Board approves $16.5 million in University funding requests

By W. TIM AHL
Staff Writer

FLAGSTAFF — The Arizona Board of Regents Saturday approved $16.5 million in capital funding requests for ASU, but put a hold on plans for the University to attain $32.8 million in bonding authority through the Arizona Legislature.

The board also approved ASU's total request of $11.5 million to fund building costs for the ASU-West branch campus at 43rd Avenue and Thunderbird Road.

The funds approved by the regents at their monthly meeting at NAU are intended for use in new construction projects and additions to existing buildings on the ASU campuses, according to Executive Director Robert Huff.

A new fine arts complex and two additional floors for Hayden Library are the two priority items for capital outlay spending, according to ASU President J. Russell Nelson.

"We have significant theater needs and a good-sized art collection that we don't currently have facilities for," Nelson said.

"We are short 4,000 library (study spaces), and library shelf space will be full by 1987 at the current rate we are attaining books."

If the regents approve the bonding authority, ASU would spend $15 million for expansion of the Physical Sciences Center, $3 million for a law office and a law library addition and $11.5 million for expansion of the architecture building.

Regent finance committee chairman Jack Pfister asked that the board delay discussion on bonding authority until the president's councils from ASU, U of A and NAU can review the matter and submit a report to the regents at its November meeting at the U of A.

The state's three universities originally asked for $121.8 million in capital outlay funds, but divided the amount between the funding request and bonding authority because of the small amount of capital funds that have been available in recent years.

The Legislature has approved an average of $8 million annually in capital funds since 1974.

ASU's $16.5 million allotment is part of the $50.6 million capital fund the regents approved for the Arizona's three universities at its monthly meeting last weekend at NAU.

The regents denied the request for $70 million in bonding authority because board members wanted more time to determine the consequences of such a large request, according to regent Donald Pitt.

"I am uncomfortable in dealing with this," Pitt said. "I need to get a handle on what the impact of this might be."

The regents also fear the bonding request could cause substantial tuition increases in the coming years, Pitt said.

"I wish everybody could go to school for free, but you can't develop a program providing for capital funds without considering tuition," he said.

Regent Esther Capin said she is hesitant about using bonding authority too often.

"The campuses have ongoing needs," Capin said. "Not everything can be accomplished from bonds, but in some instances it is necessary to use them."

Dean says ASU colleges fail to work together

By SHERRY LOWE
Staff Writer

The ASU College of Education and other colleges within the University are failing to work together to educate future teachers, according to the education dean.

"Colleges working together is a problem at ASU," Robert Stout said. "We're not working together as well as we ought to be."

"I think in the last 25 to 30 years there has been a loosening of ties between other colleges and the education college," Stout said.

The education college has cooperative arrangements with the fine arts, engineering and liberal arts colleges, he said, but added, "There's still plenty of room to work better together," Stout added.

He said those colleges are working with the College of Education to establish appropriate curriculum for students planning to enter the education program.

"We want the curriculum in the first two years to be stronger," Stout said.

The reaction followed the Thursday release of a report authored by The Task Force on Teacher Education recommending improved communications between colleges at universities.

The report, entitled "Teacher Education in Arizona — Evolution or Revolution," was compiled by a 16-member task force appointed by Gov. Bruce Babbitt.

The task force consisted of presidents and professors from universities and community colleges throughout the state, including community leaders.

Stout, a task force member, said the report's goal was to study methods of teacher education in Arizona.

"A lot of uncertainty existed earlier about the quality of our education system," he said.

He said the task force has met for the past year to study the different aspects of the state's teaching system.

A recommendation in the report is to strengthen existing course work at the universities and community colleges.

Stout said ASU has begun toughening curriculum requirements.

"Anyone entering the Education College must have a 2.5 grade point average and pass the Arizona Teachers' Proficiency Examination," Stout said.

Students must successfully complete EDF300, designed to test their desire to become teachers, he said.

"The faculty is also at work inventing new courses," he said.

According to Stout, nine faculty task forces, made up of about 70 education professors, will select these new courses.

"The official report will be available before this semester is over," Stout said.

The report will contain all the recommendations on strengthening courses, Stout said.

He said the report will be sent to Vice President for Academic Affairs Jack Kinsinger.

"We're expecting changes of a magnitude so great that it must be approved by Kinsinger," Stout said.

The governor's task force report recommends the improvement of student teaching at universities and community colleges.

Stout said ASU's student teaching program sends students to district schools to work with certified teachers.

He said although ASU's student teaching program is one of the best, "there is always room to improve."

Stout said scholars from the University of Illinois reported ASU as having a superior student teaching program.

"Last spring, scholars in Illinois reported ASU to be in the top 10 of all universities," Stout said.

Burnell tells Faculty Senate of ASASU's 'active role'

By SANAA AL-MARAYATI
Staff Writer

The president of Associated Students of ASU told the Faculty Senate Monday that the student government is taking an active role to promote better education.

Raymond Burnell said "student government wants to be a credible part to the University instead of being observant."

Burnell said student government is working on a report that will recommend improvements for student services at the University.

Burnell said the University granted $2,000 to the Minority Affairs Board, which is part of ASASU, to improve service for minority students.

"With the best of intentions, we should shape for a better education," he said.

Burnell also referred to the student government's involvement in tuition rates for 1985-86, which the Arizona Board of Regents set this weekend at the lowest increase in five years.

The new levels represent a 4.2 percent increase for resident students and 3.9 percent for non-resident students.

Burnell said ASASU is concerned with the parking situation at ASU.

"We have been working with Chief (C. Russell) Duncan with the parking problem," Burnell said. "Our main concern is the congested parking lots."

The problem, according to Burnell, is that some parking areas have been replaced by buildings.

Burnell said the University needs to adjust to the changing student population at ASU.

"Today, we have the 26-year-old transit student, not the 18-year-old traditional students," he said. "We need to adjust to the needs of assisting older students."

Burnell said he wants restraints in the percentage increase of student health insurance.

Last year there was a 36 percent increase in health insurance cost for students, he said.

"We don't have a specific outline, but we only want a 12 percent increase for this year," Burnell said.

Alan Johnson, chairman of the Faculty

Senate committee on academic affairs, announced the proposals to change the names the following departments:

- The Center for Public Affairs to the School of Public Affairs.
- The Center for Justice Studies to the School of Justice Studies.

- The Department of Administrative Services to the Department of General Business.

- The Department of Leisure Studies to the Department of Recreation Administration and Tourism.

Johnson said there will be a meeting to discuss these requests Oct. 22 in the Board of Regents Room, located in the Administration Building.

U.S. tourists shun Mexico for fear of roving bandits

MATAMOROS, Mexico (AP) — Some Americans have quit driving across the border into Mexico for fear of roving bandits who prey on U.S. tourists, despite Mexican government promises to increase security patrols in problem areas.

Mexico has promised to increase security and patrols in problem areas around the country, where four Americans have been killed and several more have been robbed along major highways since Aug. 31, officials said.

Joyce Trebe, manager of the American Automobile Association office in Austin, Texas, said members are being warned to use caution when driving in Mexico, and are advised to travel in groups.

But several victims of robberies and accidents in Mexico say the U.S. State Department has done too little to warn tourists of the pitfalls of visiting Mexico.

On Thursday, officials of the U.S. Embassy in Mexico City shelved a plan to issue travel warnings after U.S. Ambassador John Gavin met with Tourism Secretary Antonio Enríquez Savignac.

FDA panel recommends warnings of sulfite additives

WASHINGTON (AP) — A Food and Drug Administration advisory panel today recommended package labels and restaurant notices warning of foods containing sulfites so that asthmatics and others who may be allergic to the preservatives can avoid them.

The report, from a review panel of the Federation of American Societies for Experimental Biology, said there is no evidence that the substances pose a hazard to those who aren't hypersensitive to them, "when they are used at levels now current and in the manner now practiced."

But the report said more studies are needed.

Nobel medicine discoveries have important real-world uses

BOSTON (AP) — The awarding of the Nobel Prize in medicine Monday to the developers of monoclonal antibodies comes just as their discoverers are finding uses that could revolutionize the diagnosis and treatment of diseases from herpes to cancer.

These chemicals have the ability to pinpoint targets inside the body — germs, particular blood cells, even single cancer cells — so they can be identified or destroyed.

"I think it's one of the major contributions to biomedical research in the last 30 years," said Dr. Jack R. Wands of Massachusetts General Hospital. "It touches all branches of research from basic immunology to clinical applications such as, potentially, cancer chemotherapy. It's had an enormous impact and will continue to do so."

Wands is one of the scientists at dozens of universities and hospitals around the world who are looking for ways to harness these substances to cure disease.

The Nobel Prize for medicine was given to Drs. George J. F. Koehler of West Germany and Cesar Milstein of Argentina for discovering how to produce monoclonal antibodies. Dr. Niels K. Jerne, a British citizen who works in Switzerland, was also recognized for basic research into the body's immune defenses.

Annual Town Hall to approach county concerns

By ASHA NATHAN
Staff Writer

The director of ASU's Center for Advanced Research in Transportation will chair one of five panels at the 45th Arizona Town Hall Oct. 28-31 at the Grand Canyon.

Mathew Betz said he has a special interest in the upcoming Town Hall, which will deal with the problems and concerns of Arizona's counties, because he directs a technology transfer program for Arizona counties and non-metropolitan municipalities.

Betz said the aim of the transfer program is to put the technological knowledge gained through research into a form where it will be useful to county engineers and public works directors in small towns.

But the transfer program is not the main reason he will attend the Town Hall, sponsored twice a year by the Arizona Academy for Public Affairs, a private non-profit organization.

Mathew Betz

Betz, professor of civil engineering at ASU for 23 years, said he has a certain commitment to the academy. "I've been active with the academy for a number of years."

He said he has participated in former Town Halls throughout the 22 years the academy has been in existence.

Shirley Agnos, president of the academy, said it was formed after "six to eight men from Arizona were invited to a national conference called the National Assembly, which was started by Dwight Eisenhower."

The purpose of the Town Halls, Agnos said, is to "bring together 125 people who are leaders in their various walks of life and educate them in a subject that is important to Arizona."

"They hopefully take back what they learn to the people they deal with," she said. According to Betz, the Town Halls are "very effective."

Agnos said the people who chair panels usually have participated in at least one previous Town Hall. Participants are nominated by the academy's board of directors.

Betz said prior to each Town Hall, one of Arizona's three state universities research the upcoming topic and publish their results.

This year, ASU's Center for Public Affairs conducted the required research for their document on counties.

Betz said of the approaching Town Hall, "I think we'll be looking at the functioning and financing of counties and the relationship between counties and the state."

At the close of this month's Town Hall, participants will finalize a series of conclusions and recommendations concerning Arizona county government.

Research on the technology transfer program began Oct. 1.

police report

An ASU student's wallet was reported stolen early Monday from the Sigma Phi Epsilon fraternity house. The wallet contained the student's Visa card, to which $600 in merchandise was charged by the suspect. Police said the suspect forged the student's name, using the card at restaurants in Tempe and Mesa. There are no suspects but the student said he will prosecute.

University Police reported criminal damage was done to Gammage Center Sunday by an unidentified white male in his early 20s. The suspect banged on the main entrance to the building, breaking glass and damaging the door frame. Police had not found the suspect as of Monday morning. Total damage was estimated at $200.

In other activity, University Police reported the following incidents in the 24-hour period ending at 2 p.m. Monday:

•An ASU student was involved in a vehicle fire Sunday at the Tempe Center parking lot. The Tempe Fire Department determined the fire was caused by faulty wiring in the shifter of the 1984 Jeep the student was driving. No injuries were reported.

•A fire alarm was activated at Delta Sigma Phi fraternity house Sunday by someone who had lit matches under the smoke detector. University Police responded and found the area secure.

Smoking

It's not a matter of 'if' one puffs, but 'where'

Steve Waterstrat
Managing Editor

Warning: The Surgeon General Has Determined That Smoking Can Seriously Annoy The Person Next To You.

While the above is not one of several warnings considered by Congress to slap on cigarette packs and ads, it seems to underline the major debate surrounding the smoky subject right now.

The point is that smokers have long been aware of the hazards of this life-demoting habit. While their health is their own business, all too often their decision to smoke is carried out at the expense of persons in the immediate vicinity.

In a report over the summer, Surgeon General C. Everett Koop provided the medical argument for non-smokers by announcing "very solid" evidence that passive smoking (getting it from the air) is dangerous, especially to children. We've come a long way since colonial times, when doctors told their patients that smoking tobacco was a good remedy for breathing ailments.

It is beyond me how some smokers can shrug off as petty a no-smoking request, considering modern knowledge that non-smokers run a greater risk of lung cancer from sitting in smoky rooms. As if the fact that many people are physically bothered by the smoke, and some actually have allergic reactions to it would not be sufficient reason for smokers to take their habit elsewhere.

But non-smokers are often looked on as rude or obnoxious for asking someone not to smoke — as if a person is uncivil for showing concern for his or her health and comfort.

Imagine the scenario of me carrying a burning stick into someone's house. That person would become exasperated and think I was crazy. A far-fetched, irrelevant, altogether stupid example? The scene is really not so different from a person smoking in the midst of an affirmed non-smoker. To be technical, some of the compounds used in curing tobacco actually make cigarette smoke more harmful than that of burning wood.

Whether one uses wood, pipe, or leaves rolled in paper, violation of an individual's breathing space should not be taken lightly. "Rude" non-smokers are becoming increasingly vocal.

This recent "We're not gonna take it" militancy of non-smokers has sparked much public debate. As 30 states have approved smoking restrictions in public areas, certain stubborn smokers rebel at the prospect of giving up their puffing privilege.

These smokers seem to think they are exercising a constitutionally-protected right. The habit has been condoned for so long that it is hard for them to come to the realization that society is revoking its sanctioning of the activity.

No one is more nervous about the smokeless society concept — articulated as a goal for the year 2000 by Surgeon General Koop — than cigarette manufacturers. American companies blow $1.5 billion annually for ads and promotions — an attempt to flex their monetary muscle and counteract anti-smoking campaigns by health agencies.

One elected proponent of this corporate cause is North Carolina Gov. James Hunt, who flew off the handle at Koop's optimism for the future. Hunt failed to win much pro-tobacco sentiment in this corner by pointing out all the revenue his state takes in by growing the weed.

A more progressive public official, San Francisco Mayor Dianne Feinstein, signed a city ordinance last June requiring private businesses to provide non-smoking work areas. Although the action does fall into the business regulation area that makes good libertarians twinge, protecting the welfare of individual citizens is the overriding governmental responsibility in this case.

It's too bad state intervention is necessary. A more preferable solution would be the development of a mutual understanding between smokers and non-smokers. Some of the more intelligent and considerate smokers possess the empathy to understand why some people object to forced inhalation of smoke and show the courtesy of smoking elsewhere. But then there are the tactless slob, who feel no regret for blowing a few millirads of alpha radiation your way. My pleasant nature prevents me from commenting further on this dingy subgroup.

This brings to mind an instance when I interviewed the feminist leader of a women's support group. While I agreed with the abstracts of our conversation, I had to laugh when, as she reiterated our mutual disgust over women in this country having been subjected to male oppression, she blew a huge carcinogenic cloud into my face.

At the time, laughter was my best possible reaction to a practice that I considered a personal affront, but would not loudly object to, since I had somehow accepted the smoker's right to pollute our confined airspace.

But society and I are more rational now, and the pro-breath movement is strong. While sympathetic to the nicotine addiction smokers have to contend with, affirmed non-smokers do not agree that we should have to suffer for their vice.

Pro-breathers don't care if one smokes. But we do care where one smokes. Preferably, somewhere else.

Complainers should take up more important causes

Jim McCleary
City Editor

Warning: We smokers have determined that your bitching could be hazardous to your health.

This bumper-sticker rendition of the surgeon general's assertion about cigarette smoking represents retaliation to the non-smoking hype. Smokers know full well what the almighty surgeon general has declared — now it's time for smokers to have their own statement. This one seems quite apropos.

Before continuing, let it be known that this is not a column defending cigarette smoking. It is, however, directed to those who find it necessary to ridicule smokers and continuously ramble about how it is affecting not only the smoker's health but theirs as well.

The pursuit of immortality which is sweeping across the country is rather annoying. Science has a newfound objective to invent artificial organs to prolong life unnaturally. Euthanasia is considered sinful and illegal, thus suspending life indefinitely by mechanical means. And then, of course, there are the health fanatics who insist on reciting their famous line: "You lose eight minutes of life for every cigarette you smoke." My response is: "Thank you for your concern."

Those same people who find it necessary to repeat what is blaringly obvious on the side of any cigarette package also whine about the health hazards others' smoking has on them. It's a shame they don't expend as much energy attempting to control air pollutants from factories and vehicles. Some of the so-called physically fit will gripe about how smokers pollute their air, then jog down Mill Avenue at rush hour with exhaust fumes hovering over them. Their choice of running tracks seems ironic.

The City of Tempe is now trying to jump on the no-smoking bandwagon through legislation which would ban smoking in restaurants that seat more than 20 people, grocery stores, lobbies and other public areas. Councilman Frank Plencer, who introduced the proposal, said he talked to 25 to 30 people about the proposal, and only one disagreed with it. I guess that means the proposal has wide-spread support among more than 140,000 Tempeans, right Mr. Plencer?

I support smoking bans in grocery stores and lobbies. After all, most people do not stay in these areas long enough to have a cigarette. But the ban in restaurants is another matter. What ever happened to the smoking sections in restaurants? Most smokers would prefer to be separated from the non-smokers anyway, in a place free from complainers. If such a ban receives city council approval (the proposal has yet to be introduced), Tempe restaurants will lose most of their smoker clientele.

There have been numerous attempts in Phoenix to pass a smoking ban at workplaces. If you accept the fact that at any workplace there will be a certain number of smokers, consider the consequences of prohibiting smoking while working. To compromise, the boss will have to allow them a certain number of minutes to leave the office to smoke — let's say five minutes an hour. That person's work will be greatly hampered by the hourly interruption of leaving for a cigarette. Moreover, for a heavy smoker, and yes, there are still a few around, one break an hour for a cigarette is certainly not enough. The tension and anticipation of waiting for those precious five minutes to roll around every hour will be destructive to productivity.

The issue of smoking bans has also done something very strange to personal relationships. Recently in the retirement area of Sun City, residents passed a measure prohibiting smoking in all recreational areas. Stories are now circulating about people in Sun City who will no longer speak to friends who opposed the ban. It would seem once a person is old enough to move to Sun City, immaturity would have been conquered. Apparently not.

The current movement against smokers can be linked to fads and trends. In the '50s and '60s, it was fashionable to smoke. Then, people who really didn't want to smoke did it anyway because everyone else was doing it. Sure, there were some who didn't, but they were in the minority. Today, smokers are in that minority and it has now become fashionable to oppose and complain about smokers. It's a reverse bandwagon effect of the opinions in the '60s — people now gripe about smoking, not because it bothers them, but because everyone else is doing it.

If bandwagon jumpers must have a cause they can promote, at least they should deplore something which poses a more immediate threat to their well-being than cigarette smokers. Let's make drunken drivers the target of attack. After all, an encounter with a drunk on the road may shorten your life by a lot more than eight minutes.

Abortion is 'necessary' . . . bad experience

Editor:

In response to Ben Hoglund's Oct. 3 letter "Don't impose your beliefs on me," I feel Mr. Hoglund took a firm position on the abortion issue — obviously one he has some intense views about.

I laud Mr. Hoglund for his recognition of a common offense in our culture — that many people become infuriated when they feel someone is attempting to force his beliefs on another. He thinks this "reflects a common misconception, namely that anyone can impose his or her beliefs on anyone else." He goes on to say that although that imposition is unjustifiable, "everyone has not only the right but the responsibility to shape the values of society." I agree wholeheartedly.

The writer asserts that citizens who take a pro-life stance are told to keep quiet by those with opposing views. This, in my opinion, reflects a misconception, Mr. Hoglund, that anyone can make you keep quiet. You reside in a country where you are allowed independent beliefs and given the freedom to express them, which you have.

You indicate that you are concerned with society as a whole. Let me ask you then, where would society be without abortion? Statistics show the suicide rate among women would be much higher and also the death rate caused by the practice of "home abortions" which was the case prior to the Supreme Court's decision 11 years ago.

Abortion, although there is no doubt it is overused in our country, is absolutely logical and necessary. There are cases where pregnancy results from rape, circumstances involving drugs, radiation and other causes of birth defects, or an occurrence where the mother or infant's life is at stake. These are exceptional cases which occur perpetually, and without legalized abortion, society would suffer. Picture in your mind, if you will, a crazed woman tormented daily by her child — a constant reminder of an ugly physical attack by an insane degenerate. Should this woman suffer for the rest of her life because she was a victim? For that matter, should the child?

On another level, we have abortions on teenagers which, according to the Allen Guttmacher Institute make up nearly half of the 1.5 million performed throughout the United States each year. It is disheartening to think of all those innocent lives that were destroyed because someone couldn't take responsibility for his or her own actions. In no uncertain circumstance do I believe in abortion as a means of birth control.

On the other hand, let us consider the suffering, pregnant young teen who knows little about sex in general, much less birth control. Possibly a woman in mere physical aspects, she is devastated by the changes in her body and unable to cope with pregnancy, still a child herself.

If she were to have the baby and choose to keep it, who is to say she would ever cope? Would the baby grow up resentful? Who, in the long run, would be punished? She? The child? Society?

Say abortions were outlawed. While adoption agencies are continuously searching for prospective children, it is most likely that these mothers would choose to keep their children if they did not commit suicide, did not attempt to "rid" themselves of that child, and did in fact give birth. If they raised the children, could they handle parenthood? Child abuse is a malicious, all-too-common occurrence. In this case, we must consider the possibility of resentment leading to neglect. Child abuse is difficult for our courts to prove, it takes time, and quite often, children wind up dead.

I am a loving, caring person who longs to someday be a mother. Upon reading last year about a celebration being held in honor of the anniversary of the Supreme Court's decision to legalize abortion, I was horrified. The participants even held a candle-lighting ceremony. In my opinion, only a group of sick, demented people would celebrate. The girls who have abortions aren't celebrating. I don't celebrate the fact that abortions exist. However, there is no alternative way for our courts to decide who really needs this service other than to leave it in the hands of women and pray they make the right decision for themselves and society as a whole.

Editor:

I feel that I must respond to various letters which have recently appeared on the opinion page concerning the "pro-life" position. Each time I read one of these emotional appeals I am distressed by what I perceive to be a basic contradiction in its argument. That is, how can anyone who claims to be so fervently concerned with the welfare of a 6-week-old fetus be so blandly apathetic toward the wholesale destruction of life which our own national policies engender? These people rally and write and passionately vow to protect the rights of the unborn child from the cruel and heartless abortionists yet seem quite unconcerned with the preservation or improvement in the quality of lives already existent.

The sentiment that I read in these letter is not of itself bad, rather misdirected. If they are genuinely concerned about that precious thing called life then why are they being so shamefully selective? The "pro-life" contingent rails against the idea that a woman should have the right to terminate a life through an abortion, yet their own ignorance or callousness about U.S. foreign policy in Central America condemns hundreds to torture and death. Every day our tax dollars are being used to destroy homes, families, crops, businesses and yes, even children in the countries of this region. What about the rights of these people? Who will champion their cause and protect their right to life?

Editor:

I have read letters to the editor from persons who feel abortion is morally wrong and others who feel abortion is a matter of choice. I would like to present a side of the abortion debate that few people consider. That is the position of one who has had an abortion. This is what the "right to choose" has meant to me: In 1980 I aborted my first child. I was told at Planned Parenthood that this little "blob of tissue" would be as easily removed as a wart. Terminating a pregnancy, I was told, was no more significant than removing a tiny blood clot in my uterus. "Sounds harmless," I reasoned. Exercising the right to choose, I opted for abortion. At that time no other options, such as adoption or single parenting, were explained. At the abortion clinic I was not given painkillers. When the suction aspirator was turned on I felt like my entire insides were being torn from me. Three-quarters of the way through the procedure I looked down and to my right and there I saw the bits and pieces of my baby floating in a pool of blood. When I screamed, "I killed my baby!" the counselor in attendance told me to shut up.

But the worst was yet to come. I was not forewarned about the deep psychological problems I would encounter in the months and years to follow. Neither was it explained previous to the abortion that I would experience severe depressions in which I would contemplate suicide. I didn't mourn the loss of my appendix so why would I grieve the passing of an enigmatic uteran blob? The answer was that it wasn't a mere "blob of tissue," it was a living baby. I realized it the moment I saw his dismembered limbs. I realized too late.

By now the reader may be asking, "Isn't this an extreme example of an abortion experience?" Actually, no. Mine was a routine suction abortion. Some women have had worse experiences than mine. There are women I know of who have themselves delivered their own dead babies following a "safe, legal" saline abortion. After poisoning, the baby thrashes around for a couple of hours as he is suffocated, choked and burned to death.

If abortion is so good for women, then why do 5 to 10 percent of these women become sterile following abortion? Why do women who've had an abortion have a higher incidence of suicide? And why do the chances of losing a subsequent wanted baby double or even quadruple following a safe, legal abortion? Since when has death become good for us?

Costa Rica Freedom fighter

By VICKIE CHACHERE
 Staff Writer

At the age of 22, Willy Solis Jr. has fought against communist forces in Central America, founded a world-wide organization and is slowly changing the lives of hundreds of farmers in Costa Rica.

Despite all his achievements, the founder and world director of the Free World Leaders describes himself as "just a middle-class student from Costa Rica."

"I am not a member of the Costa Rican government. I am not a member of the Costa Rican police. I am not a member of the Costa Rican upper class. I am just a student who started an organization to help people," Solis said.

Solis, who founded the Free World Leaders in June, spoke Friday at ASU on his organization's efforts to improve living conditions in Costa Rica and eliminate Communism in Central America.

"I am trying to scare people in this country," Solis said. "They should be scared about what is going on in Central America."

"There are a lot of things that are happening in Central America that are unknown here. The only way people are going to react to this problem is to be scared."

"I have fought (against) the Communists. I have seen them shooting in my face. I know these people. I have talked to them. We know what we are working with."

Solis, a former engineering student at the University of Costa Rica, is on his third tour of the United States. He said he speaks to groups ranging from university students to members of the business community.

"It's hard to understand the problems of Central America if you don't know the background of the Central American people," he said.

Solis said Costa Rica's freedom is threatened by Communist forces that have taken over Nicaragua and that are moving into El Salvador.

He describes Costa Rica as "a free country with a free enterprise system" whose constitution mirrors that of the United States.

"We speak Spanish and we dress a little different, but that's about the only difference," Solis said.

Costa Rica's economy is based on agriculture, Solis said, and 2.3 million people inhabit the country's 20,000 square miles.

He said his country, which has not had a military since 1948, is being threatened by the Communist party, which represents 3 percent of the population.

Even though the party represents a small portion of the population, a threat exists because Costa Rica does not have a military to protect its citizens, he said.

"If you have 10 people and put guns in their hands, and you have 50 people on the other side without any guns, it doesn't matter who is the majority," Solis said.

"They (the Communists) are talking about peace, but they haven't put their weapons down."

In addition to the party's existence in Costa Rica, he said the increasing number of refugees from Nicaragua is presenting an additional problem for the nation.

Solis, who left Costa Rica a week ago, said Costa Rican communities cannot absorb the number of refugees, and the situation is putting a strain on the nation's economy.

ghter speaks out against Communism

He said if the strain is not alleviated, a greater number of refugees will move into Arizona and neighboring states.
"It has been calculated that 30 million to 100 million refugees will run to the U.S. It is already happening," Solis said.
"What is this country going to do with 30 million more refugees?"
Solis said a number of refugees are young people trying to avoid being drafted into one of the warring factions.
"Sixteen-year-olds are being forced into the Sandanista army and forced into the jungles to fight," he said.

"They don't know about politics, they only know they don't want to be forced into the army and have to fight."
Solis said anti-American involvement groups don't fully understand the problems facing Central America, and they often speak their opinions without having been to the countries.
"It is real easy to talk about all the problems when you are sitting here in a free country, 8,000 miles away from the problem," Solis said.

Media coverage of the events in Central America is not always accurate, and often misrepresents the conflict, Solis said.

He said the media has not given the American people a full account of events in Central America and news photographs of what appears to be murdered civilians are often Communist-backed guerillas.

"They (anti-Communist forces) never know who is the rebel and who is the civilian in the crowd because (Communist-backed rebels) dress like civilians," Solis said.

"Do you see the pictures of the civilian firing at the soldiers? No, you get the picture of the soldier lying dead with a gun and the civilian lying dead without a gun."

Solis said he decided to form Free World Leaders because of the conditions in Central America. The organization deals mainly in improving the living conditions of the farmers. By improving the farmers' lives, the entire country benefits economically and the need for government reform will not exist, he said.

Free World Leaders provides low-interest loans to farmers, allowing them to expand their farms and their income. The Costa Rican government borrows money at 9-percent interest rates and lends it to the farmers at 22 percent, Solis said.

Another goal of the organization is to eliminate the amount of discussion about improving conditions, and actually work with the farmers in making improvements.

"I don't talk too much," Solis said. "The Communists talk and talk, but they never do anything."

"We talk, we act, and in the end, the people who need the help get the help," he said. "They get it if they have earned it."

Solis said his goal is to insure the freedom of Central America from outside aggression and to stop the spread of turmoil out of Nicaragua.

"I believe in freedom. I can get into El Salvador. I can get into Guatemala. If I step into Nicaragua I am dead," he said.

"I am not only anti-Communist. I am pro-freedom. Communism is not my only enemy. I am against anything that works against free enterprise, and freedom and justice," Solis said.

Zendejas eyes records while regaining touch

Luis Zendejas, shown here kicking out of the hold of Tim Salem in action this year, is the most prolific scoring placekicker in NCAA history.

By STEVE RICHMAN
Sports Writer

With the ASU football team sporting a 2-3 record five weeks into the season, there are many areas where personnel changes have been made. But one player who has remained constant in the lineup is placekicker Luis Zendejas.

While he had his problems early this season, Zendejas has kept himself in a positive frame of mind and ready for the rest of the season.

"Right now we must go out and win our six remaining games, no ifs, ands or buts," Zendejas said. "We've got the players, but we need to get our heads together and play like we're capable of playing."

With an open date last weekend, Zendejas said the team concentrated on discipline and certain job responsibilities.

"We need for our players to concentrate on their individual positions, and discipline themselves to do what they're supposed to do," he said.

the season is dependent on one vital kick. Zendejas said while there are kicks that do make or break a game, he doesn't view the situation as being all-or-nothing.

"I try to picture each attempt as being the same," Zendejas said. "In the game against Cal, for example, the extra point after our second touchdown could have been the winning point, but to me, it was just another point."

"Being nervous before a kick serves no purpose," Zendejas said. "Throughout most of my career, I have been on the 'up' side. After missing the field goal against Southern California that would have tied the game, I got a good feeling as to what it feels like to be on the 'down' side."

After the missed attempt against USC, there were many rumors regarding Zendejas' physical condition. To set the record straight, he said he just missed the field goal, and it's just one of those things that happens.

Zendejas: 'Last season I had a lot of attempts at the beginning of the season, but so far this year, I haven't had nearly the same amount of chances.'

As for Zendejas personally, he is sixth on the all-time scoring list with 319, leaving him 37 points behind Tony Dorsett, who tallied 356 points with the University of Pittsburgh.

So far this season Zendejas has not had the number of chances he had in previous years. In the last two ASU games Zendejas had only one field goal attempt (against the Cardinal which he missed from 48-yards).

"This year is exactly opposite from last season," Zendejas said. "Last year I had a lot of attempts at the beginning of the season, but so far this year, I haven't had nearly the same amount of chances."

Zendejas said he sees two possible reasons for the lack of attempts.

"For a kicker to get the chance to kick, the offense has to be able to move the ball," Zendejas said. "Also, last year Coach Darryl Rogers took a lot of heat because he would call on me on plays where the offense could possibly have gotten the first down. This year, however, he has elected to go more for the first down or touchdown than for a field goal."

Numerous times throughout the career of a kicker, the outcome of the game or even Zendejas, a senior bi-lingual language major, intends to play professionally if he can get a contract on a team where he can have a long career and enjoy himself.

"Playing for the Wranglers is a definite possibility," Zendejas said. "I know the people in Tempe, and I know that the fans here will let me know how I'm doing, either good or bad."

With the scoring record in reach, Zendejas will need to average a little more than six points a game. To attain that plateau, he will need some help from his friends. He said his inconsistency so far this season is due to lack of experience.

That's right, experience. He said, "The more times you kick, the better you get. It doesn't matter how many times you've kicked, there's no substitute for experience."

In spite of the less than spectacular start ASU has had so far, Zendejas said he hasn't lost respect for the coaching staff.

"We have a great group of coaches," he said. "They prepare us well for our games, but the rest of the job is up to the players. We need to get together as a team, and play well the rest of the season."

Thoughts on dream games, 'Dirty Kurt' and 'Ugly Kirk'

Jerry Brown
Asst. Sports Editor

With just so many things happening in this wonderful world we call sports, today's ramblings will come from several sources, some of which may even interest you. If not, I don't really care. I know my mother will read it.

ASU FOOTBALL — Did you catch the "Dream Game" on the radio Saturday? It just wasn't realistic enough for me.

Where was Elvis? I know it would have been tough, what with pulling double duty and all. But not showing up at all. That's just not the cowboy way, pardner!

Where did they get all that crowd noise? The fans dubbed over the radio sounded like they were enjoying themselves. Weekly inhabitants of Sun Devil Stadium know ASU's crowd never sounds like 70,000 maniacs. Insomniacs maybe. Agoraphobics definitely. Maniacs? Nah.

The whole concept of a dream game confuses me. For most ASU fans this season, a dream game is one in which the ASU offense drives down field and scores a touchdown.

But the football schedule thrusts us back into reality Saturday. It's ASU and the Oregon State Beavers.

Whoopie.

World Series — Boy, those Detroit fans really know how to throw a party, don't they? I mean, no celebration is complete without rampant arson and sporadic gunfire. It was lucky the United Auto Workers came to terms on a new contract, or the Detroit police would have really had a donneybrook. The Tigers last won the world championship in 1968, and the fans are trying to recreate the events, complete with race riots. Let's just hope Miami doesn't win the Super Bowl and the fans try to engage in a "can you top this" competition.

Although Kirk Gibson did not win the Most Valuable Player (MVP) for the series, he does join two other Tigers on my all-UP (Ugly Players) squad. The winners include:

CATCHER — Milt May, Ron Hodges (hall of fame: Andy Etchebarren)

I mean, no celebration is complete without rampant arson and sporadic gunfire

FIRST BASE — Cecil Cooper, Steve Balboni
SECOND BASE — Joel Youngblood, Glenn Hubbard
SHORTSTOP — Alan Trammell, Robin Yount (hall of fame: Mark Belanger and Woody Woodward)
THIRD BASEMAN — Ron Cey, Phil Garner, Garth Iorg (he's really not that ugly, but Garth? Come on.)

CENTER FIELD — Willie McGee, Mel Hall, Lloyd Moseby
RIGHT FIELD — Gibson (who out-ugs Reggie Jackson and Jack Clark by well over 10,000 whiskers)
DESIGNATED HITTER — Cliff Johnson (end of argument)

PITCHER (RIGHT) — Pete Vuckovich, Jack Morris, LaMarr Hoyt

RELIEVER — Rich Gossage, Kent Tekulve (special mention to "The Mad Hungarian", Al Hrabosky)

MANAGER — Yogi Berra (the man defies gravity) (honorable mention to Joe Torre)

THIRD BASE COACH — Don "Popeye" Zimmer
I'm sure I missed some of your favorites, but these guys seem to fit the bill nicely.

No conversation on the World Series could be complete without a tip of the pen to Kurt Bevacqua, who single-handedly kept the Padres close with two home runs, seven RBI and five dirty uniforms. "Dirty Kurt" made many unbelievers like Tommy ("he couldn't hit water if he fell out of a boat") Lasorda eat their words.

Not bad for a guy whose previous biggest claim to fame was winning Bazooka's Baseball Bubble Gum Blowing Championship of 1977.

And finally . . . — Keep in mind the ASU-OSU game starts early this week at 4 p.m. Not only will the game be over while the night is still young, but it could give KTAR a five-hour session of "Sun Devil Talk." It just sort of boggles the mind, doesn't it?

Sparky, Tigers already setting sights on next year

Detroit (AP) — The World Series trophy had barely been passed to the Detroit Tigers when Manager Sparky Anderson began to think about next season.

"The greatest challenge for this club is to win in 1985," he said.

"It must win in '85. It's a must for these players. It's a must for this team. It's a must for these fans.

"Vince Lombardi once said that every squirrel can find one acorn. Let's see if we can find a bunch of them."

The Tigers captured their fourth World Series title, their first since 1968, with an 8-4 victory over the San Diego Padres Sunday in the Series' fifth game.

It was the end to a rare front-running season. The Tigers not only led the American League East Division from beginning to end — becoming only the third team in baseball to do so — but they won 35 of their first 40 games.

"Even though we won all those games, we didn't get a chance to show what we were until the last game," said Detroit center fielder Chet Lemon. "We were 35-5, and still had to prove it. Then, we were 7-1 in the playoffs — the same percentage. Now the world knows."

The Tigers won a club-record 104 games, holding no less than a seven-game lead from July 1 until the end of the season and finishing 15 games ahead of second-place Toronto. The front-running season put them in the select company of the 1927 New York Yankees and the 1923 New York Giants.

The Tigers beat Kansas City in three straight games in the American League playoffs, and needed only one game over the minimum to beat San Diego in the World Series.

In the revelry of triumph, catcher Lance Parrish did not think any team could have stood in the Tigers' path.

"I don't think anyone could," he said. "Winning 35 of 40 was fantastic. We just put it all together. We are world champions."

Yet Anderson was looking toward the future, probably because he has a past with which to compare it. Unlike most of his players, Anderson had been to the World Series before — four times as manager of the Cincinnati Reds.

He lost the Series twice, in 1970 to Baltimore and in 1972 to Oakland. Then, he won in consecutive seasons, 1975 and '76, against Boston and the Yankees. Anderson has called the '76 Reds, who won 102 games and swept the Yankees in the Series, the best team he has managed.

He has been asked repeatedly to compare the greatness of that Cincinnati team with this year's Tigers.

Normally, he wriggles out of the question. But perhaps by imploring the Tigers to win again in '85, he was looking for a way to answer it with action.

Taylor, Lee named in Pac-10 awards

WALNUT CREEK, Calif. (AP) — Kenny Taylor, a star in Oregon State's first conference victory of the season, and UCLA place-kicker John Lee have been named Pac-10 Players of the Week, Executive Director Thomas Hansen announced Monday.

Lee's 47-yard field goal on the final play of Saturday's game against Washington State gave UCLA a 27-24 victory. He also had a 42-yarder in the game and is 16 for 16 on field goal attempts this season.

Taylor, a cornerback, intercepted a pass, blocked a field goal try, broke up three passes and made six tackles in the Beavers' 9-6 win over California. The Bears' offense netted only 206 yards.

Other defensive players nominated for the weekly award were linebackers Joe Kelly of Washington and Duane Bickett of Southern California.

Other offensive players nominated were running backs Fred Crutcher of USC, Donald Beavers of Oregon State and Rueben Mayes of WSU.

Spikers bow to Aztecs; now 1-5 in conference

Continuing in its pattern of recent weeks, the ASU volleyball team split road matches over the weekend, but lost more ground in the WCAA.

The Sun Devils, ranked 20th, lost to 8th-ranked conference rival San Diego State, 3-1 (10-15, 15-4, 15-10, 15-11), but topped non-conference opponent U.S. International, 3-2 (11-15, 15-7, 15-9, 14-16, 15-5).

The Devils' record now stands at 8-6 overall, but only 1-5 in conference play.

The loss to the Aztecs concerned Coach Debbie Brown. "San Diego State is a streaky team," Brown said. "They didn't play very well."

"I feel we blew an opportunity to upset someone ranked above us. We didn't come in ready to play either."

The victory over USIU did not encourage Brown much, either. The Gulls are unranked, although Brown said they are a strong team.

"I was (disappointed) because I know we could have done much better."

"We're not playing real crisp. I know we can play better."

Lady harriers land eighth place in California Invitational Meet

The ASU women's cross country team finished eighth with 214 points in the 12-team California Invitational Saturday at the University of California.

In the meet, which Coach Roger Kerr called "the biggest so far of the year," the Sun Devils placed three runners in the top 50.

Sophomore Julie Seleine was the first Sun Devil across the finish line in 30th place with a time of 18:10.7 on the 5,000-meter course.

Wendy Sihner was 35th in a time of 18:19.7 and Susan Radford finished 44th in 18:38.8.

Heike Thiem finished 51st in 19:02.7 and Kris Denny was the fifth finisher for the Sun Devils, placing 54th in 19:38.
