

ASU laboratory ready for testing in case of nuclear plant mishap

By MARY ANNE PEREZ
Staff Writer

If the Palo Verde Nuclear Generating Station were to encounter an accident, an ASU laboratory would test radiation levels in the surrounding area.

Since the nuclear plant has not yet been put into operation, the chance of the Radiation Measurements Facility being used for such testing is slim at best, according to nuclear engineering research assistant John Haldane.

"In the event that there would ever be an emergency, which is highly unlikely, we'd do the testing for them," Haldane said.

For now the facility, located in the Engineering Center D Wing, is being used as an experimental lab for nuclear engineering students and a testing site for measuring the 7,000 square miles surrounding Palo Verde.

Haldane uses the laboratory regularly to test radiation levels in milk and water near the nuclear plant. Milk and water are used because they are easily accessible, can be stored indefinitely and are relatively easy to break down chemically, Haldane said.

Samples of milk from nearby dairies and water from hoses and irrigation pumps in the area near Palo Verde are gathered to keep track of any variations in radiation levels, he said.

The radiation readings are kept on file so differences can be measured and reasons for any discrepancies can be studied, Haldane said.

In addition to the testing done in conjunction with Palo Verde, the lab is used by private companies who pay a fee to test their products.

Motorola uses the lab's gamma cell to test deterioration on electronic components due to radiation, Haldane said.

Some of the student experiments include testing the amount of radiation received from dental X-rays.

Students also ran tests on flight attendants to determine how much radiation is received on transcontinental flights, he said.

Study of west-side campus location funded

By SHERRY LOWE
Staff Writer

An allocation of $400,000 will be used to study the land area slated for the third ASU branch campus, a University official said.

"The money will be used for a study of the land and to decide the kinds of buildings we'd like to use," said Gerie Lerner Leshin, director of off-campus marketing.

The $400,000 allocation was announced by ASU President J. Russell Nelson at the annual president's breakfast Sept. 4. The Regents approved the funds during their July meeting.

The study of the land area will be conducted to give the administration an idea how much funding they should request from the legislature, Leshin said.

According to Executive Vice President Paige Mulhollan, a $1 million appropriation was approved last year by lawmakers and was matched with $900,000 from the ASU budget for all west-side branch campuses.

ASU-West refers to the two existing ASU branch campuses, Alhambra and Metro, as well as the proposed location at 43rd Avenue and Thunderbird Road.

Mulhollan said the $1.9 million was allocated to study the types of programs that would be offered at ASU-West locations.

"The $400,000 for site planning is part of the $1.9 million which the Regents awarded last year," Mulhollan said.

"The rest of the $1.9 million will be used to support instruction for the 1984-85 school year," he said.

"The money will be used for a study of the land and to decide the kinds of buildings we'd like to use,"
said Gerie Lerner Leshin, director of off-campus marketing.

Mulhollan said after the 1984-1985 fiscal year, ASU will request more funding from the legislature.

The faculty at ASU's main campus has helped the programs at ASU-West locations by instructing classes in Tempe and at the two branch campuses in western Phoenix.

According to Leshin, part of the $1.9 million will be used for an Instructional Television Fixed Service (ITFS) to be installed at the Alhambra location in the Spring of 1985.

"Students at (Alhambra) can take classes by television and talk to professors on the phone," said Leshin.

Betty Craft, ASU's Instructional Television Coordinator, said the ITFS program actually began in the fall of 1982.

"It was broadcast live from different electronic firms," Craft said.

She said a few of the electronic firms holding televised classes are Motorola, Honeywell, Sperry and Goodyear.

Other firms participating in the program are the Government Electronic Group, General Telephone & Electric, Rogers Corporation, GenRad and Intel.

Craft said most of the courses offered by television will be in engineering, with a few offered in business and liberal arts.

"The firms have expressed an interest to continue holding televised classes at their locations after the programs have started at the Alhambra location," Craft said.

University grants, contracts up 41 percent this year

By VICKIE CHACHERE
Staff Writer

Grants and contracts awarded to ASU have increased by 41 percent during the 1984 fiscal year, according to the Office of Research and Sponsored Program Administration.

ASU received $27.6 million in grants and contracts during 1984, an increase of $8.1 million from 1983.

Awards from private sources more than tripled during that time. More than $9 million was granted by the private sector in the 12 months ending June 30.

"Some of it could be that we are getting more awards from industry," Assistant Vice President of Research Harold Hunnicutt said. "Primarily the private sector includes industries."

Hunnicutt said the College of Engineering has been receiving a substantial amount of the private-sector grants.

Research programs were awarded the largest share of the grants, with $15.2 million going for various projects.

"It's no question it's due to the faculty, both established researchers and the bright new people we've added," Hunnicutt said.

"It's also due to the support we've added from the Legislature relative to our development as a research university," Hunnicutt said.

The College of Liberal Arts received the largest amount of research funding with $10.8 million in grants. The College of Awards from private sources more than tripled during the last year to more than $9 million.

Engineering received $9.2 million, an increase of $4.2 million over 1983.

The College of Liberal Arts always has led in receiving funds, Hunnicutt said.

"This is in line with our fairly dramatic growth," Assistant Dean of the College of Engineering Charles Backus said.

"We have been involved in a major buildup in the engineering college. It has involved about $40 million in contributions between the state and private sector. Over one-half has come from the private sector," Backus said.

Nearly $4 million went toward projects connected with the Center for Solid State Science.

Approximately $3.9 million went to instruction, with more than $1.3 million going toward the establishment of a National Indian Bilingual Center at ASU.

U of A tests drug to control effects of Parkinson's disease

TUCSON (AP) — An experimental drug that appears to control the disabilities of Parkinson's disease without severe side effects is being tested at the University of Arizona.

"The majority of the 12 patients who have been enrolled in the study here since March have improved to a significantly better functional level," Dr. Stuart R. Snider, associate professor of neurology and pharmacology and medical director of the American Parkinson's Disease Association at the university, said Monday.

Similar tests are being conducted at five other medical centers around the country, he said.

In its advanced stages, Parkinson's disease results in slowed, spastic movements, slurred speech, drooping posture, tremors, and memory loss.

U of A researchers declined to name the new drug, saying this was at the request of both the U.S. Food and Drug Administration and the drug's manufacturer, because "statements cannot be made about its efficacy during drug testing."

Airline officials agree to reduce prime-time flights

WASHINGTON (AP) — Airline officials reached final agreement Monday on shifting flights from peak travel periods to ease congestion at the Atlanta airport and John F. Kennedy International and LaGuardia airports in New York.

But negotiators, meeting day-long at a suburban Virginia motel under the auspices of the Federal Aviation Administration, bogged down on proposals to alleviate flight delays at a third metropolitan New York airport, Newark Airport in New Jersey.

Industry officials said scheduling changes at Newark were the most difficult to resolve because of reluctance by People Express, which is in the midst of an expansion program, to reduce its flights during the most popular hours of the day.

Social Security agency tries to improve image, credibility

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Social Security Administration said Monday its credibility before federal courts is "at an all-time low" because of its poor handling of a rising tide of disability lawsuits, including its policy of defending any benefit cutoff or denial regardless of the facts.

The agency outlined a series of steps it will take to alleviate "the major crisis" confronting it in litigation. Among the remedies is a pilot project in which the agency will try to weed out "poorly defensible cases," instead of fighting every ruling to restore disability benefits.

The agency released a sharply worded internal report by a task force set up last spring to address the litigation problem. It said there are now 50,000 Social Security cases pending in the federal courts, up from fewer than 20,000 at the end of 1981, and 28,000 cases are being filed in fiscal 1984 alone.

No merger for British parties

BUXTON, England (AP) — Leaders of Britain's Social Democratic Party on Monday ruled out a merger with their ally, the Liberals, but vowed to preserve the alliance, saying neither party could survive alone.

A speech by Social Democratic President Shirley Williams appeared aimed at satisfying a growing sentiment among the centrist party's supporters in favor of a merger.

"Divided, we cannot prevail in a harsh political climate," Mrs. Williams said at her party's annual conference.

She apparently referred to the three-year-old alliance's poor performance in the 1983 general election and the European Parliament election last June.

Dollar reaches record values

NEW YORK (AP) — Foreign-exchange dealers ignored a drop in U.S. interest rates Monday and again pushed the dollar to record peaks against several European currencies.

The dollar climbed to all-time highs against the British pound, French franc and Italian lira, and it rose above three West German marks for the first time since early 1973.

police report

University Police reported the following incidents in the 24-hour period ending at 6 a.m. Monday:

- A man entered the backyard of the Sigma Alpha Epsilon fraternity house Monday morning and attempted to steal the fraternity's television, Sgt. Garry Dirks said. The man, who was spotted by a fraternity member, put the television down and drove away. The fraternity member recorded the car's license plate number and contacted the University Police. Dirks said the man was booked at the ASU Police Department and charged with attempted theft. He was released on his own recognizance to await a court appearance, Dirks said.
- A man and a woman not affiliated with ASU were arrested late Sunday night at a - country western concert in Gammage Center and charged with aggravated assault, resisting arrest and disorderly conduct, police said. The man was arrested after hitting an ASU employee, according to police reports. As he was being escorted to a police car, the woman began beating an ASU police officer with her fists, police said. Police said both subjects were drunk. They were booked into the Tempe City Jail and arraigned Monday morning. They are being held at the Maricopa County Jail in Phoenix, police said.

- An ASU student fell and struck a cement ledge and a garbage can on the west sidewalk by Manzanita Hall Sunday morning. Tempe Fire Department paramedics responded and determined the student had chipped his tooth and received a minor cut to his upper lip. He was transported to Tempe St. Luke's Hospital for further examination, police said.

- A total of $1,060, two wallets, two checkbooks and various IDs were reported stolen from a room on the seventh floor of Palo Verde East early Sunday morning, police said. Two ASU students left their room to attend the ASU football game, and found the items missing upon their arrival. A check for $800 made out to ASU, and $260 cash were included in the theft.
- A 1983 spring-fall photograph composite valued at $900 was reported stolen from the Kappa Sigma fraternity house chapter room late Sunday night.
- A blue cloth purse valued at $20 was reported stolen from the ASU Bookstore Sunday afternoon. According to police reports, the purse contained $50 cash, a driver's license, an ASU ID and a gold chain valued at $200.
- A window at the Delta Sigma Phi fraternity house was broken Sunday afternoon by a volleyball from another fraternity, Sigma Alpha Epsilon fraternity

- members agreed to pay the $22 damages.
- Police said an ASU student told them his silver 1980 BMW was damaged during a large fight at the Sigma Nu fraternity house early Sunday morning. One man got another into a headlock and rammed his head into the side of the car, causing a minor concave indentation on the right side and $50 damage, police said.
- A man in Lot 59 made comments to a woman about her daughter as the two women were leaving the ASU football game Saturday night, police said. The mother told the man to stop, but he continued until she threw a drink in his face. The man then slapped her face, and she attempted to slap him back, police said. The man left the area and the woman notified police.
- A 25-inch color Quasar television valued at $400 was reported stolen from the living room of the Phi Gamma Delta fraternity house early Sunday, police said.

Financial aid office distributes fall funds without confusion

By PATRICK J. KUCERA
Staff Writer

The Student Financial Assistance Office did not face any major problems or receive serious complaints about the distribution of financial aid, said the director of Student Financial Assistance.

"All areas went smoothly," Paul Barberini said. "This is probably one of the best school openings."

Barberini said except there were only minor complaints, with the biggest problem a "glitch" in the computer system Aug. 27. He said the network went down in the late morning, but added that the students "reacted to it in an orderly way." He said the computer was fixed in the early afternoon.

However, some students in line at Matthews Center Monday said they had experienced problems concerning the amount of awards, mix-ups in computer processing and difficulty in returning unwanted aid.

One female student, who did not want to be identified, said she had problems getting the University to cancel her National Direct Student Loan, which she returned because she decided to accept a work-study program.

Most students in line Monday said they had no trouble with the financial aid office, but waited to get or apply for aid until the number of people in line had dissipated.

Barberini said people waiting until the lines had shortened is normal since "you have students who are getting some support so they wait until later."

The financial aid office tried to minimize problems by placing staff and computer sites in areas for easy access, such as the MU.

Barberini said the University virtually has eliminated all major problems in the financial aid office, and ASU is in a better position than it was last year.

"In 1983, we turned the corner," Barberini said, adding that he thinks the new computer system is part of the greater efficiency.

Financial aid still is available, but is limited to Pell Grants, which are based on family income, Guaranteed Student Loans (GSL), parent loans, and hourly employment on campus, Barberini said.

He also said off-campus jobs are available, but those are handled by the Career Services Office.

Barberini said he was surprised at how few problems there were, especially with the new "satisfactory academic progress rule," which requires students to complete at least 24 credit hours per academic year to remain eligible for aid.

"We found that those students (who did not comply with the new rule) made up their deficiencies in summer school," Barberini said.

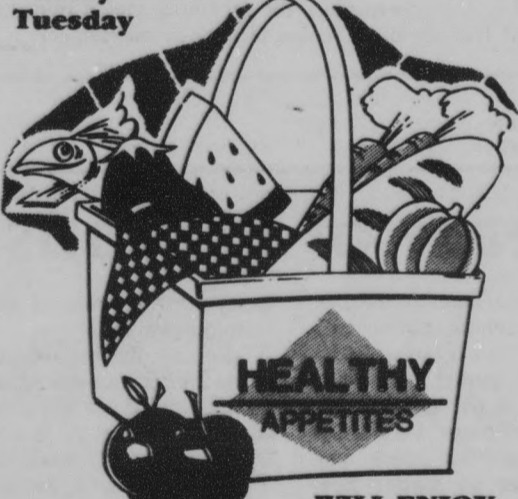

He said any student having trouble with the financial aid system should direct complaints to his office.

West 'campus' funds?

Last spring, state legislators appropriated $1 million to establish and fund a campus on the west side of Phoenix. This allocation was increased by $900,000 from ASU's budget.

According to Rep. Sterling Ridge (R-Glendale) at the time, the west-side campus would eventually accommodate about 112,000 students. Ridge called the students on the west side of the Valley "geographically disadvantaged" by their distance from ASU's Tempe campus.

Now, $400,000 has been allocated to study the area where the ASU-West campus will be located and to decide what kind of buildings will be designed there. After the study, school officials plan to ask the Legislature for more money to continue west-side campus development.

Meanwhile, the $1.9 million will be used to fund instruction for the 1984-85 school year, and to install an Instructional Television Fixed Service (ITFS) at the ASU/Alhambra branch. What happened to the idea of the money being appropriated for an ASU west-side campus? The funds were not meant for programs at the Alhambra, Metrocenter and 43rd Avenue and Thunderbird Road locations, all of which are now considered "ASU-West."

The money appropriated by the Legislature originally was meant to fund only a west-side campus, not the ASU branch campuses already existing. As University officials continue to ask the Legislature for more money to establish a west-side campus, some questions arise: how long will it take before an ASU west-side campus exists, and how much do University officials want to develop that campus?

Media unfair to the accused

Patrick J. Kucera
Staff Writer

Tragedy often strikes when times seem at their happiest. And often, such tragedy strikes close to home.

On a lazy summer afternoon, in our little college town, Christy Ann Fornoff went collecting for her paper route as she had done so many times before. Her mother waited outside an apartment complex as Christy went in to collect her pay.

When she failed to reappear, her mother became concerned. Hours passed and Christy's parents were very worried.

Two days later, Christy's body was found behind a garbage dumpster at the apartment complex.

Christy had been molested and strangled to death. Tempe police arrested the apartment maintenance man, Don Beatty, who had found the little girl's body.

What preceded Don Beatty's arrest was confusion and havoc. What followed Beatty's arrest was chaos and mayhem.

When Christy disappeared, Tempe citizens demanded that police search every square inch of the apartment complex, including peoples' homes. Disregarding the basic constitutional rights all people are guaranteed, citizens wanted police to barge into apartments and make thorough searches.

With pressure mounting on them, the police arrested Beatty on the slimmest of circumstantial evidence, seemingly just to quell irate citizens.

It is a shame, too.

As soon as Beatty was arrested, the media, Christy's parents and many people in the Valley launched a vicious attack on Beatty.

Forget the fact that he is innocent until proven guilty. Beatty was arrested — that's all that matters.

Unfortunately, that is not all that matters. Beatty got the royal shaft from everyone, especially the local media.

The first news reports following Beatty's arrest were malicious.

Channels 12, 10 and 3 found out Beatty previously had been arrested in a southern state for receiving stolen merchandise. Well, that obviously makes him the prime suspect.

Let's face facts. If police were to go to "Park 'n' Swap" here in Phoenix, they could arrest about half the people for dealing in stolen goods. That does not make them suspects for other crimes.

Channel 10 even went so far as to interview citizens back east who knew Beatty — they didn't have many kind words about him.

Upon returning to the apartment complex, the media asked Beatty's neighbors what they thought about living next to a "murderer."

Finally, the media got its wish when the grand jury voted to indict Beatty. However, this was one of the closest grand jury votes in Arizona history. Five members of the grand jury could not, after presentation of the evidence, vote to indict Beatty.

Those members said they thought the evidence was not substantial.

Beatty now faces charges of murder, aggravated assault, rape and more.

Please, don't miss my point. I am very sorry a little girl has died a senseless death. But if Beatty is innocent, using him as a scapegoat and putting him through hell will not bring Christy back to life.

Now that Beatty is in custody, the population of the Valley has taken the "Oh, I knew he did it" mentality.

How do these people know it was Beatty who killed Christy? They did not see him do it. They are not members of the grand jury. What makes them experts?

The case now is proceeding to the courts, and the judge in the case has granted a continuance to the prosecution so it can find more evidence.

If Beatty is guilty of the heinous crime, he definitely should pay his debt to society.

But if, as I believe, the state has little or no evidence (which I am forced to conclude by the state's action thus far), Beatty should be released and his name cleared.

Whoever designed the symbol for American justice (the blindfolded lady holding scales) was on the mark. She does not have to see the injustice going on in the state of Arizona.

In the end, Beatty has been crucified by the locals, and he will never be able to receive a fair trial in Maricopa County.

If Beatty is guilty, then I am mistaken. But if he is innocent, maybe this will be a lesson to the people of the Valley that accusations do not make a person guilty, nor do the cries of irate citizens justify hasty and unwarranted police action.

Lone liberal weary of campus conservatism

Editor:

Well, I guess I've reached my limit. For one whole year now, I've scanned the pages of the State Press, frequently encountering articles written about or by the ever-present campus conservatives.

This group of no doubt clean-cut, upstanding young adults seems to be following right in their forefathers' footsteps. Their unfaltering support and borderline blind dedication to the Reagan regime really is something.

It amazes me that college-educated individuals such as these can accept an administration so covert, and so indifferent to the average citizen. The article entitled, "El Salvador aid needed..." is a fine example.

In it, one person was quoted as saying, "We have to put trust in our administration." I couldn't "agree" more. I think we should all just smile, nod our heads and have faith in our leader no matter how wrong his actions are.

This person went on to say there are things going on in El Salvador we don't know about — and shouldn't.

I'm sure Ron would want it that way, too. He seems more than happy to keep all the nasty little secrets of his administration from the people.

Later on in the article another person made the bold statement that if Reagan is so wrong, why don't the American people do something about it. Believe me, if it was legal, I personally would do some about it.

In my opinion, the Reagan administration has removed the American people so effectively from Washington and replaced them with big business that most people could care less.

The road to bureaucratic alienation has been laid masterfully and lies in front of us.

All we have to do is walk.

For the final straw, the article included a comparison of Ronald Reagan to Thomas Jefferson. What a laugh!

Jefferson was an architect, inventor and a respected politician. Reagan is a B-movie actor who hasn't had an original idea since he was elected.

If America is to progress into the future we need a leadership that utilizes new, inspired ideas — not old, worn-out mistakes.

Facing the facts about abortion

Editor:

It appears Mr. McCampbell sees abortion as merely an emotional, religious or Catholic issue.

From his perspective abortion would be a non-issue to all rational, intelligent Americans. However, it appears he missed the issue. The issue is not religious, but moral. The issue is human life.

Functioning societies have always set limits one may not transgress. Thou shalt not kill. Thou shalt not speed. Thou shalt not steal from Uncle Sam on your income tax!

Abortion was such a limit, except for certain well-defined exceptions, in every state in this country before nine old men decided not to take the overwhelming opinion of the biological sciences. Instead, they decided they could not determine when life began.

Perhaps Mr. McCampbell will weigh these facts before making his decision whether a human fetus is a human life, and if so, whether he should wish to oppose the killing of those same humans.

Fact number one: at conception the fetus has a full complement of chromosomes (46 pairs). This single cell needs only time and nourishment to grow into not only a newborn baby, but also a child, or a full-grown man or woman.

Fact number two: before the fetus is eight weeks old it feels pain. Before it is a month old it has a beating heart.

Fact number three: over 13 million fetuses have been aborted since the 1973 Roe vs. Wade decision, twice the number of Jews murdered by the Nazis.

Fact number four: this is not a Catholic issue. It is an issue for Baptists, Mormons, Jews and many others. As you can see, the opposition to abortion is as pluralistic as our society.

Mr. McCampbell — and any others out there who wish to make an informed, rational decision — weigh these facts.

Don't base your decision on selfish emotions or the pursuit of pleasure.

A 'radical' of his day

Editor:

In response to the column by Michael Humphreys, who decided to change his party affiliation to Republican because the Democrats had included just about everyone in their party plank, I have the following response.

One of the best-loved Republicans of all time preached about a government of the people, for the people and by the people of the United States.

This same Republican person advocated a civil rights policy that eventually tore this nation apart.

Before you decide the Republican Party suits your needs, perhaps you should ask yourself whether or not you would have voted for such "radical" legislation. After all, a government of the people, for the people and by the people must include ALL the people ALL of the time otherwise the concept of democracy is lost. This particular person said, "A house divided against itself cannot stand."

By the way, the author of that "radical" legislation was Abraham Lincoln.

Would you have voted for him?

Munsil overlooks value of sports

Editor:

I would like to comment on Len Munsil's opinion column on ASU athletes and education (State Press, Aug. 23).

Although I'm sure Mr. Munsil meant well in stressing the importance of an education, I'm sorry to say this reader took his article as pretty offensive.

College athletes are not all dumb jocks as Mr. Munsil's column seems to insinuate. True, their college enlistment may have been based on their bodies rather than their brains. And yes, the glory of standing before a cheering crowd in a uniform — whether it be football, (which Mr. Munsil favorably discriminated) tennis or baseball, is short-lived heaven.

But where is the written guarantee that anything lasts longer than its moment?

According to Mr. Munsil, without the coveted college degree, an athlete — or anyone for that matter — is a broke, blue-collar worker unhappy and struggling.

Is it written on the diploma that success and happiness come only in air-conditioned offices?

How long does the thrilling title "bachelor of science" last past graduation and a first job? The ideals of success do not always climb a college ladder.

College athletes are no longer cocky airheads only working toward the cover of Sports Illustrated. He or she knows what they're getting into and are willing to gamble.

Mr. Munsil seems to think that all athletes care about are six-figure contracts and media coverage.

How about teamwork, representation and self-pride in accomplishment? Most athletes are pretty humble. They just want the chance to play, and if they make it, that's great. If they don't, at least they know they tried and had the chance.

If a person prefers the I-formation to IBM, let him live his life without the guilt of added pressure that they should do this or do that.

Mr. Munsil commented on the media circus blowing an athlete's priorities out of proportion. Yet, he couldn't resist joining the carnival with a ringmaster's voice.

I am in no way against higher education. I believe in it and pursue it. I also believe an athlete should not dismiss opportunity as a chore. But what good does a photosynthesis process lecture do if it cannot interest the person whose main talent is a home plate slide and not a glass slide?

I say pursue talents in something that interests a person. College isn't always that interesting.

A degree and a brain aren't the only keys to success. A person has to have a heart, too. And his heart should be in his work, whatever it may be. And there is satisfaction in sweat.

Bookstore policy is fair

Editor:

This is an open letter to Lisa Novak.

I am outraged at your letter (Sept. 6) directed towards ASU athletic director Dick Tamburo in regard to the bookstore policy for athletes.

Why are people like you always looking for faults in the athletic department? Athletics at ASU generate revenue not only for the athletic department but for the University as a whole.

Considering the time restraints put upon us, this bookstore service has been a valuable asset. Between classes, practices, meetings, study hall and anything else expected of us, receiving our books in "little doggie bags" gives us one less thing to worry about.

I have a suggestion for you Miss Novak: if standing in line is your issue, avoid peak hours at the bookstore. Non-peak hours occur during our practice time and peak hours occur during our classes. That is the reason why this service is offered to us.

Working in ICA (InterCollegiate Athletics), you should reconsider making such a derogatory statement — unemployment is such a nasty word!

Make way for bike riders

Editor:

Give us bicycle riders a break!! Many of the bicyclists on campus try to stay on the bike paths. Yet how are we supposed to do so when pedestrians are walking on them?

These bike paths are just wide enough for two bicycles to pass side by side, but not wide enough for two bicycles and one or more pedestrians.

The result of these pedestrians walking on "our" bike paths is bike repairs, anywhere from a few dollars for a flat tire to over a $100 to replace the more expensive rims.

This does not take into account any medical costs that may result in case of an accident caused by these pedestrians.

If the ASU Police want to give the bicyclists tickets for riding in unauthorized areas, pedestrians should be ticketed for walking on bike paths and for walking where there are no crosswalks. Pedestrians only have the right of way on sidewalks and crosswalks.

If the ASU Police want the bicyclists to stop riding on sidewalks they should add more bike paths to the entire campus, and have the existing bike paths improved as many are in need of extensive repair.

If the pedestrians keep to "their" sidewalks and the bicyclists keep to "their" bike paths, things will roll along a lot smoother than they do now.

'Outmoded idea' still popular in Kremlin

Editor:

This letter is in response to a letter in the Sept. 5 issue of the State Press titled, "Soviet expansion an outmoded idea."

I must disagree with Thomas Coraggio on his belief that Soviet expansionism is an outmoded idea when Soviet actions show differently.

Yes, the Soviet Union has seen the horror of war and millions of its people killed, but its basic belief, passed down from the earlier leaders, is that all governments in the world must be overthrown until the world is dominated by communism. Its leaders still believe this today.

Coraggio also stated that the USSR extends its influence around the world for its self-protection. I do not believe the Russians arming Cuba and Nicaragua and having communists in power there is protecting the USSR from attack.

Finally, the Soviet military machine has gone beyond the needed force to protect itself in an offensive capability.

So, with possible future unrest in Soviet satellite countries or not, Soviet invasion anywhere in the world is today a possibility.

Personal approach goal of math learning center

By ASHA NATHAN
Staff writer

The line snakes down the passageway, up the stairs, around the corner, through the corridor and nudges the door at the opposite end of the building.

Some students shift from one leg to the other impatiently; some chew on the ends of already well-chewed pencils; some frantically turn the dog-eared pages of their workbooks; and some just stare at the walls.

The time: about 4 p.m.

The place: the basement of the Physical Sciences Center A Wing — more specifically, the testing center of the mathematics department.

The date: the deadline for all pre-calculus math tests.

The testing center is part of the Mathematics Learning Center at ASU, through which all the pre-calculus classes at the University are administered.

Doug Dawson, chief coordinator for the MLC, said when lines get too long at the testing center, an extra room is opened up to accommodate students.

The classes administered through the MLC are taught in a "nontraditional environment," according to Dawson.

Students use a self-instructional workbook and have access to tutoring rooms staffed with instructors and tutors. Attendance at lectures is optional.

The MLC offers about 88 classes in pre-calculus mathematics, in which a total of 4,752 students are enrolled.

Students are required to take placement tests on the first day of class to determine their level of mathematical skill, but the results of the test do not determine whether or not the student remains in the class.

If, after the placement test, students don't feel confident at their class level, they have two weeks to drop back one level.

"For us to be that accommodating for two weeks makes it a very hectic time for the MLC," Dawson said. "So far, we've been able to manage without going insane."

However, Dawson said the MLC is planning to initiate mandatory placement testing for some spring classes, so if students don't pass the test, they cannot enroll in the class.

dropped back one level, Dawson said.

Dawson said one of the main advantages of the system, called the Personalized System of Instruction, is that students can go back and review sections they are having problems with.

"In a traditional system, when students do badly on the first test, they usually do worse on the second and hang it up by the third," he said.

Under ASU's system, students have three tries to achieve the required 80 percent mastery score on each chapter test.

"This provides a greater amount of feedback so students can adjust the energy they devote to the course," Dawson said.

Teresa Arambula, a freshman business major, said she is happy with the PSI method.

"I like it. If you flunk or don't do too well the first time around, you get another chance," Arambula said.

The system also provides the students with a variety of choices, according to Dawson, and was engineered to accommodate students working at an accelerated rate.

"Students also have the freedom to decide if they want a lecture or not," Dawson said.

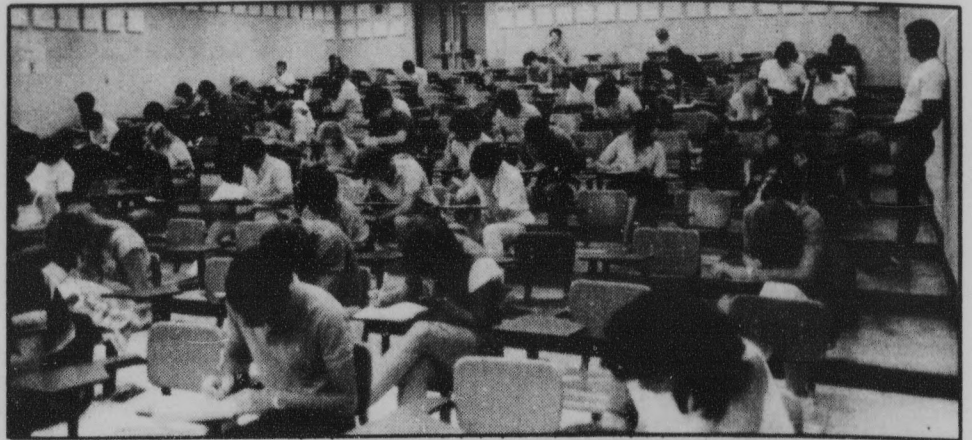

Engineering sophomore Cathy Moser said, "I think it's good they leave it up to the students to keep up on their own."

The emphasis is on the tutoring sessions, according to Dawson.

These are sessions at which tutors explain concepts students might not have understood from the workbook, on a one-on-one basis.

The 60 tutors are generally math, math education or engineering majors and are selected on the basis of their academic backgrounds, placement tests, and communication and tutoring skills.

Dawson said students can attend as many tutoring sessions as they feel necessary, in addition to sessions held at scheduled class times.

Proctor Jim Crever, aerospace engineering major, keeps a watchful eye over the participants of a math exam.

He said the main disadvantage of the system, however, is the "initial start up" for the student.

"Human beings are creatures of habit," Dawson said, and the system might make students uncomfortable in the beginning.

What some students might consider a freedom, others might consider confusing, he said.

During a scheduled class session, a student could be studying in the classroom or at home, or taking a test in the testing center, according to Dawson. Since attendance is not mandatory, a student also has the option to do something completely different.

That students do have problems is illustrated by the drop rate of 61 percent in the introductory level class.

Reuben Reza, a graduate student in music, took a PSI class before he graduated.

"They're not real sympathetic to non-math majors," Reza said. "They don't seem to have enough time to take you through a whole problem. They also tell you at the beginning that if you didn't do very well in high school math, you're not going to make it."

Ron Epperlein, associate coordinator of the MLC, said students at the introductory level are far less motivated than those at the intermediate levels, which could account for the high drop rate.

The MLC offers orientation sessions at the beginning of the semester, providing guidelines for the students.

Dawson said the MLC is sending out information to various academic departments on campus to educate academic counselors about PSI.

Computer science sophomore Nancy Austin said she didn't learn anything in her PSI class last year that she hadn't already learned in high school.

"When I got counseled, I was told to take it," Austin said. "I barely went to class. If the system had been traditional, I might have attended class more often. As it is, I think the system puts too much responsibility on the student."

With the exception of three coordinators and three faculty members, the MLC instructional facility is staffed entirely by graduate teaching assistants majoring in math.

Dawson said the 39 instructors, apart from the faculty members, are all graduate teaching assistants majoring in mathematics.

Mesa Tribune editor Jennings says information act a 'joke'

By W. TIM AHL
Staff Writer

The federal Freedom of Information Act is a "joke," said Max Jennings, executive editor of the Mesa Tribune.

"Don't tell me the Freedom of Information Act in this country works," Jennings said. "We have no ability to find out what is going on in our governments."

Jennings, who works for Arizona Cox Publications, which also owns the Tempe Daily News, the Chandler Arizonan and the Yuma Daily Sun, spoke to members of the Coalition for World Peace Monday in the MU.

He based the lecture on what he called the concept of censorship and press freedom, and the question of whether or not this country has a free press.

"In this, the freest country I know, there are hundreds of laws telling me what I can't do," he said.

Jennings, a former ASU journalism professor, spoke out against a recent Reagan administration action that keeps government employees from making public statements without having them audited by his staff.

The editor said the act "muzzled 100,000 people with the stroke of an executive pen."

He said Reagan, if re-elected, will make it more difficult for the press to gain information from government officials.

"You have to understand the mentality of the Washington bureaucrats," said Jennings. "They like their jobs and they probably won't be courageous enough to talk if they think it will get them in trouble."

Jennings said the press is not the last word of truth as much of the public thinks it is because the press is getting its information from "liars, backstabbers and glory hounds."

"I think that most Americans believe that they know about their government. It is misleading to believe that they are receiving the absolute truth from the media," he said.

The Palo Verde Nuclear Generating Station was used by Jennings as an example of poor sources on a local issue.

He said Keith Turley, chairman of the board and chief executive officer of Arizona Public Service and the controlling partner in Palo Verde, does not know about many of the details of the plant operations.

"How can the press know what's going on at Palo Verde if the chief executive officer doesn't know what's going on?" Jennings asked.

The press "doesn't know what is going on at Palo Verde, in law enforcement, or in city hall," he said.

Although Jennings said the quality of sources in this country is poor, he said the media is better off than it was in the past.

Members of today's media are better educated than before and they have higher moral and ethical standards than their earlier counterparts, said Jennings.

Nightmare

Van Raaphorst's injury pours salt in Devil wounds

By TOM BLODGETT
Sports Editor

ASU football coach Darryl Rogers learned that bad news does indeed come in bunches.

Not only did the Sun Devils suffer their worst defeat since 1947 at the hands of Oklahoma State on Saturday night, but their quarterback, Jeff Van Raaphorst, went down with an apparent knee injury late in the third quarter.

On this play, ASU quarterback Jeff Van Raaphorst was knocked out of the game with a knee injury.

The diagnosis is a strained knee. His status is day-to-day.

Van Raaphorst was walking on the leg — though ever so gingerly — later in the game.

He told reporters after the game that he hoped to be back in practice Monday night.

The injury prematurely ended the long-awaited debut of Van Raaphorst, a sophomore who has been touted by some as a certain star.

It was a rough debut. He completed just 10 of 29 passes with three interceptions.

"I made some mistakes that you won't see," Van Raaphorst said. "Everyone made some. We win as a team; we lose as a team."

Despite the outcome, Van Raaphorst enjoyed just having the chance to play.

"I'm still really excited," he said. "I thank God I can play this game. It was fun."

With Van Raaphorst an uncertainty for Saturday night's contest against San Jose State, the Devils must prepare to be led by another quarterback — either senior Tim Salem or freshman John Walker.

It was Salem who stepped in for Van Raaphorst immediately after the injury. But he did not enjoy himself as much as his fallen peer.

"We're not at the bottom of the barrel; we're underneath it," Salem said. "We have to work a ways just to get in the barrel."

Salem sympathized with Van Raaphorst's plight.

"Injuries are no fun, period," he said. "I know." Salem is still recovering from arm surgery last spring.

He also hoped criticism of Van Raaphorst would be held to a minimum.

"The poor guy's never done anything here but take two snaps," Salem said. "And everything written the last two months has been 'Jeff this and Jeff that.'"

"He's never even had the chance to do anything, which he will someday. But let's wait until he does. Give him a break."

Both quarterbacks were optimistic about ASU's chances to bounce back from the loss.

Staff photos by Michael Conner

Tim Salem stepped in at quarterback for ASU in the first series of the fourth quarter

"I don't think to label us from one game is fair," Van Raaphorst said.

"Look at how many teams lost their first game last year and came back," Salem said, pointing out Miami and Illinois.

Sending up white flag embarrasses ASU tradition

Jerry Brown
Asst. Sports Editor

Sept. 8, 1984 — a date that will live in infamy.

Sort of makes you long for the days of the tie, doesn't it?

But seriously folks, some final thoughts on what will be forever known as the most embarrassing evening in Sun Devil football history:

I won't bore you or make you suffer through the details. The fans hurried away from Sun Devil Stadium Saturday night as if they had witnessed an accident involving a loved one and were too upset to watch anymore.

Fans of ASU football who could see past the pomp and hype around this team knew a downfall was coming. They had seen it in bits and pieces over the last two years. A crummy lousy quarter here, a crummy half there.

The band played the fight song. The cheerleaders backflipped down the field. The fans stood and began to cheer. And the ASU Sun Devils half-trotted, half-walked to the sidelines.

All this takes nothing away from OSU, which proved that its low ranking in many polls is unjustified. The Cowboys played fine football on both ends and should be seen as a force to be reckoned with.

But against Oklahoma State, the Devils not only strung together four quarters of ineptitude, but added a new dimension, one that has never been associated with the team from Tempe.

They flat-out quit.

Not right away, of course. It took almost an entire half, but it was obvious to any observer that there would be no comeback on this night.

And there were plenty of opportunities to get off the canvas. Even after the Cowboys had built a 23-0 bulge in just 18 minutes of football, the chances were there for the taking.

The Devils mounted a drive at the end of the first half, but had to settle for a field goal.

Demoralizing? Not for the fans. They had seen ASU's best drive of the evening, one that ended with points!

The halftime show was totally ignored (not the fault of the band, who put the rag-tag collection of Cowboy instrumentalists to shame) as each fan seemed to be formulating his own plan of attack for the second half.

The sound of 70,000 people murmuring is an eerie one.

As the team gathered at the end of the tunnel, the usual hoopla of welcoming the Devils back was well underway.

The band played the fight song. The cheerleaders backflipped down the field. The fans stood and began to cheer.

And the ASU Sun Devils half-trotted, half-walked to the sidelines.

End of game.

The Cowboys made sure the Devils were dead by driving 80 yards in three plays for another score.

Meanwhile, fans were busy trying to remember where they had parked.

It was kind of sad to watch Darryl Rogers sit with the media after the game and field questions for which he had no answers. He will be persecuted unmercifully for not preparing this team and must shoulder at least a good part of the blame.

But when it comes time to tee up the ball, it is the responsibility of the guys wearing helmets to play football.

A coach can yell all he wants (although Rogers preferred to fold his arms and do nothing for most of the evening), but watching your players chase running backs with heads down and feet dragging is just plain frustrating.

Is this the team that spouted unity for two weeks at Camp Tontozona? Is this the team that said it didn't believe the press clippings and would take one game at a time? Is this the defense that is as good or better than the 1982 Fiesta Bowl team?

Ah yes, the defense. The unit that had been together the longest looked like it had just met 15 minutes ago at a college mixer. The touted Sun Devil rush accounted for one sack. The defensive backs found out how tough it is to tackle someone while clutching two copies of "Sport" magazine.

The offense wasn't any better. They were so bad, in fact, Saga food has developed a new pastry in their honor.

It's name? The Sun Devil Turnover, of course.

When quarterback Jeff Van Raaphorst was being plastered by the Cowboy blitz, most of his short passes looked like they had been fired from a machine gun.

At the rate of three pushups a week, Sparky will have quite a gut on him by season's end.

This week, ASU fans left the stadium stunned. If history repeats itself anytime soon, the mood will turn to anger.

And, as the old saying goes, you can't fire a whole team, so you fire the coach.

The Sun Devils can't seem to see their way clear to put out the maximum effort for themselves and the fans.

Perhaps preserving Darryl Rogers' job at ASU will provide an incentive for the team. Then again, maybe not.

ASU fans were not overjoyed with the outcome of Saturday night's contest against Oklahoma State.

Oregon schools hope to improve in '84

Brooks looks for Ducks to ruffle some feathers

By ANDREA HEISLER
Sports Writer

In 1983, the University of Oregon shared a 3-3-1 conference record and the Pac-10 Conference's No. 6 spot with ASU.

The Ducks defeated California and upset Arizona early last season, but injuries took their toll, dimming the hopes of a conference title.

Last Saturday, Oregon beat the Pacific Coast Athletic Association's Long Beach State, 28-17, in the first of nine contests between the PCAA and the Pac-10.

Coach Rich Brooks sent quarterback Mike Jorgensen to the helm, after the 6-foot-1, 202-pound senior beat out sophomore Chris Miller for the starting job. Miller led the Ducks to a victory over Stanford and a tie with Oregon State in the final two games of 1983 after Jorgensen broke a leg.

Five of the six top Oregon running backs are returning, including senior tailback Kevin McCall, who tallied 331 yards in 90 carries, including a 100-yard game against intrastate foe Oregon State.

Also returning is junior flanker Lew Barnes, who proved to be an offensive mainstay as a first-year player. Barnes was the nation's ninth leading punt returner, in addition to his team-leading six touchdowns scored — four of which came on plays of 48 yards or longer.

Barnes has been named to all-West Coast teams and All-America checklists, as well as being included in the Football News All-America second team and the Pacific Coast all-region unit.

Defensively, the Ducks have eight returning starters, with most of the experience at linebacker. Sophomore Dan Devaney is at left linebacker, with seniors Don Pellum, Todd Welch and Edmund Rivera adding strength to the kick coverage teams. At the middle position, are senior Bob Hudetz and junior Lerry Wilson.

The veteran of the crew, junior E.J. Duffy, returns after a season in which he had key interceptions against Cal and Oregon State.

In the secondary are senior Wendell Cason and sophomore Don Brown at cornerback. Pac-10 all-academic safety Dan Wilken adds versatility to the backfield as well.

Replacing all Pac-10 punter Kevin Hicks is junior college transfer Mike Preacher, who outkicked redshirt transfer Paul Fitzgerald; filling the void left by all-conference placekicker Paul Schwabe is redshirt transfer Matt MacLeod.

Avezzano gets another chance to turn around Beavers

By STEVE RICHMAN
Sports Writer

The beginning of the college football season brings optimism and hope to many teams, and after four straight dismal seasons, the Oregon State Beavers are looking forward to improving coach Joe Avezzано's four-year record of 4-38-2.

However, Avezzano is optimistic about his team's chances for improvement.

"We have more experienced players and more depth than we have had since I've been here," Avezzano said. "It's probably still not enough, although the defense played well toward the end of '83 and the offense had some big-play moments."

Offensively, the Beavers will have to fill many vacated spots.

Two of Avezzano's biggest worries are the quarterback and tight end positions. Senior Ladd McKittrick returns as signal caller for the Beavers, however his statistics from last year put his job in jeopardy.

In 1983, McKittrick threw for 1,106 yards while completing 74 of 191 attempts. He managed only four touchdowns and had 18 interceptions.

Also competing for the starting quarterback position will be junior college transfers Don Lema (1,633 yards passing last season) and Steve Steenwyk (1,669 yards passing). Avezzano is hoping that one of these quarterbacks will be the prolific passer he has been looking for.

Both starting tailback Randy Holmes and fullback Bryce Oglesby have departed, taking with them more than 1,000 yards in rushing offense.

Oglesby gained 878 rushing yards last year and Avezzano is looking for Darvin Malone to step into the fullback position.

Replacing Holmes at tailback will be either Donald Beavers or James Terrell.

One strength for the Beavers' offense will be junior wide receiver Reggie Bynum. Bynum caught 24 passes for 580 yards (24.2-yard average) and seven touchdowns as a sophomore. His yards-per-catch average and number of touchdown receptions led the Pac-10 conference.

Because the anemic Beaver offense scored only 22 touchdowns throughout the entire 1983 season, placekicker Marty Breen didn't have many opportunities to score points. Breen was six-of-12 on field goals, but just two-of-six from beyond the 40.

Defensively, the Beavers ranked last in the Pac-10 in total defense (456.3 yards a game) and stopping the pass (248.1).

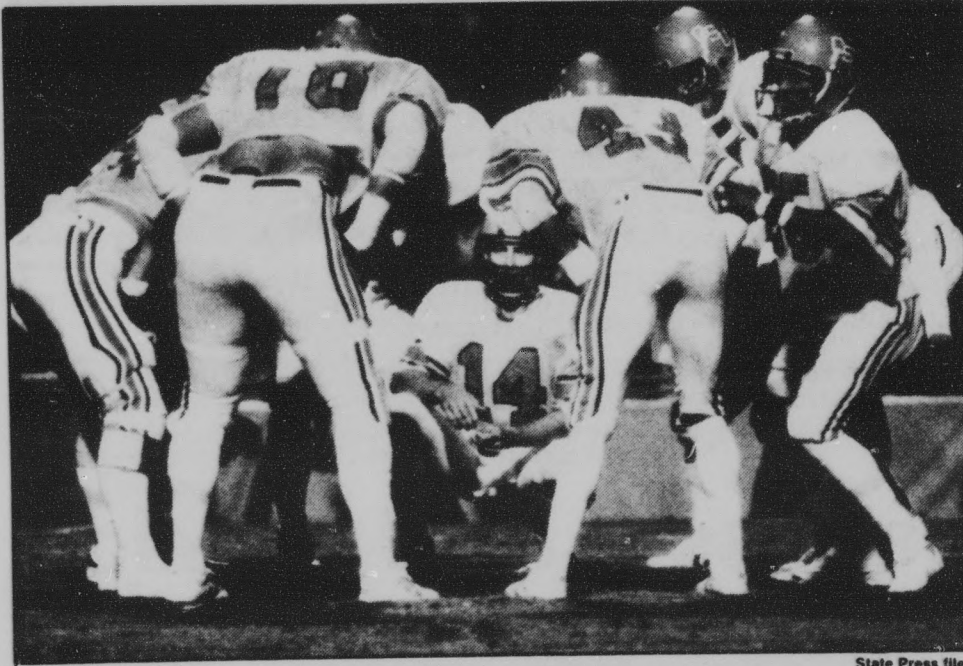

Avezzano said his biggest concern on defense is "settling on the right people." He will have to replace linebackers James Murphy and Bob Johnson, and safety Tony Fuller, the Beavers' top three tacklers last season.

The defensive line looks set with senior ends Angelo Dilulo (6-1, 255) and Charles Naone (6-1½, 247), and junior nose guard John Gonzalez (6-2½, 236).

The linebackers will be led by junior Ron Heller and sophomore Willie Stubblefield. Avezzano has seven other candidates to fill the other linebacker opening.

The Beavers' secondary looks strong with Kenny Taylor at cornerback. Taylor was a second-team all-conference pick in his third year. Joining Taylor at cornerback will be Jonathon Harrington with Reggie DuPee at free safety and Osia Lewis or Bernie Wilson at safety.

Avezzano hopes an improvement in their quarterback will help the Beavers make a step in a positive direction.

Oregon State hopes to stay out of the Pac-10 cellar for the second consecutive season.

Court decision clears way for broadcast by network

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A federal judge issued a preliminary injunction Monday that apparently clears the way for the UCLA-Nebraska college football game at the Rose Bowl on Sept. 22 to be televised nationally by CBS-TV.

UCLA, the University of Southern California, the Pac-10 Conference and the Big Ten Conference filed a suit Aug. 17 against ABC-TV, ESPN, the College Football Association, Nebraska and Notre Dame.

Justice Richard Gadbais heard arguments last Thursday in Los Angeles Federal Court and said at the time he would issue an order Monday.

The suit revolves around the fact that ABC-TV and ESPN own exclusive rights to televise games involving CFA teams. Nebraska and Notre Dame are both CFA teams, while Pac-10 and Big Ten schools aren't members of the CFA.

UCLA, a member of the Pac-10, was refused permission by Nebraska to televise its game with the Huskers Sept. 22 because of the CFA contract with ABC and ESPN. Southern Cal faced a similar situation with its game against Notre Dame Nov. 24.

"The judge entered a preliminary injunction that prevents Nebraska or Notre Dame from withholding consent to the scheduled CBS telecast because of the agreements among the CFA members and with ABC and ESPN," said Steve Wilson, an attorney for Latham and Watkins, which is representing the plaintiffs.

"He has not ordered them to consent. He is just saying that they cannot cite those agreements as a reason not to consent," he said.

Wilson said the intention of the judge's order is to "remove the obstacle to TV consent presented to the defendant universities by the ABC-CFA agreement which required the defendants not to consent."

"The judge is not going to allow those agreements to be enforced to that extent, but he hasn't specifically asked those universities to consent," Wilson said. "He gave us virtually everything we asked for."

"We will request the universities to consent to the UCLA-Nebraska telecast. Our hope and expectation is that they will," he said. "The request will be made today. I don't know when the defendants will respond."

A joint statement was made by Chancellor Charles E. Young of UCLA and President James H. Zumberge of Southern Cal after the ruling was announced.

"We are grateful that the Federal Court has supported our position that the provision of the contract between the CFA and the ABC network which would prevent the televising of our home games with CFA members in 1984 may not be enforced," the statement began.

It continued: "Judge Gadbais found that UCLA and USC clearly would be seriously harmed if the injunction were not issued. The court's ruling is, as it should be, in favor of the American viewing public."

"We fully expect that you will see UCLA vs. Nebraska and USC vs. Notre Dame, two of the season's most exciting contests, on network television."

Coach's prediction comes true as cross country drops meet

By MICHAEL KONZ
Sports Writer

ASU women's cross country Coach Roger Kerr's prediction for his team's meet with the University of New Mexico proved accurate last weekend as the Sun Devils lost to the low-scoring Lobos 15-50.

Prior to the meet, Kerr said it would be the toughest game of the season for a variety of reasons.

First, New Mexico trains hard in the beginning of the season and is tough early. Second, top ASU runner Lynn Nelson would not be participating due to a hip injury.

New Mexico dominated the 5,000-meter race, placing the first seven runners.

Kelly Champaigne was the winner with a time of 18:11.00, Kristi Rapp was second in 18:25.74 and Carole Royball took third in 18:27.74.

Before the meet, Kerr said it would be interesting to see how the other runners would perform in Nelson's absence.

It wasn't promising.

Sophomore Wendy Sihner was the first Sun Devil across the line and eighth overall with a time of 19:45.76. Junior Susan Radford was tenth in 20:14.11.

Sihner performed better than expected, since Kerr said she felt it would take her two to three weeks to reach top form.

However, Radford, a former California junior college cross country champion, did not do as well as expected. Kerr said she felt she could run times comparable to Nelson, which she did not.

In addition, the Sun Devils captured 11th through 13th place along with 15th place.

New Mexico wrapped up ninth and 14th place.

ASU's next meet will be Saturday at the University of Nevada Las Vegas.

Philly errors fuel Cubs

CHICAGO (AP) — A seventh-inning throwing error on a potential double-play ball by Philadelphia second baseman Juan Samuel allowed the tying and winning runs to score Monday as the Chicago Cubs beat the Phillies 3-2.

The victory increased the Cubs' lead in the National League East to 6½ games over the New York Mets and reduced their magic number to 13.

The Phillies sailed into the seventh with a 2-0 lead behind Jerry Koosman. But then Jody Davis drew a one out walk and moved to second on a single by Larry Bowa. Pinch-hitter Gary Woods blooped a single to right to load the bases, and Koosman walked Bob Dernier to force Davis home.

Koosman, 14-12, was replaced by right-hander Larry Andersen, who got Ryne Sandberg to ground to shortstop Ivan DeJesus, who flipped to Samuel, but the relay sailed into the Phillies' dugout as Bowa and Woods scored.
