Peers can lend helping hand

By Maria Khan
Staff writer

Peer counseling. That is the main idea behind a paraprofessional program being initiated by the Dean of Students Office.

The paraprofessional program is new at ASU. Chuck Barnard, coordinator of student programs, said the program will train student volunteers to inform students on a variety of services offered by the Dean of Students Office.

Barnard said he hopes there will be about 15 students working in the program next semester. Each will work two to three hours a week and will attend a monthly meeting. He said the time expenditure will be comparable to a three-credit course.

Barnard said the Dean of Students Office is hoping to find students with various interests and academic levels.

He said student paraprofessionals will not be paid, but they will be eligible to receive two credit hours of independent study through counselor education.

Terry Ratcliff, program coordinator, is looking for students who are familiar with the ASU campus.

Paraprofessionals will be trained to be familiar with ASU policies and procedures, how to get involved on campus and where to go for information about class withdrawals, grade changes and problems with professors.

Ratcliff said although most of the information can be found in the ASU catalog, the program will serve as a referral service.

"We're trying to eliminate unnecessary footwork for students," he said.

He stressed that the program is designed to benefit all students but that its ultimate success depends on the community taking advantage of it.

According to Barnard, the students will work closely with the professional staff in the Dean of Students Office. He said the program's main advantage is that students may be able to relate better to other students.

Program training will take place in December and will include instruction in communicative skills, campus familiarity and information on individual colleges and departments.

Applications for the program will be accepted through Nov. 24 and are available in the Dean of Students Office.

'Drop-in' counselors offer aid

By Emily Smith
Staff writer

A special group therapy session in which students "drop-in" when they need counseling has been crippled by lack of student support, the director of the program said Wednesday.

So far "no one" has attended the drop-in sessions since they began Oct. 27, said Ed Smith, a doctoral intern who co-directs the program.

"I think people just don't know about it," Smith said. "We made up flyers about the drop-in sessions and they were supposed to be posted around the dorms, but it just didn't get circulated as much as we thought."

The program, sponsored by the University Counseling Service, is designed to accommodate students that cannot attend typical sessions scheduled on a regular basis, Smith said.

The sessions are scheduled for every Wednesday from 3 p.m. to 5 p.m. in the basement of the Agriculture Building.

In an attempt to let more people know about the program, students who had signed up on a waiting list for a private appointment with a University counselor were contacted last week and told about the program, Smith said.

There are approximately 50 people on the waiting list, he said.

Although a few students expressed interest in the drop-in group after being contacted, Smith said he felt they might still feel "bashful" about coming.

"We still want to get it going," he said. "It is the type of thing that we didn't expect to get developed right away — we knew it would take awhile."

Until now, all of the group counseling services were offered at the beginning of each semester, he said.

"The problem is that a student might be aware of the need for a group after the class has already closed," Smith said.

More people tend to seek counseling later in the semester when they are feeling academic stress, he said.

Smith said the drop-in group would accommodate students who want to attend sessions on an occasional basis rather than on a full-time basis.

"Some people may not feel the need for a weekly group, but instead feel they just want something to go to when they need it," Smith said.

Rainy day romance

Rain often brings out gloomy dispositions in people, but for a couple walking down Cady Mall yesterday, the wet weather provided the opportunity to get close together while sharing an umbrella. The forecast for today and Friday calls for partly cloudy skies and high temperatures near 70, according to the National Weather Service.

University bookstores challenged by private industry's probe

The following is third of a series about how private enterprise legislation proposed by a committee representing private industry could affect Arizona's community colleges and universities.

Today, the State Press examines a proposal calling for universities and community colleges to give control of campus bookstores to private industry.

By Mead Summer
Staff writer

A proposal submitted to the Arizona House of Representatives could have large-scale effects on bookstores operated by the state's universities and community colleges.

Under the legislation proposed by the Private Enterprise Review Commission, the bookstores would be limited to "the provision of goods, services or facilities (that) offer a valuable educational or research experience for the student as part of their education or (that) fulfill the public service mission of the university."

The House formed the commission to hear and make decisions on allegations that the state is unfairly competing with private businesses.

Doug Hanson, ASU bookstore manager, said the proposal would eliminate everything sold in the bookstore except textbooks. He said that such a measure would be unfair.

"I think it's a very narrow point of view on anyone's part to say the only thing we can carry is textbooks," Hanson said. "We are here to serve the University community in the best, most reasonable fashion."

Unfair competition

Third of a series

"I would hate to see all those items excluded from our bookstore."

However, Joe Castillo, chairman-elect of the Arizona Chamber of Commerce's Small Business Council and a member of the commission, explained why the commission feels that a private company should run the bookstore.

"By providing an on-campus bookstore with a variety of items to the students, the University is taking business away from privately owned bookstores," Castillo said.

Castillo owns the Astro Blueprint and Supply Company, which sells many of the same items as the ASU Bookstore. He said although the bookstore managers claim to operate at a "break-even point," some items are more expensive at the university store than at his store.

But Hanson said he could not accept the commission's proposal knowing that "it would not be looked at objectively by the individuals (of the commission)."

Castillo said the commission identified many reasons for transferring the bulk of bookstore activity to the private sector.

In addition to an existing law prohibiting the state from competing with private enterprise, Castillo said taxpayers wind up paying more than their share because of the state-operated bookstores.

"They haven't had to charge sales tax," Castillo said. "That's a 5 percent advantage over private business right there."

He added that sales tax that would be accumulated if private industry operated the bookstores could alleviate some of the burden from the taxpayer.

Castillo said the commission decided that certain items should not be supplied by university-operated bookstores.

"What we're concerned about is that they (the school-run bookstores) are selling underwear, stuffed animals and other things that have nothing to do with education," he said.

Officials say there are two possibilities for the future of campus bookstores.

One possibility is that the bookstore will continue to operate, but will be allowed to sell only textbooks. However, Hanson said the price of textbooks would have to be raised dramatically for the bookstore to be self-sufficient with such a limited market.

"We take minimal mark-up on our textbooks," Hanson said. "The money needed to operate and to pay personnel really comes from the sales of the kinds of items that the commission wants to remove."

The only way for the bookstore to remain open without raising textbook prices would be to receive money from the state government to keep it running, Hanson said.

Reagan may ask Congress for more tax cuts

HOMESTEAD, Fla. (AP) — President Reagan said Wednesday he may ask Congress to speed up the effective date of the third year of the tax cut plan from July 1 to Jan. 1. "We're thinking about it," said Reagan. "We're talking about that." But he said no final decision has been made. Speaking with reporters as he toured an exhibit at Homestead Air Force Base of drugs seized by federal agents, Reagan said the appealing thing about moving up the date when taxpayers would benefit from the cut is that "it would stimulate the economy. That's what's so appealing about it."

October factory-use rate hits all-time low

WASHINGTON (AP) — Nearly one-third of the production lines at U.S. factories stood idle last month as the recession deepened, in what one economist called a "near depression." The 68.4 percent factory-use rate reported Wednesday was the worst on record.

President to propose expanded hotline

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan is about to propose to the Soviet Union an expansion of the Washington-Moscow hotline and other "confidence-building" measures, including notice of upcoming missile tests, administration sources said Wednesday.

The sources said Reagan, in his new arms control initiative, will encourage the post-Brezhnev leadership in Moscow to reach an agreement with U.S. negotiators in Geneva on at least some of the principles of his proposed treaty to sharply reduce strategic nuclear weapons on both sides.

Administration says bishops 'misread' nuclear arms policy

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Reagan administration told the nation's Roman Catholic bishops Wednesday that their projected pastoral letter condemning nuclear war and challenging U.S. strategic planning reflects a "fundamental misreading" of U.S. policy.

The comments were in a seven-page letter from President Reagan's national security adviser, William P. Clark.

Ex-CIA agent found guilty of giving guns to Libya

ALEXANDRIA, Va. (AP) — A federal court jury today found ex-CIA agent Edwin P. Wilson guilty on seven of eight counts of smuggling four pistols and an M-16 rifle to Libyan officials in 1979 as part of a scheme that ultimately won him more than $20 million in contracts with that radical Arab government.

U.S. District Judge Richard L. Williams set sentencing for Dec. 17. Wilson, who remains in custody on $60 million bail, faces a maximum penalty of 39 years in prison and a fine of $240,000.

U.S. housing starts rise sharply

WASHINGTON (AP) — U.S. housing starts edged up 1 percent to an annual rate of 1.12 million in October, and building permits for future construction rose sharply for the second month in a row, the Commerce Department reported Wednesday.

The permits figure was particularly encouraging for the housing industry, which had been in a severe slump for more than a year.

Fund loss may cut nursing enrollment

By Emily Smith
Staff writer

A recent federal funding cut in the ASU College of Nursing could result in a "forced and planned" decline in the number of students enrolled in the college for the spring, Juanita Murphy, the dean of the college said Wednesday.

Money received by the nursing college from the federal government was cut from $756,000 in 1981 to $491,000 in 1982, according to ASU's Office of Grants and Contracts annual report.

In order to adjust to the decrease in federal funding, a decline in the number of faculty in the Nursing College would be necessary, Murphy said.

"We just can't sustain a high enrollment with a decrease in faculty," she said.

There are currently 150 graduate students in the College of Nursing and 410 students at the junior and senior level.

Murphy said she did not know how much the enrollment would have to decrease to meet the financial cuts.

"We are still in the process of trying to refine faculty adjustments... the prospect of decreasing students has not been calibrated yet," she said.

Other areas where the cuts might be felt are in the number of loans, scholarships and nursing traineeships available to nursing students, Murphy said.

Money from the federal government is not the only financial aid that is being cut from the college, she added.

"Another thing that is going to happen is that the National Institute of Mental Health is folding its support of training psychiatric manpower — including nurses. In essence, they are not going to give lumps of money for the education of psychiatric help and nurses," she said.

Murphy predicted the NIMH would probably withdraw its support by June 30, 1983.

In spite of the Nursing College's recent drop in support from the federal government and the predicted drop in support from the NIMH, the demand for qualified nurses continues to rise, Murphy said.

"There is an increasing need for well-qualified, educated nurses to plan and manage complex nursing and care problems," she said. "They (hospitals) are doing a lot of employing of (nursing) aides off the streets, many of whom do not have a high school diploma."

But Murphy added that the spiraling costs of health care could curtail the demand for nurses by requiring hospitals to cut down on personnel.

A problem associated with trying to lower the rising health care costs by cutting down on personnel is that more qualified people are required to run the complex equipment in hospitals these days, she said.

"We are in a technological binge right now where everybody has to have the most recent diagnostic equipment," Murphy said. "With the introduction of all this new diagnostic equipment, more technicians spring up to man these different units."

Murphy said she feels employment prospects look good for nursing students, but she does not know if the recent attempts to limit the rising costs of medical care will succeed.

"I think it will be dependent on the politics of each region or state," she said.

Commercialization destroys holiday spirit

Scott Hume
Scenes Writer

"Tis the season to be commercial . . .
Would it shock you to hear the above in a store, in an elevator, or on television?
It would, you say. It would shock me too.

But, you hear it anyway. You hear it in the store: "Shoppers, Christmas is coming, but our sales are here now! Take advantage of our lay-away and gift-wrap services in all departments." And in the elevator, the Muzak service is spewing "White Christmas," "Jingle Bells" and some obscure one about a "Good King what's his name."

Christmas commercialization is all around us.

It starts yearly with the Macy's Thanksgiving Day Parade. Mixed in with all the floats of Bullwinkle and the latest super heroes, a Santa rides along waving and attempting to raise Christmas cheer and awareness of (that's right, you guessed it) Macy's Christmas sales, now in progress.

This can be looked on from many perspectives. However, I see it as blatant commercialism.

Another evidence of this blatancy is on television. Think back about 10 years ago (if you watch television much this degree of concentration may be hard, so be careful). You may remember when TV presented the true meaning of Christmas for all to see.

But with the advent of the Fairness Doctrine, the Equal Time lobbies, and the interaction of various religious groups, most broadcasters are unwilling to show such heady programming, lest they offend an advertiser or (heaven forbid) some Godless viewer who might switch the channel when confronted with uncomfortable dogma. And with the broadcasters' credo of "Thou shalt not offend" as a watchword, offense is a mortal sin, while commercialization of a religious message for a sugar-coating effect or ratings and the ensuing profit is not.

For anyone with half a brain, this would seem to be a distorted state of affairs. And that procurement is being mild.

The question which we must confront is two-fold: Is this commercialization for profit maximization? or Is it a sign of the times? . . . that we just don't care about our beliefs enough, that we don't want to speak out, that we just don't care.

Now I'm not going to get up on a soap box and spout of the humane philosophy of Paddy Cheyefsky as he did in his film, "Network." And I'm not going to give you the brotherhood and loyalty and morality of a Star Trek episode. But maybe that's not a bad idea.

What we're ultimately talking about is not just the commercialization of Christmas; what we're really talking about is the ultimate dehumanization of mankind itself.

If we allow the season of love to become a mere hazy shell of its true meaning, how further down the road is the day for total disrespect of the law, or the total dehumanization of mankind?

It's been said that George Orwell's "1984" is coming fast. I say it's here, as are the other trademarks of a sick society.

Sobering words in this supposedly happy time of year, huh?

Sorry, if I've offended you, but the truth often hurts.

So when you see a performance of Handel's "Messiah" interrupted by a commercial for Beastly House's Christmas Toy Sale in the Big Toy Shed next to the psychedelic gift wrapping counter, stop and think: what does Christmas REALLY mean? Is it all the glitter and gold? The tinsel and the evergreen? Is it the wishes for a "joyous season" on your greeting cards?

No, it is not.

At least, it shouldn't be.

U.S. not aggressive

Editor:

In response to Steve De Cosse's letter of Nov. 9, 1982, I would like to comment:

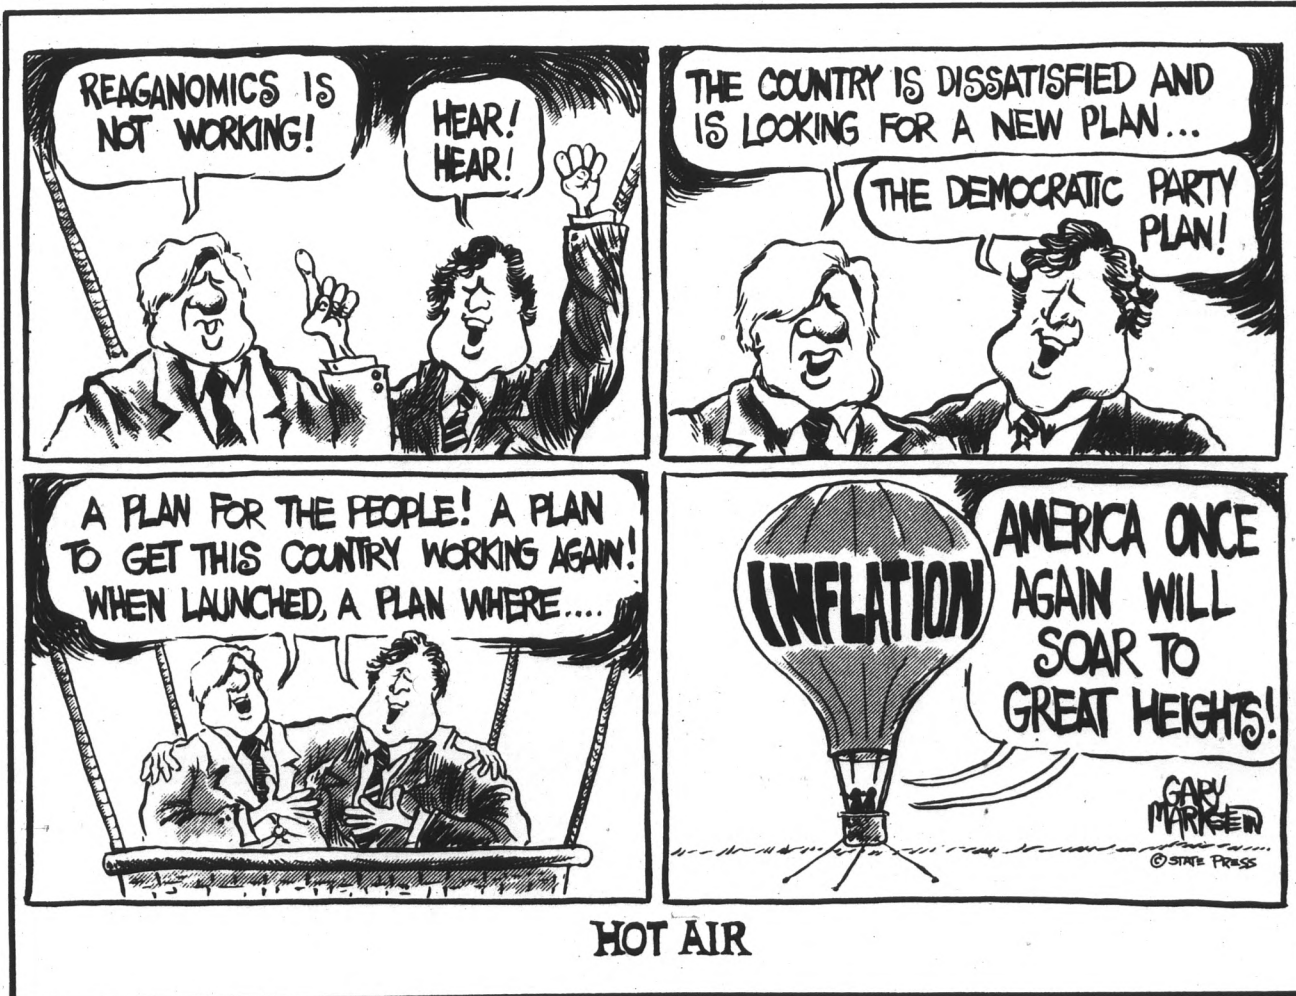

Mr. De Cosse seems to think that the USSR is just a big gentle bear, forced to arm itself against big bad American adventurism. Mr. De Cosse mentions that the Soviets must deploy defensive arms to counter U.S. deployment of the Pershing II missile system. I think he has that little bit of insight backwards. For one thing we have yet to successfully test fire a Pershing II missile while the Soviets continue to deploy the SS-20 missile. The USSR will ultimately build 200 SS-20 launchers. Each launcher will have two missiles, each missile will contain three nuclear warheads. That is 1,200 nuclear warheads for one missile system alone. The Soviets have five intermediate- and medium-range missile systems deployed in Eastern Europe and the western portion of the Soviet Union. In addition they have several squadrons of aircraft able to deliver nuclear weapons all the way to London. The International Institute for Strategic Studies (1980) report on military balance lists 1,213 ballistic missile warheads (for theater nuclear weapons) in the Warsaw Pact compared to 326 for NATO forces. Who needs defending from whom?

The U.S. has offered to cancel or reduce Pershing II deployment in return for reductions in Soviet nuclear forces poised to attack Bonn, London, Brussels, etc. The Soviets do not seem at all willing to negotiate.

Mr. De Cosse also mentions that the Soviets must adopt a Launch on Warning policy since the not yet produced Pershing II could hit Moscow in six to eight minutes. Is he not aware that the Soviets can hit Washington, D.C., all U.S. coastal cities and the cities of neighboring states in the same amount of time with missiles fired from Soviet Yankee, Gulf, Delta and the new Typhoon class submarines? Those submarines have been there for years, yet we have not adopted a Launch on Warning policy.

Yes, it is time to learn the facts. It is also time to be a little more even handed in one's interpretation of the "truth." It is an unfortunate tendency among some professors and students in political science at ASU to make comments about American "aggression" and Soviet "defensive moves" even while the Soviets use chemical warfare in Afghanistan and repressive tactics in the USSR.

Hebrew should be offered at ASU

Editor:

I am currently a senior at ASU. Last Fall when looking for a class to fill a general studies requirement, I was shocked to learn that Hebrew is not offered. I did learn, however, that the languages of Portuguese and Greek are offered at ASU. I ask you, how many Portuguese and Greek students (excluding fraternity and sorority members) attend this university? Is the number of Portuguese and Greeks significant enough to justify the teaching of these languages? Furthermore, is not the significant number of Jewish students on this campus enough to warrant that the Hebrew language be offered?

Another important factor in this issue is the growing demand for Jews and non-Jews alike to be able to understand the original language of the Bible.

I suggest that the chairman of the foreign language department and the dean of the college of liberal arts seriously examine this deficiency. Their attention should be given to these needs of a large component of the student population.

ASU profiles police for stress

By Chris Coppola
Staff writer

The University Police is in the process of implementing a system of psychological assessment for ASU officers, according to Police Chief Russell Duncan.

Duncan said the system involves a process of screening new officers by performing psychological profiles, and working with an outside psychologist to meet with officers needing assistance in dealing with stress.

"We have used psychological evaluations this year for the first time when hiring new officers and we will continue to use them," he said. "We also work with a clinical psychologist who is on call. If I see officers who are having stress problems, I have no qualms about sending them."

"We don't demean them for talking to a psychologist... we all have to dump out our wheelbarrow of problems on someone."

Duncan said University Police officers are faced with similar types of "stressors" that city police officers face, such as a daily array of unusual situations, varied shift changes and a variety of personal problems that may come into focus.

"Alcoholism is very high among police officers. The divorce rate is one of the highest among police officers and the suicide rate is second highest — behind dentists," he said.

"They're also faced with the constant question of 'Am I right?' when they are dealing with the public, and they are constantly faced with rejection."

But, Duncan added that University Police officers are in a more sensitive environment because of the student-oriented population, and the unique situations that often arise.

He said one such situation occurred two weeks ago, when the ASU football team played the University of Southern California on a Saturday night and a rock concert featuring the Who was held at Sun Devil Stadium the following night.

"Most of the officers worked 40 of those 48 hours," he said. "We had two accidents involving our vehicles that weekend... we've come to the conclusion that they were probably fatigue related. One (officer) just ran into a light pole."

Duncan said the department is making attempts to recognize stress and effectively deal with it, such as enacting rotation of shifts during semester breaks when activity is slow around the campus.

Duncan said this is done to give officers sufficient time to adapt to the change at a time when job stress is more likely to be low.

He said the psychological program at ASU, when fully implemented, will enable officers to seek help without a referral from their superior.

"The only thing we want to know (from the psychologist) is if the officer should not be working or if he should have a vacation or sick leave."

He said the program at ASU is still in the early stages because the department's budget was already appropriated before the program was implemented at the start of the fall semester.

Chaw fad to raise level of oral disease

By the College Press Service

ATLANTA — Chewing tobacco, which has achieved "big fad" status in some college and high school circles, can be extremely hazardous to students' health, and could lead to an eventual increase in oral diseases, a Tufts University medical professor warned at an oral surgeons' convention here.

"It's gone all the way down to the junior high level," said Dr. Irving Meyer. "Among high-risk people — men between 40 and 45 who drink a lot — it someday is going to cause pre-cancerous conditions we call leukoplakia and erythroplasia."

Meyer said the diseases associated with chewing tobacco — which also include gum disease — are not currently afflicting many students. He is worried that people now "who drink a lot and use this (tobacco) a lot," however, are prime candidates for illnesses later.

"With 9,000 deaths from oral cancer a year, and 27,000 new cases a year, it's already a very big problem," Meyer said.

ASU orients students to slice of college life

By Jomarie Leone
Staff writer

Twenty-four English honors students from Corona Del Sol High School in Tempe were shown what college life at ASU is all about.

Amy Whitehead, president of ASU's Mortar Board, said top-ranking high school students spent five hours on Wednesday touring ASU and attending classes with board members during the group's "What College Is Really Like" orientation program.

"We wanted to give them the opportunity to be college students for a day," Whitehead said. "We took them to classes, to lunch — they did everything we do in a normal school day."

The Mortar Board is a service, leadership, scholarship senior honorary. The high school visitors attended classes form them of honors study areas that may be open to them.

"This is precisely the type of activity we need to do on a regular, on-going basis," he said.

Humphrey said the honors program has given priority to this sort of recruitment in order to increase the population of potentially excellent students attending ASU.

"One of the long-term benefits of increasing the population of excellent students is improving the quality of a degree from ASU," Whitehead said. "That will reflect on anyone who has a degree from ASU."

Silbergeld also stressed the importance of an orientation program to acquaint students with actually attending ASU, not just the aesthetics of the campus.

"Choosing a college is a big step," he said. "If no orientation programs take you into the classroom, how are you going to know in sociology, zoology, and business. They also had the opportunity to hear a guest lecture from a Vietnam veteran and to view high technology equipment in the physics department.

'You can get the kind of quality education at ASU that you can get at Harvard ...'

Barry Silbergeld, the board's vice-president said, "We took the academic and career interests of Mortar Board members, then paired them with (high school) students interested in their majors."

Business and technical majors were among the most common interests of the potential college students, Whitehead said.

"The specific major they mentioned most often was computer science," she said.

Whitehead said so many students were interested in the engineering and applied science fields, that they were grouped together to tour the physics labs and the engineering complex.

Ted Humphrey, ASU Honors Program director, gave a presentation to the high school students Wednesday morning to inform them of honors study areas that may be open to them.

He said the program focused on the specific needs of honors students. However, if this kind of program could be enlarged at ASU in the future, it may focus on the needs of all types of students.

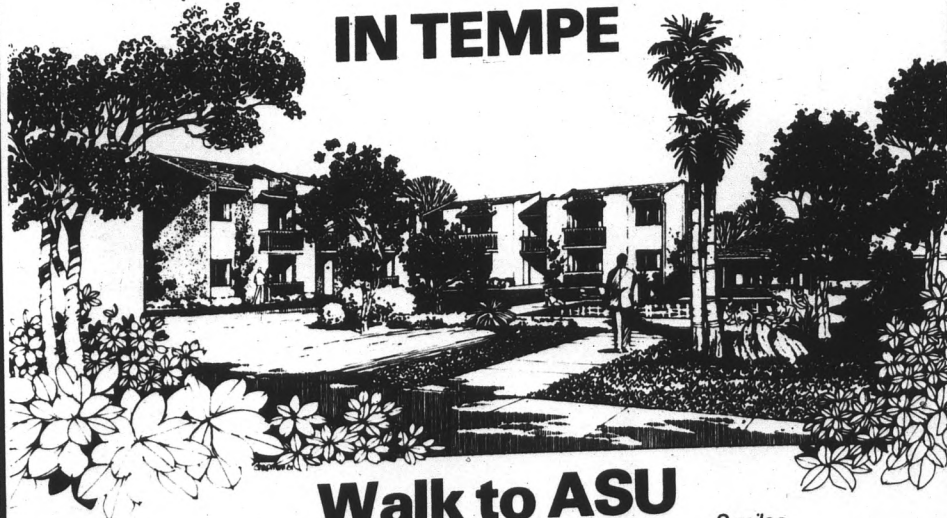

"We want to reach both ends of the spectrum," Silbergeld said. "Besides recruiting honors students, we want to familiarize students (with college life) who may not be sure about attending college at all."

Whitehead said she hoped this type of orientation program would have a "snowball effect" and eventually involve other ASU groups and administrative sectors.

Silbergeld said he felt programs like this could help students realize what is available at ASU.

"You can get the kind of quality education at ASU that you can get at Harvard for instance," Silbergeld said. "But it's up to the student to do what it takes to enhance his education."

Lawyers indict cameras in courtrooms

By Mead Summer
Staff writer

Despite American courts allowing television cameras into courtrooms, cameras still cause many problems for the participants of a trial, according to two Phoenix criminal lawyers.

Mike Kimerer and Larry Debus, members of a panel that spoke to a group of about 150 people Tuesday in the MU, said the mere presence of cameras tends to intimidate many people.

The two Phoenix attorneys recently defended Joyce Lukezic, who was recently convicted of the December 1980 murders of William Patrick Redmond and his mother-in-law, Helen Phelps.

However during the seminar, "Media and the Law: Cameras in the Courtroom," the two disagreed on whether or not cameras should be allowed at all in the courtroom.

Kimerer said the media has the right to be in the courtroom.

"I don't really see the problem of having cameras in the courtroom," he said. "The problem is the effects broadcasting may have on the viewers."

Debus' opinion differed from his partner's. "The purpose of the onslaught of media to get cameras in the courtroom is nothing more than making a dollar."

The attorneys said trial participants can be greatly affected by the introduction of a camera into the courtroom.

"One of the witnesses in the Lukezic trial was so worried about being televised that she came in (the courtroom) wearing a big black hat with a veil that went down to her feet," Kimerer said.

Debus said cameras can be used by "lawyers with political ambitions who want to 'ham it up.'"

The two also agreed that members of the media tend to pass judgment and present biased reports which can sway the opinions of viewers.

"Anyone that practices criminal law is aware that once a man is arrested for a crime, he is presumed by many to be guilty," Kimerer said. "And media play a large role, in that they want to present the most sensational story they can."

Kimerer cited as an example the cocaine-related charges levied against millionaire car manufacturer John DeLorean.

"He's still innocent," Kimerer said. "But the media have already found him guilty."

The two lawyers also said that cameras can effect the jury.

Debus said some cameramen have committed violations of the law by filming jury members and prospective members. There is a law which states that taking pictures of jury members, whether with still or movie cameras, is illegal, he said.

He also said some prospective jury members have refused to serve because they had seen other jurors on television news programs.

"No one wants to serve as a juror if they cannot be assured that their face will not be seen on television," Debus said.

Debus told the audience that many journalists, especially those in television, are irresponsible, because they present only part of a picture.

"They have no integrity," he said. "They are out to make a sensational story however they can do it. They don't care about the people involved in a story, only the story itself."

He opposed the idea because restricting items sold in bookstores would eliminate "the convenience factor to the students."

"We are here to service the University in the best, most reasonable fashion. Why should a student have to go all the way to an off-campus store just to buy a pencil or a pack of tissues?" asked Hanson.

Thomas Augherton, vice president for governmental affairs of the Arizona Chamber of Commerce, said although the chamber originated the idea to set up the commission, he agreed with Hanson — not the commission's proposal.

"The primary purpose of the university bookstores is for educational purposes, but convenience items are necessary for the betterment of the students," Augherton said.

A second and more likely alternative for the bookstores should the legislature approve the commission's proposal, would be to turn over the operation of the entire bookstore to a private company.

"The easiest way to solve the whole problem is to contract the whole bookstore out to a private contractor," Castillo said. "If the bookstore is contracted, the students are going to benefit in the long run."

Hanson, disagreeing with Castillo's statement, said students could expect to see the prices of most items increase if the the bookstore was operated by a private business.

"We carry on and operate many services that we must do to properly serve the university. The private sector might not continue them," Hanson said.

"With the prices we charge, we operate at 'break-even.' They (private businessmen) are not benevolent — they're in it for a profit, so they will inevitably raise the prices."

Students at some community colleges could suffer more from this proposal than university students.

Some of Arizona's community colleges are in rural areas, where the bookstores are the only immediately available source of goods.

Hanson pointed out that no private companies voiced opposition when the state-operated bookstores first began serving the campus communities.

"We were here long before the private sector was willing to engage in this business," he said.

Augherton agreed, "Let's not forget which came first — the chicken or the egg. The universities were here before the private bookstores."

"It all comes down to being realistic about what the needs of the business community are versus the needs of Arizona university and community college students," Augherton said.

ASA director finds political

By Janine Warell
 Staff writer

Many think the days of volunteerism are gone. But Kerry Smith would disagree.

Volunteering has put him in the paid position he is in today.

At age 26, Smith is the executive director of the Arizona Students Association, an organization established in 1975 to represent the interests of state university students in the Legislature and the Arizona Board of Regents.

"I'm a youngster for some of the things I've been involved with," Smith quips, after revealing his age.

Smith said he was chosen for the position because of his political experience — experience that began as a volunteer for the Democratic Party.

After graduating from Drake University in Des Moines, Iowa, with a degree in public administration and political science, Smith wasted little time in becoming involved in politics.

"Immediately after graduation, I packed my car and came down here — mainly because I had never been in this part of the country before," he said.

After two days in Arizona, Smith volunteered to be a fund raiser for the Democratic Party.

But, Smith knew a volunteer job would not pay the bills. So when he was not soliciting funds, he was looking for employment.

He did not have to look any farther than the Democratic Party.

William Shulz, who ran for the U.S. Senate in 1980, hired Smith as a fund-raising coordinator for all the legislative candidates in the state.

Smith had taken the opportunity as a volunteer, and the experience paid off.

"I moved down here and put myself in the right place for what I want to do," he said.

Smith established ties with the Legislature. He responded to an advertisement for the ASA position, his political background spoke for itself.

On Sept. 1, 1981, Smith was hired as the executive director. While the ASA position may have been a political plum, the public administration degree he earned at the University of Arizona helped him succeed with politics.

ASA is composed of 16 voting members from three state universities.

"I'm on the board, but I don't have a vote," Smith said. The association currently is involved with a bill which will be presented at the next legislative session.

"At this point in the process, with the Legislature, we're involved with two things. One is the impact it has on the universities and students. The other is that information to the Legislature," he said.

Smith said that although ASA is a relatively new organization, it has proven successful in affecting legislation.

"There has been legislation passed in the past because of us," he said.

Smith said the association has had a major impact on the price of tuition at the state universities.

"The Board of Regents is going to discuss it," he said. "I feel safe to say that in the past, we've been around, we've had something to do with tuition at least $70 lower (than it might have been)." Smith believes such success makes ASA a valuable organization for university students, who pay approximately $1,000 a year to fund ASA.

The association also was primarily started by a student regent, he said.

"Before we started, the regents did not have a voice. There was no student impact on the regents' decisions."

However in 1978, a student was appointed to the Board of Regents. It took a couple of years to get it (a student representative) on the board.

The Board of Regents last week voted 8-1 to allow the student regent to vote at the next legislative session.

Legislature will discuss the proposal in January.

"There is no doubt in my mind that the regents will act in the best interest of the state," Smith said. But he said the association's effectiveness in its political strategies were difficult to gauge.

He said the association "tries to influence the regents' decisions."

"I think they should be there electing people they like," Smith said. "I don't think they should be there electing people as they should be."

But, he said even if the association's legislative efforts, the students whose interests are represented are not always successful.

Smith said that when a bill was introduced, he went to every fraternity house and wrote letters to voice their opinion.

"There was no interest in doing anything," he said.

Regardless of the political apathy he encountered, Smith will continue to be involved in the ASA.

He currently is the Democratic chairman of District 27 and in the past three years, he has managed the races of three candidates.

Of the three, only one was successful — Richard Kimball, who was elected to the Arizona Corporation Commission.

But Smith is not disheartened. "Tempe is a fairly closed Republican organization," he said.

The other candidates for whom Smith campaigned were

Peggy Hall, who ran for Tempe City Council, and Jo Ann Pedrick, a candidate for the state Legislature.

Hall lost by 149 votes and Smith said Pedrick "did far better than any Democrat has done in recent history and (she) shook up the power system a bit."

Smith said his political involvement has taught him that "logic does not rule the process."

"The politics of the situation rules," he said.

Smith said his interests with ASA and politics are equally balanced.

The job of executive director is an annual position. In March, a committee will review Smith's performance and make recommendations as to whether or not he should be rehired.

Smith also has the option of whether to remain in the post, but he would not comment on how long he intends to stay as executive director.

"I have turned down other offers, but I'm sure the time will come when I will no longer be the best person for the position," he said.

As for future politics, Smith is a politician on the issue — he is wary of committing himself to an answer.

"I've considered it, but there certainly is no commitment.
It's just a question of whether that's what you want to be," he said, pausing a moment and then smiling.

"But I wouldn't be surprised if that were to happen."

Women cagers again contend for league title

By Ken Sain
Sports writer

The ASU women's basketball team has had some magical moments the past few years.

The Sun Devils will try to keep the magic going today as they open their 1982-83 season at the Cal Poly-San Luis Obispo Straw Hat Classic.

The Devils are coming off their best year ever. Last season, ASU finished the year with a 25-7 record. The Devils were also part of the first-ever NCAA women's hoop championship, before bowing out to eventual national champ, Louisiana Tech.

One of the most memorable moments came when ASU scored their biggest victory of the season by upsetting USC, who was ranked second nationally. ASU will be one of the favorites to take the Western Collegiate Athletic Association crown this year.

The prospect of capturing the conference crown seems attainable since the Devils return their three top scorers.

In addition, the Devils had a good recruiting year, so when they take the court today against Santa Clara, it could be the start of a magical season.

"We couldn't possibly be more prepared," boasted fourth-year head coach Juliene Simpson, who was named WCAA coach of the year last season as she improving her ASU three-year record to 58-31.

Only 11 players are on the roster, but an injury and an ineligible player have left the squad with only nine bodies for this weekend's tournament.

But Simpson feels comfortable with the smaller amount of players on the team. She said she is able to work with the players more on an individual basis.

"With our small numbers of players and our two assistant coaches (Ethel Gregory and Lisa Williams)," Simpson said, "we have gotten a great deal accomplished because nobody is sitting on the sidelines watching."

"We are ready to play. This has been the best preseason we've ever had."

Four of the Devils' seven losses last year were conference games, finishing third overall (8-4) in league play.

But there's no reason why Simpson shouldn't be optimistic about the upcoming year.

"We lost only one starter and should be a much stronger club than last year," she said. "We recruited one of the finest guards in the nation (Jodi Rathbun) to replace Sandra High-scoring center Kym Hampton lays one off the glass in last season's NCAA tournament win over Georgia.

(Hamilton)."

Hamilton is the only senior lost from last year. Senior Toya DeCree quit the team earlier this year. Forward Beckie Smatana is not eligible yet, and senior center Kathy Johnson has undergone knee surgery and will be lost for the season.

A look at the team lineup shows the Devils have experience at all positions.

GUARDS: The top name in the backcourt in Cassandra Lander. The 5-foot-6 senior averaged almost 14 points a game last year and should be one of the team leaders again this year. She is the all-time ASU leading scorer with 1,317 points.

In 1981, Lander was named most valuable player of the National Women's Invitational Tournament and also earned NWT All-American honors.

Stepping in to replace Sandra Hamilton will be 5-foot-6 sophomore Linn Henley. Hamilton is ASU's all-time leader in assists and steals, so Henley could feel the pressure right away. Henley played over the summer for the West entry in the National Sports Festival.

The Devils will not be hurting when they go to the bench either. Jodi Rathbun, a 5-foot-7 freshman, averaged over 37 points a game last year at Bartonville High School in Illinois. Rathbun scored a record 1,119 points as a senior.

FORWARDS: Team captain Olivia Jones was the second leading scorer on the team last year, averaging 14.4 points and hauling in 7.5 rebounds a game. The 6-foot-2 senior will likely see some time at center.

The other starting forward spot will be filled by Jessica Wiley, a 6-foot senior. Wiley is the defensive specialist on the team.

Depth will be added by 6-foot-1 junior-college transfer Teri Sharkey. Sharkey averaged 17 points and 11 rebounds a game last year at Mesa Community College.

CENTER: The leading scorer for the Devils should be in the pivot. Kym Hampton, a 6-foot-2 junior, averaged over 21 points and 11 rebounds last season.

Last year, Hampton was one of only three players to rank among the nation's top 25 in three NCAA statistical categories (rebounding, scoring, and field goal percentage).

She has also put herself in the ASU record book with game highs in scoring (42) and rebounding (28).

Hampton will probably be backed up by Jones.

The Devils are experienced and talented and, under the direction of Simpson, should be one of the most competitive teams in the nation.

Scott, Williams duo solidifies backcourt

By Michael Graham
Sports writer

When first-year head coach Bob Weinbauer came to ASU, he said the area that needed most improvement was the backcourt.

Since this year's hoop campaign is less than a week away, it now appears that the guards could be the Devils' biggest asset.

In Weinbauer's full-court pressing, everybody-do-everything strategy, look for the floor time to be spread among four players.

Bombardier-deluxe Byron Scott, who sat out last season for "personal reasons," should carry the majority of the scoring load from his off-guard spot this year. Scott sported a 16.6 points per game average two years ago on a talent-laden NCAA qualifying team.

This fall, the 6-foot-5, 195-pound Scott appears to have a revamped attitude and has played unselfishly.

"I don't see that the layoff that Byron took last year has hurt him at all," assistant coach and former NBA star Henry Bibby said. "His attitude is excellent; he has improved his work in the classroom and is getting along well with all of the players."

If Scott ever has the need for some scoring help, he can be sure to count on senior Paul Williams. Williams, who led the Devils in scoring (17.0 ppg) last season, will prove to be a valuable asset, since he can play both guard and forward.

Williams' disciplinary problems appear to be history, which makes the tandem of Scott and Williams a definite possibility when the season opens a week from Friday in the Crush Classic at Rosemont, Ill.

A backcourt of Williams and Scott could prove to be one of the most explosive around.

"I don't see any problems with playing Byron and Paul together in the backcourt," Bibby said. "In our offense, all the guards are going to be expected to play both the shooting and point spots. It's encouraging that all of the kids have made great progress in learning all the positions."

Two players that could challenge for starting privileges are sophomore Shawn Holiday and newcomer Chris Beasley.

Holiday was thrown to the lions early last season when he started for several games after Scott elected to sit out the season. Despite struggling a bit in his Pacific-10 Conference debut, the experience that the Pasadena, Calif., native received should help his cause during this campaign.

"Shawn is probably our best defensive guard right now," Bibby said of Holiday. "He's very aggressive out on the court and really makes a lot of things happen. We really couldn't ask anything more of him."

The one backcourt player who could surprise many a Sun Devil enthusiast this year is Beasley, a 6-foot-2, 175-pounder from Costa Mesa, Calif. Beasley, who averaged an impressive 23.4 ppg in two seasons at Orange Coast Junior College, should develop a very important role for the Devils this year.

After primarily playing the shooting guard at Orange Coast, Beasley is learning the point guard position.

ASU frontcourt big in numbers, not size

By Jeff Fries
Assistant sports editor

There's a definite possibility that the loss of center Corey McMullen, who was declared academically ineligible Tuesday for the fall semester, could unify the ASU basketball team — if nothing else.

"Anytime you lose a player, it has an effect on the team," head coach Bob Weinbauer said. "I expect the other players will work harder to pick up the slack and put us in a situation (as if we didn't lose anyone)."

The Sun Devils open their 1982-83 season Saturday with an exhibition contest against Estonia, a Canadian all-star team, at the Activity Center. The regular season opens Nov. 26 at the Crush Classic in Rosemont, Ill.

In the meantime, Weinbauer has been drilling his players like they were preparing to face UCLA in the conference title game.

Stringent, disciplined, tedious workouts have become the norm for the new-look Devils, who are without facial hair. With the new uniforms, short hair and a younger coaching staff, the look seems fresh off the pages of GQ.

Six-foot-10, 195-pound sophomore Phil McKinney, the tallest man on the roster, has been inked in at center since the McMullen decision.

"Phil can be as good as he wants to be," Weinbauer said. "He's so quick that people won't be able to keep him away from the boards if he wants to get there."

McKinney, who averaged 4.7 points and 2.9 rebounds a game in 15 appearances (nine starts) last year, has shown signs that he is ready for the assignment.

"Phil has made the most individual strides of anyone, but that's because he's had the longest way to come back," Weinbauer said. "He's been playing with intensity and concentration, and he's enthusiastic."

"He's improved his game tremendously."

Weinbauer, et. al., hope senior forward Walt Stone can improve at least as much. The 6-foot-8, 200-pound Stone averaged only 6.2 points and 4.0 rebounds in 27 games (13 starts) last year, while shooting an anemic 39.5 percent from the field.

This year, however, Stone has been playing with a new fervor. And his shots have been falling.

"We're all really looking forward to him having a good year," Weinbauer said. "We want him to put his individual skills together in the framework of the team."

Stone, sophomore Jim Deines, junior Warren Everett and senior Brent

Jones are the leading candidates for starting forward spots. If Tom Kuyper (finger) and Billy Jordan (foot) are quick healers, they will get a legitimate shot as well.

"We have plenty of forwards and centers," Weinbauer said. "If there's a problem, it's that there are too many of equal ability."

The 6-foot-9, 195-pound Deines has had the most starting experience of those in the running, beginning 18 of the 26 games he played last year, but he averaged just 3.6 points and 3.8 rebounds per outing.

Everett, a 6-foot-7, 210-pounder who started 11 of the 27 outings he appeared, shot a team-high 52 percent from the field last year while averaging 6.1 points and 4.2 caroms a contest.

The six-foot-6, 200-pound Kuyper started 10 of the 24 contests he checked in, making good for 5.3 points and 1.4 boards per game.

Jones, a 6-foot-7, 210-pounder, and the 6-foot-6, 200-pound Jordan were almost identical on points and rebounding totals, two totals Weinbauer would like to see his forwards and centers increase.

"I think everyone is trying to adjust to a whole new program," he added. "At times, we get a little behind, but the kids are working hard and they're getting better."

Huskies shoot for another Rose Bowl

This could be the week that the Pacific-10 Conference's Rose Bowl representative is decided. With Washington in first place after last week's win over ASU, all the Huskies have to do is top lowly Washington State in Pullman, Wash.

But, as Sun Devil coach Darryl Rogers said, "Stranger things have happened."

Here is a look at this week's Pac-10 gridiron contests (conference records in parentheses):

WASHINGTON (6-1) at WASHINGTON STATE (1-4-1) — The Huskies will not only be attempting to clinch their third straight Rose Bowl appearance, but will be trying to take the Apple Cup — a trophy given to the winner of the state rivalry.

UCLA quarterback Tom Ramsey leads the country in passing efficiency.

Also, with a win making UW 10-1 overall, Washington coach Don James could have his most successful regular season record ever in his 12 years as a head coach (four years at Kent State).

Despite an injury-plagued year for the Cougars, Jim Walden's squad will remember last year's game when the Huskies knocked WSU out of the Rose Bowl with a 23-10 victory.

The Huskies have won the past eight meetings between the two schools.

This game will pit three of the Pac-10's top rushers with UW's Jacque Robinson (first, 78.9 avg.), and WSU's James Matthews (fourth, 57.0) and Tim Harris (fifth, 56.0).

And with Robinson with a big advantage over the rest of the league's rushers, he should become the first non-USC back to win the Pac-10's rushing title since 1973.

USC (5-1) at UCLA (4-1-1) — This game at the Rose Bowl, which will be shown on ABC-TV at 1:50 p.m. Saturday, won't have any effect on the Rose Bowl picture unless Washington is stunned by WSU.

If that happens and UCLA wins, then they will be hoping for a U of A conquest of ASU next week in order to play one more game on their home field.

Bruin quarterback Tom Ramsey, who won the Pac-10 offensive player of the week award for the third time this season, still leads the nation in passing efficiency.

However, the Bruins have dropped five of the last six games in this fierce intra-city rivalry. Last year, a UCLA field goal was blocked as time ran out, giving the Trojans a 22-21 win.

USC is second in the league in scoring defense, despite allowing 41 points to Arizona last week. The Bruins lead the conference in scoring offense.

STANFORD (3-4) at CALIFORNIA (3-4) — The annual "Big Game" — the oldest college football rivalry on the West

Badminton team heads for tourney

Four ASU badminton players will compete in this week's world-famous CP Air Tournament at the Manhattan Beach (Calif.) Badminton Club.

"The CP tournament is one of the finest around," ASU coach Merle Packer said. "Several countries send their national teams to this tournament."

Packer said Solaiman Jonatan — last year's collegiate national champion — will make the trip along with Miles Munson, Regina Rubin and Eileen Morrison.

All four will compete both in singles and doubles competition.

The Danish and Mexican national teams will compete in the tournament, along with 13 of Canada's best badminton players.

Coast — dates back to 1893, with Stanford holding a slight 40-34-10 edge.

This one could be a duel between two excellent passing teams, Stanford with John Elway and Cal with Gale Gilbert.

In fact, Elway should break four more records after stepping off the field for the final time in his regular season collegiate career.

With his 12th pass, he will top Mark Herrmann's NCAA career mark (1,218) for most passes attempted. He will also shatter three more single-season Pac-10 records for passing yards, attempts and completions.

Last year, the Cardinal rolled to an easy 42-21 win. But Cal has come up with many an upset in this series over the years.

ARIZONA (3-2-1) at OREGON (0-6-1) — Incredibly, there hasn't been a single win in the state of Oregon this year.

The Ducks (0-8-1 overall) and cross-state rival Oregon State (0-8-1 overall) have combined to form what may be the worst showing ever by a state's major college schools.

Arizona, despite being beat by USC last week, has rolled as of late on offense, scoring 171 points in their last four games (42.8 avg.).

The series between the two clubs is tied 5-5, but the Cats have won all three meetings since joining the Pac-10 in 1978.

Several Sun Devils lead in various Pac-10 categories.

Punter Mike Black figures to finally win the conference punting title. Black, who is averaging 44.0 per kick, is well ahead of Dave Pryor of Southern Cal (42.2).

Placekicker Luis Zendejas leads in field goals attempted with 27 (he's made 20).

In scoring, pass and total defense, ASU ranks first in the league. They stand No. 2 in rushing defense behind USC.
