Valuable class time lost, professor says

Computer slip leads students on wild chase

By Glen Creno

A foul-up in a new campus-wide computer system left throngs of students searching for classes in incorrectly scheduled rooms this week.

Crowds of students filled the main lobby of the Language and Literature Building, where revised class schedules were posted earlier this week.

The mix-up was caused when ASU converted from a Univac to an IBM computer system, according to Ron Winterhof, an assistant registrar and data programmer.

Winterhof said the problem was "something that couldn't be explained in five minutes" because the complexities in installing a new system are "vast."

"It was an oversight," he said. "There was much detailed work to be done in a short time."

"It's a miracle the computer center got done in time."

Winterhof said part of the problem was centered in phase two of the registration process. He said students were asked to drop the last number of a four-digit class code on schedules distributed in the spring.

Marvin Fisher, the chairman of the English department, said he "couldn't begin to estimate" how many students were affected by the scheduling error, which involved English and foreign language classes.

"It would go into the thousands," he said.

Winterhof, who is responsible for programming class schedules into the ASU computer system, refused to confirm or deny a programming mistake had caused the problem.

Madelyn Wright, an academic scheduling registrar who coordinates room assignments for classes, said she believed her part of the scheduling had gone "smoothly."

"We haven't had anything serious take place that's not normal routine every semester," she said. "It's been a very smooth semester for us — the best yet."

However, freshman psychology major Glen Stanford said the scheduling error was "confusing."

"I've already missed one class," he said. "I haven't been able to find it for the last two days. Nobody else knows where it is either."

Stanford also said he had to fix his schedule in drop/add because of the mix-up.

Other students waiting in the lobby said they got around the problem by sitting-in on classes they had not registered for.

"Every English 101 class uses the same syllabus so I went upstairs, found one and sat down. I don't think I'll be really very far behind," one student said.

He added that he thought there would be "a problem" with upper-division courses because "they get down to business on the first day."

Fisher said the error caused many of the English professors to lose carefully-budgeted class time.

"The first couple of meetings were wasted," he said. "I hope we never have a foul-up like this again."

Winterhof said he was "unaware" of any discrepancies that had scheduled two classes for one room simultaneously.

He added that all schedules are reviewed by the registrar's office and the various departments before they are approved.

"There could have been some (scheduling errors) that slipped by," Winterhof said.

"We've had problems — no doubt about it."

Winterhof said he realized there was an "inconvenience to some of the students" but that the new computer system was more efficient and had done a "fantastic" job overall.

"We're trying to respond to students in a much more timely manner," he added.

"It hasn't been an easy thing to go to the new system," he said. "These problems do happen."

Aside from being inconvenient for students and faculty, the ASU Fire Marshall also was "slightly concerned" about the situation.

"It's not that much of a problem," Andy Anderson said. "If the fire alarm were to go off all the people would leave the lobby. The people in the upper floors would be able to get out."

"It's a mess now, but it's only a temporary thing."

POLISH STRIKERS CLAIM TRIUMPH

GDANSK, Poland — Polish strike leaders claimed victory on their major demand — independent trade unions — in negotiations Wednesday. If true, the agreement could signal the end of Poland's worse labor crisis in a decade and give workers in a Soviet-bloc state their own unions for the first time ever. At about the same time in Moscow, the official Soviet news agency issued a tough commentary attacking "anti-socialist" elements within Poland that it said were striving to push the Soviet ally "off the socialist road." But there was no overt sign that Moscow was planning any intervention in the Polish crisis.

ETHIOPIAN TROOPS INVADE SOMALIA

NAIROBI, Kenya — Ethiopian infantry forces backed by combat aircraft invaded northwestern Somalia early

Wednesday and fighting was in progress along a 27-mile front, Somalia's Defense Ministry claimed. The announcement, distributed in neighboring Kenya by Somalia's national news agency, said the invasion started shortly before dawn when Ethiopian infantry units crossed the border and Ethiopian warplanes bombed at least five towns in the northwestern region of the northeast African country.

U.S. AMBASSADOR TO LEBANON ATTACKED

BEIRUT, Lebanon — Gunmen fired machine guns and a rocket-propelled grenade at a three-car convoy carrying U.S. Ambassador John Gunther Dean on Wednesday, but Lebanon's state radio said Dean escaped unharmed. Reliable sources said unidentified ambushers attacked the ambassador's convoy as it was leaving his summer residence near the presidential palace.

NEW LUKEMIA TEST DEVELOPED

BOSTON — For the first time, a new test allows doctors to accurately predict when patients treated for leukemia will relapse and suffer a new bout of the disease. The test, given to people whose leukemia is in remission, spots cancerous cells in the bone marrow before they have multiplied and spread the disease throughout the blood stream.

BOMB EXPLODES IN TAHOE CASINO

STATELINE, Nev. — A bomb placed in a Lake Tahoe casino with an extortion note demanding $3 million, exploded Wednesday with a loud blast and columns of smoke. There were no immediate reports of injuries but damage at Harvey's Hotel-Casino were extensive, police said. The blast was heard at 2:43 p.m. Arizona time, ending a tense stalemate that had lasted since the bomb was found in the hotel early Tuesday.

Retarded couple fight to win back daughter

EAST DETROIT, Mich. (AP) — Stephanie Diesing was 3 months old when police found her, alone in an East Detroit house except for a watchful dog. Her parents, both mentally retarded, had gone to a dentist appointment.

The child, suffering from malnutrition, was ordered placed in the care of her paternal grandmother. That was 11 months ago.

On Wednesday, David and Dorothy Diesing kept another appointment: They went to court to ask a judge to give them back their daughter along with a new chance to prove themselves as parents.

Before the hearing, their attorney, John Devers Jr., had told a reporter: "They're afraid that Stephanie doesn't know them, that they will be strangers in her life. They have become very concerned about the time Stephanie has been out of their home."

In a 15-minute juvenile court meeting, Macomb County Probate Judge Robert Spier extended the hearing an additional 90 days. He said a final decision on Stephanie's custody would be issued when the Diesings have completed an American Red Cross child care course and resolve a dispute with their landlord.

Last October, Spier removed the child from the Diesings' care on a negligence charge. Officers had found the child after the Diesings' dentist, worried when he saw his patients arrive together but without their baby, inquired of her whereabouts. Told she was home, freshly diapered and guarded by the family dog, he alerted police.

Both David, 30, and Dorothy, 37, spent much of their lives in state institutions and other supervised facilities for the mentally retarded. They left state supervision in 1976. On Christmas Eve of that year, they married.

Each has held jobs in the past but they are on public assistance now, Devers said.

Stephanie recently celebrated her first birthday. Her latest checkup indicated that she was growing normally and was ahead of her age group mentally. Since October, she has been living two miles away from her parents — at the home of David's mother, Bernice Ferry.

According to Devers, Ferry initially resisted working with the couple — he said the Diesings told him she had opposed their decision to have a child — but that their visits with Stephanie are now averaging about one a week.

"They've begun to re-establish contact with the child and there's beginning to be a meaningful interplay," he said.

Ferry said Stephanie is in good health. "She is doing so good. I don't want to drag her through this again."

ASASU cards not honored

By Rich Palmay

Approximately 20,000 discount cards distributed by Associated Students' office of Consumer Services are a mystery to many of the businesses listed.

"I haven't heard anything about it," said Sharon Ullom, an employee at Tempe art supply store Erickson and Crew. "Nobody here has seen it either."

The wallet-sized cards, distributed on campus last March, were provided free to ASASU by the E.W. Ward Marketing and Advertising Co. of California.

Each of the shops paid $129 to E.W. Ward to be listed on the card. The company sent the cards to ASASU to be distributed on campus.

Twenty-eight of the 38 businesses listed on the card offer some kind of discounts to ASU students.

However, employees at five of the 12 stores contacted by the State Press did not remember the card. Workers at four establishments remembered the card outright, and employees at three other stores recalled the deal only after being reminded.

The Chris-Town and Metrocenter locations of The Athlete's Foot, were not honoring a $2 discount promised on the card "due to a lack of communication," a bookkeeper for the company said.

"The manager of the Tempe store took this on and didn't tell anyone," Bonnie Norris said.

Norris said that the Athlete's Foot stores would begin honoring the cards immediately.

The managers of Lion's Den Haircutters and The Flower Children remembered signing up for the program, but said the customer response has been minimal.

"We haven't gotten hardly any response," said Marsha Palmer of the Flower Children. "Maybe one or two cards."

Ellen MacFarland, director of ASASU Consumer Services, said she could not explain the problems.

"Possibly because it happened in March and if students haven't used the cards, they (businesses) forgot about it," she said.

"It seems funny though that people would spend money and forget about it."

Cheryl Hutton, sales manager for E.W. Ward, said the responsibility for the success of the discount program lies with the school.

"It's the school's job to see that the people who go there get the card," she said. "We provide the service free for the people (ASASU). The school takes all the credit."

However, Hutton said the company had sent an inexperienced sales staff to do the work at ASU.

"Sometimes they go in and they don't know what they are doing," she said.

The company's president, E.W. Ward, said the card has been more successful at firms and plants rather than colleges.

"We've had more success at plants because people who work for a living are more in tune to the value of a dollar," he said.

"They (college students) take it lightly for some reason. I don't know what it is.

"I'm not happy about it (lack of success), but it's not new news to me. We've seen it at other schools," he added.

Don't play for safety. It's the most dangerous thing in the world.

Can a stadium be ineligible?

The stadium is falling! The stadium is falling!
No! Say it ain't so!
It's not exactly front-page news yet, but it's big news to me. Cracks were detected last spring in sections of the $11 million extension added to the big boy three years ago.

The problem has been predictably played down by University officials — they won't even speculate on the possibility of a cancellation.

A committee of architects and engineers will meet on Friday to hash out the facts of the case, and hopefully decide on a plan of action.

The possibility of a dark, crumbling Sun Devil Stadium Sept. 13 has not exactly been the subject of much concern here or anywhere else. The results aren't in, I'm sure they won't be for awhile, and the stadium still looks like it will hold 70,000 football enthusiasts.

What's the big deal? A little dirt settles, life goes on.

Experts are in charge of the situation. These people are engineers.

Anyway, ASU officials have poo-pooed the possibility of a "crack-out" so far, so I can almost guarantee that all will be well between the buttes next month.

But.

What if the committee decides that the ol' ball field is unsafe at any speed?

No Sun Devil Football! Ask any Valley sportscaster, that's the only game in town!

Where will all the Winnebagos go? What will Saga foods do with all the hot dogs that were cooked in April? What will become of the huge inventory of Bacardi Rum pints now percentage-wise anyway, so a few thousand students will have to enterprise an evening elsewhere.

The football team — the actual participants in the delayed contest — will welcome the extra practice time.

The band will have the night off, too, which is a shame.

Those Winnebagos, however, will be a different story. The Horror! The Horror! Hordes of polyester-clad boosters will wheel those metal monsters across state lines in search of a suitable athletic contest. Arizona license plates will be spotted on the outskirts of a hundred college towns.

"It's Saturday night and I wanna see some FOOTBALL," some will say as they steer to the stadium anyway.

The older Winnebagos will pull out of driveways instinctively, without anyone inside, just to make the trip and pal around with their old Winnebago buddies. They'll talk about the new country swing, Ronald Reagan and maybe shed a tear over old times.

Winnebagos, especially the older ones, would not be able to adapt to a fall without football. After a few Saturdays of making that memory-filled trip, the glow would fade.

There would be hundreds of destitute Winnebagos, lost and all alone.

That would be the real tragedy of an ineligible Sun Devil Stadium.

waiting in Tempe liquor stores?

Well, ASU students will be the group least affected by a cancellation. From the way things looked Wednesday, students will still be sorting out class schedules during the second week of September. Why watch football when your entire future depends on finding an English class?

Student attendance at games is traditionally low.

Will someone define Chicano?

Editor:

I am new to Arizona. I read in the State Press that there is an "ASU Chicano Faculty and Staff Association," but no one can define "Chicano" for me.

Some say it is anyone with parents who were Mexican. Others (say) that it is anyone of Mexican descent, no matter how far back. (Incidentally, there are those of Mexican descent who resent the word "Chicano.") Some say that you have to "look" Mexican, whatever that means. Then there are those who say it is anyone with a Spanish name who wants to claim to be a Chicano. These last don't say what would happen to a Peruvian or Spaniard who did so claim and was then found out to be a phony.

Could someone knowledgeable define "Chicano" for the record? If there is going to be affirmative action, how will affirmative actioners know whom to recruit?

And lastly, can anyone who is sincerely sympathetic join a Chicano group, or are these groups racially and ethnically bigoted, weeding out applicants without the proper background and credentials? Whatever those credentials turn out to be, of course.

Traffic light is no help at all

Editor:

For the past two semesters, I have used the bike trail along College Avenue in order to get to school. Late in the (1979) fall semester, the city of Tempe installed a traffic light at the intersection of College and Alameda in order to ease the traffic flow. Instead of easing the flow, the traffic light has served to congest it.

Frequently, I have seen the light turn red on College in order to allow invisible motorists to continue on Alameda. Even when there are cars and bicyclists waiting to cross College, quite often they could have crossed the intersection quicker if there had been a stop sign there instead of a traffic signal.

I hope the next time the city wants to erect a costly traffic light, they will study the traffic flow at the intersection and determine the necessity of a light before deciding to spend taxpayers' money.

Search

ASU to fill Affirmative Action void

By Pat O'Connell

Amid lobbying from minority and women's groups, the ASU provost is gearing up to begin a nationwide search this fall for a new head of affirmative action.

Provost Paige Mulholland said applications for the job will be accepted as soon as a committee is set to determine the job's qualifications.

"It's possible we could have someone employed by the late fall semester," Mulholland said, "but there's no search committee yet formed. I have visited with a number of different individuals recommending a national search."

Mulholland said after hiring guidelines have been established, advertisements will be circulated in educational periodicals and at universities across the country.

The position opened Aug. 1 when Anthony Martinez, the former assistant provost for affirmative action and director of minority affairs, left ASU for a similar job at the University of California at Berkeley.

Martinez' assistant Irene Woz took over last week as acting director, the fourth person to run the office in the past three years.

Minority Caucus member Ernesto Lopez said his group was concerned about the "high turnover" in the job and would like to see someone willing to make a long term commitment to the office.

"The kind of thing we're looking for is someone who's worked at a university this size before; someone who is willing to make more than a one year commitment," he said.

The Women's Faculty Association is seeking an appointment of the first female affirmative action director, according to Dr. K. B. Valentine, president of the WFA.

"If it's a minority woman, that's our first choice," she said. "There have been three male Chicanos in a row."

"It's about time we got a woman in there."

Valentine said she feels Woz, who is a lawyer, is "very qualified" because the job requires knowledge of the law.

Valentine said the WFA was specifically looking for a new director who would actively promote equal hiring and stop discrimination before it happened.

"You can't just punish people for not doing it (hiring equally)," she said, "you have to reward them for doing it."

Valentine said she has been asked by Mulholland to choose two women to sit on the search committee.

Both the Minority Caucus and the WFA have asked Mulholland to strengthen the affirmative action program by enlarging its staff.

Mulholland said a decision would be made about increasing the affirmative action staff after the new director is hired. He added someone would be brought in to help Woz on "an acting basis."

"There are individuals and groups who would like to see a substantial increase in the staff of affirmative action," Mulholland said. "I doubt we'll be doing anything dramatic to hire a bunch of new people to serve in secondary roles."

Mulholland said he will be adding a new affirmative action recruiter from the graduate college to the program.

In addition, a new departmental reporting system will be formed to list progress made in the hiring or recruiting of minorities, he added.

Solar workshops schedule revised

A revised schedule for solar water heating workshops has been released by ASU's College of Architecture.

There will be no workshop the weekend of Sept. 5-6. Workshops are tentatively scheduled on weekends throughout the remainder of the year.

Workshop tuition is $57 per person, but participants may bring family members to assist them. The necessary hardware costs $415.

Participants are asked to register in advance.

For more information, contact Mike Marinello at 967-6659 or the College of Architecture at 965-3216.

Cheerleading tryouts for basketball to begin

A workshop and tryouts for the selection of the 1980-81 Sun Devil basketball cheerleaders and Sun Devil mascot will begin Wednesday.

Candidates must be currently enrolled undergraduate students at ASU carrying at least seven on-campus semester hours.

In addition, all candidates must have completed at least eight to 10 hours of college work at ASU or another college or university with at least a 2.2 cumulative grade index for all college work completed.

The program is open to both men and women.

At least 12 members will be chosen for the squad with an equal number of men and women.

The workshop and tryout schedule, eligibility requirements, general information, and applications are available at the MU Information Desk and in Matthews Center room 138.

Business students upset

Dean likes drop/add

By Keith Jennings

Although the dean of the ASU Business College said that the college's drop/add policy is "working smoothly," several students who tried to add business courses Wednesday did not agree.

Dr. Glenn Overman said, "I've been touring the halls talking to students and faculty members, and the policy seems to be working well."

But Mark Cooper, a junior business administration major, said "the system just seems to shift the lines around."

"I got my petitions in early on Monday, but I still had to stand in line to add the course after my petition was approved."

Craig Grossman, a senior marketing major, said that no matter how well the policy is working, "it just isn't right."

"Students should be able to choose their instructors and class times," he said. "Somebody shouldn't be telling us who, when and where we take our courses."

"They're just restricting our freedom."

The drop/add procedure, which was first used last spring, requires students that want to add a business course during late drop/add to fill out petitions stating why they want to add the course.

Petitions are submitted to the department chairmen for approval, and if the reasons for adding are deemed "meritorious," the course may be added if there are openings.

"Meritorious" reasons include conflicting work schedules and seniors needing a class to graduate, but not switching sections for convenience or because a student wants a different instructor.

Students can appeal rejected petitions on the final day of drop/add.

The policy fell under fire when Stephen Clark, a member of the Business Administration Council last year, complained that students did not have any say in its implementation.

"The council didn't even vote on the proposal. Jaynan Clark (last year's council president) just went along with it."

Clark could not be reached for comment.

Sheila Madden, a sophomore business administration major said the petition system still is a problem.

"This is the second time I've been through drop/add with the petition system and it doesn't seem to work too well," she said.

She added that although her petition was granted, she had to stand in line for four hours to get in the class, and still was not sure she would get it.

Overman defended the policy, however.

"We're not here to go through the whole process again, we're here to take care of those situations where there are hardships and problems."

He said the system now enables the department officials to take time with each student's case.

"Otherwise we'd have tremendously long lines and would not be able to give individual consideration to everyone," he added.

The president of the BA College Council agreed that the system is needed and works well.

"We all have to realize that there are 10,000 business majors plus all of the other students on campus that take business courses," Lisa Whitehead said. "This is the best way to make sure that the people who need the classes get them."

Overman said the procedure keeps people from making unnecessary schedule changes.

"The policy applies only to late drop/add," he added. "At this time our flexibility is extremely limited, and we can't have people switching courses just because they feel like it."

Overman admitted that some problems exist in the system, but that the college tries to work those out.

"They (the students) can come and talk to us anytime, but right now we want to take care of those with genuine problems."

He said that those that "just want to come in and kind of shop around because they don't like morning classes" can appeal petitions between 2 and 6 p.m. today.

"We're going to take care of those with documented needs, but we must have the time to review those reasons."

"That's why we have the system."

PR internships to be offered

Several paid internships in public relations are available for fall semester through the department of Journalism and Telecommunication.

Students are awarded three credit hours for eight hours of professional public relations activity with a recognized firm or institution in the Valley area. The internships are available for students with at least a 2.75 cumulative grade average who are seniors or second semester juniors majoring in the department.

Students may apply before the end of the drop/add period by securing a form from the Journalism and Telecommunication office in Stauffer Hall room 231.

Marijuana law up for petition

By Phomia Sliman

Supporters of the move to decriminalize marijuana will be smoking out signatures from ASU's campus again this fall.

Mark Downs, director of the Students for Decriminalization of Marijuana, said that since the initiative failed to get on the November ballot, the group will file another petition application immediately following the election.

The initiative is for a law making possession of either an ounce or less of marijuana or a maximum of five live plants a non-criminal offense. The maximum punishment would be a $50 fine, and the offense would not appear on the violator's record.

Downs, an ASU senior in sociology, said a Tucson group started the initiative after the 1978 state election, and Phoenix did not become involved until January 1979.

"Last time, Phoenix didn't start quite early enough to get the job done," Downs said. "This could have been part of the problem. Plus, we tion to the initiative. Even the churches wouldn't oppose it," he said. "I think the reason we failed to get enough signatures by our July 3 deadline is because of people's laziness. No one seems to want to get involved."

Kromko helped the Tucson and Phoenix groups with their campaign last time but said if he were to do it again he would want "a lot more commitment."

Downs said last year's campaign received quite a bit of publicity, and the group now has nearly 200 volunteers.

"This coming year we are shooting for 70,000 signatures because there are always some invalid ones on the petition," he said.

Only signatures from registered voters are valid.

He said this time the students will be working with a deputy registrar who can register people to vote right on the spot.

Downs added volunteers will be able to cover a greater number of places to also had a very small group of people working for us here.

"In order to get the petition on the ballot we had to have about 54,000 valid signatures, but we were a few thousand short."

According to Rep. John Kromko, D-Tucson, there was no real opposition to their campaign last time, just not enough people willing to support it.

"There is no active oppos-make it easier for people to sign.

"One of the best places to get signatures is at concerts," Downs said. "Last time we started going there but not until it was too late to be of any real use."

ASU was also a good source of signatures last time, Kromko said.

"There were some days we got as many as 600 signatures," he added.

For ASU students whose walls are undecorated, Impact Photo Art has the answer — laser impact printed photo posters. Jeff Wagner and Jeff Kleinman operate the booth across from the Memorial Union from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. today and Friday. ASASU sponsors the sale and proceeds go to benefit the Special Events Board.

Panel to study registration plan

An ASU faculty committee will study the possible installment of a more automated registration program than it presently uses, an assistant provost has said.

Mathew Betz said this system may or may not be modeled after the Engineering College's POISE computer system, as reported in the Aug. 27 State Press.

The story also reported that a video display terminal system is used to store student records, which actually are stored in a master computer and recalled on VDT screens.

Colors make parking easier to spot at ASU

By Tim Megyesi

Colors have replaced shapes in ASU auto decals this semester in an attempt to make parking enforcement easier for University police.

"With colors, we can spot violators more easily than with our previous system," said George Bays, University police chief.

"Also, designating ASU lots by color makes it easier on students and faculty in finding their appropriate spots," he said. "They simply have to match up the color of their decal with the colored sign for their lot."

In the past, ASU parking was marked with decals and signs differing only in shape and label.

The new lots will be marked red for faculty, orange for staff, brown for housing, blue for motorcycles, green for commuter, yellow for visitors and purple for special visitors.

The new system became operational Aug. 13 after being approved six months earlier by the ASU ad hoc parking committee.

Although no new regulations or lot designations resulted from the change, Bays said University police will be more "selective" in enforcing specific lots this semester.

Ticketing will be concentrated on the heart of campus and Tower Center, Bay said.

Correction

A State Press Aug. 27 article mistakenly reported that former Hayden Library head librarian Alan Covey was deceased.

The story was meant to refer to the late William Ax-ford, who was head librarian from 1970 to 1973, and passed away Aug. 12 in Oregon.

Covey worked at ASU from 1962 to 1968. He is still alive and working at the University of Wisconsin. Our apologies to him.

New MU addition makes a big hit

Video games attracting crowds

The video game section in the basement of the Memorial Union is one of the most popular spots on campus. Relieving aggressions and escaping homework are some of the more common reasons the games prove to be so popular.

Rose-Mary Grzasko

Racing at lightning speed across an unfamiliar galaxy, he fires lasers at approaching meteors and alien craft. A sudden move into hyperspace could save his ship from disintegration, but risk returning it to an asteroid field.

Another "Star Wars" sequel?

No, it's just an ASU student seeking entertainment at the Memorial Union recreation center.

Video games have become popular entertainment, as well as dodge from doing homework between classes, as is the case for freshman liberal arts major Roger Royers.

"I just come in at lunch, mainly, so I don't have to study," Royers said.

Another avid player, junior zoology major John Bell, said he has different motives that draw him to the random barrage of meteors and aircraft in "Asteroids."

"It's that element of uncertainty — nothing ever happens twice," he said. "You never know what direction the asteroids will come from."

Junior history major Harlan Kistler said playing video games keeps his reflexes quick for wrestling, but also provides competition.

"I hate to lose — it's do or die when you play and it actually makes me frustrated."

"Asteroids" is the most popular of the MU video games, with a crowd of spectators and eager challengers always nearby.

But "Space Invaders," once the top game, and "Galaxian," now ranking second, are also favorites.

Bell, who spends about 50 cents a day on the games, said there is no time limit on them.

He added he once saw a student who spent three hours on a single game, finally giving up to go eat lunch.

Allan Beyer of Capital Amusements, a local distributor, said that restaurants, bars and amusement centers usually buy the machines, valued at $2,500.

ASU English prof, graduate students assemble library

ASU English professor H.E. Gerber and graduate students under his supervision are responsible for a mini-library of publications due out in 1980-81.

Gerber and the students have written or edited seven full length books, six articles or essays included in books and a major portion of the scholarly journal "English Literature in Transition: 1880-1920."

David B. Eakin, who earned his Ph.D. degree in English under Gerber in 1980, is general editor of a textbook, author of four scholarly articles, and, with Gerber, author of "In Minor Keys: George Moore's Uncollected Short Stories." Eakin also joined talents with another Gerber student, ASU doctoral candidate Michael Case, to complete a volume of George Moore's uncollected plays.

Case has contracted with a textbook editor to contribute knowledgeable essays on Irish playwright Edward Martyn and on George Moore as a dramatist.

ASU English professors Donald C. Haberman and Nicholas A. Salerno are compiler-editors of Annotated Secondary Bibliography (ASB) volumes on George Bernard Shaw and Oscar Wilde, respectively.

Chinese face social barriers, study says

Elderly Chinese, victimized by inner-city crime and poor living conditions, are reluctantly leaving their long-time Phoenix homes, an ASU sociologist says.

Dr. Richard Nagasawa, an associate professor of sociology, said 43 percent of elderly Chinese interviewed have been victimized by crime in the city.

"An alarming number say they and their friends have been recent crime victims," Nagasawa said. "But, since most own their own homes, they were reluctant to move."

An exodus from the city by younger Chinese has left the elders to cope with old buildings, crime, discrimination and physical isolation in the community, the study said.

Nagasawa and graduate students David van Dyck, Anna Quan and Brian Cheung conducted the study, which was partially funded by the ASU Graduate School and College of Liberal Arts.

The study recommends that private and public programs be initiated to aid the Chinese community. It also suggests that human services be improved and a transportation system developed for the elderly.

"Our report presents new and major data essential to the development of adequate human service programs for the overlooked elderly Asian in Phoenix," Nagasawa said. "We must now develop programs to serve their needs."

Nagasawa said he became interested in the Chinese of Phoenix at a governor's conference on aging.

"I noticed some elder Chinese vainly trying to gain attention from the panel," he said. "The language barrier was too much. This concerned me and I thought we (ASU) could help."

Nagasawa said he had problems obtaining funding because government agencies asked for information he hoped to discover through the research.

Once the researchers cleared the funding hurdle they began interviewing Chinese residents in the city.

"We found that Phoenix does not have an identifiable Chinatown," Nagasawa said. "There's a trace of the old 'China Alley' near First and Madison streets. Otherwise, the Chinese are scattered from Sun City to east Mesa."

He added that early city leaders avoided establishing a Chinatown in Phoenix to avoid racial conflicts. Most of the city's early Chinese population was composed of railroad and mine workers, he said.

There were 3,878 Chinese in Phoenix in 1970, according to a census figures.

Nagasawa's study, titled "The Elderly Chinese: A Forgotten Minority," indicated that most of the respondents were self-educated, two-thirds read and write Chinese fluently and all have difficulty speaking English.

Faculty assignments

An ASU faculty member and a graduate associate have been installed as officers of the 740-member Arizona State Reading Council.

Dr. Gary Anderson, associate professor of elementary education, is the group's new vice president. Barbara Jacquette, doctoral student in the College of Education, is its corresponding secretary.

The Arizona State Reading Council, an affiliate of the International Reading Association, is a professional organization of classroom teachers, reading specialists, parents and others interested in the improvement of reading and the development of lifetime reading habits.

The council's annual conference will be Oct. 3 and 4 at the Townhouse Hotel, Phoenix.

The dean of the College of Human Services at Eastern Michigan University in Ypsilanti has accepted an appointment as professor of health services administration at the ASU College of Business Administration.

Dr. Robert Boissoneau will teach within the ASU Center for Health Services Administration and will coordinate continuing education programs through the Center for Executive Development.

While serving as dean at EMU from 1975 to 1980, Dr. Boissoneau developed a nuclear medical technology program in cooperation with the University of Michigan Medical Center and initiated a bachelor's degree program in health administration.

Herbert C. Brown, 1979 Nobel Laureate in chemistry, will be at ASU Friday to present his Nobel lecture, "From Little Acorns to Tall Oaks - from Boranes Through Organoboranes."

In 1956 as a professor of chemistry at Purdue University, Brown discovered a new reaction of a boron compound called diborane. He found that diborane easily added to unsaturated hydrocarbons to form a new class of compounds called organoboranes.

During the past two decades, Brown has explored the chemistry of these compounds in extensive detail.

Brown's talk is at 3:40 p.m. in room F-123 of the ASU physical science complex.

A research engineer from Oak Ridge National Laboratory has been named director of Arizona State University's new national research center for high resolution electron microscopy.

Dr. Ray Warren Carpenter will head the facility established at ASU by the National Science Foundation to encourage scientific sharing of the specialized electron microscopes.

Carpenter has been a senior researcher at Oak Ridge National Laboratory, where he was task leader for electron microscopy in the metals and ceramics division. His major research interests have been in continuous phase transformations and their effects on radiation damage, interface structures in metals and metalloids and analytical electron microscopy.

Two new associate professors have been added to ASU's Center for Public Affairs faculty.

N. Joseph Cayer served as associate professor of political science at Texas Tech from 1975 to 1978 and assistant professor of political science at the University of Maine from 1971 to 1975.

He received the Professor of the Year Award in the Texas Tech political science department in 1978-79, and has been editor of "Public Service" since 1978.

Cayer received bachelor of arts, magna cum laude, and master of public administration degrees from the University of Colorado and a doctor of philosophy degree from the University of Massachusetts.

Alvin H. Mushkatel has served as an assistant professor of political science at the University of Missouri, St. Louis, and at St. John's University in Minnesota where he was director of the state and local government internship program from 1973 to 1975.

Graduate pay keeps pace with inflation

Despite the country's economic downturn, average starting salary offers to college graduates are continuing to rise, according to the College Placement Council.

Results of the council's latest national survey indicate salary offers made to this year's college graduates in 24 selected bachelor's-level subject areas are higher than offers made a year ago.

Engineering graduates continued to command the most job offers and the highest salary offers, said Dr. Robert F. Menke, director of ASU Career Services. ASU was one of 164 colleges and universities participating in the survey.

Chemical engineering graduates received offers averaging $21,612 — 9.7 percent above last year's figure. Engineering majors got 63 percent of the bachelor's offers reported to the CPC.

Business graduates placed second, with 25 percent of the bachelor's level offers.

Gains ranged from 7.2 percent for accounting majors, bringing their average offer to $15,516 annually, to 10.5 percent for general business majors, bringing their average offer to $14,616 per year.

The new CPC survey is based on salary and job offers reported between Sept. 1, 1979, and June 13, 1980.

Matthews Gallery to display new Miyasaki prints

Mixed media prints by nationally acclaimed artist George Miyasaki will be on display at Matthews Center Gallery, Sept. 7 through Oct. 5.

The exhibit will include 25 prints, all completed this year.

Miyasaki combines a variety of printmaking techniques in his works, such as lithography and etching. Others include one or both of these techniques with acrylic or collage elements added.

Prints such as "To Canyon City," "800 Miles of Winter" and "Checkrows 7/82" contain layers of paper applied over acrylic creating a unique texture and dimension.

Miyasaki received his master of fine arts degree from California College of Arts and Crafts. His solo exhibitions include those at The Academy of Fine Arts, Honolulu; Stephen Wirtz Gallery, San Francisco; the University of Maine Gallery; and La Jolla Museum of Art, Calif.

His prints are held in the permanent collections of the Brooklyn Museum of Art, N.Y.; Oakland (Calif.) Art Museum; Philadelphia Museum of Art; The National Gallery, Washington, D.C.; and the Chicago Art Museum.

University Art Collections is open from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Monday through Friday and 1 p.m. to 5 p.m. Sunday, and is located on the second floor of Matthews Center.

He holds a bachelor of arts degree from Ohio State University and master of science and doctor of philosophy degrees in political science from the University of Oregon.

Dr. Eugene E. Garcia, chairman of Chicano Studies at the University of California, Santa Barbara, since 1976, has been named director of ASU's Center for Bilingual-Bicultural Education.

Garcia also will be a professor in the department of elementary education.

Garcia served as an associate professor of psychology at the UofC, Santa Barbara, since 1976 and as an assistant professor at the University of Utah from 1972 to 1976.

A specialist in Chicano child development, Garcia has conducted research projects, mostly in the field of bilingual education.

Garcia holds a bachelor of science degree from the University of Utah where he was graduated cum laude, was elected to Phi Beta Kappa, and received a National Science Foundation fellowship.

Garcia has just been awarded a senior post-doctoral fellowship by the National Research Council, Washington, D.C.

Two nationally-known specialists in natural resources and criminal procedure have accepted appointments as professors in ASU's College of Law.

John Lesby, who has served as associate solicitor for energy and resources for the Office of the Solicitor, Department of the Interior, since 1977, and Charles Pulaski Jr., a member of the University of Iowa College of Law faculty since 1972, joined the ASU law faculty.

Lesby has been supervising 30 lawyers as chief counsel to the Bureau of Land Management, the Geological Survey and the Bureau of Reclamation covering the principal water, public lands and minerals programs of the Department of the Interior.

Lesby graduated cum laude from Harvard

College where he received a bachelor of arts degree and graduated magna cum laude from the Harvard Law School where he received a doctor of jurisprudence degree.

Pulaski was an associate professor of law from 1972 to 1975 and professor of law since 1975 at the University of Iowa where he established a national reputation as a teacher and scholar in the areas of the legal profession, criminal procedure and the criminal trial process.

Both Pulaski's undergraduate and law degrees are from Yale University where he graduated cum laude and was a member of the Order of the Coif.

His publications have appeared in the Stanford, Iowa, and the University of Pennsylvania Law Reviews and in the Arizona State Law Journal.

Mark Pastin, associate professor at Indiana University since 1976, has been named professor of philosophy at ASU.

Recipient of a bachelor of arts degree, summa cum laude, from the University of Pittsburgh, Pastin holds master of arts and doctor of philosophy degrees from Harvard University where he was a teaching fellow.

A member of the Editorial Board of "Language Today" and the author of 18 professional papers, Pastin is preparing for publication by Scott-Foresman a "Casebook in Corporate Ethics," a volume of case studies in business ethics.

He has been awarded fellowships by the National Science Foundation, the National Endowment for the Humanities and Indiana University where he received the research award in 1976-77.

The director of the Sacramento Public Affairs Center has accepted an appointment as professor in ASU's Center for Public Affairs.

Dr. Louis F. Weschler, professor of public administration at the University of Southern California since 1979, will join the faculty Sept.

KDKB, hospital to sponsor tube race

The Second Annual KDKB/St. Jude Children's Research Hospital Tube Race will be held on Saturday, Sept. 6.

The race will follow an eight-mile course down the Salt River from a point about one mile south of Saguaro Lake to the confluence of the Salt and Verde Rivers.

Over 3000 tubers are expected to attend.

An entry fee of $3 per person is required of all participants. Those who choose to do so may be sponsored. Sponsored participants may enter at no charge to themselves.

The first 400 persons to registered on the day of the race will receive a free hug-ger beverage holder.

Prizes will include a 14-foot AMF Sunfish Sailboat, 34 cases of Coca-Cola and three Coca-Cola rafts, a $500 merchandise certificate from 21st Century Sound, $700 in merchandise certificates from Ski Haus/Sportstuff, a night on the town including concert tickets, dinner and limousine service.

Also to be awarded is a 50cc Suzuki Racer and $500 in merchandise certificates from Miller's Outpost.

Entry forms are available at KDKB Radio, City Suzuki, Miller's Outpost, Sails West, Ski Haus/Sportstuff and 21st Century Sound.

Logistics for the event are being handled by the Arizona National Guard, REACT and the Tonto National Forest Mesa Ranger District. Epsilon Sigma Alpha Sorority will coordinate registration for the event, and a river clean-up crew will be organized by the Phoenix Jaycees.

Highlighting the team event in the race will be a team of Bunnies from the Phoenix Playboy Club.

The purpose of the event is to raise funds for St. Jude Children's Research Hospital. St. Jude's, located in Memphis, Tenn., is the largest childhood cancer research center in the world in terms of numbers of patients and treatment successes.

The hospital is completely free of charge to any patient admitted by physical referral and if their disease is under study.

For more information, contact Jeff Sattler, program director of KDKB Radio, at 833-8888 or Rob Cahn, at (213) 487-3031.

Weekend TV job a snap for student

By Pat O'Connell

Each weekend, when other ASU students retreat into anonymity, Ted Simson puts on a tie and blazer, combs his hair and exposes himself to 35,000 people.

The 22-year-old Simons, a senior in political science, is the weekend sportscaster on KPHO-TV, Channel 5's evening news program.

Simons began working at KPHO last March after being encouraged to try out for the job by the departing weekend sports anchor. He and some friends worked up an audition tape and waited.

"They gave me a chance on one day's notice," he said. Simons said he was "kind of nervous" the first night, but that no major problems occurred during the sportscast.

"It was a slow day for sports anyway," he added.

Ted Simons

Simons got into television three years ago as a cameraman at KAET-TV Channel 8 as part of their volunteer program. His work there led to a similar job at KPHO.

Simons has no formal journalism training. He spent one year as a mass communications major before switching to political science.

He relies on his love for sports to shore up any weaknesses in his journalistic background, and said his sports knowledge makes his job "a lot easier."

"I'd like to stay in sports for awhile, but I admire shows like 'The MacNeil-Lehrer Report,'" he said.

He added that kind of commentary would be "a long, long way down the road."

Simons said people on campus seldom recognize him, and his celebrity status is "no big deal" to his friends, who also work in television.

However, the audience exposure has had some subtle benefits.

Simons said there was a big female response when he recently filled in for vacationing anchor John Brickson.

"I got a lot of calls asking how old I was, if I was married, that sort of stuff," he said.

Matthews to showcase German print exhibits

Woodcut prints by German artist Ernst Barlack will be on display from Sunday through Sept. 30 at Matthews Center Gallery.

Ernst Barlack studied art at the Academy of Fine Arts in Dresden, Germany. By the early 1930s, he was a world acclaimed sculptor and printmaker.

With the coming of Hitler, his work was banned and removed from all public places in Germany. The ban not only applied to his works, but all future creative activities.

Barlack died in 1938 at the age of 67.

The exhibit at ASU will include 73 woodcut prints. Subjects range from social themes to religious and philosophical statements.

Three visiting artists to teach at ASU this fall

ASU's visiting artist series has adopted a new format for this fall's program.

Instead of offering one artist teaching the entire fall semester, the program will feature three artists, each teaching five weeks.

The first five weeks of the semester will feature Frank Anthony Smith, associate professor of art at the University of Utah, who has exhibited his work in many painting and drawing shows throughout the country.

The second five-week sequence of the series will be conducted by James McGarrell, professor of art and director of graduate painting studies at Indiana University.

Nathan Goldstein, chairman of the Foundation Program of Study at the Art Institute of Boston, will preside at the final five-week sequence of the series.

Food plan puts bite on students

By Phomia Sliman

Several ASU students have complained that an attempt by Saga Foods officials to make meal ticket payments uniform for every student will hurt them financially.

The new system requires all students who use meal tickets on a voluntary basis to pay for an entire semester's ticket at once.

Helen Mawhinney, Associated Students campus affairs vice president, said a number of students have protested the new plan.

"A lot of kids are upset about this," she said, "but I have just started checking into it. I haven't really had a chance to do anything yet."

Ken Crawford, a junior special education major, said he is on a fixed income and was not prepared to pay the price of a semester's meal ticket all at once.

"For the students who are supported by their parents, this won't affect them," he said. "But for others like me that are self-sufficient, that is an awful lot of money to lay on the line when you don't expect it."

Tom Gibson, Saga Foods director, said that the new coupons eliminate any financial bind because students can buy coupons in $125 increments rather than a whole meal ticket.

But Crawford said "there is a big difference between the coupon and meal ticket plan," and the students who prefer a meal ticket are penalized.

Gibson said the new program will give parity to the system, since mandatory meal ticket buyers (residents of dormitories with cafeterias) have always had to pay for their tickets by the semester.

Residents of Manzanita, Saguaro and Palo Verde East, West and Main must buy meal tickets.

"In the past, kids could pay partial payments and come in to the program at anytime," he added.

Crawford said the change is "a matter of rights versus privileges."

"It seems we (students) have a right to buy meal tickets monthly and not be forced to pay for them all at once."

Edward Hickcox, director of Auxiliary Services admitted that students were not pre-warned about the change, but that "putting together a food service like this cannot be settled too soon because of the steep inflation rates."

Gibson said he did not think the change would affect students so much. Saga officials are willing to help students in any way if the new plan puts a financial strain on them, he added.

Hickcox said the plan was designed to maximize food service options.

"The system we had before is very rare for campuses," he said, "so we decided to make it an umbrella plan that would benefit the majority of students."

Cosmos 'stars' at planetarium

The earth is "the shore of the cosmic ocean," and we are just now setting sail for the stars, says soundtrack narrator Carl Sagan in the fall planetarium program coming Sept. 16 to ASU.

"Cosmos: The Voyage to the Stars" traces humankind's enchantment with the heavens, from the earliest superstitious imaginings to the most recent scientific discoveries.

In the end, the stars emerge once more as tantalizing challenges to human curiosity and ingenuity.

The ASU planetarium program describes the childhood vision that inspired Robert Goddard to dream of rockets before anyone had flown in an airplane or listened to a radio. It includes highlights from a ship's log that might have been kept by the imaginary captain of Voyager on its spectacular journey to Jupiter. Finally, it details space frontiers of the future.

"If we do not destroy ourselves, we will someday send spacecraft on missions of exploration far beyond our solar system," narrator Sagan says on the soundtrack, adding, "It seems likely the universe is brimming over with life and intelligence."

"Cosmos: The Voyage to the Stars" is a multi-dimensional companion piece to KAET's 13-week astronomy series, "Cosmos."

The ASU planetarium program runs at 7 and again at 8:30 Tuesday and Thursday evenings Sept. 16 through Nov. 25. Admission is 50 cents.

Seating is limited and reservations are required.

Paul Asmuth

World champion returns to ASU

By Jim Walters

It is hard to believe that anyone in their right mind would want to go out in 50-degree water in a bathing suit, but that's what former Sun Devil swimmer Paul Asmuth does for a living.

And if that isn't enough, he goes out and punishes his body for 23 grueling miles of swimming.

"I grew up swimming and I always seemed to do my best in the longer distances," said the three-time All-American. "The long distance doesn't bother me."

Men's swimming coach Ron Johnson added, "He always outdistanced everybody during practices."

For the former ASU swimming team captain, it is something he has been doing all of his life and it paid off when he won the World Championship his first year in professional competition. Asmuth graduated from ASU last year.

"Even though most people don't realize it, there is a professional swimming association," Asmuth said. "They run tournaments all over the world."

In his first year in competition, Asmuth swam in races in Canada, Italy and South America and won $20,000.

"I'll be swimming in Egypt in November," he added. "It will be cold, but the waters will be a lot warmer than the Atlantic."

Asmuth added that the schedule isn't too tough, but the cold can be hard to take.

The 23-mile courses are a little bit longer than most pools, so the competitors swim in lakes and one in Atlantic City, New Jersey was held in the Atlantic Ocean.

"I have adjusted to the cold water pretty well, but during a race in Quebec, Canada the water got so cold I had to stop," he said.

Asmuth's trainer, Mora Campion, a former Sun Devil swimmer also, was on the spotter's boat during the race and knew he was in trouble early.

"He kept writing (on a blackboard under water) that he wanted some potassium and aspirin less than a mile into the race," she said. "Anytime he asks for aspirin, he's hurting."

Asmuth added, "The water was 56-degrees and that is a little too cold for me."

Swimming on a lake can offer some interesting challenges, but swimming in the Atlantic was worse.

During the championships in New Jersey, Asmuth was in the water when the spotters on the boat noticed a school of blue fish moving in on him.

"I didn't even notice them, but I heard the guys hitting the side of the boat and I knew something wasn't right," he said.

He kept swimming and went on to win the race.

Asmuth added he was glad that he didn't see the fish while he was in the water.

"Those blue fish are tough," he said. "They don't bite you, but they nibble and draw blood."

"When they see the blood, that is when they go crazy."

Johnson added, "Those fish act like piranhas when they see blood and they will attack anything in their way."

"I knew something was there, but I just kept swimming," Asmuth explained.

He added he hasn't had any trouble with sharks yet.

Asmuth went on to win three other sanctioned events and beat out rival Claudio Plitt from Argentina for the title.

"Plitt is a tough competitor," Asmuth said. "He has been doing this for seven years and is experienced in swimming in this cold."

The competition is tough, but Asmuth likes the crowds and the money, too.

"In Canada, I performed in front of a crowd that was 50,000 strong," he said. "It is something to see all those people along the shore."

"The atmosphere is like a carnival."

Asmuth is looking forward to competing next year.

"I have a job as an auditor in California and I won't be competing in as many events," he said, "but I'm used to the cold and should have an easier time."

Charlie Diaz

A sport'n man: no pay for play

To the average, unschooled sports fanatic, athletics is the world of six-figure-salaried jocks frolics on a turf created not by nature, but by Dow Jones.

But to the true aficionado of sport, the real member of the Desenex set, sports is the little tyke in the driveway dribbling his basketball in the Toyota's leaking 10-40 weight oil. Sports is beer leagues, recreation league slow-pitch and pick-up games at picnics, and, perchance, intramurals.

Professional and collegiate sports are fun to watch and discuss and chuckle about. But that's the limit. To the vast majority, these are limited activities — the fan has to content himself with watching.

With the rec leagues and pick-up games, the participant can "turn 7-up" along with Dave Parker and Hollywood Henderson. He or she may rub their nose in the dirt, tear the pantaloons, swear, sweat and, overall, have a great time.

Although it is possible to have a good time at a pro or college game (as evidenced by the glazed eyes and empty bottles at the Coliseum or Sun Devil Stadium), it is almost impossible not to have a good time in the driveway or on the picnic field.

The reason for this is simple — participation. While many people complain that golf and baseball are boring sports to watch, they both attract large if not down-right obese contingents of people who play the game.

It is not easy to participate in a pro or college sport. You either have to be big or fast, or have a big or fast agent. There is no way around this. This is as much a fact of life as male (A) plus female (B) $\frac{3}{4}$ baby (C).

But other than a signed waiver (where applicable), all the necessities of a good pick-up sort of sport are within the reach of most — a little free time, a little equipment and a few willing participants.

All this is to say that while the top levels of competition are sports, they are not the altruistic types of athletics that some are. Pro sports exist to make money and some colleges treat sports that way. While no competition can be completely selfless, the rec and pick-up leagues operate, maybe with a subsidy from the city or a foundation, for the fun of the participants.

Sports is not sport once the win-at-all-costs philosophy is stressed. Everyone loves a winner but at what price?

The belief that the way the game is played is more important than the outcome, while naive in big-bucks circles, is really the correct approach to sports. It's nice to win, but someone has to eat the ball sometime.

Rah.

Tryouts

BASEBALL

Manager Jim Brock of the Sun Devils' baseball team has scheduled a meeting for anyone interested in trying out for the team.

The meeting will be in Room 35 in the University Activity Center, located near the weight room, at 3 p.m. today.

Brock said this will be the only time he will have time to talk with tryouts, so this is a one-shot deal.

If for some reason you can't attend the meeting call Brock in his office at 965-3677.

MEN'S SWIMMING

The men's swimming team is also holding tryouts this week.

The team is meeting at the old pool, between the Physical Education buildings at 3 p.m.

Head Coach Ron Johnson said he would like to see anyone interested to attend the meeting.

1500-meter record set

BONN, West Germany (AP) — Steve Ovett of Britain led a three-man assault on the world 1,500-meter record Wednesday night in Koblenz, edging West German Thomas Wessinghage by two-tenths of a second in setting the mark of 3:31.4.

Wessinghage was timed in 3:31.6 and another West German, Harald Hudak, finished third in 3:32.0, also squeezing in under the old standard of 3:32.1 held jointly by Ovett and archrival countryman Sebastian Coe.

The 24-year-old Ovett let Wessinghage set the fast pace, then moved ahead with about 500 meters remaining, holding off the West Germans in the race to the tape.

Afterward, he called Wessinghage, "the best pacesetter for me."

Wessinghage missed the 1980 Summer Olympics in Moscow because West Germany boycotted the Games, and Coe beat Ovett in the relatively slow time of 3:38.4, breaking Ovett's consecutive winning streak at 42.

Ovett, the 800-meter Olympic gold medalist, finished third behind Jurgen

Straub of East Germany, who set the pace in the Moscow 1,500.

Coe had to miss the meet in Koblenz, a Rhine River city 60 kilometers south of Bonn, because of back trouble.

"I could start here without any stress," said Ovett, who had served notice on Tuesday that he would try for the world mark.

Football players hospitalized

One of two ASU football players injured during an evening practice at Packard Stadium Tuesday underwent knee surgery Wednesday afternoon at St. Joseph's hospital in Phoenix.

Noseguard Roy Edwards required surgery to repair a torn ligament, Dr. Joseph Reno, team physician said.

Reno gave no indication how long Edwards would be out.

The other player, tight end James Keyton, will be released from St.

Joseph's this afternoon, Reno said.

Keyton suffered a neck injury Tuesday.

Sun Devil football players said Keyton was unable to move after the injury occurred.

He was taken by ambulance to St. Joseph's for X-rays.

"The X-rays taken of Keyton's neck were negative and he was on his feet today," Reno said.

Come try our delightfully different sandwich. A Schlotzsky is a happy blend of tastes. We start from scratch each morning with our special fresh baked bun. Then we melt three cheeses, add three meats, lettuce, tomatoes and other special ingredients. It's a sandwich like you have never had before.

Schlotzsky's is not a fast food restaurant. We prepare each sandwich as it is ordered, so you may want to call ahead if you are in a hurry. A large Schlotzsky is a big meal, so you might want to split it with a friend. A small is plenty for one.

We hope you will try a Schlotzsky because we think you will love it . . . and be back time after time. Believe us, once you have tasted a Schlotzsky you will accept no substituteskys.

Soccer — the poorest sport on campus

By Tamara Tanzillo

When George Solymosi instructs his players to use their heads, he really means it.

Solymosi coaches the ASU Sun Demons soccer club, which is holding tryouts through Friday from 4 to 6 p.m. at Saguaro Field.

"We've got about 60 guys trying out," Solymosi said. "Friday night is our first practice game and by then I'll have the team narrowed down to 21 players."

Solymosi, who has been kicking soccer balls around since his childhood in Hungary, began coaching the Sun Demons last season.

"Before I started coaching the soccer team the students had been managing things on their own," Solymosi said. "They were unorganized and fought among themselves."

The club placed first in the Arizona Soccer League last season with an impressive 29-5-2 record.

"We've proven ourselves and we deserve to be treated like winners," said Larry Friedes, a returning Sun Demon. "For a school this size, the soccer program is lacking."

Friedes, who played on a soccer scholarship at the University of Bridgeport in Connecticut, said, "Being a member of the NCAA would make a difference in our caliber of play, organization and schedule."

"Soccer is just beginning to develop in the West. NCAA standing would bring us crowds and help out Coach Solymosi. He lines the field, drives all the players around and puts money from his own pocket into the sport," Friedes said.

The soccer club competes with many NCAA schools and Solymosi would like intercollegiate status.

"Pressure should be put on the athletic program for the club to go NCAA," Solymosi said. "Other Pac-10 schools have it, such as UCLA, and the few scholarships available to them still aren't even enough to cover the players' tuition."

"It would cost about $100,000 for the soccer team to go NCAA and cover the expenses of travel, uniforms, equipment, scholarships and game officials," Solymosi said.

"I submitted my budget request of $2158 to the intramurals department Wednesday, but I probably won't get nearly that much."

A Phoenix soft drink distributing company made a $300 donation towards T-shirts bearing the Sun Demon logo (a Sun Demon charging out of an exploding soccer ball).

Information on how to purchase the T-shirt can be obtained by calling the soccer club office at 962-2961. The $5 purchase price of the shirt will help pay soccer club expenses.

Lack of money has slowed the team's preparation for the coming season.

"I still haven't reserved a bus for the team's transportation to a tournament at the University of New Mexico in the beginning of October," Solymosi said. "We could really use a bus of our own."

Despite financial difficulties, there are soccer players ready to participate.

"I'd hoped for an NCAA team, but this club is the closest thing to it," said John Hetrick, an eager tryout. "The club is more competitive than University intramurals."

"Soccer is continuous play, filled with physical contact," said Hetrick, who played high school soccer in Daytona Beach, Fla. "I've broken both my ankles playing, but I've rehabilitated them and I'm ready to play now."

During tryouts, Solymosi tries to bury thoughts of financial woes and continues to search for the perfect soccer team.

Solymosi's tryout application has all the basic questions: name, height, weight, and which foot the applicant favors.

"It's rare to find a good left-footed soccer player," Solymosi said. "A fullback or halfback on the left side of the field should lead with their left foot to avoid taking an extra step when kicking the ball."

"Eleven right- and left-footed soccer players would be the best team in the world."

John Moreland

'Hit man'

Devil back works 'on the corner'

By Pete Prisco

"I play the game the way the rules are written — I am supposed to hit people and destroy the play and the harder I hit them, the better I can do the job."

— Jack Tatum

The words above are the bread and butter of Houston Oiler defensive back Jack Tatum's style. A vicious style, to say the least, and one which has been much criticized.

But one person who does not think Tatum's style is to be criticized is ASU cornerback John Moreland, who, like Tatum, is known for his punishing hitting.

"I love the way (Tatum) plays the game," said Moreland, a junior from Pompano Beach, Fla.

"If you can scare a guy before he gets out on the field, then that's all the better."

Don't get Moreland wrong, he does not enjoy putting players in hospital beds or in the morgue, for that matter.

"I don't try and hurt anyone," Moreland said, "but if I can put a shot on him, believe me I will."

Moreland came to ASU in 1977 after earning All-State and All-American honors at Pompano Beach High School.

"I came to ASU to play ball because it was a warm weather school and I didn't want to play in Florida," Moreland said.

Besides the weather, Moreland said former ASU head coach Frank Kush had a lot to do with his coming to Tempe.

"ASU was the only school that had a head coach come to recruit me," Moreland said. "And he saw me three times before I signed."

ASU hasn't been a bed of roses for Moreland, however, as he has had some problems with past coaches, and has had trouble getting playing time.

After starting on the junior varsity team as a freshman, Moreland was moved up to the varsity in his sophomore year and started at weak safety in the opening game against Pacific in 1978.

But by the fourth game of the year Moreland was relegated to specialty team duty and played rarely in the defensive backfield.

"I had a personality conflict with (former defensive backfield coach) Bill Maskill and this really cut into my playing time," Moreland said.

This is not where the conflict ended. It got so bad last year that Moreland decided to walk out of Camp Tontozona and he never returned to the squad.

"As it turned out, it was for the better," Moreland said. "It really worked in my favor."

This year Moreland was moved from safety to cornerback, and he is presently running second behind Ralph Dixon.

Moreland said the adjustment was easier than he expected.

"The change hasn't been that bad, because (defensive backfield) Coach (Willie) Shaw has made it a lot easier by working with my technique," Moreland said.

"Coach Shaw is an excellent coach and has really helped me with such things as getting the proper footwork down for pass drops."

Although Moreland is presently on the second team, he will see extensive action on specialty teams for the Sun Devils.

"I won't be content with playing second team, but I'll do what's asked of me and contribute on the special teams," Moreland said.

With all the talk about how tough Kush's camps were as compared to the one this year under Coach Darryl Rogers, Moreland said that this year's camp was by no means a picnic.

"We ran just as much as we used to," Moreland said. "We just cut down on our contact drills, which helped prevent injuries."

Moreland added he enjoys playing for Rogers.

"Coach Rogers is great," Moreland said, "he's the best coach I've ever had."

"He's concerned about things other than football and really looks out for his players."

Moreland said that ASU's tough schedule will bring out the best effort possible from the team.

"Good competition makes everyone work harder, and that will make us a better team," Moreland said. "I think we'll do just fine."

PLAZA

FREE ROOM & BOARD

If I had a brother, sister or relative attending ASU I'd tell them how to obtain FREE ROOM & BOARD. In order to do that they would simply need to purchase a home in Tempe rather than rent. There are many ways to purchase including co-signers and FHA 245's. Rent money is spent money. Why not have your roommates rent from you? And, when it comes time to graduate and sell, the appreciation may pay for graduate or professional school. Call me for more details or low cash-to-loan homes around ASU. Free first time buyer literature.

WELCOME BACK TO CACTUS COUNTRY

Cactus Country Saloon & Dance Hall

This summer Tempe's first contemporary western niteclub opened on Apache Blvd. — the Cactus Country Saloon & Dance Hall. It's a wide open place to drink and dance to all the latest country and rock hits.

Two floors for swingin'

There's a dance floor on each of our two levels so there's always plenty of room for swingin' and shufflin'. We even have the Valley's top dance instructors, Nancy Newland and Rush Langdon, leading our country swing lessons. There's classes for beginning and advanced dancers. Call us at 966-9124 for dates and times.

Our drink prices are easy to swallow

Just cozy up to one of our three bars and drown your thirst. Our beer and liquor prices at the Cactus Country Saloon never go up. They're always the same low price:

- 13 oz. Coors draft - 75¢
- Bud longnecks - 90¢
- Well drinks - 90¢

We also feature Canada's famous Moosehead lager beer. Free snacks, too.

Our gals will shine your boots

We know how hard it is to keep those boots lookin' good. So the girls from the Great American Shoe Shine Company will bring them up to snuff starting at just $2.00. Sit back and enjoy it.

Our doors swing open from 4pm - 1am Tuesday thru Saturday. $1.00 cover on Friday and Saturday from 8pm. Casual but neat dress code in effect. Swing on over tonight!
