Strapped athletic department tightens belt with higher ticket prices and budget cuts

By Jim Elsleger and Michael Murphy

ASU's athletic department will increase ticket prices next year in order to "squeeze through" the next 15 months, Dr. Joe Kearney said Monday.

Due to double salaries in coaching positions and unforeseen expenditures, the department also will institute budget cutbacks, the athletic director added.

"We have made an amendment, which includes deferring $100,000 to the 1980-81 budget intended for ASU's aquatic complex," Kearney said. "We're going to have to squeeze through a tough 15 months ahead to keep from going belly up."

Kearney said in order to solidify the financial situation, the department recommended increasing athletic ticket prices $1 for the general public and 50 cents for students.

"This is a must," Kearney said. "We are in an austere program right now, and a ticket price increase is the only way we're going to be able to survive."

Kearney, who took over the athletic director's job a little more two months ago, said most of the department's financial problems can be directly attributed to the salaries in the football office that are being paid to six assistant coaches released in December. The salaries will be paid until June 30, when a new budget takes effect.

Six former Michigan State University coaches who came to ASU when Darryl Rogers took over as head coach in January are receiving salaries ranging from $26,500 to $32,500. The former coaches are receiving between $17,800 to $29,600.

The MSU coaches received salary increases in accordance with what they would have received at MSU.

"ASU was in excellent financial shape with a $1.1 million reserve before it had to double up on these salaries," Kearney said. "There are other problems, but that is the main one."

One of the other problems facing the athletic department is the capital outlay for the new aquatic complex being built, which will cost $2.9 million.

"Once you lose the flexibility of a reserve, you're in a real dilemma," Kearney added.

He said the lack of a reserve, and the budgetary amendments will have no effect on the construction of the pool.

Despite recent newspaper reports that said the athletic department will face a $100,000 deficit, Kearney said it depends on how you look at the use of the money.

"It's a deferment," he said. "We delayed payment is what it amounts to, until the first part of July."

An "internal checklist" of budgetary cutbacks include: eliminating some salaried personnel in baseball and track clean-up in favor of students; eliminating purchase of food for the press; elimination of sports information personnel travel with teams except baseball; eliminating capital purchase of rehabilitation equipment and eliminating any re-stocking of general issue gear until July 1.

"We're not actually going to let people go," Kearney said in response to the replacement of salaried personnel in baseball and track clean-up. "No one will lose their jobs, it's a matter of staggering work hours."

Sports Information Director Moon Mullins said no one is happy with the fact "that we won't be able to operate at full capacity, but it's not something we can't live with."

"We've already cut out travel with teams to championship events," Mullins said. "It's going to directly affect the local media coverage because we won't have

Pac-10 official says inquiry 'reasonable'

By Ellen Haggerty

A Pacific Athletic Conference official said Monday he feels "no intimidation" from ASU and UA presidents who have been ordered to find out if four other conference schools will be penalized for violating athletic-eligibility rules.

"As I understand it, the basic thrust of their concern is that all members of the Pac-10 receive equal treatment for similar violations," said Wiles Hallock, executive director of the Pac-10. "I think that's a reasonable concern."

The Arizona Board of Regents has directed ASU President John Schwada and UA President John Schaefer to contact the presidents of the eight other conference schools to find out if any action will be taken against Southern California, Oregon, Oregon State and UCLA.

The four schools were accused of violating conference rules after it was learned that football players on their teams had received credit for classes they did not attend.

ASU's football team has been forbidden by the conference to participate in the 1980 Rose Bowl after eight players had been declared ineligible for a similar violation.

ASU also was forced to forfeit five football games last year.

However, Hallock said the cases at the other conference schools "are not identical" to the situation at ASU, and he is not sure he would even "dump them into the same category."

The eligibility of players at the Oregon schools was questioned during the four-day Pac-10 meeting in December and the situations at UCLA and USC were revealed shortly after that.

Seven Oregon players, two at UCLA and one at OSU were declared ineligible by their schools.

At USC, 34 athletes were suspected of ineligibility when it was discovered they were enrolled in a speech class for which they were doing no work. The problem was discovered a month before the end of the semester and the students were told that if they did work for the class for the rest of the semester they would receive credit.

Six Oregon coaches have been fined a total of $9,000 for various infringements, including obtaining illegal credits for the seven players.

No actions have been taken against the other schools, but in-

DIPLOMAT ESCAPES CAPTURED EMBASSY

BOGOTA, Colombia — A Uruguayan diplomat escaped from the guerrilla-held Dominican Embassy in a dramatic dash to freedom Monday, sliding down a rope of bedsheets and scrambling away as bullets flew around him. Authorities said the leftist terrorists fired three times at the fleeing Fernando Gomez, Uruguay's ambassador to Colombia, but missed him. Reporters near the scene said they believed at least one shot was fired at the diplomat by a confused soldier.

REAL 'NORMA RAE' NEGOTIATES WITH STUDIO

LOS ANGELES — The real-life "Norma Rae," whose courageous battle against an oppressive textile mill was the basis of a book and subsequent movie that has been nominated for four Academy Awards, says she has yet to see a penny from the film. But Crystal Lee Sutton says she is negotiating to receive $25,000 for the movie, which has grossed $12.5 million so far. And she is working on a sequel over which she will have script control. "Norma Rae" chronicles her activities on behalf of a labor union to organize the employees of the southern mill where she worked. Sutton was fired seven years ago as a union agitator and is now looking forward to the income from the next film.

SLAIN POLITICIAN EULOGIZED

WASHINGTON — Several House members Monday eulogized former Rep. Allard K. Lowenstein, who was shot to death Friday, and one proposed a congressional medal for him. Rep. Tom Harkin, D-Iowa, said Congress should approve a medal for the slain New York Democrat and inscribe it "The American's American." "Al Lowenstein was an embodiment of what it means to fulfill one's obligation as an American," Harkin told the House. "... He mattered on the issues that really form the foundation of our country: liberty, equality and justice."

PHOENIX MAYOR WANTS FED SPENDING LIMIT

PHOENIX — Federal spending should be limited much as state and local government spending is limited, Mayor Margaret Hance says. The mayor, in Washington, D.C., Monday attending a meeting of the National League of Cities' board of directors, blamed inflation on lack of federal spending control. "Inflation would not be out of control as it is now if the federal government had lived within its means for the past decade," Mrs. Hance said. But she said she was disappointed that the board opposed limiting federal expenditures. She said the board took its position because it feared a limitation would hamper the federal government's flexibility in managing the economy.

GOP TRIES TO MEND PRISON SITE DISPUTE

PHOENIX — Republican legislative leaders huddled with state GOP chairman Tom Pappas Monday in search of an escape from the Litchfield Park prison dispute, which has already split the Senate GOP. Pappas met with Senate majority Republicans in closed caucus for nearly an hour, but no conclusions were reported. "I told them that whatever they do, do it together," said Pappas when he emerged from the meeting. "I came here to get the tax bill and they asked me to attend the caucus."

Reagan, Anderson vie in Illinois

CHICAGO (AP) — Rep. John B. Anderson accused Ronald Reagan of desperation tactics for inviting him out of the Republican party, while Sen. Edward M. Kennedy marched Monday for what he conceded is close to a lost cause in his campaign — the Illinois presidential primary.

On the eve of the contest all entries have called a watershed test of strength, Reagan, Anderson and former U. N. Ambassador George Bush roamed Chicago and the state in a final quest for votes.

A final public opinion poll published Monday by the Chicago Tribune called the Republican race a virtual dead heat between Reagan and Anderson. The survey of 504 Republicans showed Reagan preferred by 36 percent, Anderson by 34 percent, and Bush by only 12.

Eastridge plans to veto human affairs proposal

By Leri Weinraub

Associated Students President Susie Eastridge said Monday she probably will veto a proposal to include a Human Affairs Board in the ASASU bylaws.

"The Senate did not provide an awareness of where the program will go or what its intentions are in having this type of program," she said. "The revision is not as detailed as it could be."

The bylaws revision said the creation of an HAB would "provide an atmosphere of awareness and concern of the needs of students at ASU."

The Women's Affairs Board would be included as a standing committee under the HAB organization.

The other proposed boards under the HAB are the Men's Affairs Board, Minority Affairs Board, Consumer Affairs Board, Political Affairs Board and Academic Affairs Board.

Eastridge will send the budget back to the Senate for further revisions. The Senate has the option of overriding any of her vetoes with a two-thirds vote.

The budget then goes to the office of George Hamm, vice president for student affairs, where Eastridge will present the budget to a University budget group composed of several University administrators.

Eastridge said on March 5 she would veto funding for the HAB unless it was included in the ASASU bylaws.

ASASU Sen. Kevin Daehnke proposed the revision at the March 6 Senate meeting.

Meanwhile, Eastridge also allotted $4,000 to the ASASU Travel Bureau even though the Senate allocated nothing to it.

The Senate did not provide any funding for the bureau because it is trying to set up an independent travel agency at ASASU that would provide full travel services for students and would also be a revenue-generating operation for ASASU.

Eastridge said she gave the Travel Bureau money because it would be "quite some time" before the new program could get under way.

She also vetoed a $1,000 allocation to the WAB for a Women's Concert series because she said the WAB can coordinate its concerts through other ASASU activity boards.

"WAB was given a 113 percent increase from last year's budget," Eastridge said. "No other board or organization has that type of opportunity to grow. Concerts is an unnecessary addition and would be like creating another students association."

The Senate also voted to reinstate six of the paid staff positions at Point magazine.

Funding has been provided for an editor, art director, advertising sales director, business manager, photography editor and advertising designer.

The associate editor position was eliminated from the Point staff.

Also, the Senate decided to allocate $3,860 to Consumer Services even though the Senate Finance Committee originally had recommended no funding for it.

Minority caucus to complain if progress plan not executed

By Suzanne McElfresh

The ASU Minority Caucus will file a complaint with the federal government if a 30-day deadline for progress on a University affirmative action plan is not met, a caucus member said Monday.

Caucus members asked the Arizona Board of Regents Friday to appoint someone to participate in negotiations between the caucus and the University administration.

"We want a resolution to the problems," said Ernesto Lopez, assistant director of bilingual elementary education. "We want no misunderstanding that we are resolved to see some resolutions to the problems."

"The letter of transmittal to the federal agencies has been prepared and it just needs to be signed."

Lopez said the caucus, which represents the Black and Chicano Faculty and Staff caucuses and the Women's Faculty Association, wanted to make the regents aware of the present "conflict" on campus.

"They needed to be made aware that there is a conflict and that there is a concerned group on campus," he said. "If someone from the board is appointed to the negotiating committee, we're sure we would see more productive meetings than we've had (with the administration)."

The regents' Affirmative Action Committee is in the process of considering the proposal, the regents' attorney said.

"I think the committee will review the matter," Charles Adams said. "To what extent they'll participate and how they'll handle it has not been determined yet."

Lopez said the caucus wants to see the recent athletic department hirings of athletic director, head football coach and six assistant coaches reviewed to determine if any violations occurred.

"If there were violations, they should be corrected," he said. "Secondly, affirmative action plans should be filed for all University colleges and departments with goals and timetables for hiring minorities and women."

The caucus sent a letter March 12 to V. Alonzo Metcalf, vice president of administration, to set up a meeting but no response has been received, Lopez added.

press

Tell me what are the prevailing sentiments that occupy the minds of your young men, and I will tell you what is to be the character of the next generation.

—Edmund Burke

Wanna hear a dirty joke?

Rep. Jim Cooper, R-Mesa, has long been a joke around the ASU campus community, but his education committee is a laugh that can be enjoyed statewide.

Last week Cooper's committee heard testimony on a bill to ban sex education in public schools sponsored by Rep. Marjory Ollson, D-San Manuel.

The bill itself is ridiculous, but more about that later.

The committee hearing was a bigger waste of time than the bill. And Cooper, with grinning self-satisfaction, presided over the whole circus like some Mongol potentate. Sitting in the hearing room was akin to being ringside at a second-rate nightclub's amateur night.

A Pinal County health educator was asked about sources for that county's program. In a list of references the man mentioned the March of Dimes.

"There goes my contribution to the March of Dimes," Cooper remarked, with the aplomb and timing of a burlesque comic.

It got a good laugh from all the concerned mothers in the house trying to protect their children from the evils of sex education. The 'a little knowledge is a dangerous thing' devotees were Cooper's biggest fans.

But Cooper wasn't alone in his attempts for the big laugh.

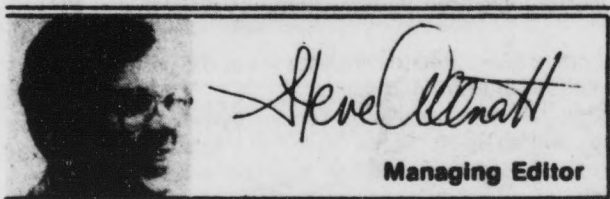

Rep. Jim Skelly, R-Scottsdale even more daringly played to the house. He referred to Dr. Mary Calderone, probably the nation's most respected leader in sex education, as a "madame."

The line didn't get the howling reaction Cooper earned. Perhaps the reference went over the heads of the intended audience, who had no idea who Calderone is, or else the 'keep 'em in the dark' partisans were stunned by the blatant tastelessness of the remark.

Here is a man obviously determined to protect Arizonans from the evils of what he considers immoral knowledge. One would not doubt that his motives are pure. Yet, he has the unmitigated gall to call an un-present opponent a madame. Maybe he went to a sex education class.

Ollson was allowed the chance to shill her bill before and after the testimony of those wishing to express their support or opposition. Cooper treated her courteously, but he had the good sense to gently remind her time was running out when she started enumerating the evils of sex education.

Perhaps her arguments, medieval by the most Victorian standards, were a bit much even for the dairy farmer from Mesa.

Ollson said sex education theorists are secular humanists who, she claims, are dastardly foes of God, families and the American way. Sex education is directly responsible for such things as prostitution, venereal disease, masturbation, homosexuality, teenage pregnancy and oral sex, she said.

It also is interesting to note that while Ollson is trying to protect schoolchildren from such woeful information, she had no compunction about discussing it in front of the children allowed to attend the hearing.

Well, at least we know that our Legislature is trying to protect us from sexual and intellectual contamination. But really, is it any of its business?

This point was brought up by Rep. Larry Bahill, D-Tucson. His statement at the end of the bill's discussion was like a breath of fresh air in the stale nightclub air surrounding Ollson's diatribe.

He said he had learned from some of the testimony that sex education was a communist plot, that it grew hair on your palms and that the missionary position was the only viable method of sexual expression.

He stated that, as usual, Arizona was 20 years behind the times and that other states had finished arguing about such programs years ago.

He then added the committee had little business legislating what individual communities should present in their schools. Three cheers for home rule.

Bahill was the voice of reason among the good taste brigade determined to hang sex education from the nearest tree.

Rep. Juanita Harelson, R-Tempe, whose district includes ASU, is a member of the education committee. She should be commended for her participation. More than any other member of the group she seemed genuinely to listen to the testimony.

After all, that is why the committee was assembled. She did her job, listening to some ridiculous stuff, with professional dignity. Later, she said she was "so annoyed" because the meeting was filled with so much triviality.

She and Bahill were right. Trotting out worn arguments about the evils caused by education and knowledge are trivial and the Legislature has no right reaching its long arm into a community's right to teach whatever it feels is necessary.

Letters to the Editor

We need a change from the sideshow

Editor:

On the last Thursday evening before spring break, I attended a session of the ASASU Senate, the purpose of which was to vote on and approve the 1980-81 budget. I felt it was my responsibility as a concerned student of ASU and its government to share some of my observations with the State Press and the faculty and students of ASU.

I have never in my entire life seen such a disorganized, confused group of student leaders. There was little control of the senators by the executive vice-president, and as the evening wore on I got the impression that many in the senate body were voting on budget proposals in the fashion that one would swat flies.

I must add that it was very frustrating to watch a group of student leaders slash one of the most effective student organizations on campus. Here I am referring to the amendment of the bylaws that demotes the Womens Affairs Board to a committee of the newly-created Human Affairs Board.

Interestingly, the ASASU Senate has created a new board without allocating any funding. In my opinion, the Human Affairs Board, as it stands now, is just another bureaucracy that will do little to speed up the advancement of human rights on this campus.

As president of the Gay Academic Union, I resent the fact that GAU was not consulted about the formation of the Human Affairs Board. It has been through our close association with the WAB that we have been able to keep abreast of some of the outlandish proposals that have come from ASASU in recent weeks.

Obviously, there are some competent members of the senate, and I commend these individuals who tried at the last meeting to keep the circus sideshow antics of their fellow members at a minimum.

I can only urge all students on this campus to watch the upcoming ASASU elections closely, to research the candidates, and most importantly, to vote. We need a change.

David Christian
President, Gay Academic Union

It was all on the level . . .

Editor:

I have been a student at ASU for a number of years. I have lived on and off campus and have had dealings with the campus police.

I personally know some of the fine members of the ASUPD, and can say that I not only appreciate their being here but am proud to know them.

To those of you who think the incident at the

A case of unreasonable search?

Editor:

I am writing this letter in response to the incident that took place at the Matthews Center Art Gallery Feb. 27.

The Fourth Amendment of the United States Constitution states: "the right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers, and effects against unreasonable searches and seizures shall not be violated." Louise Jensen was subjected to a strip search, based merely upon suspicion, that was clearly unreasonable.

The courts have held that searches of individuals are to be considered reasonable if the search is conducted:

—upon issuance of a warrant based upon probable cause, supported by oath or affirmation, and particularly describing the place to be searched and the persons or things to be seized;

—incident to a lawful arrest;

—in response to emergency or exigent circumstances which require immediate police action to protect life or property;

—as a limited weapons search if the officer has reason to believe the person may be armed or dangerous;

Matthews Center art gallery was handled unfairly, remember that the two guards were suspects, and as such were read their rights.

I think the outrage in connection with this incident as well as some others involving the ASU police department is unwarranted.

Andrew C. Geibert
Communication

—upon obtaining proper consent from the individual to be searched.

We can dismiss the first four types of searches, since Miss Jensen's case clearly does not fall under any of these categories.

Miss Jensen states she consented to a search of her pack, but not of her person. She says she was not asked if she could be searched and merely did what she was told to by the ASU police officer.

A consent to search can never be implied either by silence or non-resistance. It must be given voluntarily. The search of Miss Jensen failed to meet any of these standards and was therefore unreasonable under the Fourth Amendment.

The actions of the ASU police officers involved in this incident are repugnant. I only hope the behavior displayed by these officers is not indicative of the department in general. I am confident they will be properly reprimanded by their supervisors, and hopefully given some additional instruction in the laws of search and seizure.

Increased number of injuries results in ramp skating ban

By Kelly Smith

Roller skating on University building ramps and other hazardous areas will be prohibited in an effort to prevent increasing skater and pedestrian accidents.

"We're trying to make adjustments to make roller skating safe for everyone," said George Bays, University police chief. "If future developments indicate a need, I could envision a complete ban of roller skating on campus."

The University Safety Committee recently passed a proposal to post signs banning roller skating at "extremely hazardous areas" and inside all University buildings.

Kevin Cosgrove, campus affairs vice president and committee member, said skaters endanger themselves and others when they skate down the ramps around campus.

"Skating will be banned on the ramps at Gammage Center for the Performing Arts, at the University Activity Center and at Stauffer Hall," Cosgrove said.

The committee agreed not to ban skating on campus at this time, Cosgrove said.

Bays, also a Safety Committee member, said a policy already exists which prohibits skating inside University buildings. The policy will be enforced more rigidly and decals to warn skaters will be applied to all University buildings, he said.

"If skaters trespass and are caught skating in posted areas, they will either be warned, ejected from the premises or could even be cited," Bays said.

Richard Jones, director of the Student Health Center and a committee member, said the number of students being medically treated as a result of skating accidents is increasing.

"We haven't had anything serious yet, but we've definitely had more injuries because there are more skaters," Jones said.

Board of Regents requests fire check

By Jamie Johnson

In an effort to correct numerous fire hazards at Arizona's three universities, the Arizona Board of Regents has requested that a city fire marshal make yearly inspections at each school.

"The big flap was at UA. Some (UA) officials thought they had a number of problems," Regent Ralph Bilby said Monday.

The inspections by a "senior fire marshal from each community" will be conducted within the next two months, he added.

Although a list compiled by Bob Reid, a state fire inspector, was submitted to ASU administrators in October, the 10 priority problem areas have yet to be corrected.

"Mr. (Jack) Penick has the list and he has had it in his possession for some time now," said Reid.

Penick is ASU business affairs vice president.

However, suggestions outlined by Reid include:

—enclosing the stairway in the Language and Literature Building.

—installing fire alarm systems in all dorms and fraternities.

—establishing a second exit at Matthews Hall.

—installing automatic fire extinguishers in five dorm kitchens.

—installing an automatic sprinkler system in the State Press offices in the basement of Matthews Center.

In a January State Press article, Penick said nothing could be done about the fire code violations until the Legislature reviews the Board of Regents budget in May.

ASU to offer Latin American summer schools

The ASU anthropology department is offering two summer field schools in Latin America this summer.

Dr. James Schoenwetter, professor of anthropology, said a four-week session is scheduled at Antigua, Guatemala, and a six-week program is planned at St. Kitts in the Virgin Islands.

The St. Kitts program specializes in Caribbean field archeology featuring excavations at the 17th Century Brimstone Hill Fortress and a survey of various prehistoric sites.

For full details, including tuition, travel costs and other information, contact Dr. Schoenwetter at 965-2930.

vestigations will continue until the conference's semiannual meeting in May. Hallock said if investigations are completed by then, the conference will consider punitive actions.

Regent President William Payne, with unanimous support from the board, instructed Schaefer and Schwada to pursue the matter to ensure equity among the schools.

"This University did what we feel was the right thing to do (to punish the violations)," Schwada added. "I simply want to be sure the other universities look after the standards of the conference."

When violations are discovered, the conference councils, made up of faculty representatives and athletic directors, recommend action to the 10 university presidents.

The presidents have the final word on any disciplinary action.

Schwada said he had no reason to believe the other schools will not be punished if they have actually violated the rules.

"There have been allegations across the country from time immemorial that some universities are sacrosanct," he said. "But I expect to be treated equally."

Schwada said he plans to talk to conference directors and John Harbaugh, this year's conference president.

He said he had already made "discreet inquiries" on his own into the matter before the board brought it up, and the issue "is not new."

Regent Tom Chandler said the board might be overstepping its bounds by assuming the role of "resident cop" for the conference, but Hallock disagreed.

"It's natural that the regents should be concerned," he said.

House supports pot use for cancer patient relief

By Kym Fox

A bill that would allow cancer therapy patients to use marijuana received overwhelming support from the Arizona House of Representatives and should pass the Senate, one of the bill's co-sponsors said Monday.

"I don't believe there were any negative votes (on the House bill)," said Rep. John Hays, R-Yarnell. "It got overwhelming support, and I would assume it will go zipping through the Senate."

The bill is scheduled to appear in a Senate committee next week.

In the 60-member house, there were 54 votes for the bill and six abstentions.

The bill, originally proposed in January by Rep. Tony West, R-Phoenix, would allow cancer therapy patients to use the drug to relieve suffering.

Glaucoma victims and many cancer therapy patients, primarily those using chemotherapy, suffer severe nausea and pain from the therapy, said Dr. Terrance Herman of the UA College of Medicine.

Herman said the proposal is a humanitarian measure.

Marijuana has proven to be the most effective drug to help counter the therapy's side effects.

There are currently 14 states that permit marijuana use for medical purposes.

House members involved with the bill said there were only a few amendments to the original bill.

Rep. Jacque Steiner, R-Phoenix, said the amendments clarify portions of the bill.

Steiner said one of the areas clarified by the amendments was the portion that describes where marijuana will come from and be dispensed.

The UA medical school will be responsible for obtaining and storing the drug, she said. The drug will be obtained through the National Center for Drug Abuse, Steiner added.

Rep. Ralph Soelter, R-Tucson, chaired the health subcommittee that originally heard the bill in February.

"We got rid of some of the objections there (in subcommittee) so it would have an easier time in (the health) committee," Soelter said.

Marijuana-prescribing physicians will be required to make patient progress reports at 60-day intervals, he added.

Soelter said a major addition to the bill was an expiration date set at June 30, 1985.

He said the bill will be reviewed then, and if another drug is available to serve the same purpose, the bill will expire automatically.

Station drops damage claim to speed court proceedings

By Dan Feller

In an attempt to speed up pending trial proceedings, KOY-Radio has withdrawn its claim for monetary damages in its suit over the awarding of ASU broadcast rights.

KOY attorney Andy Gordon said Monday that the dropping of damages from the Maricopa County suit will speed up the litigation by as much as four months.

"By not asking for any damages, the whole trial will be a lot simpler and a lot shorter," Gordon said.

KOY filed the suit in August challenging ASU's awarding of its 1979-80 football, basketball and baseball broadcast rights to KARZ-Radio. It later asked for an unspecified amount of monetary damages.

The station is claiming that the Arizona Board of Regents violated state antitrust laws by forcing competing stations to bid on the rights for all three sports.

KOY originally bid on all football games and some basketball contests but no baseball games. KARZ's bid, which was for less money than KOY's, was for all three sports.

Gary Edens, KOY station manager, said his station wants ASU to rebid the broadcast rights on "an objective basis." The awarding of the football rights should have nothing to do with the bidding on basketball or baseball, he added.

Gordon said it is important to KOY for the litigation to be completed as soon as possible so that if KOY wins, the bidding can be reopened in time for the football season.

The trial is scheduled to begin April 16 in Judge Thomas Kleinschmidt's court.

Alison Swan, attorney for the Board of Regents in the case, said the state opposed KOY's motion to withdraw the monetary damages, but was successful in having the damages dropped "with prejudice," meaning they cannot be later added to the suit.

"We don't want this thing popping up at us again," she said.

ASU's theater department has won great acclaim for this University over the past few months as "The Night of the Tribades" advanced to state and regional competition of the American College Theater Festival.

And now the greatest "Tribades" news of all has come from the good people at ACTF.

"Tribades" has been selected as one of eight college productions to be performed at the Kennedy Center for the Performing Arts in Washington, D. C., in May of this year.

That means that the ASU production is one of the eight remaining plays from among 425 college plays from around the country.

In addition to the national festival honor, individual company members have won scholarships and awards for individual performances and design.

Kelly Jane Thomas claimed a Best Overall Performance distinction from the state ACTF Festival in Scottsdale in December. Thomas and Lisa van der Steur were nominated for an Irene Ryan acting award for scenes performed at that festival. Scenic Designer Denise Burbeck and Costume Designer Kathy Stephenson were also recognized for design excellence.

At the ACTF regional in Fullerton, Calif., Rick Grove and Thomas received $100 acting awards from the Southern California Education Association. Van der Steur was a finalist in the regional Ryan acting competition, and Burbeck won the Kate Drain Lawson Award for Excellence in Scenic Design.

Director William Dobkin; Dr. William Akins, department chairman; and everyone involved with "The Night of the Tribades" have collectively thrust the ASU theater department into the national limelight.

It's a great honor for the department and for ASU.

Now all we need is a real theater.

'The Sea Horse' to Payne

Edward J. Moore's "The Sea Horse," a play that compassionately illuminates the complexities of a man-woman relationship, will be presented at 8 p.m. March 19 to 23 in the Payne Lab School.

The director, Carole Beams, has selected this tender, humorous and sometimes suspenseful drama as her master's thesis production.

The setting is a West Coast bar run by Gertrude Blum (Janice Robillard Vining), where Harry Bales (Rick Grove) spends his time when on shore leave.

The two lonely, abrasive people have enjoyed a physical, just-for-laugh, unsentimental relationship but never have shared their dreams or revealed what has happened to make them what they are today.

As the play opens, Harry has returned from his last voyage with the dream of buying a fishing boat, marrying Gertrude and raising a family. His proposal alarms her and she resists the idea.

Once slim and pretty, she now is encased in fat and has developed a tough facade to protect herself from getting hurt again as she was in an earlier marriage that failed.

Harry and Gertrude engage in a ritual of courtship that is both touching and funny as they fight, make up, fight again, spin dreams and tear them apart.

Assisting in the production are Gail DeBlak, set designer; Bobby Argiro, costume designer; Jane Tomlinson, lighting designer; Tim Kupka, technical director; and Jodi Molever, stage manager.

Beams hopes to complete her master's degree in theater arts with an emphasis in directing and production management this spring.

But stage managing was not always her career objective.

Morton Gould guests with Symphonic Band

Morton Gould, one of America's distinguished composers and conductors, will guest conduct the ASU Symphonic Band in the premier of his 1980 band version of music from "Holocaust" at a concert March 29.

The 8 p.m. program at Gammage center will climax a four-day joint convention of the American and Japanese Bandmasters associations in session

March 26 to 29 on campus.

Gould, who has guest conducted many of the country's major orchestras including the New York Philharmonic and San Antonio Symphony, is a prolific composer who is at home with any form and style of music. He has written for television, Broadway, movies and dance and has transformed American folk music into sophisticated art.

'The Sea Horse'

design at ASU, doing her apprenticeship with a Scottsdale interior design firm, she worked two years with a Phoenix firm. She was laid off during the 1974 recession and decided to return to ASU to get a graduate degree in set design.

She found herself attracted to stage and production management as she assisted theater faculty stage directors, served as stage manager for ASU Dance Theater's Doris Humphrey Festival and toured with that production.

Currently she works as assistant stage manager for Buster Bonoff and as stage manager for Larry Bonoff-produced concerts.

"Stage managing is doing whatever is necessary to get all the equipment and people together at the same time and place in an efficient manner in order to put on a good performance," she explained.

"Whether it involves concerts, theater or dance — and each has its own special requirements — the overall goal is to make everything run smoothly," she said. "It appeals to me as a career because it's challenging to be involved in so many facets of production."

Western Opera to present 'La Traviata'

Opera was the popular entertainment of the 1800s. People went to operas much as they go to movies today — to relax and have fun.

The ultimate composer of that era was Giuseppe Verdi, a music theater genius whose "La Traviata" is probably the most popular of all the 19th century operas with today's audiences.

Western Opera Theater, the touring arm of the renowned San Francisco Opera, will bring that masterwork to Gammage Center at 8 p.m. Friday and Saturday.

The two performances, sung in English and fully staged and costumed, are sponsored by ASU's Lyric Opera Theater.

According to Dr. Kenneth Seipp, LOT producer and orchestra director, "Traviata's" continuing popularity can be attributed to "the good earthy Italian music, so basic in its feeling and quality, and to the excellent characterizations."

"Violetta is so believable, so real, that you almost feel you may have known someone like her. You sense her agonies and admire her courage," Seipp added.

Audience support for WOT has grown steadily over the six years the company has been brought to the Valley by LOT. "Boheme" attracted a good audience two years ago and last year's attendance at "Die Fledermaus" was even better.

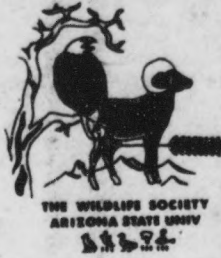

"Add to this the wonderful successes of Texas Opera Theater's "Butterfly" and "Barber" in January and it is evident that professional opera touring companies are filling a need," Seipp said.

Thomas Booth of WOT will conduct the LOT orchestra in "La Traviata" as he did for "Boheme" and "Fledermaus."

FEREYDOUN HOVEYDA'S LECTURE

March 6, 1980

To the best of my assessment, the main objections of those individuals who chose to prevent Dr. Fereydoon Hoveyda from speaking while here on March 3 were that he was criminally responsible for the activities of the Shah and that his intention was to spread propaganda supporting the deposed Shah's regime.

Dr. Hoveyda was gracious enough to deliver his lecture to a tape recorder for me. It is presented here, verbatim and uncut; you may draw your own conclusions.

Wayne L. Smith
Speakers Director
ASASU - SEB

In order to understand the events in Iran in 1978, which ended by toppling down the regime of the Shah, one should put the whole thing into perspective.

In the late fifties and early sixties, all the developing countries were engaging in programs of modernization. And very quickly some of the specialists in modernization affairs of some of these countries hit snags and they had to think over these very programs of modernization.

The main obstacle became the conflict between modernization and tradition. This is not only a problem which arose in our times. It goes back to the nineteenth century and the beginnings of the twentieth century. In order to make it clearer I will give you here an extract from a book written by an Indian modernist, a non-Muslim Indian modernist, of the early years of this century.

After his experience, later on, he wrote the following, and I quote, "In our ardent admiration of Europe, our efforts, however, more or less neglected and ignored the actualities of Indian life and situation. The very exuberance of these efforts was bound to bring on a violent reaction. And it came, presently, in the shape of a strong social and religious revival." End of quotation.

Now, coming to more recent periods I would like to quote here a passage written in 1965 by the head of the planned organization of Indonesia, Mr. Soedjatmoko.

I quote, "In the course of the fifteen years in which the modernizing elite in the new states in South and Southeast Asia has had to deal with the question of economic and social development, it has become quite clear that the traditional value systems operating in this area pose a much more important problem in the modernization process than had been anticipated by most of these modernizers. If it was thought, at first, that the balance of tradition impeding economic and social development could be broken in a frontal attack against tradition; and as the result of the secularization accompanying the process of education, urbanization and industrialization, the realization has come that the relationship between tradition and the modernization process is a much more complex one requiring a clearer understanding."

And Mr. Soedjatmoko goes on saying, "The progressive break-down of traditional social structures, with their established customs, and the difficulty of relating to emerging new ones, have left many in our traditional societies great uncertainty and anxiety leading, in some cases, to a genuine crisis of identity." End of quotation.

So, you see from these quotations that the modernization process is bound to bring reactions. This is absolutely normal because the modernization campaign is seen as a cultural invasion into another cultural pattern.

This is the general background which would make it easier, I hope, for you to understand what happened in Iran.

Now, if we take the Islamic world since the late sixties there is a sort of revival of the desire to return to the principles of Islam in many Islamic countries. Here I can give you an idea: in the late sixties a French journalist visited several Muslim countries of North Africa. A student in Morocco told him, and I quote, "Well, (the) West is in decay — Western philosophers themselves criticize the developments in modern Western countries as too materialistic. So, why should we regress with the West? The best way for us is to cling to our own values."

And now, jumping toward another country in Egypt, a lawyer who was part of the administration but later left, was telling this journalist the following: "Well, some 600 years ago, Islam was a brilliant civilization. Why should decay continue? The Muslim countries can become, again, a great center of literature, arts, sciences and — everything. This would be to the benefit of all humanity." End of quotation.

So what happened in Iran, if we look at it against this background, becomes more understandable. It is not something which happened all of a sudden. It had sources in the old Islamic world and, indeed, in the whole Third World. If the events in Iran came as a surprise to the West, it is indeed because Western observers ignored or neglected these developments which were happening in the Third World.

Now, if we look at the events in Iran specifically against the background I have described, then we see that there are many causes which also played important roles in the downfall of the Shah. I have not enough time here to describe all the causes so I will stress some which, in my opinion, appear as more important than the others. Not really more important, but which would explain the rapidity of the fall of the Shah.

The first such event is a shift in American policy towards Iran, and toward the Shah indeed. I have to explain this more clearly. Up to 1972-73 the Americans were helping the Shah and selling him arms, but, under conditions. The Shah would give them his list, and the Americans would study them to see what really was necessary for the Shah and limit, both in amount and nature, the armament they were selling to Iran.

Then came Mr. Nixon with his idea that the Shah, being the leader of a very stable country, could replace the British in the Persian Gulf and become the policeman of that region of the world. The Shah immediately accepted and President Nixon, shifting the policies of the United States, gave him the right to decide on the amount and the nature of the armaments he would buy from the United States. The Shah was after the most sophisticated arms and, in spite of some criticism in Congress, the American administration allowed the Shah to buy whatever he wanted.

How this shift in American policy influenced the downfall of the Shah — the rapid downfall of the Shah — I would answer by giving two figures which will illustrate my point. Between 1950 and 1971, in twenty-one years, Iran bought from the United States one billion dollars' worth of arms. Between 1972 and 1978, six years only, Iran bought some 20 billion dollars' worth of arms. You can imagine the stress such a mounting figure would have on the economy of Iran.

Another reason why the downfall was so rapid is the quadrupling of the price of oil in 1974. How this had an influence on the rapid downfall of the Shah can also be illustrated by some figures.

If we take the general budget of Iran before 1974 we had a total budget amount of two billion dollars. In 1976 the budget of Iran, two years later, became 50 billion dollars. You can imagine the stress such a pouring of money would have created — not only bottlenecks, but also very rapid, rampant inflation. And also you can imagine what effect such an amount of money put into the economic world would have on corruption, because of all the new projects coming up, all the deals and all the money being there.

And, indeed, corruption ran wild — especially in the royal family and their immediate entourage. The matter has been revealed officially by an inquest of the Congress of the United States in 1976 and 1977. The names of the members of the family of the Shah as well as some of their closest friends came out. There is no reason why these practices were not applied by corporations of other countries in the industrial world.

Another reason was the change in internal policies. By this I mean two facts: one, the way in which the Shah tried to stop inflation; and, two, the way in which he shifted in his repressive policies. This shift in the internal policies of Iran came about towards the end of 1977, actually in mid-summer 1977.

The Shah, very realistically, wanted to bring the inflation down to zero — as if that was possible. He found a Prime Minister whose name is Amuzegar, an American-educated man, who accepted to undertake such a policy. He put a squeeze on all soft-interest loans and cancelled the fundings earmarked for the maintenance of the Mosques in the country, then put a ceiling on rents which stopped all construction in Iran, and measures like that.

These measures hit very badly the middle and lower middle classes; the merchants of the bazaar, the small owners, the people who were not really very rich. You can understand that discontent spread with such measures. But on top of these measures, nothing was done to stop the corruption of the royal family and its entourage and there was a shift in the repressive policies.

Between 1976 and 1978, the intervention of international organizations like Amnesty International, the International Red Cross, the International Jurists and what-not had stopped the tortures in the secret police prisons — the SAVAK, which was created by the Shah, under himself, and which was taking orders directly from him. As these international interventions had a hearing, and as discontent was spreading, (under the influence of Carter's administration's policies based on human rights) dissidents and opponents in Iran were beginning to air their grievances, the Shah thought, with his newly appointed prime minister, that the best way was to be repressive, if I may say so, in the open.

That marked the period when any demonstrations, either in Universities or around Mosques or elsewhere, were facing the police forces and the armed forces and having the police and the army shoot on the people.

Also, in the case of urban guerrillas, that was how the police began to fire on them in the streets and kill them without even trying to capture them.

This new repression was of much more depth than the previous one. Here I should add that the Shah deliberately tried to provoke demonstrations especially on the part of the religious establishment, because the religious establishment was beginning to criticize him inside Iran very harshly.

In the first days of 1978, he (the Shah) had one of the leading newspapers (which were all under censorship) publish a very slanderous article against Khomeini. The reaction was immediate in the city of Qom where some people, some religious people, staged a demonstration. On the order of the Prime Minister, who was obeying the Shah, the armed forces opened fire on the demonstrators, killing some of them. Then the religious establishment in Iran ordered, as it is a usage in Iran, that forty days later people stage a demonstration, a peaceful demonstration, honoring the dead of the first demonstration.

That's how every forty days there were demonstrations, and in each of these demonstrations, the police and the army would open fire; there were deaths, so forty days later, again another demonstration would come until the demonstrations took momentum and became large — very large. Now, that is how the religious flavor came into the revolution.

Another important matter, also, in the rapid downfall of the Shah was a change which happened in his character itself. Between 1964-65 and 1975, the Shah seemed very much in genuine favor of the development program. He was also trying in his foreign policy to establish some sort of balance between his relations with the United States and his relations with the Soviet Union. And also he tried to become more independent by recognizing China before the Americans and things like that.

After taking up his role as policeman in the region of the Gulf, he seemed to lose his wit. He became more and more concerned with his dream of what he called "a great civilization." He had someone write a book for him about this great civilization, the object of which was to say that Iran was progressing so well that in the matter of a decade it would be something like the fifth power in the world, which obviously was just pure imagination. When one looks at this book, one finds out that there is a description of an Iran which doesn't exist, in fact.

Many other causes are there to explain the rapid downfall of the Shah, among them the one-party system he instituted in 1976. I touched upon repression, upon corruption very rapidly, upon the shift in internal policy — then I should touch upon another change in the foreign policy.

All of a sudden, with all the arms and the arsenal he created, the Shah began to extend the perimeter of defense. He sent troops into Oman to fight the revolutionaries there. He got in touch with Somalia, in order to have Somalia quit the Russian camp and join the Western camp. He also helped the new president of the Afghan Republic, Daud Khan, which helped provoke (in the Spring of 1978) the coup d'état of the communists in Afghanistan.

But, most of all, what killed the Shah was his complete disregard for the cultural needs of his people, and his misunderstanding and his misappreciation of the religious feelings of the people.

I won't go back to my previous remarks about this Islamic resurgence, but I have to say that Islamic resurgence, again, is not something particular to Iran. Both before and after Khomeini's movement, this existed and exists and continues to exist in all the Muslim countries in different forms. Going back to the specific case of Iran, one should remember, as I said before, that at the beginning of the movement of opposition was much more "lay" than religious. If sometimes meetings were held in Mosques, it was because under a repressive regime that was the only safe place where people could discuss in the open and air their grievances.

What happened was, at the beginning in 1977, movements based on human rights appeared with people publishing underground letters or open letters that were signed. That was the time when Mr. Bazargan, who later on became the first prime minister of Khomeini, created that group of human rights defense.

After the incidents in early 1978 in Qom, after that famous slanderous article against Khomeini, the demonstrations took on a more religious aspect in that they were honoring the memory of the dead, according to religious habits. By the end of Spring, the name of Khomeini became widespread among the demonstrators. This was due to the fact that Khomeini's speeches against the Shah, both from the past and the present, were circulated on cassettes in Iran.

Then the Shah insisted with the Iraqis to expel Khomeini, who was hiding in exile in Najaf, the holy city of Shiite in Iraq. No Islamic country allowed Khomeini so that Khomeini went to Paris on a tourist visa. In Paris his aides made full use of all the media in order to spread his word. So by October Khomeini became the leader of the Revolutionary Movement in Iran. The recognized leader.

By that time, Fall 1978, things had worsened and the Shah was hesitating between different ways — he changed the government again; he tried to make openings toward the opposition, the "lay" opposition. But by that time it was already too late — all the opponents had formed one movement under the umbrella of religion. This is how the Shah was finally toppled and the Revolution succeeded.

By the sixteenth of January, 1979, the Shah had to leave Iran and a short-lived government was formed by a man from the opposition, Mr. Bakhtiar. The friends of Mr. Bakhtiar rejected him immediately because of his cooperation with the Shah. By the beginning of February Mr. Khomeini came back to Iran and had a huge reception. He appointed Mr. Bazargan as Prime Minister and for a couple of weeks there were two Prime Ministers in Iran. The army then collapsed and Mr. Bakhtiar fled away and that was the end of 25 hundred years of monarchy in Iran and the new leaders took over.

But what they took over was nothing because the army had collapsed, the police had collapsed, the administration had collapsed and everything else. They had to build up from scratch. Here one should try to explain as it appears.

Many people, including the leaders of the new regime recognize, and continue to recognize, that there are — as they put it — several centers of power. We also witness movements on the part of the ethnic minorities. We see that the economy is at a standstill and production is down in the oil fields. We also witness the fact that there are more than three to four million unemployed — how can one explain this?

Most of the people think that it is because the Revolution took place. Yes, in a way this is true. This was a revolution and not a coup d'état. But the real fact, which is behind this, is that the administration collapsed.

In order to understand the importance of this collapse, one should go back to the early sixties. In those days a whole generation of educated Iranians, who had studied in all fields everywhere in the world and who had been back in Iran for almost ten years by that time — a whole generation of Iranians, after the coup d'état of the CIA in 1953 which brought back the Shah to the throne and toppled down the Nationalist government — this whole generation, seeing the future as very bleak — the Americans were helping the Shah and the Soviets were also courting the Shah — it seemed that there was no possibility towards a change to a democratic society.

This generation of educated young people reluctantly accepted to join in the program of reforms presented by the Shah, hoping that by speeding up the material development of Iran they would be able to provoke (from the inside) a change in the political structure of the country. And, indeed, the program of reforms and development provided a basis for a change. But not the one this generation of people were expecting.

In the new structure you are facing a regime which is as intolerant, as you have seen by the demonstration (this evening) of the young students, as intolerant as the previous one. A regime which is also leaning on one man.

What is this Islamic state which the new leaders are trying to put together? It is very difficult to explain. The other day I was reading an article by Mr. Fouad Ajami, who is Director of Middle East Studies at the John Hopkins school of Advanced International Studies in Washington. He had this to say: "No one knows what an Islamic state would or would not look like. Ideas and systems — liberal, Marxist, Muslim, whatever — become a cover for power, an apology for decay. Behind the labels lurk the struggle for power and the fears and ambitions of men."

By the way, Mr. Fouad Ajami is an American of Muslim origin and he is Shiite, indeed. He is originally from Southern Lebanon.

He added this: "Where is the true Islam? In Khomeini's view of things or in Sadat's? In Saudi Arabia or in Qadafi's Libya? Militant Islam is one form. Bourgeois Islam of the Bazaar and the middle classes is another. Reactionary Islam is yet another. Some read Socialism into Islam, and we should not be surprised when their adversaries find, in the same Islam, high regard for private property and inequality."

About the views of Khomeini on what an Islamic government can be, several of his conferences and books have been published in this country and in other countries, so I will not insist. I will say only that the idea behind it is that, in the opinion of Mr. Khomeini, the purity of Islam — which has been deviated from in many manners since the death of the Prophet himself — should be restored. In one of his books, Khomeini says that the Islamic Government existed only a few years in the lifetime of Prophet Mohammed.

So, the question now arises, to know if Khomeini and his followers would be able to succeed where the followers and companions of the Prophet were not able to maintain the Islamic Government of the Prophet. This question cannot be answered. It is difficult to see what the future has in store.

A Shiite American, Mr. Fouad Ajami I quoted before, has the following to say, and I quote from an article published in The New York Times on Sunday, March 2 (1980): "The Shah devoured his liberal opponents. He left no tradition of civic responsibility, no institutions, only a legacy of hate. Into the vacuum he left behind, Messianism, Khomeinism and social revolution came together in a temporary alliance. The hope, if any, for Iran lies in liberal middle-class Nationalism riding itself of the rule of the clergy and finding its own path somewhere in the middle of the utopia of the Asian Germany, which was the utopia of the Shah, and that of Islamic return."

"Sooner or later," continues Mr. Ajami, "the claims of Islam will wear thin and Iranians, and other Muslims, will realize that we and they are all bereft of our utopias, forced to find something minimally just and workable. Our imagined utopias turn out to be the source of much of our misery. We never quite approximate them and we feel all the more diminished for failing to replicate the glory of our ancestors or the beauty of our blueprints." End of quotation.

I don't know if I can follow Mr. Ajami in what he says, but what is sure, in my opinion is that sooner or later any government — no matter under what label it goes — would have to face real problems in Iran. And not only in Iran, in all the developing countries. No matter who would be in charge, there are problems which are coming up. These problems, as I have said, are not only the problems of Iran.

Two of them are very important. One is the population growth, the rate of which in Iran and many other countries in Asia and in the developing world, is 3 percent. This means that the population of Iran by year 2000 will have doubled, going from 35 million to 70 million. This brings, certainly, the second problem which is the problem of feeding these people. We know that the land and water resources of Iran are extremely limited.

Beside that, experts like Mesarovich and Pestel, have calculated that in the developing countries, which are mostly in the sub-tropical and tropical region, it is impossible to insure local food for everybody — especially with the development of population growth. So, some solution to this problem should be found. And these solutions can only come through technology and international cooperation.

No religious precept, be it of the Qur'an, of the Gospel or the Bible, have solutions for these problems. The government which would take over in Iran would have to face the same options the Shah and the generation of technocrats faced in the early sixties. The option of industrialization in order to have enough exportation, enough resources to support the people. Once the sources of oil are depleted, the country will need other resources in order to insure a decent standard of living for its expanded population.

There is no other way than to industrialize. In short, whatever form of government takes place, they would have to come, more or less, to the same options as in the previous regime. This is the only thing which can be said for sure.

Certainly, the options being the same doesn't mean that the structures and the institutions must be the same. This option of industrialization can be taken into a free-enterprise system, or into a state-enterprise system, into a Socialist way, into an Islamic way or whatever. The important thing is that whoever is in charge would, sooner or later, have to face these real problems — not only in Iran but everywhere. That is the only thing one can say about the future, in my opinion.

Now, as a way of conclusion, I would like to refer to a French philosopher, who died a couple of years ago and who was a great scholar of Iranian Shiites and mysticism. "The whole events in Iran and many other events taking place in the region have to do," as I showed in my preliminary remarks, "with the shock between modernism and tradition." Indeed, there is a fight of the population of many developing countries for a return, and if not a return, for a revival for a respect of their traditions.

This French philosopher's name is Henri Corbin. He wrote many books about Iranian Islam, about Iranian mysticism, and he, indeed, was a very very profoundly religious man himself. He had this to say about tradition, tradition that he liked and he favored: I quote, "Tradition remains alive only through a perpetual spiritual revival. Traditional spirit remains a spirit only while being a creative spirit. In the absence of such a creative spirit, tradition is no more than a funeral procession." End of quotation.

Thank you very much.

Mullins said there will be national coverage from the wire services.

Head baseball coach Jim Brock said the budgetary changes shouldn't be a factor with the baseball program.

"Our budget is already cut to the bone," Brock said.

Athletic Trainer Troy Young, who said he had to put off buying any equipment because of no money, said the department is letting him buy emergency items without which the training office couldn't function.

"ASU is one of few major universities without rehabilitation facilities," Young said. "I asked for $30,000 to purchase equipment last year, but that was

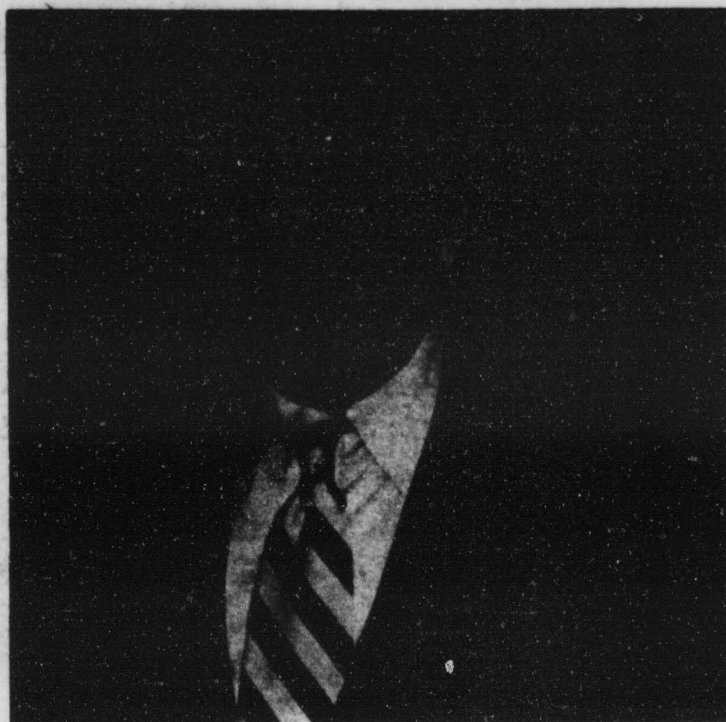

Kearney said, "We're predicting a break-even budget for 1980-81, but it's a conservative prediction based on the level of support. If we get extra help in support we could be a lot better off."

Kearney said a lot depends on what happens with attendance in both football and basketball.

Associate Athletic Director John Wadas called inflation one of the main problems now facing the athletic program.

"There's been a 30 percent increase in travel costs just this year," Wadas said. "We expect a 20 percent increase next year. Student wages will be increased because we're going to minimum wage."

Wadas also said that ticket price increases for football, basketball and baseball games is due mainly to inflation, but added that the double salaries and other expenditures this year have contributed to the increases.

ASU athletic Director Dr. Joe Kearney faces a major financial restoration program in the athletic department.

"Saying that ASU's athletic department will suffer a $100,000 deficit was taken out of context," Wadas said of newspaper reports last week saying that the University is facing financial difficulties. "We've never had a budget deficit, and we're not going to have one this year. It's just a deferment of $100,000 until the beginning of the next fiscal year."

President John Schwada said he could not comment on whether he would approve the ticket price increase because he hadn't seen the recommendation yet, but added he felt the overall budget amendment proposed by the athletic department should prove effective.

Kearney, who still is looking for an assistant athletic director to serve as an "executive capacity to handle day-to-day ongoing operations," said he has met with Schwada on the financial situation and "things are going smoothly."

"It was just a normal meeting between the departments," Kearney said. "There are no problems, we're simply working together to solve the problems."

Kearney said he had between 70 and 80 applications for the associate director's job, and there were no leading candidates at this point. The application deadline has been extended until March 21.

Devils take golf tourney by 18 strokes

Jeannette Kerr and Kelly Fuiks placed first and second to lead the ASU women's golf team to first place in the Betsy Rawls Invitational Sunday by 18 strokes.

The Devils finished with a three-day total of 894. Texas was second with 912. Florida, Southern Methodist and UA finished third through fifth respectively.

Kerr finished with a 222, one stroke in front of Fuiks.

Invitation to apply for

STATE PRESS EDITORSHIP

The ASU Student Publications Advisory Board is now soliciting applications for the State Press editorship for the Fall Semester 1980.

Applicants for the position of editor:

- must have a cumulative grade index of 2.20 or better;
- must have either two semesters' service on the staff of the State Press or responsible editorial experience with a commercial, college, or university newspaper; and
- must have been a full-time student at ASU for at least the two consecutive semesters prior to applying.

Candidates must also:

- submit at least two letters of recommendation from university faculty members and/or professional journalists;
- list on the application form the titles of all journalism courses completed and the grades earned in those courses;
- submit at least two examples of a news story, feature story, or editorial written for the State Press or another newspaper; and describe on the application form the functions and responsibilities of previous positions held on the staff of the State Press or other newspapers.

Candidates must pick up at the State Press office, Matthews Center North Basement, application forms. The completed forms must be typewritten.

Applicants for the position of editor must be available for one or more interviews by the Board between 3:00 and 6:00 p.m. on the day specified for selecting the editor.

The Board will interview candidates for the Fall Semester editor (1980) on Friday, April 11, 1980.

The deadline for receipt of applications will be Thursday, March 27 at 4 p.m.

Applicants need not be journalism majors; candidates from all disciplines are invited.

Devils end unforgettable season

By Dave Nelbergall

For a supporter of ASU athletics, the football season of 1979 was unforgettable for all the wrong reasons. But Ned Wulk's basketball team did its part to make the winter months a little more pleasant — and also unforgettable.

The Sun Devils' 22-7 record was their best since 1974-75 when Wulk's team went 25-4 and was within one game of the final four.

The success of this year's team came as a surprise, mostly because of the disappointing 16-14 mark of last season. The 1979-80 Sun Devils held together where last year's version fell apart.

"The kids had mutual respect for each other as a team where they didn't last year," Wulk said. "They had a realization of what they needed to do. Everyone improved in a lot of categories."

Wulk had words of praise for each of the key members of this year's team.

"Alton Lister turned his conditioning problem around completely to the point where he can play 25 or 30 minutes a game. That alone has made him a better player."

"Kurt (Nimphus) was named the team's most improved player the last two years in a row but he obviously improved twice as much this year as he did the other years. People thought he had a bad game if he didn't score 30 points, but he did a lot of things besides scoring points for us."

"Sam Williams' biggest improvement was his ability to shoot from the outside and play the forward position. He needed a year to get used to playing without his back to the basket. His slamming and jumping ability was a turn-on for the fans."

"I have more respect for Johnny Nash's position on the team than anyone else. Coming off the bench is a tough thing to do and takes a lot of sacrifice both mentally and physically."

"Fat (Lever) started slowly but came through in the tough task of running the club. It's a tough job to deal out assists on an even basis and he was given the toughest defensive assignments as well."

"Then Byron Scott had an exceptionally fine freshman year. He had bad moments both physically and mentally but that was because of his being a freshman as much as anything else."

"Paul Williams didn't get as much playing time as he or us would have liked. He has tremendous talent and just needs to improve his defensive ability against the quicker guards and also his rebounding strength as a big guard."

"The rest of the players — Pierre Bressant, Tom Kuyper, Jim Butts, Brent Jones — all contributed at different times during the year."

"Then you have to look at the contributions that came out on the practice floor day in and day out."

The Devils ended their season with an 89-75 loss at the hands of Ohio State in the West Regional quarterfinals in the Activity Center. The loss came as a disappointment to Wulk, the team and the fans who had bigger things in mind.

"We were beaten by a better team," Wulk said. "They just played tremendous against us. We never got into the game enough to execute the things we had planned to, and it was a bitter disappointment along those lines."

The Devils had to contend with 25-point performances from Buckeyes Herb Williams and Kelvin Ransey. The loss to Ohio State came two days after ASU had started the NCAA tourney with an impressive 99-71 win over Loyola Marymount.

No Sun Devil played more than 21 minutes in that game and everyone played at least three.

But with 1979-80 history, Wulk and assistants Paul Howard and Jim Newman are hot on the recruiting trail attempting to insure that Sun Devil success on the basketball floor will not be just a memory after next season.

"We have some specific needs," Wulk said. "We need a replacement for Kurt and some of the things he did as a big forward and as a backup center."

So in the season when UCLA had its worst finish ever in the conference behind Oregon State, ASU and Washington State, the Bruins still find themselves in the familiar arena of the final four.

"If you pick as many as 48 teams for the NCAA tournament, the results should not come as a complete surprise to anyone," Wulk said.

Iowa, Louisville, Purdue and UCLA make up one of the most surprising final fours in recent years, but Wulk doesn't feel that 48 teams is too many for the post season tournament.

"More schools should be able to benefit from the enormous amount of revenue taken in by the tournament. It helps solidify the programs and puts the coach, the school and the program on a steadier basis," he said.

Sun Devil athletes have busy break

ASU javelin thrower Mike Giltner placed 2nd in the event in Saturday's triangular win over New Mexico and NAU. The meet was also scored as a pair of duals, with the Sun Devils beating NAU 110-44 and New Mexico 111-38.

Spring Break in Review

BASEBALL-ASU moved up from 10th to 2nd place in last week's Collegiate Baseball newspaper's ratings.

Fresh off a sweep of Stanford; including a 34-2 rout in the opener, the Devils ran into a buzz-saw in Berkeley.

The Bears took the series 2 games to 1 knocking the Devils out of first place in the Southern League.

Alvin Davis was the team's leading hitter for the week with 10 hits and 9 RBIs.

WRESTLING-Dan Severn lost an overtime match in the 190-lb class in the NCAA Wrestling Championships finals.

The team finished fifth overall in the competition, its highest finish ever in the nationals.

GYMNASTICS-Assistant coach Kurt Thomas scored a perfect 10 in the finals of the horizontal bars competition to capture the men's overall title in the American Cup gymnastics championships.

The night before the finals, Thomas set three meet records with a 9.85 on the pommel horse, 9.80 for the floor exercise and a 9.84 for the best overall score.

TRACK-The men's and women's track teams defeated UA 94-60 and 88-77, respectively. Bruce Heide led the men's team with a throw of 60-4 and 1/2 in the shot put for a personal best and the victory.

Colleen Reinstra leaped 6-2 for a school record in the high jump despite a leg injury.
