Personnel policy enforcement will force out 35 employees

By Jerry Brown
Staff writer

ASU's 5,200 staff members will be reduced by about 35 on July 1 due to new enforcement of an employment policy that will ultimately result in all University employees losing their jobs at age 70, according to Personnel Director Richard Murra.

Murra said the policy, a state guideline that allows employers to terminate or retire any employees who have reached age 70, is being enforced to put new blood into the work force.

"We hope this move will help to rejuvenate the staff," Murra said. "The policy is nothing new, it is just used more than in the past."

Murra said there has not been much reaction to the crackdown, and many staff members already had planned to retire at that age.

"Reaction is really based on the individual person," Murra said. "Some are upset. They feel they can still contribute and teach for a few more years, but many are glad that the decision to retire has been made for them.

"There are always a few that want to work until the day they die," Murra said. "But that isn't always necessarily good for the University as a whole."

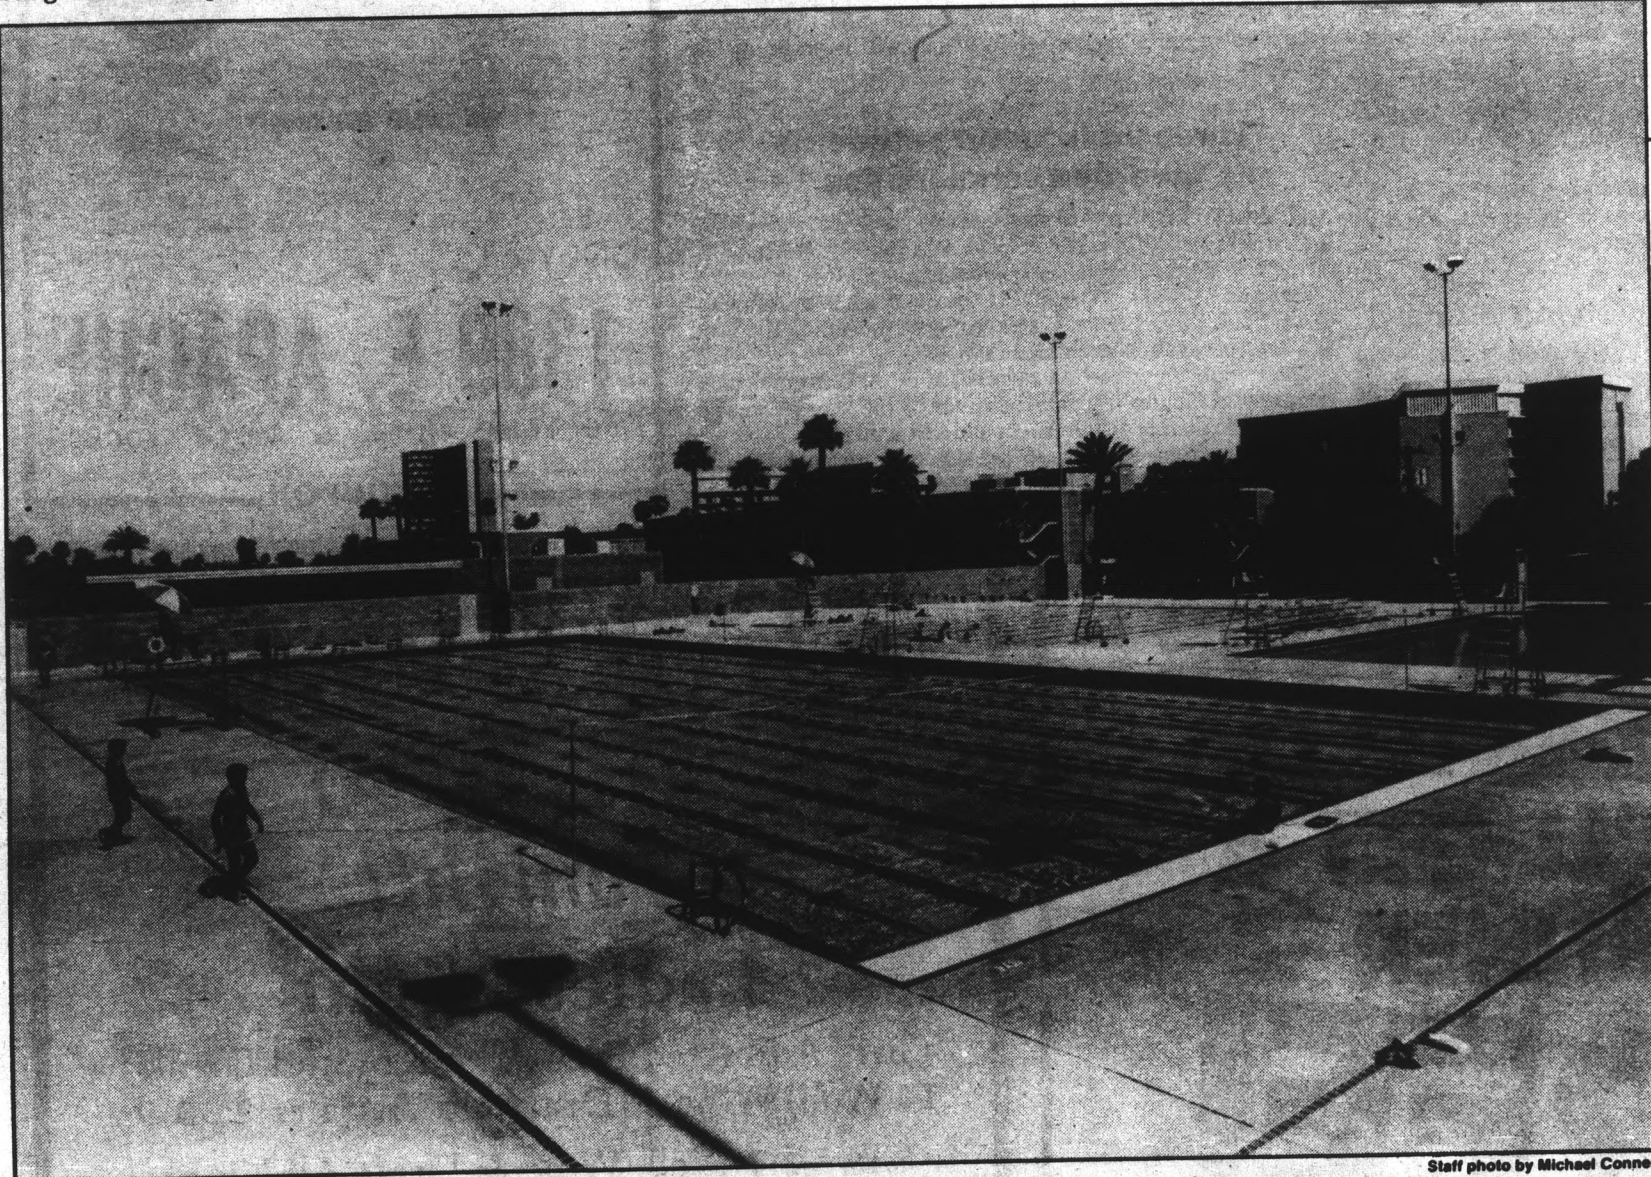

Murra said that five employees will be allowed to remain because of previous commitments with the University.

"It would not have been fair to students who have seen the teacher's name in the fall schedule and want to take that class," Murra said, "so some of the staff will stay the extra year."

About 25 more staff members will reach retirement age during the 1984-85 fiscal year, and according to Murra no one will be asked to stay on.

Officials at the U of A and NAU said employees who reach age 70 must apply for a continuance, but a strict employment cutoff is not applied.

ASU reverts to towing at Tempe Center

By M.G. Khan
Staff writer

In order to enforce merchants' rights, ASU has renewed a towing policy for cars illegally parked in Tempe Center lots, according to the director of investment and property management.

Jennus Burton said that as a landlord, ASU is required to fulfill lease obligations, one of which is to provide adequate parking.

He said when ASU bought the property in November 1983 the administration was opposed to using towing as a means to deter students from parking at the Center. Several other methods, including assigning patrol officers, were tried in an attempt to stop the misuse of the facility.

But because all other methods of parking enforcement failed — partly because the patrol officers could not issue citations at the Center which, technically, is not part of the ASU campus — administrators reverted to towing, the method used by the previous owners to deal with the parking problem.

ASU developed a request for proposal to find a towing company that had a good reputation, good equipment and charged reasonable prices. Dana Towing won the bid.

Dana's owner, Tom O'Brien, met with the Tempe Center Merchants Association and, together, they developed a tow-

Blood Service to solicit ASU for donations

Arizona Blood Services will be on campus next week seeking donations to augment their supply before the July 4th holiday.

The blood drive is scheduled for the mornings of June 26, 27 and 28 next to Danforth Chapel and from 3:30 p.m. to 8 p.m. June 27 on the Palo Verde Main "beach."

As a special thank you, all donors will receive a Centennial mug.

In addition, ABS will be hosting a free "blood typing" booth from 3:30 p.m. to 6:30 p.m. today in the Palo Verde East lobby.

Blood donors must be between 17 and 65 years of age (17-year-olds need parental permission) and must weigh at least 110 pounds. Donors also must wait eight weeks between donations.

ABS, which is responsible for providing blood and blood components to patients throughout eight Arizona counties and the Imperial Valley of Southeastern California, relies exclusively on volunteer donors.

ASU vice president, professors honored by science association

An ASU vice president and two faculty members have been elected fellows of the American Association for the Advancement of Science.

Jack B. Kinsinger, vice president for academic affairs; Jeffrey R. Hazel, associate professor of zoology; and Warren E. Miller, professor of political science, were among 269 individuals voted for the honor May 28 at the AAAS annual meeting in New York.

Kinsinger, 58, came to ASU two years ago from Michigan State University where he served as associate provost and chairman of the department of chemistry.

In electing him to fellowship status, the AAAS cited Kinsinger for his research in polymer chemistry, for his contributions to university research administration and for his work as director of the Division of Chemistry of the National Science Foundation, from July 1975 to January 1977.

Hazel, 39, was recognized for his studies of cellular processes that allow cold-blooded animals to adapt to temperature changes. He holds a doctorate from the University of Illinois and taught at the University of Nebraska at Lincoln before coming to ASU in 1975.

Miller, 60, came here two years ago from the University of Michigan. He was cited for his research of voting behavior and for establishing the Inter-University Consortium for Political and Social Research and the National Election Studies through the University of Michigan. Miller remains director of the NES, funded this year with a $2.5 million grant from the National Science Foundation.

AAAS, formed in 1848, is the leading general scientific organization in the United States. Its members include 136,000 individuals and 285 societies and academies of science.

AAAS elects members to fellowship when their "efforts on behalf of the advancement of science or its applications are scientifically or socially distinguished."

Research center receiving funds from federal highway program

ASU's Center for Advanced Research in Transportation will receive $250,000 under the Federal Highway Administration's Technology Transfer Program for Local Transportation Agencies.

The Center is one of nine facilities nationwide to receive the funds enabling university scientists and engineers to share research results and other information with local governments.

"It's taking information from the research lab and the development shop and getting it into a format that's more useful to the public," according to CART director Matthew Betz.

Local governments throughout Arizona will be surveyed to determine what types of information will best serve their needs, he said.

A quarterly newsletter will inform city and county officials of workshops and developments in transportation technology, he added.

City engineers trying to decide whether to repair streets or build new roadways can request information, for example, on equipment and materials available.

CART researchers — most from ASU's departments of civil and industrial engineering, but from other areas on campus as well — also will be available for lectures and demonstrations.

CART researchers will serve only as information sources, and will not be involved in consulting or engineering work.

"We'll be able to tell local jurisdictions what to look for when they consult with experts in their own community," Betz said.

The end of the two-year program will be spent evaluating its effectiveness, and submitting recommendations for further developments to the federal agency and the Arizona Department of Transportation, which will oversee ASU's program.

Three architecture students awarded scholarships

Three ASU architecture students each have been awarded a $500 scholarship from the National American Institute of Architects Foundation based in Washington, D.C.

Douglas M. Fess, Tempe; Clinton R. West, San Antonio, Texas; and Daniel Horvat, Denver, are students in the professional program in architecture at ASU.

The recipients were first nominated by ASU architecture department faculty. The final selection by the foundation was based on academic achievement and financial need.

Students from schools of architecture throughout the United States were eligible to compete for the scholarship.

Re-entry program slated for women

By Karen Houghton
Contributing writer

Women's Services, an Associated Students agency, is gearing up for the 1984-85 school year, which includes recruiting a director for a new re-entry program.

The re-entry program for older women would complement the adult re-entry program currently sponsored by Student Life, according to Nancy Parks, ASASU campus affairs vice president.

"Right now, we don't have a director (for the new re-entry program)," Parks said. The position is non-salaried but funds are budgeted for the program.

"What we need is someone who has time to reach out and help the other women," she said.

In anticipation of starting the re-entry program, Women's Services is working to identify older women students' needs.

"We don't know if they would prefer lectures or simply literature handouts because of time constraints," Parks said. "We don't know if they'd rather have a place to go to be able to meet one another . . . we don't know because we don't hear the voices."

Women students dominate the 35 years and older age group at ASU, according to Joanne O'Donnell, associate dean of student life. In fact, "almost all undergraduates (in that age group) are women," she said.

Women's Services is reviewing the response to last year's programs in considering speakers and programs for next year.

Women-oriented programs presented last year included a week of seminars on financial independence, assertiveness in the work world, poetry and literature by women and physical fitness.

Natasha Josefowitz, professor of management at San Diego State University, also recently spoke on "Paths to Power," sponsored by Women's Services in co-operation with other campus and Tempe organizations.

Anyone interested in Women's Services programs or the re-entry director's position may contact Parks at 965-3161 between 8 a.m. and 5 p.m., Monday through Friday.

Burnell calls for student regent vote

By Jerry Brown
Staff writer

Although having a student representative on the Arizona Board of Regents to lobby for important proposals is a step in the right direction, a vote must be given to that person so he can become more prominent in the decision-making process, according to Associated Students President Ray Burnell.

"The student regent lends an inside voice to the process," Burnell said. "But we need to have more than just input through suggestion."

Burnell attended the most recent meeting of the Regents in Tempe, his first as ASASU president, and said he was well received.

"The regents do listen," Burnell said. "They understand that they are the decision-makers and we are the consumers. I look forward to a good working relationship."

Burnell said that he would use his office to support a move to give the student regent a vote. He said he would also speak to legislators who opposed the move during the last session, most notably Rep. Jim Cooper, R-Mesa.

"I have a hard time understanding Rep. Cooper's argument," Burnell said. "I hope to get together with him and other legislators in the near future."

Burnell indicated that changes in the bylaws of the ASASU election code will be made by the Student Senate in hopes of halting problems that occurred during the last election.

"The Senate will tighten the grip we have over the elections," Burnell said. "We hope the new code will be more representative of the students."

"I think we need to keep the spending limits on candidates, it is a part of the code that is still needed."

Common sense is not so common

—Voltaire

Mall safety increased by expelling wheels

M. G. Khan Staff writer

There are some problems that one might assume would eliminate themselves simply by virtue of the fact that they go against not only law and courtesy, but also common sense.

A couple of days ago I passed a car, consumed by flames, that had pulled into the median area of the freeway. It was obvious that the more quickly the fire department could respond, the less likely people would be hurt, or at least, the severity of the injuries might be lessened.

But responding to calls often is not an easy task for fire department engineers (or for ambulance drivers, police, etc.). They are hindered not only by the usual traffic problems (they must observe all laws, including stopping at all stop signs and lights before proceeding) but more notably by drivers who refuse to yield the right of way.

The first thing you can say about these people is, simply, that they are breaking the law. There is no sense in belaboring this point because there's a good possibility such violators have no regard for order or, at least, that they deem themselves exempt from certain requirements — an entirely different issue which merits its own lengthy discussion.

The next thing to which one might appeal in dealing with such "offenders" is altruism. It would seem that most human beings should be willing to sacrifice 15 seconds so that another of its species might be saved. And indeed, if each car were to pull off to the side of the road as an emergency vehicle approached, it might enable the paramedics to arrive at their destination in four minutes instead of five — a difference which is negligible most of the time, but in emergency situations could spare an accident victim brain damage or save his life.

But some say we are not an altruistic species, that the welfare of others is low on our list of priorities. There is, then, another angle to this — one that caters to the larger, self-serving populace.

We'll illustrate with Ted — a hypothetical example. Let's say Ted's driving his seafoam green '69 VW convertible when he hears the sirens of a firetruck. He says to himself, "yeah, but happy hour began 15 minutes ago." So Ted steers his little German drop-top through the intersection and continues on his wreckless way. By this time, others are surrendering the street, but Ted continues to motor along. And then it happens. Nineteen tons of extra-shiny blood red steel traveling at 55 mph appears and "fuses" with Ted — a union that's going to put quite a dent in the Bug. It is, in fact, going to demolish it. And Ted's seconds are numbered.

Now, if Ted's brains weren't, shall we say, distributed all over the grill of the firetruck, and he miraculously had lived through the encounter, he'd have a pretty hard time convincing a judge (surrounded by those law-abiding fools who have now assumed the ominous title of witnesses) that he was not at fault.

So, were Ted not dead, the moment he regained consciousness, he'd be in for a helluva legal battle. Either way, Ted loses.

The effects of refusing to obey the dictates of common sense in the firetruck vs. VW case are readily observable and quite extreme. But common sense comes into play in issues of safety much less sensational. Issues like biking on Cady Mall.

Clearly, riding bikes, roller skating and skateboarding on Cady Mall is prohibited. But, we assume that people who insist on engaging in such activities, like the selfish drivers, haven't any regard for law.

So we turn to argument number two: achieving and maintaining a symbiotic relationship with those who share our environment. We try, in effect, to promote a sense of community — each person obeying the same laws to minimize chaos.

But chaos doesn't seem to bother most Sun Devils and ultimately, symbiosis takes a back seat to egocentricity.

With that unhappy knowledge we turn to argument three. There are several disabled students, faculty and staff members at ASU. People whose maneuverability is limited by their containment in a wheel chair, people whose vision might not allow them to see an uncontrolled skateboarder, people whose hearing loss might prohibit them from hearing and reacting to warnings from speeding skaters. There also are plenty of people on campus who are toting around one-of-a-kind relics, poisonous snakes, toxic chemicals and expensive instruments. A collision between someone on wheels and any of the aforementioned likely not only could cause serious injuries, but also damage to property — some of which carries a pretty high price tag.

If people would surrender their already prohibited practice of riding, skating and skateboarding on the Mall — if they would merely follow the dictates of common sense — the problem would be eliminated.

But people who insist on wheeling along the Mall — despite the wall-to-wall people and warning signs — are plainly displaying their absence of common sense. And in that case others must step in. The bottom line is, it's everyone's responsibility not just to enforce the law and encourage altruism, but to demand that such common sense obligations be fulfilled.

Homosexuality represents 'diversity,' not 'deviancy'

Editor:

Thanks to Editor Don Slutes for his fair and positive editorial on Gay Pride Week ("Gay Pride Week promotes the rights of the individual," State Press, June 14). As an ASU alumnus recently appointed by Mayor Terry Goddard to the City of Phoenix Human Relations Commission, I have learned how difficult it is for many people to discuss this topic rationally.

Even those who see themselves as open-minded and tolerant seem to slip into the habit of seeing "deviance" when they are confronted with diversity. Cultural biases are slow to change, but the editor's column was a refreshing view.

Carl Brown

Editor:

I would like to commend you on your very literate, understanding, and informed column on Gay Pride Week. I am not gay, but I have many friends who are and other friends who are the parents of gay children. I have seen and heard too many negative things about this subject and feel that if the gay population is repressed and their human rights violated, who will be next? Adolf Hitler began his persecutions with the gays and gypsies. Having worked on this campus for five years and being harangued each semester by narrow-minded people screaming from the benches, and even by previous writers of the State Press, as well as other publications, it is so refreshing to see an open-minded individual speak out. It is a statistic that the majority of child molesters and sex offenders are heterosexual, an extremely minute percentage being homosexual. Only when people open their minds and become informed and aware of such facts will they realize that the gay population is not a dangerous one to be treated with irrational fear and ostracism. I agree with you that to support the gay rights movement supports the rights of each citizen's individuality.

Ariel Pastor

Editor:

I would like to thank Don Slutes for taking a positive stand on gay rights in his editorial last week. I realize it is not an easy position to take in today's society, but it is long past time for people to quit viewing us as a threat to society's moral stability and see us for what we are: an oppressed minority that simply wants the rights guaranteed to all people under the Constitution.

Gays still have no legal recourse if they encounter discrimination in their everyday life. They can be and are frequently denied service in public places; they are denied housing; many are either not hired for jobs they are qualified for and would have had if they were not gay, or others, myself included, are fired from jobs that they are well established in when it is discovered that they are gay.

Slowly the old myths are disappearing about homosexuality as people are becoming aware of the truth. For example, I do not know of anyone who "chose" to be gay. Most of us have been gay as long as we can remember; you can't really believe a young child would be able to make such a choice. If there are any who do not believe the genetic theories or the environmental influences idea, and who still maintain it is a decision made later in life, they need to ask themselves: Who would decide to join such an oppressed minority? No intelligent person would, and yet some of history's most brilliant minds have been gay (Shakespeare, Plato, Tchaikovsky, to name very few.)

I look forward to the day when I don't have to sit through another "fag" joke or hear about another local politician who said we should not use lab animals for experiments — just use lesbians and gays instead. It is time people woke up to the fact that we are just human beings struggling along like everyone else, and just want respect and a fair shake at happiness. All we want is world where we can live our lives as we choose, without discrimination, with whomever we may choose to live it.

Stephen Cronk Senior, Music

Editor:

A heartfelt thanks to Don Slutes for his June 14th editorial on Gay Pride Week. The Arizona Lesbian and Gay Task Force, working year after year to educate the public, appreciates the assistance of journalists in breaking down the myths and stereotypes so often perpetuated by those who make no effort to understand or appreciate the differences among people. The State Press should be proud to consider Mr. Slutes among its best assets.

Design artists use modified computers to complement talent in imaging class

By Jerry Brown
Staff writer

The word "computer" has long been taboo to many artists.

But thanks to new hardware built to accommodate art, the benefits of electronics are now available to artists.

Bruce Papier, a design sciences professor who is teaching a class in electronic imaging this summer, said the changes in the way some computers are put together have made them a useful tool for the artist.

"In the past, computers were built mostly for engineers," Papier said. "They were used mostly for math. The only kind of graphics they had were for statistics.

"Now hardware is being marketed that is friendly to the artist and the designer," he said. "The language has been developed for them by other artists who work with engineers to put out the finished product."

Papier said the main function of the computer is as a time saver.

"The engineer uses the computer to crunch out numbers that make his job easier," Papier said. "The artist uses it as a paper saver. If you don't like what you have, you can just erase all or part of what you want to change."

But Papier stressed that computers are of little use to an artist unless he has the talent to use them.

"It would be like giving someone a fancy paint set. Unless you have the talent to use it, the finished product will not be any better," he said. "The computer is little more than an expensive paint set."

Papier said students often are apprehensive when first using the new computer.

"For the first week, they are afraid they will push the wrong button and it will blow up," he said. "But after a week they find out what it can do — they love it."

The system uses three microchips similar to those used in video games which make images appear on the screen as soon as they are "drawn" on a electronic board called a digitizing tablet.

Ray Langenbach's image is transferred to the video screen by a television camera. Once the image is locked into the computer it can be manipulated. Langenbach is a graduate student in Art, now studying sculpture.

The user moves a writing instrument, known as a puck, across the tablet and the image immediately is projected on the screen in one of 256 colors.

"Leroy Nieman used a similar system for the 1976 Olympics in Montreal," Papier said. "He would have a painting finished while the event was still going on. Our system is not quite as complicated."

The system cost about $12,000 and Papier hopes to augment the program within a few years.

"This fall, we hope to start an intermediate program in the field," Papier said. "And plans are in the works for an advanced class in the near future."

He said it is just a matter of time before systems like the one at ASU take their place in the field.

"Computers are just beginning to make their presence felt in the field," Papier said. "But by the time the students get into the market, computers will be an integral part of any job involving artists and designers."

Towing

ing plan. The agreement was finalized on May 11 — the day of graduation — but O'Brien, the Association and ASU decided against towing that day in favor of beginning the first day of summer school.

On June 4, O'Brien went to Tempe Center and personally warned students that he would be towing the next day. He said most students ignored the warning and the same people who had parked there the first day also parked there the next. On June 5, 13 vehicles were towed, according to Burton.

The towing charge for smaller vehicles is $50 during the day, $75 at night. For larger vehicles the price jumps to $60 during the day and $85 dollars at night. The vehicles are taken to Dana's, 1994 E. First St., Tempe.

A February 1984 Arizona Supreme Court decision establishes that towing companies do not have a lien on the vehicle towed, and therefore are required to release the car to its owner without the towing fee being paid. Towing companies which refuse to release the vehicles can be charged with theft.

However, vehicle owners are legally obligated to pay the fee in full and failure to do so can result in their being taken to small claims court.

Dana's contract will expire at the end of the University fiscal year, on June 30, but Burton said he foresees no problem with renewing it.

Neither ASU nor Dana Towing receives any monetary compensation for the contract. According to Burton, it is a service to ASU, and the full cost for Dana Towing is being borne by the vehicle owners.

Burton added that the same towing policy at Tempe Center will continue throughout the regular school year.

College name change stirs controversy

By the College Press Service

LAFAYETTE, La. — A situation reminiscent of the 1958 Arizona State College/University name-change controversy is unfolding in Louisiana.

A Louisiana legislative committee approved a bill that will keep the University of Southwestern Louisiana from changing its name to the University of Louisiana, a change administrators believed would help recruit students and faculty members.

The state Board of Trustees abruptly voted in early May to change the name of USL to the University of Louisiana in order to help recruit better faculty members.

The change was a big hit with campus administrators, who immediately commissioned workers to begin removing the "S" from USL signs on campus and who ordered new stationery, and students, some of whom began sporting t-shirts with cardboard pasted over the "S" of the logo.

The school also printed University of Louisiana diplomas to be handed out at graduation this week.

But protest off campus was also immediate.

Louisiana State University is "very much alarmed by the intent of the name change and where it will lead," LSU Chancellor James Wharton said.

Wharton said the public could mistake the University of Louisiana for a comprehensive university on the order of LSU, and could cost LSU when it tries to lobby in the legislature for more money.

"The University of Louisiana has no ambitions to be a comprehensive university," according to Mike Maher, the school's news director. The name change will just "make the school competitive in computer science and other technological fields."

Moreover, "professors want to go to big-name schools. The old name sounds like a small school from a small part of the state. Professors don't apply here because they assume that a school with a name like that would not be a research institution," Maher said.

"I can't envision LSU being threatened by this name," Ray Authement, president of either USL or UL, told a state Senate committee.

The committee, however, adopted a measure scuttling the name change for the moment.

"The name change puts one university ahead of the others at the disadvantage of the others, and that is wrong," said Sen. Cliff Newman, sponsor of the bill opposing the name change.

The bill must be approved by the entire legislature, but observers expect a compromise will emerge before then.

Under the proposed compromise, the University of Louisiana would get most of what it wants, but eight other campuses in the state system would also have to change their names.

Folks at the old Southeastern Louisiana campus remain optimistic they can keep their new name, despite the prospect of having to share it with eight other schools.

"It's a fait accompli," Maher said.

Some suggest the school may end up in court if the legislature doesn't compromise on the issue.

Student alcohol abuse debate centers on effective programs

By the College Press Service

PITTSBURGH — Most of the student drinking abuse prevention programs on the nation's campuses aren't working well, according to a University of Pittsburgh psychology professor.

A thorough review of the programs presents "no evidence that anything that has been done works in changing attitudes, knowledge or behavior," said Howard Blane, a professor of education and psychology at Pitt.

Blane's criticism of existing campus programs caused a major stir at the recent convention of the American College Health Association in Atlanta, if only because so many campuses have begun abuse prevention programs in recent years.

Almost 80 percent of the nation's colleges now have some kind of program, a Radford University survey recently found.

That represents an increase of some 300 colleges between 1978 and 1982.

Blane, however, is questioning whether the programs are doing any good. He says they are often directed at the wrong people.

"For every 100 youngsters in college, 70 to 80 percent drink in ways that are not hazardous," he said. "You want to focus on the other 20 to 30 percent. But all college programs focus on the student body as a whole. Yet most students, rightly, don't see themselves as problem drinkers."

Problem drinkers often don't see themselves as problem drinkers, either, and aren't likely to benefit from programs that "say, 'Call the counseling center.' Research shows that students with substance abuse disorders don't use counseling centers very much," Blane added.

As proof, he points to a federally funded program at the University of Massachusetts-Amherst.

After five years, research showed that student problem drinkers got drunk an average of four times a month instead of five times.

But Blane is "focusing on just one part of our evaluation," according to Dr. David Kraft, head of UMass's health services and of the campus alcohol abuse prevention program.

He argues the program helped make other, more subtle changes in student drinking habits.

"Individual reported drinking behavior didn't decrease," he said, "but in the dorms, there were changes." The kinds of refreshments served at dorm parties changed, students confronted drinking students more frequently over disruptive behavior, and traffic at the counseling center increased, he pointed out.

"Blane is right in criticizing this (educational) approach if it stops there," said Dr. Peter Claydon, director of the University of California at Santa Barbara's Alcohol and Drug Awareness Program.

An awareness, educational program "can be like a drop in the ocean," he said.

"Ideally, if you give students information, they would make responsible (drinking) decisions," Claydon said. "But there are some students for whom this doesn't work."

Blane's convention attack on campus prevention programs was widely interpreted as an attack on BACCHUS, one of the biggest of the awareness programs.

BACCHUS (Boost Alcohol Consciousness Concerning the Health of University Students) is now on some 153 campuses, according to Gerrardo Gonzales, assistant dean of student services at the University of Florida and BACCHUS's national coordinator.

Gonzales said BACCHUS's rapid growth over the last two years is "evidence" that campus attitudes are changing.

He readily agrees awareness of abuse problems probably isn't enough to change behavior.

"There are a number of options, but they must be tied together into a comprehensive program" if they're to change student behavior, he said. "Tightening policies won't do it alone. Awareness measures won't do it alone. Balance is needed. Programs are beginning to evolve in this direction."

At UMass, for example, tougher rules now hold students responsible for their drunk behavior, Kraft said.

"Drinking is no longer considered a mitigating circumstance," he said. "It is no longer 'If you were drunk you won't be held accountable.' The student has to take responsibility for the consequences of his drinking."

"There's a lot of effort, much wasted," Claydon said. "Blane's plea is to harness energy, use more refined ways" to moderate campus drinking.

"I suggest that programs should look at the students who have problems, and put them in a high-intensity program, rather than focus on the entire student body," Blane said. "The entire student body is not at risk."

Infamous, bloodsucking Count flies on ASU stage

"Dracula," a dramatization of Bram Stoker's world-famous horror classic, will be staged in the ASU Music Theatre June 21-23 by ASU Theatre.

Director David Vining said "Dracula" was selected for production because "it's a fun show to do and a fun show to see. Our aim is to recapture the spirit of old-fashioned theatricality and give our audiences a stylish two hours of pure entertainment."

Jeffrey Thomson, scene designer for ASU Theatre, has designed a wing-and-drop set painted on black velour and Rebecca Akins has created flamboyant costumes in a 1918 silhouette. The production will be underscored in melodrama fashion by organ music selected, arranged and played by Janet Snyder.

"We are unabashedly out to have a good time," producer Bill Akins said. "It's too hot to think."

Featured actors include Ric Smolenski as Count Dracula, Erin Garrett as Lucy Seward, Martin English as Renfield, Susan Holovnia as Miss Wells, Jonathon Simpson as Jonathon Harker, William Dobkin as Abraham Van Helsing and James Yeater as Dr. Seward.

Curtain time is at 8 p.m. Thursday through Saturday, with a 2 p.m. matinee Saturday. General admission tickets are priced at $5 for the public and $4 for students and senior citizens. Tickets can be reserved by calling the ASU Theatre Box Office.

Count Dracula (Ric Smolenski), seen here hailing a cab, will appear on the ASU Music Theatre stage tonight, Friday and Saturday.

Parton, Stallone pair up in predictable comedy effort

By M.D. Tyree
Contributing writer

Have you ever gone out of your way to do something you don't enjoy just for the sake of seeing how much you don't enjoy it?

Do you love to hate? Personally, I've found myself loving to hate "Real People," lima beans, Debby Boone, and Coors Light — in order of importance. This was my overall attitude as I made my way down Scottsdale Road toward the Kachina Theatre to view the movie "Rhinestone" starring (of all people) Dolly Parton and Sylvester Stallone. "I just know I'm gonna hate this movie and boy, am I looking forward to it," I told myself.

Yes folks, hard to believe isn't it? Dolly Parton and Sylvester Stallone in one fantastic feature film. But we shouldn't be surprised (should we?) after seeing such ridiculous combos as Paul McCartney/Michael Jackson and Willie Nelson/Julio Iglesias. Parton and Stallone seem to fit in with this "Odd Couple" trend.

"Rhinestone" is a comedy about a rising country star, Jake Ferris (Dolly Parton), who finds herself trapped in a three-year contract with a popular NYC cowboy bar, The Rhinestone. The big question here is what's a promising country star doing in the Big Apple? Especially if she is from Tennessee to begin with. Oh well, everyone has to start somewhere and after all, it's only a movie. Let's not be critical. Yet.

In a vain effort to terminate her contract, Jake Ferris bets the owner, Freddie Ugo (Ron Leibman), that she can take any person off the street and convert him into a born again... uh, country star. Enter one Nick Martinelli (Sylvester Stallone). Nick is your so-called typical NYC cab driver who becomes Jake's candidate for a future country star. If she succeeds, she will be freed from the confines of the Rhinestone and Ugo's constant bird-dogging.

To reach her goal, Jake hauls her capture off to Tennessee for a fun-filled, two-week vacation. You can bet the hometown is filled with all types of volunteers (after all, it is the Volunteer State) who are willing to help good old St. Nick become a real-McCoy, country-singing cowboy. And it's in Tennessee that the real fun begins with Nick's crash course in Cowboy Etiquette 101.

Sounds pretty hokey on the surface. Surprisingly enough though, Parton and Stallone fit very well into their given roles

... and why shouldn't they? Parton plays a country star at a local level, second nature to her, and Stallone plays the usual jar-head which he is anyway. (Rumor has it, however, that Sly will be a nuclear physicist in his upcoming movie, "Conan, the Atom Smasher." Just kidding, kids.)

Needless to say (but I'll say it anyway), the movie has more than its share of comedy — some of which is predictable — and is loaded with Bob Hope one-liners.

One scene, in particular, follows a predictable pattern at first. The day has come to a close and all the lights are going out in the house as it is viewed from the outside, just like the Waltons. Get the picture? As the lights are going out, the usual exchange of "goodnights" begins. Just when you expect to hear someone say, "goodnight John-Boy," Stallone interrupts with a solemn "God, I hate hillbillies."

Stallone's harsh New York City accent consistently clashes with the twang of the Tennessee folk. He adds further contrast by parading around in his designer t-shirts as opposed to overalls, army boots and corn cob pipes.

May I add here that never since the production of "Hee Haw" will you find a larger group of hayseeds than in this movie.

And just in case you wondered about Sly actually singing country... sad to say, he really does sing and it's not too bad of a job considering what the voice instructors had to work with. Too bad they didn't teach him how to dance after taking all that time teaching him to sing.

How does it rate? For $5, you'll get $2.50 worth, or 2½ roses, or 2.345 stars, or... oh hell, check it out yourself. Me, I'll give it three lima beans.

Nick Martinelli (Sylvester Stallone, pictured here with his submarine sandwich) chats with Jake Ferris (Dolly Parton, pictured here with her... uh... hat) in one of "Rhinestone's" more suggestive scenes.

- "A Gallery of Beauties" is the result when the University Art Collections presents an exhibition of prints by 12 master print-makers depicting beautiful women, in the Matthews Center Gallery through July 29.
- The Boulton Collection of Musical Instruments, collected from around the world, can be viewed from 11 a.m. to 4 p.m., Monday through Friday on the fifth floor of the Music Building.

June 22

- Four outstanding performers who helped shape the course of American music in the 1950s and 1960s — Tom Paxton, Josh White Jr., Bob Gibson and the wonderful Odetta — will perform folk and blues music at the Scottsdale Center for the Arts at 8 p.m. June 22 and 23. Tickets are $12 and $14.
- Something called "A Woman in Flames" begins its one-week run at the Valley Art tonight. It's apparently X-rated and Newsweek called it "crisp, kinky and unforgettable," but we haven't actually seen it. The co-feature through Mon., June 25 is "Nea, the Young Emmanuelle," and for the rest of the week "Matrisse" will play alongside "A Woman in Flames."
- "The boys are back!!" says the Janus Theatre Co., which once again is presenting "The Boys in the Band" at 8 p.m. June 22, 23, 28, 29 and 30, and at 2 p.m. June 24 in the Arts Council Center, 302 W. Latham in Phoenix. Tickets are $5, available at R. Hegyi, 5150 N. Seventh St. in Phoenix, and Womansplace Bookstore, Fifth Street and Mill Avenue in Tempe.

June 23

- The final production of the ASU Summer Children's Theatre Festival, "On the Road to Edo," will play through Tues., June 26 in ASU's Lyceum Theatre. Curtain times will be 10 a.m. and 2 p.m. June 23, 2 p.m. June 24, and 10 a.m. June 25 and 26. Tickets are $2.50 at the Gammage, Diamonds and Lyceum box offices.

June 24

- It'll probably be real hot outside, so why not just stay home and watch KAET-TV, Channel 8? Sunday's programing includes the ever-fascinating "A Walk Through the 20th Century With Bill Moyers," which takes a look at "Post-War Hopes, Cold War Fears" at 3 p.m. Following "Nova" and "Danny Wilson's After School (?) Special," comes "Strokes of Genius," profiling Willem de Kooning, one of America's great artists. The rest of the evening features "Living Wild," "Masterpiece Theatre," "Monty Python's Flying Circus," and a "Dr. Who Movie."

June 25

- Top comedy skits from the Jackie Gleason Show of the 1950s will be compiled in "The Best of Gleason," at 4:30 p.m. and 9:30 p.m. on KAET-TV, Channel 8.

June 26

- Say, this sounds wacky! "Swan Lake Minnesota," which appears to defy logic by setting Tchaikovsky's classic 19th century ballet in America's golden heartland, airs at 9 p.m. on KAET-TV, Channel 8. Should be guffaws galore!

June 27

- The third installment of Richard Wagner's towering, monumental and generally sprawling "Der Ring des Nibelungen" is repeated on KAET-TV, Channel 8 at 6:30 p.m. Tonight's foray into the mystical world of Teutonic legend, titled "Siegfried" (with no dots over any letters), continues the story of the powerful Ring and the various forces conspiring to nab it. The music? Well, Mark Twain once commented, "Wagner's music is better than it sounds," but we think it sounds just great... and there's so much of it!

Pat Sajak, star of stage and screen (well, screen), can be seen not once, not twice, but 10 times a week on your local TV tube! Why is he seen here, you ask? Good question.

Wrangler win will send George's boys to the playoffs

By Jerry Brown
Staff writer

The light at the end of the tunnel has brightened for the Arizona Wranglers as they strive for a playoff spot that a few weeks ago seemed remote at best.

The Wranglers' 36-0 pasting of the nearly-defunct Chicago Blitz last Friday gave Arizona (9-8) its third victory in a row and a chance to control its own destiny. A victory Saturday in Sun Devil Stadium over the Los Angeles Express would give Arizona the wild card berth in the Western Conference and keep Head Coach George Allen's streak of winning seasons intact.

The Wranglers scored on the first play from scrimmage when quarterback Greg Landry connected with running back Tim Spencer on a 78-yard scoring play. The TD reception was the first of the year for Spencer, and the first for a non-wide receiver on the club.

The Wranglers scored again midway through the opening quarter on a five yard run by Kevin Long. Several of the Blitz's defenders seemed in position to make the stop on Long, but he eluded all of them and scooted into the end zone.

Two Frank Corral field goals, a safety on a quarterback sack and a Landry touchdown pass to tight end Paul Ricker gave Arizona a 26-0 halftime bulge.

The Blitz's gnat-like attack was nonexistent as high-priced quarterback Vince Evans spent most of the evening overthrowing receivers while trying to avoid a tenacious Wrangler pass rush.

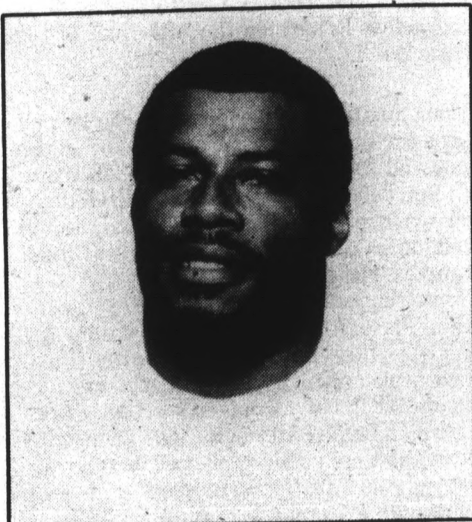

Allen said the game was a turning point for his team.

"We are now the Arizona Wranglers," he said. "All of the things that happened in Chicago are in the past."

Grid Talk — Long needs only 14 yards against the Express this weekend to reach

1,000 for the season. Spencer already has reached the plateau, and if Long follows suit it will be the second year the backfield tandem both have rushed for 1,000 yards.

If the Wranglers are beaten by the Express, both the Denver Gold and the Michigan Panthers would have to lose their final games for Arizona to squeak into the playoffs. Denver plays the streaking Oakland Invaders, while Michigan has a much easier task in the Chicago Blitz. Sun Devil Stadium also will be the site Saturday for the return of former valley disc jockey Jonathan Brandmeier and the Leisure Suits who are in town for a weekend swing on the current "world tour." The Express already has clinched the Pacific Division, even though a victory by the Wranglers would give Arizona the same record as Los Angeles. The Express' better record against teams in the division (4-2 vs. 2-4 for Arizona) gives them the nod.

Draft deal fails; Suns use pick on Colorado guard

By Jerry Brown
Staff writer

The Phoenix Suns, which failed to swing a deal for a higher draft pick, selected Colorado guard Jay Humphries as its first-round selection in Tuesday's NBA draft.

Rumors were circulating in the days leading up to the draft that the Suns were hoping to trade with the San Antonio Spurs for the seventh selection in the first round, but instead, the Texas team used the pick to select guard Alvin Robertson. Center Alvan Adams was said to be the major focus of the trade talks.

Suns General Manager Jerry Colangelo said Humphries will fit right into the Suns' system.

"We've been considering him from the very start," Colangelo said. "He's our man." Humphries will join current Suns guards Walter Davis, Kyle Macy, Rod Foster and veteran Paul Westphal.

The Houston Rockets opened the draft with no surprises as they selected University of Houston center Akeem Olajuwon. Olajuwon will team with current Rocket center and last year's number one pick, Ralph Sampson, in the Houston front court.

The Portland Trailblazers seized Kentucky's Sam Bowie as the number two pick. College basketball player of the year Michael Jordan was picked third by the Chicago Bulls, while teammate Sam Perkins was snatched up on the fourth pick by the Dallas Mavericks.

Philadelphia followed by taking Auburn's Charles Barkley, while the Washington Bullets chose the second Wildcat in the first round, grabbing center Melvin Turpin.

After the Spurs took Robertson, the Golden State Warriors made Louisville guard Lancaster Gordon the eighth selection in the first round.

Thoughts on NBA, the miracle of media and Jack Nicholson's pals

Jerry Brown
Staff writer

Well, now that all basketball fans have taken a week off to catch their breath and mow their lawns after another slugfest known as the NBA championship, the time has come to put a few things into perspective.

I think the Lakers found another way to hurt the Suns' fans during the Boston series by showing how close Phoenix was to a world championship. Every Los Angeles deficiency (strength, outside shooting, etc.) was a Phoenix strong point. Thoughts of Maurice Lucas destroying Kevin McHale and Cedrick Maxwell are almost too hard to take.

Wait until next year. But getting back to reality, watching the series was much easier than listening to the announcing team of Dick Stockton and Tom Heinsohn. I never thought anyone would make me long for Brent Musburger's cheerleading, but that duo of dullness came real close.

Overlooking the point that Stockton was weaned in Beantown and Heinsohn spent two decades playing and coaching for the Celtics, they were just plain boring.

If I heard Heinsohn talk about the Boston Mystic one more time I would have hit the mute button (a joke for us guys with cable TV).

The halftime shows featuring Brent, Kevin Loughery and the mascot of whoever was the home team were about as exciting as root canal work. Together with Pat O'Brien (the poor man's Jack Whitaker), these men tell us everything we never wanted to know about Kareem Abdul-Jabbar. But tunnel vision has been CBS's problem since they started covering this sport.

During the regular season, the NBA consists of three teams: the Boston Celtics, the Los Angeles Lakers and the Philadelphia 76ers. If you live in Detroit, Denver, or Phoenix, the only chance you have of seeing your teams play is if they play one of the three "heavy market" teams.

If NBC or ABC tried to cover baseball by only showing teams from sports mecca areas, they would be in the same boat CBS is in with basketball: low ratings, sagging interest and people like me writing nasty stuff about them.

And 80 some odd games later when playoff time does roll around, the teams themselves are divided into two categories: superstars and nonsuperstars.

The features always star Magic, Kareem, or Larry Bird. The commercials between the features star — you guessed it — our same three friends.

I want to hear more about the little people. After all, they're the players who win games. Gerald Henderson's game-winning steal in game two and M.L. Carr's game-saving steal in game five have been swept under the parquet-floor. Boston was on the ropes until these two more than supplemented a lackluster performance from the Celtic starters.

In game six, it was the Lakers' turn to worry. But Byron Scott bailed out the big money boys by doing something they could not accomplish all series long: make an outside jump shot.

And when the final game came to Boston Garden and CBS and an assortment of writers had long since decided that Bird would be the MVP, Dennis Johnson, Danny (Rocky) Ainge and Maxwell were the players that held off the potential Laker comeback.

If the NBA hopes to survive on television past their current contract they need to take a more active role in what the viewer sees on spring Sundays.

If the same three teams with the same six or seven stars continue to monopolize the television screen, even the most avid basketball fans will be driven to where I have been for some time — the point of boredom.
