Congressional candidates face off in debate

Disagree on variety of issues

By SANAA AL-MARAYATI
Staff Writer

The two candidates running for Arizona's 1st Congressional District in the U.S. House of Representatives squared off at ASU Monday in a public forum that initiated disagreements on foreign affairs, the economy and other domestic issues.

Rep. John McCain, R-Ariz., told about 200 people in the Arizona Room of the MU that the reason El Salvador President Jose Napoleon Duarte is negotiating with the rebels in El Salvador is because of U.S. aid.

McCain said because of U.S. support to establish a democratic government, El Salvadoran citizens are "voting for a leader."

"(Duarte) is the most respected and supported individual in that country," McCain said.

McCain's Democratic challenger, Harry Braun, said he does not agree with U.S. involvement "in a brutal, dictatorship government."

"We are killing innocent people by supporting such countries," Braun said. "We shouldn't support a country that doesn't have a constitutional government."

But McCain said El Salvador has established a democratic government.

"When I was in El Salvador, 75 percent of the people came out to vote because they want the ballot not the bullet," the incumbent said.

Braun said he supports providing aid to a foreign country to assist the people in that society.

"We should help them build a stable economy so we are not faced with a poverty problem," Braun said.

Braun said the reason immigrants flee to the United States is because they cannot survive in their own country. He said this causes a problem with illegal immigrants in the United States.

McCain blamed the U.S. government for the immigration problem.

"I am reluctant to round up families who have been here for years and throw them back across the border," McCain said. "We need to tighten up our border control."

McCain and Braun offered differing ideas about dealing with the nuclear arms race.

McCain said the U.S. government should not increase the arms buildup, but does support a system in space for defending against a nuclear attack.

"We should develop non-nuclear defensive weapons in space," McCain said, referring to the laser-equipped platforms of President Reagan's "Star Wars" plan.

Braun said building effective aircrafts is a priority.

"The pilots are saying that they first have to see if the engine will fly, then they see if they can fly the plane and then they fight the enemies," Braun said, referring to F-14 jets with defective engines.

He said the United States should concentrate on getting the fighter engines and other conventional equipment to work, before embarking on such a "hi-tech" plan like Star Wars.

Braun, a research analyst for Satellite Business Systems, a data and telecommunication partnership of IBM, COMSAT and Aetna, said this country will face a resource problem because of waste.

"It seems as though the resource problem is a political one, and that is why I decided to run," Braun said.

Braun promotes the Phoenix Hydrogen Project — a philanthropic project of seven years — and suggested hydrogen as a renewable energy alternative to petroleum products.

He said the fuel that aircrafts depend on will be gone in 15 to 20 years.

McCain said Braun has a valid point on the problem this country faces with its dependency on fossil fuel.

"We may be faced with a problem in the future, but what is the cost of (Braun's) idea?" McCain said.

Braun's rebuttal was that the oil companies are aware that petroleum is a limited resource.

"The oil companies are providing funds for the research on hydrogen because they know their reserves are being depleted," Braun said.

McCain said his opponent articulated his position very well, and said Braun's proposal on energy has merit.

"The people in this country are more concerned with the future," McCain said. "I think we can solve our energy crisis and control the arms race because we have the support of citizens."

McCain said if re-elected, he will consider introducing Braun's energy alternative to Congress.

Greeks hold Rock-A-Thon fund-raiser for arthritis

By CARRI L. MITCHELL
Staff Writer

The Lambda Chi Alpha fraternity and the Pi Beta Phi sorority began rocking on Cady Mall for charity at 9 a.m. Monday.

The sixth annual Rock-A-Thon will feature two members from the houses sitting in rocking chairs throughout the five-day event ending Friday at 9 p.m.

The houses are trying to raise money for the Arizona Arthritis Foundation, said Rich Macias, philanthropic president of Lambda Chi Alpha.

Bystanders can contribute to the fund-raiser by putting cash in the fishbowl located on Cady Mall by the people rocking.

"It's a wonderful chance to show that fraternities and sororities aren't just a social group, but they care about the needs of others," said Shelby Isbell, a member of Pi Beta Phi.

The Rock-A-Thon coincides with the Tempe Arthritis Awareness week that Tempe Mayor Harry Mitchell proclaimed for Oct. 21 through 27.

According to the Arizona Arthritis Foundation, aside from Rock-A-Thon, various public forums will be held with literature being distributed around Tempe. According to foundation figures, about 18,500 people in Tempe have arthritis.

The Arthritis Foundation aids more than 36 million Americans, including 250,000 children who suffer from arthritis. But more than 80 percent of the arthritis population receives no medical care.

With the money earned from various fund-raising activities, the Central Arizona chapter of the Arthritis Foundation hopes to expand its scientific research, upgrade its treatment programs and increase public awareness.

"It just makes you feel good to help others who are less fortunate than us," said Sharon Dorough, Pi Beta Phi philanthropic president. "Hopefully, with help from everyone, someday they'll find a cure for this awful disease."

Lambda Chi Alpha and Pi Beta Phi hope to raise $3,000 to help aid the Arthritis Foundation. Pledges for the Rock-A-Thon were received from large businesses and corporations along with each member receiving pledges from individuals, said Mary Beth Franke, Pi Beta Phi president.

"It's an excellent opportunity to display the civic pride and community involvement of the Greek system," said Mike Birsell, Lambda Chi Alpha member.

On Wednesday at 1 p.m., ASU Police Chief Russell Duncan will rock in one of the chairs to help the houses reach their goal.

Kidnapping was politically motivated, Polish church says

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — Poland's Roman Catholic Church said Monday that it feared for the life of a kidnapped pro-Solidarity priest, and government spokesman Jerry Urban asserted that the abduction was aimed at undermining the authorities.

The church also said there were indications that the kidnapers had political motives.

The whereabouts or condition of the Rev. Jerry Popieluszko were not known and no one had claimed responsibility for his abduction, which occurred Friday in northern Poland.

Keston College, an institution near London that monitors religious affairs in Eastern Europe, reported Monday that Popieluszko had received numerous death threats in recent weeks. Solidarity leaders confirmed the report.

The Catholic episcopate, in its first comment on the priest's disappearance, said it "brings deep concern."

"On the one hand there is fear about his life and on the other there is fear that kidnapping may become a method of political strife in our country," said a statement issued by the episcopate in Warsaw. "The information we have about the circumstances of the kidnapping indicate that the culprits acted for political motives."

The statement did not elaborate.

Popieluszko, 37, is one of the Polish clergy's most outspoken advocates of the now-outlawed Solidarity labor union and had been the target of frequent government attacks for his pro-Solidarity sermons.

In Washington, State Department spokesman John Hughes voiced concern over the kidnapping and expressed "the strong hope that the Polish government will ensure Popieluszko's speedy release."

Education secretary says colleges need 'reinvigorating'

WASHINGTON (AP) — Education secretary T. H. Bell said Monday a critique by a team of scholars shows "American higher education has the sniffles" and needs to take precautions to avoid getting "a bad cold or even pneumonia."

But Bell said the verdict rendered by the scholars was less harsh than he had anticipated, and he stressed that colleges were not in as much difficulty as the nation's elementary and secondary schools.

"Educational institutions are a bit like people; they can grow old and top out and go to seed if they don't renew and reinvigorate themselves periodically," he told reporters at a news conference at George Washington University.

Among the recommendations in the report, "Involvement in Learning: Realizing the Potential of American Higher Education," are that colleges devote more resources to teaching and advising freshmen and sophomores; that they make students pass proficiency tests, not merely acquire course credits, to get a degree; and that all students take at least two years of liberal arts courses, even if that forces them to extend their stay on campus beyond four years.

Mill town residents line up for jobs

ATHOL, Mass. (AP) — Hundreds of unemployed residents of this depressed mill town began lining up at daybreak Monday, hoping for the chance to travel 70 miles each way to a $4-an-hour job in a city whose economy is so strong it can't find enough workers.

The round trip from Athol, tucked in the hills of central Massachusetts, to Framingham, a bustling metropolitan area west of Boston, could take three hours a day. But the jobseekers were not discouraged.

400 people filled out applications for five companies, including McDonald's and Burger King, which had come to town in search of employees for the Christmas rush.

They offered $4-an-hour wages and free bus rides to and from work. The program was created and sponsored by the state Division of Employment Security.

CORRECTION

Monday's debate between Rep. John McCain, R-Ariz., and Democratic challenger Harry Braun was sponsored solely by the American Federation of Teachers at ASU. The State Press incorrectly reported Monday that the debate was also sponsored by the Associated Students of ASU Political Union, the Office of Student Life and the College of Liberal Arts Council.

ASU human factors specialist hopes for chance to design Earth space lab

Sherry Dunbar

By ASHA NATHAN
Staff Writer

Sherry Dunbar figures within 10 years, Earth will have a laboratory in space.

And she would like to help design it. "I'm hoping what they'll want is human factors people," said Dunbar, an ASU doctoral student in experimental psychology who spends her summers working at the National Aeronautics and Space Administration in California.

Dunbar's specialty is human factors, which "basically deals with applying what we know about human capabilities and limitations to the design of systems."

These systems could include anything from computers to aircraft.

Her specialty is aviation.

While pursuing a master's degree at San Jose State University, Dunbar worked on a project for NASA researching changes in helicopter cockpit design.

Her work included designing a new type of control mechanism for helicopters.

"The conventional arrangement which exists in helicopters now might not be the best because it requires the use of both hands and both feet to operate the controls," Dunbar said.

Her proposed system would require the use of only one hand, thus reducing the work-load of the pilot.

"In order to do this kind of research, you need to have a pilot's perspective," said Dunbar, a student pilot who owns a 1947

Cessna airplane.

She said her work at NASA involved a combined effort between psychologists, pilots, engineers and software and hardware specialists.

"Previously, engineers were designing equipment for efficiency without taking into consideration the people who use it," Dunbar said. She said an employee's performance is dependent on the design of the equipment.

"More places are taking human factors into consideration now because they know it can be costly to redesign something after the fact," she said.

The psychology program at ASU is one of the few in the country that allows her to specialize in human factors, while taking an interdisciplinary approach.

She is at ASU on a grant — an arrangement between the University and NASA for the mutual benefit of both institutions. While at ASU, Dunbar is conducting cognitive psychology research.

"I've always been interested in space and aviation since childhood," she said.

An interest in mathematics and engineering, together with her background in psychology, allows her to specialize in the human factors aspect of aviation.

"I'm interested in aviation both personally and professionally," said the researcher, who includes as much flying as possible in the few spare moments she manages to snatch between school and work.

Political smorgasbord being served at ASU

With general elections fast approaching, political interest in the country is reaching its peak. Some of that sentiment can be sampled right here on campus, where a smorgasbord of candidates and political speakers have been popping up.

Last month the campus was even blessed by the appearance of presidential candidate Bozo the Clown.

Yesterday the ASU community had the chance to hear Congressional candidates Rep. John McCain and challenger Harry Braun face off in a debate at the Memorial Union.

Tonight at 7 p.m. in the MU Pima Room, candidates for the Arizona Legislature will take the podium to explain why they should be elected as our state government representatives.

Wednesday night at 7 p.m. in the MU Arizona Room, former Environmental Protection Agency chief Anne Gorsuch Burford will elucidate her position on environmental issues, doubtless while plugging Ronald Reagan's presidency.

So take advantage of the opportunities to gain information made available at this University. Inform yourself as much as possible about the issues and candidates you will soon be rendering judgment upon.

And for those who took the time to register for the Nov. 6 election, don't forget to vote.

No cost for newlyweds

Editor:

Regarding the letter to the Editor from Charles Bryant (Oct. 17 State Press):

No University funds were spent in transporting Hall of Fame inductee Dan Severn and his bride, Terry, from the their wedding reception in Paradise Valley to Sun Devil Stadium for the Oct. 6 halftime ceremonies at the ASU-California football game.

As was announced over the stadium public address system, the Severns were brought to the stadium and returned to their reception courtesy of the KTSP-TV, Channel 10 helicopter.

Channel 10 had previously done a lengthy interview with Dan as part of its pre-Olympic coverage. When I mentioned to the Sports Director Tim Healey our plight in getting the newlyweds to the stadium without disrupting their reception, he said he felt KTSP owed Dan a favor for his cooperation during the taping and offered the use of the helicopter.

It was worth some added publicity for the ASU Hall of Fame because of the additional attention the ceremonies received. It was also an excellent public relations move on the part of KTSP and we are very grateful.

Debate provides some thrills, but Bush is real entertainment

Don Slutes
Entertainment Editor

I've decided to come forward with my official prediction for the outcome of the presidential election: 245 electoral votes for Reagan; 293 electoral votes for Mondale. Not exactly a landslide, but it'll suffice.

And now, with my credibility in serious jeopardy, I'll proceed with some less objective observations. Read them at your own risk.

I learned a few new things in Sunday night's presidential "debate."

I learned that President Reagan is not quite sure where all our CIA agents are lurking, or what exactly they're doing. I learned that President Reagan is not entirely certain of the capabilities of ballistic missiles. And I learned, with some amount of relief, that President Reagan has "never seriously" planned to participate in Armageddon, however imminent.

But despite the moments of confusion, some interesting issues were brought up. The candidates touched briefly on the world population problem, but neither seemed to be impressed with its highly dangerous ramifications. The administration's shortsighted and ignorant response of late has been to refuse birth control aid for certain Third World countries due to qualms about practices which include abortion. It may be too late to make this a serious campaign issue — defining the population problem as the powder keg it is — but the fact remains that a Mondale administration is not likely to follow a similar course.

Do federal debts and trade deficits contribute to illegal immigration, as Mondale suggests? Finding a consensus on this question would be difficult, but the effect of this country's skewed economy on the Mexican economy, et al., should not be as blithely dismissed as Reagan tried to do Sunday. The fact is, the United States' financial situation affects nearly everything. Reagan obviously would like to ignore this.

There is one feeling I share with the ultra-right wing of the Republican Party: distrust of George Bush.

The vice president throughout his career has been the quintessential human weather vane, often at the expense of his personal and professional integrity. The most dramatic instances, of course, have come during his tenure in the office he now holds. And not surprisingly, his 180-degree turns have been labeled by the president's camp as demonstrating that most admirable of human qualities, loyalty. At the same time they point to the lack of this quality in Walter Mondale after his revelations that he occasionally disagreed with his boss.

George Bush, on the other hand, has gone so far as to completely repudiate statements he's made in the past. At one point he attempted to deny ever making his well-known "voodoo economics" remark. Unfortunately, a video camera happened to be pointed in his direction at the time (unfortunately for George and unfortunate because he was right in the first place). More recently he abruptly switched his belief that abortions should be allowed for victims of rape or incest. Again he abandoned a sensible view in order to toe the president's line, implying he has seen the light. Loyalty? This kind of behavior is better described as fealty. Abject obedience is a fine trait to see in one's pet, but it's disturbing to watch a public official reverse himself with such facility.

Will we ever hear about George Bush's differences with Ronald Reagan, even after Reagan is out of office? It'll depend on which way the wind is blowing then.

Speaking of George, some of his highlights from the Bush-Ferraro spectacle a couple weeks ago are still reverberating in my consciousness. Some of his "debate" hyperbole was entertaining, most was not. I'm surprised his claim that the president is a civil rights champion didn't catch in his throat. Mr. Bush would have us believe this — I mean, didn't Reagan lovingly sign the extension of the Voting Rights Act, for example? Bravo. What Bush fails to mention is that Reagan valiantly tried to scuttle the extension while it was going through Congress. Faced with overwhelming opposition to the move, however, Reagan's forces backed down, the extension was passed, and the president gathered around as many people as he could find to watch him smilingly sign the thing into law.

The conviction Bush showed while perpetrating one of the Reagan campaign's more blatant deceptions was inspirational.

I have some more observations to make, but I see the red light flashing . . .

John Birch Society criticized for similarity to Nazi Party

Editor:

The Oct. 16 State Press article, "Costa Rica: Freedom fighter speaks out against Communism," presented a highly biased and distorted view of Central American reality. One salient fact, omitted by the article, is that the speaker and meeting quoted was sponsored by the John Birch Society. It is not my intent to correct the distortions presented at the forum because I think responsible, concerned persons can do that easily enough for themselves. It is my purpose to communicate the nature of and danger posed by the John Birch Society.

The John Birch Society is an ultra-right wing propaganda network organizing professional anti-Communists from all classes of our society, but most especially from the upper middle and upper classes. Although this organization claims to defend freedom and justice, at its last public forum in the Valley of the Sun the speaker stated that dissenters in America should be jailed and/or killed. Theoretically, the Birch Society claims to believe the world is controlled by a "Washington-Moscow axis" of big bankers, capitalists and communists. They state that Lenin was an agent of Wall Street sent to exploit Russia via state capitalism. In America, the Birch Society appears to operate through other publishing fronts than its official "American Opinion" publications. The Birch Society integrates numerous wealthy and influential professional anti-Communists whose activities lead out through various other well-funded think tanks, political finance committees, and very likely, fringe political parties. Even so, given the evidently absurd nature of its ideology, one would think the John Birch Society is worthy of being ignored. I think this is wrong because the John Birch Society is the most consistent and sophisticated anti-communist activist organization in the United States, and since anti-communism is coming to be the dominant political motif in our society we should all be clearly aware of what it consists. The historical precedent on this score is very grisly and frightening.

There was, in early 20th century Germany, an organization of similar social structure and organizational forum as the Birch Society. It was called the Thule Society. Theoretically, it claimed to believe the world was being controlled by big bankers, big capitalists, and Communists. Specifically Jewish ones. Although it is impractical for the Birch Society to directly mention Jews, due to Hitlerism being so badly discredited, the Birch Society does in fact publicize books which argue this. In 1917-18, after the First World War, the Thule Society recognized that workers in Europe were disgusted with the capitalist norms which had produced the war. This was an acute problem in defeated nations — Russia where the revolution succeeded and Germany where it was imminent. The Thule Society organized a chauvinist political party called the German Workers Party in order to attract workers away from the international workers' movement. Adolf Hitler, in connection with his duties for Army Intelligence, infiltrated this organization and eventually became its leader. He changed its name to the even more deceptive National Socialist German Workers Party, the Nazi Party. In 1933, when it seemed that Socialists and Communists were soon to win the national elections of Germany, the upper class turned over to Hitler

the German government.

The parallel between Hitler's rhetoric and that of contemporary professional anti-Communists, should we choose to examine it, is very revealing. Hitler stated that German Communists would gain control of Germany, involve the nation in a ruinous war, and end with a weakened and divided Germany. It is the same line of argument, or rather an analogous one, used by the modern ultra-rightists.

It is impossible for me to know if there is a direct ancestor-descendent relationship between the Thule Society and John Birch Society, although circumstantially it seems likely. Nonetheless, both organizations, like the Costa Rican 'Free World Leaders' group quoted in the State Press article, are manifestations of the same anti-Communist underworld comprised of rich, elite and dominant individuals. Such individuals cannot conceive of existing in a democratic socialist society. They live by Hitler's motto: "I am going to be the destroyer of Marxism."

Christianity not special...Followers miserable

Editor:

I support the right of every American to formulate and hold any opinion that she or he desires. This right is one that is guaranteed under the First Amendment to the Constitution. Nonetheless, let me criticize Ben Burns' comments that were committed to print in the Oct. 15 issue of State Press as being comments that are un-American because they tread heavily on the traditional American principle of tolerance.

Mr. Burns writes in his reply to Patrick Kucera's column that "Christians cannot be tolerant of other religions." Why is he an American, then? It is a fundamental tenet of America's existence that religious toleration is not only expected, but required. This country is not an Iran, or worse, a Russia.

One of the basic principles upon which America was founded is tolerance — tolerance for all religions and all types of political thought. This principle of tolerance is embodied in the First Amendment. Because of this tolerance, America has, rightly, become a home for the "misfits" of the world, for those who thought "subversive" thoughts, for those who had trouble following the "traditional" Christian beliefs of their time, for those who did not believe as others believed, for those who did not practice the religions of other people.

Christianity is not a special religion. Simply because Jesus' followers chose to deify him at the time of his death does not raise Christianity to the pinnacle of all religions. What it all comes down to in the end, is, do you believe the teachings of the particular religion — do you have faith? Faith in a particular religion, however, does not establish that religion as superior to any other and there is no evidence that one can rationally and reasonably evaluate that supports any religion's claim to being the one "true" religion of the universe.

Because Christianity is not a special religion (nor for that matter, is any other religion), it is sheer folly to argue, as Mr. Cross seems to, that while you must treat all people humanely, if they behave differently than you, this becomes sufficient grounds to be intolerant. If one is intolerant, how can one be humane?

As Mr. Cross himself acknowledges, his position is one of intolerance and that makes Mr. Cross's position intolerable, not only in a free nation, but in a world where the sort of absolute truth Mr. Cross seems to say is Christianity's alone, is disputed, not only by the religions of the East, but religions of the same family, i.e., Judaism and Islam. This society cannot endure as a free society if it restricts the free thought of its citizens. It cannot be great if it refuses to allow each citizen to worship (or not worship) as she or he wishes. We each have the right to practice the religion (or not practice any religion) of our choice because our forefathers established this nation as a nation for all citizens, not just those who thought or acted as the forefathers deemed proper. Let's not lose that part of our heritage.

David Stone
Senior, Justice Studies

Editor:

Through a carefully planned 2,000 years of deceit, people have been turned around completely so that the question is now "should the nice Christians despise, tolerate, or convert the non-believers." The rational and fun approach is to sit back and consider what should be done with all these damn Christians. The history of Christianity is filled with the disgusting exploits (inquisitions, crusades, Watchtower salespeople) of the "good people" of this earth. One especially miserable born-again Christian group, the Door, is composed of former junkies, Satan worshippers, and seducers who have seen the light.

Now it is time to decide whether to convert these pathetic, soul-less stickpeople to a better life, or to ridicule and harm them physically. I have a close friend who claimed he was a Christian, so I clubbed him over the head with a shovel. He is still in the hospital recovering and I hope that my message penetrated his rather thick skull. For people who aren't friends, I don't think that clubbing is even worth the effort. Instead, write your congressman (maybe he's not really a Christian) to back an anti-stupidity law which will make sexual slaves of all professed Christians. I know they'd rather be burned at the stake or devoured by lions, but those methods wouldn't be as much fun for the rest of us.

Finally, what do you think of those Detroit Tigers? Go team!

Abortion not to be blamed for mental state

Editor:

This is in response to Karen Sullivan's letter on abortion (Oct. 16). I must agree with Ms. Sullivan that abortion can be a very traumatic experience. But she is using her emotional instability as a bad mark against abortion. The family planning center that performed her abortion is not responsible for her emotional welfare. They took care of her physical problem and that is all they are responsible for.

Ms. Sullivan brought the abortion experience upon herself. If she was not prepared for the consequences she should have used birth control. I realize that all sorts of birth control are not 100 percent effective, but she took the risks, so she can't blame abortion for her emotional state. She must blame herself.

James Butler
Junior, Computer Information Systems

Editor:

President Reagan recently approved the Genocide Treaty, which defines genocide as including measures taken to reduce births among races or other groups. Before his presidential race, Jesse Jackson described abortion as "black genocide."

Today white males have greater preference for abortion. They prefer keeping sex as cheap as possible. When you see the boyfriend dragging an unwilling woman into an abortion clinic, "freedom of choice" reveals its practical meaning.

White legislators carefully maintain the "rape exemption" when proposing amendments to stop abortion. They fear some rapists may be black. Racist conservatives think abortion helps trim our welfare rolls. Liberals enjoy the sexual license that abortion creates. Regardless of political persuasion, simple compassion for the unborn human life takes a back seat to money, sex, and racism.

Aren't we all just guppies in the muddy pool of ASU?

Editor:

This letter is in response to that of Paul M. Valach's in the Oct. 18 State Press.

I am aware of Paul's dedication to selfless causes and activities, and I would not criticize his own motivations in that regard.

I am sorry if I upset you, Paul, with the word "guppy." I have frankly always considered you a pilot fish of the most helpful variety, showing the humungus specimens like Matthew Scully where they should be going and what they should look for along the way and how they should prepare for the journey which can be so difficult.

Then, again, Paul, aren't we all just a bit of a guppy? Your letter, perhaps, is just a communication from one guppy to another acknowledging the fact, that even in a muddy pond, there can be a certain amount of communication to the extent that I can see the merit of what you are saying.

I just am of the opinion that there has always been a lot to what Matthew Scully has said in his columns if people would just take their heads out of the sand to see that the substance of what he says is quite commendable although his style is such as to adversely arouse and provoke. You might agree that there is some substance to what Matthew Scully says and you also might agree that there is a certain amount of rancor in the way he expresses himself.

Quite frankly, I've just been unutterably happy that so many people have been around to interpret Mr. Scully's genius for me; it's comforting to know that there are so many people, including myself, who know what is going on.

Many thanks, Paul, for your open letter.

Single mother defends welfare as needed aid

Editor:

I am a single mother on Department of Economic Security Daycare, welfare, food stamps and section 8 housing. I am attending this wonderful University in order to gain meaningful employment for myself and support my daughter in the manner in which she deserves. It is extremely difficult to attempt to blend good and efficient study habits and quality time with my child, but it is leaps-and-bounds better than the alternative.

W.P. Shofstall, in his letter of Oct. 18, has expressed his view that "the welfare state actually harms and does not really help the poor or needy people," and also that we should all demand and support more voluntary contributions to charity groups and organizations. While you're turning blue in the face trying to get people to donate to these causes, who will feed my daughter and watch her while I struggle to further my education? These programs are critical to the meager survival of the poor. Even before Reagan's cutbacks, they fell short of doing an adequate job and now some people feel we should do away with them entirely? You have obviously never even been near the poverty line. It's not a fun place to be, but believe me, it's better than being "nowhere."

We exist in more numbers than you can fathom and you cannot simply close your eyes and wish us away. If your compassion is not phony, then talk to a few of us "welfare moms" and get your facts from us. Believe me, we know one heck of a lot more about poverty than your politicians and statisticians. We can tell you that ours and our children's futures lie not with the abolishment of these programs, but with the defense, improvement, and expansion of them, for they are our springboard to a financially independent future.

Season's registration to start for second ASU College Bowl

By VICKIE CHACHERE
Staff Writer

The MU Activities Board will begin preparations during the last week of November for its second consecutive season of College Bowl and will continue to register teams through the end of the semester, according to the event's coordinator.

Sherman Mohler, MU special events coordinator and organizer of ASU's College Bowl program, said the competition, sponsored by the MUAB and ASU's division of Circle K, will begin during the last week of January.

College Bowl, a question-and-answer game where four-member teams compete to answer the greatest number of questions, is in its 31st consecutive year, according to Pat Moonan, regional director of the competition.

Moonan, who spoke at ASU Friday at the Success Express conference, said the program can involve the entire campus.

"It costs $400 (for a university to join), but it encompasses so many people, and it can be a year-long program," Moonan said.

Mohler said the College Bowl program was brought back to ASU last year after an absence of several years, and 16 teams from different departments on campus competed last year.

"When the show was on television, teams from ASU were really successful," Mohler said.

Any full-time ASU student with at least 12 hours is eligible to participate.

"The best teams are teams with members that have diversified backgrounds," Mohler said.

Questions range from science and mathematics to sports and arts.

According to Moonan, the game has recently gained a considerable amount of popularity due to its similarity to Trivial Pursuits.

"College Bowl has been awarded every major award, including the Emmy," Moonan said.

"It is the only game show that has been awarded the Peabody (for excellence in television programming), and the only program to be cited by Congress and entered into the Congressional Records as television entertainment at its best."

Moonan said more than 300 schools across the nation entered College Bowl last year, with the top 16 schools participating in the nationally-televised final competition.

Regional champions will receive cash prizes that go toward the university's general scholarship fund, Mohler said.

U of A, last year's regional champions, received $1,000 in scholarship money, as well as plaques and gold medals for team members.

A College Bowl game encompasses many people, and it can be a year long program.

According to Mohler, the winning team from ASU will advance to the Region 13 competition in Logan, Utah, where it will challenge nine teams from Arizona, Colorado, New Mexico, Utah and Wyoming. All expenses will be paid by the sponsors.

College Bowl is an ideal activity for dorm residents, sororities and fraternities, Moonan said.

"Last year was the first year we were involved in it. We advanced to regionals, and won there," she said. The team was knocked out in the first round of the national competition.

She said approximately 25 teams at U of A have signed up for this year's competition which begins the first week of November.

Mayor speaks on residential planning, zoning objectives

By W. TIM AHL
Staff Writer

Phoenix Mayor Terry Goddard said the Phoenix City Council "trashed" several planning objectives for the city when it approved new developments in the residential areas near 24th Street and Camelback Road.

Goddard spoke to members of the MBA Association of the ASU College of Business in the MU Monday.

"They trashed a number of objectives that they had set forth in areas of planning and zoning in the coming years," he said.

"Maybe trashed is a bit of an overstatement, but it was a bit of a setback."

Goddard said the council's approval of a rezoning plan sponsored by local businessman Ron Warner did not fit into the council's plans before its meeting Wednesday.

The council approved Warner's plans to build a $22-million office complex at 34th Street and Camelback Road despite complaints by local homeowners that the land should be used for single-family housing.

"Tearing down 14 very fine residences for zoning purposes is not justified," Goddard said. "It just isn't good."

Goddard said he ran for mayor as a pro-planning, anti-zoning candidate and he questions destroying existing residences for business projects.

During his speech, he stressed the need for qualified workers in city government, but said the current Phoenix system does not allow each mayor to make the needed change in the work force.

"Phoenix City Government has more than 10,000 employees and a $750-million budget, but I only got to hire three new people when I came into office," Goddard said.

He said recent elections in Boston and Chicago allowed new mayors to bring in several thousand new employees to suit their needs.

Goddard said it was important for the city to obtain advice and help from the private sector when its own employees cannot meet the needs of the government.

"I believe there is a need for people from the private sector, but I believe that a conflict of interest is always a possibility under those circumstances," Goddard said.

The mayor used the forum to make a plea for more federal funds for city governments and to state allegiance to Democratic candidate Walter Mondale in the upcoming presidential election.

"We have a critical need of funds," he said. "Whoever wins in November, there are going to be tax increases and it is unfortunate that it hasn't become more of an issue."

Goddard said he hopes qualified business students can find a place in Phoenix' city government.

Stay tuned KASR radio station

By MELISSA SMYTH
Contributing Writer

After a long and frustrating beginning, members of ASU's student-run radio station are ready to celebrate.

Thursday marked the two-year anniversary of KASR, a station that has a "long, rather gruesome history," according to faculty adviser Fritz Leigh.

On Oct. 18, 1982, KASR's first broadcast went out to nine ASU dormitories.

Leigh said KASR, 660 AM, was designed to be an FM station, serving the Tempe/Phoenix area.

In 1978, the Arizona Board of Regents approved funding for the project and Leigh completed the necessary Federal Communications Commission and federal station grant applications.

He applied for a spot near 88.3 on the FM dial, but had to withdraw the application because NAU had been given the space.

The next time FM space was available, Leigh was told there were no federal funds available for the project due to Reagan administration budget cuts.

Leigh used the station's limited funds to begin limited broadcasting to nine residence halls by way of a "carrier-current" system.

"It's been frustrating to say the least," he said. "But to look at the positive side, at least we have a radio station."

Using the carrier-current system, an AM signal is fed into a transmitter installed in the electrical system of the dormitory. The electrical system serves as an "antenna" and broadcasts the music throughout the building.

Unfortunately, the signal extends only 300 feet around each residence hall.

According to operations advisor Ken Mills, several sites around ASU are being considered for the installation of a new transmitter.

This new transmitter would boost the station's signal to approximately a one-mile radius, Mills said.

Mills said the station is succeeding because of student desire for hands-on broadcasting experience.

"Being a volunteer organization, we depend a lot on the motivation and caring of the students," he said.

KASR is patterned after a professional broadcasting station, with the students performing various directional and technical jobs as well as broadcasting.

"The station offers a wide range of experience that parallels real life situations," Mills said. "There are some very talented people who work here."

"Several of our students have gone on to positions in the professional community," he said. "I look for a lot more (in the future) because we're just getting started."

According to Anthony Scerbo, broadcasting major and newscaster for KASR, the students take their responsibilities very seriously.

Station celebrates 2-year anniversary

"This is a microcosm of a professional broadcasting station," Scerbo said. "People get hired and some fired just like in real life. We're not just a bunch of college kids playing with dials."

Because KASR is a commercial station, students can also gain experience as sales and promotion directors.

Anita Nelson, assistant music director, said the format of the station is "hardcore punk, new-wave and reggae."

"We're not trying to duplicate the other stations in the Valley. Whatever's on the charts, they play," she said.

Nelson said 35 record companies send albums and tapes to the station.

"We listen to anything we get in," she said.

The station is allotted approximately $75 per month for purchasing imported records.

The final decision of what goes on the air is made by Dave Thompson, broadcasting major and program director for the station.

KASR also employs a news bureau that broadcasts campus news daily at 9 a.m. and 5 p.m., with a news update at 2 p.m.

"Crossfire," a weekly talk show, airs at 5:30 p.m. Wednesdays.

"On 'Crossfire' we openly debate topics in a civilized manner," Scerbo said.

Last week, the show featured ASASU President Ray Burnell defending his policy guideline against funding groups formed on the basis of sexual preference.

Dance's double deal

Louis troupe joining with jazz pioneer in Gammage appearance

The Murray Louis Dance Company will team up with the Dave Brubeck Quartet at 8 p.m. Wednesday in Gammage Center.

SCENE: Outside the Restaurante Mexico.
TIME: The present.

BOBBY JO

JOE BOB

Bad news in the State Press? Well, I never!

BOBBY JO

Yes, indeed. You see, we have yet another dance company appearing at Gammage.

JOE BOB

Oh, no! Not on the heels of the ever-incredible appearance of the Martha Graham Dance Company! No, no, no!

BOBBY JOE

Wait! Don't forget, I have good news too.

JOE BOB

Pray tell.

BOBBY JOE

This dance company will have a real good band with them, so it will be like having two shows in one!

Actually, tonight's appearance of the Murray Louis Dance Company and the Dave Brubeck Quartet is worth the price of admission. You see, we're talking about two great artists — namely Murray Louis and Dave Brubeck — both of whom have been around a long time and have weathered significant changes in their respective arts.

Dave Brubeck first earned fame in the '50s at the height of the West Coast jazz scene. Over the last two decades, Brubeck's music has turned out to be a bridge between that era and present-day Keith Jarrett-type dischordant jazz.

Brubeck has pounded out a well-deserved place in American jazz history. He is simply very good. This year's tour includes Brubeck on piano, his son Chris playing bass trombone and electric bass, Randy Jones on percussion and Bill Smith on clarinets.

The other half of tonight's show, Murray Louis, is well-known as a modern dance teacher. His company is also well-known, but it has not had the formative effect that Martha Graham's has had. Louis's company, however, is at the heart of modern dance. And because he is such a fine teacher, his dancers should bring to the stage the strength and grace of great talent.

It is highly unusual for a dance company to tour with a band instead of recorded music, so the combination of media, as well as the strong individual styles of the two groups, provides an enticing venue.

The show begins at 8 p.m. Wednesday in Gammage Center. Tickets are $13, $12 and $11, and are available at Gammage and Diamonds box offices, and at the University Ticket Agency.

Mainstage Series to explore Strindberg's 'Father'

By RIC ALPERS
Entertainment Writer

"I grafted my right arm, half my brain . . . to another stem because I thought the two would grow together and form another more perfect tree. Then someone came with a knife and cut below the graft, and now I am only half a tree. But the other keeps growing with my right arm and half my brain while I wither and die because I gave my best parts away."

This is how Adolf describes his feelings as he is slowly driven into unreason by his wife, Laura in the ASU Mainstage Series production of "The Father," opening at 8 p.m.

Wednesday in the Lyceum Theatre

Written by August Strindberg in 1887, "The Father" explores the changing relationship between men and women with a study of the power struggle between Adolf and Laura over their daughter, Bertha. Laura is determined to maintain her authority over Bertha and to do so, she must have power — power only allowed men in this time when women were considered mere props. Through a series of incidents, Laura acquires this power by undermining her husband's sense of reason and reality.

The new translation by Jerry Turner, is, according to the director William E. Dobkin, fresh and "highly understandable . . . without losing any of Strindberg's meanings." The director and his cast create "the idea of a man's world tumbling down around his ears." An idea, said Dobkin, that is as timely today as when Strindberg wrote it almost 100 years ago.

"Strindberg's portrayal of women and marital relationships must be viewed in terms of his reactions to the shifting social patterns of the late 1800s. The explosion of industrial technology, the rise of the urban class . . . caused reverberations which shook every foundation of 19th century society," Dobkin said. "These changes challenged the traditional 19th century ideal of womanhood and raised some of the disquieting questions which Strindberg explores."

What makes this translation exciting and timely, said Dobkin, is that "it was done by a theatre person who is also a director." Turner is the artistic director of the Oregon Shakespeare Festival.

Dobkin said Turner "understands the demands of the theatre. Not only is the language accessible to the audience, it is accessible to the actors. So often, actors find it hard to make 'stiff' language believable."

"The Father" is ASU's entry for this year's American College Theatre Festival. If selected, it would go to the regional festival where it could be chosen as one of the 10 best college productions and sent to the national festival in Washington, D.C. Interestingly enough, the last time ASU went to Washington, it took "The Night of the Tribades," a play about August Strindberg directed by William Dobkin.

The cast includes Richard Smolenski as the Father, Kim Morin as the Mother and Kim Cook as the Daughter. Brian Skaggs plays the Doctor and Rick DesRochers, the Pastor. Rounding out the company is Kris Lima as the Nurse, Jonathan Scott as the Corporal and Jeff Middleton as the Orderly.

"The Father" plays through Nov. 4. Curtain is at 8 p.m. Tuesday through Saturday and 2 p.m. on Sunday. Tickets are available at the Lyceum Box Office, the University Ticket Agency and at any Diamond's ticket outlet.

The father (Richard Smolenski) finds himself caught in a psycho-sexual web created by his wife (Kim Morin, left) and his daughter (Kimberly Cook, right) in August Strindberg's 'The Father,' which opens at 8 p.m. Wednesday in ASU's Lyceum Theater.

Richardson shines in Valley music scene

Morning Star Band to play in MU 'Pop-Up' concert

By ERIC AUXIER
Entertainment Writer

If you haven't seen Walter Richardson and the Morning Star Band, you've missed one of the most fun, versatile, danceable local bands the Valley has to offer. Accent on danceable.

Even as you approach a club where they're playing, your subconscious mind picks up the subliminal beat vibrating through the walls (supplied by no fewer than four percussionists) and orders your feet to start a-bouncing. By the time you reach the door, adrenaline has found even the innermost reaches of your body.

You're ready for dancing. That's the way I felt when I first dropped into Chuy's for an interview with the band. Before I knew it, I found myself wedged onto the dance floor, having quickly forgotten my assignment — and my troubles.

Scanning the dimly lit, packed house, I found a diverse crowd: a mother was swaying to the rhythm, in her arms a wide-eyed infant intently watching the band, mesmerized by the music. A father was dancing with his 6-year-old daughter. There were Rastas, hippies and blue-collar workers. And there were college students, of course. In this strange mix, everyone felt at home with the music. Everyone, I noticed, had one thing in common.

They were all smiling. The band is even more interesting: there are eight members of the Morning Star Band, led by Walt Richardson. Richardson, decked in olive-green fatigues, knee-high, multicolored striped socks, and wearing shoulder-length dreadlocks, bears more than a passing resemblance to the late Reggae superstar Bob Marley. He, too, wears a warm smile.

Flanking Richardson is his faithful companion, Spider. A tall, lanky man, Spider is the perfect complement to Richardson. Shaking his tamborine, Spider wins a smiling contest hands-down. This pair plays the audience as well as their instruments.

The tightness and versatility of this band is remarkable. Although the core of the band's music consists of Reggae tunes (many written by Richardson), they slide easily into mild rock and R & B. Playing traditional Reggae tunes like Marley's "I Shot the Sheriff," "Lively Up Yourself" and "No Woman, No Cry," they flow right into an irresistible dance version of "Brown-Eyed Girl."

Richardson's original tunes, however, are the band's best: "The Other Side," "Always Will Be Love," and "Red Rocks (of Sedona)" never fail to get the fans moving.

We like to make people feel good — we put out a "one love" vibration.

What sets these guys apart from traditional Reggae bands is the clanging Calypso beat of the steel drum, played by Tom Gates. Gates, along with the other percussionists, provides the pulse for lead, rhythm and bass guitars. The result is a melodic wall of sound not only heard but felt.

In between sets I followed Richardson backstage to squeeze in a few questions. Once there, Richardson grabbed a slice of cold pizza, leaned back in a chair and began. "I like to think of our music as homegrown music, something people can relate to," he said. "We just like to make people feel good — we put out a 'one love' vibration."

That oneness is easily felt. At that moment, a member of the fan club/promotional team stepped in to show Richardson some new T-shirts sporting the logo, "On The Rise — Morning Star." Richardson, pleased, quickly stripped off his army shirt for the new one. He continued:

"Our popularity seems to be growing fast, and sometimes it's hard. You have to become an instant businessman."

Growing fast, indeed. In the eight short months the band has been together, it has become one of the most popular local attractions. It is playing Thursday nights at Anderson's Fifth Estate and Sunday nights at Chuy's.

The Morning Star Band will also appear in a "Pop-Up" concert at noon Wednesday in the MU Rendezvous Lounge.

In 1976, Richardson was graduated from ASU with a degree in political science, and went on to form the short-lived but popular Reggae group, Driftwood, along with Morning Star drummer Aziz Chadley.

Finally, in early 1984, they found a combination that worked. Part of their success seems to come from the band's diverse background: Richardson (lead vocals, rhythm guitar) and Gates (steel drum, guitar, vocals) come from Florida; Aziz from Casa Blanca, Morocco; Spider from New York; Plato Jones (congas) from Chicago; and Hannes Kvaran (lead/rhythm guitar, background vocals) from Iceland. Amilio "Milkman" Caquias (percussion) and Felix Sianz (bass) round out the group.

Loyalty abounds in this little world, from the fans to the band. All are in tune with Richardson.

Spider explains this feeling: "Walt has a message to deliver. He wants to put a little joy into everyone's life, from the war-torn countries to the starving children in Africa."

"When I came to Arizona three years ago, it was to start a new life. I hadn't played music in 20 years and thought I'd never play again. But Walt taught me to never say the word 'never.' Now I enjoy playing music for the simple reason that it makes me happy."

It makes us all happy.

Van Raaphorst, Allen shine brightest for Devils

By BRAD HALVORSEN
Sports Writer

Although two Sun Devils reached career milestones during Saturday's 45-10 win over Oregon State, they were overshadowed by the arm of quarterback Jeff Van Raaphorst and the hands of wide receiver Doug Allen.

Van Raaphorst, starting for the first time since the season opener against Oklahoma State, connected with Allen nine times for 158 yards and three touchdowns.

"I can't remember a day like this," said Allen, who came into the game as the Devils' leading receiver with eight receptions for 162 yards. "This is the first one. I'm glad. It's about time it came, too."

Allen: 'I can't remember a day like this...It's about time it came, too.'

Van Raaphorst threw his first pass in six weeks to Allen on the Devils' first possession. Although the ball was behind Allen, the fourth-year split end snagged the ball for the completion.

"In the first quarter, I was a little nervous," Van Raaphorst said. "I hadn't played in a while and a couple of times my timing was off.

"But I felt like I was throwing the ball really well. I was throwing it where I wanted to throw it."

And most of the night, Allen was the man he threw it to.

Allen hauled down touchdown passes of 40, 25 and 6 yards en route to becoming ASU's leading non-kicking scorer for the year with 24 points.

"Dougie's an exceptional receiver, as are

Jeff Van Raaphorst, shown here rolling out in action against Oregon State, threw for 257 yards and four touchdowns in three quarters Saturday.

Aaron Cox and Paul Day," said Van Raaphorst, who enjoyed his best collegiate game while completing 20 of 33 passes for 257 yards and four touchdowns.

"We weren't trying to get the ball to Dougie. It just turned out that on the pass plays that we had, he beat his man. It wasn't like, 'O.K., we're going to try and get the ball to Dougie.'"

Van Raaphorst first found Allen in the end zone early in the second quarter on a second-and-goal from the OSU nine.

But this one wasn't to be.

The wide-open Allen let the ball bounce off his hands and onto the ground in the corner of the end zone.

"I had a problem catching it," Allen said. "I didn't think the ball was coming as fast as it was."

"At practice, usually he touches it in there. But I guess he had someone grabbing him, so he fired it in there and it just went through."

But on the next Devil possession, Van Raaphorst spotted a streaking Allen open in the end zone once again — this time on a 40-yard bomb.

"I was behind him (Allen) on the post," Van Raaphorst said. "I should have led him. I didn't think he'd come out that quick."

"They were playing a man coverage," Allen said of his first TD reception. "We were using a play action and he (the defensive back) came up and I just gave him the inside move and went right by him."

Van Raaphorst: 'I was throwing it where I wanted to throw it'

Although both Van Raaphorst and Allen turned in excellent performances, the OSU defense, playing an eight-man front, was responsible for opening up the airways for ASU.

"We thought we could take advantage of them through the air," Van Raaphorst said. "We didn't play really great, but we executed the ball and we threw the ball and that's all you have to do."

Although Coach Darryl Rogers has not named Van Raaphorst the starter for Saturday's game against UCLA, Allen believes the quarterback controversy has been settled.

"I would imagine so (that Van Raaphorst will start)," Allen said. "He had a good game, throwing four touchdowns."

"If it's not settled . . . well, I guess that's up to the coaches."

New quarterback frees ASU offense from bondage

Jerry Brown

Asst. Sports Editor

The noise resounding in semi-full Sun Devil Stadium during ASU's 45-10 blitzing of Oregon State Saturday afternoon was not one of frenzied screaming or even your basic excited cheering.

It was more like 65,000 fans enjoying a refreshing breeze on a hot July day in Tempe.

Ah.

Finally, the Sun Devils had put together an offense capable of sustaining a drive longer than three plays.

Ahh.

Finally, the offensive burden was taken off Darryl Clack, who stacked up 109 yards on only 14 carries.

Ahhh.

Finally, the coaches abandoned their conservative play calling and threw the football downfield.

Ahhhh.

Finally, ASU made use of its overflowing talent at the skill positions. Doug Allen, who had complained earlier in the week that he was not getting the ball enough, snagged nine passes for 158 yards and three touchdowns.

Ahhhhh.

And FINALLY, Jeff Van Raaphorst reemerged as ASU's field general to the tune of 20 of 33 completions for 257 yards and four touchdowns in just under three quarters.

Ahhhhhhhhhh.

This was the ASU team that was advertised before the season began. This was the team that would open up offensively and make things happen. This was the team that would not be content with throwing to running backs.

Hindsight is usually futile, and in this case it is downright upsetting.

But one could not help wonder where ASU would be if Van Raaphorst had been returned to the lineup before the USC game.

A touchdown, one touchdown would have been enough to beat the Trojans. Van Raaphorst's replacement, John Walker, had no success through the air. A combination of his unsteady arm and lousy play-calling in the game's waning moments handed USC the win.

The next week, Walker again got the call, thanks to Darryl Rogers "flip-a-coin" selection. Walker's improvement was marginal, but thanks to the heroics of Darryl Clack and a second straight stellar effort by the Devil defense, ASU won comfortably.

Then came Cal. Again one more touchdown would have won the game. The defense made some pratfalls, but only allowed 19 points.

But against a California defense that was called "lousy" by its own coach, ASU's leading passer was reserve tailback Mike Crawford. The numbers on John Walker (seven of 14 for 52 yards) showed not only Walker's problems offensively, but Rogers' lack of confidence in the freshman's ability to throw anything but safe, predictable passes.

But against Oregon State, a team that is measurably better than Cal defensively, Van Raaphorst completed passes almost at will, showing his strong arm and poise under the rush.

Dandy Darryl breathed enough sighs of relief (Saturday) to fill a hot-air balloon, three inner tubes and a kiddie pool.

And while the Devil defense did hold the Beavers in check, it did not have the burden of needing to supply the offense with fabulous field position. Van Raaphorst directed ASU on drives of 86, 85, 66 and 40 yards.

And all of them ended in touchdowns! And they were passing touchdowns!

In the previous four weeks, the Walker-led ASU offense had as much success finding the end zone through the air as Ponce De Leon had finding the Fountain of Youth.

After the game, Rogers downplayed ASU's offensive proficiency and lauded the play of the defense. But one got the feeling while watching Van Raaphorst's performance that Dandy Darryl had breathed enough sighs of relief to fill a hot-air balloon, three inner tubes and a kiddie pool.

Van Raaphorst showed he could throw the pinpoint sideline pass, as well as loft the ball over defenders' heads. He showed he could throw the ball 50 yards flatfooted, something that must make the speedy Devil receivers drool on their mouthpieces.

Like Walker, Van Raaphorst had a few balls dropped, one of them in the end zone. But where "Johnny Double-U" would have lost confidence and resorted to conservative play, Van Raaphorst went right back to the end zone and rolled the dice again. They came up sevens.

ASU wide receivers may have a lot more to celebrate about now that Jeff Van Raaphorst has returned at quarterback.

That's ASU football.

So with a 3-3 mark, ASU faces the unenviable task of playing UCLA and Florida State the next two weeks.

A week ago, the odds of a Sun Devil sweep were right next to Bozo the Clown's bid to become President of the United States on the old betting board.

But thanks to Van Raaphorst's performance Saturday and Ronald Reagan's and Walter Mondale's performance Sunday, the stock of both ASU and Bozo is on the climb.

Baseball team sweeps series; remains unbeaten in fall ball

By STEVE RICHMAN
Sports Writer

The men's baseball team extended its fall ball record to 8-0 by sweeping a pair of double headers from Cal-Poly Pomona last weekend at Packard Stadium.

The Devils defeated the Broncos in all four games by the scores of 11-0 and 9-6 on Friday, and 9-2 and 9-0 on Saturday.

Coach Jim Brock said he was more impressed with the Devils' performance this week than last week.

"Last week I was not too overjoyed with our performance," he said. "This week we played a lot better, and we got some strong performances from our players."

Defense was a definite concern last year to Brock, and so far this fall he is happy with the improvement.

Kendall Carter and reliever Dave Graybill. To fill the vacancies, the Devils recruited starters Kurt Dempster, Bill Dodd and Dean Douty and reliever Charles Scott.

Dempster and Douty were drafted by the Cleveland Indians and the Philadelphia Phillies respectively, while Dodd, though considered a top prospect, was not drafted because he had strong convictions about attending ASU.

Brock is looking toward Scott to fill the important role of short reliever, vacated by the loss of Graybill.

Dodd started Friday's first game and went five innings, surrendering only one hit while striking out three Broncos in an 11-0 shutout.

Outfielder Todd Brown and first baseman Luis Medina homered for the Devils.

Brock: 'Last week I was not too overjoyed with our performance. This week we played a lot better, and we got some strong performances from our players.'

"Last year defense was our Achilles' heel," he said. "After half the games in our fall schedule, I feel that our defense has a chance to get a step above last year's defense."

Around the infield, the Devils lost second-baseman Steve Murray, shortstop Romy Cucjen and third-baseman Bob Grandstaff to the pro baseball draft.

Filling those positions will be Rick Morris, Keith Bennett and George Lopez.

Morris, a transfer from Scottsdale Community College, was drafted by the Baltimore Orioles and according to Brock, "has a lot of natural ability and looks like the starting second-baseman."

Bennett, a shortstop junior college transfer from Oakland, Calif., is clearly ahead in the race for the starting shortstop job, Brock said, and could be outstanding at that position.

Lopez, a returning utility infielder, should battle Drew Siler, who split time between the varsity and JV last season, for the third-base job.

Besides losing many infielders, the Sun Devils also lost some key pitchers in starter

In the second game the Devils had a little tougher time, winning by a 9-6 score.

In this game, Dempster got the start and went four innings, giving up three runs (only one earned) on five hits. ASU catcher Vince Cook hit two home runs, including a grand-slam.

Both ASU victories on Saturday featured a combination of good hitting and pitching.

Mike Thorpe went four innings in the first game, allowing only one run on three hits. In the nightcap, Jeff Roberts went five innings without surrendering a run.

In assessing Roberts' performance, Brock said he was simply dominant.

Medina added a home run in each game to lead the Devils.

ASU has reached the midpoint of their fall schedule, and Brock said he is pleased with the Devils' overall improvement so far.

"The fall season gives us a chance to look at the new players, including the pitchers and the middle infielders," he said. "We are hitting with more power, the defense is playing better and the pitchers are doing well. "We are really rounding out into shape."

Netter Norris upsets No.1 seed

By BRAD HALVORSEN
Sports Writer

Unseating the No. 1 seed in the quarterfinals of the ITCA Southern California Championships, a regional qualifying tournament, ASU's Sheri Norris made the final four and could possibly earn a berth in the Feb. 7-10 finals.

Norris beat her first four opponents in straight sets to advance to the semifinals before losing to USC's Caroline Kuhlman 6-1, 6-0.

The winner and runner-up automatically advance to the finals, but Coach Sheila McInerney believes Norris can make the 32-player field as an at-large entry.

"They pick some at-large berths and I think Sheri has a very good chance," McInerney said. "We're going to submit an application for her and wait and see what happens."

In the quarterfinals, Norris, seeded seventh, pulled an upset by defeating top-seeded Linda Howell of San Diego State, 6-4, 7-6 (8-6).

"There was no question that Sheri was hungry," McInerney said. "It's nice to be able to play the top seed because you have nothing to lose. The pressure was on Howell."

"She (Howell) was a big girl and she had a big serve. But Sheri returned her serves and made good passing shots. She kept Howell back deep, which is something we've been working on."

Norris soundly defeated her first three opponents, outscoring them 37-11 in total games.

In the first round, Norris defeated Lisa Brenner from Long Beach State, 6-1, 6-0. She followed with a victory over USC's Stephany Harges, 6-3, 7-5, despite falling behind 5-0 in the second set.

Norris advanced to the quarters with a 6-1, 6-1 win over Sanet Kock of United States International University. ASU's other three entries lost in the first round.

Vanessa Miller fell behind early but made a good comeback before losing to Sylvie Tetreault of USIU, 6-3, 7-6 (8-6).

Miller lost the first five games of the match, before rallying back into contention.

"Vanessa dug herself too deep a hole to get out of," McInerney said. "But if she would have won the second set, I think she would have won the match."

"She had a couple of set points at 5-4 in the second set, but barely missed some passing shots."

Carol Coparanis also lost her first match, dropping a 6-1, 6-1 decision to Alexi Beggs of USIU.

"It was one of those days where nothing went right for Carol," McInerney said. "This tournament used no-ad scoring (the game does not have to be won by two points), and Carol lost six three-all games."

Kristi McCormick lost to her first opponent, Joanie Urban of UCLA, 6-4, 6-2.

"She (McCormick) played alright," McInerney said. "She was very competitive but had some problems on the big points. Urban won most of the important points."

In doubles play, both Lady Devil teams were eliminated in the first round.

Coparanis and Norris dropped a 6-2, 3-6, 6-4 match to Jennifer Slattery and Kristi Bragg of Long Beach State, while Miller and McCormick lost a 6-4, 6-2 decision to Susan Russo and Tina Rimer of U of A.

"We didn't play all that well in doubles," McInerney said. "We do have good doubles teams but we need to cut down on mistakes."

Lady runners finish 5th; top Devils sit out meet

By MICHAEL KONZ
Sports Writer

Running without four of its top six runners, the ASU women's cross country team finished fifth in a rainy Tucson Invitational Saturday.

The Sun Devils were without top runner Lynn Nelson because of a hip injury. Julie Seleine missed the meet with an injured abductor muscle. Sarah Krumme missed the meet to work on her running technique.

Although the final statistics were not in because of difficulties with the rain, Kerr said junior Susan Radford finished first for the Sun Devils in a time of 18:50. Heike Thiem was second in 19:13 and Kris Denny was third with a time of 19:40.

Rounding out the pack for ASU was Kristan Johnson in 20:27 and Kristin Cooper in 20:59.

Coach Roger Kerr said he was pleased with his runners' times.

"I was fairly happy with Susan Radford's performance," Kerr said. "I was elated with Kristan Johnson and Kris Denny."

"Kristan's time was a minute and a half faster than she ran on our course (at Indian Bend Wash in Scottsdale), which I think is a faster course."

Kerr said he wasn't as happy with Thiem's time. "We still can't break Heike of the 19-minute mark," Kerr said. "She's got to decide if she wants to compete. You have to have that burning desire."

Though he was only able to run one of his top five runners, Kerr said the meet served its purpose.

"It (the meet) accomplished what we wanted it to," Kerr said. "We wanted to let the lower runners see if they could make drops in their times, and they did. Kristen Johnson, for example, gives us hope for the next year."

The University of New Mexico won the meet. Kerr said they took control from the start.

"They won it in the first half-mile," Kerr said. "Once they established the lead, no one challenged them."

He said the rain didn't hurt the runners, and it usually helps.

"The rain really didn't hurt the runners," Kerr said. "A light rain is better because it's a change. It's fun. It's like going from a flat course to a hilly course."

WE NEED ENTERPRISING BUSINESS MANAGERS.

Stride Rite Retail Corp. is a dynamic retailer of top quality footwear. Since 1981, we have experienced a 49% growth in sales.

We are looking for people who can help us manage this growing business, and do some growing of their own.

We have the training programs, the best merchandise, and a modern store concept. Do you have the talent?

We will be on campus on November 5th, 1984 to talk to people capable of running a quarter of a million dollar business. Will you be one of them?

TAP A RICH VEIN OF OPPORTUNITY IN THE COLORADO ROCKIES

... Positioned for growth in VLSI manufacturing

The world market for integrated circuits is projected to grow from $12 billion in 1984 to $39 billion by 1989. To meet this growing demand, we have built one of the world's most advanced semiconductor manufacturing facilities in the shadow of the Colorado Rockies. Backed by the resources of United Technologies, we have one of the highest rates of capital equipment investment in the industry.

Equipment, of course, is only as effective as the people who use it. That is why we take pains to find those men and women who welcome technical challenge and bring new initiative to solving complex problems.

We are interested in new graduates or those with experience who want to become part of an exciting organization. If your field of study is Electrical Engineering, Physics or Chemical Engineering we invite you to explore the many opportunities waiting for you at MOSTEK/Colorado Springs, or our main plant and headquarters in Dallas, Texas.

You will find competitive compensation, extensive benefits and excellent potential for professional advancement. Our recruiter will be on campus Wednesday, October 31, 1984.

Meet Your Representatives from Pearce & Sons Distributing

Allison Marek (campus rep), Eric Johanneson (campus rep) and Greg Smith (university affairs coordinator) are either students or alumni of ASU and work for Pearce & Sons. They also can work for you. In past years we have had a great association with campus organizations, scholarship funds, residence halls and intramurals. If you feel we can help you with your specific project, please let us know.
