First, get a worm...

Bryan Norwood, 10, seems to have run out of patience with his dad, Bob Norwood. The Norwoods, of Phoenix, had all the fishing gear, minnows and worms they needed for a day of fishing at Encanto Park, but the Elder Norwood decided to check out the American Fishing News for a little advice first. His son didn't want advice though, he was just anxious to get his line wet.

Guinea pig attacker thrown in slammer

By the College Press Service

GAINESVILLE, Fla. — A University of Florida student who literally fried his pet guinea pig has begun serving an unusually tough jail sentence for cruelty to animals.

UF math major George Schiro is serving 60 days and paying a $198 fine for abusing his pet Albert, who has since been taken away from him by the court.

Police arrested Schiro earlier this summer after one of Schiro's dorm neighbors reported hearing the guinea pig screaming. The neighbor, Ruth Rose, said she had heard the butterscotch-colored rodent scream in pain before, and had seen Schiro throw Albert against a wall once.

Besides putting Albert in a hot pan because the creature, according to Schiro's testimony, refused to play with him, Schiro forced the animal to take showers with him.

"When he was brought in (to the Alachua County Humane Society) he just shivered and shook, like he was wondering, 'what's going to happen to me next?'" said Margo Duncan, Humane Society investigator.

The animal's feet were "scabby and bloody," she added. Albert was underweight and suffered from abdominal swelling, probably the result of the showers, she said.

Albert himself, now adopted by another Gainesville family, is "happy and doing just fine," Duncan said. "All his hair has grown back and he comes when his name is called. He's coming out of it all very nicely."

The Florida case was the second recent instance of students disciplined for abusing animals. A Penn State fraternity was threatened with abolition last month for holding annual salamander-eating contests among its members.

Devil's Dominion drops the ball on season ticket purchase

By Jomarie Leone
Staff writer

Resident hall students who purchased football tickets from the newly formed Devil's Dominion are complaining about poor ticket distribution and seating assignments.

Dominion member Keith Stacer said a communication gap between his organization and the Resident Hall Association created many of the problems in ticket sales.

"This was our first year and we're still learning from some mistakes," he said.

Stacer said the dominion had no direct

Some residents

half an hour
before the first game.

contact with the residents. RHA officials wanted to keep control of residents' tickets and it was their responsibility to inform them about ticket pick-up, he said.

"We had no way of telling them directly how to get their tickets," Stacer said.

However, Elaine LaTarte, Manzanita Hall unit director, said many of her resident assistants "were never informed in an organized fashion (as to) where, when or how to pick up tickets and activity cards."

The night before the first home game, the dominion people were telephoning residents between 11 p.m. and 1 a.m. with information on where to get tickets, LaTarte said.

"Some residents still did not have tickets half an hour before the first game Saturday," she said.

Carol Sue Miller, an RA at Best Hall, said her residents were not happy with the seating assignments they received.

"We thought our seats would be closer to the 25 or 35 yard lines instead of the 12," she said.

Stacer said the dominion planned to seat students between the 42 yard line and five yards deep into the south end zone. "We never promised any seats on the 50 yard line," he said.

Despite the fact that the dominion received the resident hall ticket request late, it was processed before other requests that were received on time, Stacer said.

"We decided that we needed to uphold good relations with the RHA, so even though their request came in late, we seated them before about 500 other requests," Stacer said.

If the requests had been turned in on time, Stacer said seating assignments could have been better and the delay in processing could have been avoided.

Miller said the delay in processing of ticket requests left residents without their activity cards for nearly three weeks.

"Lots of people wanted to get tickets at Gammage for events there and couldn't because their activity cards were tied up (for) so long with Devil's Dominion," she said.

However, Stacer said the activity cards were only held for two weeks and that delay was caused by the ticket office, which processed the dominion tickets after all others.

"There was an additional five-day delay because there were so many tickets to process," he said.

The dominion originally planned to accommodate 600 to 800 students, but ended up with about 1,600 ticket requests, Stacer said.

He said Wade Scheuerman, RHA president, brought in 400 additional requests for tickets two days after the dorm request was received.

"The RHA (official) promised to have the tickets in by Tuesday night and we didn't receive them until 5:00 p.m. on Wednesday," Stacer said. "Many of them came without activity cards or properly filled out forms."

As for the distribution problems, Stacer said Scheuerman the RHA should have established a method of distributing the tickets to the residents since they had assumed the responsibility of ordering their tickets.

Jim Holmes, RHA executive vice president, said residents' tickets were processed in blocks. "People couldn't go get their tickets individually, they had to be picked up by a contact person," he said.

One official from the housing office said he expected residents to get better seating because of arrangements made by the RHA with the ticket office.

However, Stacer said the dominion had pre-arranged the seating with the ticket office last May.

Israeli troops enter west Beirut

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) - Israeli troops and armor pushed into Moslem west Beirut early today to head off what they called a "dangerous situation" following the bombing that killed Israeli-backed President-elect Bashir Gemayel and at least 26 senior aides.

The troops entered west Beirut in a "limited" move "to prevent fighting and secure peace," after the Tuesday blast that killed Gemayel, the Tel Aviv command said. It gave no details, but correspondents in Beirut reported that leftist Moslem militiamen fired bazookas and machine guns and the Israeli tanks fired back, setting buildings and leftist positions afire.

Arafat meets with Pope

VATICAN CITY (AP) - Yasser Arafat spent 20 minutes talking with Pope John Paul II Wednesday in a small room at the Vatican, Holy See officials said. A Palestine Liberation Organization official called the meeting "a turning point in the PLO's favor."

Arafat, wearing a black-and-white kaffiyeh headdress and an olive green uniform, was accompanied by Ahmed Soudki Dajani and Hana Nasser, members of the PLO's Executive Committee. The Vatican officials said Arafat was not armed with his customary pistol.

Senate leaders table abortion amendment

WASHINGTON (AP) - Senate leaders agreed Wednesday to put off until next year a debate and votes on a constitutional amendment designed to limit or eliminate legalized abortions.

Meanwhile, there were indications that a filibuster against a second anti-abortion measure may be drawing to a close.

As Republican leaders grew increasingly impatient with the pace of the debate, Sen. Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, said he would abandon efforts to get a constitutional amendment through the Senate in the waning days of the 97th Congress.

Brezhnev offers Mideast peace plan

MOSCOW (AP) - President Leonid I. Brezhnev laid out a six-point plan Wednesday for bringing "lasting peace" to the Middle East - based on creation of an independent Palestinian state in the West Bank of the Jordan River and the Gaza Strip.

Brezhnev called President Reagan's Mideast peace plan "basically vicious" for denying the Palestinians the right to an independent nation. Reagan has proposed establishment of a Palestinian state in association with Jordan, incorporating territory now occupied by Israel.

In addition, Brezhnev said, the Arab eastern sector of Jerusalem must be returned to the Arabs "and become an inseparable part of the Palestinian state. Free access of believers to the holy shrines of the three religions must be ensured in the whole of Jerusalem."

Campus Services seeks student input

By Janine Warell
Staff writer

Associated Students' campus services department is undergoing changes in order to better identify, investigate and find solutions to problems affecting ASU students, the service's director said Wednesday.

"Last year we were a reactionary committee. When complaints were brought to us, we acted on them. I would say we were ineffective as a University service, but effective on a one-to-one basis," Mark Isenberg said.

This year the service will be a "pro-actionary group," he said. "Instead of having them (students) come to us, we're going to them."

Campus Services uses the 12 ASASU complaint/suggestion boxes on campus as a primary medium for gathering student input.

But Isenberg said the boxes were not an adequate medium for obtaining students' suggestions and complaints.

Last year approximately 12 "viable" complaints or suggestions a week would appear in the boxes. Isenberg said he was only able to take action on eight for the entire year.

"I get tons of junk. Besides the written junk like the complaint about the mad man whose running wild in PSA (Physical Science Building) with an ax, I get apple cores and Cheetos bags," Isenberg said.

"I've got to take a garbage bag to get the stuff out," he said.

The complaint/suggestion boxes were installed about three years ago and have changed names several times. At one point they were called "the 'bucks box,' like the buck stops here," Isenberg said.

He said he will use the suggestion boxes, but also has plans for other ways of identifying and acting on students' problems.

As last year's director, Isenberg was the only person who acted on students' complaints.

But tentative plans have been made to put together a volunteer staff to handle different areas such as issues and ideas, and suggestions and complaints.

The ASASU Senate voted down a proposal to establish an issues committee Tuesday night, but Isenberg said he would ask the members to help with Campus Services.

The proposal was "probably defeated because the senate saw it as possibly duplicating dozens of other committees set up in the University to study problems," Isenberg said.

He said conducting student surveys is a priority for the service. He hopes to have a staff of 20 to 30 volunteers to conduct the polls.

Isenberg currently is working on a survey concerning attitudes of students toward advisement, "because there is a lot of dissatisfaction toward it."

He also is investigating the possibility of extended library hours. The U of A, with a library open until 3 a.m., informed Isenberg that more than 200 students use their facilities until closing.

The campus services' budget is $1,708, but Isenberg said he expects it to be increased next year.

"Last year campus services did not prove itself as an accountable group," he said. "They didn't prove they needed the money. I think this year we will."

Iranian association discloses inequalities of Khomeini regime

Editor:

Three years ago in the final days of the Shah's repressive regime, the Iranian Students Association was formed at ASU. Its purpose was to inform you, the students, of the real political and social situations in Iran; our purpose today is the same. We are writing this with hopes that we will reach more of you and help you to understand the plight of the Iranian people.

In February of 1979, the masses of Iran rose up against the tyrannical regime of the Shah and crumbled his torturous empire. They rose up with hopes for an end to oppression, torture and fear with hopes for a new future and freedom. The man they put their trust and hopes into was a man of false dreams and promises: the Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini. He promised the abolition of censorship, sexual discrimination and oppression. He promised to close the Shah's prisons which were houses of torture and murder for political prisoners. Today, according to Amnesty International, censorship is worse, women have been placed in a sub-human status and the prisons are overflowing with more than 40,000 innocent people who are tortured to the brink of or to their deaths. Khomeini has been responsible for the executions of more than 15,000 people, including pregnant women and eight- and nine-year-old children. People are jailed for nothing more than possessing leaflets which expose the true actions of the regime, for looking suspicious and mainly for nothing at all. Inflation is running at 60. for consumer items and unemployment is at 30. The Khomeini regime has no social programs to help alleviate these problems for the people, so he continues the Iran-Iraq war as a mask for his inability to correct the problems in Iran. As long as the war continues he can blame the shortages of food, money and jobs on that, so the people won't recognize that it is the ruling class that is causing all the suffering. This mask is costing the people $8 billion a year and has left 200,000 dead and another 2 million homeless. Just as he used the hostage crisis to heighten nationalism, so too is he using the war. These nationalistic feelings help keep the people blind to the internal problems of Iran.

A documentary book which further exposes the atrocities and realities of the Islamic Republic regime has been recently published by the International Solidarity Front — Iran, an international force working for worldwide condemnation and action against the Khomeini regime. "The Crimes of Khomeini" is available through the Iranian Students Association, the International Solidarity Front and is on reserve in the Hayden Library.

The Iranian Students Association supports the struggle of the Iranian masses and supports a people's democratic revolution to bring peace, freedom and equality to the people of Iran. We support the just struggles of all the oppressed masses worldwide for their self-determination and for freedom.

Wigwam site causes heap big headache

Jay Heiler

ASU has a parking problem. Big deal, you say. Tell me something I don't already know. ASU has always had a parking problem.

The simple fact is that ASU's parking problem is now evolving to the point of ridiculousness.

The most recent and perhaps the most ridiculous chapter in the whole sad story revolves around ASU's plan to buy an acre of land for use as a parking lot. The acre sits right next to Burger King on Apache Boulevard, and it is a logical place for the University to turn for parking space. But sitting on the acre are three "wigwam" structures that the State Historical Preservation Office has suddenly designated as having "historical significance."

Bill Perreault, SHPO registrar, expressed the designation with a remark of rhetorical significance. "They are truly a unique phase in commercial architecture," Perreault said. "They are whimsical roadside structures and that's where their beauty lies."

Horsepuckey, Bill. What they are is ugly.

The wigwams are big, cement, 35-year-old teepees, and little more. To intimate that these structures are "historically significant" is bold-faced folly.

And just for the record, nobody screamed teepee murder a few years back when four of the stone cones were demolished to make room for the Burger King.

What now gives Perreault and his office the leverage to cause trouble is a section of a preservation law passed this year that says the "chief administrator of a state agency is responsible for conserving the historical significance of a state-owned building."

If ASU buys the land, as the Arizona Board of Regents authorized it to do last weekend, the teepees will suddenly become "state-owned."

Which means Burger King could buy the structures and turn them into double cheeseburgers if it wants to but if ASU makes the purchase, it will find itself the proud owner of some historical significance.

There is a critical parking problem on this campus that is 'To intimate that these structures are historically significant is bold-face folly.'

causing a lot of people a lot of anguish. Now that the University is finally trying to do something about it, some bureaucrats are threatening to block the attempt over the historical significance of some concrete teepees. The whole situation is lacking order.

But who knows. Perhaps it is just written in stone somewhere that ASU students, faculty and staff will pay for the luxury of attending the collegiate fantasy land by never having a place to park their cars. Perhaps it is just another of life's little trade-offs.

Babbitt uses drinking age issue for political gain

Neil Giuliano
ASASU President

The issue of raising the drinking age in Arizona is nothing more than a play in the political football game we all know as election year. Gov. Bruce Babbitt once again has embraced the issue and will attempt to make the legal drinking age a topic for discussion during the campaign. Appearing conservative is something the governor likes to do; and trying to raise the drinking age, not a new effort, tends to have a conservative support group.

Real conservatives will be smarter, however, and hopefully will understand what the real problem is. Last year, and every year, drunk drivers killed thousands on highways and seriously injured countless others. Raising the drinking age would attack but a fraction of the people who are committing this crime, and in reality will not stop 19-20 year olds from driving while intoxicated any more than it will stop 49-50 year olds.

Arizona traffic statistics during the last alcohol-related fatalities involving teenagers and those drivers between ages 21-25.

Drunk driving is a serious problem. The legislature has dealt with the problem by toughening the laws for DWI offenders and positive things are happening as a result. Most agree that raising the drinking age will not keep alcohol from being used, and occasionally abused, by those under 21. Pushing

Appearing conservative is something three years indicate drivers 18, 19 and 20 years of age were involved in no more alcohol-related accidents than those over 21. Nor do figures for 1978, 1979 and 1980 show any difference between the number of

for a stronger enforcement of the laws prohibiting the serving of alcohol to those under 19 would be a worthy campaign issue, for it would address an obvious area that has been neglected in the effort to curb drunk driving and alcohol-related accidents. Babbitt's campaign to raise the legal drinking age — which his opponent, Leo Corbet, has dismissed in the past as an avoidance of the real problem — seems to be an effort to carry the banner for a conservative cause.

The true problems confronting society in this area are being avoided. Educating people and allowing for the responsible use of alcohol should be encouraged. The Alcohol Education Program and BACCHUS on campus are two fine examples of well-placed priorities and efforts.

No credible statistics support the assertion that raising the drinking age will deter or reduce the consumption of alcohol by those underage. It is interesting to note that California and Arizona have the same percentage of alcohol-related automobile accidents involving those 19 years old and younger. The legal drinking age in California is 21.

Immigration requests Iranian to voluntarily leave

By Chris Coppola
Staff writer

A former ASU student from Iran has been granted 60 days to "voluntarily depart" the United States or face deportation, despite his claim that he had been politically harassed.

Judge William F. Nails of the Immigration and Naturalization Service in Phoenix, Wednesday ordered Hamid Sodeifi, 18, to leave the country for failing to maintain student status at ASU.

Sodeifi's attorney, Antonio D. Bustamante, said he will appeal Wednesday's ruling to the INS district director within the next 12 days.

Sodeifi pleaded guilty to the official charges that were presented Wednesday, however, Bustamante requested a continuance of the case in light of "new and supportive evidence."

Nails denied the request.

Sodeifi claimed the immigration service had sought to deport him because of his membership in the Young Socialist Alliance and the Socialist Workers Party.

However Ernest E. Gustafson, district director of the INS, said Sodeifi's political ties are "totally immaterial in the case."

Gustafson said the charges against Sodeifi involve only his student status. He said Sodeifi's grade point average was extremely low.

Bustamante attempted to present additional evidence as well as witness testimony concerning Sodeifi's claims at Wednesday's hearing, but was denied the request by Nails.

"I am not going to expand an otherwise simple hearing," Nails said. "I am not going to make decisions in respect to a constitutional issue."

Bustamante claimed prejudgment and selective prosecution issues were necessary in the context of the hearing, and argued that Nails was preventing him from presenting a sufficient defense.

"There is new and supportive evidence that would be grounds for the district director to reinstate (Sodeifi to ASU)," Bustamante said.

Nails denied Bustamante's request for a continuance in the case, saying the only other option would be a direct appeal to the INS district director.

Nails said his ruling was on the basis of the official charges against Sodeifi.

"I find deportability appropriate," he said.

Nails presented Sodeifi with a "voluntary departure" option in lieu of immediate deportation and accepted Bustamante's request for 60 days.

Sodeifi came to the United States in 1979. He later was granted a student visa and enrolled at ASU for the spring 1981 semester.

Sodeifi said he was enrolled for 12 credit hours at the University but was later withdrawn from two courses because he did not meet a requirement.

He said his grades the following semesters were "very low."

"I was under pressure (from the INS) and was unable to perform," he said.

"They're trying to deport me on the basis of a technicality," he said. "But when I first went to them (the INS) earlier this year, the person I talked to said I was being deported for my 'activities.'"

'Hello Dolly,' goodbye parking lots; musical to claim Gammage spaces

Finding a place to park on campus Friday may be even more difficult than usual.

Gammage Center lots 3, 4, and 5 will be closed due to a matinee performance of the musical "Hello Dolly." The lots affected have a capacity of 214 faculty and staff parking spaces and 384 commuter spaces, ASU's director of parking and transit said.

Edward Hickcox said 170 parking spaces for faculty and staff in lots 20 and 21 located east of the Business Administration Building will be temporarily reopened through Friday to help compensate for the loss. The lots have been closed because of construction.

In addition, parking spaces in Lot 19 located near the tennis courts will be available to faculty and staff on Friday.

Hickcox said the bulk of affected drivers, particularly commuters, will be forced to park in Lot 59 near Sun Devil Stadium and the tram service will be augmented to accommodate the increased number of drivers forced to park in that lot on Friday.

Lawyers unite to plan appeal of recent paraphernalia ruling

By Bob Beamesderfer
Contributing writer

Attorneys from Tempe, Maricopa County and the state Attorney General's Office will meet later this week to plan their appeal of a recent court ruling that declared the state's drug paraphernalia law unconstitutional, a Tempe city attorney assigned to the case said today.

Vincent Iannone said his office would meet with representatives from the state and county attorneys' offices to discuss the possible route they will take in appealing Maricopa County Superior Court Judge Robert Pickrell's ruling that the law encouraged "selective enforcement."

The Tempe City Council voted last Thursday to appeal the decision which resulted from a July 26 raid by Tempe police on the Happy Trails store on Mill Avenue two days after the law took effect.

The city can appeal the case directly to the Arizona Supreme Court in the form of a special action, or through the normal appellate court process.

Iannone said he would like to file for a special action despite the Supreme Court's low acceptance rate of such actions.

"It is certainly the speediest way to get a decision from the court of last resort," he said, adding that any decision from the high court would have "ramifications state wide."

Even though odds are against the Supreme Court accepting the special action, Iannone said he has "as good a chance as the next guy" at getting the high court to take the case.

Maricopa County attorney Tom Collins said his office will provide the city attorney's office with any assistance it needs in their appeal of the decision which prevented Tempe from prosecuting the case against Happy Trails.

Nearly $20,000 of merchandise seized in the raid was returned by police last Friday, as ordered by Judge Pickrell.

"I think we ought to appeal and I think we'll win based on the trend in the appellate courts to uphold such laws," Collins said, referring to challenges of similar paraphernalia laws based on a model law drafted by the Federal Drug Enforcement Agency. The Arizona law is also based on the DEA model.

Tom Thinner, attorney for Happy Trails and their parent company, Carefree Management Inc., does not agree.

"They're going to lose the appeal based on the hearing and the evidence presented," he said. "This is the most flagrant case of selective enforcement I've ever seen," he added.

Attorney General Bob Corbin said the appeal brief will be reviewed by Solicitor General Tony Ching of the Attorney General's Office because of the constitutional question and the possibility of action on the federal level.

The Tempe has 30 days from the date of Judge Pickrell's decision in which to file their appeal.

Study shows liberal trend in college-bound students

By the College Press Service

RENO, Nev. — The next generation of college student leaders will be more liberal than the current generation, if the results of a straw vote among high school officers hold.

Over 1,000 high school student government officers at the annual conference of the National Association of Student Councils this summer voted in favor of more sex education, and opposed increased defense spending, mixing religion and politics and textbook censorship.

"Ten years ago, students were looking for a way to cut down the system, but these kids are concerned with how they can work within the system," said Lew Armistead, an officer of the National Association of Secondary School Principals, which sponsored the event.

The closest vote — and lowest turnout — concerned gun control, Armistead said. Eighty-eight students opposed controls, while 75 favored them.

"Perhaps the other issues are more clear-cut than handgun control," Armistead said. "But I think the rest of the outcome reflected consistently liberal attitudes."

Most recent studies of college students' attitudes, by contrast, portray a slow drift away from liberal views, though not necessarily toward conservative views.

An April 1982 Illinois State University survey of 1,500 collegians determined students are more interested in "survival skills" — the means of earning a living — than in any social issues, liberal or conservative.

The 1982 annual UCLA-American Council on Education survey of college freshman attitudes found a similar preoccupation with "being well-off financially."

The percentage of students describing themselves as "conservatives" crept up again, but fewer students called themselves either "far right" or "far left." The overwhelming majority of the graduating class of 1986 saw itself as "middle of the road."

Their professors are less ambiguous politically. A survey of the members of five elite academic societies by political scientists Everett Carl Ladd and Seymour Martin Lipset found America's top professors are much more liberal than society at large.

Indeed, Lipset found that the higher the academic achievement, the more liberal the professor tends to be.

Academy surveys public on state education

By Emily Smith
Staff writer

A survey to test the public's opinion on the effectiveness of education at Arizona's universities is being conducted by the Arizona Academy.

The Arizona Academy, composed of a group of Arizona leaders, meets twice a year to hold forums to discuss issues and make recommendations to Arizona's leaders about topics that concern the future and well-being of the state.

Each forum, or town hall, culminates in the publication of a book containing the research and recommendations compiled on the particular topic.

The survey is part of the research being done to prepare for the April forum where 125 Arizona leaders will meet to discuss and make recommendations concerning the future of post-secondary education in Arizona's universities, community colleges and private schools.

Seven chapters on different aspects of Arizona's post-secondary education system are being written by officials at the three state universities and members of the Education Commission of States.

The Education Commission of the States, an organization based in Denver will be editing and coordinating the chapters written by the universities, said Shirley Agnos, the executive director of the Arizona Academy.

The survey, studying public opinion on the effectiveness of Arizona university education will be part of a chapter that ASU has been designated to be written, Agnos said.

Shapard Wolf Jr., graduate research associate for the ASU president's office, who helped to compile the survey, said it will be given to a variety of people.

"We will be giving it to 2,500 random registered voters, the Board of Regents, the state legislators of both houses, a sample of the Arizona Academy members, all of the administration at the three Arizona universities, and a sample of the faculty of the three Arizona universities," Wolf said.

Dean stresses office's service function

By Maria Khan
Staff writer

ASU Dean of Students Leon Shell said maintaining the student conduct code is only a small part of his office's activities, although the Dean of Students Office traditionally has been associated with discipline.

Shell said his office is basically a support service for students.

He said the functions of the office vary greatly. The staff receives questions about almost everything on campus and answers them directly or provides students with other sources.

The staff at the dean's office consists of eight professionals who have diversified backgrounds, according to Shell. He said each has expertise in different areas such as minority affairs and women's affairs.

One area of concern of the office is a leadership program designed to help students develop leadership abilities.

In addition, the office provides many other types of services for ASU students.

The office also takes emergency medical messages from students to teachers as well as referring students to organizations.

Shell said the office registers between 250 and 300 student organizations each year. When students inquire about how they can become involved on campus, the office refers them to registered organizations related to their interests.

Another area with which the office is involved is helping students to resolve academic dilemmas.

A service, which began last year, is exit interviews for undergraduate students who have left ASU before completing a degree. Interviews are designed to find out what causes student problems in the hope that the office may work on eliminating such problems for future students.

Shell said this year the staff is re-examining the needs of students and allocating resources to accommodate those needs.

"We are refining some programs, especially for the non-traditional students," Shell said. He added the office is in the process of assessing the non-traditional population and what services would be helpful to them.

One service provided by the Dean of Students Office is student retention. The office offers resources to students whose grade point average is below the University's required to stay in school.

Shell said his office is ready to accommodate any student need.

Employees form association to cut through ASU red tape

By Tom Bickford
Staff writer

Staff employees at ASU now have an organization that will assist them in bypassing bureaucratic red tape, said Les Locker, president of the newly formed ASU Employees' Association.

"When staff members have a grievance, the first problem they run into is bureaucracy," he said. "We feel this association will send the problem to the administration at a faster pace."

Locker said the association, which he said has a membership of between 30 and 40, was formed mainly to monitor the way in which merit raises are granted to staff members.

"The core membership is very disturbed by the way in which merit pay is handled," he said. "We felt that in 1981 the way merit raises were granted was without legitimate criteria."

But Frank Sackton, ASU vice president for business affairs, said 1981 was the last year staff employees, teachers or administrators received merit raises.

"No organization that is under the state legislature receive ed a merit pay raise for the current year," he added.

Sackton said he agreed with the concept of the new association but contended that, at his last count, membership was at 13.

The ASU association is open only to ASU employees and needs to reach 100 members before it is eligible to become a branch of the Arizona Public Employees Association, a statewide lobbying organization.

Gary Huish, a research and field representative of the APEA, said his organization sent its findings to the ASU administration approximately seven months ago, but a decision to allow the ASU association to form was not made until Aug. 30.

"We have reason to believe that the delay was intentional on the part of the administration in an effort to prohibit the staff employees from organizing," he said.

"In our opinion, it should not have taken more than 30 days to reach a decision," he added.

Sackton denied the allegation by Huish and said, "We wanted to be very careful and make sure that all the proper procedures were followed before we gave our approval."

Latin American digest ends 16-year publication

By Sandy Sistek
Staff writer

After 16 years of publication at ASU, the Latin American Digest will no longer go to press due to the increase in operational cost, said the director of ASU's Center for Latin American Studies.

Jerry Ladman said the digest, which was written in English, was a victim of budgetary constraints and since production costs are rising, the money would be used more efficiently for books or small publications.

"There was not enough money available to finance the deficit of the digest, and to prevent sacrificing other publications for the deficit we decided to finalize the digest," Ladman said.

The digest, which was distributed internationally to Mexico and South America, published four times a year and averaged about 32 pages. The summer issue was the last publication.

According to Ladman, the digest kept Latin Americans informed about current political, economic, and social trends.

Included in the digest were summaries of important news in the Latin American countries, scholarly articles and book reviews written by contributing authors from Latin America, the United States, and ASU.

The digest was started in 1966 by ASU political science professor Marvin Alisky who asked the Arizona Board of Regents to allocate funds for the Center for Latin American Studies.

He said it was started because many teachers and students could not afford to subscribe to the major newspapers and magazines of the Latin American countries.

To supplement the funds in the beginning, Alisky persuaded the foreign currency departments of Arizona and California banks to take a one-year charter subscription. He also said various businesses and corporations helped finance the digest by subscribing.

Heidi Osselaer, the new editor/research assistant, will assume the editorial responsibilities for the various smaller Latin American publications.

According to Osselaer, three books are scheduled for release by the beginning of the 1983 year that will be partially financed by the digest's funds.

Cuts force student exodus, studies say

By the College Press Service

WASHINGTON — The long-expected, forced student migration from expensive private colleges to cheaper four-year and two-year campuses may have finally begun, two just-released studies suggest.

The primary cause of the forced march, the studies say, are the cuts in federal student aid programs.

According to a study by the National Institute of Independent Colleges and Universities, as many as 200,000 students have dropped out of private colleges and universities this year.

The exodus of low-income and minority students is "much more dramatic than we expected," and may broaden as this year's cuts in federal financial aid programs heighten student money problems, said Julianne Still Thrift, NIICU's executive director.

Though no one can say definitely where these students are going — to other schools or simply out of the educational system — another study released last week predicts community college enrollment will increase by 4 percent this fall.

The American Association of Community and Junior Colleges (AACJC) expects two-year college enrollment to surpass five million nationwide.

The reasons, according to the AACJC, include an influx of unemployed and underemployed people returning to school and a significant number of students who choose two-year colleges at least temporarily for financial reasons.

In some states, as much as 10 percent of the students who ordinarily would have gone straight from high school to a four-year college have chosen to live at home another year, and attend cheaper local two-year schools, the study reports.

Such movement suggests the onset of the massive "stepladder effect" educators began forecasting when President Reagan introduced his first federal education budget in February 1981.

Federal budget cuts and rising tuition rates would combine to knock students down the economic ladder of education, they said. The poorest students at private colleges would be forced to transfer to less expensive four-year institutions. They, in turn, would displace the poorest public college students, forcing them to transfer to still less expensive two-year colleges.

Defensive end set to give go at 'showtime'

By Art Conner

Sports writer

He calls himself an "assassin."
"Nobody can hit like me," he says.
He walks tall, around 6-foot-6, and he'll fly 239 pounds of pentecost hostility into the Houston Astrodome this weekend for one reason.

"Showtime."

For Walt Bowyer, ASU's senior defensive end, the Astrodome is the perfect place to exhibit the next wonder of the world — Superman.

It started — not on a faraway planet — right here in Tempe at a recent ASU practice.

"It was a trap play," Bowyer said, "and I rode the tackle down, then I hit the back and as we both were falling, somebody stepped on my leg."

The leg bled.

Nine stitches worth.

But who cares, Bowyer didn't.

ASU's doctors had advised Bowyer not to practice, but the next day — sure enough — he was there hitting with his usual fervor.

"There wasn't any pain after the first couple (of) hits," he said.

This unselfish attitude does not go unnoticed by the boss.

"Walt wants to play," head Coach Darryl Rogers said of the business management major.

"He realizes that this game with Houston is an important one," Rogers said, "but it's what we've said all along about Walt — the pain would have to be great to keep him from participating."

"We've (coaching staff) always been impressed with Walt."

Bowyer characteristically speaks in detail on the strengths of the Houston offense, not unlike the hunter visualizing the ultimate kill.

"Houston is a very physical team," Bowyer, who played in ASU's 29-13 win over the Cougars two years ago, said.

"They hit extremely hard right off the ball with their dive play," he added. "We have to be ready."

Bowyer said that playing against Houston will separate the proverbial men from the boys.

"Houston doesn't like the idea of trying to run around you," Bowyer said, "they run straight at you."

"They will make you show them who's tougher — them or you," he added. "Either you stand in there and punish them or you will get punished."

"It's showtime now," he repeated.

The versatile athlete from Pittsburgh, Pa., is capable of showing up on either the right or the left side of the defensive line.

He's also been known to "show" on the basketball court.

"In high school, I played both basketball

Forbes 'sets' table for volleyball squad

By Michael Graham
Sports writer

The ASU volleyball team has looked impressive in its first few matches. And as the Devils get prepared to tackle some nationally ranked opponents, you can bet that captain Heather Forbes will be all "set" to go.

Not that any of Forbes' leather slapping mates aren't primed to improve on last year's NCAA tournament qualifying effort. Forbes just happens to do a little more setting than the others.

A good example of what Forbes' valuable, yet inconspicuous, niche is for head Coach Dale Flickinger's No. 13 Devils could be seen last week in a match with Utah.

After many short exchanges between the two teams, the ball would be passed in Forbes' direction and then seemingly just appear right at the perfect height for either Lisa Stuck or Valentina Vega to collect any one of their 29 total kills.

The standing-room only crowd at P.E. East loudly applauded Vega's and Stuck's aggressive shots while Forbes, who deftly set the ball up for those kills, simply grinned and was occasionally acknowledged by a teammate.

Despite her anonymity, Forbes doesn't feel unappreciated by those who are familiar with the complexity of the collegiate game.

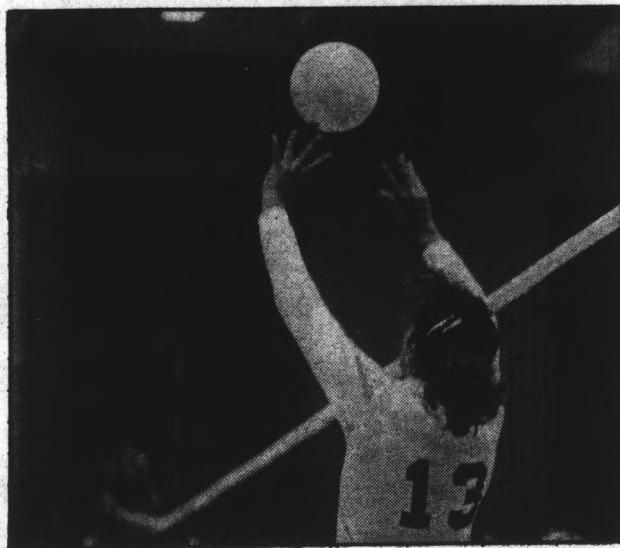

"I think sometimes the fans don't appreciate the things I do during a match," Forbes said. "But it doesn't really bother me that they (the fans) don't sometimes understand, as long as I know that everyone on the team respects the role I play."

Freshman sensation Valentina Vega is one of those who greatly appreciates those perfect sets that Forbes lofts. She believes that Forbes is as important to the Devils' success as anyone else.

"Lisa and I get a lot of great chances for kills but if it weren't for Heather there would be no way it could happen," Vega explained. "I don't think there are enough people that realize how important she is for our team to win."

One person who you can bet appreciates Forbes' contributions is Flickinger, who believes that her duties are multi-fold.

"She is by far the most qualified person on our team to be the captain," Flickinger said. "The setter is just like a quarterback on a football team. Heather really has total control of what happens to us on the court, she manipulates the offense and gets us back on the track when something starts to go wrong."

Heather Forbes sets up a shot in the P.E. East gym.

Forbes' volleyball travels are not limited, however, to the path beaten between her hometown of Lakeside, Calif., and the deserts of Arizona. This summer she traveled with Athleten in Action to Japan for a five-week tour, including stops at seven universities.

"The team that we took over there was not as good a collection of players as we could have possibly got together," Forbes said. "I don't think I gained all that much from a volleyball standpoint, although we were primarily going over there to share our religious beliefs with them."

"I was very much impressed with the Japanese players discipline and hard work. Sometimes they would put in as much as eight hours a day in practice."

Just as she has improved during her stay in Tempe, Forbes believes this year's ASU team is good enough to challenge any team that may stand in the Devils' way.

"I'm pleased with our team this year," Forbes said. "We have a different type group than last season. This year people came back more mature and willing to put in the hard work that is necessary for us to play at our full potential."

Miller hires new staff after losing assistants

By Ken Sain
Sports writer

The 1983 ASU men's track team will feature some new faces on the coaching staff, resulting from the resignations this summer of two assistant coaches.

Bruce Frankie and Ralph Lindeman have left to assume positions with other track programs. Frankie will take over the head coaching duties at Mesa Community College, while Lindeman will take a full-time position at the UofA.

Frankie, who coached the sprinters for two years at ASU, resigned this summer due to "philosophical differences" with head Coach Len Miller, according to Miller.

"It was in his best interests to resign," Miller said.

Frankie, who also teaches at Phoenix Washington High School, refused comment.

"(Frankie) was not good for this program," Miller said, "insofar as my being in charge with the responsibility for a positive educational experience for the athletes at Arizona State University."

"(Lindeman) was so loyal to this program that he considered turning down the job to stay here," Miller said. "But I told him that it was just a matter of time before either he or his wife became disgusted."

"There was no light at the end of the tunnel insofar as my being able to promise him a full-time position."

Len Miller

Despite the loss of the coaches, Miller feels he has some quality replacements that will help the Devils stay in the hunt for the Pacific-10 Conference championship.

"This (year's) staff, in terms of character, flexibility and experience is far and away the best staff I've had in my 10 years coaching at the collegiate level," he said.

Denny Robinson, an ASU graduate, will be a general coach for all facets of the track program. Robinson built up a record of 118-8 at the high school level in California.

Gary Williky, another ASU alumnus, will coach the throwing events and serve as strength coach.

Steve Jacobs will coach the javelin throwers and decathlon events. Jacobs cracked the national Top 10 last year in the decathlon event.

Al Van Hazel will instruct the hurdlers. Miller calls Van Hazel one of the most knowledgeable hurdling coaches in the United States.

Greg "The Bullet" Moore will assist Miller with the sprint events. Miller will be directly responsible, but Moore, a former All-American under Miller, will act as a consultant.

Bill Thilken will consult on the pole vaulters. Thilken had formerly competed under Miller at the University of California at Irving.

and football," Bowyer said. "It wasn't until my last year in high school that I decided on football. We went to the state championship in both sports every year I played."

"I was recruited by UCLA, Marquette and Nevada-Las Vegas in basketball and all the top 20 (poll-wise) in football," he said.

Bowyer chose to come to ASU for one reason.

"The PAC-10," he said. "Plus, I wanted to get away from the East Coast."

When Bowyer came to ASU, he came to play football. However, in 1980 he found time to become a reserve member of the ASU basketball team.

Coming to ASU has also meant a reunion of sorts with a "homeboy" named Mike Langston, the Sun Devils' starting noseguard.

"I played against Mike in high school but he was a tackle then and I was at linebacker," Bowyer said.

Bowyer has professional aspirations, and he views the newly-formed United States Football league as a viable option if he doesn't make his first choice — the NFL.

"I got a great chance of making it in the USFL," Bowyer said, "but it is the NFL that I'm after."

And when a professional "assassin" goes after someone — whatever it may be — you can usually bet the target will fall.

Lacrosse holds tryouts

The sticks are repocketed, helmets polished, shoes cleaned and the bodies primed for the upcoming lacrosse club's 1982 season.

This year's first practice will be held at 10 a.m. Saturday at Sahuaro field, just behind the Sahuaro dormitory.

Beginners are welcome and will receive separate instruction in basic fundamentals. The Club, however, will need as many experienced players as possible to fill the gap left by last year's graduating class.

This year's team plans to make trips to San Francisco, San Diego, Los Angeles and Colorado.

For more information, call Fred Daniels at 965-6370 or 966-7147.

The ASU men's swimming team is looking for girls to serve as Timettes to help operate time clocks at the Devils' swim meets and help out with various other team-related tasks.

All interested girls should meet at 8 p.m. Tuesday at the Aquatics Center.

For more information, call Robert at 894-2061 or Cheryl at 829-1802.

Pick 'em

Entries must be turned in to the State Press by 3 p.m. Friday in the Matthews Center basement. Only one entry per person. The top three entries will be listed in Tuesday's paper. The ASU-Houston game will be used as the tie breaker, so just predict the score. Place an "X" in both boxes to predict a tie in any game with the point spread taken into consideration.
