Financial analysis of Tontozona postponed

By Maria Khan
Staff writer

A cost benefit analysis of Camp Tontozona — a 7.7 acre property located north of Payson — has been temporarily tabled, according to the vice president for business affairs.

"We set the study aside so that we would do nothing on it for the remainder of the calendar year," Frank Sackton said.

The reason the analysis was delayed, according to Sackton, is to accommodate those people who have already made plans to use the camp during the year.

The analysis, which is being conducted out of the business affairs office, began approximately five months ago, Sackton said. He added that during that time, some concrete findings have been ascertained.

"One of the basic findings is we lose a lot of money on it (Camp Tontozona)," Sackton said. "It doesn't pay for itself."

He said revenues generated by the camp in 1982 amounted to $25,000, and were primarily collected from "night charges" paid by various University groups using the facility. However, for the same year, expenditures for operations were $75,000.

"We have to spend $50,000 right away for safety items before anybody can use the camp this summer."

"That (loss) is not so bad because the difference of $50,000 is not so bad," Sackton said. "But the capital costs are quite severe, and all of that is in the loss column."

He said capital costs include: during the 1979-80 school year, $377,000 to upgrade the water system; in 1981, $177,000 for a septic system; currently, an estimated $200,000 to make the camp inhabitable.

Sackton said that $50,000 of that current $200,000 figure will definitely be spent.

"We have to spend $50,000 right away for safety items before anybody can use the camp this summer," he said. "We're going ahead with those expenditures."

He said the decision of whether to spend the balance of the $200,000 will depend on the extended findings of the analysis. However, no date has been set for resuming the analysis.

Sackton said the camp is used mostly during the summer months by various groups on campus, including several academic departments for research, the band and the football team for training. However, for the majority of the time, the camp is a vacant, costly facility, he said.

"When you look at the big picture, the camp is a drain on our funds," Sackton said. "For every dollar we put into Camp Tontozona, we have to take away from academic programs and the students suffer."

The cost benefit analysis of Camp Tontozona, according to Sackton, is one phase of a program that has been implemented to study all University real estate holdings. No decisions have yet been made stemming from that study.

Legislature approves bonds to boost funding for ASU research park

By Mead Summer
Staff writer

Funding problems concerning the new ASU research park and the ongoing Engineering Excellence Program have been cleared up, Rep. Doug Todd, R-Tempe, said Tuesday.

A proposal allowing the Arizona Board of Regents to issue bonds to aid funding of the research park received general approval in the Senate. But a passage in the bill allowing the Board to form subsidiary corporations met with opposition, Todd said.

"I think we've solved the problems that some of the dissenters had with a portion of the bill."

The bill was initiated to act as a tax shelter and accumulate money for the research park and other development projects. The subsidiary corporation clause allows the Board to transfer from one division to another any money, property or projects.

"I think we've solved the problems that some of the dissenters had with a portion of the bill," Todd said, adding that he has a "commitment" from Rules Committee Chairman Sen. John Mawhinney, R-Tucson, said his committee will not hold the bill any longer.

The action leaves enough time for the proposal to garner the necessary legislative approval in the House and Senate before the session ends, he said.

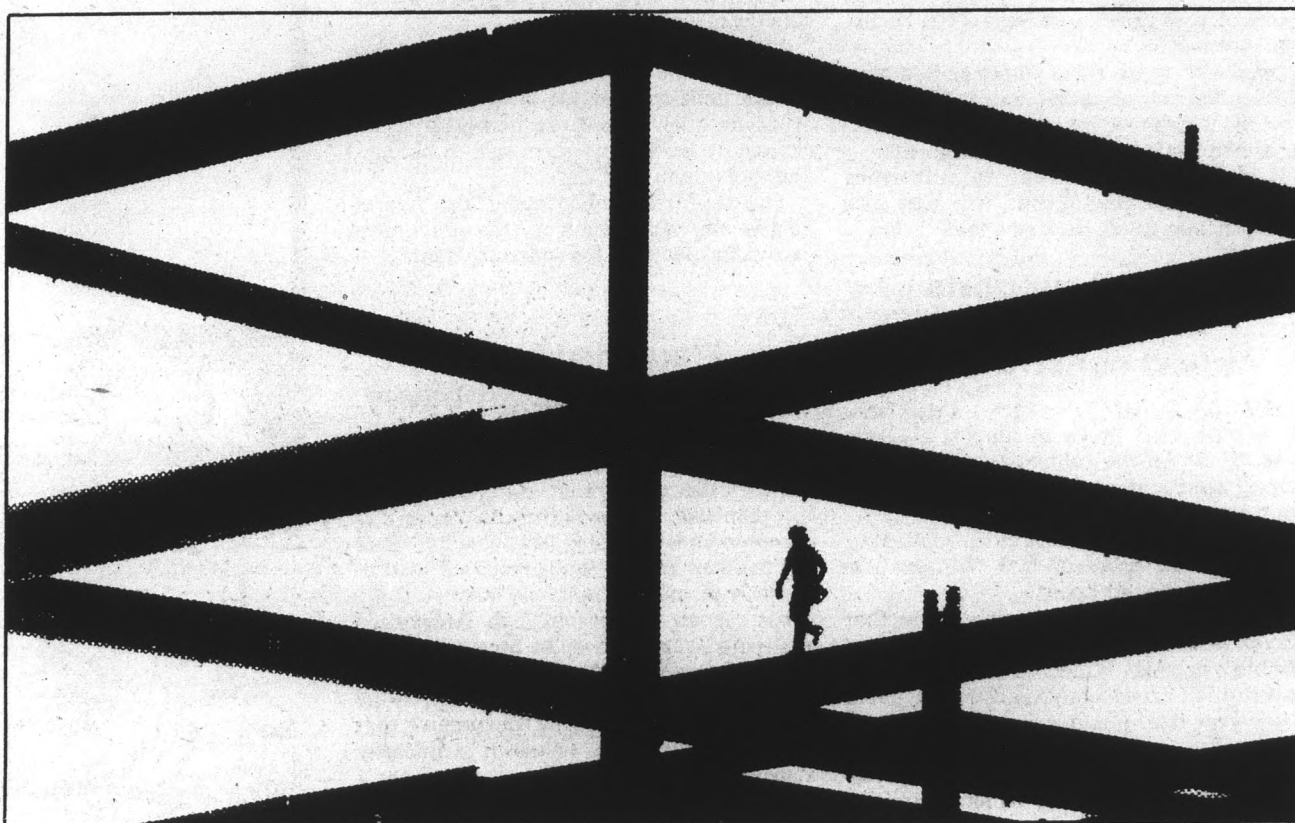

Todd also said a debate which began in Senate Majority Caucus Monday over a $2.7 million appropriation for the ASU Engineering Excellence Program seems to be resolved.

A strike-all amendment sponsored by Senate President Stan Turley, R-Mesa, seeks to allot about two-thirds of the $3.9 million originally requested by ASU for the program. The funding for the program was not part of the $100 million 1983-84 budget approved for the University.

The money is necessary to continue development of ASU's Center for Engineering Excellence, designed to draw high-technology firms to the Phoenix area through enhancing the College of Engineering and Applied Sciences.

Legislators and University officials hope that companies impressed by the college will consider becoming tenants of the planned research park.

The bill was scheduled for a final vote in the Senate late Tuesday, Todd said, and then was to be returned to the House for approval of the Senate amended copy of the bill.

MU remodeling to be completed by fall

By Emily Smith
Staff writer

The remodeling of the lower level of the Memorial Union, previously occupied by the University Bookstore, should be completed by the start of the fall semester, the associate vice president for business affairs said Tuesday.

Bill Phelps said the remodeled area would house the Dean of Students offices, a ticket sales outlet for University activities, a student lounge and retail space.

"I don't really know what kind of retail space will be put in at this time," Phelps said. "Originally we were looking at a postal substation and credit union or other retail spaces."

Approval was given to begin the design process for the lower level by the Arizona Board of Regents at its April meeting.

The estimated cost of design is between $140,000 and $170,000.

Phelps said that design plans are being drawn up by Ernie Nickels, planning architect in ASU Facilities Management and Planning.

Nickels said several areas of the design and remodeling process would be time consuming and difficult because of the many services that have to fit into the area.

"It is going to be tight, but I think it will be workable," Nickels said.

He added that the design would have to be approved by all of the groups that will be located in the remodeled space.

Once the design work is complete, Nickels estimated that it would take between two and three months to complete the remodeling.

The area will be remodeled by erecting walls and using a series of low partitions, he said.

"The lounge will be pretty much open," Nickels said. "Low partitions will be used to separate other areas except offices and conference rooms. Any spaces where you can have sound problems will have full height walls."

According to Phelps, once the designing of the lower level is complete, Nickels will begin the design work of the upper level.

"The (Memorial Union) committee recommended that upstairs become a sweet shop and a sundry items store," Phelps said.

He added that if all went well, the upper level would also be open for use in the fall.

Newspaper reports 3 bodies found, possibly 22 more

NEW YORK (AP) — Three bodies were found Tuesday by New York police digging near a vacant house on Staten Island and authorities said they expected to find as many as 22 more, the Staten Island Advance said.

The Advance, which has a reporter at the scene, said the diggers went to the site with a search warrant sought by authorities in Monmouth County, N.J.

Digging started at 8 a.m. and three bodies were found before 10 a.m., the Advance said. One was that of a woman. There were no immediate specifics on the other two.

It was not immediately known what led the authorities to begin digging at the site. The bodies were found at 420 Sharrots Road, a vacant house with an expanse of ground around it on the southern end of the island.

The address was formerly the residence of a convicted murderer now being held on another murder charge in Monmouth County, the district attorney's office told the Advance.

Inmates surrender, release hostages

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Two armed inmates surrendered peacefully Tuesday and released two hostages they had held in the basement of a maximum-security prison for six days, officials said.

Inmate Louis Coviello, 26, surrendered at 3 p.m., about five hours after the first of the hostages, Kostas "Gus" Mastros, was released, said prison spokesman Ken Robinson.

Once outside the room where he had been barricaded since 8:30 a.m. Thursday, Coviello telephoned inmate Richard Henkel, 45, and told him he was OK, said Robinson.

Henkel then surrendered to authorities behind guard Daniel Kohut, who was also released unharmed, Robinson said.

Council supports moratorium on airport construction

APACHE JUNCTION (AP) — City Council members say they will support a year's moratorium on the controversial proposed airport here, and, at the same time, will remain neutral on a related initiative.

Supporters of the airport have won a May 17 vote on the proposal that Williams Air Force Base officials oppose.

The council was told Monday night that Mayor Wendell Clarke has won Gov. Bruce Babbitt's promise to include extension of the Superstition Freeway to Apache Junction in a five-year road plan now under consideration.

Clarke, in turn, has said he and the governor have agreed on a year's moratorium on seeking state land for the airport. That agreement came in the midst of a legislative move to block airport construction.

Mankiewicz stepping down as head of NPR

WASHINGTON (AP) — Frank Mankiewicz said Tuesday he is stepping down as president of National Public Radio, which has been forced to cut programming recently because of huge, unexpected budget deficits.

In a statement issued at the 12th annual Public Radio Conference in Minneapolis, Minn., Mankiewicz said he will stay with the network but not as chief operating officer.

"I will continue to represent public radio in deregulation and other proceedings," he said.

Myron Jones, chairman of the NPR board of directors, said the board has chosen a new president but will not release the name until the person tells his present employer he is leaving.

Walesa interrogated for third time

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — Police interrogated Lech Walesa for four hours Tuesday — the third time in a week that Walesa has been grilled about his contacts with underground leaders of the banned Solidarity union.

Walesa was released after four hours of questioning, according to a spokesman at the labor leader's apartment in the port city of Gdansk. The spokesman, reached by telephone, said Walesa once again "refused to answer any questions" from the police.

He said police asked for details of Walesa's clandestine meeting with Solidarity's underground leadership — a meeting held more than a week ago, Walesa and the other leaders say.

"He also refused to answer when he was asked what he knew about the preparations of the underground for new actions, and what he knew about the activities of the Solidarity leaders who are still in hiding," the spokesman said.

The 39-year-old labor leader also refused to give any information on "the activities of individual people," the spokesman said.

Flag raised over devastated U.S. Embassy

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Marine guards raised a single American flag at sunrise Tuesday in front of the devastated U.S. Embassy, where officials said an apparent suicide bombing left 19 people dead and 28 others missing and presumed dead.

Embassy spokesman John Reid said the latest casualty count was eight Americans confirmed dead and eight others missing. Ten Lebanese embassy employees were killed, with 20 others believed buried in the huge mounds of rubble, he said, adding that one other person of unknown nationality also was listed as dead.

Police said Monday's blast wounded 120 people, including 22 Americans, ripping open the seven-story embassy's concrete front.

Mental exam rule irks Nev. college faculty

By the College Press Service

RENO, Nev. — Under a new tenure code, the president of the University of Nevada system now can order any faculty member to take a physical or mental examination. Faculty members are enraged about it, and a "mass exodus" may be starting as a result.

"If we had Einstein here, we'd fire him," said James F. Adams, dean of Nevada-Las Vegas' graduate school, adding the brilliant physicist was probably peculiar enough to have been ordered to take a mental exam.

The Regents have "greatly diminished the hand of the faculty while strengthening their own hand" in running the system, said Richard Curry, head of Nevada-Reno's Faculty Senate.

If a teacher refused to take an exam, Curry said, the teacher would be "completely open" to being "dismissed."

The mental exam rule, according to a spokesman for the American Association of University Professors (AAUP), lets "the administration decide without any consultation that a faculty member is not performing his duties."

The source said he has written letters of recommendation for more than 20 teachers since the Regents adopted the new policy, which has yet to be put into practice.

Moreover, "I know of four upper-level administrators who are getting out, including myself," Adams said.

But "the Regents have said that the people of the state will benefit from the revised code," said Warren Fox, the system's vice chancellor.

Fox contended the new tenure code adequately protects academic freedom on the system's campuses. While faculty members have complained the new code also allows the Regents to pick new campus presidents almost single-handedly, Fox argued "the Board of Regents has always had the final decision in appointing a president."

In addition, "the president can make a determination that the faculty member is not performing his duties," or that the professor is a threat to campus life, limb or property.

"This kind of thing comes up once in every 100 years, and it is an insult to the faculty," Curry said.

The code has attracted national concern from faculty groups.

AAUP spokesman Jonathan Knight in Washington, D.C., called the mental exam provision "most unusual."

Scores of schools and college systems around the country are altering their tenure and faculty codes this year, in part because administrators, scrambling for ways to cut campus costs to balance their budgets, want more flexibility in hiring and firing teachers.

But Fox did not believe any other codes included similar mental exam rules.

In 1981, the University of Georgia considered requiring all students to take psychiatric tests as a condition of staying in school but abandoned the idea because "there wasn't a pressing urgency," said Michael Weissberg, Georgia's counseling director.

AAUP lawyer Patricia Hollander said she hopes the Nevada Regents also might be persuaded to drop the mental exam provision "when things cool down."

If not, she said she believes the rule may prove "vulnerable" when put to a court test.

A PROPOSED PARKING PLAN FOR 1983-84

For over a year now efforts have been underway to develop a new and comprehensive plan to improve parking at ASU. After 15 months of study, discussion, surveys, interviews and open hearings, the Office of Parking and Transit Services in conjunction with the Parking Services Committee, has a plan which will accomplish the following:

- 1. Reduce Parking Congestion. The proposed plan would greatly reduce parking congestion by limiting the number of decals sold for inner campus lots.
- 2. Offer Several Parking Options. Close-in lots would carry higher fees than perimeter lots. Faculty would have priority in the selection of parking space if purchases are made by June 15. Staff would be able to apply after June 15, and students would be eligible to purchase decals for close-in parking on a space available basis after August 1.
- 3. Increase Parking Revenues. At ASU, as well as at almost every other publicly funded university, costs associated with providing and maintaining parking facilities are not covered by legislative appropriations. Revenues from parking fees will resurface and restripe parking lots, install additional lighting, provide signage, expand the tram system, redesign existing lots for controlled access and provide funds for operational and personal service costs needed to sustain an orderly and efficient parking program.
- 4. Provide Cost Saving Features. Efforts have been made to incorporate cost saving features for faculty, staff and student decal purchasers. One such feature involves the use of a movable parking decal that can be transferred from one vehicle to another. This is designed to facilitate car pooling as well as to accommodate those who have more than one vehicle.
- 5. Make Available Payroll Deductions and Refunds. Permanent full-time employees of the University will be able to purchase parking decals through payroll deduction. Faculty, staff and student purchasers who leave the University prior to May 1, 1984 may obtain prorated refunds.
- 6. Visitor and Short Term Parking. An inner campus lot will provide limited pay parking for visitors. Parking meters will be installed along Forest and Gammage Parkway for short term parking needs.
- 7. Expand Tram Service. A sixth tram has been purchased and will be in service when the fall semester begins in August. The proposed parking plan calls for the extension of tram service to 10 p.m. Monday through Thursday when regular classes are scheduled.

PARKING OPTIONS

The proposed parking plan calls for the following decal options:

- Controlled Access Parking — provides access to a specific inner campus lot of your choice staffed by an attendant who prevents unauthorized vehicles from entering. The sale of decals will be limited to approximately 1.25 for each parking stall in an effort to reduce overcrowding. Annual fee $90.
- Open Parking — access not controlled but enforced and subscriptions limited to approximately 1.43 decals for each parking stall in inner campus lots. Annual fee $50.
- Lots 55 and 59 — parking near Sun Devil Stadium with access to tram service. Annual fee $30.
- Motorcycle Parking — Annual fee $25.
- Faculty/Staff Disabled Parking — Annual fee $90. Student Disabled — Annual fee $30.
- Evening Only Parking — available in inner campus lots after 3 p.m. Annual fee $30.
- Reserved Parking — purchaser receives a decal for an individually assigned stall. Annual fee $300.

OPEN MEETINGS AND WRITTEN COMMENTS

Faculty, staff and students are invited to attend any one of four open meetings scheduled on Monday, April 25 and Tuesday, April 26 in the Pima Room of the Memorial Union. Members of the Parking Services Committee will be available at those meetings to answer questions on the proposed plan. The meetings are scheduled:

Noon to 1 p.m. Monday
4 p.m. to 5 p.m. Monday
9:30 a.m. to 10:30 a.m. Tuesday
Noon to 1 p.m. Tuesday

Written comments and questions also are encouraged and should be forwarded to the Director of Parking and Transit Services, MU 182-H, no later than April 25.

Reflections on the happenings at ASU

Much has transpired at ASU this semester. Here's a quick rundown of a few of the things that have gone on and their effects on the University community:

The Good

The Arizona Board of Regents is in the process of upgrading the admission standards at the three state universities. By requiring high school students to complete four years of English, three of mathematics, two of laboratory sciences and two of social studies, the universities will weed out those students who do not have the rudimentary knowledge of general studies to excel in college-level courses. The Regents, and rightly so, are working toward the goal of quality, not quantity in admission standards for the state universities.

Another development at ASU was President J. Russell Nelson's request early in April that "one more effort" be made before determining what should be done with the vacancy in the MU. That final effort ended with the agreement that use of the space be divided between a central ticket office and a student lounge and study area. Prior to that agreement, the administration was planning to use the space only for a ticket office, thus putting profit motives before providing services to students.

Student services were also improved in the areas of financial aids and student health.

Under the management of first-year director Paul Barberini, short-term changes were made to shorten the lines and the waits at the Financial Aid Office. Barberini is slowly undoing the financial aid mess he inherited. Prospects look good that the office will become even more efficient next semester when the new computer system is in full swing.

The Student Health Center implemented a new appointment system and an on-call physician service. And a $5 fee for each visit at the health center, proposed by the State Legislature in January to offset the state's budget deficit, fell by the wayside.

One final note. One of the worst decisions made by the

Tracy Fletcher
Opinion Editor

ASASU Senate was offset by one of the best decisions made by Vice President for Student Affairs Betty Turner Asher.

At the end of the fall semester, the senators, in an ill-timed move, voted to pay themselves. That bill was vetoed by ASASU President Neil Giuliano. The Senate subsequently overrode his veto. And in January, Asher finally quashed the controversy by refusing to sign the bill.

The Bad

The cost of attending ASU is increasing — again. During the weekend, the Regents decided to tack a $95 surcharge on to the fees and tuition to raise revenue to operate the universities. It may be a necessary evil for maintaining the quality of education at state universities, as the Board contends it is.

But it could possibly lead to a decrease in enrollment. And, although the Board insists it is a one-time-only charge, it establishes a dangerous precedent that could resurface in the future when the universities and the state face budgetary problems.

The Changeable

ASU parking woes live on. However, there is one bright spot in the parking saga — a series of meetings will be held next week to allow concerned members of the University community to express their views on the newly proposed solutions. The meetings will be held Monday at noon and 4 p.m. and Tuesday at 9:30 a.m. and noon in the MU Pima Room. Parking will continue to plague you, and all of ASU, unless people concerned about parking proposals — including fee increases — show up and speak out.

The Stupid

The Daniel E. Noble Science and Engineering Library is still not open, despite being fully furnished and ready for use for more than a year. All the plants in the building have died, the carpet is buckling, signs are falling off the walls. But state lawmakers still refuse to fund the library, insisting it is cheaper to not operate it. The lawmakers should remember whose money was spent to build the multi-million dollar facility, and put that money already spent to good use.

And The Perpetually Stupid

The State Legislature, in all its infinite wisdom, has again denied the student member of the Board of Regents a voting voice in regent action. Despite this year's highly competent, responsible student Regent Vada Manager, certain lawmakers have displayed the unmitigated gall to liken giving the student regent a vote to "putting the running of the prison into the hands of the inmates." Just remember, legislators, these "inmates" of today will be leading citizens of tomorrow.

And on a final note. Leaders of the Student Rights Coalition tried to bring "Deep Throat," acclaimed as "The Best Porn Film Ever Made," to the ASU campus. Their efforts were successfully thwarted, upholding a campus ban on X-rated films. Yet, SRC President and College of Law Senator Mark Downs won't let the already-dead issue die.

Yesterday, Downs filed suit against ASASU Executive Vice President Greg Hamm for using "unfettered discretion" in refusing to sign SRC funding requisitions forms. Hamm's reasoning: the SRC misrepresented its intentions in the fall when Downs was asked point-blank if the money would be used to fund X-rated movies; Downs answered unequivocally "no." Downs' reasoning: the SRC misrepresented its intentions in the belief that the ban on X-rated movies was going to be changed during the year. Downs' intentions for the future are crystal clear and, no doubt, the SRC will continue its fruitless "Deep Throat" ritual again next year.

ASU Scholarship Walk proves students are willing to help

Editor:

In response to the recent unsigned editorial regarding the upcoming ASU Scholarship Walk, I would like to clarify a few things about this event and outline the intentions of the organization involved.

For those unfamiliar with the ASU Scholarship Walk, it is a 10-kilometer walk-a-thon on Sunday, April 24, to benefit ASU students. It is much like other walk-a-thons in that participants are collecting pledges for each kilometer of the course which they may choose to walk or run. It is somewhat unique though, not just because the money raised will fund scholarships, but because each participant can select the type of ASU student to receive the scholarship generated by the money he/she raises. Also, organizations which participate will have the scholarships they raise awarded in their name.

Coordinators of the Scholarship Walk appreciate the response from individuals like the author of the recent editorial. We too have seen the generosity ASU students have shown in providing service to the community and hope that they will now be attracted by this opportunity to serve each other. At the same time, however, we are more optimistic about the response we are receiving, not just from students, but from faculty, staff and alumni as well.

There is reason for our optimism. First of all, students serving students is nothing new to ASU. That's what a large number of the organizations here at ASU are all about. In fact, some have especially attempted to serve us in the areas of educational costs and financial assistance.

Associated Students, for example, one of the Scholarship Walk sponsors, has worked through the Arizona Students Association to provide constant lobby pressure to opposing tuition hikes and financial aid cuts. The Associated Students Senate has also shown its concern in this area by providing significant funding for the walk.

The Student Foundation, another Scholarship Walk sponsor, works all year long to raise scholarship funds for ASU students. They have awarded close to $50,000 in scholarships over the past five years. Interfraternity Council, Panhellenic Council, Residence Hall Association, and the Dean of Students Office are also campus sponsors of the ASU Scholarship Walk. Their sponsorship alone indicates their interest in serving fellow students through scholarship programs.

So, to whomever is the author of the recent editorial, I say, "Thanks." I hope your enthusiasm for the project has encouraged a student or faculty member to participate in the Scholarship Walk and I hope your skepticism has caused a few to ask themselves if they are guilty of the things you say. But I hope you understand now, too, that many students here at ASU are as interested as you are in serving their fellow students.

Legislature packs up, shelves student regent vote question

By Mead Summer
Staff writer

The Arizona State Legislature finishes its 36th session this week, leaving behind a bill that would have granted voting privileges to the student member of the Arizona Board of Regents.

The bill was awaiting consideration by the House Education Committee, but Chairman Jim Cooper, R-Mesa, elected not to schedule it for discussion during the session's final three weeks.

"I decided the bill was not one of the higher-priority issues," Cooper said. "We just don't have time to hear all the bills that were introduced this session."

The bill, sponsored by Sen. Anne Lindeman, R-Phoenix, easily cleared the Senate Education Committee and the full Senate but has been awaiting its day in the House committee since then.

Vada Manager, current student regent and a strong supporter of the proposal, said after the bill gained acceptance in the Senate that he would begin an effort to win approval for it from as many members of the House committee as possible. But Cooper prevented the possibility of a vote on the bill.

According to Kathleen Clark, an NAU senior who has been selected as the new student regent, the bill probably would have passed had it not been for Cooper.

"The major obstacle was Mr. Cooper's refusal to hear the bill," she said. "Mr. Cooper said himself that he didn't want to hear the bill because he was afraid it might pass."

Cooper noted that the student regent program, which is not a permanent position, is due for renewal during next year's session, and said it might not be renewed unless supporters are willing to retain the position as a non-voting entity.

"I hope when they go to renew, they leave it as it is, because if they try to make voting part of the bill, it will be held up and they'll lose the student regent altogether," he said.

Clark said she "would hate to lose a program as good as the student regent because someone has a strong vendetta against it," and added that she feels the issue made good progress considering Cooper's opposition.

Supporters of the student regent say they will attempt to renew the position and provide it with voting privileges in separate efforts next year.

Law student files complaint over withheld Senate funds

By Mike Humphreys
Staff writer

A senator from the College of Law has filed a suit in the Associated Students Supreme Court against Executive Vice President Greg Hamm.

Mark Downs, a first-year law student, filed the suit last week asking the court to direct Hamm to "cease using unfettered discretion in refusing to sign requisition forms for funds authorized by the Senate."

The complaint arose out of a Senate allocation of $150 to the Student Rights Coalition, of which Downs is president, for the purpose of bringing Louis Rhodes, executive director of the Arizona Civil Liberties Union, to ASU for a lecture.

The Senate approved the SRC's request for funds, but Hamm did not sign the requisition forms.

Hamm said, "Monies are granted to clubs and organizations provided they accurately represent themselves in asking for funds. This was not the case with the Student Rights Coalition, so I'm not going to approve the expenditures," he said.

Hamm said the group was asked about its intentions regarding X-rated films at an Associated Students meeting last fall.

"They (the SRC) were asked point blank if it was the purpose of their organization to show X-rated films, and Downs said 'no.' However, their activities this year prove otherwise," Hamm said, referring to an attempt by the group to show the film "Deep Throat" at ASU earlier this semester.

Downs said the group only wishes to show an X-rated film to protest the University ban on them. He added that when the SRC told Hamm it would not attempt to show such a film, it was believed the policy was going to be changed.

The coalition also planned to raise revenue by showing other films, but this did not happen, he said.

He said that Hamm's reasoning was "bogus," and that the executive vice president has "no business whatsoever" not carrying out the Senate's will in such a situation.

Downs contended that the constitution cannot be interpreted to give the executive vice president absolute veto power over funding measures, "thus thwarting Senate intentions."

To give the executive vice president such power would "be contrary to the separation of powers inherent in our constitutional government and contrary to public policy and common sense," Downs' statement said.

The ASASU Supreme Court has not set a date to hear the complaint.

Proposed signs for MU to limit use of lounges, avert unauthorized use

By Glynnis Owens
Staff writer

The television lounge in the MU may soon bear signs limiting use to ASU students and community members in order to restrict unauthorized use, according to Gary Prosper, director of support services at ASU.

Prosper said that he received a "request (for the signs) from the MU to put some kind of restriction on the TV lounge."

The problem involves transients that come from off campus and hang around the lounge, Prosper said.

"Sometimes they stay for six to eight hours," he said.

Prosper said that the transients are not members of the community and should not be using facilities that were intended for students.

While the University cannot require them to leave for being transients, there are certain policies that govern loitering, according to Trudy Thomas, director of the MU.

When people come and sit for hours, they deny seats to

The problem is not out of hand yet but 'could mushroom into something uncontrollable,' if measures are not taken now to avoid future problems.

students and the community, Thomas said.

The MU is a public building, and as such, the community cannot be denied access. But according to University officials, Thomas said, when signs are posted it is legal to limit entrance to authorized users only.

"It's a sensitive situation," Thomas said, adding that the University does not want to hurt anyone's feelings, only protect the students' rights to use the MU.

Thomas said that while there are some transients who attempt to spend time in the MU, there are not a lot.

Prosper agreed that the problem is not out of hand yet but "could mushroom into something uncontrollable," if measures are not taken now to avoid future problems.

"It's preventative medicine," Thomas said.

Floyd Land, assistant director of the MU, said that areas like the TV lounge, typewriter room and the food sale area are areas of concern because of their "limited space."

Areas like the Rendezvous Lounge are not a problem on the grounds that it is "much easier to observe because it's open," Land said, adding that the transients are less likely to stay there regardless.

Although there have been some problems with asking the transients to leave the MU, on the average things are peaceful, Thomas said.

"I don't think they're a threat, more of a nuisance," Prosper said.

Study says reports of loan defaults inflated

By the College Press Service

WASHINGTON — The number of students who fail to repay federal loans may not be as high as U.S. Department of Education officials have been reporting, according to a new study by the American Council on Education.

Since 1975, the government has been releasing "inflated" default rates which reflect the number of students who initially default on their loans, but who may resume payments in response to collection efforts, the study said.

Most recently, the education department has asserted default rates of 15.4 percent on National Direct Student Loans (NDSLs) and 12.3 percent on Guaranteed Student Loans (GSLs).

But the study shows the default rates drop significantly once collection efforts are made.

The after-collection default rate for NDSLs is 8 percent, while the rate of GSL defaulters is actually 3.8 percent.

"I think it points out that the quoted default rates are, to say the least, an overstatement," ACE spokeswoman Elaine El-Khawas said.

"There are deadbeats in the student loan program, no doubt about it. But it's not as dramatic as the government figures have indicated," she said.

"The 12.3 percent default rate for GSLs is made up of cumulative default figures," an education department source said. "All it really tells you is the number of loans that have ever been defaulted on, and doesn't take into account repayments later on."

But the after-collections default rate "is also misleading because it does not take into account people who again default on their repayments. It simply assumes that once repayment begins, it will continue."

"The real default rate is somewhere in between," the source said. "Probably somewhere around 8 or 9 percent. But which figures you use depends on what the party involved wants to show."

"We don't like the idea of overstating the default rates, but we're stuck with two different systems, neither of which gives the real default rate," said Robert Coates, head of the education department's college-based loan programs.

But El-Khawas suggested the government uses the pre-collection default rates to make the problem "appear worse than it really is."

"I don't know their motives, and I don't think there's been any real conspiracy to deceive the public," El-Khawas said.

"But if you state a 12 percent default rate for GSLs, as the government does, it certainly makes it sound like there's a real default problem. The after-collections rate of 3.8 percent seems much more realistic and acceptable."

Spurred by perceived default problems, federal attorneys in a number of cities have launched spectacularly publicized efforts to track down deadbeats.

Reagan promotes plan for revised MX siting; abandons dense pack

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — President Reagan urged Congress today to approve building 100 MX missiles and putting them in existing launch silos, saying the United States must take steps "to free the world from the specter of nuclear conflict."

In a ceremony in the East Room, Reagan endorsed the findings of a bipartisan presidential commission that proposed putting the MX in Minuteman silos, and developing a new, single-warhead missile for deployment in the early 1990s.

Announcing his decision, Reagan abandoned the "dense-pack" deployment plan he proposed only last November.

Reagan said the MX program is the last component of a strategic modernization package that also includes production of the B-1 bomber and nuclear-powered aircraft carriers. Reagan said the overall package "will mean a safer, more secure America."

"Make no mistake," Reagan said. "Unless we modernize our land-based missile systems, the Soviet Union will have no real reason to negotiate meaningful reductions."

"If we fail to act," Reagan said, "we cannot reasonably expect an acceptable outcome in any arms control negotiation and we will also weaken the deterrent posture that has preserved the peace for more than a generation."

Administration officials said the land-based system, when considered as part of a nuclear deterrent including weapons on submarines and bombers, was not vulnerable.

The officials, speaking on condition they not be identified, said the "window of vulnerability" can be measured by political factors, as well as technical developments.

Rejection of the MX "has to make the window of vulnerability a far more formidable, far more important factor in our security," said one official. "So the window of vulnerability is not simply a technical matter. It's a question, too, of the political climate."

"We would only do great harm to the stability of that political climate by failing to make this decision," the official added.

The commission plan endorsed by Reagan calls for deploying the MX in Minuteman silos near Warren Air Force Base, Wyoming. The sprawling tract laps over into neighboring Nebraska.

Reagan announced his decision in an East Room ceremony after disclosing the plan to bipartisan congressional leaders, whose reaction was mixed.

Rep. Joseph Addabbo, D-N.Y., an opposition leader, said of Reagan's appeal for bipartisan action:

"I think the bipartisan action should be to kill the MX once and for all, take that money and use it in a bipartisan way for our national defense, buy strategic weapons and conventional weapons which we so needed."

But Rep. Jack Edwards, R-Ala., leader of MX supporters, said: "We've simply got to replace the Minuteman. Its accuracy is no longer as good as it used to be; its yield is not what it used to be and what it should be."

He conceded, however, that the silos "have a degree of vulnerability."

If the commission proposal fails, "I think it would severely shatter our efforts and make it extremely difficult to pick up the pieces and go forward again," Edwards said.

This is Reagan's third set of proposals for deploying the MX. In 1981, the president proposed putting 40 MX missiles in Minuteman silos as a temporary measure while searching for a permanent basing plan. Congress rejected that idea and demanded that the administration develop a permanent basing system.

The result was the dense-pack plan announced by Reagan last November. It called for packing 100 MX missiles into a small tract in Wyoming, on the theory that incoming Soviet missiles would destroy each other with blast and radiation and leave the American missiles capable of retaliating. Congress rejected dense-pack in December.

Unlike the dense-pack plan, the commission's recommendations are supported by the Joint Chiefs of Staff. The chiefs are "totally supportive, unanimously supportive" of the latest plan, said one source. Three of the five chiefs opposed dense-pack.

Troop 640 merits badges, scoutmaster says

By Glynnis Owens
Staff writer

Troop 640 is not your average Boy Scout troop. The members run their own meetings, plan campouts, go to Camp Geronimo in the summer and work to earn merit badges just like other troops.

Except the boys in Troop 640 are mentally handicapped.

Scoutmaster John McKinney said the boys do everything a "normal" troop would do, only a little slower.

"The only thing that limits them sometimes is some of the physical activities," McKinney said.

The troop meets at the First Baptist Church of Scottsdale every Tuesday evening. There are 22 members, ranging from age 11 to 29. On the average, 15 members show up.

One goal of the scoutmaster is to raise the boys to be men. This involves, according to McKinney, teaching them to use their own judgment and giving them responsibilities.

An example of a test of judgment and responsibility was given at a Camporee — a gathering of Boy Scouts on a local level.

The boys were given the assignment of keeping a campfire burning at a certain intensity for a given period of time. If the fire was allowed to burn down, the boys had to return it to the appropriate level.

This is sometimes harder for the troop nicknames. The potential for hurting one another is great, McKinney said.

"To solve this they just don't have nicknames," he said.

The scouts decide what the meetings will consist of and run them themselves. At the last meeting a senior patrol leader, who is the scout makes several 25-mile bike rides and then plans and maps a 50-mile ride.

McKinney said that when he took over the troop, some of the scouts had a lot of badges. After questioning several of them about things they should know after earning a badge, McKinney discovered that the badges had been merely given to the boys.

This was amended by the whole troop going over the requirements for the badges that had been given to them.

The troop is also involved in service to the community.

To thank the church for the use of its facilities and all the support it has given the troop, the scouts spent the day before Easter pulling weeds and moving rocks to prepare for the sunrise service. At the service they performed the job of ushers for the congregation.

The troop provides the scouts with the opportunity to do many things that otherwise could be denied them. Through the activities they get involved in, the scouts learn they can succeed, McKinney said.

"They learn to be proud of what they do," he said.

'You get frustrated, you want to help, but we have to sit on our hands and come back later until it's done.'

leader to do than the scouts. A sponsor from the church, Howard Kumlin, said, "You get frustrated, you want to help, but we have to sit on our hands and come back later until it's done."

Another aspect that makes this troop special is that it is not allowed to have one of the scouts, spent the majority of the meeting going over how to clean and adjust a bicycle to complete a requirement for the cycle merit badge.

The requirements for each badge can be very demanding. For instance, another requirement of the cycle merit badge is that

Graduating students turning to military jobs

By the College Press Service

LAFAYETTE, Ind. — John Lawrence is a senior engineering major about to graduate near the top of his class from Purdue, one of the top engineering schools in the United States.

John Lawrence probably would not have much trouble getting an engineering job in May at or above engineers' $25,800 average starting salary. But Lawrence is going into the Navy instead, for about $4,000 a year less.

"It's perfect," he said. "The money is competitive, and (I know) the Navy is going to take care of me. From the moment I'm sworn in in May, I'll be financially secure."

Reserve Officers Training Corps enrollment has been creeping upward for years, but this year has spurted higher and faster again.

"Along with the rise in enrollments, there has been a fast rise in the number of ROTC scholarships — very fast," reported Army ROTC spokesman Wesley Williams.

The number has almost doubled since the 1979-80 school year. Some 43,000 students took Army aid in 1982.

"When I go on campus (to recruit) now, I'm on equal footing with Lockheed or anybody," said Lt. Rich High, a Navy recruiter in Denver. "In fact, for sophomores and juniors, I can make promises that they can't. I can start giving a student money right away, before he graduates."

"The economy is certainly a factor," said Lt. Tom Wyld of the Navy's College Recruiting Command in Washington, D.C. "I think the Navy is more and more an employer of first resort, rather than an employer of last resort."

Money seems to be the major reason students are opting for the military in increasing numbers this year.

"If I hadn't gotten the scholarship, I would have had to hold off school for a couple of years," said Doug Carra, a Kansas State sophomore who says he would have needed two years of work to save enough cash to register at KS otherwise.

"I think people come into the program, number one, because they feel very patriotic, and number two, because it's getting very expensive to go to school," said

Massachusetts Institute of Technology Navy ROTC Commander Robert McClure.

The Pentagon, in a recent survey of 5,600 ROTC cadets, found that 43 percent of the cadets listed college financial demands as a contributing factor in their enlistment.

The sheer competitive urgency of this year's job market is yet another.

"The recruiting process has become such a rat race," Lawrence complained. "You sit there in a hallway with the people you've been going to school with, competing for the same job."

"Then, all of a sudden, the Navy came up with all this money." The Navy also promised him immediate supervisory responsibilities.

"Used to be the government just wasn't a nice place to work," Lawrence said. "They didn't do nice things. They had wars, and so on. It's taking a whole new turn now."

There are those on campus who still do not agree.

Army ROTC at Yale fell from five students to none this school year. Schools as diverse as Cal State-Fullerton and Fort Lewis College in Colorado have turned away efforts to reestablish ROTC on their campuses.

Harvard administrators are opposing efforts to start a "Friends of ROTC Club" at the school, although Harvard students can get ROTC credits at nearby MIT.

"I'm a refugee from a fascist country, so maybe I'm more sensitive to this kind of thing," explained Vera Simone, a political science professor who helped block ROTC at Cal State-Fullerton recently.

"It's my feeling that the military should not be allowed on campus. It increases their credibility. It contributes to our general acceptance of what they stand for," she contended.

The growth is continuing, however.

The number of ROTC "post institutions" has grown from 275 in 1979-80 to 315 this year, reported P.I. Officer Robert Wallace of Army ROTC's media office.

"That's the highest number of post institutions that I've seen in 16 years," he said. Although there were more students involved in the program back in 1966, he pointed out, many schools required students to enroll in ROTC in those days.

Fun-raising

Fraternity, sororities sponsor philanthropy

By Sandy Sistik
Staff writer

The race was on last Saturday in the "Phi Psi 500," as the Phi Kappa Psi fraternity and the 13 ASU sororities donated their time to help raise money and entertain boys who do not receive much recognition and are often forgotten.

According to Curt Havens, chairman of the Phi Psi committee, 70 boys, ages 8-18, from the Arizona Boys Ranch and Sunshine Acres Children's Home participated in the fund-raising charity benefit held at the Phi Kappa Psi fraternity house.

Havens said several Tempe businesses, including Coors Beer, Timothy O'Toole's, Pup and Bubbles, The Dash Inn, Appetito's, Olympic Haircutters, Top's Liquor, Trophy Den and Campus Athletic, also donated their time and money to help sponsor the event.

All proceeds generated from these sponsors went to the two charities.

"We were able to give ... a total of $2,100 after everything was over," Havens said. "The money was not just in cash. The total also included expenses like the T-shirts, barbecue and trophies."

He said for the first time the event was considered a philanthropic outing in which the boys participated in the day's activities, and the money made would go directly to the charity.

"It was something new for our fraternity this year because we have never participated in a major project like this on campus before," Havens said. "We could go out and sign a contract with the businesses, and with their donations, we can pay for everything and have the remaining funds go to the kids."

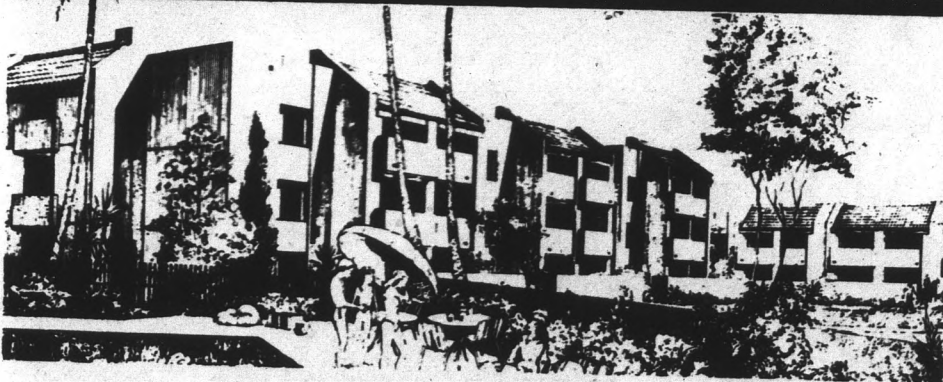

Participants in a women's cruiser bike race concentrate at the starting line. The races, held on Adelphi Drive Saturday, were part of the activities at the "Phi Psi 500."

Feel Guilty

If you have ever received a scholarship or any financial assistance — no matter what the amount — we want you to participate in the ASU Scholarship Walk: a 10-kilometer walk-a-thon on Sunday, April 24, to raise scholarship funds for other deserving students. Hopefully you will be motivated by the opportunity to provide another ASU student with the same help you received. Or maybe by the chance to select the type of students to receive the money you raise. Or at least by the Zales watches, free dinners, gym bags, visors, frisbees, T-shirts, and other prizes participants will receive. But if it is necessary to get you to participate, we want you to feel guilty — we mean like dirt — for refusing to give a little of your time even though you have benefitted from an assistance program yourself. Don't worry about the other guy, you've already gotten your money. Feel guilty yet?

Philanthropic event for 'forgotten' boys

Relay races, an all-Greek bike race and a benefit concert featuring the band Gentlemen After Dark, were among the highlights of the day.

Thirty trophies were donated by Trophy Den and were awarded to the winners of the bike race.

Doug Gondak, KDKB radio disc jockey, was on hand throughout the day to spark morale and give out trophies to the winning teams.

Havens said 1,700 people attended the event this year, compared to 1,300 people in 1981.

"Philanthropies are lacking in the Greek system," Havens said. "This is our way of doing our part, and we hope to see more of these projects in the future. When you are doing something for yourself, nobody wants to hear about it, but when you are doing it to help someone else, everyone wants to hear about it."

"Our fraternity has done other things with kids in the past, and we enjoyed ourselves," he said. "This event was just like the icing on the cake."

John Douville, director of development at the Arizona Boys Ranch, said the staff thought the day was well organized and well planned, adding that the boys enjoyed themselves immensely.

Douville said he feels the event was a benefit for two reasons.

"The fraternity wanted the boys to participate and be involved with their activities, but they also wanted to make it a charity event where the proceeds would go to the Arizona Boys Ranch and the Sunshine Acres Children's Home," Douville said.

He said the ranch has been very appreciative with the support ASU fraternal organizations have given them the past year, adding that this is an extension of the involvement.

"We are a non-profit residential child-care facility for troubled boys, age 8-18," Douville said. "Since we are non-profit, a good portion of our funding comes from private contributions."

"The funding is used primarily to assist us in food and shelter costs, our extension vocational and pre-vocational program and all capital improvements," he added.

George Motier, owner of Pup and Bubbles, said he was requested by the fraternity to assist them in their project.

"They approached us for a sponsorship for one of their sorority teams, and we were glad to do it," Motier said. "We also got a hot dog cart from Vienna, set up the cart and sold hot dogs in reduction of the regular price."

"If they have the event again next year, there is a possibility we would do it again next year too."

ASU fraternity and sorority members, along with residents of the Arizona Boys Ranch and Sunshine Acres Children's Home, wave banners in a show of team spirit during the Phi Psi 500.

ASU employees to entertain with acts of music, whimsy in this week's Follies at MU

By Sandy Sistik
Staff writer

It's show time in the MU Rendezvous Lounge this week for 14 ASU faculty and staff members who will display their talents in the first-ever Faculty and Staff Follies.

According to Tim Kinnerup, MU program adviser, the Follies starts today and runs through Friday, with the teachers — as well as other University employees — showcasing their talents in front of students.

On Wednesday at 1 p.m., Carla Rosatti, a secretary in the Development Office will perform a vocal/piano piece, followed by Elaine McGovern, a secretary in geology, tickling the ivories at 1:45 p.m.

Kinnerup said at 2 p.m. on Thursday, about 10 members of the Saga Foods staff will be presenting a skit and revue act, and on Friday at 1:30 p.m., Kent Hill, assistant professor of economics, and Fritz Leigh, assistant professor of journalism and telecommunications, will pair up to present a guitar and vocal selection.

"I would have hoped more would have signed up but for now it is a good start," Kinnerup said. "I found out when I called other entries that they felt shy to perform by themselves. A lot of the different acts would have felt more confident if they were going up with someone else."

McGovern said she has been playing the piano since she was in high school and thought it might be fun to perform in the Follies.

"I decided it might be fun and I am kind of a ham so I am going to do it," McGovern said.

She will be playing excerpts from the songs "Autumn Leaves" and "Deep Purple," as part of her presentation.

Rosatti said she will be performing eight easy listening songs and her performance will last about 40 minutes.

"I love to sing and I love to perform and I am excited about it," Rosatti said. "I hope this may give my name a boost in Arizona and will get around so I can sing more in different functions around the Valley."

Grand Marketplace Manager Dick Calbow said the Saga Foods staff will form the "Saga Madrigal Singers," but are taking a more whimsical approach to the Follies.

"We think there will be harmony like there never was before," Calbow said.

10,000 to visit during annual Scout-A-Rama

By Nancy Prater
Staff writer

ASU will host about 10,000 Boy Scouts — all of whom will be displaying their "skills and achievements" — at the annual Scout-A-Rama this weekend.

"The Scouts will be coming to the University community because it is an ideal location and most of our Scouts are from that area," according to Frank Hutchings, program director for the Theodore Roosevelt Council of the Boy Scouts of America.

The Theodore Roosevelt Council is made up of Scout units in central Arizona, and extends west to the California border and east to Silver City, New Mexico.

He said the Scouts will have displays of anything they can get a merit badge in, such as cooking, pinewood derbys, rocketry, first-aid demonstrations, and solar heating.

"It's the Scouts' way of letting the community know of their accomplishments and what scouting is all about. It's like their 'community fair.'"

Hutchings said volunteers will begin to set up the display booths Friday morning on the east side of Rural Road, across from Packard Stadium.

He said several of the Scout units will be camping overnight on the site, with security provided by Explorers and Law Enforcement unit members.

"They'll keep watch on the grounds and make sure the equipment and booths aren't tampered with," he said.

Hutchings added that one goal of the Scout-A-Rama program is recruiting. He said around 29,000 people participate in the Council's programs, and there is always a need for volunteers.

He said the booths will be open from 10:30 a.m. until 4:30 p.m. on Saturday. Cost for the program is $2 for people over 12.

Noted journalist to speak at ASU leadership banquet

Howard K. Smith, internationally noted commentator and former ABC-TV News anchor will be the featured speaker at the inaugural Insuring Tomorrow banquet, co-sponsored by the Sun Angel Foundation and Associated Students of ASU.

Insuring Tomorrow is a leadership enrichment program for ASU student leaders which recognizes student leaders and holds an annual Issues Conference.

An outstanding junior student from each of the colleges at ASU were chosen this year and will be recognized at the banquet Saturday and honored with a plaque by the Foundation.

The banquet will come at the end of a day-long conference at the Fiesta Inn in Tempe where one hundred student leaders will discuss topics such as the insanity defense, Reaganomics, politics and the media.

The topics will be presented by members of the Sun Angel Foundation, a group contributing personally and financially to the University.

The topics will be introduced and addressed by the Foundation members and then the participants will break up into small groups to discuss their views on them.

After the group discussions, the conference attendants will meet and review their discussions as a whole.

Conference participants from the Sun Angel Foundation will include Rudy Campbell, former Mayor of Tempe and a former president of the Arizona Board of Regents; Bill Shover, director of Community Services for the Arizona Republic/Phoenix Gazette; Walter Craig, senior judge, U.S. District Court; and Kelsey Moline, president of Camelback National Bank.

Game helps students face 'nuclear' options

By Deanne Hutchison
Staff writer

How real is nuclear war to you? What would you do if you were faced with making a decision that might lead to a nuclear war?

Ten students at ASU are playing a game in which they are faced with these decisions. The game is called Firebreak and it is being played by 1,500 groups all over the country.

Sponsored by a non-partisan anti-nuclear war group based in Washington, D.C., called Ground Zero, the game was devised to help people see how a nuclear war could happen and how one could be prevented.

Ken Boyle, a junior in liberal arts, started the Firebreak group at ASU.

The game is actually role-playing, in which 10 people are divided into two groups: one representing the United States and the other the Soviet Union.

The game lasts four weeks, with a consecutive "move" for each week. The moves are hypothetical situations, set in the year 1988, that the two countries might be faced with.

"It is set in 1988 because it is far enough in the future that it is possible for the move (possibly) to be accurate and it is close enough to be realistic in considering what could be done," Boyle said.

Each group has an adviser. The Soviet adviser is the final decision-maker for the Soviet group. After the group is presented with the problem, the members attempt to influence the adviser's decision.

The American group, which also has an adviser, is run democratically with each member voting on policy.

"Having the Russian chairman make the final decision was our own variation," Boyle said. "We thought it was more realistic."

There are a total of 20 groups in the Phoenix area, according to Boyle, and every Thursday at 2 p.m. KMCR radio has a discussion of what was decided in the different groups.

"All the groups are running at approximately the same time," Boyle said.

Among the decisions the students had to deal with was a situation in which the Russian team considered what they should do about a hypothetical situation in Yugoslavia.

"The situation was that anti-government forces had gained control of some parts of Yugoslavia," Boyle said. "Also, NATO had publicly expressed support for the anti-government faction in Yugoslavia and may have been secretly increasing shipments of military supplies."

To deal with this situation, the group was offered three options of action for the Soviets.

"One, they could send military aid to pro-Soviet government in Yugoslavia and economic pressure against NATO," Boyle said. "Two, they could have a partial quarantine of Yugoslavian ports and increased border searches. And the last option was to offer a diplomatic compromise to the U.S. President."

Although the group did not agree, the actual decision was for option two, partial quarantine of Yugoslavian ports and increased border searches.

The first major situation the American group was confronted with was one in which the CIA had informed the president that Cubans planned to send troops into Nicaragua. Although the president publicly announced his disapproval, the Cuban premier said the United States had no right to dictate Cuban actions and sent the troops anyway.

"The three options for the team were: one, a naval quarantine of Nicaragua; two, diplomatic pressure; and three, sending troops into Nicaragua," Boyle said.

The group did not agree with the actual decision this time either. The final decision was to send troops into Nicaragua.

The groups may make their own decisions and then compare their decision with Ground Zero's.

"We announce at the end of each night what was actually decided by the presidents of the countries," Boyle said. "On the first move, both of the groups decided differently from what was already decided."

When the group meets the following week, they have a whole new set of problems that were the result of the 'actual' decision made the week before.

"They keep the last move silent so that no one will accidentally expose what is done," he said. "They have probably already started sending them out in the mail so I will have it a few days ahead of time."

The game is a one-time-only event because the actual decisions are exposed each week.

"This is Ground Zero's big event for the year," Boyle said.

The ASU group meets in Hayden Library every Wednesday at 9:30 p.m. There are four women and six men and they all try to be realistic by thinking of themselves playing an actual role.

"The girls were telling me that they tended to feel a little ignorant in the groups because they didn't keep up with the news like the guys did," he said. "But now they are starting to read the newspapers and watch the news more."

Boyle also said that the members of the American group dress in business suits, and the Soviet group has a Soviet flag made by one of their members who is an art major.

"One of the guys on the Russian team has read a lot about the country and he always brings two or three books on Soviet history with him to the meetings," Boyle said.

Because there is only one week left in the game, Boyle said the group is not looking for new members, although they might consider taking on a few.

pressBruins top recruiters for Pac-10 basketballBy Dean Obenauer
Sports writer

Only four teams from the Pacific 10 Conference went to post-season tournaments this past season. The conference coaches recently tried to sign some of the top athletes in the nation to improve the quality of play in the Pac-10.

The teams that went to tournaments did not put on a very good showing for the Pac-10 as the conference powerhouses were upset by teams that in the past have not been considered the same caliber in athletics.

In the NCAA tournament the Pac-10 champion and top ten ranked team, UCLA, was knocked out of the tourney by the likes of Utah in second round play. The Bruins, who were not allowed to participate in last year's tournaments because of NCAA sanctions, were the only hope the west had of making the Final Four.

The Cinderella story of the Washington State Cougars ended the way fairy tales never end. Head coach George Raveling and his highly spirited squad were ousted from tournament play by Virginia and Ralph Sampson, after a valiant effort.

Then came the ASU Sun Devils who tried to make amends for the fall of the west, but after three shots not going through the hoop at the buzzer, their dreams were shattered by the Killer Frogs of TCU.

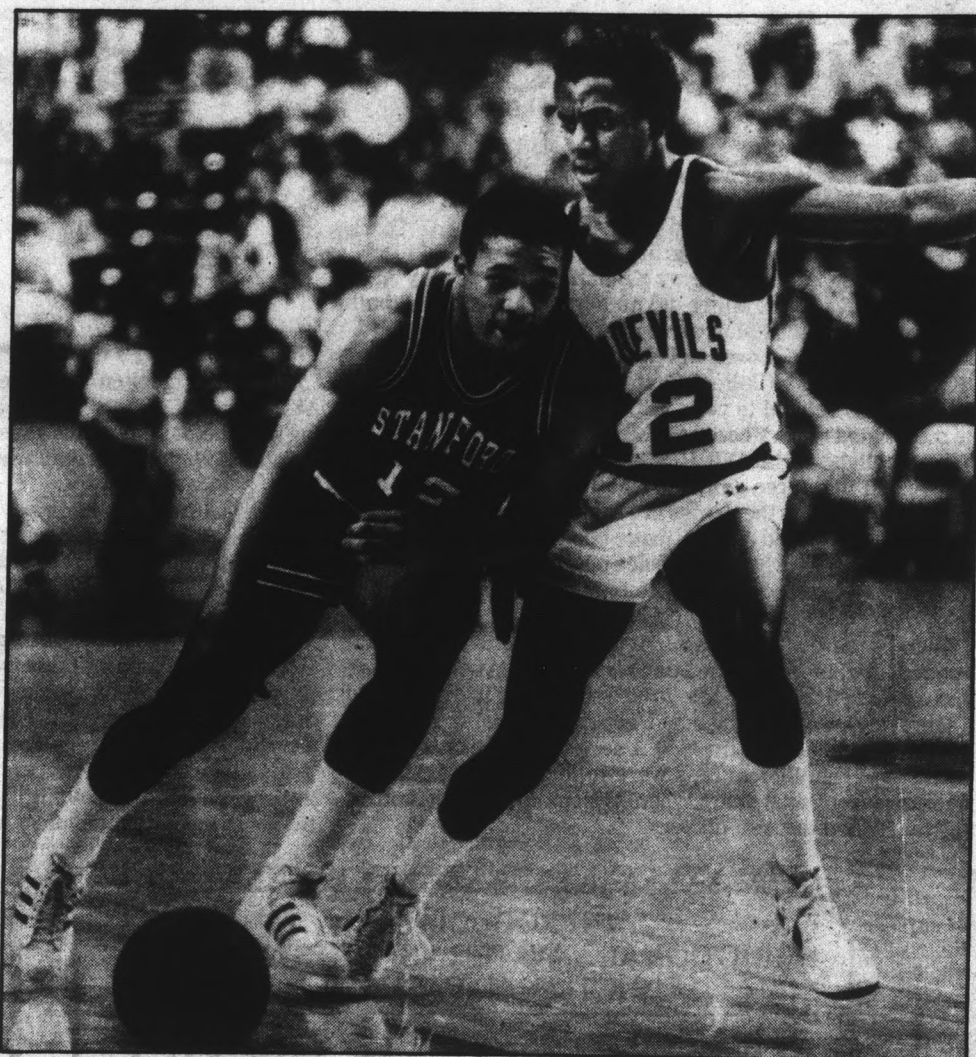

The Oregon State Beavers, who came on strong after one of their worst starts ever, made the best showing in tournament play. The team they lost to, Fresno State, was the eventual National Invitational Tournament winner.

Following their seasons all the Pac-10 teams including the tournament participants, were looking for ways to improve on last season's campaign.

The first and most important way to change their programs for the better is to recruit higher caliber athletes. So since the buzzer of their last game sounded, coaches of all the Pac-10 schools have been working without lunch breaks and sleeping only while they were jetting around the country looking for potential prospects.

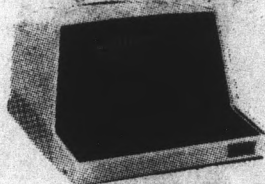

"I am on my way to catch a plane. I'm on my way to try and get another one," ASU head coach Bob Weinbauer said in regard to Reggie Miller. "I feel very confident that we

Southern Cal should be arch rival of future

Former Athletic Director Fred Miller had a dream — he envisioned an ASU-U of A rivalry weekend. On Thanksgiving weekend, ASU would take on Arizona in three sports, football, exhibition basketball, and fall baseball.

The dream never became reality.

Arizona baseball coach Jerry Kindall refused to play ASU during the fall season. Miller did manage to have the football and basketball teams play each other on the same weekend, but the idea did not go over well with the fans.

Kindall may have killed what could have been a great tradition. His refusal to play ASU during the fall has led to the most hated rivalry between the two schools.

The highlight of the ASU-U of A sports season is when the two face off in a three-game baseball series. Fans have had to wear hard hats to the games in Tucson or risk injury.

For years ASU and Arizona have been the class of the college baseball world. It is easy to see how the two schools have come to hate each other in baseball more than any other sport.

When I attend an ASU baseball game I like to sit with the escaped lunatics behind the Sun Devil dugout. At every game I have watched this year, the Wildcats manage to be the topic of conversation among dugout sweepers.

Fans that traveled to the U of A series two weeks ago were astonished. The Wildcat fans were mildcats. This is quite a difference from past years when Arizona fans threw bottles onto the field at the ASU players.

Ken Sain
Sports Editor

"They put chicken wire around the dugout to protect the ASU players," an ASU fan said, "but their fans were throwing smashed up beer cans at us."

Could it be that the rivalry between ASU and Arizona is dying?

ASU has become a major college power in all athletics. There is not one sport in which an ASU team is a consistent loser. The same cannot be said for the Wildcats.

ASU has outgrown the U of A. It is time that the Sun Devils look for a new rivalry.

And that new rivalry is already forming.

It was quite apparent this weekend that ASU and USC may prove to have quite a rivalry. This year, for the first time, I did not hear mention of the Wildcats at an ASU game. They were too busy razzing the Trojans.

A victory over the Wildcats in football is commonplace. A victory over SC in football is special. ASU is one of the few teams in the nation to hold a winning record against the Trojans in football.

In basketball the U of A program has declined over the past decade. ASU was on top of the world three years ago as they were ranked fourth in the nation.

The Devils have the best college baseball program in the nation. Arizona will always have to live in ASU's shadow. Southern Cal did have the best program in the nation. After struggling for a few years, they seem to have built it back to a competitive level.

When ASU traveled to Los Angeles early in March, the Trojans dressed junior varsity players in uniforms just to rip the Sun Devil fans and players.

In the series this past weekend many events helped me conclude that the Southern Cal Trojans should be formally proclaimed the new ASU rival.

During Sunday's game a Southern Cal pitcher, Bob Gunnarson, started mocking ASU's Jim Jefferson after a ball bounced off a bat and onto his foot. When Gunnarson noticed he had the fans' attention he started doing a little soft-shoe for the them.

That was when Southern Cal was leading 5-0.

The ASU fans immediately fired up. During the entire next half inning, they were on their feet screaming, stomping, and banging their brooms on whatever was handy. At the start of the inning it worked, but ASU was only able to score one run.

Southwestern regional next test for McKinney and Sun Devils' archers

By Phil Daschner
Sports writer

Seven All-Americans will lead the ASU men's and women's archery teams into the Southwestern regionals in Long Beach, Calif., this weekend. If successful, the teams will compete in the national championships at Colorado Springs May 12-14.

Last year ASU took the men's team and individual titles along with the mixed-team championship. The women placed second nationally behind James Madison University.

Seventh year head coach Sheri Rhodes, who was recently selected to coach the U.S. Archery team at the 1983 world championships, said ASU has a very good chance of repeating as national champs.

Rhodes said ASU has been able to dominate the regionals, "because of the caliber of our archers and the fact that most of the competition is from Division I schools."

Leading the Sun Devils into the regionals will be three-time All-American and defending national champion Rick McKinney. He has the distinction of being only the second person in collegiate history to win back to back national championships.

McKinney led ASU to a first-through-fourth-place sweep of the Arizona State Archery Association championships April 9-10 with a score of 1,302, just edging teammate Tom Stevenson who finished at 1,301.

Stevenson is also a three-time All-American and the 1980 national champion.

Glenn Myers, a two-time All-American, Jay Bars, Lee Tinkey and Bryan Walker round out a very talented men's squad.

The women's team boasts four All-Americans, led by former national champion Cindy Vezzetti and two-time junior college champion Donna Gelnett. The other returning All-Americans are Rebecca Wallace and Mary-Ann Parent.

Returner Patty McMinds and newcomer Robyn Horn complete the women's squad.

McKinney, a senior physical education major, has been shooting with his five brothers and sisters since age 10.

"It was a family deal," said McKinney. "Everyone in my family has won a national championship except for my dad — and we've classified him as a great coach."

McKinney acknowledged that his stiffest competition for the individual title may come from his own teammates, but said that fact will not bother him.

"I never worry about winning or losing," he said. "When I do, I usually lose."

"If I'm shooting well, I have an excellent chance, but you have to learn to win within yourself."

McKinney said he plans to compete for the Rhodes-coached U.S. team in the world championships and work as coordinator for the U.S. archery team this year before completing work on his degree in December.

Freshman Frazier jumps off to great start in two events for men's track

By Jay Taylor
Sports writer

Several freshmen have made big contributions to the ASU track team this year. But the performances that have been the most impressive have been turned in by Kenny Frazier.

Frazier, from Mission High in San Francisco, has had a great year in both the long jump and the triple jump. He is undefeated in the triple jump, and has been beaten only once in the long jump, by teammate Walter Haywood.

Frazier's victories have come against some of the best opposition in the nation. He has defeated both the 1982 NCAA indoor and outdoor champions, as well as last year's Pac-10 runner-up.

Along with running up his string of victories, Frazier has qualified for the NCAA meet in both the jumping events. His jump of 25 feet 11 3/4 inches is the best in the Pac-10 this year, and his 52 foot 6 1/4 inch leap ranks third in the conference.

According to Sun Devil Coach Len Miller, Frazier is one of the most enthusiastic members of this year's squad.

had an excellent recruiting year but you can't really judge them until two or three years down the road."

It appears that both ASU and UCLA had fine recruiting years. The Bruins have signed Corey Gaines and David Immel so far to a letter of intent. Reggie Miller, who was one of the finest players in California this year as a senior, has narrowed his choice between UCLA or ASU.

Gaines, a 6-foot-3 guard out of St. Bernard's High in Playa del Rey, was a Street and Smith's high school All-American before the season started and was then named to the McDonald's All-American team.

Immel is also a 6-3 guard out of Glencoe High in Hillsboro, Ore. Both players are "Kenny is a joy to have around," said Miller. "He has a great attitude, and is really appreciative of the opportunities he has here. He is a very hard worker."

Frazier attributes his enthusiasm to his competitive nature.

"I've always been real competitive," said Frazier. "I love to compete, and that makes it easy for me to train and be into my events."

Miller won a recruiting war with over 200 schools bidding for Frazier's services. Frazier said the weather, training program and the fact that he knew several members of the ASU team were the factors that made him a Sun Devil.

Frazier does not think he has peaked yet this year.

"I think that I can go 27 feet in the long jump and 54 feet in the triple jump by the end of the year," said Frazier. "I also think I can break the school record in the long jump this weekend (at the Mt. SAC relays)."

Frazier gives credit to Haywood for helping with training methods and said the competition with him has helped both of them improve this year.

quick ball handlers and will fill in for the graduating Rod Foster and Michael Holton, who have lettered the past four years.

The only other team to have a high school All-American is California. Jim Batie, a 6-7 player out of Glencoe High of Hillsboro, Ore., was their big grab. California also recruited some excellent kids who will make them a more physical ball club.

The USC Trojans picked up a couple of fine recruits who may keep them from being knocked out of a tournament bid next year.

The only team that did not pick up more players than they were losing due to graduation was the U of A.

The rest of the Pac-10 did well at making the Pac a more respected basketball conference, and it's hoped the west will fare better in next year's tournaments.

Later, Jefferson hit SC's second baseman Bob Batesole with a high fastball. The entire Trojan bench started walking toward Jefferson. ASU's bench started out in support. The umpires were able to prevent any confrontation.

Trojan mentor Rod Dedeaux was thrown out of the game in the seventh inning after complaining over a call. Dedeaux has complained openly over the years about the quality of Arizona officiating.

At the top of the ninth inning the ASU broom patrol went over to the Trojan dugout. While they were cleaning up the top of the dugout, one player (you guessed it, Gunnarson) tried to jump on top of the dugout to confront the enemy. He was restrained by another player.

At the end of the game only one player, Jack Del Rio, offered to shake hands with the Devils. Del Rio is a candidate for All-American next year for the Trojan football team.

Since the two Arizona schools left the WAC only one has thrived. Arizona has flopped around in mediocrity while ASU has one of the most respected athletic programs in the nation.

It is a rare feat when Arizona is able to beat the Devils in football. This past year was a fluke.

The Wildcats will have an impressive record next year (due to a cake schedule), but will have trouble getting recognition. The Wildcats will be leveled with a hefty probation within the next few weeks.

The time has come for ASU to leave its childhood antagonist behind.
