Measure affecting retirement plans could reduce benefits, Nelson says

By Bob Beamesderfer
Staff writer

A bill reducing contributions to state employee retirement plans passed by the Arizona House of Representatives Thursday would violate employee contracts, according to ASU President J. Russell Nelson.

The bill, part of the 109-day special session on prison funding, passed by a 35-to-23 vote and is expected to be approved by Gov. Bruce Babbitt today, according to Jim West, the governor's press aide.

Rep. Jim Ratliff, R-Sun City, said the governor must approve the entire package. "A change in any one of them kills them all."

Nelson, in his State of the University address Thursday, told the Faculty Assembly, "If the legislation is enacted it would be viewed as a breach of employment contracts."

"In one case, the benefits would be improved ... in the other case the actual amount paid at the time of retirement would be reduced," Nelson said.

Nelson told the State Press late Thursday he was "very much concerned" by passage of the legislation, which "affects several thousand people across the three universities."

He and the presidents from NAU and U of A wrote to leaders in the Legislature expressing their concern over the bill, Nelson said.

Under the measure, the 7 percent contributed by both the state and employees to retirement plans would be lowered to 6.27 percent of employee salaries.

Mary Jo Livix, executive director of the ASU Faculty Association, which lobbied against the measure, said the bill reduces the amount of contribution to all state employee retirement plans, but benefits are only affected in the optional plans because they are directly related to the amount paid in.

It does not affect the regular state-operated plan because its benefits are based on the highest salary an employee earns and the years of service, Livix said.

Those in the regular plan would receive about $100 to $200 more each year because of lower payroll deductions, she said.

Faculty Senate President John Evans said he was "surprised and disappointed" over passage of the bill.

"It's a breach of faith on the part of the Legislature," Evans said.

"The thing I don't like is that they've played politics with the faculty retirement fund by tying it into the need for prison space," he said. "This is an imprudent, as well as unfair, linkage."

Evans said the decrease in contribution means employees in the optional plans will lose 10 percent of their retirement benefits next year.

"That's not going to make morale any better and it's going to hurt recruiting," Evans said.

Nelson added the bill "would further erode the University's ability to attract high-quality employees."

According to Faculty Association figures, 1,160 University faculty members are in one of the three optional retirement plans.

Nelson said the measure "unfairly discriminates against a significant group of current University employees."

Ratliff said he will introduce legislation next week which would return the optional plan contribution rate to 7 percent for both employees and the state.

"I would hope the chances (of passage) would be good," he said.

"There's a danger of establishing a dangerous precedent of dipping into a healthy plan when funds are needed," Livix said. "The retirement plans are so complex it's hard to assess the damage from altering them."

Nelson said he was "encouraged" by the measure Ratliff plans to introduce.

Mondale, Glenn may debate at ASU in April

Walter Mondale and John Glenn tentatively have confirmed they will appear for a debate at ASU on April 20, and President Reagan has replied that he is "interested" in the invitation, according to Associated Students President Walter Batt.

The debate will be sponsored by the centennial task force committee and will follow a speech on April 19 by Alvin Toffler, author of "Future Shock," Batt said.

Both Mondale and Glenn will give their formal approval six weeks prior to the debate date, he added.

The debate will be a "round table discussion" titled "Face the Presidents," with the candidates and 10 campus presidents from across the country.

The 10 presidents will be chosen from 40 universities which Batt said would represent a "cross-section" of the campuses in the country.

ASU will pay for the expenses of the 10 campus presidents as well as for Toffler's appearance. According to Batt, the total cost of the event will be $10,000.

The University has allocated $100,000 for events related to ASU's 100th birthday in 1985; the debate will be one of the centennial events, Batt said.

Along with the debate and Toffler's speech, a discussion will be held on the morning of the April 20 with the campus presidents answering prepared questions. The session will be monitored by Toffler.

Professor transforms household 'biomass' into useable fuel

ASU Students, from right, Karen Grosh, Aram Ebrahimi, Bernie Clark and Joe Witt, help instructor Jerry Beeler with a new machine developed at the chemical engineering department that turns biomass into diesel fuel.

By Jerry Brown
Staff writer

If anyone has any sawdust, nut shells, or grass clippings lying around the house, James Kuester of the ASU chemical engineering department will take it all and put it to good use.

He'll use it to make diesel fuel.

Kuester has spent eight years developing an economical laboratory process that turns plant residue, known as biomass, into gas station-quality diesel fuel.

"The result is fuel that is exactly the same quality as the kind you get at the station today," Kuester said. "This is not like the gasohol that some stations carry."

"The only difference is our fuel is made from a renewable resource."

By taking the biomass, heating it into a gas, then condensing it through a catalytic converter, Kuester has been successful enough to take his idea from the laboratory to a test facility. The process uses a ton of feedstock, which is the most efficient type of biomass, to produce 40 to 60 gallons of fuel.

"We put the fuel into a motorcycle and show it off when the TV people come around, but not much more than that as yet," Kuester said. "But we do both chemical and physical analysis routinely."

Kuester said that he expects to see the fuel on the market in five to 10 years, and says that even though it should only cost between 75 and 79 cents a gallon to make, he expects it to retail at the same price as the current fuel.

"That's the American way," Kuester said.

Each time an article has come out on his fuel, he has received phone calls from people in all businesses asking when it will be available.

"I always get a lot of calls from farmers," Kuester said. "They are really drooling over it. They have all the feedstock on hand and they would love to be able to convert it to fuel."

Funding for the research, nearly $3 million, is supplied largely by the Department of Energy and the U.S. Department of Agriculture.

Kuester is applying for a patent, which if received, will become the property of the Arizona Board of Regents.

'83 personal income figures show six-fold improvement over '82

WASHINGTON (AP) — Americans' personal income was up 3.2 percent in 1983 after subtracting taxes and inflation, a six-fold improvement over recession-wracked 1982, the government said Thursday.

Economists said the increase in U.S. disposable income reflected the country's healthy recovery in 1983, but some warned 1984 won't present so rosy a picture.

The 3.2 percent increase compared to a 0.5 percent rise in 1982. Helping that was the final round of personal income tax cuts in July and the surge in employment as 4 million more Americans found jobs.

Shultz promises perseverance in pursuit of arms talks

OSLO, Norway (AP) — Secretary of State George Shultz, acknowledging he made no headway in reopening nuclear arms talks with the Soviets, vowed Thursday the United States would maintain its "willpower and self-confidence" while seeking new opportunities for negotiation.

Shultz said he had "nothing positive to report" after his five-hour meeting in Stockholm on Wednesday with Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei Gromyko on breaking the deadlock in the negotiations.

But he also indicated the Soviets may be preparing to reopen talks limiting conventional forces in Europe. The talks, suspended a month ago, "are in a somewhat different category for the Soviets."

National Endowment for Humanities refuses to meet hiring quotas

WASHINGTON (AP) — William J. Bennett, head of the National Endowment for the Humanities, is refusing in the name of "human equality and equal liberty" to set numerical goals required by the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission for hiring women and minorities.

"Under its current leadership, this agency will neither favor nor slight anyone because of race, color, national origin, religion or gender," Bennett, an appointee of President Reagan, said in a letter sent Monday to EEOC Chairman Clarence Thomas.

The EEOC, set up by Congress in 1964 to erase job discrimination, seeks voluntary compliance or, if necessary, court action to enforce civil rights statutes. But it has no power to sue or impose sanctions on any federal agency that refuses to comply with its regulations.

Judge rejects senator's bid to stay out of jail

UNIONDALE, N.Y. (AP) — A federal judge today rejected a last-minute effort by former Sen. Harrison A. Williams Jr. to avoid reporting to a federal prison in Pennsylvania to begin a three-year sentence for his Abscam conviction.

U.S. District Judge George Pratt held a brief hearing on a request by Williams' new attorney, Norman Buntaine, to issue a stay of the New Jersey Democrats' sentence until Monday so he could file papers on purported "new evidence."

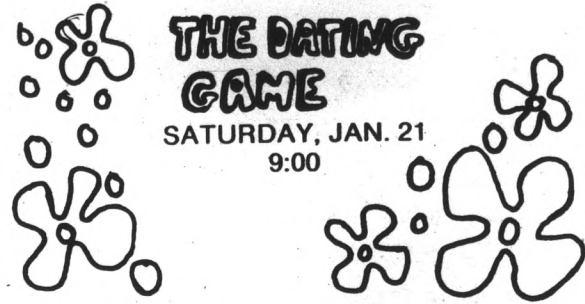

Pratt said he was "not persuaded" by the evidence, which included tapes Buntaine said he had obtained showing FBI agents arranging to entrap senators and other officials in an unrelated case.

Nelson emphasizes teaching, minimizes research for 1984

By Wayne Baker
Staff writer

Teaching rather than research should be the primary responsibility of University faculty, President J. Russell Nelson said Thursday.

Speaking before the faculty assembly, Nelson de-emphasized research and service on faculty committees, saying, "the importance of teaching ... cannot be overemphasized."

"We need to have a sensitive concern and interest for the well being and development of our students," he said.

"I've put emphasis on developing major research," Nelson said. "But it seems to me we might also want to put some emphasis on the fact that we are a university which is always characterized by the presence of students."

He said students comprise "the major body of our customers" that can best be served by the "responsibilities that faculty members have as teachers."

However, Nelson said research has its place in the learning process and faculty must continue emphasis in this area.

He said the colleges and the departments should determine which faculty members will devote themselves to teaching or research.

John Evans, Faculty Senate chairman, supported Nelson's emphasis on teaching and asked the faculty to give special attention to the disabled students in their classes.

Also, Nelson told the faculty that work would continue this semester on a "University-wide capital campaign."

The fund-raising drive would raise money for chairs and professorships, student financial assistance, program support and facilities in "some" areas, he said.

He said his staff currently is working to complete the planning stages and identify potential donors of large sums.

"If we can be successful with this fund-raising campaign ... we can look forward to a higher level of private support for this public university," Nelson said.

Nelson identified three projects the Faculty Senate should concern itself with this semester: improvements in the grievance process; a continuing study on minority recruitment and retention at ASU; and a regent-mandated revision of the Mission-and-Scope statement.

He also announced the kick off of ASU's centennial celebration, scheduled to begin in early March. He said the centennial's schedule will be published and distributed soon and will contain more than 300 ceremonial, educational and cultural events.

State must invest more funds in education

Guest Column

Walter Batt • ASASU President

We've finally arrived. For all practical purposes, our university has finally made it into the annals of acadamia from Engineering to Business, Architecture to Fine Arts and more. Unfortunately, this is where all our problems have begun to surface.

As we begin this semester, the legislature too begins its process of allocating funds to the state's three universities and other public agencies. And again, ASU will come out of the process funded lower per student than its other two counterparts. And finally, on top of it all, some of our representatives down in Phoenix want to mandate huge increases in our tuition and fees rather than moderate increases in taxes to make up for their lack of commitment to higher education.

Enter Gov. Bruce Babbitt. Not only does the legislature get saddled with flooding problems from 1983 and AHCCCS health care discrepancies, but they must now deal with a federal order to provide more prison space for the criminals in our state. And because of all these problems, Gov. Bruce Babbitt forcefully suggests to the Board of Regents, which constitutionally regulates higher education in our state, that students must bear a larger cost of their educational expenses: 25 percent or $950 in-state and 100 percent or close to $4,000 out-of-state.

Finally, the Governor suggests that along with these increases in tuition and fees that the universities only be allowed to keep collectively $20 million of that money on our campuses and recommends that the surplus tuition and fees be deposited in the State's General Fund — earmarked "maybe for education."

All of this I am sure sounds a little confusing and overwhelming but these interrelated issues will determine the future of our institution. Your input to Associated Students and most importantly your legislators can and will make the difference even in the next few years.

In order to sustain our current growth, it has become clear that tuition will be increased. Normally, as outlined in the Arizona State Constitution, the Board of Regents is delegated the responsibility of administering the business of higher education. The tuition raises have always been scheduled, predictable, and unchallenged. Now, because of all the state's fiscal problems, the legislature is seriously considering mandating those increases without the consent of the Regents. Not only is this a usurping of the regents' authority but it also would set a dangerous precedent for unpredictable and haphazard tuition levels.

Furthermore, and the most unbelievable of all, the Governor's proposal, by freezing funds the University may retain from tuition and fees, means a great majority of the additional money we pay won't even stay on our campus. That money in the plan would go into the General Fund which may not necessarily return to our campus. The "local" money is used to provide many necessary services to the students such as Financial Assistance Services, Counseling and Consultation, Career Services, and Associated Students, to name a few. More importantly, this money provides leverage for the University to build the new facilities we now see on our campus. In essence, this money is what keeps ASU growing. We cannot allow the Governor to justify the state's fiscal problems at the expense of higher education in Arizona.

This semester is the turning point. I write this editorial not purely for informational reasons but rather to provide a challenge to you as students. Take a minute out of your day and let your officials know your commitment to education.

It is often the case when you read articles such as this that many figures adorn the text in support of the particular position. I will mention only one.

Since 1973, monies allocated to prisons and safety have increased from 5.27 percent of the General Fund Appropriation total to over 9.09 percent this year while monies to higher education have decreased from 24.4 percent to only 18.17 percent. This represents, in absolute terms, an increase of 248 percent for prisons and safety and only a 57 percent increase for education. This cannot and should not be the direction that Arizona is led. Our future is embedded in our educational system and not anywhere else. ASU is the model for the future of higher education and we are a living part of it. I challenge you to not just take, but to give back to ASU. Let the legislature know your feelings so that they may realign the future for our state in a more positive direction no matter how much pressure the Governor applies. We must act now before it is too late.

Faculty should oppose pension bill

Editor:

In the special session of the Arizona Legislature, which began before the Christmas holidays, one of the proposals was to reduce the state's contribution to employee retirement from 7 percent to a lesser figure. At one time, 5 percent was suggested. At another, 4 percent. The last suggestion just before they recessed for the Christmas holidays was a reduction to 4 percent for both the employer and employee contributions. It was said by one legislator that the 3 percent reduction in employee contributions could serve in lieu of a pay raise; after all, he noted, they would be "keeping more of their own money to spend now." Fortunately, the 4-4 idea died for reasons too involved to go into here.

But the idea of contribution reduction still lives in a different form. Special session Senate Bill 1025 would lower the employer and employee contributions to 6.27 percent in place of the present 7 percent. An exception is made for those people who remained on the State Retirement System, but no exception is made for those on TIAA-CREF or alternative systems. In fact, if you believe the rhetoric advanced, these would be the only state employees suffering an actual reduction in their pensions. The State Plan, which covers a majority of state employees but a minority of faculty at the three universities, is not based directly on contributions, but is based on an average of a person's highest five years of salary multiplied by a percentage which is derived by multiplying a person's years of service by either 1½ percent or 2 percent (1½ percent for years prior to 1967 and 2 percent thereafter). Legally, there is no connection between the Plan member's contribution and his/her entitlement to a pension of a certain amount. The amount is fixed by the formula which is legislated at any time.

Alternative systems, on the other hand, are actuarial and depend directly on contributions and the success of the fund managers in investing those contributions. Lower the contributions and assume everything remains the same, and the result must be lower pensions; it is a simple case of mathematics.

If S.B. 1025, or a similar bill, becomes law the results will be quite simply two-fold: persons under alternative systems will experience a strong likelihood of pension reduction unless the Legislature compensates in some way; and those on the Plan will be promised a pension based on a transferred liability to a future generation. They may get their full amount, but then again they may find that the "burden" of paying pensions has become politically unpalatable to the Legislature of the future in the same way the present Legislature finds funding prisons distasteful today.

All faculty should be concerned; indeed, all employees of the State of Arizona should be concerned.

Plaudits for the police

Editor:

What an exciting semester this is going to be. On Monday, Jan. 16, the first day of classes, I was fortunate enough to witness a heroic event that was just simply ineffable.

I parked my car on Orange Street in front of the bookstore at approximately 7:45 in the evening. I had no homework to do, so I felt I might as well battle those mile-long lines and accomplish the Herculean task of book-buying. I quickly selected what I needed and, surprisingly, the wait in line was not as bad as I expected.

As I exited the now-closed bookstore, I could not believe my eyes. An ASU police officer had managed to issue tickets to 12 cars, including mine, in a matter of minutes. Yes, just minutes. Hard to believe, isn't it?

On that same day, a young man was found in possession of marijuana in the Activity Center, a man was spotted stealing speakers in Lot 62 and a man was found in Lot 59 who appeared to be under the influence of drugs.

But I'm most certain that any level-headed, law-abiding citizen would agree that these events were minute in significance when compared to the devastating damage that could have been done had those vehicles not been cited. Maybe that particular police officer thought that if he spotted a nearby robber or rapist, he might lose the criminals if he had to hurdle and dodge those dangerously and potentially hazardous parked automobiles.

Yes, I think this police officer should be commended for this astounding feat of police work. He should stick his chest out and walk with pride. If other police officers follow his footsteps, after citation-issue training of course, this campus' parking situation may someday be something to brag about.

University seeks consultants for student services building

By Wayne Baker
Staff writer

ASU has received approval to hire a design consultant and bond counsel for construction of a student services building, but officials say the project is not likely to be completed until 1987.

"In terms of financing, getting any building up is going to take three years," said Betty Turner Asher, vice president for student affairs.

However, preliminary decisions on the building's design, location and offices to be housed there are expected within a month, Asher said.

She said a committee has been formed to look into these issues and make recommendations to an architectural firm.

Approval for the University to hire a design consultant and a bond counsel came at the January meeting of the Arizona Board of Regents last weekend.

In October, the regents approved a request by ASU to use $10 million in bonding authority to build a student services center. Bonding authority was granted to the three state universities by the Arizona Legislature in 1982.

According to Regent Executive Director Robert Huff, the board's action was the "first step" in the procedure required to build the center.

William Cabianca, associate vice president for student development and chair of the committee examining the issue, said his office was waiting for approval from the board before proceeding.

Victor Zafra, vice president for business affairs, said a bond counsel and financial consultant will not be hired until "we have a better architectural idea of what we want to do."

He said having a design and a cost estimate will help a bond counsel determine how much money the building will require. Although the plans for a student service center are still in the preliminary stages, the need is here now, Asher said.

A report to the regents said student services, such as financial aid, admissions, the registrar's office, veteran's affairs, career services and student life are decentralized and scattered throughout 10 locations on campus.

The report also said many are located in inadequate facilities and at inconvenient locations.

This decentralization of student services is most inconvenient for commuter students, according to Asher.

"Most of our students are commuters and they need that one-stop convenience," she said. "I think (the building) will bring a lot of efficiencies to students."

She said the center also will attempt to alleviate a lack of study and lounge space and a lack of meeting halls for student organizations.

"I don't know where the organizations go to meet," Asher said. "There ought to be space relegated to allow these organizations to conduct their business."

She previously said the University lacks "about 2,000 study spaces" where students can go to study or relax.

If architectural restraints do not allow study and lounge space within the new building, Asher said the opened office space where the current student services are housed may be used. She added that the University would have no problem filling the empty office space because "everyone wants office space."

The University originally wanted to plan for a $14.5 million, 85,000 square-foot structure, but funding considerations ruled that out, she said.

Asher said design ideas and funding issues should be solved within the next six months and the project is proceeding on schedule.

police report

A bicycle accident Thursday afternoon resulted in one ASU student being transported to Tempe St. Luke's Hospital for treatment of cuts and abrasions, a hospital spokesman said.

Police said Margaret Beatty collided with another student in Lot 41 near the College of Law. Beatty received treatment from Tempe paramedics and then was taken to the hospital, where she was treated and released.

Sandra Sothard, the other bicyclist, did not require medical attention.

In other activity, ASU Police reported the following incidents occurred in the 24-hour period beginning 2 a.m. Wednesday:

- An ASU student was responsible for the recovery Wednesday of his friend's stolen bicycle. After noticing a white male riding a bike similar to his friend's, he followed the man to the Physical Science A-wing where the suspect left the bike and it was returned to its owner.

- As a motorist made a right turn into Lot 3 by Grady Gammage Center, he struck a bicycle ridden by an ASU student, resulting in no injuries to the student, but $35 worth of damage to the bicycle.

- An ASU student burned her right hand while cooking with hot oil at Manzanita and was transported to Tempe St. Luke's Hospital for treatment.

- A Cholla Apartments assistant director told police someone had set fire to a box on the sixth floor which landed between the C and D wings. He was able to put the fire out with an extinguisher.

- Police arrested Wayne J. Kelly for driving while intoxicated early Wednesday and transported him to the Tempe Police Department, where he registered .13 on the breathalyzer scale. Kelly, not an ASU student, was released on his own recognizance.

- An ASU student reported the theft of his license plate from Lot 57 Wednesday evening. The personalized plate, taken from a 1969 Saab, was valued at $38.

- An ASU student was questioned by police in the Music Building Wednesday night after an unknown individual told police he had seen him smoking marijuana in the area. The case was turned over to the Tempe Police Department for investigation.

Broadcast students produce tape to send to U.S. Marines

By Rosanne Dupras
Staff writer

With the exception of gunfire and Eastern music, the U.S. Marines stationed in Lebanon do not have a lot to listen to these days.

That's why KASR, the campus "new wave" radio station, has produced a tape that they call "The Best of New Wave '83" to send to the troops.

"It's not a countdown or anything — just a lot of good new wave music that came out of 1983," said Chris Robertson, KASR operations director.

Similar projects from organizations and family members have been going on in the community, according to Sgt. Yvonne Baker, Marine Corps public affairs officer.

"The response has really been terrific," Baker said.

She said donations of food during the holidays, letters from schoolchildren and magazines to be delivered to the Marines in Beirut had been received.

"A local TV station picked up the tab for individual families to make a video tape of greetings," Baker said.

She said several celebrities had sent cards to the troops.

Robertson talked to officials at the Six Fleet Headquarters in Norfolk, Va., about the tape. "They thought it was a great idea. No one else has done it that they knew of," he said.

Robertson, an Army officer, produced the tape with Doug Bensing and Dave Thompson, in the KASR studio. The tape was voiced by KASR disk jockey Jamie Cromack. All four are broadcasting majors at ASU.

Cromack said, "I had a really great time voicing the tape. It took us a couple of days to get the format together, but we produced it in about an hour."

Robertson said, "We paid for all the materials ourselves and produced it in one shot, which took about an hour."

He said the pre-production time was four hours, which was spent picking the songs and setting up a smooth lineup.

"We limited the tape to an hour because that's the average run for a show," he said.

The tape includes songs from the artists Robert Palmer, Talking Heads, Stray Cats, Berlin, Culture Club and Duran Duran.

"It's some of the best music with very little talk . . . so they can just sit back and enjoy. Most of the music is in the same format as we play here," Robertson said.

Robertson said extra care was taken to avoid any songs containing political statements.

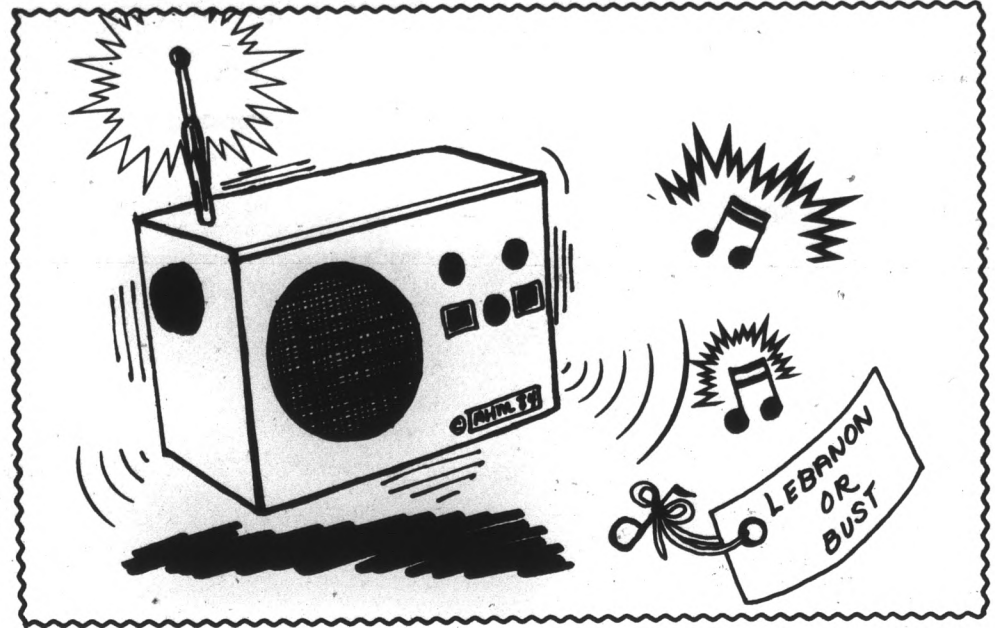

"I just wanted to keep it non-partisan, so they won't say 'Hey, these guys are taking a cheap shot at us,'" he said.

Robertson said he came up with the idea to produce the tape from a television show.

"I saw on 'Entertainment Tonight' that someone had donated about 500 (tape players) . . . so we thought we'd send them some of this," he said.

"Now all we have to do is make a couple more copies of it and send it off. It's kind of our little contribution."

Business student running for

By Asha Nathan
Staff writer

No one running for the Paradise Valley Town Council has been younger than the town itself.

No one, that is, until Jon Wainwright, who was born six months after the town was incorporated.

The 22-year-old business communications major, who has taken a semester off from ASU to spend more time campaigning, said he has been interested in the position of councilman "ever since my dad resigned as vice-mayor" of Paradise Valley about four years ago.

"I love politics," he said. Wainwright said one of his first experiences with politics involved working for George Bush in the New Hampshire primary while he was attending high school in Massachusetts.

"A week later, I went to work for Ronald Reagan, whom I'd like very much to work for this fall," he added.

He said working with his father and other local candidates has also familiarized him with the election process.

One of 14 people running for seven seats in the Feb. 14 election, he said he is positive about his chances of winning since he is on a slate with six incumbents.

If elected, Wainwright said there is a good chance he will be about 20 years younger than anyone else on the council.

He said Mayor J. Duncan Brock, one of his "staunchest supporters," is currently the youngest one on the council at age 41.

Among Wainwright's goals for the town, if elected, are the annexation of county islands and the improvement of relations between town churches and neighboring residents.

He said his father, the Paradise Valley police chief, is neutral as far as his son's campaign. "But the name recognition is great support," he added.

Wainwright's experience with the town of Paradise Valley extends back to his teenage years when he worked with the streets department.

"I planted cacti on Lincoln Drive when I was 15," he said.

Later, when he specialized in urban studies at Lake Forest College in Chicago, Ill., he was active in the student senate.

Wainwright said he has no intention of getting involved in student politics at ASU. "I was very involved (in student politics) both in high school and at Lake Forest."

He added that he thinks he has the right

background for the position of councilman, referring to his specialization in urban studies and the fact that he grew up in the town.

The position of councilman in Paradise Valley requires someone who is 18 years of age or older, has been a town resident at least a year and is a registered voter.

Wainwright, an ASU student since the fall of 1982, said he does not plan on attending law school, a step taken by many would-be politicians.

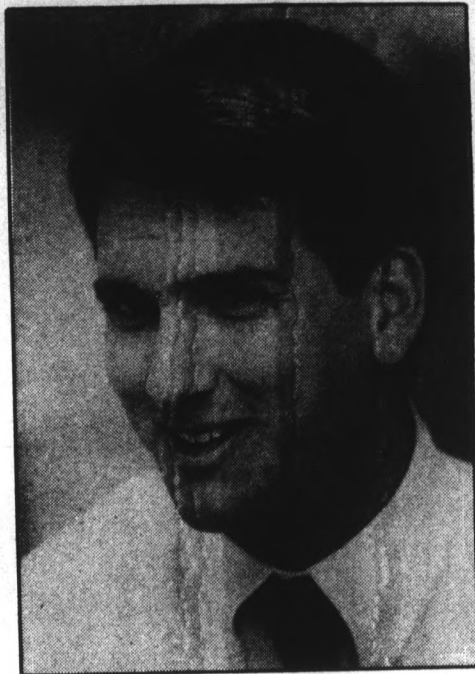

"I don't think they would accept me," he said. "My grades are not the best, since school has been kind of a part-time thing for me for quite awhile."

He said he spends about two to three hours a day working on his campaign during the week, and campaigns actively on weekends.

Wainwright said he would "probably spend 12 hours a week" performing his duties as councilman, if elected, since it is a "non-paid, very much part-time position."

"That will be more time than people who have families to support spend," he added. "School should leave me with more free time to put into the position."

He said he definitely would continue attending school, if elected.

"CHRISTIANS ONLY"

Our lives often become cluttered with complexity — burdened with increasing demands and filled with the latest gimmicks and gadgets. At times like these we often long for simplicity — a shedding of the excess baggage that keeps us from enjoying life at its fullest.

Restoring a sense of balance often means reducing our life to its essentials — re-evaluating, recovering lost ideals and a commitment to pursuing life in a different way.

This is also true in Christianity — and this is the common goal of the people of the Tempe church of Christ. We are seeking to restore in the 20th century the uncluttered simplicity of first century Christianity.

We believe that by following the Bible as our only authority for faith and practice we can reduce Christianity to its original purity and essentials.

We seek to "continue steadfastly in the apostle's teachings" as the first Christians did (Acts 2:42).

Let's be Christians only is our only goal. We share an ideal — a commitment to restoring the spirit and practices of the first Christians.

Come share the ideal — we are

Down the road

Devils face important contest at U of A tonight

By Jay Taylor
Sports editor

The ASU basketball team will take on the U of A tonight in a game that Sun Devil coach Bob Weinbauer is calling crucial despite being only four games into the Pac-10 season.

"Up to this point of the season, it is the biggest week of our lives," he said. "If we had won against Washington (a 57-53 loss), this game would not be as crucial. But now it is a crucial stage of the season for us."

The Devils (7-7, 2-2 in the Pac-10) trail conference-leading

U of A center Pete Williams leads the Pac-10 in rebounding despite measuring only 6-foot-7. Williams is pulling down 10 rebounds per contest for the Wildcats.

Washington by two games with three straight road games coming up. If they are to have a shot at the conference title, they must have a successful trip.

Weinbauer knows the importance of tonight's game, and said that the players are aware of it too.

"Everybody understands the importance of this game, both from a Pac-10 perspective and from the standpoint of state prestige," he said.

"The freshmen are excited about getting their first taste of this rivalry."

Although the Wildcats (3-11, 0-4) are last in the Pac-10, tonight's version of the rivalry should live up to even the highest expectations.

The Cats have played some very tough teams close, losing to UCLA 61-58 and Texas-El Paso 51-49. Both teams are rated in the nation's top ten.

In fact, of the 11 U of A losses, seven have been by five points or less.

"We seem to be playing to the level of our competition," Arizona coach Lute Olson said. "In the last few minutes of a game we are looking to lose the game rather than looking to win it."

"When you look at the various phases of the game, we are doing a good enough job in just about all of them. It gets frustrating. I've been involved in this many close games before, but we have won them rather than lost them."

The Cats are a much stronger team than their record indicates. Weinbauer called them "the most competitive 3-11 team around."

The Wildcats are led by 6-foot-7 forward Eddie Smith (13.2 points, 7.6 rebounds per game) and 6-7 center Pete Williams (14.8, 10).

Williams' 10 boards per game are leading the Pac-10, and he has caught the attention of coaches around the conference.

"Williams rebounds like he is protecting his mother when he goes after the ball," Washington State coach Len Stevens said after Williams pulled down 12 caroms against the Cougars.

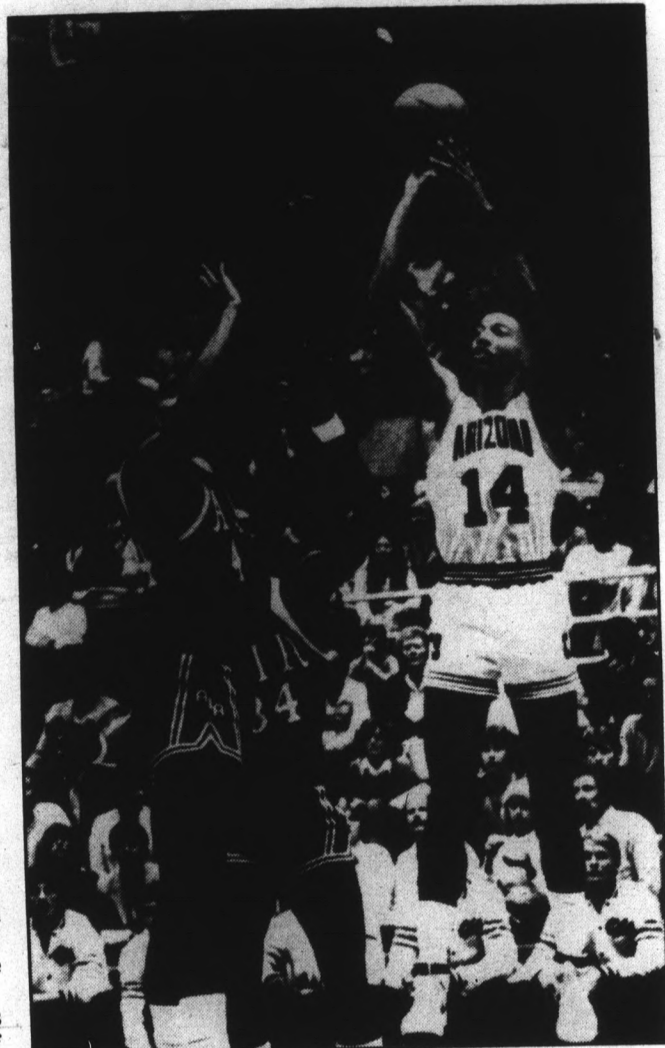

Although they are a very small team — Smith and Williams are the tallest players — the U of A makes up for its lack of size with great quickness.

"They have done a great job of negating other people's size," Weinbauer said. "Particularly against UCLA and Washington."

"Smith and Williams are especially quick, and not just on the floor," he added. "They are quick getting up in the air, and their other players do a good job of getting the ball to them."

The other Wildcat starters are 6-5 David Haskin at forward and Brock Brunkhorst and Michael Tait, both 6-2, at guard.

The Devils will counter with 6-7 Jim Deines and 6-3 Steve Beck at forwards, 6-10 Phil McKinney at center and 6-0

Forward Eddie Smith is one of U of A's most explosive players, averaging 13.2 points per game. The Wildcats look for their first Pac-10 win of the year tonight against the Sun Devils in Tucson.

Bobby Thompson and 6-1 Chris Beasley at guards. Weinbauer is expecting a close ball game.

"It will probably come down to the last minute and one team will have to make a play in order to win the game," he said. "They have a little more quickness inside than we do, but I think we are somewhat stronger in the backcourt."

"We match up well, and it should be an exciting game."

Future of college basketball in Arizona looks encouraging

Those of you who are going down to Tucson tonight to see the U of A-ASU basketball game can consider yourselves lucky.

You may be witnessing the beginning of something big — really big.

Within the past two years, the Arizona schools have been blessed with the hiring of two gold-mine basketball coaches and, as a result, the state may someday become a hotbed of collegiate basketball.

Bob Weinbauer and Lute Olson are two of the most respected coaches in the business. Their successes at past schools have proven them to be at the top of their profession.

Weinbauer, the second-year coach of the Sun Devils, came to ASU from the ivy-

Tom Blodgett

Asst. Sports editor

covered walls of the University of Pennsylvania.

In five years as a head coach of the Quakers, Weinbauer's teams were league champions or co-champions every year. Penn made appearances in four NCAA tournaments and one National Invitation Tournament.

Weinbauer's second team (1978-79) went all the way to the NCAA's Final Four, shocking the experts.

He did all of that without the benefit of scholarships, the lifeblood of collegiate programs.

Weinbauer replaced Ned Wulk, a man with 495 victories under his belt, at ASU last year and led the team to a 19-14 season and an NIT berth.

In his first full season of recruiting with the benefit of scholarships, Weinbauer landed six quality freshmen who are now contributing to the program.

Basketball Times rated Weinbauer's freshman class as one of the nation's top 10.

Men's tennis squad hoping to put last year behind them

By Vicki Serna
Sports writer

Coming back from an unsuccessful season in its conference, the ASU men's tennis team intends to bounce right into action in its opener against San Diego State on Jan. 28.

Last year the Devils racked up a poor season in the Pac-10 with a record of 0-10. Their overall record reads 8-19.

But every team has its days and, according to head coach Lou Belken, those days are over.

The Pac-10 tennis conference is one of the best in the nation. Belken points out that 14 of ASU's 19 losses were against teams rated in the nation's top 20.

Two of those eight wins were against NAU and Northwestern.

"Last year we struggled in the Pac-10," Belken said. "But then the Pac-10 has Stanford, USC, Cal and Arizona in it and it's a tough conference."

Last year the Devils proved that their record did not speak for itself when they beat two highly ranked teams in the WAC.

"We beat New Mexico and San Diego State so we really weren't as bad as our record," Belken said. "Our record puts us in a much dimmer light than we really are."

Belken is looking forward to some new winning changes for his team, which did not break into the top 20 last year.

"This season will be much more competitive than last year," he said. "We have some outstanding players."

Two of those outstanding players are freshmen Keith Thomas and Jeff Kark who played doubles together in New York. As a matter of fact, they have been partners since they were both 12 years old.

"As doubles," Belken said, "they have won one national championship and one international championship."

Thomas will play in the No. 1 position on the team while Kark will be one of the top six players.

Other potential Sun Devil returnees are senior Alex Levie, who will probably play in the sixth slot, Jim Baumann, a sophomore, and seniors Dewey Gratten and Stan Perry.

Todd Lee, who played the No. 6 position in singles and No. 3 doubles last year, and Mike Colloca, a freshman from New York, should also contribute to the Sun Devil tennis team.

Andy Roediger and Tim Dorsey are also on the team, and may see action this year.

Belken believes there will be vast improvements on the team because "we have much stronger players this year. Last season we had a very young team."

One obstacle the team faces is its prominent list of opponents.

"We have one of the toughest schedules," Belken said. "We have 32 dual matches and you can't find any other sport with such a tough schedule where half of the opponents are the top 20 teams in the nation."

The Devils have their work cut out for them against such teams as No. 1 Stanford, No. 2 USC and Pepperdine, which is ranked No. 3.

The Pac-10, which is regarded as one of the best conferences in the nation, also sports some of the best athletes.

Belken indicates that of the top 50 former college tennis players playing in the pros, ten of those have played in the Pac-10.

"The Pac-10 is the conference of the country," he said.

Belken also pointed out that during 23 years of national championship competition, the mighty Pac-10 has won 22 times.

Even though the Sun Devils have compiled one of the most difficult schedules on the tennis circuit, Belken remains confident about what he calls a strong team.

This weekend the Sun Devils will compete in the alumni tennis match where the six varsity players will face former ASU tennis stars at Whiteman Tennis Center.

"We don't view this as a dual match," said Belken. "It's more of a scrimmage practice against former (ASU) players. It will be good practice against former players that are outstanding. In fact, five out of the six alumni are former No. 1 players."

The match will be held this Sunday, Jan. 22, at 1 p.m.

ALEXANDER THE GREAT

The guy who never met a country he didn't like talks about military strategy, green chili burritos, and success.

MSR: Alexander, how does it feel to rule the entire known world?

ALEXANDER: What can I tell ya... great!

MSR: You moved up the corporate ladder pretty fast.

ALEXANDER: Yeah, and I didn't even have an M.B.A.! (HEARTY LAUGH)

MSR: You certainly have a positive attitude.

ALEXANDER: That's the key to my success. I mean, if I went around griping and complaining all the time, they'd call me Alexander the Wimp!

MSR: Surely, there is...

ALEXANDER: Shirley? Who's Shirley?

MSR: No, I mean, there must be some stress in your job.

ALEXANDER: Listen, the only stress I have is deciding where to go for lunch.

Like I told ya, everything's great!

MSR: Alexander, you've been called a military genius. What's your secret?

ALEXANDER: Well, I always show up at battles at least an hour early. Gives you a chance to practice a little. And I never let my troops eat Mexican food the night before a major battle.

MSR: You're kidding.

ALEXANDER: Listen, I've seen entire kingdoms lost over a few platters of green chili burritos. You've had burritos, right?

MSR: Yeah, but...

ALEXANDER: Do you feel like getting up the next morning, marching 50 miles and then fighting 90,000 guys?

MSR: Well...

ALEXANDER: There ya go.

MSR: Thanks to you, the world is pretty peaceful now.

ALEXANDER: Except in Mesopotamia. I learned a long time ago, ya don't mess with the Mesopotamians. Just let those bozos fight it out among themselves.

MSR: Alexander, the world is literally yours, you've done it all. What's next?

ALEXANDER: What's next? I'm gonna have a beer. Want one?

MSR: Okay. (ALEXANDER OPENS TWO COLD BOTTLES OF BEER.) I see you drink new Miller Special Reserve.

ALEXANDER: That's right. Success has its rewards. And Special Reserve is a legend in its own bottle. Smooth, mellow... let's face it, it's great!

MSR: It's also kind of expensive.

ALEXANDER: So what? Hey, if I don't deserve it, who does?

MSR: You're right. It is great!

ALEXANDER: As I always say, "If it isn't great, throw it on the next freight!"

MSR: Words to live by.

Why settle for just any beer when you can have new Miller Special Reserve? After all, if you don't deserve it, who does?

Gymnasts showcase talent

By Tom Blodgett
Assistant sports editor

It's almost a secret that both the men's and women's gymnastics teams are ranked in the nation's top 10, but that's not how coaches Don Robinson and John Spini would like it.

The teams have embarked on an ambitious promotional campaign in hopes of changing all that.

The culmination of this publicity blitz comes tonight at 7:30 when the teams host the All-American meet in the University Activity Center.

"It's the biggest promotional event we've ever had," said Robinson, who coaches the men's team.

Indeed, it's really a case of saturation. Basha's grocery store has half-price coupons on 400,000 bags. And the Chamber of Commerce has mailed more than 60,000 tickets to its members.

And the Activity Center only holds 14,000 people!

And if that wasn't enough, KNXV-TV (Channel 15) will be taping the meet for telecast at a later date.

But if ever there was an ideal meet to choose for this exposure, this would be the one.

The No. 10 men will host top-ranked UCLA and Louisiana State, while the second-ranked women compete against LSU and Oklahoma State.

The pre-Olympic meet features several performers who will be vying for spots on the U.S. Olympic team.

Two who are almost shoe-ins for spots will be UCLA's Mitch Gaylord and Tim Daggett. Gaylord's addition to the Bruins this season helps ease the loss of NCAA all-around champion Peter Vidmar.

"They lost Peter, but I've seen Gaylord beat Vidmar," Robinson said.

"They're a very strong team, but if they goof their routines and we hit ours, well, we'll see."

Robinson said he is unsure of the strength of the LSU squad. He did say they picked up a couple good recruits in Russell Lacy, who is coming back from an injury, and Brent Broker.

The Devils will have only one performer, J.T. Fletcher, in the all-around.

"He can get us a 9.3 in each event," Robinson said. "If he doesn't get one, I'm disappointed."

Fletcher is also an Olympic hopeful. He would like to qualify for the trials at the Championships of the USA in May.

Robinson said the team has several all-American hopefuls in individual events. They include Jeff Vanyek (still rings), Brad Rot (rings), Greg Maltby (high bars), Paul Webster (floor exercise) and David Branch (floor). Branch is the defending national champ on the floor.

Branch is not the only floor champion at ASU. Kim Neal, who won that event as a freshman at last year's nationals, will lead the heavily-favored women in Friday night's meet.

Neal, who was an all-American on the vault in addition to being floor champion, and freshman Shari Mann are both Olympic hopefuls.

The women will feature two other returning all-Americans. Jackie Brummer (uneven parallel bars) and Lisa Zeis (balance beam, floor exercise) both won honors at last year's NCAA meet in Salt Lake City.

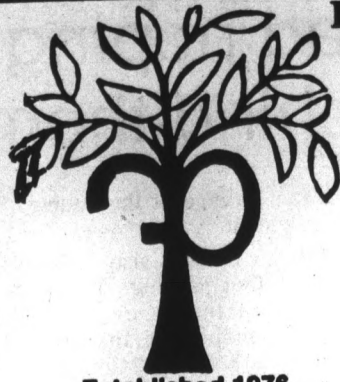

LSU placed sixth last year at the NCAA's. Oklahoma State did not compete, but has one returning gymnast, Teri Collins, who competed there as an individual.

The women's weekend will continue Saturday when they travel to Salt Lake City to face top-ranked Utah.

"We'll probably go into the All-American meet at full strength," Spini said. "But probably not for Utah. We want some of the girls to get experience in front of that kind of crowd."

A partisan Utah crowd helped the Utes to upset the Sun Devils at last year's championships.

"It would be great to beat them," Zeis said. "But where we really want to beat them is Los Angeles (site of this year's championship meet)."

Lady hoopsters upset by Fullerton

By Dean Obenauer
Sports writer

One thing the ASU women's basketball team didn't expect against Cal State-Fullerton was to lose 60-56 at home.

The Lady Devils hadn't lost to the Titans since Jan. 11, 1980, when they were outscored 59-54 in Fullerton. The Devils still lead the series 8-3, after Wednesday's loss at the Activity Center.

"(The problem was) mental," coach Juliene Simpson said. "And that caused our physical problems."

Going into the locker room at halftime the Devils led 31-27 over the Titans while shooting just over 58 percent from the field.

In the first half, Fullerton shot a humiliating 28.6 percent from the floor and were fortunate to only be down by four points. The key to the surprisingly close game was in the turnover category. The Devils turned the ball over 13 times to the Titans' seven first-half miscues.

Despite being questionable before the game due to strained ankle ligaments, Kym Hampton led the Sun Devils with 10 first-half points while back-up freshman center Robin Connolly led all rebounders with five.

Jodi Rathbun, who also was a questionable starter after having her wisdom teeth pulled ended the half with six assists, four points and three rebounds.

Robin Holmes led all scorers for Fullerton with 17 first-half points.

Halftime served as a benefit to Fullerton, which came out in the second half sporting a full-court press. With very little time elapsing from the clock, the Titans tied the score and then went ahead. The Devils then came back, and the game seesawed back and forth as the teams traded scoring spurts.

Holmes continued to be a factor for the Titans as she added six more points in the second half to lead all scorers with 23 points. Meg Gallagher scored the bulk of her 12 points in the second half including clutch points down the stretch which enabled the Titans to put the game on ice.

Titan Terri Withers was also a factor as she exploded for all of her 10 points in the second half while grabbing seven of her eight rebounds in the half as well.

"They have to be (improved)," Simpson said. "They beat us. Cal State-Fullerton kept their composure. We didn't hit our baskets when we had to. We were not in the game tonight."

The biggest factor late in the game became free throws. In the first half the Lady Devils hit 75 percent of their attempts but in the second half they were unable to shoot over 14.3 percent from the charity stripe.

"They hit their free throws," Simpson said. "We missed ours."

With the score tied at 54 Gallagher put the Titans in the driver's seat by making a layup while being fouled by Beckie Smatana. Smatana fouled out and Gallagher converted the three-point play giving Fullerton a 57-54 lead they were able to hold on to for the last 1:23 of play.

At that point the Titans took advantage of two Devil turnovers and desperate Devil fouls to reach their final margin of 60-56.

"It hurts very much (in the conference race)," Simpson said. "We'll have to take it game by game. When we get behind the eight ball like this by losing at home it's really difficult to make it up on the road."

"Defensively, I'd like us to be more aggressive and rebound better," she said. "Offensively, I'd like us to be more patient, take balanced shots and have more offensive rebounds."

More about Hoops

Already he is off to a good start on next year's class, having signed Arizona's top two prospects, Vernon Johnson and Mark Carlino, to letters of intent.

As each day passes, it is becoming more apparent that Weinbauer is building a powerhouse at ASU.

It won't be this year or maybe even next, but by the time his recruits mature, UCLA and Oregon State won't be monopolizing the conference crown.

Neither will Weinbauer's ASU teams, if Lute Olson has his way.

Olson came to the U of A even more nationally recognized than Weinbauer.

Olson coached for ten seasons before joining the Wildcat program. He spent one season at Long Beach State and nine at Iowa.

He made the NCAA tournament the last five seasons at Iowa, including a Final Four appearance in the 1979-80 season. The same year he was voted national coach of the year.

His career record coming to Arizona was 191-93 (.673).

Olson took over a program in shambles. The Wildcats suffered through their worst season in the Pac-10 conference, finishing 4-22, 1-17 in conference.

Already he is making an impact. Although they are currently 3-11, the Cats are, as Weinbauer noted, one of the most competitive 3-11 teams around.

Before the season began, Olson said "the only thing I will promise is that we will play hard, play well together and play with intelligence."

Olson is living up to his promises of the preseason.

Arizona has played some good teams awfully tough. They have lost seven games by less than five points.

Some of the losses have come at the hands of UCLA (61-58), Texas-El Paso (51-49, OT), and Cal State-Fullerton (67-66).

The promise these two coaches bring to the collegiate scene in Arizona is staggering.

If Olson and Weinbauer build their respective schools to the prominence they achieved at other universities, ASU-U of A basketball games could be as important nationally as the North Carolina-North Carolina State rivalry.

What a shame that fans in the Valley are unwilling to jump on the bandwagon now while they can. It just may be that three to five years down the line, it will be tough to get a season ticket.

Season tickets for baseball selling quickly

With eight days remaining until ASU kicks off the 1984 baseball season at Packard Stadium, less than 500 reserved season tickets remain, according to officials at the ticket office.

A total of 1,341 reserved season tickets had been sold as of Tuesday, Jan. 17.

When the reserved season ticket allotment runs out, bleacher seating will be available on a game-by-game basis.

Season tickets are $50 for adults and $25 for senior citizens, juniors, faculty and staff members.

The Sun Devils open their 44-game home schedule against Cal State-Los Angeles on Wednesday, Feb. 1. The annual Alumni Game is slated for Saturday, Jan. 28.

The home schedule will be one of the most ambitious ASU has ever undertaken. The Devils, who are currently ranked first in the nation, will host second-ranked Oklahoma State and defending national champion Texas in addition to their rigorous Pac-10 schedule.
