Washington's decisions affected by ASU lobbyist

By Lisa Phillips
Staff writer

Arizona is a long way from Washington, D.C., and nobody knows that better than Shirley Wilson.

Wilson is ASU's professional federal lobbyist, and her job is to represent ASU in Washington and inform Arizona's congressional delegation how pending legislation may affect the University.

The distance between Arizona and Washington often makes it difficult for her to communicate with members of Congress about ASU's needs, she said.

"It's somewhat frustrating to be so far removed from the action," Wilson said. "It's hard to stay up on what's happening in Washington when you spend most of your time in Arizona."

Wilson said she has made two trips to Washington since the beginning of the year and relies heavily on the telephone to stay in contact with Arizona's legislators when she is not there.

"I spend as much money on phone calls as anyone in the University," she said. "I'm trying to teach the Arizona delegation what is best for ASU, and to be influential, I have to keep in touch."

Wilson said several pieces of pending legislation could have an effect on ASU.

One bill would allow ASU to prematurely repay federal loans and receive a discount for doing so. Another piece of legislation would prevent ASU from disposing of hazardous waste in sealed containers and would require costly incineration instead.

She said pending appropriations for federally funded loan programs are a major concern of the University and Arizona legislators.

Wilson said her job as ASU's lobbyist is not the glamorous career many people might expect. She added that many people also view lobbying as an unethical practice.

"I look on what I do in a very different way than the public does," she said. "This is a working position, and I try above anything else to be informed, honest and fair."

The key to good lobbying, according to Wilson, is to possess "political sensitivity" and know what it is like to be in "someone else's shoes."

"Politics is a very partisan world," Wilson said. "I'm out there dealing with both democrats and republicans, so I can't play partisan politics."

She added that, when dealing with senators from Arizona, she must be careful not to make recommendations that would benefit ASU at the expense of the other state universities.

"My reputation would be ruined if I ever asked a senator to alienate someone at one of the other universities," she said. "Senators are supposed to be representing the entire state."

Wilson was a legislative assistant in Washington prior to being appointed by President Carter to an administrative position in Arizona.

When that job ended two years ago, she was hired by ASU.

She considers her legislative experience to be a key factor in any lobbying success she might experience.

"I've been on the other side, too," Wilson said. "I know what a good lobbyist is. I also know that a poor lobbyist is worse than no lobbyist at all."

As a lobbyist for a university, she also works closely with educational organizations such as the National Association of State Universities and Land-Grant Colleges and the American Council on Education.

The lobbyists for these organizations are permanent residents of Washington, Wilson said. She added that they are at a certain disadvantage when it comes to advising legislators on more local issues.

"Congressmen are more likely to trust an ASU lobbyist than a Washington lobbyist because I know the opinions of the people back home," she said.

Wilson said the best way for her to stay aware of public opinion is to talk to as many people as possible and to read as much as possible.

In addition to lobbying and staying aware of public opinion, Wilson works with congressional delegates on casework involving ASU students.

"If congressmen hear about a problem involving an ASU student, they contact me and I answer their questions and try to straighten out the problem," she said.

Wilson also describes herself as being a "bridge builder" between ASU and groups that influence the University.

She said she will be very involved with community organizations and government officials on the west side of Maricopa County as plans for the west-side campus progress.

She said it is a challenge to work with so many groups without making any of them angry.

"There's a challenge there that is hard to match in any walk of life," Wilson said. "You have to have a thick skin or at least be able to pretend you do."

Former athletes stress need for education

This is the first of a three-part series examining academics and the college athlete at ASU. Today, the State Press looks at some past ASU athletes who concluded that, despite a desire to make it in the professional ranks, succeeding academically was another goal worth pursuing.

By Wayne Baker
Staff writer

Dave Orzell had a dream — to play pro football. While in his junior year at ASU, during a football game, he received a knee injury that shattered the dream.

Left with no prospect of a pro career, Orzell turned his full attention to the one thing college had left to offer him — his education.

Orzell, like so many other high school athletes, entered the University with the hopes of eventually cashing in four years of college ball for a healthy pro contract.

But of the hundreds of student athletes that attend a major university, only a handful go on to become professional athletes and reap the subsequent rewards assured by today's lucrative contracts.

Orzell came to ASU as a freshman in 1972 from Scranton, Pa., to play defensive tackle for Frank Kush's Sun Devils.

After moving to the offensive line in his sophomore year, pro clubs became interested in him. He ended up lettering in his sophomore and junior seasons. The knee injury changed all that.

Athletic report card

First of a series

Surgery enabled Orzell to finish his junior year, but during the pre-season training session in his senior year, he and the team physician concluded that if the knee was re-injured, he might not use it again.

With his athletic scholarship still intact, Orzell turned to his studies to try to make something else out of his life.

It's a decision Orzell has never regretted, having had surgery four times on his knee since that time.

"I realized if I got hurt again I would have to do something else besides football, anyway," he said. "So, I got my thoughts together and went to see an adviser."

Orzell, a resident of Kearny, Ariz., went on to get his bachelor's degree in elementary education and landed a job at Ray District High School as head football coach.

"I have no regrets about playing college ball," he said. "It would have been great to play pro football but I'm completely happy doing what I'm doing now."

Jeff Oscarson, like Orzell, came to ASU in hopes of luring a pro contract, but in baseball.

Oscarson, who transferred from Mesa Community College in 1972, said he made the decision to give his education full attention while playing varsity ball.

"There was a point when I realized that not everyone who played college ball went on to the pros," he said. "I figured if I didn't get my education while it was free, I'd be sorry."

Oscarson received a bachelor's degree in secondary education and went on to coach at Scottsdale's Chaparral High School. He currently teaches physical education at Cocopah Elementary School in Scottsdale.

He said he always concentrated on his academics because he realized the chance of making it as a pro was slim.

"I know a lot of guys who wake up one morning and they realize they're 30 years old, in the minor leagues and have nothing else to do," Oscarson said. "That can be awfully depressing."

Chris Mott came to ASU in 1974 with a primary goal: to play on the offensive line for the Sun Devils and go on to the National Football League.

But he also had a secondary goal — which he called "more realistic" — of becoming an English teacher.

"I realized that a pro career might only last a few years. I had to have something to fall back on," Mott said.

Mott, currently an assistant professor in the ASU English department, said he still considers going for the pros.

"I've tried out a couple of times and I still have contacts. I'm going to give it my best shot."

Reagan: Watt should decide for himself on resigning

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan says he'll let James Watt decide for himself whether he should quit as interior secretary.

Reagan, asked in an interview with the New York Post if he thought Watt could still function as a member of the president's Cabinet, said:

"I think that's a decision that he himself will have to make — whether he feels he has made it questionable as to whether he can be effective or not."

Discussing Watt's characterization of several appointees as "a black, . . . a woman, two Jews and a cripple," Reagan commented:

"I think in all fairness we have to recognize that, yes, it was a very improper thing to say. But it certainly was not said in the sense of any bitterness or bigotry or prejudice."

Team to conclude inspection of Palo Verde

WINTERSBURG (AP) — A federal Nuclear Regulatory Commission inspection team is to conclude an inspection this week at Palo Verde Nuclear Generating Station.

The 15-member team was at the plant from Sept. 7 through Sept. 16 for the first phase of its inspection, then returned Monday for the second phase.

NRC team officials are to discuss results of their findings Friday with management of Arizona Public Service Co., the utility which will be managing the power plant, APS said.

Lebanese, Moslems exchange fire

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — The Lebanese army exchanged fire with Moslem snipers Tuesday in Beirut and an Italian member of the international force was wounded despite a civil war cease-fire. The army said rival militias were exploiting the truce to rearm.

Government soldiers shot back at the snipers in the Shiite

Moslem Chiyah district of southern Beirut, wounding "several" gunmen, an army communique said.

A spokesman for the Italian contingent of the multinational force said the wounded man was reported in good condition after being struck in a thigh by a bullet. Several Italian positions in the capital are near Lebanese army posts that came under sniper fire.

The United States and Saudi Arabia arranged the Monday cease-fire that curbed the latest round of Lebanon's civil war, in which the army and Christian militias have battled Druse militias and Shiite Moslems in Beirut's southern slums and nearby mountains.

Crowded prison system focus of special session

PHOENIX (AP) — Gov. Bruce Babbitt on Tuesday issued a formal proclamation calling the Legislature into special session at 10 a.m. Monday for action on financing expansion of the state's crowded prison system.

Also included in the proclamation for the session was "payment, recovery and refund of fines" imposed for violation of the state's motor vehicle registration law.

Meanwhile, in another prison-related development, Department of Corrections spokesman John Turner said state lawmakers had proposed moving some 95 women prisoners to the East Van Buren detention center in Phoenix to make room for men at the Perryville medium-security prison.

"When it's going to happen would be as soon as we can get it done," Turner said. "If we get a green light, it would probably be a matter of weeks."

Prof to work with space shuttle

Analysis of Jupiter photos planned

By Jim McCleary
Staff writer

The members of the space shuttle program seem to pride themselves on sending firsts into orbit.

An ASU professor and 12 other scientists are preparing to launch the first unmanned spacecraft from a space shuttle to explore and analyze the planet Jupiter and its moons.

Ronald Greeley, a professor of geology who is one of four Arizonans in the project, has been working on the Galileo mission. The mission, sponsored by the National Aeronautics and Space Administration, involves launching a spacecraft from a shuttle in 1986 to photograph the planet and analyze its atmosphere.

Greeley's contribution to the mission will be to analyze the photographs which will be sent from Galileo to NASA by a "digital image process."

This process involves sending photographs from the spacecraft by number codes which are converted into photographs at NASA, he said.

The surfaces of Jupiter and its moons were photographed by the Voyager spacecrafts in the late 1970s, but Greeley said they were "fly-by missions which took only two or three hours."

The Galileo will study the planet and its atmosphere for at least 20 months, and will be able to take 70,000 photographs, he said.

He added that if the project has support from Congress after 20 months in orbit, it would be possible to equip the spacecraft with additional film.

Housed within the shuttle, the spacecraft will be shot from its compartment by rockets, carrying the 55,000-pound spacecraft on its three-year journey to Jupiter, Greeley said.

The spacecraft will collect information on asteroids while en route to Jupiter, he added.

Gravity will keep the spacecraft in orbit while the direction and position will be guided by what Greeley called "attitude control gas" which is the main expendable substance on board.

Greeley said the photographs, taken by a computer-controlled camera, should help analyze the planet's many volcanoes, especially the active volcano of Io, which is thousands of miles wide.

The atmosphere will be tested by a Probe instrument, shot from the spacecraft to collect samples of the air and then transmit the data back to NASA, he said.

Since solid surface does not exist on Jupiter, it will be impossible to land the spacecraft. According to Greeley, there will be no samples collected from the surface of Jupiter's moons on this voyage.

The use of a shuttle to carry a spacecraft into orbit has yet to be attempted, but Greeley said by the time Galileo launches, there will have been smaller crafts launched in this manner.

Greeley spent several years working for NASA before coming to ASU. He was active in training the Apollo astronauts and also helped design the lunar lander that took photographs and scooped up samples of the moon's surface.

He said he realized in 1977 "that what was lacking (at his NASA job) was the ability to work with students."

The spacecraft is being designed by the Jet Propulsion Laboratory. The shuttle will lift off from Cape Canaveral, Florida.

President's critics too often uninformed

It is unfortunate that the President, besides having to consider and balance numerous interests and consequences in making important policy decisions, must also consider the opinions of largely unaware or misinformed sectors of the public. It has been said that ignorance is a self-inflicted handicap. But when thinking in terms of the national interest, public ignorance is an inflicting handicap. It inflicts a handicap upon policy makers, as well as the nation as a whole; it inhibits the government's ability to act effectively and confidently in its effort to maintain national security.

This ignorance does not result from an inherently low level of intellectual capability. Instead, it is the result of inattention and a general apathy. This phenomenon alone is not necessarily detrimental to the national interest. What is detrimental is the tendency of certain people to draw conclusions and to take positions on issues without being aware of their real consequences.

Take, for example, the case of El Salvador. Many people fail to grasp all the various components of the Administration's policy for that country. The first component is economic assistance to help El Salvador cope with the combined effects of guerilla sabotage, political instability and global recession. Today, economic aid to El Salvador exceeds military aid by 100 percent.

A second component is political, economic and human rights reform. Political violence, for instance, has been reduced to 25 percent of what it once was. Twenty percent of all arable land has been redistributed. Democratic institutions have been formed.

A third component is the Caribbean Basin Initiative, which provides private investment and trade incentives. A fourth is to express to the Soviets and to Cuba that we will not permit them to incite violence in the region. A fifth is to search for a peaceful solution, to promote negotiation with both the left and the right. And a final component is to provide military assistance — which is only realistic because no amount of reform or economic assistance will be effective as long as the guerillas use terrorist tactics to undermine these efforts. Administration strategy is to prevent Communist victory in the short run, and to find a political solution in the long run.

Yet, the only aspect of Administration strategy that most people seem to be aware of is the military aspect. And many of them oppose anything that has a military connotation. They thus actively oppose the whole policy on the basis of a knowledge of only one of its aspects.

Since Vietnam, nearly every time a president has attempted to demonstrate American resolve in an international situation, the public has demonstrated a lack of resolve. Every time the public refuses to support an administration in its defense efforts, it places pressure on American leaders to overreact in order to demonstrate to the Soviets that they will not be able to profit from any lack of conviction on the part of the American people. And each time a President is forced to overreact, the public will stand behind him is eroded further.

If policy makers feel that public opinion will not support certain initiatives, this in itself limits the range of policy options considered. Adverse public opinion dictates the creation of ineffectual half-policies.

America, as the model of democracy, should have as its greatest asset a confident, informed and supportive public. Instead, the public is not only apathetic and uninformed, but compulsively critical. These characteristics make it necessary for American leaders to maneuver around and manipulate public opinion in order to succeed in implementing their policies.

American public opinion also serves as the most effective weapon the Soviets have at their disposal against the American government. During the Vietnam War, for instance, it was clear that the Soviets would never pressure the North Vietnamese to negotiate any type of settlement as long as they knew that public opinion would eventually force American leaders into achieving one at any cost.

A democratic foreign policy cannot compete with a totalitarian foreign policy; an uninformed American public is America's own worst enemy.

If we are to have an effective and self-securing foreign policy, the American people must make themselves aware of the facts and realities of international circumstances, and allow our leaders to focus on the external rather than the internal threats to national security.

John Orth is a senior at ASU majoring in Finance.

ACLU plays critical part in a pluralistic society

Editor:

I was astounded that the biased reasoning of Mr. Beychok was given lengthy editorial space for a second time in the State Press. However, as Justice Louis Powell, Jr. stated: "Under the First Amendment there is no such thing as a false idea. However pernicious an opinion may seem, we depend for its correction of other ideas."

It does not appear that Beychok's latest attack on the American Civil Liberties Union (ACLU) advocates a government of the people of the United States by some poorly defined, personal moral standard, rather than by Constitutionally based law. In arguing "morality" versus "utilitarianism," he makes judgment on issues which have agonized the conscience of many good and thoughtful people — people who for diverse reasons have reached conclusions which are at opposite poles.

Perhaps the process of individual resolution in matters which are essentially moral issues is needlessly inefficient. If, as he seems to suggest, Beychok would have us rescind the Bill of Rights to enact a law of the land which is more in line with his personal code, so that the morally inferior, the "cruel," the "evil," the "utilitarian," the "wanton destroyers of the material and spiritual fabric of society" may hear, obey, and enact.

In the interim, I will continue to cherish our society as it is now — pluralistic, diverse, democratic. I will continue to cherish the process by which "we the people" examine issues, confront them in the turbulence of our own souls, and, often through a stumbling circular effort, arrive at some conclusion which we can hold true.

In the interim, I will continue to maintain my membership in the ACLU, an organization which has as its central goal the protection of the Bill of Rights in its application to individuals and groups. I personally joined the ACLU several years ago at the time of the Skokie incident. My decision was not one which every person for whom I had respect agreed with.

However, I recognized the principle by which ACLU attorneys defended in court the constitutional rights of the Nazis — that principle being that every individual's rights must be protected without regard to popular sentiment or personal feelings. If we were to hold that the Constitution applies only to members of certain religious organizations or particular political parties, we would become like the fascists — only worse, we would be hypocrites.

My feelings on that matter are more aptly expressed by Justice Hugo Black: "I do not believe that it can be too often repeated that the freedoms of speech, press, petition and assembly guaranteed by the First Amendment must be accorded to the ideas we hate or sooner or later they will be denied to the ideas we cherish." Issues have come and gone since that incident; however, I believe that the principle entailed remains constant.

ACLU confuses 'rights'

Editor:

I have one question for Dr. Thomas Hout in regard to his letter on the purpose of the American Civil Liberties Union (ACLU). He said, "The basic fact about the ACLU is that it was created to do just one thing: protect the constitutional rights of all Americans, especially their First Amendment rights." Well, then, if this is true, would these defenders of human rights give whole-hearted support to a group who was banned from a university for holding religious meetings? Or would these champions of freedom rely on their misinterpretation of the "separation of church and state."

If that would be their response (as I think it would be), then maybe the human rights they are "defending" are not the rights of all, but only of those who aid and encourage the philosophy of the ACLU.

Rules to remember

Editor:

Are we going to wait until someone is seriously injured before the rules on campus bicycle riding are enforced?

Let's get off to a good start this fall and obey the few rules we now have:

1. Don't speed on campus.
 2. Use the bicycle paths — that's what they're there for.
 3. Don't try to see how close you can come to pedestrians.
 4. Dismount and walk in marked areas during school hours.
- Bicycle riding on a crowded college campus, such as ours, is a privilege. Don't abuse it.

Financial Aid Office mismanaged; should learn to honor commitments

Editor:

I'd like to thank the Financial Aid Office for doing such a "wonderful" job. It's really amazing how they can mismanage and do it so well. I'm referring to a problem that I — and other people that I know — have been having with work study.

The Financial Aid Office allowed me a certain amount of money for work study, but recently cut it by almost two-thirds because they didn't have enough money to pay for it and my award was "too large." If my award was "too large" then they shouldn't have given it to me in the first place and allow me to believe that I was getting it. This way I could have found other means to help pay for college.

I realize that there is probably a lot more going on in the Financial Aid Office than I am aware of. I also realize that they can't give out for work study money that they don't have. But the Financial Aid Office should realize that students are people, and that we need money to live on and afford college. They shouldn't offer awards if they can't fulfill them.

Now that classes have started and most other forms of financial aid are exhausted, where can I and others in my situation find the money that the Financial Aid Office took away from us to make up the difference?

When I went to find out why I lost the money, I was told, "You aren't alone." Was I supposed to be comforted by the thought that other students were dealt the same blow? What happened to the "improved" Financial Aid Office we were supposed to get?

ACLU, moralists on two extremes

Editor:

I write in response to the publication in last Wednesday's State Press of a guest editorial by David Beychok, which, through careful reasoning and thoughtful, well informed writing, effectively presents a very convincing argument to undermine the philosophical foundations of that group known as the American Civil Liberties Union (ACLU).

The battle between the Moralists and the ACLU can be looked upon as the meeting of two powerful, determined yet basically equal despots. Neither is acceptable alone, yet each depends upon the strengths and weaknesses of the other for its very existence. Alone and unchallenged the fringe philosophies of either group would prove too rigid and unpalatable for a society that resides somewhere between the poles.

Will they grapple and tear until one prevails?
Hopefully not.

History shows us that the greatest solutions to profound conflicts do not lie in the victory of the extreme. Yet we can also see that the avenues of compromise and coalition can be ineffective — often obscuring the truly progressive tenets of either philosophy.

The true solution lies not so much in accommodation as in the emergence of an enlightened third into the scenario. Ideally, this third party confronts the conflict in a fresh, effective manner inconceivable to the primary combatants.

It is commendable that the State Press has chosen in Mr. Beychok an eloquent and dispassionate spokesman to present one side of a serious issue so often shot through with useless emotionalism and dogma.

But the battle must rage on with both sides retaining vitality and determination.

This is why the State Press, in its commitment to responsible journalism, must present the fullest spectrum of prevailing opinion on any chosen issue — in the hope that it may some day cease to be an issue at all.

ASA needs solid reasoning to meet goals, member says

By Bob Beamesderfer
Staff writer

Student representatives will need to be less emotional and approach the Arizona Board of Regents and the legislature with sound arguments, according to a member of the Arizona Students Association board of directors.

Kim Fuller, a member of the Legislative Committee of ASA, said ASA's chances of achieving its goals depend on "the soundness of the argument. We can't go in with an emotional plea."

She said the group needs to change the way they have tried to get a vote for the student member of the Board of Regents.

"To get that bill passed, we're going to have to approach it differently than in the past," Fuller said. "We need to expand our resources. If students are going to get this through they're going to have to have a better understanding of the legislative process."

Although a student regent-vote bill was approved by the Senate Education Committee, Rep. Jim Cooper, R-Mesa, chairman of the House Education Committee, refused to schedule hearings on a similar bill. Cooper has been opposed to granting a vote to the student regent.

Fuller said, "We have to look at alternative ways of getting the bill passed in the House."

But the current ASA board is better acquainted with approaching legislators and bureaucrats, she said.

"I think they're more experienced," she said. "They look at the step-by-step way of getting things done rather than just jumping in."

Brian Casey, chairman of the ASA Board, said ASA is not a lobby group with money to donate to political action committees or campaign funds, but a non-profit organization expressing students' views.

"We rely on persuasion and research and reason to get our point across," Casey said. "A lot of lobby groups donate to PACs and we don't have that kind of money. We do considerable research and opinion polling of students' views."

"When you look at the NRA (National Rifle Association) or a large group like that, what distinguishes us from them is money," he said.

Casey said each member university contributes $15,000 to the ASA budget. Most of the money is used to pay the salaries of Executive Director Michael McAuly and a secretary and for other operating costs, he said.

Members of the ASA board are not paid for their positions, he added.

police report

An ASU student who was arrested in connection with a recent theft, then released on his own recognizance Saturday, was again arrested by ASU Police Monday and charged with possession of stolen goods involving a separate incident, ASU Police said.

Assistant Police Chief Norman Peck said Timothy Eugene Tachman, 21, of 1750 E. Palmcroft St., originally was arrested at 7:41 p.m. Saturday in the Physical Science Building after being spotted with six keys that were stolen from the building last week.

Tachman, who is an undergraduate student, was seen entering a locked laboratory area in the building by Mark Bevnas, an ASU student, who apprehended him until police arrived, Peck said.

Peck said Tachman had in his possession the keys that were reported stolen earlier and a Sony cassette player, which was later discovered stolen from the same building.

Peck said ASU Police obtained a search warrant for Tachman's residence, recovering a stolen computer and other electrical equipment that has not yet been identified.

Tachman is on parole for a previous theft conviction. He is being held in Maricopa County Jail in lieu of $13,500 bond, Peck added.

In other activity, police report:

- A Commodore computer valued at $400 was stolen sometime between Sept. 2 and Sept. 6, from Payne Hall Room 222. Alan Bruce Cameron, an ASU faculty member, told police the computer had been taken during business hours while the door of the laboratory was left open. Cameron had checked with all of the employees and graduate students before reporting the computer loss to the police.

- A bicycle valued at $324 was reported stolen from the Manzanita bike racks Monday night.

- An ASU student reported $200 worth of damage occurred to the rear-quarter panel of his vehicle while it was parked in Lot 59 Monday.

- A red Nishiki bicycle valued at $175 was reported missing from the south side of Manzanita Hall Monday. The bicycle had been locked to a sign post.

- A blue Motobecane 10-speed bicycle valued at $210 was reported stolen from the south side of Ocotillo Hall A-wing. The student had parked the unlocked bicycle and upon returning, found the bicycle missing.

- A black Nitaka Oceanside bicycle valued at $145 was reported stolen from the Manzanita bike racks Monday. The bicycle had been locked.

- An ASU student reported an estimated $150 damage to the convertible top of her vehicle occurred while parked in Lot 51 Monday.

- Two hubcaps valued at $200 were reported stolen from a vehicle while it was parked in Lot 59 on Saturday.

- A gold Huffy bicycle valued at $150 was reported stolen from the bookstore bike rack Monday.

- A blue Schwinn bicycle valued at $75 was reported missing from the bike racks on the west side of Manzanita Hall Monday.

Bike thefts down in September, police chief says

By Sandy Sisteck
Staff writer

Fourteen bicycles have been reported stolen to the ASU Police this month, and compared to bicycle thefts occurring during the month of September in recent years, that number is low, according to ASU Police Chief C. Russell Duncan.

Duncan said in September of 1982, 37 bicycle thefts were reported, with 34 bicycle thefts reported in September 1983.

"The number of thefts last month is down considerably compared to previous years," he said. "The number of bicycle thefts goes up and down each month."

"This is the end of the good bicycle riding weather," Duncan said. "The nicer the weather, the more often thefts occur on the campus."

He said as a deterrent to thefts, police have doubled their foot patrol at night.

"We have more foot patrol officers at night than we've ever had," Duncan said. "The officers may not have been able to spend as much time checking bike racks because they may be spending more time checking the inside of the buildings."

The police officers have been checking the inside of the buildings more as a result of the assault that occurred on campus a few weeks ago, he added.

Duncan said many bicycles are not locked to a rack or post, but left only with the lock secured around a tire and the frame.

"Anyone can butcher a bicycle now and sell the parts quickly," he said.

Duncan said police are planning to implement regular stakeouts in an effort to catch thieves.

He did not rule out the possibility of a bike-stealing operation existing on or near campus.

Last week, a total of five bicycles were impounded from various areas on the ASU campus.

Assistant Police Chief Norman Peck said bicycles may be impounded for three different reasons.

"One reason is because some of the bicycles are obviously abandoned and have been stripped of various parts," Peck said. "Another reason is because the bicycles are blocking an entrance to a building or blocking disabled areas."

He said the department has received several complaints of bicycles blocking wheelchair ramps to buildings.

"Some of the serial numbers and descriptions match a stolen bicycle," he added, which may also result in a bicycle's being impounded.

ASU sorority president dies from auto accident injuries

A 22-year-old ASU student died Monday of injuries she received Sept. 18 when her compact car collided with a truck at 44th and Van Buren Streets, according to Phoenix police.

Marla Sue Moore, president of ASU's Kappa Alpha Theta sorority, died at 3:45 p.m. at Maricopa Medical Center, where she was taken the day of the accident, a hospital spokesman said.

Moore, of Englewood, Colo., was driving east on Van Buren Street about 3 p.m. Sept. 18 when her auto collided with a truck that was southbound on 44th Street driven by Michael A. Dean of Phoenix.

Moore was a senior majoring in real estate and had been a sorority member for four years, becoming president in January of this year, according to a sorority member.

A passenger in Moore's car was treated for minor injuries at Maricopa Medical Center and released.

The accident is still under investigation.

I could tell you a lot of things you might expect if you visited us—
"dynamic worship services"
"life-changing teaching and preaching"
"the friendliest people in the world"—etc. etc.

But I can't—because it's just not true.

The truth is—
Some of our services are better than others—some of our people are friendlier than others—things just are not perfect here.

You see—the one thing you'll always find here is sinners—Every last one of us—imperfect—struggling along—failing to be what we know we ought to be.
But we love each other—a lot—and we love God for putting us all together so we can help one another.

GRADUATING ENGINEERS

REACH FOR TOMORROW WITH MARTIN MARIETTA AEROSPACE

There are three important things every graduating engineer should know about Martin Marietta Aerospace:

1. Our unique organizational structure gives you unusual flexibility in determining your career path and accomplishing your personal goals. Unlike most other aerospace firms, Martin Marietta uses a matrix organizational system that gives you a "technical home" rather than placing you in a single program or product line.
2. Martin Marietta will provide you with a stimulating environment through challenging assignments. We have hundreds of challenging projects that require imagination and creativity. And we have some of the world's most sophisticated equipment and facilities to assist you in your efforts.
3. And finally, we want to talk to YOU. We will be holding pre-campus interviews very soon. Arrange to talk with us and we'll give you more information about Martin Marietta Aerospace and its opportunities. And remember, if you enjoy reaching for the challenges of tomorrow, look into a career with Martin Marietta today. Martin Marietta Aerospace has many new opportunities awaiting college graduates. Major facilities are located in Denver, Colorado; New Orleans, Louisiana; and at Vandenberg AFB, California.

"I have a lifetime to further my education, but only a limited amount of time, physically, to play pro football," he said.

During his football career at ASU, Mott lettered all four years and received All-Pac-10 Conference Honorable Mention in 1978.

However, the desire to succeed in football did not impede Mott's studies.

Mott, 26, graduated in the summer of 1979 with a bachelor's degree in English education. He was a teacher's assistant in English until he received his master's in literature.

Orzell said during his freshman and sophomore years he neglected his studies.

time to his education.

Orzell, however, said not all of his fellow players had the same opinion.

"When you're in school you don't notice that some of your teammates are wasting their lives by not going to class.

"I met my future wife then and she helped steer me in the right direction," Orzell said. "I wasn't really involved in the partying like everyone else."

Mott said his attitude toward studying and playing football was not unique.

"The guys I played with who wanted their degrees got them, and did it within four and five years," he said.

However, he said coaches should make an effort to motivate student athletes who have no desire for an education.

Oscarson said the baseball coaching staff encouraged him to keep his grades up.

He said one of his core classes during his senior year interfered with one hour of practice each day. However, this presented no problem for baseball coach Jim Brock.

"He (Brock) was very helpful. I never had to miss my class for practice. They didn't hold me back from my education," he said.

Orzell said one reason his grades improved was the mandatory study halls conducted by the football coaching staff.

He said study halls lasted for two hours and were required for players with deficient grades.

"Getting good grades was an incentive to get out of it (study halls). After that I only got one C in my classes," Orzell said.

Both Orzell and Oscarson agreed that a student athlete should not rely on his athletic ability for a future.

"My advice to young players today would be to mature as fast as you can, realize what you want out of life and set your goals. But always have a back up plan," Orzell said.

Oscarson, who was drafted by the Chicago Cubs out of high school, said his decision to stay away from pro baseball came in his senior year.

"Four or five clubs were talking to me, but I already had a guaranteed job with the Scottsdale School District," he said.

Oscarson, in his senior year, hit .257, down from .344 the year before.

However, he improved in the home run and runs-batted-in department, hitting four HR's and 43 RBI's in the 1974 season, compared to one HR and 26 RBI's in the 1973 season.

Mott said when he decided to play college football, he realized that it was going to take time.

"It was time consuming, but I was never left without enough time to study if I wanted to," he said.

Mott, who played in 1978, the year Kush was fired amid controversy as coach at ASU, said roughly half of his fellow players took their schooling seriously.

"I sympathize with Kush. He was in a difficult position having to keep players eligible to play that didn't care if they graduated," he said.

Mott said Kush approached the players' education with the understanding that if they wanted a degree there was no reason why they could not also play football.

Tomorrow, the State Press will examine the present condition of academics pertaining to athletes at ASU.

Chris Mott

"I think a lot of students put school in second place when they first come to college. It's a big adjustment," he said.

He said he realized during his junior year, after his injury, that he had to devote more

But those who did not want their degrees, did not even try, Mott said.

"It's not a fault of the athletic department if the student doesn't care about his education," he said. "It's up to the individual."

ASU produces few scholars

Prof cites qualifications of Rhodes nominees

By Steve Waterstrat
Staff writer

ASU's "horrendous" record of producing only two Rhodes scholars reflects the caliber of the school and the students attending, said English professor Dennis Moran, Arizona's delegate to the national committee that judges applicants for the Rhodes Scholarship.

While most ASU students lack the initiative to pursue the award — a scholarship to England's Oxford University — those who do apply often lack basic requirements, such as a high grade point average, said Moran, himself a former Rhodes scholar.

"I find a terrible falling off in both the number and the quality of students applying for the Rhodes," he said.

Moran counsels ASU students applying for the scholarship, and said he advises some students not to waste their time if he feels they do not have a reasonable chance. He said a student should have at least a 3.65 grade point average before considering the scholarship.

Having served on the national selection committee for the Rhodes for eight years, Moran said he believes the quality of candidates has declined on the national level as well.

Only 32 of the scholarships are awarded each year, and the prestige of Oxford University makes the Rhodes very competitive, Moran said.

But that does not excuse ASU's low number of students awarded, he added.

The University of Arizona has had 25 Rhodes scholars, which Moran attributes to the fact that it is older than ASU with a more established liberal arts program.

Moran said ASU's record might be improved if instructors urged students to pursue awards like the Rhodes. He said there may be students on campus who could capture the scholarship if they made the effort.

"I certainly hope to have more Rhodes scholars in the future, as large a university as we are," Moran said. "The best don't always make it, but we should have done better than we have so far."

Deadline for applying for the Rhodes is October 31. Applicants must be between the ages of 18 and 24, unmarried, a U.S. citizen and academically advanced enough to assure completion of a bachelor's degree before October 1984.

Candidates are judged according to academic record, athletic ability, campus or community involvement and other above-average qualities or achievements, and an essay that must be submitted to the judges.

Peace Corps

Organization reopening ASU office; needs science, agriculture volunteers

By Deanne Hutchison
Staff writer

ASU has established a Peace Corps recruitment office on campus for the first time since the 1970s.

The earlier office on campus was closed in the 1970s because of budget cuts, but an increased interest in the program has led the Corps to reopen many college offices.

Peace Corps recruiters are also on the mall this week to take applications from ASU students interested in spending two years using their degrees to help people in foreign countries.

Brad Bentz, a graduate student in agriculture, is in charge of the office, located in the Agriculture Building Room 113.

Bentz, who returned from a two-year stay in Jamaica last May, attended school at ASU before leaving for his assignment.

He went to Jamaica to work with people on their farms, working with small farm owners and a youth cooperative for young men.

"When most people think of Jamaica, they think of a tropical island and beautiful beaches, and it is that," he said. "But most tourists don't see the poverty. There are a lot of problems in Jamaica."

Bentz said that although no one would actually starve living in Jamaica, the diet is mostly filled with starchy and sugary foods, so much so that most of the people have unhealthy teeth.

"They are still doing everything by manual labor there," he said. "We did all our work by hand too. We taught them other methods of farming, marketing and improving their yield. We also showed them other varieties of crops. There is so much potential there."

Bentz said the biggest benefits he got from his experience were the chance to see the United States through the eyes of foreigners and the chance to make many good friends.

"Learning about a new culture and living with those people gives you a whole other perspective of the United States," he said. "You always read in the paper about how these foreign countries are

'You always read about how foreigners are

why they feel that way.'

always condemning us and when you live there you can get a good idea of why they feel that way."

Bentz said he is planning to go to Jamaica over spring break and has seriously considered moving there to live permanently after receiving his graduate degree.

Laurie Gallo is part of the federal recruitment drive traveling to universities in Arizona and California to find college students for assignments the Peace Corps.

"There is no specific number for," she said. "But the positions are competitive. Only about one in 10 applicants are chosen."

"ASU could be a great provider that we need in the Peace Corps. Especially in the areas of agriculture."

The involvement of ASU Agriculture Philip Stiles with agriculture projects is part of the agriculture program at ASU may be a supplier for the Peace Corps, Gallo said.

Stiles is currently involved with a project in Saudi Arabia and, according to Gallo, has a past filled with other international assignments.

"The people at our (home) office knew Dr. Stiles would keep the agriculture up here," she said.

Gallo has also been on an assignment with the Peace Corps, spending two years in Mexico as a health educator.

There are about 5,000 volunteers in the Peace Corps in about 60 different countries.

"Each year we have to fill a lot of positions," she said. "And about 80 percent of the volunteers come from college campus recruitment programs."

Nearly 90,000 volunteers have served in the Peace Corps since 1961, when President John F. Kennedy instituted the program.

Gallo was on campus Monday afternoon and will be here today with details about the program. There will be a booth open on the mall between 9 a.m. and 3 p.m.

ENTRY DEADLINE:

Entries will only be accepted at the Managers' Meeting on Thursday, Sept. 29 in the P.E. West Gym at 3:30 p.m.! Possible 2-9 season could spell end for Wiggin

By Tom Blodgett
Sports writer

When Paul Wiggin returned to his alma mater in 1980 as head coach of its football team, it was hoped that the former two-time all-American would give Stanford the defense it needed to support its traditionally-potent offense.

Stanford was coming off a 5-5-1 season with no bowl bid for the first time in two years. A perennially poor defense appeared to be the only thing separating the Cardinal from a Rose Bowl bid.

Wiggin fit the bill. As an assistant coach at two stops in the National Football League and as the head coach of the Kansas City Chiefs, Wiggin's forte was defense.

Cardinal fans began anxiously awaiting a return to the glory of the early 1970s when Stanford (then called the Indians) won back-to-back Rose Bowls and produced a Heisman Trophy winner — Jim Plunkett.

They're still waiting. And the natives are growing restless.

Wiggin came into this season with his job on the line. His Cardinal teams are 5-6 the last two years, even with the great John Elway, last year's Heisman runner-up, at the helm.

And this year, Wiggin finds himself forced to rely on the same defense that has been so unreliable in the past. He has 10 returning starters from last year's defense.

Only problem is, last year's defense finished dead last in the Pac-10. And things have not gotten much better this year.

"I've been disappointed at our inability to stop teams at the end of a game when we needed to get the ball back," Wiggin said.

Wiggin's employment outlook is not optimistic. Stanford has lost its first three games, including games with Oklahoma and Illinois, and now is faced with consecutive games against Arizona State, UCLA, Washington and Arizona.

Further down the road, USC and traditional rival California await. A 2-9 season appears likely.

Still, Wiggin will not back down to anyone. "The tough schedule we play will help us down the road," he said.

Wiggin is looking forward to his trip to Sun Devil Stadium for a game with ASU Saturday night.

"I have a great deal of respect for ASU," Wiggin said. "We've had some wild games in the past."

Indeed. The series is only four games old, but it has produced some memorable moments.

Stanford won the first two contests by a touchdown. ASU won the 1981 game at Stanford 62-36 as the two teams set a Pac-10 and NCAA record for combined yardage.

And few people will forget ASU's 21-17 victory last season, in which ASU won the game with an 80-yard drive in the last 49 seconds after Stanford had apparently won on a late touchdown drive directed by Elway.

"There was a lot of emotion," Wiggin said. "The game had an added dimension with Elway against the ASU defense."

Elway is gone now, and Stanford is trying to make do with his former backup, Steve Cottrell, and freshman John Paye.

"Cottrell has always been in the shadow of Elway," he said. "He is a much better player than his statistics indicate."

minimal," Wiggin said.

"The pass has been our only source of moving the chains down the sideline," he said.

Stanford returned only four starters on offense and many of them have been harder to replace than Elway — after all, there are two talented quarterbacks.

"We miss (running back) Vincent White," Wiggin said. "And we've felt a void without (tight end) Chris Dressel."

Wiggin had been hoping to bring Paye along slowly, but with Cottrell's injury and the offense's problems, they have been they are capable on defense.

"The ASU defense is speed-oriented," Wiggin said. "They do a lot of wild things. But when I say wild things, I mean wild in spirit, not in concept."

"Their defense is right back on track to where they were last year."

Wiggin also noticed that the offensive arsenal at ASU is once again loaded, with Darryl Clack in the backfield. Clack gained 100 yards for the first time in his collegiate career last year against the Cardinal.

"(Clack) probably had his finest game he's had at ASU last week," Wiggin said. "He took a trap up the middle and it was just an amazing run."

"I thought I noticed a small parachute come out of his back to keep him from hitting the wall on the 78-yarder."

Stanford has recruited successfully in Arizona, and the state's returning natives are making a difference in the Cardinal lineup.

I thought I noticed a small parachute come out of his back after the 78-yarder.

Stanford Cardinal head coach Paul Wiggin hopes to rally his troops around him Saturday night when the Cardinal plays ASU. Wiggin's job may be on the line this season.

Paye is receiving high praise. In fact he is being praised as Stanford's next Elway.

"Paye has exceeded what Elway did in his first three games," Wiggin said. "He is still making young-player mistakes, but he is improving all the time."

That is important for Stanford. Since Cottrell was hurt against Illinois, Paye has been the starter. And the passing attack is everything to Stanford.

"Our ability to run has been at all times forced to use him.

"We're bringing him along a little faster than we want to," Wiggin said. "He's an unbelievably mature young man."

Cottrell is still not 100 percent, so Paye may once again start come Saturday night. But Wiggin is apprehensive about putting him up against the ASU blitz.

"I don't know if we want to have him face that kind of pressure yet."

ASU will not have to convince Wiggin that

"Tom Briehl runs a 4.6 (seconds) 40 (yard dash)," Wiggin said. "He has really blossomed into a starter."

"(Starting free safety) Darrell Grissum has become a much more physical player since he arrived here," he said. "He's been on a good weight-training program."

"Stan Gill is a No. 3 running back. He hasn't done all the things we'd like in a total back." Specifically, Gill's receiving leaves something to be desired, said Wiggin.

A fourth player, quarterback Greg Topp, announced he was transferring to San Diego State recently when it became apparent that Paye was Stanford's quarterback of the future.

As if Wiggin did not have enough problems on hand, he must also put up with the wackiest band on this side of the universe.

Last year, the band unintentionally helped block for Cal's Kevin Moen as he went the last 25 yards on the famous five-lateral kick return that beat Stanford on the last play of the season.

Wiggin noted that the band is at it again this year.

Last week against San Jose State, the Stanford was forced to take a 10-yard penalty when the band did not get off the field in time after its halftime show.

If Wiggin feels snakebit, there is little wonder.

Devils to be well represented in Olympic tryouts

By Ken Sain

Assistant sports editor

The Globetrotters are generally known as a basketball team, but ASU's Doug Henry would be willing to swear they were a baseball team.

Henry was a member of the United States international team that played in Japan, Belgium and Venezuela over the summer.

And they were forced to cancel a trip to France.

Henry, better known as "Hank" to teammates, was selected over the weekend to pack his bags for Louisville, Ky. to try out for the USA Olympic team.

The tryout is merely a formality. When the U.S. Baseball Federation was selecting members to the Pan-Am Games, they had their collective eyes on the Los Angeles team in 1984. Henry was a member of the team that claimed a bronze medal at the Pan-Am Games in Caracas, Venezuela.

"They told us they wanted to keep us together," Henry said. "It will depend on what kind of years we have in school this year."

But that does not mean that other talented players won't have a shot at making the team. Barry Bonds, Oddibe McDowell and Don Wakamatsu, all from ASU, will be considered to join the team.

"It would be great to have them make the team," Henry said. "They're all good enough to be on the team. There were four guys from Fullerton on the Pan-Am team that our guys are better than."

Henry's qualifications are impressive. He pitched in three games for the Devils last year in the playoffs. He went 23 consecutive innings without giving up a run.

Against Cal State-Fullerton in the West II Regionals, he gave up only five hits in shutting out the Titans 8-0.

He backed that up with a one-hit shutout of the Maine Black Bears in the College World Series. The Devils won that game 7-0. His next start was to be his real test.

The Alabama Crimson Tide had defeated ASU 6-5 in extra innings in the opening CWS game for both teams. Alabama owned one of the leading team batting averages in the nation.

"I never even realized what was going on at the time," he said. "Coach Brock got mad at the team and said 'Hank could go out there and throw 27 scoreless innings, and we would still lose because you're not scoring any runs."

"Right then I realized what was going on."

Perhaps that was what snapped Henry out of his streak. The next time he took the mound the Tide scored five times in that inning.

Henry's travels do tend to disrupt his home life, however. He has a wife, Monique and a daughter, Danielle.

"I've always wanted to play baseball, but all of a sudden I'm gone for a month at a time. It has put a strain on our marriage, but the time we do spend together, it makes us appreciate each other more.

ASU pitcher Doug Henry would be more than happy to represent the United States at the 1984 Summer Olympics.

"My daughter grew up a whole lot over the summer and I wasn't there to see it."

Traveling is a way of life for professional baseball players, and Henry has many memories to carry with him after his travels this summer.

"We had a lot of fun in Japan. We played a game every other day, so we were able to see a lot. The people were so nice there."

Henry was not able to enjoy his stay in Venezuela as much.

"It wasn't what I expected," Henry said. "They were out there trying to win, and they put too much emphasis on winning. I want to win, but I like to have fun while playing."

"The people there did not like the U.S. athletes at all."

Despite an 8-2 record in the Pan-Am Games, the American team had to settle for a third-place finish. Cuba was able to take the gold and Nicaragua was able to surprise the Americans and earn second place.

"They came in and played 100 miles over their heads," Henry said.

Nicaragua took an early lead and the Americans were unable to catch up. They took the silver medal despite a 5-5 record at the Games.

Henry expects some top-notch baseball to be played in Los Angeles.

"The caliber will be real good at the Olympics," he said. "There will be some good baseball played."

Only six countries will field teams in the Olympics. Japan, China, Italy, Korea, Cuba and the United States are expected to compete for the six spots. Baseball will be played as a demonstration sport at the '84 Olympics.

"Korea has good pitching, but their hitting is kind of weak. We lost the series to Japan, but we were not playing at our best at the time."

"Italy barely beat out Holland. We played Holland in Belgium, and they were pretty weak."

Cuba could be the No. 1 opponent for the United States at the Los Angeles Games. In fact, it was after being forced to play Cuba again in the Pan-Am Games that the U.S. team had to cancel a trip to Paris for another game.

"If we get a few more all-Americans on the team, I think that we could beat Cuba at the Olympics," he said.

Boo-birds showed little class at Shocker game

Jay Taylor
Sports Editor

There was one very disheartening moment in the ASU-Wichita State football game last Saturday night. It came after the game had already been decided, and didn't even happen on the playing field.

It happened in the stands, with about 13 seconds left in the game.

The Devils had moved the ball down to the Shockers' nine-yard line after a Wichita State punt. They were leading 44-14 at the time, and with about 20 seconds left in the game, reserve quarterback Stein Koss sent fullback Darrin Tupper into the line to run out the clock.

The Devils stood in the huddle, intending to let time expire.

It was then that a strange and infuriating thing began to happen.

Boos began to rain down from the stands onto the field, boos because coach Darryl Rogers was not going to try for another touchdown to run up the score.

This was, and is, a disturbing thing.

I had always perceived the crowds at Sun Devil Stadium to be fair and knowledgeable, and I still think that the great percentage of them are.

But fans who will boo a coach for not running up the score are neither fair nor knowledgeable.

Now, I understand that boos are as much a part of a football game as the goal posts. When a person buys his ticket, he buys the right to be vocal in his support of the team.

I also understand the boos Rogers got when he was introduced. The fans were still expressing their anger at the decision to go for a tie against UCLA the week before. And I disagreed with that decision as much as anyone.

But there are certain boundaries of sportsmanship that should extend beyond the sidelines.

The type of fans who will boo a team for not running up the score belong somewhere like the U of A, not at ASU.

If they were at the U of A, they wouldn't have to worry, because Wildcat coach Larry Smith seems intent on running up the score in every game the Wildcats play — in order to move the 'Cats up in the national rankings.

Arizona Wildcats head coach Larry Smith has been accused of running up the score on opponents this season.

Being on probation and ineligible for the Pac-10 title or a bowl appearance, the only satisfaction the 'Cats will get this year is a high national ranking, and they are pulling out all the stops against their powerhouse schedule (Oregon State, Utah, Washington State, Cal State-Fullerton) in order to get that ranking.

Last Saturday, while ASU was beating the Shockers, Arizona was downing Fullerton. The Titans were in the game until the last 37 seconds, when Wildcat fullback Chris Brewer scored from one yard out to make the score 31-10.

Two plays later, Arizona recovered a fumble at the Fullerton 18-yard line.

After reaching the 3-yard line with time running out, the 'Cats went with a no-huddle offense, and Tom Tunnicliffe pitched to Vance Johnson, who went in for the score.

There is something very wrong with this. Why did the U of A need to go with a no-huddle offense? Why did Smith need to score another touchdown with no time remaining and a 21-point lead?

Because the Wildcats are drooling for national recognition, and it seems that Smith is out to get it any way he can.

Smith did the same thing in the U of A's opener, against Oregon State. Smith left his starters in the game until the last minute or so, with a six-touchdown lead.

Carter continues to prove last year was no fluke

Jim Carter

By Dean Obenauer
Sports writer

Both the men's and women's golf teams are teeing up their 1983 campaigns.

Last year the men's squad did not make it to the NCAA championships as a team, but Jim Carter represented the team as an individual.

And represent it he did, as he beat out some of the finest amateur golfers in the world to win the individual title.

He did so by knocking in a 12-foot birdie putt on the last hole of play to send himself into a tie with three others.

Then on the San Joaquin Country Club's 430-yard No. 1 hole, he took a par four as his counterparts could manage no better than a bogey five.

"He had more composure," ASU men's coach George Boutell said regarding Carter's play. "He is a fine competitor."

Carter is the returning national champion for the Sun Devils. Boutell thought it was Carter's composure that helped pull him to the individual title at the NCAA Tournament last May.

His one-under-par tournament was one of the only positive notes of last year's Sun Devil season, but Boutell promises that will change.

"There is no question about it," Boutell said in regard to this year's squad making it to the NCAA's. "I'm not even worried about it."

Boutell has reason to be confident. For starters the team did not lose anyone to graduation, thus he has a very qualified and experienced team returning. The second reason is Jeff Wright.

With everyone returning, Boutell did not do a lot of recruiting, but he did manage to acquire the talents of Wright.

Wright was the 1982 Los Angeles Times Orange County

Water polo club will host Olympic team this Saturday at ASU Aquatic Complex

The ASU Aquatic Complex will be host this Saturday to an Olympic event.

The United States Water Polo Olympic Training Team will play an exhibition against the Water Polo Club at ASU. The game will begin at 3 p.m.

The water polo squad is fairly new to ASU, but the USA team has made tremendous strides nationally as the Americans have taken the gold medal in four of the past five Pan-Am Games.

The major reason for the improvement of the squad is less turnover among the coaching and playing ranks. Monte Nitkowski and Ken Lindgren were selected in 1976 to coach the team.

They will again coach the squad for the 1984 Olympics in Los Angeles. Most of the players on the team have been playing together for over six years, and their average age is 28. With that experience behind them, the Olympic team is expected to be a strong contender in Los Angeles.

The team that will play the local ASU club this Saturday is the same team that took the gold medal in the Pan-Am games earlier in Caracas, Venezuela.

Leading the Olympic team will be Terry Schroeder and Gary Figueroa. Schroeder led the team in scoring at the Pan-Am Games with 23 goals. The USA defeated Cuba in the final 8-6.

Canada finished third to take the bronze medal home. Figueroa scored five goals in the final game of the '79 Pan-Am Games to assure the USA of back-to-back gold medals. He has been a member of the National team for eight years, and his experience is expected to be a key to the performance of the squad in the summer Olympics.

The team is coming to ASU as part of a program intended to expand interest in water polo.

Golfer of the Year. He also reigns as the Southern California junior champion; the Newport Beach city amateur champion; placed second in the American Junior Golf Association Western as well as Southern Regionals; and the list goes on.

Recent try-outs were held for two roster positions.

"We had 44 paired and they played six rounds," Boutell said. "In the end two made the team roster. Their stroke average was about 74."

Oct. 5-7 will be the test of how concrete Boutell's team foundation is when the Devils travel to the Louisiana State University Invitational.

"We're going to get our feet wet right away against some good teams," he said. "We would like to win."

The Lady Devils have already started their season and have turned in some fine scores.

ASU places third in cross country meet; Nelson key as Devils plan for NCAA title

By Jerry Brown
Contributing writer

ASU's women's cross country team, spurred by top runner Lynn Nelson, placed third among nine teams at the Fresno Invitational Meet in California.

Stanford University, which placed five of the top six runners, won the meet easily, finishing 71 points in front of second place University California-Davis. ASU coach Roger Kerr was pleased with both the team and individual performances.

"Stanford has the top team in the country," Kerr said. "They have the last two NCAA champions and a girl who is ranked second in the world running for them. But we showed that we can run with them and be competitive."

Nelson, a junior, finished seventh overall with a finishing time of 17:14, 29 seconds behind Stanford's Alison Wiley, who won the meet in 16:45.

Kerr said Nelson ran with the leaders until the halfway point, when a slight break in concentration cost her valuable time.

"Lynn told me that after the halfway point in the race, she said to herself, 'I don't belong with these runners,'" Kerr said. It was then that she started to drop back a bit. But now she knows she can run with anyone in the nation."

Julie Seleine and Wendy Sihner, both freshmen finished 14th and 18th respectively for the Devils. Kerr was pleased with the places they finished, but not with their times.

Four teams qualify for the NCAA Championships from the Western Region, of which Arizona State is a member. Kerr said Stanford and Oregon appear to be the top finishers, but four other teams will be fighting for the final two spots.

"Washington, California (which ASU beat this weekend), UCLA and ourselves are all capable of qualifying," Kerr said. "This is by far the toughest region in the nation; that is why we have more teams go to the NCAA than any other."

To qualify, ASU will need the help of Mickey Doane, who Kerr said is the team's second-best runner. Doane reported to the team overweight and is running herself back into form.

"Having Mickey back will help the team a lot, Kerr said. "We hope to have her back in competition either this week or next."

This weekend, the Lady Devils travel to California to compete in the San Diego Invitational. USC, UCLA and San Diego State are among those participating.

Brigham Young Invitational by seven strokes after the first of three rounds.

After the second round the team maintained a narrow one-stroke lead over host Brigham Young University with UCLA just three strokes behind.

But in the third round the Devils were unable to hold off a charging Bruin team as they lost the lead to UCLA finishing second by four strokes.

One reason for the skid was due to the fact that sophomore Heather Farr was unable to finish because of a foot injury.

The surprise of the tournament was how well freshman Danielle Ammaccapane played. She was sixth individually for the tournament after the first round, second after the second round, and managed to capture the tournament victory on the final round.

"Being a freshman, she really held it together well," head coach Linda Vollstedt said.

The women will travel to Albuquerque Oct. 5-8 for the Dick McGuire Invitational.

"If we finish in the top three I'll be pleased," Vollstedt said.

AGRICULTURALISTS...

You're Needed All Over the World.

Ask Peace Corps volunteers why their agriculture degrees or farm backgrounds are needed in developing nations. Ask them how their knowledge of crops, livestock production, farm mechanics or beekeeping methods help alleviate hunger, increase personal income and develop technical skills. They'll tell you of the rewards of seeing direct results of their efforts. They'll tell you Peace Corps is the toughest job you'll ever love.

PEACE CORPS

Summer grads... June is only nine months away. But you can be prepared. Peace Corps representatives will be on the ASU Mall TODAY from 9 a.m. until 3 p.m. Remember, the Peace Corps has more than 50 different types of job assignments in Asia, Africa, Latin America and the Pacific. Maybe even one for you!

Pick 'em

This week's results for the Pick 'em contest are in, and the results were interesting this week. If you were among the 242 people who placed an entry in this contest, you were in good company.

The prizes for this contest are great.

First place gets a $10 gift certificate from the Bare Cover clothing store and two "Shipwreck" banana splits from Yogurt Oasis.

Second place will walk off with a large pizza from Pizza Hut restaurant.

Third place will win a Budweiser goody bag, courtesy of Hensley and Co.

Let's keep those entries coming in. We dropped off a little bit last week, and we love to work, so be sure to enter.

This week we will continue to have 14 games to choose from. Entries must be turned in by Friday at 5 p.m. The State Press office is located in the basement of the Matthews Center.

Now there's no reason to go anywhere else, not when there's an aggressive utility like Arizona Public Service Company on the southwest horizon.

Arizona Public Service Company is recognized around the country for outstanding management and technological innovation in the construction of the Palo Verde Nuclear Generating Station.

In addition to our coal and nuclear energy sources, APS is involved in solar energy research. The Sky Harbor Photovoltaic Project, the largest of its kind in the world, is an experimental solar power plant that is providing important data about this alternate energy resource.

As the state's largest supplier of electricity and natural gas, APS takes an aggressive interest in the careers of recent graduates.

We've made a commitment to training recent graduates for careers in the utility industry. Our training programs are geared toward your career interests and directions.

Join us in our quest for a better future, and realize your professional aspirations.

We're offering far reaching careers in nearby locations.

Equal Opportunity Employer M/F

We currently have openings for Electrical Engineers for our Training and Orientation for New Engineers (TONE) program, and Mechanical Engineers can gain hands-on experience through the 2-year Power Production Training Program (PPTP). We're also seeking talented Nuclear Engineers to help in the start-up of the Palo Verde Nuclear Generating Station west of Phoenix.

Our Corporate Business Training (CBT) program is geared towards graduates in Finance, Accounting, Statistics, Journalism, QBA and CIS.

At APS, we believe the only future worth looking forward to is one that is planned for today. You're invited to attend our Group Session for an informal presentation on the career opportunities available with APS. The Group Session will be on October 13 in the Memorial Union, Room 222. Personal interviews will be on October 14. Contact the career placement office for details and times. If unable to attend, please send resume to: Wendy Netzk, Arizona Public Service Company, P.O. Boo birds

Rogers, on the other hand, began replacing his starters early in both of the Devils' victories, in order to give some of his younger players some game experience.

There is a big difference between scoring with your first team and scoring with your second and third teams. A coach cannot ask his players not to play their best, and cannot be blamed if his team continues to score with the substitutes in the game.

As for the touchdown pass thrown by Sandy Osiecki to Doug Allen in the fourth quarter, Rogers had a good explanation.

"We wanted to give Sandy a chance to do more than run out the clock," Rogers said. "We had planned to get him in for about the last quarter or so, but it didn't work out that way."

"We got him in as early as possible, and we wanted to see what he would do in a game situation. I explained this to (Wichita State coach Willie) Jeffries, and he understood perfectly that my intent was not to run up the score, just to see what Sandy would do."

The difference between the two situations is clear. Rogers handled the end of ASU's game with class.

But the fans did not. It was very disappointing to hear the boos start when the Devils had so clearly won the game and scoring again would serve no purpose other than to further humiliate an outmanned Shocker team.

It would be nice to see Smith's tactics come back to haunt him, once Arizona plays a good team like Washington or UCLA.

Or, better yet, ASU.

ASU grabs top honors in fencing

ASU Fencing Club member James Barbour achieved an international rating of 'C' by winning the opening tournament of the United States Fencing Association, Arizona Division season.

Barbour tied for first place in the tournament last weekend. He went on to win the tournament title and his rating in a barrage, or fence-off.

The ratings are used to rate competitors in international and Olympic competition.

Barbour now is ranked as one of the top 50 fencers in the nation. He also is considered to be an Olympic candidate for 1988, according to Fencing Club President James Gilchrist.

Five other ASU fencers participated, including Gilchrist, who advanced to the second round.

Gilchrist tied his first match but lost his match in the second round.

Rob Sheppard and Don Gieschen also participated in the men's division.

In the women's division, ASU's Cheryl Morrison and Karen Turner finished fifth and sixth respectively.
