Martinez, Colby submit resignations

One leaves in June; one gets temporary job

By Phil Roth
Staff writer

The director of financial aids and the ASU comptroller have resigned.

Daniel Martinez and Stephen Colby turned in their resignations Monday. Roger Swanson, acting vice president of student affairs, said Martinez' resignation is effective June 30.

Frank Sackton, vice president for business affairs, said Colby will be temporarily reassigned as his special assistant.

Martinez' decision to resign was his own, Swanson said. He said the resignation letter stated Martinez "wanted to look for opportunities in other areas."

Martinez would not comment on the resignation.

Colby was replaced by Gerald Snyder, formerly the associate comptroller, who took over the job Tuesday.

Sackton said as temporary special assistant to the vice president for business affairs, Colby will contribute to the formation of policies for the Office of the Comptroller.

"I want to use his services for transition and change-over and . . . to help me write a policy manual (for the comptroller's office)," Sackton said.

He added Colby was given a leave of absence to explore employment prospects.

Colby was in Houston, Texas Monday night for job interviews, according to his wife.

Charles Riley, assistant comptroller, said, "the University has lost a good friend and a good employee." But he added, "the vice president has the right to choose his own team."

Sackton agreed: "In a reorganization, changes will occur."

He was referring to a reorganization of the ASU administration announced in mid-September by President J. Russell Nelson.

Nelson had said in September that his goal in reorganizing was to bring the related functions together and to more clearly define responsibilities.

He is expected to announce details of the reorganization plan early next month.

Nelson said Tuesday he could not discuss personnel matters.

After disclosing Martinez' resignation, Swanson said he wanted to dispose rumors of other resignations.

"Nobody else in student affairs that I know of is resigning or is being asked to resign," he said.

Sackton said he was aware of no other immediate resignations of those employees under his supervision.

Colby was the assistant comptroller before former Vice President for Business Affairs Jack Penick appointed him comptroller in 1974.

Penick was asked to resign last November by Nelson.

Previous to his work at ASU, Colby was an audit staff supervisor for the accounting firm of Ernst & Ernst in Columbus, Ohio.

Martinez has been the ASU financial aids director since August 1980. He previously was assistant director of financial aids at New Mexico State University, where he earned bachelor's and master's degrees.

Swanson said a nationwide search for a new financial aids director will begin soon.

The ASU Financial Aids Office annually administers more than $20 million in assistance to ASU students.

The U.S. Department of Education issued a report early last fall stating the Financial Aids Office was "experiencing difficulties" in administering and coordinating student financial aid programs.

The lack of an adequate computer system to connect the office involved in administering financial aid was listed as a major cause of the problems listed in the report.

Another major problem was found to be the collecting of student loans, which is handled by the comptroller's office.

The Office of the Comptroller serves as the University's accountant, in charge of coordination of all ASU funds.

Economics professors decry Reagan speech on deficits

By Vivian Warner
Editor

Three ASU economics professors agree that President Reagan's State of the Union address Tuesday night offered little relief to economic woes, and an ASU political science professor thinks this is the wrong time for Reagan's "New Federalism" experiment.

Reagan announced in his speech that he will not raise taxes to close the expected $100 billion deficit, as some of his advisers have suggested he do. Rather, he proposed cutting $63 billion in social programs, excluding Social Security, over the next five years.

"Higher taxes would not mean lower deficits," Reagan said. "I will not ask you (Congress) to balance the budget on the backs of American taxpayers."

But economics professor John Cochran said Reagan's statements about deficit solutions were "absurd." Reagan could have decreased the deficits by raising taxes but probably did not because the move would be politically undesirable.

"He didn't want to (raise taxes), but that doesn't mean he couldn't," Cochran said.

Reagan told Congress that his economic program and tax cuts now in effect will stimulate the economy, increase savings and provide capital for home building and new jobs.

But Cochran foresees major economic problems ahead because of the budget deficit. He said the government will have to finance the budget by going into debt, which will drive interest rates even higher, discouraging private investment and prolonging the recession.

"We're in serious trouble," he said, noting that the savings rate is low and that government debt will crowd private investors out of the market for loanable funds.

Cochran said the 9 to 12 percent inflation rate is lower now than when Reagan took office but said, "We're solving inflation at the cost of a recession due to our policies."

He added, "We're not solving the real growth problem, and we're not solving the unemployment problem."

Lee McPheters, also a professor from ASU's economics department, was even more pessimistic than Cochran, predicting a 12 percent unemployment rate and two to three years of "hard economic times."

McPheters also cited the budget deficit as a contributor to the economic slowdown, but did not favor a tax increase at this time.

The tight monetary policy being implemented by the Federal Reserve Board also will prolong the recession, he added.

Although the total effect of Reagan's economic policies have not yet been seen, assistant economics professor Dennis Hoffman said the outlook does not look very bright.

He too expects higher interest rates and higher unemployment due to the University Police officers Stewart Adams, left, and Jay Mounts hold down an unidentified man while handcuffing him after a minor disturbance on Cady Mall. According to police, numerous people called to complain that the man was disturbing people by shouting obscenities. Police asked the man to leave, but he refused. Sgt. Paul Lee of University Police said. When he continued to cause a disturbance, police handcuffed the man and took him off campus where he was released with a verbal warning.

Cuff luck

Reagan calls for transfer of social programs to states

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan asked Congress Tuesday night to join in "a single, bold stroke" by transferring $47 billion worth of federal social programs — and the taxes to pay for them — from Washington to state and local governments.

He said his plan, including the gradual shift over the next decade of the welfare and food-stamp programs, is designed "to make government again accountable to the people, to make our system of federalism work again."

It was the centerpiece proposal in a State of the Union message that promised better times, "much better," if the nation continues on his course of budget and tax reductions as the cure for recession and inflation.

Haig says Poland cast shadow on Soviet talks

GENEVA, Switzerland (AP) — Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr. concluded nearly eight hours of intense discussions with Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei A. Gromyko Tuesday night and said martial law in Poland had "cast a long and dark shadow" over every aspect of their talks.

He said that Gromyko, while expressing the view that the situation in Poland is a purely internal matter, nonetheless took part with him in a detailed "two-sided" discussion of the Polish crisis.

At a news conference, Haig described the talks as "very sober and extremely detailed," and said he told Gromyko the United States is prepared to begin negotiations on the reduction of strategic nuclear weapons "when conditions permit."

Law quirk robs Navajos of death benefits

(AP) — A quirk in law has left Arizona's Navajo dead in a state of limbo.

The law, passed in 1975, requires that a licensed physician sign all death certificates, but on the Navajo reservation that requirement is an impossibility, tribal leaders say.

Yet the requirement exists and tribal leaders say it has become impossible for survivors to obtain standard death benefits, including Social Security, Veterans Administration benefits and private insurance benefits.

Rep. Dan Peaches, R-Window Rock, said the problem affects at least 50 Navajo families each year and possibly as many as 150, with lost benefits amounting to as much as $10,000 per death.

More important than that, however, Peaches said, is that the survivors do not understand why someone who is dead can be considered "undead."

Pen threatens sword in Poland

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — A new protest letter from 27 intellectuals on Tuesday demanded Poland's martial law authorities end "beating, maltreatment and harassment of people deprived of their liberty."

The letter surfaced after parliament approved military rule and named a military historian to run the universities.

The protest, signed by intellectuals, writers and artists, said interned workers were getting worse treatment than intellectuals and called for publication of a full list of internees and the sites where they are held.

Informed sources estimate about 50,000 Poles are held under the martial law decree that suspended the independent union Solidarity Dec. 13 — more than 10 times the number the Communist regime admits.

Nuclear plant emergency ends

ONTARIO, N.Y. (AP) — The emergency caused by a steam tube rupture at the R.E. Ginna nuclear plant was declared at an end Tuesday as technicians worked to bring the reactor to cold shutdown.

The plant, run by Rochester Gas & Electric Corp., had been in emergency stages for 26 hours since the accident Monday morning.

"The emergency is over. The situation is stable. Operators are making preparations for the cleanup of the spilled water," said Jan Strasma, spokesman for the Nuclear Regulatory Commission. "It's the mop-up phase, if you will."

Officials said the reactor was cooling down satisfactorily and a cold shutdown — the process of bringing the reactor's temperature below the boiling point of 212 degrees at normal pressure — was hoped for by late Tuesday or Wednesday morning.

Top Kremlin aide dies

MOSCOW (AP) — Kremlin ideologist Mikhail Andreyevich Suslov, powerful member of the Soviet Union's ruling Politburo, has died and left a void in the aging leadership already beset by growing problems at home and abroad.

Soviet television reported Tuesday that Suslov died the previous afternoon, four days after suffering a stroke. He will be buried in Moscow's Red Square beside other famous Communists, the broadcast said.

Suslov was known in the West as a powerful but mysterious man who worked closely with Soviet President Leonid I. Brezhnev, 75. To his countrymen, Suslov was the guiding ideologist of the Soviet Communist Party, which dominates every aspect of Soviet life.

Black Atlanta teen testifies suspect lured him

ATLANTA (AP) — A black teen-ager testified Tuesday that Wayne B. Williams lured him into a car and fondled him sexually and that on another occasion he saw Williams get into a car with a youth who was later killed.

The witness, called by the prosecution in Williams' murder trial, said he saw the defendant and 14-year-old Lubie Geter get into a car in south Atlanta on Jan. 2, 1981, the day Geter disappeared.

The youth, who was not identified by the prosecution, testified that he remembered Williams as the man who had approached him in the same area in August 1980, invited him into a car and fondled his sex organ.

LDS church to highlight its women

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — The Mormon Church has announced plans for a series of activities in March designed to pay tribute to the faith's female members and to showcase their achievements.

"We want women all over the world to know that Mormon women do have intelligence and knowledge," said Barbara B. Smith, president of the church's 1.6 million-member women's Relief Society.

The activities will include concerts performed by Mormon women in five cities, scholarly papers written by women, and home and community service projects organized and produced by women.

The presidents of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints' Relief Society, Young Women and Primary organizations outlined the plans in a news conference Tuesday.

Mrs. Smith said it was coincidental that the activities are being held just three months before the deadline for ratification of the Equal Rights Amendment, which church officials oppose.

Balance of academics, cuts sought

Donations to get more emphasis

By Jim Austin
Staff writer

To balance academic excellence with legislative budget cuts, the University will increase its emphasis on private donations obtained by the Development Office, the assistant to the president said Tuesday.

Troy Crowder said funds and other gifts donated to the office — which now average about $5 million a year — will have greater importance in the functioning of the University in the future.

"In order to become outstanding, we (ASU) need a combination of support, and voluntary support is a very important part," he said. "All universities, especially now, are counting on it."

Last year ASU was faced with an all-around 5 percent budget cut imposed by Gov. Bruce Babbitt on all state agencies.

To absorb the budget cut, ASU's College of Education had to sacrifice a portion of its capital investment fund, and the College of Engineering had to relieve graduate and undergraduate assistants.

More recently, ASU President J. Russell Nelson made a request last week to the joint House and Senate Appropriations Committee for a $108 million budget appropriation.

Nelson's request, 12 percent higher than last year's appropriation, met recommendations of $94 million from legislative staff and $91 million from the governor.

Lonnie Ostrom, the Development Office's new director, said ASU's goal for academic development will require more private funds to supplement governmental appropriations.

"We're in a development mode and we need to generate resources," he said. "We need private donations to supplement our state-appropriated funds."

Ostrom said he plans to spend some time with the department deans to assess the University's greatest needs.

He said he will then seek private donations and assess what Valley companies would like to see at ASU.

"We can't be a great University without community support," he added.

Carl Miller, the office's former director, said the Development Office's changing role presented a perfect opportunity for a new director to move in.

"We're beginning a new phase of development, which is seeking additional funds from private industries," he said. "As far as I'm concerned, it's also an ideal time for a new director to grow together with a new administration."

Miller, who founded the office in 1972, resigned on Jan. 14. He said that after he leaves ASU in August, he plans to join two Phoenix executives in forming an agency to advise businesses on philanthropic activities.

Crowder said the Development Office has made significant progress since its creation.

He said 10 years ago the office was bringing in only $400,000 a year.

Cutback compliance includes termination of personnel, class offerings in many colleges

By Scott Knutson
Staff writer

A 5 percent budget cut imposed by Gov. Bruce Babbitt on all state agencies has forced the College of Engineering and other colleges to cut back on their services, an assistant dean of the College of Engineering said Tuesday.

George Beakley said the Arizona Board of Regents' request for ASU to follow Babbitt's 1981-82 budget cut the college between $18,000 and $19,000 per semester.

"That is just from the core courses," he said. "That's just half of the courses offered."

Beakley added there has been some dissension among students because of the reduction in evening classes, but he said it could not be helped.

"I'm crying too," he said. "They are hitting me where it hurts. But I support the

the end of the semester.

Elmer Gooding, acting academic affairs vice president, said all colleges have been affected by the decrease in the University budget.

"It (the budget) has reduced the ability to offer additional classes that we might have opened," he said. "We have also lost various kinds of support, equipment and research."

Some new or unfilled restrict the number of graders we have assisting the faculty in large classes," he said. "We are also restricting some of the purchases for the (new engineering) building. We just hope this will not affect the quality of education."

He added it is too early in the semester to determine how adverse the problem may become or what will happen next semester.

"It may (become worse)," he said. "In the larger classes, it may indeed become a problem."

David Bedworth, industrial engineering professor, said although the college will probably be able to handle the problem, he doesn't expect the students to be affected.

Robert Stout, dean of the College of Education, said his departments have suffered, but not to the extent of the engineering department.

"We reduced a number of courses offered in the spring," he said, "and we are not able to do program work or to buy equipment."

He added his graduate and teaching assistants were at the bottom of the list of cutbacks.

"We protected them," he said. "They were the highest priority."

Bob Ballard, coordinator of administrative services for the College of Business Administration, echoed Stout's thoughts.

"Basically, it didn't affect our classes," he said. "But it internally caused problems. We had to take away some of our graduate assistant help that helped teachers, but they were people we could have hired."

The budget cuts have reduced the ability of ASU to offer additional classes and have caused the loss of various types of support, research, equipment and the removal of some part-time jobs.

has caused some problems in areas of personnel and course offerings.

"Each institution involved had no choice — come up with the money. Luckily we were in a position to decide where the money would come from," he said.

The college cut out a "small percentage" of money slated for student paper-graders and other less visible services, he said.

Beakley said the college did not cut back on graduate assistants.

"We cut back on all temporary people and way back on evening courses," he said.

He said most of those being terminated would have made between $3.50 and $4.50 an hour and will save decision not to cut the grads."

He said the cutbacks have forced the college to have graduate assistants teach classes, a policy the college doesn't ordinarily follow.

"Philosophically, this is something we don't do," Beakley said, "but we had to reallocate these people to do this."

Beakley added the cutback in teacher assistants has caused some professors to cut back or stop completely handing out homework.

"I don't think anyone likes it," he said. "Our professors like to give homework and have it returned the next day. It's good educational experience."

Beakley said he hopes the problem will be resolved by faculty and student part-time positions have been removed because of the cutbacks.

"We went through and scooped up those people that weren't firm," he said.

Gooding added that the budget cut, the money from which will be carried over into next semester, was designed to ease the University into the 1982-83 school year.

"The fact that we will have carried it over will at least give us a start for next year's budget," Gooding said.

Imre Zweibel, chairman of the chemical engineering department, said his department has not fared well with the cutbacks.

"Initially, we have had to

The man who never alters his opinion is like opinion

On the evolution of an opinion

Vivian Warner
Editor

Thank goodness it's a woman's (and anyone else's, really) prerogative to change her mind.

I know that sounds like a flimsy excuse, but surely one must be able to change his position after new information is collected without losing his credibility. So, I've changed my mind about creationism.

Last semester I graced this page with an editorial asking that creationism be taught in schools just like any other theory. And I accused the scientific world of using its own prejudices to keep legitimate but unpopular material from being presented in the classroom.

I was only half-right.

After following the suit against the Arkansas law that forced public school instructors teaching evolution to give equal time to creationism, it's clear the ones behind the bill were trying to give scientific validity to the Genesis story, as they have interpreted it.

Federal District Court Judge William R. Overton correctly ruled that the Arkansas law was just an attempt to teach religion in schools under the guise of science.

Despite Overton's ruling, the fight isn't over.

A similar Louisiana bill is up for judicial review this spring, and now a member of the Arizona Legislature is writing an evolution bill of his own.

Unlike his Arkansas counterparts, Rep. Jim Cooper, R-Mesa, plans to approach this legislation correctly, so it will stand up in court. He says his bill will not force public school instructors to supplement their courses with creationism.

Rather, Cooper just wants to see to it that teachers present evolution the way it ought to be — as a theory, not as a fact.

I don't think the Legislature is the right place to be deciding on such a matter. It seems teaching methods ought to be left up to boards of education and such.

But I'm glad someone is addressing the real problem — that many science teachers are handing students evolution dogma rather than mere evidence that seems to point to evolution.

A scientific fact is something that can be observed. A scientific theory is a speculation drawn from a set of observed facts.

Scientists have seen fruit flies mutate in a laboratory. But they have not seen fishlike creatures walk out of a primordial pond and transform themselves into reptiles.

Mutation is a fact. Continual evolution of simple and inferior species into new complex and superior ones is a speculation based in part on that fact. Indeed, to believe that man evolved from an ancestral ape — to believe in something no one has seen — is more than speculation; it is an act of faith.

Of course plenty of evidence exists to support the theory of evolution. Hence its widespread acceptance in the scientific world. But it cannot be disputed that this same evidence is not without other possible interpretations. Nor can it be argued that further evidence yet to be discovered by scientists could not possibly cast doubt on some modern conclusions.

For example, recent discoveries about the movement of galaxies have led some scientists to conclude the universe is half as large and old as currently believed.

So it is with science. Old concepts are constantly being rejected in favor of new ones that better explain the most current data. So it follows that science teachers should never present a theory as if it is the last and only word on the subject. They should explain the leading scientific theories along with its supporting evidence.

The problem is this is not what many children get in schools. Instead they see drawings in textbooks of apes evolving into men and are told this is the way it happened, period. Some teachers even go so far as to scoff at the possible existence of God and claim the universe made itself or is eternal. Yet, every good scientist knows that data about the physical universe cannot disprove the existence of a divine first mover.

It's easy to see why some religious people have been offended by the way evolution is presented — as some sort of competitor. They don't want their children to be led to believe the fallacy that science has made God obsolete.

However, the solution attempted in Arkansas was the wrong one. Attempting to prove God exists with science is just as bad as using science in the reverse direction.

Science and religion just don't mix. One discovers empirical truths about the physical world and its attributes; the other strives to know what lies behind the physical world, what created it and gives it meaning.

So Cooper has a good idea here, keeping science and religion separate. Science teachers should not make metaphysical statements or sneer at religious beliefs, but teach theories as theories and facts as facts.

Our legislators drink and vote

Adrianne Flynn
Asst. City Editor

In an effort to soften the drinking age bill currently in the Legislature, the Commerce Committee, a la Rep. Pete Corpstein (R-Paradise Valley), has tacked an amendment onto the original bill that would allow 19- and 20-year-olds to drink in "controlled situations" such as bars and restaurants rather than prohibiting them from alcohol purchase altogether.

In the words of Rep. Jim Skelly, R-Scottsdale, this amendment is "utterly inane."

The Commerce Committee has missed the point of the entire bill. The issue surrounding the bill was to curtail accidents resulting from drunk drivers — this amendment would just create more of them.

Nineteen- and 20-year-olds would not be allowed to purchase packaged liquor to drink in the privacy of their own homes, but would be allowed to drink, and get drunk, in a "controlled situation" and then, still under "control," they would drive home.

In other words, the Legislature has deemed 19- and 20-year-olds responsible enough to drink and drive, but not responsible enough to drink and stay home.

But that is not the only problem with this amendment.

The committees also refused to allocate funds for better enforcement of the bill, rendering those "controlled situations" much less controlled than they should be.

Don Reno, a local club owner, said his clubs, Dooley's, Donny O'Brien's and Butch O'Leary's, have only been checked for liquor law violations once or twice in the in the past six years. That's not a lot of control.

As silly as this bit of legislation may seem, Corpstein may have had another, more legitimate, purpose in mind when authoring this amendment.

Corpstein said he feels 19- and 20-year-olds are just as responsible as 21- to 25-year-olds and that if his amendment is removed from the bill he will do everything he can to get it killed. Maybe by introducing this preposterous amendment he is trying to show how really pointless this whole issue is.

Maybe I'm being rather presumptuous, but it appears likely that Corpstein has shrewdly manipulated things so the drinking age is not raised, 19- and 20-year-olds can still drink, and the bill, even if it manages to pass with such a contradictory amendment and a lack of vital funds, will be pointless and ineffective.

Unfortunately, this entire "inane" situation seems to typify the way government is run. It takes a ridiculous amendment to circumvent an even more ridiculous bill.

Another Ned fan speaks out

Editor:

The editorial cartoon about the ASU men's basketball team was in poor taste and took a cheap shot at one of the truly nicest men at this institution — head coach Ned Wulk.

If Wulk was as poor a coach as depicted in the cartoon, I doubt he would have been allowed to run the team for what has been almost 25 years.

It's obvious Miss Karen Portik knows nothing about sports — especially what is going on with the men's team this year. Little does she know the team starts two freshmen and substitutes two more.

How about really sizing up the situation before you get your next idea for a cartoon, Miss Portik. Otherwise you bring down the entire publication's reputation, labeling all of us as know-nothing kids trying to make a name for ourselves.

Theory called unscientific

Prof lectures on creationism

By Laura Stahl
Staff writer

In recent years spokesmen for the radical religious right have demanded balanced treatment of creationism in the public schools, said an ASU geology professor.

Robert S. Dietz said the approximately 30 million believers want their "creation science" to be presented on equal time with evolution as an explanation for the beginning of life.

The only problem, Dietz said, is it's not science but religion.

"The objection of the scientific community is that they're attempting to establish by legislative fact something which has not been discovered in the marketplace of scientific ideas," he said.

Dietz spoke to approximately 75 people at a luncheon Tuesday at the All Saints Newman Center.

Dietz said equal time for both views is not fair. The ideas presented by creationists are not equal to the concept of evolution. The evolutionary theory has been investigated for nearly two centuries using scientific study, testing and research.

"They (scientific creationists) do very little testing, reporting or gathering of data. It's a propaganda agency," Dietz said. The agency distributing materials about creationism is a lobbying group called the Institute for Creation Research in San Diego, Cal.

"The agency is well-financed and there is an air of confidence about the place. Many of the people working there have Ph.D. after their names but they belong to the idiotic fringe of science," he said.

Creationists start with faith in a particular description of the beginning of the universe and nature drawn not from scientific observation but from the Bible, Dietz said.

"Their pitch is not to establish special creation but to disestablish evolution," he said.

He explained that the creationists give no scientific evidence in favor of their view. They say if the theories of evolution are lacking in some point, that is reason enough to accept creationism.

This view is very different from that held by the scientific community.

Dr. Robert Dietz,
ASU Department of Geology

Science gives tentative answers to questions about nature, then as new facts emerge, scientific theories also change. Science has no absolute facts, many things are falsifiable, Dietz said.

He said some of their views include a hyper-literal interpretation of the Bible for example they believe the Earth is 10,000 years old and there has been never been a regeneration of new species.

He mentioned a recent poll which indicated many people don't believe in creationism but prefer it because they are uncomfortable thinking they have common ancestry with the apes.

Beth Sand, a graduate assistant in political science, said the presentation was good and the argument convincing.

"The only problem I saw was perhaps the rules of science should be questioned. Scientific rules are not the only rules to play the game by," she said.

Dietz said he became involved in the controversy because as a scientist there comes a point when you must react to something like this.

"If I do not react, in two or three years there will be a knock on the door and they will tell me to teach creationism in my classes."

Dietz said 20 states have legislation pending and he hopes they are all dropped as was an Arkansas creationism/evolution balance treatment act ruled unconstitutional in federal court on Jan. 5.

Creationists offer no scientific evidence to support their view. Their aim is not to establish special creation but to disestablish evolution.

Controversy causes chairman to resign

By Phil Daschner
Staff writer

Proposed changes in the Associated Students' constitution have sparked controversy among Constitution and Bylaws Revision Committee members.

Meanwhile the committee's chairman has resigned to pursue academic obligations.

Two of the six members have said proposals tentatively passed by the committee would weaken the present constitution and bylaws, which the group was assigned to "clean up."

Tim O'Neill, ASASU campus affairs vice president and committee member, said a proposal to give the student court authority to interpret the U.S. and Arizona constitutions would give the court too much power.

"It reduces the separation of power," O'Neill said. "It will never allow ASASU to be as open as it should be."

Committee member Scott Glickstein, College of Business senator, said the proposed changes would make the court less credible because it is made up of students, not real judges.

"I sincerely doubt their decisions on anything involving constitutional law will ever hold any real credence with the student body," Glickstein said.

Committee chairman Jeff Clyman, ASASU senator from the College of Law, resigned from the committee during Tuesday's senate meeting. On Clyman's recommendation, David Adam, College of Business senator, was appointed as the new chairman.

Clyman said the proposals do not give the court the authority to interpret the U.S. or Arizona constitutions.

"The power of judicial review doesn't give the court the authority to determine whether a legislative or executive decision is the most feasible one," he said. "The question isn't whether a decision is right, the question is whether a decision is allowable."

Another proposal would make ignoring ASASU court mandates grounds for impeachment from an ASASU office.

O'Neill said making non-compliance of the court's decisions an impeachable offense actually gives the court the power of legislation, since the court could rule on issues that would set ASASU policy.

"That's taking power out of the Executive Committee's and (ASASU) Senate's hands and giving it to the Supreme Court," O'Neill said. "They should interpret the constitution and bylaw statutes of ASASU — that's their proper place."

Clyman said the impeachment provision is a valid one.

"In the spirit of the American Constitution... the committee felt that the senate should have the options of impeaching an individual for ignoring a judicial mandate determined by the third branch of government," he said.

O'Neill said the proposed strengthening of the court stems from incidents last year in which members of the Executive Committee ignored an ASASU Supreme Court decision that its X-rated film policy was unconstitutional.

When the committee ignored the ruling, the court was powerless to enforce its decision.

Speaker says increasing admission standards necessary due to deluge of incoming students

By David McKibben
Staff writer

Universities will have to raise admissions standards because of an increase in the percentage of high school graduates planning to attend college, a visiting guest lecturer in the College of Education said Tuesday.

Paul Briggs said 78 percent of students that start high school graduate, and about 50 percent of them plan to attend college.

In contrast, during the 1930s only one-third of those who started high school graduated, he said.

Roger Swanson, ASU acting vice president for student affairs, said the percentage of high school students going to college is increasing, but the number of college-age students is decreasing.

Briggs said, however, that a dip in the birth rate hasn't hit colleges yet and won't for another five years.

"It's just now hitting the eighth and ninth grades," he said.

Swanson added that non-resident enrollment has declined because of the bad economy.

He said he knows of no plans by the University to raise admission requirements.

Although Briggs advocates raising admission requirements, he is not opposed to the growth.

"In bigness, we have the opportunity to have specialists in many fields," he said. "This is something smallness won't provide."

He also said there is room for better quality and diversity with a big university.

Briggs, who advises Arizona school superintendents, said the public school system here doesn't have the same problems that occur in the East.

"Arizona is isolated from the economic problems the East is now experiencing," Briggs said. "We don't have the declining population in Arizona like we have back East."

Another problem that Arizona is isolated from is segregation, Briggs said. He said Arizona possesses a greater racial mix than most Eastern states.

Briggs added that the kind of people moving to Arizona, 38 percent of whom are college graduates, are good for the economy but bad for education.

"There is going to be a real shortage of quality teachers in the coming years," Briggs said. "Most graduates going into the job market want to go into industry."

He said something has to be done quickly, because soon there will be no scientists or mathematicians in the schools.

Briggs said President Reagan's budget cuts in education have not hit the Western states as much, because not as many people there depend on welfare money.

Briggs said he is very pleased with Arizona's emphasis on quality in education, but said the schools are lacking in vocational programs.

Women's history topic of program

A Reader's Theatre, based on interviews gathered for an oral history project on Arizona women, will be presented at the Tempe Community Center, 3500 S. Rural Road, on Feb. 3.

The free public program, funded by the Arizona

Humanities Council and co-sponsored by the Tempe Historical Society, will be held from 7-9 p.m. It will be followed by a group discussion.

The program is part of a year-long project begun last summer under the supervision of Dr. Mary Rothschild, Director of Women's Studies at ASU.

Among the topics to be discussed are the flu epidemic of 1918, statehood (1912) and participation in local political campaigns, schools, hospitals and churches. The project is hoped to stimulate discussion on the changing roles of women and the history of Arizona women.

More about Speech

FED's policy, a policy Reagan strongly supports.

Hoffman said the success of the supply-side program hinges on optimistic business expectations that will prompt investment. But favorable interest rates are necessary for business expansion and the budget deficits will keep interest rates high, Hoffman said.

"I see no good happening as a result of the deficits," he said.

Hoffman's solution to the deficit is cutting defense spending, he said. Reagan reasserted in his speech that defense was his top budget priority. He maintained cuts should come from social programs that he says are riddled with corruption and waste.

"If we're looking to close loopholes (in government programs)," Hoffman said, "we should close them fairly."

In his speech Reagan said the government will turn over to state and local governments more than 40 federal programs costing approximately $30 billion annually.

Reagan said the current federal subsidies to state and local authorities have led to distortions in the distribution of government power and resources.

In exchange for taking on welfare and food stamp programs, the federal government will absorb from the states the burden of paying for Medicaid. Reagan will also set up a Federalism Trust Fund in which federal revenues from excise taxes will be deposited to pay for the state's new responsibilities.

Warren Miller, an ASU political science professor, said Reagan's New Federalism is not likely to be given a fair chance because of the condition of the economy.

"The timing of the experiment is not a very good one," Miller said.

Even with the $28 billion trust fund, the states will be expected to pick up an additional $21 billion, and eastern and industrial states will pay the brunt of that, Miller said.

The states are "not at all prepared to absorb the additional expenses," he added.

Contest in fiddling scheduled at ASU

An old-time fiddling competition with prizes totaling $500 is scheduled at ASU on Feb. 23.

Entries are being accepted now through Feb. 16 at the MU Activity Center. The entry fee is $5 and participation is limited to the first 15 entries received.

Winners will be named at a "Fiddler's Fest" on Feb. 23 from 3:30 p.m. to 6 p.m. on the east lawn of the MU.

Cash prizes of $200, $150, $75 and $25 will go to open division winners of first through fifth places. Recognition will also be given to the outstanding youth participant (12 years and under), outstanding junior participant (ages 13-18), outstanding accompanist and outstanding ASU participant.

Contestants will be expected to play a hoedown, followed by a waltz and the option of a third tune of their choice. Participating fiddlers may play with one or two accompanists.

College women prefer coed sports

College Press Service

College women seem to be participating less in women-only intramural sports, but more in mixed-gender team sports on campus, according to various college intramural officials around the country.

"Women," says University of Minnesota intramural program coordinator Roy Tutt, "seem to find more fun and motivation getting involved in the co-ed sports. It's kind of a catalyst. Women don't have the same incentive playing woman-to-woman sports as they do men-to-women."

There are exceptions. At the financially-strained University of Michigan, Rochelle Bast of the recreational sports department reports a slight decline (in women's participation), but not because of a lack of interest. Due to our financial problems, we've had to cut our program slightly and also raise our entrance fees. We're down to 10 percent, but that's across the board, men as well as women."

Conversely, the University of Illinois women are participating more, but not in mixed-gender sports.

"We've seen an increase in women's participation, but it has been in a self-fitness direction," says Dean, assistant intramural sports director.

Semester at Sea takes students to 11

By Mike Phillips
Staff writer

Imagine taking a class in Greek history and doing field work in the shadow of the Parthenon.

Or sitting through a lecture on Buddhism, knowing in a few days you will be visiting India, observing the rituals of that religion first hand.

For nine ASU students there was no need to imagine last semester. They were part of the Semester at Sea program and in many ways the world was their classroom.

Starting from Seattle, Wash. on Sept. 7, the group weaved their way through 11 countries before docking in Miami, Fla. on December 17.

"I didn't know what to expect from the trip," said Tracy Schultz, an ASU business major making her first prolonged journey from land.

"But it was great. It was unbelievable how a program that size could run so smoothly. Everything was planned and very efficient," she added.

Semester at Sea is sponsored by the University of Pittsburgh and the Institute for Shipboard Education. Approximately 530 other students from various colleges accompanied Schultz on her voyage.

Among them was Susan Frisby, another ASU junior business major and Schultz's roommate for the journey.

Although the ports of call were designed for entertainment and discovery, Frisby said the class work aboard ship was no picnic.

"They were some of the hardest classes I've ever had," she said. "We had 53 days of class work throughout the semester and every one was intense."

Both Schultz and Frisby selected their classes before leaving ASU but each used a different philosophy.

"I selected mostly business classes to fit in with my major," said Frisby.

"The classes I took were normally ones I wouldn't," said Schultz. "I took a religions class and several classes dealing with different cultures."

All students aboard the ship took a core class which gave them background on the various countries they would be visiting. Waiting for those visits was perhaps the hardest thing about studying aboard ship, Frisby said.

"You get really excited sometimes," she said. "Studying

Students participating in the Semester at Sea program, sponsored by the University of Pittsburgh and the Institute for Shipboard Education, pause for a photo on the ship deck.

marketing just doesn't cut it. We were always anxious to reach port."

Once the ship docked, the students were free to do as they chose. Those unescorted forays provided students with some of their most vivid memories.

"I'll never forget Snake Alley in Taiwan," said Schultz, her face wrinkling at the thought. "People were biting off the heads of snakes and drinking their blood. It was supposed to be a fertility rite."

over the place," said Frisby. "He even took us home to meet his family and invited us to dinner."

"When it came time to pay him, he wouldn't accept a cent," said Schultz.

In India, Frisby had a go at a local fashion.

"I got my nose pierced," she said with an embarrassed giggle. "I thought it looked neat until I found out my parents were meeting me in Egypt."

"I promptly took the ornament out. It's a good thing I did," she added. "When I told my mother about it she almost choked."

The only place supervision was required on their travels was in The People's Republic of China.

"It was as if they were showing us only what they wanted us to see," said Schultz. "The society there is very backward. It's like stepping back into the '50s."

While they were in China, Egyptian President Anwar Sadat was assassinated while reviewing a parade in his homeland.

It was two days before Schultz or Frisby heard the news. When they arrived in Egypt, machine guns and trenches dotted the streets.

"Life in those countries is very different from our own," said Frisby. "That's one of the things I learned from Semester at Sea."

"You look at everything differently when you return," said Schultz. "When we docked at Miami I was surprised by the lights. No other port we visited was quite as bright."

"Many people say Americans are gluttonous. All I can say, from visiting other countries, is I know we have a lot," she added.

Both Frisby and Schultz felt their journey was an invaluable experience, however they would be hesitant to take the same trip twice.

"We only got four days in each port," said Schultz. "That's too short a time to learn much about any culture. If I travel again I will take my time."

"I'd definitely do it again if we traveled to different places," said Frisby. "I would recommend it to anyone."

Being land-locked this semester took some adjustment, according to Frisby.

"During my classes now I keep wishing we were pulling in to port," she said. "Staying in one place is hard to get used to."

"One guy from the ship tried it," said Frisby. "But we passed on that one."

Most of their experiences were not quite as shocking.

"I think the thing that sticks with me most is how friendly everyone was," said Schultz. "Wherever we went people went out of their way to make us feel comfortable."

A cab driver from Egypt comes to mind as both Schultz and Frisby reminisce.

"When this guy found out we were students he took us all

Conversational Coke machine entertains thirsty customers

The MU has a Coke machine that not only takes your money, but the greedy thing talks back to you as well.

The machine, designed for the sake of "novelty," has a talking box inside activated by the coin mechanism.

"The music and voice are on electronic microchips," the cold-drink manager for the Phoenix Coca-Cola Bottling Co. said.

"Adults are as fascinated with the Coke machine as children," Lonnie Culbertson said.

But students at ASU ceased to be fascinated with the machine last week when it stopped talking to them and started arguing with them.

"You need to put in more money," said the machine to a student who had already deposited 75 cents into its jaws.

"But you already ate 35 cents more than you were supposed to," retorted the fuming student, staring angrily at the machine.

Angry conversations with the machine persisted and it continued to devour money without turning over the goods until the repairman arrived.

"This is the first time we have had any problems with it," Culbertson said.

The repaired Coke machine now converses much more intelligently.

After depositing money, the potential soft-drink buyer is greeted with the words, "Hi, I am a talking Coca-Cola machine," accompanied by background music.

The machine then asks you to make a drink selection, and will tell you if your choice is sold out.

After giving the purchaser his drink, the machine says, "Thank you for using the Coca-Cola talking machine. Don't forget your change."

Adding the talking mechanism to a Coke machine costs an extra $300 Culbertson said.

The Coke machine, which was put in the lower level of the MU on Jan. 19, will soon be able to converse in Japanese as well as English.

Coca-Cola plans to teach it to say, "You need to put in more money," and other things in different languages, and have the machine distributed internationally.

"They are also making microchips to get it to say different things, (in English) Culbertson said. "It is kind of a deep, dark secret right now."

Within a month, the machine with the additional vocabulary should be out, Culbertson said.

Reactions to the talking Coke machine range from appreciation to terror Culbertson said.

"It really frightened one elderly lady," he said. "But most people love it. People buy as much as three cans, just to hear it talk."

During the Christmas holidays, the machine was located at Fiesta Mall in Mesa, and sold 285 cases of pop.

"An ordinary machine would have only sold about 60 or 70 cases," Culbertson said.

"People would buy a couple of cans of pop and then go get their friends to show the machine to them," he said.

The talking machine currently located in the MU is a roving one that will be relocated in early February. A permanent talking Coke machine will be placed in the MU later in February.

Alumni Association schedules programs in attempt to boost student involvement

The Alumni Association at ASU has a problem.

The students who pass through the University on their way to careers are often unaware the association exists.

To help solve this dilemma, the association has scheduled two alumni-student programs, said Elaine Stover, a Career Services adviser and developed is a career day in which alumni will introduce students to the working world.

She said alumni in various fields will invite interested students to a day on the job.

"It won't be just an attempt to find the student a job," she added. "It will just be to show what a particular career may be like."

everything from leadership workshops to scholarships.

Because the office provides such a wide array of services, it is crucial to make contact with students before they leave ASU, he said.

chairperson for the Student Relations Committee.

"We will be holding several 'Devil's Dinners' in the future where students, faculty and alumni can get together and talk about ASU in an informal atmosphere," she said.

An alumnus will host each dinner, to be attended by approximately 12 people.

Another program being director of ASU's Alumni Association, said these programs will serve both the participating students and the Alumni Association.

"The association exists to serve the University in any way it can," said Dotts. "This of course means the students, but many are unaware we serve that function."

According to Dotts, the association sponsors

Stover said students will be selected for these events from the Greek system, clubs and other such activities.

"We want to reach students who are involved in campus life now, because they will likely be the ones who will be involved with campus activities later," she said.

European faculty describe program

Two University of London faculty members stopped at ASU this week on their tour of the Southwest to tell students about graduate and undergraduate classes in Oriental and African studies at their school.

Mr. Michael Burrell, a lecturer on contemporary Middle Eastern history, and J.T. Bishop, registrar of the School of Oriental and African Studies, came to ASU Monday to study American views on Middle Eastern Studies, as well as to talk to ASU students and faculty about the London university's program.

The two have already visited nine California schools, and

"If any student capable of taking courses wants to be taught, he will be taught," Burrell said. "We have no minimum enrollment in our classes, and having classes with one student is not unusual."

Bishop stressed the personal side of the school and the academic quality of the institution.

"We deal with each student who applies or attends the school on an individual basis," he said. "We take a personal interest in all inquiries and applications."

He also noted that students from all over the world attend the school.

"Last year, the school had 83 nationalities represented, including about 65 American students," Bishop said.

they plan to go to the U of A and the University of New Mexico before returning to London.

"This (ASU) is the largest institute we've visited, and we've been surprised with the degree of activity and range of subjects studied here," Burrell said.

In his talk to a small group in the MU, Burrell said he and Bishop want to know what is going on in Oriental and African studies and keep up with changes.

Besides studying American universities, the two men hope to find interested students who may wish to attend the University of London.

Because of the low student/faculty ratio at the School of Oriental and African Studies — 4 to 1 — Burrell and Bishop stressed the individual attention students receive there.

Agriculture director to retire

Professor to pursue research

By Tracy Fletcher
Staff writer

The director of the division of agriculture in the College of Engineering will retire at the end of this semester to further the agribusiness research program at ASU.

Professor Richard Chalquest, who came to ASU in 1971, said he will retire from his administrative position in the agriculture school to pursue his interests in research and to teach at the University.

"We (members of the agriculture division) are trying to establish a nationally ranked agribusiness research program at ASU," he said.

He explained that currently the program at ASU is not nationally ranked because faculty members face heavy teaching loads and do not have time to put into research.

Clovis Haden, dean of the Engineering College, said Chalquest came to ASU during a period of reorganization in the agriculture division.

Changes started taking place there when the Arizona Board of Regents began moving toward the business aspect of agriculture and phasing out the traditional production side, which had been the agricultural emphasis at ASU.

Haden said Chalquest went "beyond the call of duty" by staying with the program for so long.

"He (Chalquest) wanted to go back to research for a number of years," Haden said, "so (his resignation) wasn't unexpected on my part."

"He stayed until the division was settled. It was his own choice to leave, but I would have been very pleased to have him stay as long as he wanted," he said.

Chalquest said he plans to research the international agricultural sector, especially commodity trading around the world.

The field of agribusiness research is "very fast-moving" because the members of the agricultural community are realizing the need to know more about the business procedures within the field, he said.

"Research can definitely help producers," he said. "Right now they're at the mercy of the market. But with certain business tools, they can establish a fixed price for their final product."

He also said that agribusiness research will help the consumer because they will not have to pay for losses or profits incurred by producers.

The specifics of his research project have not been formulated yet because his resignation is not effective until after the spring semester.

He expects some problems with funding, but no problems "beyond what anyone would expect to face."

"There is not an excess of funds around," he explained, "but with diligence... the funding is there."

He said he will begin submitting applications for both private and governmental research grants in July.

Debate series scheduled to spark student thought

By Michael Consol
Staff writer

A political union for the express purpose of holding campus debates has been formed as a spin-off of the Associated Students speaker series, the union's director said Tuesday.

Ted Groves said the union grew out of an idea by former ASASU presidential candidate Mathew Scully.

The debates will differ from the lecture series, in that a number of speakers will argue both sides of the issue whereas the lectures are given by only one speaker.

The purpose of the debates is to "stimulate student response and student thought on campus," Groves said.

The first debate, scheduled for Feb. 2 in the MU Arizona Room from noon to 1:30 p.m., will discuss nuclear power and the future of nuclear energy.

Groves said two engineers from Westinghouse Electric Corp. will square off against Nina Mohit, from the Arizona State Department of Energy, and Dan Hunter, president of Southwest Management Inc.

The Westinghouse engineers are taking part in the debate as part of the Campus America program. Both Mohit and Hunter have been invited by ASU's Citizens for a Non-nuclear Future.

"None of the speakers that we bring in are paid," Groves said. "We bring them in through different organizations. This way we get the talent, but through the organizations we don't have to pay for them."

Groves said the debates, which are open to the entire campus free of charge, will be formally run by a mediator. People attending will also have a chance to participate during the question and answer part of the hour-and-a-half debate.

In addition to the debate on nuclear energy, Groves said debates will also be held to discuss the proposed raise in the drinking age, the possibility of a pro football franchise in Phoenix, and abortion.

It will be champs vs. champs come Saturday

By Jeff Fries

Last year the bumper stickers read, "Omaha and Fun in '81."

This year, ASU head baseball Coach Jim Brock says, "We'll surprise you in '82."

Well, his self-proclaimed "surprise" will be unveiled at 1 p.m. Saturday when the present Devils tangle with former Devils in the 1982 Alumni game.

However, the new team may not turn as many heads as the alumnis.

The ASU faithful will get to take a swing down memory lane with the Dodgers' Ken Landreaux; Ricky Peters of the Detroit Tigers; last year's rookie sensation Hubie Brooks of the New York Mets; Gary Allenson of the Boston Red Sox; the Cleveland Indians' Alan Bannister; Darryl Jackson of the Minnesota Twins; the Montreal Expos' Ken Phelps; and Mike Soddors and Kevin Dukes from last year's national champions.

But the players won't be the only things disclosed to the public eye. The festivities will open with a dedication of new dressing room facilities at Packard, honoring the Devils championship years of 1965, '67, '69, '77 and '81.

In addition, the pregame activities will include a home run-hitting contest. Starting at noon, Landreaux, Soddors, Allenson, Bannister, former ASU catcher Mike Colbern, and current Sun Devils Alvin Davis and Chris Johnston will be swinging for the Salt River.

But the real uncovering will take place when the 1982 Devils, ranked third in the Collegiate Baseball preseason poll, take the field. Brock lost six starters and 11 lettermen from last year's 55-13 squad, so it goes without saying that there will be a few strangers wearing maroon and gold.

The Devils are deepest in the pitching department. Deep enough to afford moving sophomore Kendall Carter from the starting rotation to short relief man, taking over for the departed Dukes.

As a freshman, Carter compiled an astounding 19-1 mark, mostly as a middle-innings reliever. So if anybody can pull off 12 saves like Dukes did a year ago, Carter can.

"Kendall is obviously important because of his flexibility," Brock said. "We think his effectiveness will increase as a 'stopper' coming out of the 'pen. But if we need him in the middle innings or to start a game, he'll do it without an iota of difficulty."

However, this year's team leader isn't a member of the pitching staff, but is in the infield. The senior first baseman Davis has been named this season's team captain, and Brock couldn't be prouder of the 6-foot-1, 195-pounder.

"A.D. is everything you want in a player," said Brock, who opens his 11th year as coach of the Devils. "He's a leader on the team, and that's important. He's a top student in the classroom (studying banking), and that's important. Plus, he can hit and field, and that's important."

"He is one of the finest young men I've ever been associated with."

Equally as important were Davis' 1981 stats. As a junior, Davis committed only six errors in 600 attempts and struck out a mere 14 times in 215 trips to the plate. And, to add chocolate syrup to the vanilla ice cream, Davis batted .395, while clubbing four homers and knocking in 50 runs.

It's safe to say they made the right choice for team captain.

But Carter and Davis aren't the only talks of the town. If we really wanted to do some name dropping we could talk about outfielder Kevin Romine, who "may be the fastest player on the team," according to Brock.

That's why he'll make the switch from center to right.

"Moving him to right field shouldn't hurt him defensively," Brock said. "He's as good an outfielder as he is a hitter. And he's a great natural hitter."

Another outfielder that may come up in conversation is Mike Pagel, the all-purpose quarterback, who is taking over left field for the departed Stan Holmes. Or Gib Seibert, who is moving into Romine's spot in center.

"Anytime you can move a player like Kevin Romine to make room for a Gib Seibert, you can't be too bad off," Brock said. "Left field is a concern because it's not Mike's natural position. But he is such a good athlete that we have the confidence he'll be OK."

But one of the newcomers they soon may be talking about is Ronnie Salcedo. Salcedo is taking over for graduated third baseman Soddors, who's out of the same mold as Mike Schmidt.

"Our season will depend a lot on the season Salcedo has," Brock said. "He has all the tools to be the best third baseman we've had here, and that probably says it all."

If that doesn't, the new bumper stickers probably will.

There was good news and bad news for the ASU women's gymnastics team on Monday.

First the good news. The Devils scored an ASU-record 144.35 against the defending national champion Utah Utes.

The bad news is they lost the match, 146.85-144.35, dropping their record to 3-1.

The new school mark passed up the old one of 143.75 set just two nights earlier against Cal State-Fullerton.

ASU's Jeri Cameron captured the all-around title with a season high 37.50, in addition to winning the floor exercise with a 9.65 score and tying for the honors in the balance beam and uneven bars with a 9.25 tally.

The women's next home meet will be at 7:30 p.m. Thursday against San Diego State and Minnesota in the University Activity Center.

Badminton unit to host U.S. challengers

By Tony Alba
Sports writer

Most people picture badminton as a backyard game played by little old ladies in long, old-fashioned dresses and flowered hats.

If that's what badminton is to you, then you might be surprised at what will be on display Thursday night in the P.E. East Gymnasium when the ASU badminton team hosts the United States Challenge Cup team.

"Badminton is hard to promote because it has a bad image. But ... badminton is the fastest racket sport in the world."

—Dean Shoppe

You won't find any little old ladies running around. What you will find is some of the best badminton players in the world playing "an extremely grueling sport."

"Badminton is very hard to promote because it has a bad image," Dean Shoppe, captain of the U.S. Cup team said. "But the people can expect to see smashes leaving the racket at 180 kilometers per hour and players sprinting anywhere from one to three miles during the match. You also won't see players just hitting the bird to each other."

"Badminton is the fastest racket sport in the world," he added.

Shoppe will be one of eight participants for the U.S. team in tomorrow night's exhibition. Others include former ASU All-Americans Monica Ortiz and Cindy Levin.

"We have a total of 25 players, but we only play with eight at any one time," Shoppe said. "We choose the eight based on who is performing the best at the time of the match, the strengths and we wanted to have a road match at a low cost. This will give us a chance to play in front of a hostile crowd, and it will be a good testing ground for us because ASU is by far the strongest badminton program in the country."

Monica Ortiz will team with Nancy Narcowich against ASU's Eileen Morrison and Lisa DeRousie in women's doubles, while undefeated Bob Gilmore will pair with Shoppe to take on the Sun Devils' Solaiman Jonatan and Bob Gold in the men's doubles.

The men's singles match will feature former Minnesota Twins' second baseman Bill Richie against Rodney Barton for ASU.

"Richie played behind Rod Carew at Minnesota, and he got out because he didn't think there was much of a chance to play," Shoppe said. "Then he considered trying out for the Denver Broncos as a wide receiver, but he wasn't very big, and he was afraid he'd die."

The women's singles match between ASU's Heather Ross and Joy Kitzmiller for the U.S. team could produce the most exciting match of the evening.

"They have gone against each other several times this year, but neither one of them has been able to gain the upper hand," Shoppe said. "It should be a real grudge match and an interesting one to watch."

The mixed doubles will feature a family feud of sorts. Regina Rubin and Charlie Scarano for ASU will take on Cindy Levin and Paul Rubin (Regina's brother), who at 16 is the youngest player ever to play on the Challenge Cup team.

"That was a completely unplanned thing," Shoppe said. "If we would have known they were related, we wouldn't have done it."

Shoppe said he hopes to get about 500 people to the match that gets underway at 7 p.m. All proceeds from the meet will go to the ASU badminton team.

ASU returns to action Jan. 30-31 as they host the Arizona Open, featuring the top players from Arizona, California and New Mexico.

TUCSON (AP) — California State-Fullerton, Hawaii and defending champion Arizona State rank as the preseason college baseball favorites in the first 1982 poll by Collegiate Baseball.

More than 125 coaches from all parts of the country voted at the recent college baseball coaches' convention in Houston, Texas.

Stanford was ranked fourth and Michigan fifth, with Clemson, Oklahoma State, Fresno State, Mississippi State and Nebraska rounding out the top 10.

Others in the top 20 are Miami, Fla.; Western Michigan; South Carolina;

Texas A&M; Florida State; Houston; Maine; Lamar, Brigham Young and Virginia Tech.

Arizona State Coach Jim Brock said top-rated Fullerton will field one of the best hitting teams and "has superior pitching plus outstanding newcomers. . . I don't see anyone any tougher."

No. 2-rated Hawaii has a strong pitching staff returning, while third-ranked Arizona State has, among its returners, pitcher Kendall Carter, 19-1 last year, and Kevin Romine, Alvin Davis and Chris Johnson, who hit .410, .395 and .372, respectively.

The perfection of any matter, the highest or the lowest, touches on the divine.

Armstrong cancels out in Thursday night bout

Jimmy Paul of Emanuel Steward's ESCOT stable of boxers in Detroit will replace teammate Davey Lee Armstrong in Thursday's main event of the monthly boxing card at the Youth Center at the State Fairgrounds.

Matchmaker Steve Eisner said Armstrong, 17-1 and newly-crowned Arizona Lightweight Champion, had the flu and would be unable to be at full strength for the scheduled match against Salvador Ugalde, 12-2, of Los Angeles.

In Paul, 8-0 with seven knockouts, Ugalde will be meeting "an explosive puncher and one of the top young prospects from Steward's litany of title aspirants," according to Eisner.

Ugalde recently dropped a split decision to nationally-ranked Rocky Garcia in an LA bout. Eisner predicted the fight would not go the distance.

The 10-rounder between the 135-pounders will commence at 7:30 p.m. Tickets may be purchased at the Coliseum box office or at any Diamond's Select-A-Seat location.

Featured in a six-round semi-main will be Hurley Snead (4-0), 117, Detroit, against Jose Coronado (7-1) Tucson, in a rematch of a close fight that highlighted the December Eisner card. Although Snead was the victor, the contest was hotly contested and warranted a rematch, Eisner said.

Another six-rounder will boast Phoenix heavyweight Tony Fulilangi, 7-0, against Brady Wills, of Los Angeles. "Titanic Tony" has won all 13 of his amateur and professional fights by knockout with no outing going over two rounds.

A late addition to the card will be a six-rounder between Rodney Trusel (9-0) 147, with seven knockouts and another Steward protege, against Henry Drummond of Los Angeles.

Three local fighters will also be in action in four-rounders. They are the brothers Ronnie (122) and Larry (115) Gary of Phoenix, making their pro debuts, and Eddie Walker (0-1) of Mesa. Early in the week Eisner was making arrangements for opponents for these fighters.

Steward, who works out of the well-known Kronk Gym in Detroit, is the manager of Thomas Hearn along with Paul, Snead and Trusel. He will be in his boxers' corner fight night.
