

Student protests fail

Tuition increase wins approval

By Pat O'Connell and Phomia Sliman

More students per classroom may be the only means of easing future tuition hikes at the three state universities, according to a member of the Arizona Board of Regents.

"We might have to look at student-teacher ratios," Rudy Campbell said. "Our growth situation out here is part of the problem."

Campbell also said nothing will stop tuition increases if costs keep going up, but raising the current 22-1 student-teacher ratio could help cut down on the number of new staff needed.

But Campbell, who voted at the Board's meeting last weekend to raise tuition at ASU, NAU and UA, said he personally does not think the ratio should be increased.

Skyrocketing utility bills, a recent 13.5 percent faculty salary increase and the constant hiring of new instructors are the main reasons for the 17.2 percent rise in the cost of education last year, he said.

Despite strong protests from student Regent Renee Marler, Associated Students President Tom Ajamie and a petition from 1,600 UA students, the regents unanimously approved a $450-a-year increase for non-resident students at ASU and UA, and a $400-a-year increase at NAU.

Resident tuition at all the universities will rise from $600 a year to $650 a year.

The move, which takes effect in 1981-82, brings non-resident tuition increases to a total of 35 percent over the past two years, Ajamie said.

Marler said she opposes the non-resident boost, but supports the in-state increase.

"The out-of-state tuition increase will create a hardship on students who are halfway through their program and don't have the option of going somewhere else," she said. "But I think the in-state tuition increase is reasonable. You have to cover costs."

The tuition increases are expected to add approximately $8.7 million to the universities' accounts.

The board also instructed its legal counsel, Charles Adams, to continue investigating possible revisions of the 17 fee status guidelines and the replacement of the present three-to-five member Domicile Appeals Committee with a single hearing officer.

Marler, Ajamie and the Arizona Students Association have charged that the guidelines are unclear to students seeking residency.

Marler told the regents that many students objected to being asked to supply tax returns in residency cases because "they felt it violated their privacy."

Board President William Payne said submission of the tax forms is optional.

"There is nothing in the law that forces the student to submit a tax form," he said.

However, Ajamie said his executive assistant, Jim Casey, an Arizona resident, went through the process as a test and was turned down by the fee status office for refusing to provide a tax form.

"I'm never saying just make it easier. I'm saying make it clearer," Ajamie said. "I don't feel, in honest faith, that we have the best program at ASU."

Adams told the regents that a single hearing officer

Stadium

Cracks to get temporary patch job

By Glen Creno

An estimated $250,000 temporary repair job will have the north end of Sun Devil Stadium in shape for the football home opener Saturday, ASU officials said Monday.

"The entire stadium will be useable," Director of Planning and Construction Paul McClellan said. "We won't close the stadium."

McClellan said the $250,000 figure was only an "informed estimate" and not final.

ASU contracted Fox Consulting Engineers and Geologists July 9 to investigate cracks in a tunnel and ramp area at the north end. The cracks were reportedly caused by movement due to settling of the stadium's foundation.

Fox Vice President and Area Manager Bob Paulsell said his firm "hasn't made a final report" to the University yet.

"Everything to this date is preliminary," he said. "We've drilled a series of test holes and collected samples."

Paulsell also said the final recommendation on the problem will be delivered Sept. 22, after two ASU games will have been played in the stadium.

"We're still investigating," Paulsell added. "We're not prepared to make any comment on it."

McClellan said the work to be completed before game time Saturday is an "interim measure" designed to correct the structural deficiency temporarily.

"It's a very simple fix," McClellan said. He refused to discuss the specific nature of the work to be done.

McClellan said the "patch" job is designed to prevent foundation movement from spreading to other sections of the stadium.

"There's no doubt we're having movement in the north end," he said. "We're trying to make sure it doesn't progress to the rest of the stadium."

The rehabilitation will stop shifting in the underlying fill of the stadium, McClellan said.

"There's quite a bit of structural distress," he added. "If the failure mechanism (moving foundation) was allowed to continue it could be a problem. We'll try to arrest that this week."

McClellan refused to speculate on what damage would occur if movement spread to other sections of the stadium.

"I'd rather not get into that," he said. "What we're going to do will prevent that."

ASU Vice President of Business Affairs Jack Penick said there was "no sufficient data" available from Fox to draw final conclusions or take steps to remedy the movement.

Preliminary conclusions from the engineering firm indicated that seating fans in the north end would be safe, Penick said.

"They told me there's no need to think about canceling any seats," he said. "We're trying to work out things we could do to correct the problem permanently."

Penick added he thought the structural problems had been exaggerated.

"I think everybody's jumping the gun," he said. "We don't see a serious problem here."

Engineers have established various check points throughout the stadium and are monitoring them for movement and settling. Penick said the slow movement of the stadium cannot be measured accurately in a short span of time.

"That's why the study is taking so long," he added.

EASTERN FLIGHT HIJACKED TO CUBA

TAMPA, Fla. — A Florida-bound Eastern Airlines jet with 88 people aboard was hijacked to Cuba on Monday by a Spanish-speaking man who carried a bottle of liquid and threatened to set fire to the plane, authorities said. Cuban government soldiers took the man into custody after the plane's arrival at Havana's Jose Marti Airport in the eighth hijacking of a U.S. plane to Cuba since Aug. 10.

TEACHERS' STRIKES CONTINUE

Teachers in San Jose, Calif., went on strike Monday seeking higher pay, and school officials called in $100-a-day substitutes to keep classes open for 33,000 public school students. In Newark, N.J., 5,500 school employees returned after a three-day walkout. Negotiations, meanwhile, were stalled in the nation's biggest strike, in Philadelphia, where 11,000 teachers walked off the job last Monday in a dispute over class size, teacher preparation time and the recall of 2,300 union members.

EX-CIA SPY SUES U.S.

TRENTON, N.J. — A Cuban defector sent to her homeland by the CIA to spy on her husband is suing the United States for $1 million, claiming that inadequate training led to her being captured and jailed for nine years. Carmen Mackowski charged in a federal suit filed in Trenton that proper training by the Central Intelligence Agency would have enabled her to avoid ... detection, arrest, imprisonment and subsequent illness.

STARLESS EMMYS DID WELL IN RATINGS

awards, the telecast apparently did better in the ratings than the disaster that had been expected. Overnight Nielsen ratings released Monday indicated the show — which was virtually starless because of a boycott by some members of the striking Screen Actors Guild — scored respectable figures, though far from the 45 share of the viewing audience of last year's Emmycast. In the first two hours of the Sunday night event, NBC averaged a 29 share in New York, 23 in Chicago and 38 in Los Angeles. A share is the percentage of those homes watching television that were tuned to the Emmys.

LIBYANS CHEER MERGER WITH SYRIA

TRIPOLI, Libya — President Hafez Assad of Syria and Col. Moammar Khadafy of Libya, speaking Monday to massive crowds of Libyans chanting "... unity, unity," called for a merger of Syria and Libya to renew the fight against Israel. Assad arrived to the cheers of thousands of Libyans who lined the streets of Tripoli to hail the two leaders with shouts of "Libya, Syria, one country." In speeches broadcast by the state radio, both leaders accused President Anwar Sadat of Egypt of betraying the Arab cause in making peace with Israel.

CANADIAN LEADERS ATTEMPT CONSTITUTION REWRITE

OTTAWA — Prime Minister Pierre Elliott Trudeau and the leaders of Canada's 10 provinces opened a potentially historic conference Monday to rewrite the nation's constitution. But the premiers of the two most populous provinces, Ontario and Quebec, immediately fell to wrangling. Canada's constitution now is the British North America Act of 1867, which created the Canadian confederation and technically remains under British legislative control.

with a knowledge of the law would be less expensive and more consistent than the current board.

Approximately 1,500 ASU students applied for residency last year, Adams said. The office ruled in favor of 803 students.

Of those turned down, 541 students appealed to the domicile committee. Adams said 227 of the students were reclassified as residents and 214 were not.

The UA had 86 appeals last year and NAU had less than 5.

Payne and Campbell expressed concern over the differences in numbers between the universities.

"I think our three universities are using different criteria for deciding who is an out-of-state student," Campbell said.

The board also approved hiring an architect to draw up plans for a proposed $5.5 million annex to the MU.

Regent Esther Capin said she supports the annexation because it "directly benefits students."

She said her concern is whether or not revenues from the MU will be sufficient to repay the bonds needed to build it.

However, ASU President John Schwada told the board exact revenue information will not be available until plans are drawn up.

A similar bonding proposal for the construction of a $5 million high-rise parking garage was deferred until October when more data can be presented.

Revenue bonds for the projects would come from a $58.5 million package approved earlier this year by the Arizona Legislature for capital construction.

In related matters, the board discussed hiring a financial adviser to help find alternatives to revenue bonding, but deferred action until its next meeting.

Apuna to sue Board of Regents — $2 million claim disallowed

By Pat O'Connell

Former ASU football player Ben Apuna, whose $2 million claim against the Arizona Board of Regents has been disallowed, will file a formal lawsuit against the board this week, his attorney said Monday.

"I think they (the regents) should have looked at it a little closer," Frederick J. Creasy said. "But I'm sure they were afraid of establishing a precedent."

The regents, who acted on the advice of its legal counsel Charles Adams, never have approved such a claim.

Apuna was one of eight players who were declared ineligible last year for ASU's last three games after a Pac-10 investigation determined he received fraudulent credit for a college extension course.

The former Sun Devil linebacker filed the damage claim in June against the board, former head football coach Frank Kush, and former academic adviser John Rehfield.

The complaint stated that Apuna was not selected in the first or second round of the National Football League draft because he was not eligible to finish last season and compete in post-season all-star games.

Regent Rudy Campbell said validation of such a claim prior to legal action would be an unnecessary expenditure of tax dollars.

"We can never, ever approve a claim like that," Campbell said.

Creasy said Apuna's lawsuit will contend that he was cut from the St. Louis Cardinals, who picked him in the seventh round of the NFL draft, because his ineligibility cost him exposure to professional football scouts.

Apuna was cut last week prior to Sunday's season opener.

"We're going to have some people testify that at the end of the year if he had played, (in the all-star games) he would have been drafted in the first or second round," Creasy said.

He said he plans to call Apuna's agent and several pro scouts to testify for the former ASU football player.

"I don't think we're going to get a settlement until we nail them to the wall with facts," he said.

Violence workshop offered

A one-and-one-half day workshop on domestic violence designed for nurses and other health professionals is being offered by ASU's Continuing Nursing Education Program Sept. 19 and 20.

The workshop will be held at ASU/Alhambra, 4510 N. 37th Ave., in Phoenix.

Topics presented will include the psychodynamics of domestic violence, attitudes toward the abused and abuser, child abuse, spouse abuse and abuse of the elderly.

The law, legal responsibilities, and intervention strategies relating to domestic violence also will be discussed.

Featured speaker will be Dr. Bud Bolton, coordinator of psychological services for the Arizona Department of Economic Security, Division of Aging and Family Services.

Bolton is the author of numerous books including "The Pregnant Adolescent: Problems of Premature Parenthood."

Other contributors to the sessions include Linda Phillips, public health consultant for the Arizona Department of Health Services; James Schubert, crisis counselor for the Scottsdale police department; Alan Asher, program director for "Friends of the Family" — a shelter home for battered women; and Paul Forgach, victim-witness supervisor for the Office of the Pima County Attorney.

Registration fee for the workshop is $25.

For registration information, contact the ASU Continuing Nursing Education office, Tower Building, Tempe, Ariz. 85281, or call 965-7431.

Business student does time

By Fred Podesta

When an ASU graduate student in business administration was cited by University Police for running a stop sign on his 10-speed, he had no idea it would cost him $68 and 30 hours in jail.

Elmer Heinel said that he was cited last fall near the Business Administration Building. He never appeared at his court date, and when he was pulled over in his car on Aug. 8 by the Tempe police, he was arrested.

"I completely forgot about it," he said. "I thought it was like one of those ASU parking tickets."

Tempe Police Officer Juan Perez said that Heinel was pulled over for speeding, illegal lane change and driving while intoxicated. He was brought to the Tempe Jail where he passed a breathalyzer test. When his records were checked for prior warrants, the bicycle citation was discovered, and Heinel was arrested for failure to appear in court, Perez said.

"No matter how small the initial violation is, failure to appear in court is a violation of the law," he said.

Lt. Richard Hydro of the University Police said students could be jailed for failure to appear in court for any violation other than parking. He added that while University Police usually try to avoid jailing students, "city police won't hesitate to throw them in jail."

Heinel spent the night in the Tempe Jail and in the morning was given the option of posting $60 bond or seeing a justice of the peace at the Maricopa County Court. Expecting to be released on his own recognizance, he chose to go to court.

"That's really humiliating," he said. "They put the cuffs on you real tight and stick you in the van so you can cramp up on the nice long ride down to Maricopa (Court)."

When Heinel got his morning audience with the justice of the peace, he discovered his bond had been raised to $84.

"It was a Saturday, and I was hard pressed to raise the money," Heinel said. "My friends raised it and were told I was in transit to Durango (Jail)."

"So they took us (the other prisoners in transit) to Durango. Bail was posted at 5 p.m., and I didn't get out until 2:30 a.m."

Heinel said he returned to court Aug. 13 and was fined $34 for the citation and $34 for the warrant.

"The whole thing is so weird — it's like 'Twilight Zone' or something. It certainly changed my attitude about the stupid little tickets you get on campus," he added.

"I just wanted people to know so they wouldn't get suckered into this kind of thing."

Give non-residents a chance

Let's face facts. Residency is a hell of a nice thing to have if you're an out-of-stater faced with an annual tuition bill of $2,950 per year from now until graduation or until you go broke — whichever comes first.

Sometimes, it's going broke.

After spending a year or so at ASU, and having all the residents laugh because they pay $600 a year for the same education you pay through the nose for, you decide it's time to join ranks with the residents.

You spend 12 months here, buy a car, change your driver's license, open a bank account, get a job, register to vote and tell everyone how excited you are about becoming a resident.

Then you tell the ASU Fee Status Committee all of the wonderful things you've done to become "one of the gang," and they politely snicker in your face.

"It's nice to see you're working and driving these days, but frankly, it just isn't enough," a committee member says. "Let's see you in a few months, after you have proved total financial independence, have a note from your church, boss and landlord, buy a house and serve on four community related projects. Then we might rehear your case."

Totally bummed, you silently curse and ask yourself, what did I do to deserve the Arizona Board of Regents?

But remember, the regents are talking to themselves too. They're saying, "Hey, these out-of-staters really don't care about making a life here in our fair state. They come for the inexpensive education, don't bother paying taxes and leave when they've used and abused our state to the maximum. Why should we make getting residency easy for these freeloaders?"

Why, they ask?

Because, simply enough, there are a lot of students seeking residency who really want to make Arizona their home, now and after graduation.

"You're kidding," the regents exclaim.

No joke, gang.

Getting established in a new state is no easy task. I've been here for more than three years and haven't fulfilled one-third of the requirements necessary to be a resident. I don't even know if I plan to be a resident here after graduation.

But some folks know from the very beginning.

If the board thinks they are self-appointed gods, who have the right to say that Arizona is getting too crowded and thus, only want residents who are serious about living here, then they are sadly mistaken.

Wake up Rudy Campbell, William Payne and the rest of the regents! Clear up all the ambiguities in the residency guidelines so serious residency-seekers have a fighting chance.

Replace the current appeals committee with a single hearing officer who is an expert on determining what guidelines applicants need to follow.

Right now, Mesa resident Michael DeGroote has been trying unsuccessfully to be granted residency. Although DeGroote's family owns property here, he graduated from a Mesa high school and the family members are residents in every sense of the word, DeGroote has been denied residency. The hearing committee has gone so far as to demand the family provide a note from its priest saying DeGroote has attended church regularly for more than one year.

So please, do us all a favor and spell it out in black and white so other students don't find themselves in DeGroote's position. By the way, what happens if DeGroote doesn't go to church?

Campus robbed of 'fine' viewing

This is in response to Lamar Evelyn Swentek's editorial (State Press, Sept. 4) concerning the screening of X-rated films on campus for entertainment purposes.

Swentek states that there are no benefits to having X-rated films on campus, and that the drawbacks include "a punishment of eternal fire." This injunction may be fine and good for evangelical Christians, but it will not serve those of us at ASU who do not subscribe to Swentek's dogmatic biases. The U.S. Constitution prohibits ASU being run as a theocracy.

As for the claim that X-rated films have no benefit, this is simply not true either. The best-attended film last year at Neeb Hall was "Deep Throat," with "Heaven Can Wait" placing a distant second. "Richard Pryor: Live in Concert," also prohibited under the current ban, was the third most attended. It is only because of the profits made on these extremely popular films that the Neeb Hall Film Series was able to afford showing the more esoteric foreign, classic and documentary films.

Swentek also states that one can't view X-rated films without lust in one's heart. This depends on whether one subscribes to Swentek's views on lust and sin. In addition, not all X-rated films are of the "raincoat on the lap" variety.

Because of the X-rated film ban, the campus has been deprived of seeing many fine films such as "Eraserhead" and "Last Tango in Paris." Though the merit of these films may be questioned by some, their value is demonstrated by their popularity.

Many argue that X-rated films have no place on a state-funded University campus; students who want to see these films can view them off-campus. However, the purpose of the Neeb Hall Film Series is to provide a diverse range of film entertainment. This is available off-campus also. Why bother showing films at all with the Valley Art just up the street? Obviously films for students do have a place at ASU and that includes any film students want to see, regardless of rating.

Andy Cohen is a junior at ASU majoring in philosophy.

50 percent isn't too much to ask

Editor:

I strongly agree with Julie Martin's editorial (State Press, Sept. 4) concerning the Arizona Board of Education's request that all teachers who want certification must take and pass the National Teachers Exam with a percentage score of 50.

Miss Martin quoted Dr. John Bell, chairman of ASU's secondary education department, as saying, "Some people (minority teachers) don't score well on language-based tests and are still very competent teachers." To me, this seems hard to swallow. After all, the whole contention of a student-teacher relationship is the interaction of new ideas; the ability to communicate (and do it well) is of the utmost importance, especially at the university level.

If a teacher is unable to communicate — this distracts from the learning situation — as well as making it hard for the student to learn the subject. It is all too evident that this school must be trying to make quota with minority teachers, or why would there be conflict on campus concerning minority faculty? If this is the case, ASU will have teachers who don't teach and students who, invariably, don't learn.

The whole atmosphere of higher education, especially at a university, is related to how well one does on exams. A successful student will do well on an exam; a successful teacher, therefore, should do likewise. And, if a teacher does not do well on an exam, maybe this is a hint that he or she is not in the right business. Education must not take a back seat!

Furthermore, I do not think it is asking too much of a prospective teacher to score 50 percent on the National Teachers Exam. This, by the standards of any of my classes, would constitute a grade of E (failure).

In conclusion, I would like to state that I am not prejudice against any set minority. I am, however, against teachers who cannot communicate.

Name withheld

Listen here, Lamar

Editor:

Lamar Evelyn Swentek, who do you and all the book-burning zealots you represent think you are? I am aghast every time one of you waves a Bible in my face and makes a list of what I cannot do, see or feel.

Realize one thing, Lamar — I don't care what the Bible says about Sodom and Gomorrah, King Solomon or any other subject. If you fear perdition after viewing an X-rated movie, that's your problem. I don't feel that those fears form a justifiable basis from which you may ride roughshod over the rights of those with whom disagree. Your's is a lifestyle to which I can never reconcile myself, and I don't intend to have it shoved down my throat by some Bible-waving fanatic.

Remember, I am not the only one who feels this way, and we'll fight you every inch of the way toward a society in which the freedoms of thought and expression are not subverted in the name of "the liberated view in Jesus Christ." I join the self-appointed leader of the Immoral Minority, Nicholas Von Hoffman (see New Times Weekly, Sept. 3-9, page 15), in sending to Lamar and all others like him the well-known bird.

ASU coeds 'cold' on nude modeling

By Phomia Sliman

The prospect of achieving fame and fortune from nude modeling apparently doesn't appeal to many ASU girls, a Valley modeling promoter has said.

John Noto said his recent State Press classified advertisement, which invited girls interested in posing for Playboy or Penthouse magazine to contact him, generated very little enthusiasm.

"I put the ad in for one day to see what kind of reaction I could get," he said. "I only got about 15 or 20 calls and decided there wasn't enough interest so I canceled it."

"ASU is a fairly conservative school and I didn't really expect a huge turn out, but this was even smaller than I anticipated."

But not all ASU girls had conservative attitudes about Noto's ad.

"I don't really think there is anything wrong with it," said Cathy Stewart, a senior in education. "But I just don't think very many girls want their bodies displayed for the whole world to gawk at."

Lisa Barry, a senior in psychology, said she thought the whole idea was "titillating" but she didn't have the guts to go through with it.

Other girls thought the reason for the disappointing response was due to parental upbringing and personal morals.

"I think it would be a real blast," Jodi Brookes, a sophomore in business, said. "But if my parents ever found out they would have a fit."

But Mary Kramer, a sophomore in economics, said the whole thing is "disgusting and degrading."

"Nudity is something that should be kept in the privacy of your own home."

news plus

On Sept. 6, the Arizona Board of Regents approved the latest tuition hike for the state's three universities. The action followed weeks of extensive lobbying against the move by various student organizations.

In this week's News Plus, State Press reporter Rich Palmay examines the controversial methods and philosophies that are used to determine the amount of each tuition increase. — Ed.

The out-of-state student — friend or foe of the university system?

Depending on who is doing the talking, the out-of-state student is either a misused victim who pays through the nose for an education away from home, or a free-loader who gets his degree without paying taxes to support the university.

Student lobbyists support the non-resident, stating that the university systems should not have to rely on scalping out-of-state students to pay the bills.

"I don't see any reason why a wealthy university system such as Arizona's would burden the out-of-state student," Arizona Students Association Director Kurt Freitag said.

"What I would like to see is non-resident tuition be decreased. I don't think it would inflict any hardship on the universities or the state and it would help non-resident students who are, quite frankly, counting pennies to go to school," he added.

The Arizona Board of Regents disagrees. As part of the latest tuition hike, out-of-state students were made to pay a higher percentage of their Cost of Education than had been required in past years.

Regent Rudy Campbell said he feels non-resident students who are receiving their education at Arizona's universities are getting a "bargain."

"They (non-resident students) can pay out-of-state tuition cheaper here than they can pay at home. They're getting a bargain here and they know it," he said.

This attitude and the recent out-of-state tuition hikes could discourage non-resident students from attending Arizona's schools in the future, according to Associated Students President Tom Ajamie.

"The increase could cause detriment by excluding out-of-state and out-of-country students and their experiences in background and cultural life," he said. "You can learn as much in class as you can from someone else."

Board President William G. Payne said he does not feel the increase will turn away non-resident students.

"We don't think so," he said. "Only time will tell. But because it hasn't happened before, we don't think there will be a decrease in out-of-state enrollment."

"I've always felt the universities need a certain number of out-of-state students to go with the (experience) that universities encompass," Payne added.

Freitag said many people in the state and some board members feel the regents want non-resident students only because of the added revenue they bring to the universities.

"(The feeling is) we want to keep them (non-resident students) around because they pay all this money," Freitag said.

"The universities are not really happy about out-of-state students at state universities, but as long as they (the students) pay the money they're not going to turn them away," he added.

Freitag said he would like to see the labels of "resident and non-resident student" abolished altogether.

"I would like to see a system where all the states would

Out-of-state tuition becomes subject of heated debates agree not to make that distinction," Freitag said. "We all live in one country."

"If everyone could agree to that, it would be the best system to use. In the long run it would give everyone a greater, wider choice in the schools that he or she might attend."

"It would also save time and money as to making the distinction between in-state and out-of-state students."

Campbell said such a proposal is impossible.

"No two states or government entities have the same tax base. You can't bring in a guy from Nebraska and tell him he doesn't have to pay out-of-state tuition because Nebraska doesn't contribute to Arizona," he said.

Freitag said another reason for the recent increase is some state legislators and a limited number of university administrators think a tuition jump is necessary to show the quality of education at Arizona's schools.

"In order to indicate that education in Arizona is worth something, they like to bring the tuition up to the level of other states," Freitag said.

But Campbell said tuition must be increased to improve the quality of the universities.

"ASU is behind in salaries so we can't attract top scholars and professors," he explained. "We can't afford to pay what we'd like to pay. If we want to keep the cost down, we're going to keep the quality down."

Besides paying out-of-state tuition, non-resident students also provide the state with revenue from other sectors, Ajamie said.

"Out-of-state students contribute millions of dollars to the state in rent, food and other areas," he said. "If they leave you're going to be missing out on a lot of money."

"There are not that many (non-residents). There are only about 8,000, but that's a large fraction that can't be disregarded."

Campbell agreed that non-resident students do bring money with them, but said the money generated by them goes to the state and not the University.

"They're bringing in money in rooms, food and services but it (the money) doesn't come to ASU. It goes to the state coffers," Campbell said.

Ajamie and Freitag also criticized the Cost of Education (COE) method of determining tuition. In the latest tuition hike, the regents raised the out-of-state student's share of the COE.

Freitag said using the COE results in tuition costs rising whenever the state Legislature gives the universities more money. Bigger budgets mean larger operating costs, and subsequently higher tuition, he said.

"The richer they (Arizona's universities) are, the richer they get. The poorer they are, the poorer they get," Freitag said.

"This is the wrong approach to take," he said. "Rather than say we're going to do this ...and increase tuition to cover it, we should do the opposite."

Ajamie said "education should be brought to you at the lowest price possible."

"If you have an increased amount of money from the Legislature, you might take some of the weight off the students," he said.

The relationship between rising tuition and university budgets under the COE method is just a part of how the system works, Phillips said.

"This is the trap you'll fall into when you base it (tuition) on the COE," he said.

The $3,438 COE was "as cheap as possible," Campbell added.

Campbell said ASA's proposal to base tuition on the Consumer Price Index (CPI) was discussed in the past but was rejected by the students.

"A year and a half ago, we were going to tie tuition to the CPI," Campbell said. "But it was inadequate. Inflation has nothing to do with education. The CPI didn't relate to the cost of education and we had to abandon the CPI as a guideline."

About the only thing both factions agree on is the idea that the price of an education should be kept as low as possible.

Phillips said he would like tuition to be free but the Legislature "won't let us get away with it."

Cost of Education index computes tuition costs

A complicated statistic with a three-letter name determines how much higher tuition jumps each year for Arizona students.

The Cost of Education (COE) is an index compiled and used by the Arizona Board of Regents to compute the needed increase in tuition costs.

Compiled by the regents' staff, the COE pinpoints the average cost of education for one full-time student at Arizona's universities.

Two years ago, the COE was chosen over the Consumer Price Index as the indicator for figuring tuition hikes, according to William Phillips, academic planning coordinator for the regents.

"The University's staff, students' associations and regents reached an agreement that a fairer way would be to tie tuition increase with the cost of education," Phillips said.

"The only other decision after that is what percentage of the cost of education the students will pay."

In determining the COE, figures for the current year are taken from six different cost categories.

The total costs of instruction and student services are added to cost percentages of academic and instructional support for the universities.

That total amount is then divided by the number of full-time students at the university. The resulting figure is considered to be the cost to the state to send one full-time student to school for a year.

For the current 1980-81 year, the COE is $3,438. The regents use this figure as a base for determining the tuition for in-state students as compared to out-of-state students.

In past years, the regents had worked from what was called the "80 - 20 split." The ratio referred to a philosophy of residents paying 20 percent of their COE and out-of-state students putting forth 80 percent of the COE. That rationale was recently changed to put more of the tuition burden on the out-of-state student.

For the upcoming 1981-82 school year, the regents proposed in-state students pay 19 percent and out-of-state students pay 86 percent of the COE.

Tuition hike causes debate

It's not a question of whether tuition should go up. It's only a question of how much.

With tuition bills climbing higher every year, the Arizona Board of Regents and student lobbyists are at odds over how high those increases should be.

The regents justify their tuition hikes with a calculated Cost of Education (COE), a figure compiled by the board's staff which attempts to show how much taxpayers pay each time a student goes to school.

On the other side of the battlefield is the Arizona Students Association, which annually attempts to convince the regents that tuition is going up too much, too fast. ASA bases its recommendations for lower tuition increases on the Consumer Price Index (CPI) and the Higher Education Price Index (HEPI).

ASA proposes the regents take a 10-year average of the CPI and the HEPI, and use that percentage as the annual increase in tuition.

"The CPI and the HEPI are used by a number of schools nationally," said Tom Ajamie, Associated Students president and ASA member. "We don't understand why Arizona doesn't use them."

ASA lobbied for the proposal at the August meeting of the Ad Hoc Tuition and Fee Committee. But according to board residents pay 86 percent of the COE.

The regents justified the large increase on the basis of a COE that had skyrocketed in the past year. According to Huff, this jump was due to an "astronomical increase" in utility bills and a 13.5 percent salary hike for University employees.

But Ajamie said the ASA plan would provide "incrementalization," which would mean tuition hikes that could be planned for and worked into students' budgets.

"With incrementalization, you would know what to expect," he said. "I would know in four years what my tuition will be."

Besides the CPI/HEPI proposal, ASA uses other figures to

Rudy Campbell

president William Payne, the ASA plan is infeasible because the index was always "two years behind."

"You're not making ball-bearings," Payne said at the time. "You're trying to teach people to think, become scholars and have fuller lives. It's very hard to evaluate the cost."

Regent Executive Coordinator Robert Huff said the COE already tilts tuition increases in the students' favor.

"The COE this year is based on last year's cost," Huff said. "We're always a year behind, and we're giving students a break."

The students had lobbied for a tuition increase that applied equally to both in- and out-of-state students. Their proposal would have boosted tuition 8.7 percent across the board for 1981-82, yielding a $47 increase for in-state students and a $97.50 hike for non-residents.

However, the regents opted to stay with their formula, the COE. In addition, the board decided that non-residents should pay an even higher percentage of their COE than in past years. Tuition was subsequently raised to the point where residents now pay 19 percent of their COE, and non-try to sway the minds of the regents toward lower tuition. One fact commonly thrown at the regents by ASA is the issue of median tuition levels at "peer institutions."

Ajamie described "peer institutions" as other schools that are "comparable to size, services and academics with ASU."

ASA has chosen the University of California at Los Angeles, the University of Washington and the University of Houston as peer universities.

In lobbying for lower tuition hikes, ASA told the regents that the average 1980-81 tuition levels at these three universities — $615 for in-state and $2,334 for out-of-state — is much lower than at ASU.

However, the facts were shot down as lobbying devices by

"If you're going to dance you're going to have to pay the fiddler. In the past year, we've made all kinds of concessions to all kinds of requests, and now we're talking about paying for them."

— Rudy Campbell

a disagreement over the definition of "peer institution."

At the August meeting of the Ad Hoc Tuition and Fee Subcommittee, Bill Phillips, the regents' Academic Planning Coordinator, said the board had defined different peer institutions that showed ASU's tuition was not out of line with the national norm.

A subsequent short-lived motion to clearly define "peer institution" was voted down at the Sept. 5-6 full board meeting at Flagstaff.

Another ASA study relates the number of 20-hour work weeks at work-study wage a student must work to pay in-state tuition.

Kurt Freitag, ASA executive director, said students had to work about eight weeks full time to earn their tuition in 1972. It would take about 11 weeks of work to pay for the current tuition increase, he said.

news plus

But the regents have maintained that statistics are variable and do not always present a clear picture. According to regent Rudy Campbell, tuition increases are necessary to pay for expansion at the three state universities.

"If you're going to dance you're going to have to pay the fiddler," Campbell said when he first voted for the increase. "In the past year, we've made all kinds of concessions to all kinds of request, and now we're talking about paying for them."

Cougars in Tempe for Saturday game

Devils set for opener

By Jim Walters

Countdown to the Sun Devils' home-and season-opener against the Houston Cougars is tee-minus six days away and counting.

It will be a meeting of two of the winningest active coaches in college football and also a meeting of two different coaching philosophies.

ASU's Head Coach Darryl Rogers (92-66-6 overall) offers the passing-oriented, put-it-up type offense and Cougar Head Coach Bill Yeoman (125-65-6 overall) is the "Father of the Veer" — which means ball control.

The Devils and the Cougars have met five times in the past and ASU holds a 3-2 edge in the series. They have won the last three in a row, including a 30-9 pasting in 1974.

"We haven't beaten ASU in so long," Yeoman said. "We will be ready when we come up."

"We will be taking each play one-at-a-time," he added. "Anything more than that is when a team gets into problems."

One thing that is for certain is the Devils will see the Veer.

"We won't be doing anything different than we have in the past 16 years," Yeoman said. "The offense will be the same as it has always been."

Today, the Veer is a major weapon in college football, but it was found completely by accident.

Yeoman discovered the Veer in 1964 during a team practice.

"The offense was having trouble on the sweep," Yeoman said. "The tackle kept cutting in and catching the runner.

"I told the quarterback, on the next play run it into the line," he added. "We have been using it ever since."

After 16 years of using it and 18 years of coaching at Houston, Yeoman is starting to reap the benefits of his work.

Since 1966, the Cougars have been ranked in the Top-20 six years and in the Top-10 for four.

They finished fifth in both polls last year and defeated Nebraska in the Cotton Bowl, 17-14.

"But this year's team hasn't done a thing," Yeoman said. "If nobody slips and falls in the bath tub we should be healthy coming in."

The Cougars feature a high-powered offense with the entire starting backfield returning this season.

Senior Terry Elston will be stepping in at the starting quarterback's spot after coming through in clutch situations for the Cougars last year.

The Cougars will have two other seniors joining Elston.

Terald Clark, who ran for 1,083 yards and John Newhouse, brother of the Dallas Cowboys back Robert Newhouse, who averaged 8.9-yards a carry while racking up 623 yards on the ground. Elston added 321 yards to the attack.

"We work for consistency on offense," Yeoman said. "Our first offensive plays will be to the inside and if

Perrier run 'bottles' writer

By Charlie Diaz

As for exercise, if you have to take it, take it and put up with it. But as long as you have the price of a hack and can hire other people to play baseball for you and run races and do gymnastics when you sit in the shade and smoke and watch them — great heavens, what more do you want?

— Stephen Leacock

The idea of an out-of-shape, overweight sports writer running the Perrier Parcourse and writing about it seemed a little odd. We write about physical exertion, we don't actually delve into that dark realm of physical fitness ourselves. Sweat is a foreign word muttered by Jack Lalane groupies.

"He who can, does — he who cannot, teaches" George Bernard Shaw wrote. He who can do neither, writes. This sad state of affairs was brought to my attention by a heaving chest, a pulse rate of more than Mach 2 and numerous cries of agony from my cardio-vascular system.

And all this was before I ran the damned thing.

"Exercise, the last frontier..."

It wasn't until the third station, the one I dubbed "The Bad News Knees", that my muscles, ligaments and various sinews collectively rebelled. Twenty-two years of sedentary living had taken its toll.

"The Bad News Knees" was actually a good stretching station. For this, the runner assumes a position not unlike that of a yoga enthusiast or a crane (the bird type).

The object was to introduce your chin and/or chest to your knee. This stretches the quadriceps and hamstring muscles and knees. But it hurts.

The two stations prior to "The Bad News Knees" were also stretching stations: the first for the achilles tendon and the second for loosening-up the legs more.

The course includes a few heartbeat checks and a board at the beginning of the course details the finer points of pulse checking. My pulse was 82 at the beginning and 163 in the middle. I don't know what it was at the end because I couldn't find it again.

"Kill the body and the head dies" — H.S. Thompson

I made a correlation between the Spanish Inquisition and some aspects of the parcourse. They both were well intentioned but, at times, torture.

The temperature was more than 100 degrees on Par Day. This was one contributing factor to my body feeling like some giant economy-size spider had made a juice break of my vital fluids.

Despite a touch of dehydration and fatigue, the course as a whole was not too demanding, there were just some stations that made up for the easier ones. The first five stations were merely for stretching and warming-up. The next five were bad news.

After walking between stations one and five, the course demanded a jog from station five to station 10. Station six merely required that I do the Pogo over planks. A snap.

Station seven was a breeze. Stepping onto and off a railroad tie wasn't too difficult.

At station eight, I hung from rings and gyrated to-and-fro like Gypsy Rose Lee. Hubba-hubba.

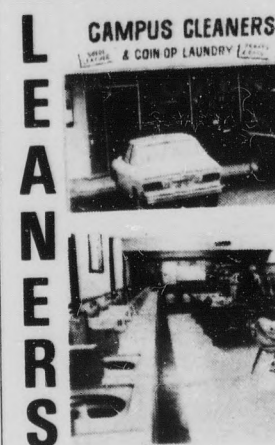

Station nine was the best of the course. I was directed to choose one of three benches with varying degrees of inclination. Each bench has a post to grab and essentially I pulled my legs up to assume a fetal position. This exercise is called a tuck and it gets those abdominal muscles working. Fast.

The next station, 10, is pullups. Enough said.

The first portion of running ends here as the course goes across the University

Archer plays Robin Hood

By Pete Prisco

To most people Robin Hood means taking from the rich and giving to the poor, but to ASU archer Rich McKinney, Robin Hood means excellence.

You see, in archery a Robin Hood is what they call a shot that splits an arrow that is already imbedded in the target — or in other words, precision shooting.

"A 'Robin Hood' is more luck than skill, although it does take a very good archer to do it," McKinney said. "I've done it 15 times, but I still consider it lucky."

McKinney was a member of the 1976 Olympic Archery Team, and finished a very respectable fourth.

"It was a unique experience, and one I'll never forget it," McKinney said. "But my emotion was mixed because of the politics which took place, involving Taiwan and the African countries."

This year, with the United States boycotting the Moscow Olympics, politics had it's biggest affect ever on the Games and McKinney said the boycott affected his shooting at the Olympic Trials this year.

"It's aggravating to have politics mixed in, and when I found out we weren't going I just lost some of my drive to compete," McKinney said. "I just didn't shoot well so I only made the team as an alternate."

Because McKinney competed in the 1976 Olympics, he didn't go to college right after high school, instead opting to train for four years.

"I didn't want studies to interfere with my training, so I thought sitting out would be better," McKinney said.

Having sat out those four years, McKinney was contacted by archery coach Sherri Rhodes in 1979. He liked the program and decided to come to ASU.

"People don't realize what a great team we have here," McKinney said. "Our top three men and women could go to the World Championships and win it!"

When McKinney says the archery team is great, he isn't just being optimistic.

"Our team won every title possible last year," McKinney said. "We won the men's and women's team titles, as well as individual titles in both divisions, and the mixed title."

Although the team as a whole did well, McKinney didn't live up to his reputation as a three-time National Champion. He won the title in 1977, '78 and '80.

"I finished third in the Collegiate Championships which was disappointing to me," McKinney said. "I think the adjustment to college life affected my shooting somewhat."

With a sport like archery, which is more mental than physical, McKinney spends most of his daily preparations with his brain.

"Archery is a very technical sport, which requires an extreme amount of concentration," McKinney said. "I spend one-to-five hours a day on mental preparations as compared to two hours a week on the physical aspects."

"If you do this, the shooting will become part of your subconscious state, and will happen automatically."

Although the archery program is one of the strongest teams at ASU, McKinney is upset because of the lack of publicity and fan support that the team receives.

"The media helps get fan involvement in sports, and I think a little publicity will help us draw a few more fans," McKinney said. "I mean after all, archery is no more boring to watch than golf, and look what television has done for that sport."

McKinney thinks if the fans do start coming out to watch the tournaments, they won't be disappointed in this year's team.

"The way things look now, we will have a better team this year than last year, if that's possible."

Cougars live on line

By Jim Walters

The "Cougar Crunch" may sound like a breakfast cereal, but it is one of the main reasons that Houston was ranked fifth in both the writer's and the coaches' polls last year.

The "Crunch" is the name that Head Coach Bill Yeoman affectionately uses to describe his defensive tackle tandem of Hosea Taylor and Leonard Mitchell.

A lot of their opponents would rather describe them as having graduated, but for now they are still in a Houston uniform.

Mitchell is 6-7, 270-pounds and Taylor is 6-5, 250-pounds. Both are seniors this year.

The twosome accounted for 135 tackles and sacked opposing quarterbacks 10 times last year helping the Cougars finish the season with an overall record of 11-1, tying Arkansas for the Southwest Conference championship. Houston accepted a bid to the Cotton Bowl and defeated the Nebraska Cornhuskers 17-14.

Their only loss was to archrival Texas, 21-13, in Texas.

The Cougars are being picked to finish fifth again this year.

"I thought the pressure might be bad, when I first heard we were being picked so high, but I played on a high school team that was the champion for three years — I don't think it will bother me anymore."

Taylor added, the pressure of playing in front of a hostile crowd of 70,000 won't effect him either.

"We play in Texas every year and their stadium holds 83,000," he said.

For Leonard and Taylor, sacking the quarterback is a favorite pastime. They have even taken it one step further than most tackles.

"We have a little side bet to see who gets the most sacks by the end of the season," Taylor said. "Just $500."

Taylor added that he was the big winner last season.

"I had seven sacks and Leonard had three," he said.

The ASU offensive line will have to be on their toes to keep this pair off junior quarterback Mike Pagel.

Pagel has a slight shoulder injury and the Sun Devils can't afford to lose him. If Pagel gets injured the Devils' could be in for an even longer season than most of the experts are predicting.

Houston is looking forward to playing ASU, but not looking past them.

"We know that we have to take each team as they come and Rogers like to do a lot of passing," Taylor said. "We'll have to be set for the run too."

Besides being big and mean, Taylor and Leonard also are leading candidates for the Lombardi and Outland Awards this year — given to the best linemen in the country. They both are hoping to add to the numerous honors they won last year.

It should be an interesting fight between the two Houston and the Panther in Pitt, Hugh Green.

"It's really great having Leonard on the other side," Taylor said. "He has been a benefit to me."

Opponents know that if they get past one of the tackles that the other can't be far behind.

Taylor

"It gives me a chance to gamble and try some different moves," Taylor said. "I know that if I try something, Leonard is going to be right there — just his presence adds a lot to my game."

Football has often been described as a game where the team that can control the line of scrimmage is going to win the football game. The philosophy isn't lost on the Houston tackles.

"I just go out there and play the man and read the key," Taylor said. "We know that if we do our job the team is going to look good."

"We have a lot of young players on this team and with David (Hodge, All-Conference linebacker who graduated last season) gone we will have a few question marks going in," Taylor said. "It will make us work harder and give us something to shoot for every week."

Taylor is hoping to play pro football next year and he is gearing himself to have his best year ever, which is bad news to the opposition.

"One of my goals is to play to my potential," he said. "I try to play my best on every play. This year I want to reach that goal."

that doesn't work we go from there.

"We don't overpower anyone, but we feel we have to run to move the football," he added. "We play the percentages and go for consistency."

Houston should be a good test for the Devils' young defense.

The Devils' line has only one starter, Bryan Caldwell, returning from last year's squad.

Middle linebacker Joey Lumpkin will have his hands full trying to contain the Cougars.

The Cougars will throw the ball occasionally and flanker Eric "Cat" Herring is usually on the receiving end when they do.

Herring made 11 receptions last year for four touchdowns. All his catches were instrumental in Houston victories.

He is the "Mr. Clutch" for the Houston team.

With 12 seconds on the Cotton Bowl clock, Herring caught a six-yard pass to propel the Cougars to a come-from-behind victory.

The Devils' defensive backfield is the solidest part of the defense. Starters Michael Lee, Ron Brown, Ralph Dixon and Mike Richardson are working well together and should be able to help out on the run.

Richardson should be the key to the success in the secondary. He was picked Pac-10 second team honors last year — his freshman year.

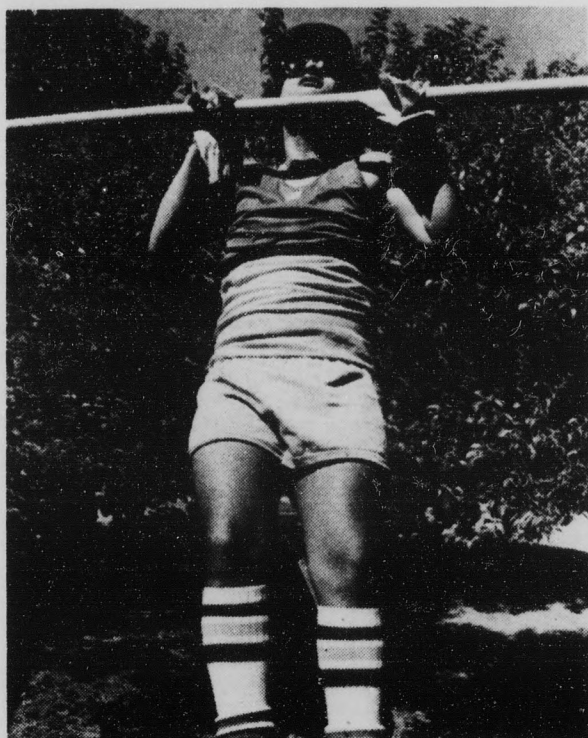

This year, Richardson is a strong candidate for first team honors.

When it comes to the defensive line, the Devils will have to take a back seat to the Cougars. Hosea Taylor and Leonard Mitchell are the best tackle tandem in college football.

"I keep telling them that I never saw two guys win a football game," Yeoman said. "We will need a good team effort."

Boulevard bridge.

Across the bridge at station 11, I didn't do the exercise because the darned thing felt so silly: kicking the palm of my hand as I had my arm extended at my side was not my idea of dignity. Besides, it was hot.

There is a jog from here to station 12, which consisted of a sloping rail that one hops over. It is also a heart-check station. Mine was still working so I went on.

No. 13, back on campus, was situps. They were a breeze compared to the tucks.

After another jog, I reached station 14 — almost home. Pushups were called for. I answered.

A scenic stroll past Old Main brought me to No. 15, which called for sitting down and straddling a post with the legs and lifting them up and down. Sitting was welcome.

At station 16 I had to locomote, using my hands, over two metal rails. Two hot, sun-seared metal rails. Coppertone-time for the hands.

Seventeen was a stretching warm-down and 18 was a zigzagging wooden rail that I had to walk on. After all the physical abuse, this station was easy — all it required was an infinitesimal amount of coordination. I fell off. More than once.

"It is better to have loafed and lost than never to have loafed at all" — James Thurber

ASU wins tournament

The first annual ASU Invitational volleyball tournament is history and ASU coach Dale Flickinger's team will go into the books as the first champion.

The Devils beat UA in two games, 15-7 and 15-8, to win. The Wildcats had beaten ASU 16-14 and 15-10 in earlier play. Both schools advanced to the semifinals where ASU beat Colorado State twice and UA beat San Diego to advance to the finals.

ASU won its first four pool matches before losing to the Wildcats. Flickinger said the loss seemed to get the Devils working harder.

"Once we lost," Flickinger said, "we really started to get bullish. In the last two matches, we really played well."

ASU began the Invitational, which was Friday and Saturday, with a Friday afternoon win over New Mexico, 15-9 and 15-6.

Saturday, the Devils beat Central Arizona College 15-9, 15-9 and San Diego, 15-6, 15-12.

Colorado State took the Devils to three games before ASU beat the Rams, 13-15, 15-11 and 15-12.

The official AIAW rankings list ASU tied for No. 19 in a preseason poll.

Running notes

Sabrina Peters beat New Mexico's Connie Riegelman by nearly a minute in the Sun Devils women's cross country opener, but the Lobos won by one point, 28-27.

Peters ran the 5000-meter Rolling Hills course in 18:48 followed by Riegelman who ran a 19:36.

ASU freshman Sandy

Beach was third, finishing .07 behind Riegelman.

Although the Devils had seven runners score, as compared to six for the Lobos, New Mexico placed five in the top eight.

UA's Wildcats will be ASU's next opponent. The dual meet is scheduled for 8:30 a.m. at ASU.
