Former ASU undergrad pleads guilty to robbery

By Janine Warell
Staff writer

A 20-year-old former ASU junior, who has been charged with robbing a fee registration teller on campus, waived his preliminary hearing Wednesday by agreeing to plead guilty in Maricopa County Superior Court.

Frederick Contreras was released on his own recognizance and is set to appear in Superior Court on Jan. 25 at 9 a.m.

According to University Police Sergeant William Taylor, Contreras and a 16-year-old juvenile tipped over a teller's booth in the Cochise Room of the Memorial Union on Dec. 28 at 4:22 p.m.

The suspects took a canvas teller's bag containing $18,000 of registration fees — $8,000 in cash and $10,000 in checks, Taylor said.

"They didn't know how much they were getting or what they were grabbing for sure," Taylor said. "Both suspects were apprehended in a few seconds."

Contreras was apprehended by ASU student Todd A. Bishop on the south lawn of the Academic Services Building.

Taylor said Contreras still had the money in his possession when he was tackled and held by Bishop and two other students.

"We had forty some witnesses in actuality on this," Taylor said.

A third female-juvenile suspect, who was waiting in what appeared to be a get-away car at Tempe Center, was later apprehended, he said.

In Tempe Justice Court yesterday, Contreras said, "I made a mistake and now I'm going to have to pay for it."

The Class 6 Felony that Contreras has been charged with carries a presumptive sentence of 1.5 years, a minimum sentence of .75 years and a maximum sentence of 1.875 years, although probation is available. It also carries a maximum fine of $150,000.

According to Dean of Students Leon Shell, if Contreras, who withdrew from the University last week, intends to re-enroll he will have to be reviewed under the Code of Conduct.

Shell said he has informed Contreras of the University's procedure.

Public Defender Kurt Goering said he would not make any comments "until the case is completely resolved."

Tuition increase proposed by committee

By Mead Summer
Staff writer

An increase in tuition and the eventual elimination of student health services at the three state universities will be proposed to the Senate Appropriations Committee, the chairman of an appropriations sub-committee said Wednesday.

Sen. Jack Taylor, R-Mesa, said the sub-committee will recommend resident registration fees be increased from $710 to $770 for the 1983-84 school year, and to $805 for the 1984-85 school year.

The sub-committee's recommendation would increase tuition for out-of-state students, who currently pay the resident registration fee in addition to $2,540 tuition, to $2,750 for 1983-84.

Non-residents would be required to pay $3,520 for the 1983-84 school year if the sub-committee proposal is approved.

The regents last year approved an increase in registration fees from $710 to $740 for the 1983 school year.

Taylor said the proposed increases would generate about $1.8 million in additional revenue for the state.

"In the past, we have relied on the Arizona Board of Regents to control the tuition matter," he said. "Up to now, they have only raised it to the point that it takes care of 18 percent (of the total cost of a student's education)."

Taylor said the sub-committee is proposing tuition for residents be increased to cover 25 percent of the cost of education. Currently, resident fees cover 18.4 percent.

He also said the sub-committee supports increasing non-resident fees to cover 100 percent of the cost of education. Taylor said currently non-residents pay about 90 percent of the cost of their education.

Taylor said the tuition increases would be proportional for residents and non-residents.

"As costs rise and students continue to come, (tuition and registration) will become more expensive," he said. "The persons getting the benefit of the education will have to take on a heavier portion of the load."

Taylor said the sub-committee would ask the Senate Appropriations Committee to formulate a bill to raise university tuition and registration fees over a three-year period.

The sub-committee also proposed the eventual elimination of the student health program at each of the three universities during the same three-year period.

Taylor said the sub-committee also supports a $5 surcharge for those using the health centers. The surcharge, if approved, would provide the state with another $150,000 this year.

"The sub-committee is looking at the health services with a view to discontinue it — phasing it out over a period of two or three years," Taylor said. "Considering the mobility of today's college student and the access to health care facilities in the local community, it is possible that the student health service may have outlived its intended purpose."

The three universities' health centers are visited about 147,600 times each year and each visit costs the state an average of $27, according to Taylor.

He said the surcharge would probably decrease the number of people who visit the health center.

The sub-committee faces strong opposition to its proposals, according to another member of the Senate Appropriations Committee.

Sen. Tony Gabaldon, D-Flagstaff, said that university students already pay for health services in their registration fees.

"I have information that shows that up to this year, on a student's registration receipt, it showed that (the student) was actually paying a health care fee each semester as part of their tuition," Gabaldon said.

"It should be safe to assume that part of their fees are still going to health care," he said.

Gabaldon said the Senate "is not keeping the faith" by con-

Parking woes persist with decal price hike

By Maria Khan
Staff writer

Although the available parking space on campus has not increased this semester, the cost to use that space has.

The price of a decal has increased from $5 to $15 for an automobile and from $5 to $10 for a motorcycle, according to Bill Phelps, chairman of the parking services committee.

Phelps said Lot 59 parking (located east of Sun Devil Stadium) now requires a $15 decal. Previously, decals used exclusively for Lot 59 were free.

Although lot designations have not been changed for most drivers, Phelps said there have been some modifications in disabled parking.

He said his office and Disabled Student Services have completed the review of the disabled applicants and recertified those eligible for disabled parking spaces.

Individually designated stalls have been eliminated because they were often underutilized, Phelps said.

"Everybody we've met with that has a disabled decal will be able to park where they've asked to park," Phelps said.

Disabled space has been allotted according to disabled drivers' requests, he said.

"We have tried to err on the side of having too much space (rather) than not enough, initially," Phelps said.

Phelps said another change made in parking for the current semester was in decal distribution. Faculty and staff decals were mailed, and students were able to pick up decals as early as Dec. 27 in order to avoid long lines in a limited period of time.

Phelps said that one of five planned controlled access parking lots will begin operation by the end of January. Lot 19 (located south of the Business Administration Building), used for visitor parking, will be the first of the proposed lots to be converted. Phelps said the other conversions will follow as soon as possible.

The Parking Services Committee, established to follow up on recommendations made by the Ad Hoc Parking Committee in their May 1982 report, is continuing to study ideas for improvements in parking at ASU.

"The major thing facing the Parking Services Committee is to determine a comprehensive parking plan together with fees to be implemented in the fall semester of 1983," Phelps said. "In order to do that, we need a data base of information concerning available parking spaces, demographics on faculty, staff and students, etc."

A major step taken by the committee was the decision to hire an outside parking consultant to determine a long-, mid-, and short-range plan for parking at ASU. The planning department is talking with a few major consultants currently, and will issue a request for proposals on the project as soon as possible.

Phelps said a comprehensive survey has been sent to other universities to see what kinds of parking problems they face, and what they are doing to solve them.

For the past six weeks, the committee has been working on a plan that may redesignate existing lots and divide those lots into zones. The zones would allow for differentiation of prices for parking depending upon proximity to campus.

The questions of who would be allowed to park in what zones, and the costs for the different zones if they were implemented, have not yet been answered. However, Phelps said the decisions would be made by May.

Phelps said another matter that will likely be implemented for the 1983 fall semester is a payroll deduction plan. The plan is optional for faculty and staff and would allow parking to be paid for in installments on a paycheck to paycheck basis.

The committee is currently studying the potential for additional parking beyond Lot 59, north of First Street. He said present parking facilities will be adequate for the remainder of this year, but increased space will likely be needed after that.

Plans are also being considered by the committee to improve existing lots. For example, curbs, lights and stripes probably will be added to Lot 42 (bordered by Terrace Road, McAllister Avenue, and Rural Road) according to Phelps. A date for the improvements has not been established.

Director of Arms Control and Disarmament Agency resigns

WASHINGTON (AP) - Eugene V. Rostow, director of the embattled U.S. Arms Control and Disarmament Agency, resigned yesterday under pressure from the White House and a small group of conservative Republican senators.

Congressional sources said President Reagan would nominate Kenneth Adelman, deputy to U.N. ambassador Jeane Kirkpatrick, to take Rostow's place.

There was no immediate comment from the White House.

Rostow, 69, a veteran of Washington power struggles, issued a sharply worded statement that implied Reagan had forced his ouster. In it, Rostow said "in recent days it has become clear that the president wished to make changes."

"It has been a privilege to serve as director of ACDA for the last 20 months," Rostow said in his statement. "In recent days it has become clear that the president wished to make changes. In response to his request, I have tendered my resignation."

Youth pleads innocent in fox rescue

APACHE JUNCTION, Ariz. (AP) - Tim Lane pleaded innocent Wednesday to charges that developed after he rescued a fox from a trap earlier this month.

Lane said he thought he was saving a suffering animal when he spotted the fox in a trap east of here while looking for gold in the desert. He freed it and took it home.

He and his mother called the county animal shelter, which took the fox away. The Lanes thought it would wind up in the Phoenix Zoo. Instead it was killed and a state Game and Fish Department officer gave him a misdemeanor citation for disturbing a trap. Donald Turner, regional supervisor for the state agency, said trappers who have a state license have a right to be protected from people who disrupt traplines.

Turner said a trap may cost $10 to $20 and a fox pelt may be worth $25 to $100 to the trapper.

The misdemeanor charge carries a possible fine of between $25 and $50.

Head of Arizona's Corrections Department chosen

PHOENIX (AP) - James G. Ricketts, 44, Colorado's chief of prisons since 1979, was appointed yesterday to replace Ellis MacDougall as director of Arizona's Corrections Department.

Gov. Bruce Babbitt, who announced the appointment and headed the search committee which selected three finalists, said Ricketts was the frontrunner from the start among the 66 applicants for the job.

"I am delighted that Jim Ricketts accepted our offer," said Babbitt. "He was the clear first choice of the search committee and received glowing reviews not only from Colorado Gov. Lamm, but also from the Republican leadership of the Colorado Legislature. I'm just glad that we were able to wrestle him away from Colorado."

The appointment is subject to Senate confirmation.

Reagan steps up pressure to end Lebanon crisis

DTTEL AVIV, Israel (AP) - President Reagan was reported stepping up pressure on Israel Wednesday to break the impasse in the Lebanese negotiations, and some accounts said he was considering postponing Prime Minister Menachem Begin's visit to Washington.

Presidential envoy Philip C. Habib met Wednesday with the U.S. negotiating team in Jerusalem, and Israeli news reports said he was carrying a message from Reagan demanding that talks be speeded up.

The reports quoted unidentified American sources in Washington as saying Begin's plans to visit Reagan may be postponed if there is no progress on solving the Lebanon crisis. Begin's spokesman denied the reports.

Watt approves CAP allocations

PHOENIX (AP) - U.S. Interior Secretary James Watt has approved final allocation of Central Arizona Project water but is delaying release of details until he can brief Arizona's congressmen, a House Interior Committee official says.

Watt's decision allocates 640,000 acre-feet of CAP water annually to non-Indians and 209,828 acre-feet among 12 Arizona Indian tribes, according to the Republic.

ASU starts enforcement of alcohol ban

By Janine Warell
Staff writer

He had been attending the Sun Devil football games for the past 10 years.

He had been bringing in his thermos of gin and tonic for the past 10 years.

But as he entered the gate at Sun Devil Stadium to watch the Fiesta Bowl on Jan. 1, over the loudspeaker came an ominous cry:

"No containers — coolers, picnic jugs, flasks, cans or bottles — will be allowed in the stadium."

The no-alcoholic-beverages-at-campus-events policy has been in existence for years, but starting Jan. 1 University officials decided to strictly enforce it.

University Police Chief Russell Duncan said, "The gates and the areas have always been posted. It's just by tradition it has never been enforced."

"We are now enforcing the law," Duncan said.

Duncan said the problems — which include an excess of debris in the stadium, intoxicated individuals and impaired drivers — have increased significantly over the years.

"It was the feeling of the University that this was an institution of education and we didn't want to be a part of that (alcohol consumption)," he said.

The alcohol ban applies not only to events held at Sun Devil Stadium, but to all campus events, including basketball and baseball games, as well as events held at Gammage Center.

Dormitories are not included in the ban because they are private residences.

Duncan said the number of officers patrolling events — 96 at football games and 1 to 5 at baseball games — will not be increased, but T-shirt sellers and ushers will be relied upon to help spot offenders.

If a person is caught with an alcoholic beverage, police officers will ask the individual to either dispose of it or leave the event.

"Most people give up the alcohol," Duncan said. "It's very rare when a uniformed police officer asks someone to do something that doesn't get carried out."

ASU Executive Vice President Paige Mulhollan said the decision to enforce the alcohol ban was based on "safety hazards" that existed and "the image the University wants to project."

The Fiesta Bowl was the first event at which the ban was enforced.

The local media were informed, fliers were mailed and left on cars in parking lots, and an announcement was made over the loudspeaker at the entrance to Sun Devil Stadium, he said.

Duncan said the public was very cooperative at the Fiesta Bowl. Thirty-two items were confiscated in the stadium and returned after the game, he said.

At the gate, officials took 42 items from individuals to save them a walk back to their cars.

"But we won't do that in the future," he said.

In the past, Duncan said 25 to 30 individuals had been ejected from each football game for being intoxicated. Only three people were ejected from the Fiesta Bowl — all in the first quarter, he said.

"They came in saturated," Duncan said.

Mulhollan and Duncan both said the public response to the ban has been "overwhelmingly positive."

But Mulhollan said several ticket holders requested that the concession stands sell additional items such as diet sodas.

"We're making plans to try and do that," he said.

Assistant Athletic Director Herman Frazier said he was still unsure whether the alcohol ban would be as successful at other events.

"It's still an untested market except for the Fiesta Bowl," he said. "The big test will be at the upcoming baseball games. You can't always catch everything that comes in."

Spring semester holds surprises for students

Jay Heiler
Editor

Hello from your friendly neighborhood newspaper. The State Press would like to welcome all students, faculty and staff for what should be an exciting semester at Collegiate Fantasyland.

For the uninitiated among you, that's our reputation around here — Collegiate Fantasyland. We're at the top of all the party polls, not to mention Playboy's widely acclaimed sexual thermometer. Aren't you proud to be part of all that? I mean, this is the kind of stuff that can really help you land a job when you walk out of here with your degree.

Ah, but the serious-minded here can take heart. Fortunately, ASU's narcissistic aura is largely the product of some wishful imaginations. All we really have here is a beautiful college campus with lots of palm trees and sunshine and a good number of upper-middle class students. We don't have Sodom and Gomorrah.

Not yet, anyway.

Those of you with an interest in something other than the social pages should have a lot to hold your attention this semester. There are currently a number of things going on around here that could directly affect your lives.

First and foremost, the State Press will try to help you keep your eye on the Legislature. Our friends in the State Capitol have been scurrying around and drafting new legislation for several months now, and a lot of it is designed to make life as an ASU student a little less salubrious.

I hate to be the bearer of bad news, but those of you who have been here a while ought to know it's coming anyway. Tuition is likely to be jacked up once more, for both resident and non-resident students. There will also be some more hijinks regarding residency requirements.

Those of you who are 19 or 20 can look to have your right to drink revoked. States all around the country have been raising their drinking ages and then turning out strings of statistics showing dramatic decreases in alcohol-related auto accidents. You will likely find an editorial or two on this page explaining why those statistics mean little or nothing, but don't expect them to change the minds of many legislators.

There's bad news for the sickly and the hypochondriacal. Anyone who uses the Student Health Center much can look to have his wallet thinned down. There's a bill all ready to go that will force students to pay a $5 fee for any visit to the health center.

There are various and sundry other matters of interest coming up. It will be decided whether the student regent is to get a vote on the Board of Regents, and some university services are likely to be usurped by private enterprise because of legislation prohibiting state universities from "competing" with the private sector.

Parking will continue to be griped about. Last year an ad hoc committee was formed to solve your parking problems; so far what they've come up with is to charge you more for your parking decal. Thank you, ad hoc committee. Keep up the good work.

And finally, this spring brings us Bruce

Babbitt's present to the ASU community, the United States Football League and the Arizona Wranglers. I remain in relative darkness as to the viability of this league and this team, but I must admit to a certain skepticism. One thing I do know — up to this point the Wranglers have made little or no apparent effort to appeal to the ASU student body, and I don't think that shows very sound judgment on their part. The organization figures to be looking at some pretty sparse crowds, and there aren't too many college students willing to pay $7.50 and up to sit in 90-degree weather and watch relatively obscure football players. If the Wranglers hope to enjoy any student support at all they are going to have to offer special student ticket prices. We have not heard of any plans to do so.

So there you have it. Quite a lineup, I'd say. We at the State Press will try to keep you posted on these and other developing issues, and we'll do our best to point out the injustices and try to prevent them. But let's face it. No matter how hard we kick, it's still going to be like the man on the White Owl cigar commercial says: You know they're gonna get ya.

Financial aids has tough resolution to keep

Tracy Fletcher
Opinion Editor

In the State Press Christmas Shopper, published at the end of last semester, the Financial Aid Office made a New Year's resolution — promising to offer each and every student it serves at ASU during 1983 improved communication and service.

While reading the short advertisement, I believed the promise had been made with sincerity. But it brought to mind some of the New Year's resolutions I had made (and ended up breaking) in the past.

The office's New Year's resolution extended the promise of more efficient service, cited the importance of mutual support between the office and students and offered a wish of "joy and prosperity" to every student the office serves.

Despite the office's promise, anyone trying to receive financial aid this semester knows that the lines are still there. I talked to a number of students who said they had been waiting more than an hour in the line at the Financial Aid Office.

They agreed that the seemingly infinite legwork needed before finally receiving financial aid hadn't been noticeably curbed.

To those students who had to stand in lines, the Financial Aid Office's New Year's resolution rings a little hollow.

But those students must keep in mind, however, at a university as large as ASU, where 20,000 students receive some kind of financial aid, there is bound to be some delay and some inconvenience, especially when a lot of students are trying to get their financial aid in the same, short period of time.

Just as the lines form to buy books and to pick up parking decals and I.D.'s, it has become an unpleasant fact of life at ASU that the amount of time required to receive financial aid increases proportionately to the office's workload at the beginning of each semester, when students are registering and paying tuition.

Although the lines cannot be eliminated completely, they can be shortened. The Financial Aid Office has taken some steps this semester to lessen students' inconvenience and according to the director Paul Barberini, the office's services are slowly becoming more efficient.

The number of windows open to service students was increased from two to four. Fifteen students were hired and trained to act as peer counselors, answering other students' questions.

The office's staff screened the lines, answering questions, distributing forms and making certain students weren't spending time in the wrong line. Chairs were even placed at the front of the line, rewarding those who had made it that far.

Students can cut their own inconvenience by trying to get their checks earlier in the week before the semester starts. Barberini, who took office in October, said the lines didn't start getting long until Tuesday.

Other possible short-term ways to alleviate the inordinate amount of time students spend standing in lines would be to open additional financial aid locations on campus during the first couple weeks of the semester and to hire even more additional personnel to accommodate the students.

Although Barberini believes the financial aid office has kept its New Year's resolution so far this year, he admits the system has been "better, but not better enough."

To those students who spent more than an hour of their time standing in line, Barberini's admission is an understatement. Something more has to be done to make the financial aid system at ASU more efficient.

When Barberini became director of the Financial Aid Office, he made refining the office's computer system, in which all student files would be logged into a computer rather than being stored in file cabinets, his top priority. He said the new system will be in full swing in time to handle the 1983 fall semester crunch.

He acknowledged that the changes needed in the Financial Aid Office must be gradual and likened his job to "fixing the airplane while (it is) still in flight."

Since he took office, Barberini has been trying to acquire more office space and more personnel, beginning to slowly undo the problems he inherited.

The New Year's resolution symbolizes his office's commitment to better service. But as in most situations in life, the actions of the office during the first couple weeks of the semester, as well as throughout 1983, will speak louder than any New Year's resolution.

Upgrade

ASU panel to raise entrance standards

By Mike Humphreys
Staff writer

An ASU committee has been established to propose more stringent entrance requirements to the university.

ASU President J. Russell Nelson and two vice presidents selected about 20 faculty members that comprise the committee, which includes representatives from each of the university's 12 colleges.

The Arizona Board of Regents and Governor Bruce Babbitt have called for raises in the admission standards of the state's three universities so that incoming students would be better prepared for college academics.

Students entering the university in the future "must have improved academic preparation and must be motivated mentally to enter a more demanding, scholarly life," according to a report issued by ASU Vice President for Academic Affairs Jack Kinsinger in December.

The committee, which will be headed by Kinsinger and Morton Munk, chairman of the ASU department of chemistry, was created in December.

Munk said the committee will start work shortly after the beginning of the spring semester.

Although the standards should be decided in the spring of this year, the formal entrance requirements will not take effect until the fall of 1987.

After the committee has completed its work, it will report to the administration, who will make any necessary modifications before bringing it to the Faculty Senate for discussion and approval. The proposals will then be submitted to the regents.

A separate committee on "external relations," led by Robert Stout, dean of the ASU College of Education, will be appointed to work with community colleges, high schools and other educational groups to achieve educational goals in line with the university standards.

As part of the external relations, Nelson met with community college presidents on Monday to discuss the major aspects of the plan.

At a later date, Kinsinger will meet with Superintendent of Public Instruction Carolyn Warner to discuss proposals concerning secondary schools.

Colleges toughen academic standards

By the College Press Service

There are 800 people missing from the University of the District of Columbia.

They are gone not because their grades fell, but because the school changed. The grades they maintained were no longer good enough to stay in school.

Another 1,800 of their classmates were put on academic probation as UDC, one of the few remaining "open admissions" schools, decided earlier this year to stiffen its academic requirements in one fell swoop.

"The standards are there to make sure this is a quality institution with quality graduates," explained John Britton, spokesman for UDC, which now discards students who cannot maintain a 'C' average.

The tougher standards not only signal an ending of the era of open admissions but are changing the mission of community colleges and allegedly making four-year campuses whiter.

"When you combine the tougher standards, the bad economy and a much more relaxed commitment to affirmative action standards that we're seeing at many schools," said Samuel Myers, head of the National Association for Equal Opportunity in Higher Education, "you have some very serious problems for poor, disadvantaged and minority students."

Tougher standards have "lowered our freshmen enrollment this year, but at the same time we've also noted an increase in the percentage of minorities enrolled," said Michael Barron, assistant admissions director at the University of Texas.

"I think the greater concern with admissions standards is being dictated by a real-world need for the kinds of people colleges simply are not providing," said Dr. Frank Bertnett of the American Personnel and Guidance Association.

At the College Board's annual meeting last month, educators accused state universities of playing a "cruel trick" on students by admitting them without adequate preparation for college-level courses.

But most state systems were already acting, weighing and installing tougher requirements.

Many of the new standards, in fact, include four-year schools simply getting rid of expensive remedial courses.

At Arizona, for example, "students who don't meet our requirements will have to enroll in one of our community colleges to get remedial help," David Windsor of the University of Arizona said.

But not all community colleges are willing to provide remedial courses.

Myers believes shifting the financial burden of remedial programs to smaller schools is wrong-headed. He favors tougher "exit qualifications, not entrance qualifications" as the best tool for better educating students.

State of disrepair plagues colleges' stadiums

By the College Press Service

URBANA, Ill. — For a few fleeting seconds, University of Illinois sophomore Eileen O'Shea thought Memorial Stadium was collapsing beneath her, about to drop her to her death.

She recalled the Saturday afternoon two months ago when she watched the final moments of play between the Fighting Illini and the arch rival Michigan Wolverines.

That is when O'Shea and several thousand other students felt the stadium move beneath their feet — because the 60-year-old structure was falling apart.

"The end of the game was really close," O'Shea explained. "During one play everyone got up and started screaming and jumping, and all of a sudden the whole balcony started swaying. The people who weren't drunk were scared."

While the problem surfaced most dramatically at Illinois, stadiums are falling into disrepair nationally. In fact, maintaining sports stadiums is one of the biggest and costliest worries that many administrators face these days.

Arizona State University, for instance, has spent $6.5 million over the last three years to stop the north end of Sun Devil Stadium from sinking into the ground.

Harvard just poured $8 million into stadium repairs, including costly efforts to refurbish the support beams and replace most of the seating in their 80-year-old structure.

Last year University of Texas-El Paso officials had to close a 3,000-seat section of the Sun Bowl after they discovered cracks in the stadium's walls and pier supports.

And several years ago, Florida A & M's stadium was actually condemned after inspectors discovered the steel structure was virtually rusting away.

"There seems to be a continuing number of schools looking at ways of remodeling and upgrading their stadiums," observed Bob Eskew, managing director of Atlanta-based Heery-Fabrap, one of the leading architectural firms involved in stadium reconstruction.

The main reasons stadiums are falling apart are age and exposure, according to Eskew.

"Water and exposure to the elements," Eskew explained, "will take their toll on anything — even steel and concrete."

But beyond that, he says, schools are also beginning to pay the price for not taking care of their stadiums over the years.

"A lot of schools have not had an organized program of stadium maintenance, and it eventually catches up with them. Most, because of budget restrictions or because they don't understand the importance of ongoing maintenance, only worry about maintenance on an as-needed basis."

Illinois officials, for example, didn't realize the upper balconies of their stadiums were swaying excessively until frightened students like O'Shea brought the problem to their attention.

"The upper decks are intended to move and have always swayed somewhat," said Donald Wendell, vice chancellor for administrative affairs. "But this fall some people felt some extra, unusual movement. We checked it, made some repairs, and we think we have reduced the amount of movement to its proper level."

"Equally as much as some stadiums fall apart, others become obsolete in terms of their amenities and capacity," Eskew added. "Many of the older stadiums were designed at a time when people weren't really concerned with how to provide easy entrance and exit facilities, bathrooms, concession stands, and press facilities for such large audiences."

Iowa State University, West Virginia University, and the University of Georgia have had similar problems, he says, and have opted to construct newer, better equipped stadiums.

But even after stadiums have been retired from active sports duty, they are often used for other services, and the maintenance headaches come with them.

Kansas State University, for instance, uses its old, World War I-era stadium to house art classes, speech offices and an experimental theater.

"But the roof leaks, the plaster is falling off the walls, and I've seen mice, bats, opossums, and yes, a skunk wandering around the place," said art student Terry Renpel. "But they did paint the hallways this year."

KSU administrators concede the old stadium "is a problem," but they are not quite sure what to do with it since it would cost perhaps $1 million dollars to demolish.

"The best proposal I've seen, and we've had plenty," spokesman Carl Rochap said, "was to put ramps up and use it for a parking structure."

But even ASU's stadium, built in 1958, began sinking because it was not adequately supported by its foundation. Administrators have spent $6.5 million to tunnel 100 feet beneath the stadium and reconstruct its support structure.

Moreover, a two-year-old addition to Auburn University's Jordan Hare Stadium began leaking last year and caused over $1500 in water damage to tiles, carpets, and the press box. Repairs, officials estimated, cost nearly $100,000.

Youngstown State University's brand new stadium is falling apart after its first season of use. Fifty sections of seating collapsed because of faulty anchor brackets. And handicapped students complained that lack of ramps and special parking facilities make it nearly impossible for them to attend games.

While such stadium problems are time-consuming and expensive, all administrators stress that students and other spectators have never been in any danger from the dilapidated stadiums.

"We would never, never let people into the stands if we thought there was any danger to the fans," Illinois' Wendell said. "We recognize that the stadium won't last forever, but we see no reason it can't be in safe, dependable service for a number of more years."

Hotline solicits callers' input on decreasing energy output

By Mike Humphreys
Staff writer

ASU has implemented a conservation hotline to solicit ideas about saving energy on campus.

The hotline is intended to involve people who are familiar with a certain section or building on campus and can point out areas of waste not noticed by others, said Ron Griffin, manager of University utilities.

"We're primarily concerned with things that can be done right away and that will pay back right away to help on this year's (utility) budget," Griffin said.

Griffin added that if conservation efforts are maintained throughout a five-year reduction plan, "it's not unreasonable to expect a 25 percent reduction in energy consumption per square foot."

Griffin said workers in the Physical Plant examined their building and came up with ideas that could save about $3,000 per year if implemented.

Griffin and Walt Dollbaum, another member of the conservation team, studied several energy use schedules of the campus over the winter break, turning off power to buildings not in use.

Their efforts saved the university about $63,800 for that time period, according to Dollbaum.

Each fiscal year, the university estimates its utility cost and submits a request to the Arizona State Legislature, according to Herb Miller, Physical Plant director.

He said if the Legislature funding does not meet utility costs, the deficit must be made up by conserving energy use and by getting money from funds intended for academic programs.

If a debt remains after conservation efforts, the exact source of the money to pay it is determined by the Vice President's Council, said Frank Sackton, vice president of business affairs.

Griffin added that at the beginning of the current fiscal year, which began in July 1982, the projected deficit was approximately $1,400,000.

He said the final deficit is now projected to be about $623,000, mostly attributed to conservation efforts.

The conservation hotline, 965-SAVE (7283), is manned by Dollbaum, during university business hours.

College forms new program to answer demand for grads

In response to the demand for graduates in the field of purchasing and materials management, the College of Business Administration has introduced a new degree, the chairman of the management department said Tuesday.

Harold Fearon said the new degree, the bachelor's of science in purchasing and materials management, is necessary due to current high demand and continued growth in the field.

People who graduate with the degree will be "... concerned with maintaining the flow of materials into an organization," he said.

Information from ASU's Career Services program said that starting salaries for ASU graduates in the field averaged almost $20,000 in 1981.

A search is currently under way to find two "competent teachers for the program," Fearon said.

The program begins this semester, and Fearon said he expects only a small number of students.

"My bet is that we'll be graduating 50 students a year from the field, but I'd rather have quality graduates than a lot of graduates," he said.

Devine kicking off new class on art of gridiron coaching

By Michael James Consol
Staff writer

After honing the art of coaching football as a head coach at ASU, the University of Missouri, Notre Dame University and with the Green Bay Packers of the NFL, Dan Devine is bringing his knowledge from the gridiron to the classroom this spring when he begins teaching a class titled "Coaching Football."

The class, PED 498, is being offered by the health and physical education department.

Devine, executive director of the Sun Angel Foundation, said the course will teach students terminology, the philosophy of coaching and the technical aspects of the sport. Devine added that the course is going to be taught on a level that everyone can understand.

"It's actually for coaches who have been out in the field and just want to come back and review, or someone who wants to take up coaching, or someone who just wants to learn more about football," he said.

"I will structure it so that somebody who comes into class who knows nothing about football will have the same opportunity for an 'A' as somebody who comes in knowing a lot about football."

According to Devine, the course will include written examinations, films, demonstrations and time spent on the football field.

Devine taught a similar course on coaching football at the University of Missouri, and said it was very successful. The class was attended mainly by football coaches, players and journalism students, he said.

Devine said that teaching the course was not a vicarious attempt to get back into coaching.

"I miss coaching, but this is just something they asked me to do and I felt like I could make a contribution. I look at it more that way."

Devine was asked to teach the course by Physical Education Faculty Associate Edward Trexler. Trexler said there is a great demand for new coaches.

"It was the thinking of our department that we needed to offer more classes in coaching due to the increase in the number of teams at the high school and junior high school level," Trexler said.

In an effort to be responsive to the increasing demand for qualified coaches, the physical education department is also offering off-campus courses this spring for coaching volleyball, soccer and basketball. All four of the coaching classes are three-credit courses.

Devine's class will begin on Jan. 19 and meet every Wednesday from 7 p.m. to 10 p.m. at Central High School, 4525 N. Central Ave. in Phoenix.

Salerno to head growing English department

By Deanne Hutchison
Staff writer

Despite a trend toward increased enrollments in business and engineering departments across the nation, the enrollment in the ASU English department is jumping, according to Nicholas Salerno, the newly appointed interim chairman of the department.

Salerno said although many students are turning to more technological studies, they are taking more English classes.

"It's really quite surprising," he said.

Salerno, who assumed the position Jan. 1, said he is excited about the new position, in which he will deal with the complaints, problems and suggestions of approximately 145 faculty members.

"I deal with the chairmanship on a day to day basis," he said, and added that he will assume the role of department chairman in June, when current Chairman Marvin Fisher's term is officially over.

Salerno has been part of the ASU faculty since 1961 and in 1971 he received the Alumni Award for distinguished teaching. He has also done volunteer work for KAET-TV on "Cinema Classics" for the past 10 years.

According to Paul Hubbard, associate dean of the College of Liberal Arts, Salerno has one of the most demanding jobs on campus.

"The English department has one of the largest faculties on campus, which makes the English department chairmanship one of the most stressful," Hubbard said.

Hubbard also said that Salerno is "very popular" among his colleagues in the department and that a vote taken from the faculty showed Salerno to be the choice of a large majority.

After attending a departmental meeting of all the faculty Tuesday morning, G. Lynn Nelson, English professor, said he felt "very encouraged" and hopes for a "warmer, more caring atmosphere and greater attention to the problems and concerns of the faculty" from the new chairman.

Salerno is replacing Fisher, who turned down renewal of his position after six years as chairman of the department.

The chairmanship is normally a four-year position, after which the chairman has the option of quitting or continuing for two more years.

Should the chairman decide to continue, a faculty poll is taken to determine departmental support of the chairman and whether he will continue in the position.

Fisher left this year because he did not want to continue with his chairmanship. He said the chairmanship is a "stressful position" and that he "had done the job long enough and thought someone else should have a chance."

Fisher said he will return to teaching at ASU in the fall.

Two ASU designers receive achievement honors

By Sandy Sistik
Staff writer

Two graphic designers in ASU's Bureau of Publications have received four awards in recognition of achievement in the field of graphic design.

Albert Camasto, art director at ASU since 1970, and his associate James Teofilo, received the awards in recognition for design, concept, direction of printing and qualities needed to make good printed communications.

For his design of the ASU College of Law catalog, "The Study of Law," Camasto received an Excellence in Design Award

Camasto, a graduate of the Art Institute of Chicago, began his professional career working for Bert Ray Studio, Gale Broadcasting Company and Marvine and Udell Inc. as a graphic designer and later as an art director.

Camasto said his work at ASU includes designing any official publications required by departments or students.

Camasto said his graphics work has been a life-long ambition.

"It is a life-long love, and it's challenging," he said. "I never know what kind of a job I will be working on, and in a way I feel like I am sailing on uncharted waters. But "It's challenging. In a way I feel like I'm sailing on uncharted waters . . . it's very exciting to do that."

from the Beckett Paper Company, Hamilton, Ohio, citing "outstanding professional achievement," "consistently high standards of design in the creative use of printing papers" and contribution "to the advancement of the graphic arts."

In recognition of "outstanding integration of color, design, type, printing and paper," Camasto's brochure for the College of Business Administration's "The MBA for Executives Program" received a Certificate of Excellence from the Graphics Gallery of the Strathmore Paper Company, Westfield, Mass.

The Hopper Paper Division of the Georgia-Pacific Corporation, Darien, Conn., gave Camasto an Award of Excellence for his design of the ASU College of Law Distinguished Professorship Folder.

it's very exciting to do that."

Teofilo was honored by the Northwest Paper Division of Potlatch Corporation, Cloquet, Minn., for a poster exhibiting "excellence of craftsmanship and creativity in graphic communications."

Teofilo has been in the business for 32 years, owning a design studio called Adesign Group Inc. in Chicago for 18 years.

According to Camasto, the entire Bureau of Publications does about 300 to 375 jobs a year and finds each one exciting.

"The variety of jobs has always kept us on our toes, and it is exciting," Camasto said.

"With most creative people in the design industry, the interest lies in obsession," Teofilo said. "For the creative designer, the more creative you are, the more obsessive it is."

SPEED READING COURSES JANUARY 24 THRU FEBRUARY 17

A special four-week course, based on the Sack-Yourman Speed Reading Program, will be offered to graduates, undergraduates, faculty, staff and the community. This special program requires pre- and post-reading rate testing, reading of timed passages, and development of college level vocabulary. Coed dorms lower turnover rates, official claims

By Emily Smith
Staff writer

Coed housing is the answer to a problem faced by the ASU Housing Office for many years, said Elaine LeTarte, Manzanita resident hall director.

The turnover of students between the fall and the spring semester in Sahuaro and Manzanita dormitories, ASU's recently converted coed dorms, is lower than it has ever been, LeTarte said.

In previous years between 250 and 350 students chose not to return to Manzanita, LeTarte said.

This year Manzanita's turnover rate is approximately 200.

Sahuaro Resident Hall Director Stephen Podwojski said Sahuaro's turnover has reduced from one-third to one-fifth since it went coed.

LeTarte said more students are choosing to stay in Manzanita during this spring semester because of a change in attitude about the dorm that has occurred since the building went coed.

"We used to call this dorm 'Hotel Manzanita' because it was more of a place for the students to eat and sleep, than a home," she said.

LeTarte said that because of social customs between men and women, Manzanita was used more as a place for women to prepare for social events rather than a place where they felt they could host events.

"There has been a functional change in the building instead of it just being somewhere where you hung your clothes and studied and went out," she said. "Face it — men are more likely to be the inviters and women the invitees."

The coed dorm has promoted more friendly and casual relationships between men and women, LeTarte said.

"It was just a matter of time. Now people are feeling like 'we all live here and this is our home,' instead of 'Wow! Boys!

Girls! Hey, isn't this great?!", she said.

Podwojski said there has been a similar change in attitude at Sahuaro since its conversion to coed living.

"It is an established community now," Podwojski said. "Before, it was just a place to live."

Podwojski said that having women in the hall helped the dorm constitute a more "realistic" living situation that was resulting in more friendships between men and women.

"A lot more men and women are becoming buddies," he said.

Sahuaro has also had a decline in discipline problems with its male residents since the hall went coed, Podwojski said.

"The women seem to have a calming influence on the men," he said.

Both LeTarte and Podwojski said that they have not been experiencing any security problems recently.

The women's floors at Sahuaro are kept locked and peepholes are currently being installed in the hall doors, Podwojski said.

Currently, all people entering the front doors of Manzanita after 8 p.m. must show their dorm key as proof that they are residents before they are allowed to pass.

The stricter security measure at Manzanita is a result of an alleged rape that occurred in the dorm last October.

LeTarte said she felt no need for more extensive security.

She added that the biggest part of Manzanita's security is an attitude on the part of the residents of taking responsibility for their safety.

"It is an attitude about being secure. They (residents) don't put all their trust in us to do it for them," she said. "Residents aren't saying 'You need to lock us in,' they are taking responsibility."

She said residents take responsibility for their security by being aware of who is on their floor and questioning strangers and people who look lost.

"When you go out in the world as an adult, a lot of the responsibility of security is your own," LeTarte said. "We could turn this place into a minimum security prison if you will — but the worst thing about that is that it would be like the student saying 'Here I am. Take care of me.'"

LeTarte also said she felt the security and discipline problems in Manzanita were exaggerated by the media.

Last semester the State Press printed a letter from a female Manzanita resident who complained there was vomit and spit on the floors of the dorm and a generally rowdy attitude since the hall was converted to coed housing.

"There was a real outcry in the hall about the exaggeration of the letter," LeTarte said. "The letter itself made everybody kind of stop and think about it and band together."

June Nero, a freshman Manzanita resident, said she liked the atmosphere of Manzanita and did not feel there was any problem with security or discipline problems within the hall.

Dave Gibson, a junior psychology major who is also a Manzanita resident, said he enjoyed living in a coed dorm and having a chance to relate to women on a more casual level.

One problem the switch to coed dorms has resulted in is a higher noise level within the building that will require a few changes, LeTarte said.

She said the dorm's study room is being relocated so that it is further away from the recreation room where the noise level is higher.

The rise in noise is attributed to more interaction between men and women in previously unused areas of the dorm, such as the lobby, the study room and the recreational area, LeTarte said.

"Now we get the arguments between watching the soaps and the football games."

Housing Office facing new problem of vacancies

After years of having dormitory rooms filled to capacity, the ASU Housing Office is experiencing the flip side of the coin.

There are 92 women's spaces and 17 men's spaces within the overall residence hall system, said Frederick Reid, the assistant director of operations in the Housing Office.

"We have more bed space for women than men, because we have a sorority hall," Reid said.

Most of the vacancies for men are in Sahuaro Hall, he said. "We have trouble filling up Sahuaro Hall because of its distance from campus," Reid said.

Sahuaro Hall Director Steven Podwojski attributes the available spaces to the slow economy.

"The amount of applications has been steadily declining through Reaganomics," Podwojski said.

Cathy Cumber, ASU Apartments resident hall director, agreed that many students were having trouble receiving financial aid and were not able to pay their dorm fees.

Cliff Osborne, director of the ASU Housing Office said the slump in the economy was forcing many students to reconsider where they would live.

"The impact of the economy is showing up," Osborne said. "In some cases, if the student is from the metropolitan area, they may have chosen to live with their families."

Cumber said another reason for available dorm space is that many incoming freshmen get homesick and decide to leave ASU.

She added that this was a more frequent occurrence in the fall semester than in the spring.

Cumber and Podwojski both predicted that the dorms would not be filled to capacity this semester.

In spite of the fact that the Housing Office is having trouble filling up all the available dorm space, Osborne said that the number of open rooms is not significant enough to make a real impact on the revenue received by the Housing Office.

Illinois city aldermen proposing tuition tax for college students

By the College Press Service

It would be "a dangerous precedent that could catch on like wildfire," one observer said.

And if it does, students all over the country might soon be paying taxes on their tuition payments.

The Evanston, Ill., City Council currently is considering adding a $90 to $150 tax to the tuition paid by students at Northwestern University.

Evanston officials are arguing the university costs the city more in municipal services like sewage and fire protection than the university pays to the city. They say they can no longer afford to subsidize the campus.

But Northwestern officials say the university and its students contribute $1.5 million more a year to the Evanston economy than they take out in municipal services.

Moreover, opponents of the tax warn, the tax could spread to other college towns similarly short of cash.

"But it's the only option we have open to us," said Jack Korshak, the Evanston alderman who is proposing the 1.5 percent tuition tax. "We're carrying the university on our backs and the president (Robert Strotz) has refused to sit down and talk with us about establishing a fair relationship and deciding who pays for what."

Korshak contends Northwestern costs the city over $600,000 a year in services and maintenance. He added "the way university officials talk, Northwestern is some kind of cultural oasis surrounded by a vast desert. They have key people living in expensive homes and not paying one penny in property tax."

But administrators say Korshak is more concerned with balancing the city budget at the expense of students than he is with seriously weighing the impact Northwestern has on the Chicago suburb.

'It's nothing more than an anti-education tax that penalizes people who are trying to better themselves.'

"We're the largest employer in town and the largest utility payer," NU spokesman Chuck Loebbaka said. "Many of our students live and shop in town. According to our figures, we contribute over $1.5 million more to local economy than we cost the city."

Loebbaka admitted the school owns about 250 acres of tax-exempt property, but says it is far less than the 2,500 acres it is entitled to under state law. The university is concerned and willing to help the city any way it can, he said, but not by taxing students or paying more taxes itself.

The tuition tax proposal, he added, "would be a serious burden on our students, the vast majority of whom have to obtain loans and work part time just to come here. It's nothing more than an anti-education tax that penalizes people who are trying to better themselves. Such a tax is a serious threat to all institutions."

"It does constitute a very dangerous precedent," said Sheldon Steinbach, legal counsel for the American Council on Education. "Municipalities which are strapped for funds will be looking for any potential funding source they can find, and students could end up being the victims."

But Korshak called the charges "total hypocrisy." "We have a unique situation here, not something that can be applied in every city across the nation. Northwestern has become an institution with a major in making money and a minor in educating students," he quipped.

"All this solicitude and concern for students is a ploy. The university has raised tuition by $1,200 this year. Now if you're paying the money to attend school, what's going to bother you: the $90 tax we propose or the $1,200 the university is charging?"

Prof co-authors health books for elementary school levels

By Sandy Sisteck
Staff writer

A professor in ASU's department of health and physical education has co-authored a recently released series of health books.

Charles Corbin's nine-book series, "Choosing Good Health," will be used in elementary school health classes beginning next fall.

Each book is for a different grade level — kindergarten through grade eight. Accompanying the student books are teachers' editions, student activity workbooks and bulletin-board poster sets.

The books feature chapters on mental and social health, growth and development, consumer and personal health, safety and first aid, nutrition, physical fitness, drugs, disease and environmental and community health.

Each of the first- through eighth-grade editions, ranging from 200 to 350 pages, will have the same chapters, becoming more advanced each grade level.

"We would hope that by the time the children get through elementary school, at least by the end of the eighth grade, they would have a pretty good understanding about the different areas," Corbin said.

Corbin, who has published several other physical fitness books, was involved in all phases of manuscript preparation, and was principally responsible for the sections on exercise and physical fitness in each book.

Corbin, who joined ASU last fall, teaches three classes on motor development, sports psychology, and fitness for life. He is also doing research on motor development and self-confidence.

"I would like to find out why people, especially with women and girls, lack confidence in their ability to exercise," he said.

According to Corbin, people place a high priority on health and good fitness.

Corbin feels that health is an important part of the curriculum in elementary schools.

"You can teach people and help them be intelligent to make important decisions about health and exercise," he said. "If I can get the people very young and teach them the importance of good health, it's more likely to become part of their lifestyle and they will know what is good for them," Corbin said.

Corbin said his books can make health education enjoyable.

"It is critical for the children to not just learn the information, but learn it in a fun way," he said. "We do hope that with this information a lot of these children will grow up and choose to follow the fitness."

Corbin co-authored with five others to complete the series in three years. It was published by the Scott, Foresman Company of Glenview, Ill.

ASU's wigwams up for sale in last bid to save structures

By Maria Khan
Staff writer

Teepee or not teepee. The WigWam Lodge teepees — now owned by ASU — are up for grabs, according to Bill Phelps, associate vice president for business affairs.

Phelps said it was decided that the teepees would be advertised for proposals in the near future. The two main criteria for the proposals are that the proposing parties be responsible for moving the teepees off the property and that they provide indemnity insurance.

He said he would like to have the lot cleared within two months.

"If nobody is willing, we'll simply tear them down," Phelps said. He added that ASU will take pictures and go through recording procedures.

He said he has already spoken with three interested parties, but nothing has been agreed upon.

According to Phelps, ASU has been encouraged by the State Historical Preservation Office to avoid destroying the teepees. He said that an effort would be made to save the structures, although ASU is under no obligation to do so.

ASU began the process to purchase the lodge property in early September of 1982, but provisions for the teepee structures could not be made until the SHPO determined whether they were eligible for the National Register of Historic Places.

Because of the 1982 Arizona Historic Preservation Act, it was imperative that ASU receive a ruling from the SHPO before making plans for the use of the property.

The act requires state agencies to give the SHPO an opportunity to review plans pertaining to structures which may have architectural or historical significance, and protects properties eligible for the National Register of Historic Places.

The SHPO determined in early December that the teepees, which make up the WigWam Lodge at 634 E. Apache Blvd., lacked the historical significance necessary for eligibility on the state or national registers.

Bill Perreault, historian/registrar for the SHPO, said the decision came after an investigation into the historical significance of the 35-year-old teepees was made by the Tempe Historical Society in cooperation with the SHPO.

But, according to Perreault, the teepees were not eligible for the registers because they did not meet either of the prerequisites.

The register requires that structures be at least 50 years old unless they possess exceptional significance, or that structures must demonstrate either historical or architectural significance.

However, because only three of the original seven teepee structures remain, the integrity of the historical value was lessened, Perreault said.

In addition, he said the knowledge of roadside commercial development along Apache Boulevard was too limited to merit designating the WigWam Lodge a historical site.

The WigWam Lodge teepees were most recently used as apartments, but according to Phelps they currently are vacant.

The property on which the teepees lie will be converted to a parking lot with approximately 150 spaces, Phelps said. He added that plans for the lot are currently being prepared.

The WigWam Lodge teepee could face bulldozers if a new home can't be found for the unusual dwellings.

ASU to host frisbee tournament

'Acrobatic display' entertainment for onlookers

By Deanne Hutchison
Staff writer

The first Tempe frisbee tournament of 1983 will not only be a tournament, but an acrobatic display, when ASU hosts "The New Year Ultimate Frisbee Fest" this weekend.

The University Frisbee Club at ASU, in conjunction with the Tempe frisbee team, "The Plastic Surgeons," is sponsoring the tournament to benefit the Children's Crisis Nursery in Phoenix.

The tournament will be held this Saturday and Sunday, at the ASU football practice field, located on the east side of Rural Road. Nine teams from five western states will be competing along with the "Surgeons."

According to University Frisbee Club president and team member Dave Miller, the "Surgeons" have entertained audiences at halftime shows for the Phoenix Inferno soccer team twice, the last time on New Year's Day, 1983.

"We love to have people come out and watch. It's really exciting. There's a lot of gymnastics, like guys making horizontal dives at the disc," Miller said.

The most interesting thing to watch a frisbee thrower do is "freestyle throwing," he said.

"Freestyle is putting a forward or backward spin on the frisbee and balancing it on one finger" while performing a variety of stunts, he said.

The "Surgeons" have one man on their team that competes in the national tournament every year, Miller said.

The sport is becoming more popular "because it is a non-contact sport in which women also compete," he said. Even though the "Surgeons" already have two women on their team, Miller hopes more women will become interested in frisbee throwing because most of the participants are men.

According to Miller, the teams will be competing in a round robin tournament which means win or lose, and each team will play every other team.

All the teams competing this weekend are aiming for a national championship at the end of the season in November, although a loss or win this weekend will have no direct effect on the national competition.

"Though this tournament is sanctioned by the U.S. Ultimate Players Association, it is only a district tournament that will make no difference as to whether a team will go to the nationals," Miller said.

The team will be selling T-shirts and food at the event, which begins at 9 a.m. on Saturday and 10 a.m. on Sunday. More information on the tournament or the club can be obtained by calling Dave Miller at 966-6836.

sidering additional health charges. He also expressed concern for those who "might not have $5 to spare" when they become ill.

He accused the sub-committee of being consciously inconsiderate of those who could not afford the surcharge.

"They realized that some people might not be able to afford it. They even worked that into their formula," he said. "For the amount of money we're talking about saving, it's not worth eliminating the health program. It's not worth what we're going to put some people through."

"In some cases, we might be causing a group problem," he said. "Someone doesn't have the money for treatment, they get sicker and the virus spreads."

Gabaldon said he feels that neither of the issues will be approved by the Senate Appropriations Committee.

"It is going to face stiff opposition, not only from me, but from other members," he said.

Taylor said the Senate Appropriations Committee will decide whether to pursue the tuition increase and health service closure within the next week.

MEMORANDUM

Office of the President
965-5057

November 9, 1982

TO: All Employees and Students
FROM: J. Russell Nelson, President
SUBJECT: Policy Statement on Equal Employment Opportunity and Affirmative Action

Arizona State University reaffirms its commitment to increasing opportunities at all levels of employment and participation in its programs and activities by all faculty, staff, and students without regard to race, color, religion, national origin, sex, age, handicap, or veteran status.

Our commitment extends to recruiting and hiring, promotion, and other personnel actions such as compensation, benefits, transfers, layoffs, return from layoff, terminations, University sponsored training, education, tuition assistance, and social and recreational programs.

The Office of Assistant to the President for Equal Employment Opportunity, Affirmative Action, and Minority Affairs has been established to advise, advocate, and administer all programs in the areas of equal employment, affirmative action, and minority affairs.

The Office of Assistant to the President is the umbrella for authorizing personnel practices for complying with, coordinating, and administering all federal and state laws and regulations pertaining to discrimination and affirmative action in employment, programs, and activities of the University. The federal and state laws and regulations include but are not limited to:

- Title VI of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, as amended
- Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, as amended
- Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972, as amended
- Executive Order 11246, as amended and regulations
- Revised Order Number 4
- Sections 503 and 504 of the Rehabilitation Act of 1973 and regulations
- Vietnam Era Veterans Readjustment Assistance Act of 1974 and regulations
- Equal Pay Act of 1963 and regulations
- Age Discrimination in Employment Act of 1967, as amended in 1978
- Age Discrimination Act of 1975 and regulations
- Arizona Civil Rights Act of 1965, as amended

Through the Office of Assistant to the President, matters involving allegations of discrimination in employment, educational programs or activities are channelled for investigation and resolution. Any employee or student may visit with Luis Aranda, Assistant to the President for Equal Employment Opportunity and Affirmative Action, in confidentiality to discuss any concern and to explore available options without fear of jeopardizing either job or status within the University. The office is located in the Academic Services Building, Room 113; the telephone number is 965-5057.

With the support of every individual at Arizona State University, the affirmative action effort should ultimately provide inclusion and utilization of all minorities and women in an appropriate manner at every level of responsibility and endeavor. I ask that you give equal employment opportunity and affirmative action your utmost attention and that you direct your energies to its ultimate success.

Basketball teams heading for different paths

By Arthur Conner Jr.
Sports writer

OK fans, gather around, the Poseidon Adventure continues....

If all the tears aren't dried from the heart-breaking loss to the fifth-ranked UCLA Bruins by the time the ASU Sun Devil basketball team battles the Washington State Cougars tonight, the "Apple State", and the Sun Devils may be designated disaster areas.

With massive flood waters covering most of Northwest Washington, and the Cougars ruling the game in the state, the Sun Devils could find themselves swimming to Friel court for a Guy Williams-led drowning.

The Washington State Cougars are led by a 6-foot-9, 200 pound University of San Francisco transfer, senior forward Guy Williams.

He leads the Cougars in team steals, blocked shots and points. Against Idaho State, Williams registered a school record 43 points while pulling down 14 rebounds.

"Washington State is a good basketball team with good athletes," said ASU's coach Bob Weinbauer. "They run extremely well and create problems with two or three different defenses they throw at you.

"I know we'll see man-to-man, zone, half-court trap, and full-court pressure," Weinbauer said.

The 9-2 Cougars defeated intrastate rival University of Washington, 72-70, in overtime last Saturday night. It was the Pac-10 opener for both teams.

"Washington State seems to be playing with great confidence judging by their won-loss record," Weinbauer said.

Indications are, however, the Sun Devils will rise above the traps (and tears) to shine on the Cougars tonight and the Washington Huskies on Saturday.

This team cries only 'alligator tears' — a term derived from the eye secretions of an alligator prior to attack.

"Guy who?," asked 6-foot-7, 203 pound senior forward Walt Stone.

"Yeah, I know who he is," said Stone, after his point was made.

Stone, who before the California schools came to town was not making many points with the ball in the team's pre-conference games, broke loose over the extended weekend for 20 points and 13 rebounds.

Despite the one point loss to UCLA, Stone announced that the team is down-proof in the quest for the conference title.

"We'll be alright," Stone said.

The ASU women's basketball team continued their early season success right into the opening of Western Collegiate Athletic Association play, winning four games over the winter break.

The victories included an 84-81 upset over WCAA rival Cal State-Long Beach on Jan. 6. The 49ers were ranked eighth at the time.

The win helped the Sun Devils (14-1, 2-0 WCAA) break into the Associated Press Top 10 for the first time ever. The Devils vaulted from thirteenth to ninth.

The Devils have the most victories of any team in the top 20.

ASU closed out the books on December with a couple of wins at home in the Activity Center.

First the lady hoopsters routed Nevada-Las Vegas on Dec. 21 by the score of 83-62. Olivia Jones and Kym Hampton combined to score 50 points and grab 25 rebounds.

Jones led all scorers with 27 points, and Hampton pulled down 14 boards for the game. Cassandra Lander also scored in double figures, with 15 points.

A week and a half later, the Devils were at it again, riding the Waves of Pepperdine for a 75-58 win.

Once again, Jones led the way with 25 points and 13 rebounds.

Hampton tallied 20 points for ASU, and Lander added 11.

January saw the start of league play. The Sun Devils opened on the road against Long Beach State with a new face in the line-up. Teri Sharkey, a 6-foot-3 junior college transfer from Mesa Community College replaced Jessica Wiley at one forward spot.

Wiley had been sick with bronchitis.

With the victory, ASU snapped the 20 game home winning streak of the 49ers.

Hampton and freshmen guard Jodi Rathbun each canned 21 points for ASU. Hampton and Jones led rebounders with 12 boards each.

"That was probably one of the biggest victories in ASU history," ASU head coach Juliene Simpson said, "because that was the first time in nine outings that we had beaten them (Long Beach)."

"Even though we took them into double overtime last year — we lost by one point — even though we know we're so close, to be able to defeat them (is important)."

Two nights later the Devils were at Cal-State Fullerton to

ASU's Tony Lombardi is tripped up by Oklahoma's Rick Bryan in Fiesta Bowl action. OU held the Sun Devil running game to a dismal 100 yards

Ken Sain

Fiesta Bowl saves season

Once upon a time, long, long ago (like September), there was no way that your average fortune teller could convince me of the impending bright future of the ASU football team.

If Madam Know-it-all had tried to guarantee ASU a 10-2 season, a New Year's Day Bowl victory, and a final national ranking of sixth, all despite losing their starting quarterback in the first game of the year, I would have been looking for the men in white jackets.

Be serious. The offense was almost totally rebuilt and was lead by the second-string quarterback for the entire season; a 7-4 season would have been more realistic.

But even with the 32-21 victory over Oklahoma in the Fiesta Bowl, I still have a bitter taste in my mouth. This was the season that ASU could have gone to the Rose Bowl, and even win the national championship. The season would have gone down a lot easier if the losses would have been at the start of the season.

Losing the last two games of the regular season was just heartbreaking to all of the ASU fans that had Pasadena in mind.

Even if the Devils did lose the last two games of the year, they did have a successful season. ASU has firmly established itself as a national powerhouse in football. And despite finally being burned on the blitz by the U of A, the defense should particularly relish the completed season.

For only the second time in the history of collegiate football, ASU sported the nation's top-ranked defense only one season after the Devils led the nation in offense. Missouri accomplished the same feat in the early '60's.

The Devils have rediscovered a weapon against today's pass-happy offenses — the blitz. Although they definitely did not invent it, they certainly perfected it by shutting down ten teams this season.

But with all the praise that the defense has been given, some mention is due the ASU offense. Todd Hons & Co., although much-maligned for most of the early season, have come on strong since the last 49 seconds of the Stanford game.

The emergence of Darryl Clack as one of the top running backs in the nation was a key to the development of the ASU offense. Considering that Clack is only a freshman, he could be the first Sun Devil to win a Heisman Trophy.

Hons' performance in the second half of the Fiesta Bowl was classic. If he is able keep a consistent effort, next year might not be as dim as some have predicted.

Nationally, Penn State will finally reign as number one. But, I feel that no team that loses to a Southeastern Conference team (Alabama) deserves to be in the top ten.

Speaking of the most overrated football conference, I think it is worthwhile to look at how the seven teams in the SEC that went to bowl games fared — seven games, one victory.

The strongest football conference, the Pac-10, sent only three representatives to bowl games. All three teams won their bowl games. If any team deserves the national title, it should be Southern Methodist.

Over the past two years the Mustangs have had the best record of any team. The Pony Express played a decent schedule, and were the only team not to lose a game. But if SMU sticks in your throat, how about Northwestern?

The infamous Mildcats consider their season more successful than any other team in the nation. Hey, they finished eighth in the Big Ten. And with the ridiculous way that we pick a national champ, why not?

A Hiram Walker Guide to Secs.

Secs on the rocks

The classic introduction to Secs. Just fill a glass with ice and pour in Hiram Walker Triple Sec.

Splashy Secs

Want your Secs to sparkle? Add a splash of soda to your Hiram Walker Triple Sec. And let it wet your whistle.

Mixed-up Secs.

There's nothing like Secs in mixed company. Just mix 1/2 oz. Hiram Walker Triple Sec, 1 1/2 oz. Two Fingers Tequila and a splash of lime juice. Olé!

Triple Sec

Of all the different Secs, only Hiram Walker Triple Sec is made with succulent Spanish and Curaçao oranges. One sip will convince you. Hiram Walker is the greatest name in Triple Sec.

Sun Devils spoil Sooner's Fiesta

By Art Conner
Sports writer

It started the day after Christmas.

The man in red was not Santa Claus.

He wasn't in a giving mood. Quite the contrary.

"Sooner or later, we're gonna getcha," he would say to any Sun Devil players within ear shot.

ASU football players had to listen to that taunt all week from the confident and cocky players from that school in Oklahoma, but when the final score was etched on the television screens across the country, Jim Jeffcoat said it best.

"Sooner or later, we're gonna getcha and we got you!" he said.

The game meant auld lang syne for seniors, many of whom participated in the only bowl game of their career.

Sooner or later seniors, we're gonna miss you. We'll miss you!

Wranglers protect Devils in first phase of USFL draft

By Tom Blodgett
Sports writer

More good news came the way of 13 ASU football players, who are still celebrating the Sun Devils' victory over Oklahoma in the Fiesta Bowl.

The 13 gridders were seniors who were either protected or drafted in the initial draft of the United States Football League, held last Jan. 4, 5.

Twelve of the players were among the the Arizona Wranglers' quota of twenty-six protected in the territorial draft on the first day.

Heading up the list of those protected were All-Americans Mike Richardson and linebacker Vernon Maxwell.

Other players protected by the Wranglers include punter Mike Black, wide receiver Ron Brown, defensive end Bryan Caldwell, tailback Willie Gittens, linebacker Mark Hicks, defensive end Jim Jeffcoat, nose guard Mike Langston, tailback Alvin Moore, guard Ron Sowers, and tight end Ron Wetzel.

One player, cornerback Duane Galloway, was selected in the open phase of the draft. The Los Angeles Express took Galloway as the first choice in the nineteenth round.

ASU head coach Darryl Rogers said that no player had talked to him about the draft.

"If a player came in and asked me for advice, we would be willing to guide him," Rogers said.

Rogers also said that he anticipated some players coming into see him, and expecting that others would not.

One aspect of the USFL that has caused concern among the nations colleges has been that its season, which lasts from March until July, would interfere with the academic schedules of many seniors who might otherwise go on and earn degrees.

But Susann Tomek, academic adviser for the athletes, was not overly concerned with the situation.

"It (the decision to stay in school) is an individual decision," Tomek said. "Each individual has different goals, and each individual has a different time clock."

Tomek also pointed out that all but one player drafted in last year's NFL draft has contacted her about possibly returning to school.

The USFL is offering incentive for players to return to school.

The league will have a scholarship fund for players to return and work on their degrees. A player will reportedly receive $2500 a semester to help defray costs.

However the details about the timetable in which the players will receive the scholarship are still unclear.

The Wranglers are quite happy about the crop of players that they protected.

Bill Baker, director of player personnel for the Wranglers, simply said the players were outstanding.

Sooner running back plans transfer to ASU

Oklahoma running back Fred Sims, has announced that he will enroll at ASU within the next few days.

Sims, a former Tucson Sunnyside High football star, played tailback and fullback for the Sooners.

"I want to go to ASU," Sims told the Arizona Republic. "I have some personal problems to work out in the next few days, but if everything works out OK, I hope to be at ASU next week."

Sims had announced during the football season that he might transfer to ASU. Reportedly, Sims was discontent with Oklahoma's head coach Barry Switzer's plan to move him to fullback.

Switzer was considering using both Sims and freshman standout Marcus Dupree in the same backfield.

Sims gained 77 yards on 15 carries in the Fiesta Bowl against ASU. For the season, Sims gatered 625 yards on 116 carries. At Sunnyside High School he rushed for 2,017 yards as a senior.

As one of the most highly recruited players ever to come out of Arizona, Sims narrowed his choice of colleges between ASU and Oklahoma.

Sims would be required to sit out next season under NCAA transfer rules, but will still have two years of eligibility remaining.

Sims may also be moved to fullback at ASU because of the emergence of freshman Darryl Clack. Next to Dupree, Clack is considered the finest freshman running back in the nation.

With Dupree running so well, Sims saw limited action for most of last season. He suffered a knee injury during spring drills last year.

More about

The organization has been in contact with each of the players, and he believes they will sign some by the start of training camp later this month.

"This is all pretty new," Baker said. "The players have to contact agents, and agents have to contact them. It's still early."

Five of the protected Sun Devils hope to increase their value in upcoming college all-star games. The five are Richardson, Maxwell, Caldwell, Jeffcoat, and Wetzel.

In addition, defensive back Paul Moyer will be participating in the East-West Shrine game. Moyer was not drafted by the USFL.

"We will have three people filter in and out of the East-West game," said Baker.

In addition to Moyer, Jeffcoat and Wetzel will be playing in the East-West game.

The Wranglers have not decided whether they will send a representative to the Hula Bowl, where Richardson and Maxwell will be playing.

Punter Mike Black said that he was excited about being drafted by the Wranglers. But he is leaning towards playing in the NFL.

"Growing up, I used to dream about playing in the NFL, not the USFL."

Black said he will not make a decision until after the NFL draft. He also added that money and where he was drafted, will be involved with his decision.

Black also said that he thought that the USFL was comparative to the old American Football League, which later merged with the NFL to become the AFC.

"I believe it (the USFL) is going to be competitive...shortly."

Rogers puts an end to rumors by confirming he will remain

ASU head football coach Darryl Rogers announced Monday that he was taking himself out of consideration for any pro football coaching job.

The possibility of Rogers taking over as head coach with either the National Football League's Los Angeles Rams or Seattle Seahawks had been the subject of many rumors since ASU's victory in the Fiesta Bowl.

"Due to increased speculation in the media the past few weeks, it has become obvious the rumors surrounding my coaching future must be stopped to protect Arizona State University," Rogers said.

Rogers' announcement came just before his trip to Los Angeles to participate in the NCAA Coaches Convention. One of the topics which is expected to be discussed there is whether tougher admission standards should be imposed for athletes.

Rogers said he is not in favor of the new proposal, and interference with the current state of college football might be cause for his future departure.

"I have no intention of leaving ASU now, next season, nor anytime thereafter, as long as the means for fielding a competitive team continue to be provided administratively at the university, conference, and national levels," Rogers said in a prepared statement.

"I am very happy in college football, and unless college football changes the way that I can be competitive, I will be very happy to remain here," Rogers said.

One of the reasons that prompted Rogers to dispel rumors about his coaching career is recruiting. Rogers had been asked by recruits whether or not he will be back next year.

Darryl Rogers

"The number one question we have had from either parents or the kid himself, is whether I will be at Arizona State. I would like to fortify my position that we will be here."

Local booster organizations are reportedly considering increasing Rogers salary of $110,000 by another $100,000. Rogers said the talk of an increase in pay at ASU had no influence on his decision to stay.

Because of a state law, Rogers is limited to a one-year contract. His current contract will expire on Jan. 31. Rogers has been the head coach for Arizona State for the last three years. He has led ASU to a 25-8 record during his tenure.

take on the Titans. Once again, ASU emerged the victor, posting a 74-56 win.

Hampton enjoyed one of her finest hours this season against the Titans. Kym scored 32 points and grabbed 18 rebounds.

"She (Hampton) has been playing probably her most consistent ball in three years here," Simpson said.

For her efforts against Long Beach and Fullerton, Hampton was named the WCAA's athlete of the week.

In her second start of the season, Teri Sharkey added her muscle under the glass, grabbing 11 rebounds.

The Fullerton win did prove to be costly, as sophomore starting guard Linn Henley strained ligaments in her right knee. Nothing is torn, but Henley is expected to be out for two to three weeks.

Rathbun came off the bench to score 10 points against Fullerton after Henley's early exit. The freshmen is expected to start in upcoming weekend games against Southern California and UCLA.

"I've been pleased because of the overall team play, the team discipline and the team organization," Simpson said in evaluating the last four games.

"Our defense has become much stronger and more aggressive. We've been outrebounding teams by 15-20 boards per game. We outrebounded Fullerton 56-35, so we're real pleased with that."

"Right now, in looking towards the next two games, we've just got to get healthy."

Only two players are completely healthy right now according to Simpson.

"We're working hard even though we only have several players going 100 percent."

"It's just the combinations, the different combinations of players. It's really hard to get your offense and defense motivated to go."

The Sun Devils are currently sitting alone on top of the WCAA standings with a 2-0 record.

ASU is one-half game ahead of USC and UCLA as they prepare to host the two Los Angeles schools this weekend.

Weinhauer seems to think so, too.

In the meeting with reporters after the "scintillating" loss to UCLA, Weinbauer was in no mood to discuss what went wrong, well, not so soon anyway.

In a scene that would make actors in a lite-beer commercial proud, Weinbauer shook his head slowly and looked down.

"We just played 39-and-a-half minutes of great basketball and all you can ask is what went wrong?" he said.

He then proceeded toward the exit door amidst cries of "The fans want to know coach," and "Let's be professional about this."

"You shut up," he ordered the reporter.

Another question silenced everyone.

"Yes, I'm proud of my team," Weinbauer said. "They worked their tails off."

He then addressed a question by asking one of his own.

"Why did that have to be the first question?" Weinbauer said. "Why couldn't it be saved for last?"

He proceeded to explain to the gathered media why the play that would have beaten the 11-1 Bruins did not work.

"For some reason, the player picked up his dribble," he said calmly without passing judgment.

"There's no consolation in coming close all the time," Weinbauer said later. "But you have to ask yourself some questions. Are you playing well? Are you getting better each time? Is togetherness surfacing?"

"The answer seems to be yes," he concluded.

But there is still the question of the fans.

One student, Molly Garr, a California freshman, when told that the team played UCLA, replied, "Oh they got whumped on, huh?" Upon learning the score, she was impressed.

"Someone told me the team was..." she said.

What do the fans know, Molly?

Due to the Phoenix Suns game being broadcast tonight, the game can be heard on KKLT-FM at 7:30.
