No complaint registered against ASU policeman

By M.K. Reinhart
Assistant City Editor

An ASU tram driver who told the State Press he was struck twice in the shoulder Monday by a University Police lieutenant said he has no plans to register a complaint with the University Police Department.

Floyd Rasmussen said he suffered a bruised shoulder and back pains in the confrontation and is concerned only with his health, not with pursuing any formal charges against William Maughan, who Rasmussen claims assaulted him.

Maughan declined to give a phone interview Tuesday, but agreed to talk to the State Press today.

According to Rasmussen, he was driving a tram near Lot 59 Monday morning when he encountered traffic congestion.

"Cars were piled up for blocks," he said, so in an effort to avoid the confusion, he made a U-turn and stopped to allow two passengers to board.

Rasmussen said Maughan motioned for him to drive the tram forward, but he could not move the tram until the passengers were aboard. The officer began to walk toward the tram, still waving Rasmussen ahead, he said.

"Then he blasted me twice in the shoulder," Rasmussen said, "and he never said a word."

Rasmussen said he drove the tram back to the inner campus, took a lunch break and then went to the University Police Department to talk with Maughan.

Rasmussen said he accepted the apologies Maughan offered and the two men shook hands.

"The whole thing is over as far as I'm concerned," he said. "I'm not worried about Lt. Maughan, I'm worried about Floyd Rasmussen."

Rasmussen said he then visited the Student Health Center, where he was advised to take two days off work.

Student Health Services Director Monty Roth said Rasmussen visited the clinic Monday.

"He stated that he was hit or struck by an officer while he was on the tram," Roth said.

"Our response was to deal with what was not a serious injury," he said. Roth declined to be more specific about Rasmussen's condition, citing doctor/patient confidentiality agreements.

ASU Police Chief C. Russell Duncan said his department cannot launch an official inquiry into the incident unless Rasmussen files a formal complaint.

"I'm going to look into it," Duncan said. "I'll make inquiries to obtain the facts that I can."

"I cannot imagine (Maughan) striking anybody intentionally," Duncan said, adding that "if he struck someone intentionally, he'd stay struck for awhile." Maughan holds a fifth-degree black belt in judo.

According to ASU's procedural manual, employees of the University can neither encourage nor discourage a complaint.

Penalties for cheating vary

Staff and wire reports

Sanctions taken against students caught cheating usually range from a failing grade for the course to expulsion from the university.

However, some universities are including additional retribution to their traditional penalties for cheating.

A freshman at the University of Oregon was sentenced to 15 hours of janitorial work in the student union for plagiarizing two English papers. The student was also given a failing grade in the class.

Another student at the University of California at Berkeley was given an "F" and a letter of censure on his permanent record. He also was assigned 40 hours of work in the school library for plagiarizing a sociology paper this year.

The ASU policy in dealing with cheaters is generally handled informally between the student and the teacher.

If the teacher recommends a failing grade, the student can appeal the grade through the dean of the particular college.

If suspension is recommended, the student must appeal it through a University hearing board.

If a teacher were to recommend hard labor for a student in the College of Education, the case would have to be handled by "higher authority," said Robert Stout, dean of the College of Education.

He said the teacher's recommendation of hard labor would be referred to Jack Kinsinger, Academic Affairs vice president, because the concept has never been tested at ASU.

The ASU Code of Conduct adopted in 1983 defines cheating as: "Intentionally using or attempting to use unauthorized materials, information or study aids in any academic exercise."

ASU's code defines plagiarizing as "intentionally or knowingly representing the words or ideas of another as one's own in any academic exercise."

Other universities are also requiring campus or community service for cheaters. Some of those institutions reported the deterrent effect of such sanctions as questionable.

Some universities report no decrease in the number of cheating incidents.

However, Berkeley reported an increase in incidents.

Teachers may be inhibited from accusing a student of cheating for fear of being sued if the student is found innocent, according to an official at the University of Maryland.

New degree programs slated

By W. TIM AHL
Staff Writer

Two new degree programs at ASU are expected to get approval from the Arizona Board of Regents at its September meeting at NAU in Flagstaff, according to executive director Robert Huff.

The University administration is requesting authorization for bachelors of science and arts degrees in women's studies and a bachelor of arts degree in Italian.

Student demand and faculty support were the main reasons for the request of a women's studies degree at ASU, according to Mary Rothschild, the program's interim director.

"There was a question for a long time as to whether or not there was a sufficient body of knowledge or literature to support a program," Huff said.

Other universities, including the U of A, have developed strong women's study programs and ASU should easily get authorization, Huff said.

Rothschild said she expects the size of the women's studies program to expand more because of increased student demand than because the degrees will be added.

Rothschild said she has been "assured" that the action will pass. If the board passes the proposal, women's studies degrees would be available immediately, she said.

Strong interest in Italian degrees was also given as the reason for trying to get an Italian major offered.

"There is a large demand for an Italian major at ASU by students," said Piere Baldini, an associate professor of Italian.

Baldini said ASU has been losing students to the U of A as a result of not offering an Italian degree.

If the bachelor of arts degree in Italian passes through the regents as expected, students could major in Italian immediately, Baldini said.

Since ASU already offers classes in third- and fourth-year Italian, only three new classes would have to be offered to complete the program, he said.

Because of this, one temporary staff position would have to be made permanent to fill the instructional requirements, he said.

Baldini said he expects the action to pass and that there is a large Italian-American community in Phoenix that will support the new program.

The foreign language department has been trying to get a major in Italian for four years, Baldini said.

U.S. weapons may contain millions of defective microchips

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sophisticated weapons purchased by the Pentagon in the past decade may contain as many as 15 million defective microchips of the type which failed last month and delayed the launch of the space shuttle Discovery, the Defense Department said Thursday.

The chips — all built by Texas Instruments at a plant in Taiwan and sold to other defense contractors for installation in various weapons — may not have been properly tested, the Pentagon said.

The Pentagon has told defense contractors to stop accepting products which contain the tiny chips until a review is completed of Texas Instruments' testing procedures.

The tiny silicon chips are at the heart of almost all electronic products now produced.

"Any weapon that contains a sophisticated electronic part" could contain the tiny chips, said Donald E. Moore, quality control chief of the Defense Logistics Agency, which oversees the Pentagon's annual purchases of billions of dollars' worth of weaponry.

One weapon the chips were found in was the B-52, the heart of America's nuclear bomber force. The chips were in some of the giant plane's on-board computers, Moore said at a Pentagon news conference.

Moore insisted that "there is no indication of any significant reliability problem" with any weapons, even though he said it was a TI chip failure which caused the shuttle delay.

Michael Burch, assistant secretary of defense for public affairs, said, "At this point, there is the possibility of criminal investigation of TI."

Senate panel examines ways to improve tax system

WASHINGTON (AP) — If you make the right investments, you can earn more than $100,000, pay no tax and get a $500 cash payment from the federal government. And it's perfectly legal.

Norris Farnell III, a Texarkana, Texas, accountant, cited that actual case from his files Tuesday as an example of what's wrong with the system. He testified as the Senate Finance Committee resumed hearings on making federal taxes fairer and simpler.

The best way, Farnell contended, is a national sales tax. But two other authorities disagreed that the income tax is so riddled with complexities that it must be scrapped.

"A fair tax would not be simple. A simple tax would not be fair," said Bernard M. Shapiro, who formerly was Congress' chief expert on taxes as staff director of the Joint Committee on Taxation.

U.S. to accept Vietnamese prisoners, Amerasian children

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Reagan administration will ask Vietnam to release over the next two years thousands of current and former Vietnamese political prisoners for resettlement in the United States, Secretary of State George P. Shultz said Tuesday.

The program, as outlined by Shultz before a Senate Judiciary subcommittee hearing, would affect some 10,000 Vietnamese, many of whom had close ties to the United States during the Vietnam war. The total includes family members.

When the American-backed regime in Saigon was ousted by North Vietnamese forces nine years ago, many of these Vietnamese were sent to "re-education camps." An undetermined number remain in confinement.

Shultz also disclosed that the United States over the next three years will accept for admission all Vietnamese children fathered by American servicemen during the Vietnam war. These children, known as Amerasians, may be accompanied by close family members, Shultz said.

Hughes Aircraft plans improvements at Tucson plant

TUCSON (AP) — Sen. Dennis DeConcini, D-Ariz., says he has been given "a personal commitment" from Hughes Aircraft Co. officials to invest $75 million to $100 million to improve product quality at its Tucson missile plant.

"I received what I consider a personal commitment" from Hughes Chairman Allen E. Puckett "that they are going to do these things," DeConcini said Monday.

He said he was "cautiously optimistic," after meeting with Hughes officials and also representatives from the Air Force Systems Command, that the Air Force will accept the corrective action plan Hughes has presented to the military.

police report

University Police reported the following incidents in the 24-hour period ending at 6 a.m. Tuesday:

- A woman was driving in the south alley of Cholla Apartments early Monday night when her car struck a manhole cover, causing her 1973 Oldsmobile to snag its muffler, police said. The woman, who is not affiliated with ASU, was thrown into her windshield on impact, breaking the glass. Tempe Fire Department paramedics responded and treated the woman for a cut lip. Police said the woman's car was driveable after the incident, but she left it at the scene.
- A man was arrested early Tuesday morning in Lot 22 and charged with assault and trespassing. A University police officer standing on the third floor of Hayden Library after it had closed saw Benjamin Snyder, not an ASU student, in the area and asked to see some identification. The man verbally abused him and ran out of the library, according to police. He was followed by the officer, who asked Snyder a second time for some identification, and was verbally abused again. Snyder assaulted the officer, leaving him with abrasions to both knees, elbows and his left cheek, police said. The officer was treated by Tempe Fire Department paramedics and transported to Tempe St. Luke's Hospital. Snyder was booked into the Tempe City Jail and released on his recognizance to await a court appearance.

- An ASU student on a bicycle was struck by an unidentified vehicle in Lot 41 Monday night, police said. The student fell off his bicycle and cut his chin. The driver of the vehicle stopped and offered help, but police said the student was too dazed to respond. Police transported him to Tempe St. Luke's Hospital for stitches. The student was treated and released.
- A Sony Cassette player, a Sansui receiver and two wood Bose speakers valued at $990 were reported stolen from an ASU student's room in the Theta Delta Chi fraternity house Monday afternoon, police said.
- Police said six six-packs of soft drinks, three pounds of coffee and a container of coffee creamer valued at $17 were reported stolen from the F Wing of the Physical Sciences Building loading dock Monday morning.
- An ASU student was riding his bike around Gammage Center Monday morning when it slipped off the curb and he fell, according to police. The student injured his right palm, and scraped his left elbow and knee. He was transported to the Student Health Center for treatment.
- Two ASU students were involved in a non-injury accident causing $50 in damages, police said. The vehicles, a 1982 gray Toyota and a 1983 gray Mazda, collided in the parking lot of the Phi Sigma Kappa fraternity house.

Columbian club hosts fund-raiser

By SANAA AL-MARAYATI
Staff Writer

The Columbian Club at ASU is sponsoring the movie "Battle of Chile" to recognize the 11 years of the dictatorship regime in Chile, according to club President Edgar Dario.

Dario, a senior English education major, said the movie, the first fund-raiser on campus by the club, should give the ASU community a Latin American perspective on how the U.S. government is affecting Chile.

Because of the United States' involvement in Latin America, Military General Augusto Pinochet was able to take over Chile in 1973, Dario said.

"I don't think the U.S. government is aware that what they are doing is creating more harm by assisting a country which is not democratic," he said.

The movie was designed to provide information about what has been happening politically, economically and socially in the country since the takeover by Pinochet, he said.

Sergio Gajardo, an economics graduate student and Columbian Club member, was exiled from Chile in 1976.

He was arrested in 1974 by the Chile government because they said he was "dangerous to the internal national security of Chile," Gajardo said.

He said he was put in a concentration camp for two years without being given a specific charge or a trial.

"I saw people die for no reason right in front of me in the two years I was in prison," Gajardo said.

The club will hold a general discussion after the movie. Panelists will include a former professor from Chile and students who witnessed tragedies while in Chile.

Dario said the club's main objective for the year is to provide information to the ASU community about what is happening in Latin America.

He said other objectives include teaching English to Latin American students and establishing a cultural environment for those Latin students at ASU.

The film is being shown at 2 p.m. Thursday in the MU cinema for a $2 donation.

Opinions on liquor use in society need revision

Len Munsil
Editor

It has been a year since ASU Police decided to crack down on those carrying alcohol into Sun Devil Stadium. The decision to enforce stadium rules against alcoholic beverages was an excellent and much-needed policy choice.

Since the new policy took effect, ASU football games have become substantially better entertainment values. No longer do threats of drunken brawls, blasted buffoons regurgitating or passing out, and loaded losers making fools of themselves keep the average citizen from enjoying Sun Devil football. The success of the policy was never in question — at ASU's first game under stricter enforcement in 1983, there was just one ejection, compared to an average of 30 alcohol-related ejections each game during previous years.

All that is as it should be. For too long the liquor industry has succeeded in efforts to portray alcohol and sporting events in a symbiotic relationship — as if alcohol were necessary in order to enjoy sports. The fallacies in this tactical approach by the industry — employed through mass media blitzes during broadcasts of sporting events — are numerous and blatant. The search for profit has caused the industry to lose sight of just who is affected; the tactic itself borders on immorality.

The barrage of advertisements accompanying each televised sporting event invariably equate alcohol consumption with "good times." Often the commercial's actors have just completed participating in an athletic endeavor of their own — an interesting, idiotic paradox when one considers the opposite results, in terms of bodily health, obtained through exercise on the one hand and liquor consumption on the other.

Most people now are aware of the health problems posed, not just by the abuse, but by anything more than the most moderate use of alcohol. The medical facts are well-documented: cirrhosis of the liver, destruction of brain cells, and recently, proof that heavy drinking leads to calcium deficiencies that weaken bones and erode skeletal mass.

Other considerations must also be mentioned: the loss of productivity on the job, the break-up of families, the loss of self respect — all caused by alcohol use. Yet all are ignored by the majority of people, especially college students who prefer to believe the advertisements, buying the sales pitch hook, line and sinker. It is unfortunate that some think so little of themselves as to perceive a need for alcohol in order to have fun. Apparently they cannot enjoy life without artificial stimulation.

A recent Gallup poll revealed that teen-age drinking is on the increase. Observe these figures — 67 percent of youth under the age of 16 have used alcohol. Alcohol is used by 59 percent of children between the ages of 13 and 18, up from 41 percent just two years ago.

So we see the net impact of heavy television advertising campaigns and a more permissive society on our nation's youth, who spend a disproportionately high amount of time before television sets. They succumb earlier and more often to the harmful effects of our nation's top drug: the majority now consume liquor long before they are legally able to purchase it. That, my friends, is simply wrong.

Witness the "parties" taking place each weekend across the nation, and on this campus. They bear little, if any, resemblance to the parties attended by our parents' generation — there are few games, few situations demanding a social reaction that aids in the maturing process. Instead we find one simple, ignoble goal — the state of drunkenness. Ours is a generation which drinks not to forget the past, the future or even the present, but for no other reason than because it is an accepted behavior to which we have grown accustomed.

Only recently have we seen this nation, repulsed by the slaughter that results from drunken driving, take strong action to punish those who so violently show their disregard for human life. More than half of all fatal accidents involve drunken drivers, and more than 25,000 persons are killed by drinking drivers each year. Finally, the tide is turning against this disgraceful activity, but we have yet to see the nation take that approach one step further, by acknowledging the root of so much evil.

The problem of alcohol is one that transcends ideologies; in fact, its use is at least as rampant among conservatives who should know better, as it is among others. Conservatives, who profess to recognize man's weaknesses and seek to fight and prevent them from being exploited, as with pornography, have turned their backs on this issue. Certainly conservatives have led the call for strong drunken driving laws and an increase in the drinking age, but few are willing to sacrifice their own weak habits and lead by example.

The battle to be fought is one of opinion, and of acceptance. We need to realize there is nothing wrong with not drinking at a party, or at other social events. We need to realize there is no glamour in being exploited and damaged by the liquor industry. Most importantly, we need to be aware of the dangers inherent in the consumption of alcohol — so many that they cannot all be examined here in the manner and detail which they deserve. The obstinate fools who refuse to recognize logic and good sense doom themselves to poor health and an early meeting with their maker.

So it is with renewed optimism that we greet a decision such as that made about alcohol use at Sun Devil Stadium. It was a logical decision to keep alcohol away from an entertainment event where it has no place. At the same time we must be aware that the answer does not lie in prohibition, or in more laws telling citizens what they can and cannot do. The answer lies in the art of persuasion, of explaining what course of action is in your best interest, and in mine. Only then can this problem, caused entirely by man's weakness, be overcome once and for all by his strength.

Republicans deserve 'credit' for religion issue

Don Slutes
Columnist

In 1960 the first Catholic was elected president of the United States. His achievement was accomplished in no small way by his ability to deflect the religion question and assure voters that never would his religion influence his policies.

This year, among other combatants in a renewed religious war, we find a Catholic archbishop and a Catholic vice-presidential candidate at odds over questions of political duty.

What has happened to the electorate that candidates in 1984 are fighting over religious high ground?

Religionists have come a long way in politics since John Kennedy trudged through the hills of West Virginia, desperately trying to allay anti-Catholic suspicions, fighting the first real religious skirmish in the campaign of 1960. His victory in that primary was due in part to some voters' desire not to be labeled as bigots.

No longer worried about charges of bigotry, some powerful religious leaders openly call for government to embrace their particular assortment of moral mandates. This phenomenon emerged in the 1980 campaign as Southern Baptist Minister Jerry Falwell and his flock hit the trail for Ronald Reagan, a divorced, infrequent churchgoer, and against Jimmy Carter, a self-professed "born again" Christian and one-time Baptist Sunday school teacher. Confused? Falwell isn't. To him and other pro-Christian-legislation advocates, the thing that matters is their agenda, not the candidate's own character. But Ronald Reagan's character, with his correct stands on abortion, school prayer and defense against godless communists, has passed the fundamentalists' test.

So it was with great interest that I watched the president, loaded up with Christian baggage, attempt to assure members of the B'nai B'rith of his respect for America's "pluralistic" society. Many members of the nonpartisan Jewish group were unmoved.

American Jews (not to mention members of every other non-Christian religion) are supposed to assume that when the president invokes America's almighty overseer, he speaks of a generic spirit in which everyone believes.

Not surprisingly, the tiny and politically impotent minority which has no use whatsoever for a Supreme Being is all but forgotten as the war over religious preeminence rages. Still, atheists in this country have the most to lose when government begins to embrace any or all religions, especially when government funds are involved — funds for religious schools, for Congressional chaplains, for Christmas displays on courthouse lawns.

(What comes first in the neo-conservative hierarchy, "less government" or "God and country"? Why aren't Republican budget-slashers clamoring for the removal of chaplains on Capitol Hill and in the armed forces from the government payroll? Why do looks of horror and rapid rises in blood pressure accompany any such suggestion?)

The debate over the role of religion in American politics necessarily revolves around the "establishment clause" of the First Amendment — of which interpretations vary. Absolutists assert that any mingling of religion and state is prohibited. The opposite argument usually starts out, "Yes, the amendment says that, BUT . . ." followed by a brief description of the lives and times of the framers of the Constitution. Ben Franklin would roll in his grave if he knew of the Supreme Court's decision banning school prayer, some say. I say, let him roll. The Constitution is not a curious chunk of history, but a viable design for the operation of a government, a document designed to be flexible and useful in various societal contexts. The Bill of Rights was constructed as the last barrier to oppression on the part of the state, not as a codification of Judeo-Christian values.

No one is really afraid that the machinations of Falwell, et al, will lead to a state religion, but like all political issues, this one eventually can be reduced to economics. A "nondenominational" posture on the part of government is not enough to comfort those for whom any religion is anathema and whose tax monies go for the promotion of religious belief.

(Perhaps the I.R.S. could offer a tax deduction especially for atheists to compensate for state-sponsored religion. With such a deal, it would be interesting to see how many non-believers come out of the woodwork. . . . Oops, there goes that blood pressure gauge again.)

This season, Americans have adopted religion as a political issue, following the lead of the Republican presidential candidate. Is it wrong, then, to question his own values — as Geraldine Ferraro did, much to the consternation of almost everyone? No. Reagan and the Republicans have fashioned this issue to serve their own ends. They deserve the credit or the blame. And the scrutiny.

Reader finds Blodgett column humorous

Editor:

This is dedicated to Tom Blodgett — who feels the Vanessa Williams controversy has "reappeared."

Is his column supposed to be humorous? Mr. Blodgett takes the attitude that Vanessa committed a mistake of youth — how does he figure? At age 19, one is legally an adult. There is no excuse for Ms. Williams' moral mistakes.

Then Mr. Blodgett goes on to say that it is Guccione who has no morals. I would like to point out that Mr. Guccione is publisher of Penthouse magazine. If Mr. Blodgett feels that Penthouse magazine is not up to his moral standing, he also should address the other moral problems of society.

Penthouse magazine certainly did sell many issues, and I feel Mr. Guccione should be commended since this is his area of business.

"Damage might have been held to a minimum . . ." Who are we trying to protect here, the American citizen who puts his faith and trust in Miss America, or instead Vanessa Williams, someone with low morals and ideals?

No matter what anybody says, I was happy to see her title taken away from her.

Also, I would like to point out that Mr. Blodgett is the sports editor. May I ask Mr. B. — what exactly are you doing handling the world fiber and moral issues in society?!

Let's hear the reviews on the Super Sun Devils, please.

Prof's talk 'enlightening'

Editor:

The recent visit to the ASU campus by Professor Ronald Stroud of the University of California/Berkeley was most enlightening and encouraging to me.

His lecture on "The Art of Writing in Ancient Greece" for the "Sign, Symbol, Script" series was stimulating.

I had Professor Stroud for a class at Cal/Berkeley 12 years ago, and I was glad to have the chance to say hello to him.

I would like to commend the sponsors of this lecture for the time they spent in bringing this noted scholar to our campus.

Welfare state syndrome

Editor:

The so-called liberals have been the leaders in our country for about 50 years.

During these years we have experienced great increases in crime, divorce, children born out of wedlock, drug abuse, big government, big unions, big business, redistribution of wealth, quotas, busing and wars.

In the November election, voters are being given an opportunity to decide whether they want to go back to the welfare state inaugurated by Franklin Roosevelt and perfected by Lyndon Johnson, or into the future with such men as Barry Goldwater and Ronald Reagan.

Rick Carey interpreted

Editor:

This letter is to suggest one possible interpretation of Rick Carey's actions during the past Summer Olympics. It is an interpretation which probably is not even conceivable to millions of Americans.

I suggest that Rick was not "caught up in his own personal hang-ups" as the State Press article of Sept. 10 suggested, but that he has ambitions which most of us will never attempt to pursue. Rick Carey's disappointment in not breaking the world record is only possible to those select few who will not be satisfied with the best. Those individuals who seek to be better than the best are in a class by themselves, and can be understood only from that point of view. To judge his actions from a lesser standard is not only stifling and damaging to him, but to all young Americans who live with a dream, a vision, an inspiration which drives them to greatness.

America was built on dreams and inspirations, and America represents not just the opportunity or even the encouragement to fulfill dreams, but the demand that dreams be fulfilled to millions of people all over the world. To punish someone for striving to be, and not settling for less than to be, better than the best is disgusting. It is both inhuman and un-American.

I deeply appreciated Rick Carey's ability to react as he did. It was, to me, a profound example of the privilege it is to be an American. To be able to live your life envisioning what it would be like to be, to do and to have, better than the best is a privilege most of us seem unable to recognize.

Profs stay toned with Devils Fit

By SHERRY LOWE
Staff Writer

To some, age means maturity and financial security. To the participants of Devils Fit, an exercise program for ASU faculty members, it means an extra $50.

"If a person is under 35, then the program, including a locker and program evaluation, is $50," said Scott Coulter, an assistant to the Devils Fit program director.

Coulter said if a person is over 35, he or she runs a higher risk of heart attack, so the price of the program is raised to $100 because extra precautions must be taken.

"If someone is over 35, we will have a doctor present during all their evaluations — for example, the treadmill test," said Coulter.

Coulter: 'Some of the programs we offer are swimming, walk-jog, aerobics and stretching.'

"Some of the programs we offer are swimming, walk-jog, aerobics and stretching," Coulter said.

Devils Fit, run by the ASU physical education department and designed to get ASU faculty into shape, is beginning its third year this fall.

"The program is for faculty who don't have the drive to exercise on their own and need some guidance in doing it properly," Coulter said.

The program's instructors are the faculty and staff of the physical education department, he said.

"We have interns that are undergraduates and also graduate students working with the program," Coulter said.

He said Devils Fit staff members must finish a training program to prepare for the responsibility of coaching people through an exercise program.

"Since joining the program, my endurance has increased," said Joanne Piergallini, a clerk at Hayden Library and a two-year veteran of Devils Fit. "I really noticed it when I went skiing."

Piergallini said the best part of the program is the testing.

"The testing is great," said Piergallini. "They test our lung capacity, strength and skin fold."

Skin fold is a way of determining the amount of body fat a person has.

Piergallini said she recommends the program to everybody because, "Everyone should be involved in some type of exercise program. I wish we could reach more people who need it."

Coulter said the response of the faculty to the program is positive, even though summer enrollment was small.

"We had limited enrollment during the summer because of vacations," said Coulter. "We have about 50 faculty members signed up now, but we expect to be operating in full swing next week."

Devils Fit classes are at 6:15 a.m. and noon Monday, Wednesday and Friday.

New law fraternity organized

By PATRICK J. KUCERA
Staff Writer

Phi Alpha Delta, a new law fraternity on campus, has been created to help undergraduate students decide whether or not they are prepared for law school, said the fraternity's secretary-treasurer pro tempore.

"We really felt there was a need . . . to tell students what law school is all about," Tom Stillwell said.

He said many students who apply for law school are not mentally or physically prepared for the rigors of law college life.

"The first decision they have to make is whether or not they are right for law school," Stillwell said.

Law colleges would prefer students not to attend law school rather than drop out once they are in, he said. "It could really be a disappointment to students who have to drop out."

The fraternity also has other programs that assist both undergraduate and law college students in pursuing a law degree.

Stillwell said the fraternity offers undergraduate students a program on law college application processes. He said other functions of the organization are developing panel discussions on law and preparation for entrance exams, as well as giving information about financial aid.

"Phi Alpha Delta has one of the best comprehensive study programs for the LSAT (Law School Achievement Test)," he said. "This entire process will be fairly unique for undergrads."

Stillwell said he and his colleagues Linda Goodman and Carol Rosinski discovered the national organization and decided to help establish a chapter at the University.

The University chapter of Phi Alpha Delta is the Hugo Black chapter, named after the famous jurist.

The ASU chapter, however, was not the first Arizona chapter with an undergraduate program. NAU was granted its chapter in 1983, becoming the 11th school in the nation to have such a program.

There are three separate branches of Phi Alpha Delta: law college, undergraduate and alumni.

The fraternity is the world's largest legal organization, claiming some 100,000 members and 164 law school chapters. It was established in 1902.

At the end of 1983, the organization had 38 undergraduate chapters.

Stillwell said the fraternity is both a student and professional organization, which benefits law students since they will be able to establish contacts with attorneys for advice.

He also said Phi Alpha Delta will help law students work with practicing attorneys so they can fully understand the process of being a lawyer.

The fraternity is starting to develop at a tremendous pace, Stillwell said.

"We had about a dozen interested undergraduate students, and a total of 45 students from the law school that attended the first meeting," he said.

Stillwell said the top priority of the ASU chapter will be to get more students interested in the program.

"Our first goal is to establish a chapter that will continue to grow in the future," he said.

The undergraduate program of the national organization has increased its membership more than 254 percent since the beginning of the 1983-84 academic school year.

The international fraternity also aids students after they graduate from law college. Stillwell said job placement and preparation are available through the fraternity.

Phi Alpha Delta currently has 80 alumni chapters worldwide. Its alumni include Sen. Edward Kennedy; Chief Justice Warren Burger; Manfred Lachs, justice for the International Court in the Hague, Netherlands; and John McAular, dean of Loyola University.

Stillwell said membership to the fraternity will be open to any student with a good academic standing.

Alumni donations sought in ASU A

By SANAA AL-MARAYATI
Staff Writer

The ASU Annual Telefund will kick off its fourth year Sunday with 60 ASU students calling alumni nationwide to raise $400,000 for the University, said Betty Walton, Telefund director.

ASU President J. Russell Nelson said the money collected will be used for academic programs or campus improvement. This includes supplementing research, financial aid, scholarships and off-campus projects.

Walton said the alumni may donate the money to the President's Discretionary Fund or specify a particular program.

The President's Discretionary Fund gives Nelson the option to place funds where he feels they are needed, Walton said.

Nelson said University vice presidents will ask college deans to recommend where funds are most needed in their areas.

Nelson said using ASU students to solicit money for the University should be the most effective method of fund raising because it is difficult for an alumnus to turn down a student request.

C. Rolan Haden, dean of the College of Engineering and Applied Sciences, said previous Telefund donations have helped bring guest speakers to ASU from other parts of the country and fund student scholarships.

"If we were depending on the Legislature for money most of the time, it would be a barrier to students," he said.

Walton said $145,000 was raised last year with 70 percent of the pledges collected.

A new system has been designed to be at least 80 percent of the pledges this year.

First, the alumnus will receive a phone call requesting a donation. If the donor for send the money, he will receive another call within 60 days. Another reminder arranged 90 days from the initial phone call. The alumnus still has not sent the donation.

Walton said students should be involved with the University even after they graduate.

"Just because they graduated doesn't mean we forgot them," she said.

Sunday through Thursday evenings from April, 25 students will work the phones, calling ASU alumni for donations.

Cliff Ochser, Telefund supervisor, said the only problem is keeping students employed. "One way we hope will encourage stud

When things get bad, people often don't realize they could be worse. Just ask Jesus Delacruz.

Delacruz, a graduate assistant in ASU's Spanish department, has seen both the bottom and the top.

A successful Cuban lawyer in the 1950s, Delacruz, 64, lost nearly everything he owned when he fled Cuba in 1961, three years after Fidel Castro's takeover.

"We waited because most of the Cubans were waiting for something to happen," the West Phoenix resident said. "We didn't believe the United States would let the Communists take over."

When the Bay of Pigs invasion failed, many Cubans, including Delacruz, decided it was time to leave.

"Americans don't understand how bad it was," he said. Delacruz lost an apartment building, a large home and money to the government.

"If you had 50,000 pesos in the bank, they would decide one night you can only have 10,000," he said. "Overnight you could lose that much."

Delacruz lost what he had left when he requested permission to leave the country.

When hiring students to be Telefund solicitors, Walton said she looks at their work experience.

"Most of the students I have selected have worked in sales or travel agencies. These type of jobs have developed good communication skills, which have helped them with the job they have with the Telefund," she said.

Rebecca Borozan, marketing major, said she applied for the job to further the communication skills necessary for her career.

Telefund will begin Sunday in the team locker room of Sun Devil Stadium and should continue through April 25.

"You were only allowed to bring what clothes you could fit in a duffle bag," he said with a thick accent.

To ensure no money was taken from the country, each person was subject to a strip search.

"They sometimes would search you physically," he said.

It wasn't easy leaving his native country, but Delacruz felt it was worth it.

"I didn't want my three sons to grow up in a Communist system," he said.

The transition from successful lawyer to penniless refugee was difficult. Delacruz worked as a restaurant cashier for $1.25 an hour and his wife, also a former lawyer, had to get a job in a Brillo Pad factory near Queens, New York.

"She was used to living in a big house with maids and people to take care of the children," Delacruz said.

Knowing no English when he arrived, Delacruz said he learned the language by watching television news.

In 1966 he applied to teach Spanish and was hired by a private high school in Michigan.

He taught there until 1982 when he came to Arizona to work on his master's degree in Spanish.

Delacruz now feels he is finally on his way back to the top.

Double-decker buses to carry frat members for canned food drive

By SHERRY LOWE
Staff Writer

What do you get when you cross two double-decker British buses, 120 sorority women, and a bunch of fraternity men trying to organize a canned food drive?

Confusion? Probably. Fun? Well, that depends upon what mood you're in. A good way to raise money for charity? Definitely.

Sigma Nu fraternity, working on their philanthropic project for Sigma Nu relays, have organized a canned food drive, with all proceeds going to the Salvation Army's Tempe location.

Steve McCarley, co-chairman of Sigma Nu relays, said the fraternity rented two British double-decker buses from the Pointe Resort.

"Ten girls from each sorority, plus their two Sigma Nu coaches, will go through (Tempe) neighborhoods and collect canned food," he said.

According to McCarley, a Salvation Army truck will follow the collectors through the neighborhoods and pick up the cans they gather.

"Last night our pledges collected more than 1,000 cans in less than two hours," McCarley said.

He said they expected to collect more than 3,000 cans Tuesday during a 2½ hour period.

Zeb Pierce and Son, along with Pizza Hut, are sponsoring the event by advertising it to the local community.

Jack Mason, chairman of Sigma Nu relays, said, "Zeb Pierce and Son promoted the idea of a philanthropic project along with the relays on Saturday."

Mason said the company was very helpful in wanting to better the image of the Greek system at ASU, and thought the best way to do so would be through a canned-food drive.

Pizza Hut is promoting the event by offering special prices for pizzas when customers donate a can of food to the Salvation Army.

Sororities will obtain philanthropic points for their chapter if they are one of the top five groups to collect the most canned food, McCarley said.

"We have a really ingenious marking system," said McCarley. "It's called Crayola crayons."

Each sorority will be designated with a different color crayon. The color marked on the can will reveal which sorority collected it, McCarley said.

Rogers hopes to turn around dismal Devils

By MICHAEL KONZ
Sports Writer

In the fallout of last Saturday's 45-3 destruction at the hands of Oklahoma State, Darryl Rogers believes in the adage of letting bygones be bygones.

"Whatever has happened, has happened," Rogers said. "We need to look forward."

"We're evaluating personnel. We'll play some new people, and we'll keep doing it until we get the right chemistry," he said.

One of his prime targets is the offensive line. Quarterback Jeff Van Raaphorst consistently was pressured by a smaller Cowboy defensive line.

"We didn't get very good protection," Rogers said. "It was the case that everyone faltered at some time. Most of the mistakes were missed blocking assignments."

Rogers also found fault with junior running back Darryl Clack on kick returns. Clack had troubles hanging onto the ball, and Rogers was quick to find a replacement.

Junior wide receiver Paul Day will now return kick-offs. Rogers said he believes Day is ready for the job.

"Paul Day actually ran kick-offs back well last year," Rogers said.

In the backfield, John Grier saw extended playing action toward the end of the game, and Rogers said that freshman running back Darryl Harris will get more playing time.

Sophomore quarterback Jeff Van Raaphorst's chances of playing in Saturday's game look good, said Rogers.

"Jeff has been able to ride a bike and jog, and we hope that he'll be able to practice tomorrow (Wednesday)," Rogers said. "He has made tremendous progress since Saturday."

Of course, when 45 points are scored against ASU, Rogers must also find fault with the defense.

"We'll make changes in the secondary," he said. "We'll change the cornerbacks. Darrin Willis and Eric Allen will probably start at the corners. However, that isn't definite."

Rogers said he is confident the loss is in the past.

"There are a lot of things going through the players' minds. But they'll work hard. Young men are resilient. We'll bounce back."

The Sun Devils will have a chance to bounce back against the Spartans of San Jose State.

San Jose State will enter the game with a

1-1 record. They recorded a 14-0 victory over New Mexico State, but lost to the University of Nevada at Las Vegas, 30-15.

Coach Claude Gilbert is in his first year at the Spartan helm, and he likes it so far.

"It's been great," Gilbert said. "Of course, it's fun when you win and not so fun when you lose. However, the transition has been positive, and the players are enthusiastic."

"It's special to me because I was a student and player here a hundred years ago."

Gilbert actually was in the class of 1959.

He joined the San Jose State staff in 1981 as the defensive coordinator and outside linebacker coach.

He found immediate success. In two of the past three seasons, Gilbert's defense was ranked nationally in stopping the run while averaging more than 50 quarterback sacks.

Gilbert hasn't changed the offensive style of the Spartans since his arrival.

"The offense is the same style," he said. "There have been subtle changes in formations and routes. But they are the same elements."

Though he is a defensive specialist, Gilbert has a liberal offensive philosophy.

"We spread the receivers all over the field and throw to the right guys," he said.

San Jose State spends little time with running the ball. In two games the team has gained 169 yards for a meager 2.3-yard average.

"We're not a dominating running team," Gilbert said. "We did reasonably well against New Mexico State. We couldn't get going last week. We had difficulty moving against the Rebels."

Gilbert hasn't changed the defense since last year.

"The defense is about the same. We're a 3-4 team with some variety and coverages."

Gilbert gleans a number of his players from the junior college system. He has found that this has its advantages and disadvantages.

"It (recruiting from the JC's) is tough. There is a great turnover in players — about half of the team," Gilbert said.

"There is also a great deal of inexperience. However, it's the only way to go for us."

Gilbert hopes that his trip into Sun Devil Stadium is better than his first one. In 1958 he was fullback and captain of the Spartan team that defeated ASU 21-20. However, Gilbert suffered a broken leg which ended his college-playing career.

ASU coach Darryl Rogers hopes the Sun Devils will improve defensively with some changes in personnel.

Young, talented tennis squad opens year in Sedona tourney

By BRAD HALVORSEN
Sports Writer

Heading into the fall season with a young but talented squad, men's tennis coach Lou Belken looks to this weekend's Sedona Invitational as a good opportunity to preview his players.

The first of approximately five fall matches, the Friday through Sunday tournament will feature individual singles and doubles competition between ASU, U of A and the University of New Mexico. Team play does not begin until spring.

"It's hard to say how we'll do," Belken said. "We have a lot of new people this year but we've also got five of our top six players back. I think we'll have a strong team."

Belken said he has not worked with the team enough to measure its progress because practice began little more than a week ago. However, he said he is impressed with the squad's potential.

"We're going to be very competitive," the third-year coach said. "This is the deepest team ASU has ever had, looking at the "Holten's one of the top kids in the country," Belken said.

Jim Baumann, who played No. 1 singles as a freshman and Dewey Grattan, last year's No. 2 singles player, also will vie for the top singles spot.

Grattan will not participate with the team this fall but will join the squad next spring.

Also returning from last year's squad are Todd Lee and Mike Colloca.

"Neither one of these guys started for us last year," Belken said, "but they've worked hard and should make a major contribution."

Stan Perry, doubles champion at the National Amateur Championships this summer, also will miss fall competition.

Belken said Brian Sullivan and Jim Frend are the team's top newcomers.

Frend, a transfer from Southern Methodist University, finished 25th at nationals last year, while Sullivan, a transfer from Brigham Young University, placed 35th.

Belken: 'We're going to be very competitive. This is the deepest team ASU has ever had, looking at the number of quality players we have.'

number of quality players we have."

Belken said he will send about eight players to Sedona, but declined to mention any names.

Several players are returning from last year's 13-19 squad, which lost most of its matches to Top-20 teams.

Keith Thomas, last year's No. 1 singles player, will have stiff competition for the top job this year, Belken said.

"Keith's improved over the summer and he's been playing well," Belken said. "We expect big things out of him. But we've got a bunch of kids who can play No. 1 singles."

Andy Roediger, a semi-finalist in the National Amateur Championships this summer, is one of four players Belken cited as having legitimate chances at the No. 1 job.

Roediger will be joined by freshman Mike Holten, who finished 14th in the National Junior Davis Cup Championships this summer.

"None of our guys have really excelled at the college level yet," Belken said. "But our guys are all young. They haven't really had a chance to excel in college yet. We've got a young team."

Even with a youthful squad, nine of this year's players are ranked among the nation's top 55.

"This tournament won't tell how good of a team we'll be this year," Belken said. "One loss or win is not going to make a season. It'll be a good opportunity to see how good we are."

"We compare favorably to the other schools. Some kids will do well, and we've got a variety of kids that can do well, but it's too early to make any predictions," he said.

"Our practices have been real tough," said Belken. "The competition to play and to start has been tremendous. We've got some kids who can play."

Another Elway takes over at pass-happy Stanford

By STEVE RICHMAN
Sports Writer

The Stanford Cardinal enters this season after suffering a dismal year in 1983. Despite its record of 1-10, the Cardinal is looking for great improvements over last year.

A new coaching staff will lead the Cardinal, with Jack Elway taking over the top job from Paul Wiggin.

Elway's staff (mostly with him from his days at San Jose State) went right to work, signing 27 letters of intent. All were freshmen and considered to be some of the best in the country.

Despite the dismal season last year, the Cardinal had many noteworthy performances. Stanford finished the season as the nation's 10th-leading passing team (254.7 yards per game) and made a dramatic improvement in its defense as they gave up only 167.2 yards per contest — 28th in the country and stingiest in the Pac-10.

The success of the Cardinal will fall mostly on the shoulders of sophomore quarterback John Paye. Paye got his first chance to start last year in the fourth game of the season against ASU. He finished the season completing 150 of 297 attempts for 1,971 yards and 10 touchdowns. He was the Pac-10's fifth-leading passer and broke John Elway's freshman record for completions, attempts, total yards and touchdowns.

Though the Cardinal was not very successful on the ground in 1983 (Stanford gained an average of only 75 yards per game as a team), the coaching staff feels confident its runners are capable of improvement.

Always considered a Stanford strong point, the Cardinal receiving corps will be led by Emile Harry. Harry has 98 receptions in his career at Stanford, including 44 in each of the past two years.

Defensively, the Cardinal looks improved. With six of the eight defensive linemen returning and all seven of the linebackers coming back, the Cardinal should be a lot more experienced than in the past. Dave Wyman leads the linebackers and was a second team all-Pac 10 performer as a sophomore. Garin Veris, who joins Wyman at linebacker, also was a second team all-Pac 10 choice.

The defensive backfield will be a little suspect as only one starter returns. Cornerback Eric "Hit Man" Price is the lone returnee and will need to help pull the secondary together.

Kapp, Gilbert hope 'Air Cal' season follows flight plan

By BRAD HALVORSEN
Sports Writer

Coming off a respectable 5-5-1 campaign last year, the California Golden Bears will rely heavily on a passing attack while combatting a schedule which includes the entire Pac-10 Conference.

Gale Gilbert, one of the nation's top returning passers, will once again pilot "Air Cal." Passing for 2,769 yards last year, a Cal record, Gilbert rates third among NCAA returning quarterbacks.

"We'll build our offense around Gale Gilbert and take advantage of his strengths," said Coach Joe Kapp. "He is one of the best long passers in the nation and that deep threat should help us open up some other parts of our offense, including our running game."

Gilbert's main target will be Rance McDougald, a senior flankerback who averaged nearly 100 yards receiving per game in last year's final seven games.

Rance McDougald

McDougald played an important role in Cal's 26-24 upset of ASU last year, scoring on passes of 73 and 57 yards.

Besides McDougald, four starting receivers are returning from last year's squad. Sophomore tight end Dan Noble and senior flanker Orrin Ford are projected as the top prospects, although Ford caught only four passes last year.

Besides the passing game, Cal's running game sputtered, averaging only 1.7 yards per carry last year. Kapp should look for senior Ron Story to carry the majority of the rushing load. He led the team with 435 net yards rushing.

Freshman Gayland Houston, who runs a 4.4-second 40-yard dash, could provide Cal with an exciting ground game in the future.

Losing 27 letterman, the most in the Pac-10, the Bears will depend on a youthful defense. With the graduation of eight defensive starters, including All-America linebacker Ron Rivera, Cal once again will need to capitalize on an opportunistic defense which caused 41 turnovers last year.

The linebackers were hit worst by graduation. With all four 1983 starters gone, sophomore Hardy Nickerson, a 6-foot-2, 215-pound inside backer blessed with speed, should be the main cog in the middle. Junior Miles Turpin tops the list of candidates at outside backer.

Kapp has confidence in senior noseguard John Haina to anchor the defensive line. Amassing 100 tackles last season, Haina will be joined by another returning starter, senior tackle Don James.

The Cal secondary appears to be heading toward one of its better years. Safety David Carter, who intercepted 20 passes last year, the highest team total since 1971, will return, along with Garey Williams and Matt Grimes. All are respectable players who were hobbled by injuries in 1983.

Ex-Cat punter reaches settlement

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Former U of A punter Bob Boris, who brought the test case which led to the ruling overturning the United States Football League's ban on underclassmen eligibility, has reached an out-of-court settlement with the league on damages, it was learned Tuesday.

Boris' attorney, John L'Estrange, said the damages were settled late last week but both parties had agreed to keep the terms confidential.

Ernie Wright, president of the Professional Sports Management Inc. and Boris' agent, said the settlement included legal fees and compensation, but he refused to disclose the amount.

As of Tuesday, a trial had not been scheduled to start in U.S. District Court.

U.S. District Judge Laughlin Waters ruled Feb. 28 that the eligibility rule used by both the USFL and the National Football League constituted a "group boycott" in violation of antitrust laws.

The rule prohibited a USFL team from signing a player either until his college eligibility had expired, at least five years had passed since he first entered college, or he had received a diploma.

"I think both parties are satisfied with the settlement," Gary Kaplan, assistant counsel for the USFL, said by telephone from New York. "We just wish Bob Boris all the luck."

Kaplan said the league still is working with colleges "to come up with a rule which would be in the best interests of all parties, including the student athletes, the colleges and the professional football leagues."

Wright said Boris, a former Oklahoma Outlaws player who left college early, hopes to play for someone in the near future.

"Because of the NFL season already being under way, we have some workouts scheduled for him with some USFL teams."

Spikers move up a spot in CVCA poll

The ASU volleyball team moved up one notch to overtake the No. 11 spot in this week's Tachikara-Collegiate Volleyball Coaches Association poll.

The Sun Devils defeated New Mexico last week to improve their record to 2-0.

The University of the Pacific continued to hold down the top spot after winning its first three matches of the season. The Tigers will visit ASU at 5 p.m. this Saturday.

WCAA teams continued to hold their positions in the poll. UCLA, Stanford and USC stayed 2-3-4 in the poll, although the Trojans lost one match.

San Diego State stayed in the No. 8 spot while Arizona moved up to No. 12, a jump of one spot.

Only one new team appeared in the poll, Illinois State. The Redbirds won their first five matches of the season and were rewarded with the No. 16 spot. Cal-

Santa Barbara dropped out of the poll.

Nebraska made the biggest jump in the poll, moving past Hawaii and Western Michigan to the No. 5 spot.
