it, Goorjian thinks the thrown-together training methods has done more good than harm.

"I think it has helped just in the fact that when you're alone in the gym, you can visualize, dream, be creative and then use what you devise in a game situation. I love being in the gym by myself . . ."

He is likewise a loner in his habit of including a basketball in his daily haberdashery. Goorjian carries one wherever he goes in his "civvies," and literally looks like he is wearing it.

"I've done that since sixth grade. It's nothing new," he said unabashed. "I can't say I invented it, though. I got it from Pete Maravich and Ernie DeGregorio (of the NBA). They used to do it, too."

"People may laugh at you for it, but I still say one thing. I take my basketball seriously and whatever you do to improve your own game either physically or mentally can't hurt. It can only help."

Goorjian hopes it helps his game enough to garner him a pro career. He's been banking on the notion since the day his feet first touched hardwood.

"I'd eventually like to play NBA. I'll work my hardest for it," said the smooth shooter who is currently carrying a 9.8 point-per-game average. "If I don't make it, at least I know I tried my hardest. I don't want to be like one of those guys who sit around and say, 'I wish I tried harder.'"

The Sun Devils will have to nurture a similar attitude if they stand to beat the likes of their next opponents — USC and UCLA.

"They're damn good teams. But if we stick to the same style, intensity and enthusiasm we played with the last time, we could beat them both," he said. "I know (Bruin guard and lifelong friend) Brad Holland still holds back a lot of what he can do. He has to with the players he has around him — the David Greenwoods and the Roy Hamiltons. But it looks like it's gotten to the point now where they have confidence in Brad."

"There's not as much pettiness as there was when I went there (on a recruiting visit). There can't be that much. They're winning . . ."

ASU Golf Team hopes for comeback

After a disappointing fourth place finish in last week's Pan American Intercollegiate Tournament in Mexico, the ASU golf team will host the Arizona Collegiate today and Friday at Ahwatukee Country Club.

Teams entered include UA and ASU, plus all the junior colleges in the state which have golf programs.

ASU coach George Boutell will field golfers Mark Mattingly, Alex Petric, Scott Watkins, Tom Gray, Dan Croonquist and Dan Forsman.

Mattingly was the Devils' low scorer last week, but no ASU golfer finished in the top-10.

Boutell was disappointed with ASU's fourth place last week, after the Devils were tournament leaders going into the final round.

Oklahoma State, the defending NCAA champion, won the invitational.

"It was a prestige field," said Boutell, "and we were in a position to win. We played horribly the final day, but it wasn't a total loss, because there were 22 good teams in the field."

"We've seen the best teams in the country now and know we can be competitive. Still, we have a lot of work to do."
