

Bill requires repayment of WICHE loans

By TOM STINSON
Staff Writer

A bill introduced in the Arizona Legislature would require repayment of all money loaned through the Western Interstate Commission on Higher Education (WICHE) program.

Lela Steffey, R-Mesa, said the bill is designed to make WICHE available to more students.

Students who borrow money from WICHE and are sent out of state to attend school must return to Arizona when they graduate and work for a designated period of time to avoid having to repay half of the loan.

The bill would require all WICHE students to repay the full amount of their loans, but would add 12 percent interest only for those who do not complete the program or do not return to Arizona.

"I was told that 46 students wanted to use the program this year, but we could only fund 25 or 26 of them," she said.

Steffey said the students who complete school using WICHE funds can usually afford to repay the loan.

"We've singled out some of the highest paid professions to pay for (their educations)," She said.

She said if the loans are repaid, WICHE would become a revolving fund.

"(The bill) will make the money more like a loan than a grant," she said.

The bill is co-sponsored by Jim Cooper, R-Mesa; Reid Ewing, D-Tucson; Jim Green, R-Tucson; Leslie Whiting Johnson, R-Mesa and Pat Wright, R-Glendale.

Cooper, chairman of the House Education Committee, said the bill, as written, may not be the best action for the Legislature to take.

"(The bill) has problems," he said.

He said the bill would probably reduce the number of students that can participate in the program.

Cooper said the bill also removes authority from the Arizona Board of Regents by mandating specific terms of a WICHE—student contract currently set by the board.

He said Robert Huff, regents executive director, told him Monday that the board opposes the bill.

Cooper said the education committee is scheduled to discuss the bill March 13.

"(The bill) may never come to vote," he said. "It will be discussed, but with (the strong opposition), it's not likely that it will pass committee."

Cooper said although the WICHE program has critics, it is a benefit to the state.

"I think (WICHE) is working pretty good," he said. "It's much less costly than building a dental or veterinary school."

The regents requested appropriation for 158 students, costing the state $1.85 million for 1986.

The Joint Legislative Budget Committee's analyst recommended $1.62 million to fund 135 students in 1986.

House committee to consider public election of regents

By VICKIE CHACHERE
Staff Writer

A bill mandating public election of members of the Arizona Board of Regents will be introduced to the House Education Committee today.

Rep. John Kromko, D-Tucson, said Tuesday that the bill provides for a constitutional amendment replacing the governor's power to appoint board members.

Kromko said the bill has been amended so that regents would be elected by congressional districts with three board members elected statewide.

"Some felt that if (all the regents) were elected on a statewide basis, they would all come from Maricopa County," he said.

Kromko said the bill was designed due to dissatisfaction among the house and senate over recent decisions made by the board.

He said the regents would be more responsive to the wishes of the people if members were required to run for office.

Kromko said the governor would still appoint the student regent.

The bill was unanimously opposed by the board at its meeting on Friday.

"Not being elected gives us some independence from the election process," regent Edith Auslander said.

"Having to worry about the next election would have a considerable impact on what we would do and say," she said.

Auslander's term on the board extends to 1992.

According to Kromko, members of the Legislature are upset with the board's conduct concerning the Arizona Teacher Proficiency Exam (ATPE) and the board's treatment of undergraduate education.

The board approved a new form of the ATPE at Friday's meeting after several months of discussion over the impact of the original test.

The ATPE had been mandated by state legislation early last year.

"The regents think they are above the law," Kromko told the State Press last week.

"There were parts of (the test) they didn't like, so they just ignored them," he said.

Regent Herman Chanen, chairman of the board's legislative committee, said he did not believe the bill was written as a result of recent board decisions.

He said communication between the Legislature and the board has been improving.

"There isn't always agreement between members of the Legislature and the Board of Regents," Chanen said.

"The university system is a very large business," he said. "This year we are talking about a billion-dollar business and it is very complex."

"There are many different and complex issues and there is going to be disagreement. That's healthy," Chanen said.

Chanen denied allegations by legislators that the board is unresponsive to the requests of the Legislature and the university communities.

"I believe the board has been acting in a very responsive manner," he said.

"I don't support the regents being elected," Chanen said. "I think that the system has worked in the past and it will continue to work."

"I would hate to see the board become an elected position because it may be used as a jumping board for other elected positions," Auslander said.

Regent Jack Phister said he does not understand the reasoning behind the bill and has not heard statements concerning the board's unresponsiveness.

Greeks repaint 'A,' prevent removal

The 'A' on the south side of Tempe Butte has been painted white by pledges from the Sigma Nu fraternity, following warnings by Tempe officials that the letter may be torn down due to color changes by vandals.

Business freshman Rich Hoag said the fraternity decided to restore the letter as a "philanthropic" measure after hearing that it might be torn down.

"We read that the mayor was upset about (the condition of the letter) and the IFC (Interfraternity Council) was upset about it and thought it would be a good thing to do," said Hoag, a Sigma Nu pledge. "We didn't want to see it get torn down."

He said 15 pledges from the fraternity climbed the mountain Monday and finished painting the letter about 45 minutes later. The task required 10 gallons of white wash, he said.

"We thought it would be a good service project," he said.

"The Greek system is always getting put down," Hoag said. "We just wanted to show that it was productive."

He said the group was questioned by two Tempe Police officers, but were allowed to continue after explaining what they were doing.

Tempe City Councilman Art Svob said he didn't initiate the recent criticism of the letter's condition.

"I didn't bring it up this time," he said.

Svob said he suggested the letter be removed at a meeting last year if it didn't remain the same color.

"(The suggestion) was almost in jest . . . but before I knew it the wire services had picked it up," he said.

"I don't care if it's painted white," he said. "It could be painted maroon and gold or some other standard color, as long as it stays the same."

"It's not for the fraternities to use to see how many different color combinations it can be (painted)," Svob said.

He said the letter's future is probably secure after Sigma Nu's paint job.

"(The paint job was) a demonstration of a sensitive feeling

Governor selects economics major as student regent

Nora Colton, an ASU graduate student studying economics, has been selected as the student member to the Arizona Board of Regents, a special assistant to Gov. Bruce Babbitt said Tuesday.

According to Brian DeVallance, Colton was selected Monday by Babbitt.

"She was one of three names sent to Babbitt by the selection committee," DeVallance said.

ASU's other two candidates were Michael Burke, a senior in the College of Liberal Arts, and Jean Huffington, a student in the College of Law.

Colton's appointment will be sent to the Arizona Legislature for confirmation, and her term begins May 15. DeVallance said Colton graduated Magna Cum Laude with a bachelor's degree in economics in 1984. She was named Greek Woman of the Year in 1984, and served as a member of the Arizona Students Association's board of directors in 1982.

Colton was also a Rhodes Scholar candidate in 1983.

Current student regent Paul Julien, a U of A law student, will complete his term in April.

The student regent position alternates between Arizona's three universities each year.

for the tradition of the 'A,' Svob said. "I don't want to see the 'A' come down."

Svob said he is "grateful" to the students who helped restore the letter.

Senate committee considers drastic reduction of military buildup funds

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Republican-controlled Senate Budget Committee, in a sharp rebuff to President Reagan, voted tentatively Tuesday in favor of a $79 billion reduction in military buildup over the next three years.

On a bipartisan vote of 18-4, the committee proposed freezing defense spending authority at current levels after adjusting for inflation for the fiscal year beginning Oct. 1. That would be followed by after-inflation increases of 3 percent for each of the two subsequent years.

It was the first formal indication of the widespread dissatisfaction in Congress over the president's proposed fiscal 1986 budget, which includes a $30 billion increase in defense spending and nearly $40 billion in cuts in domestic programs.

The vote on defense spending marked the beginning of the Budget Committee's efforts to draft an alternative to the president's spending blueprint.

The Budget Committee considered five plans, all of which would have allowed defense spending to rise each year, but by less than the amount Reagan wants.

The president has called for increases in defense spending authority of 5.9 percent after inflation in 1986, 8.2 percent in 1987 and 8.8 percent in 1988.

The plan that won tentative committee approval, sponsored by Sen. Ernest Hollings, D-S.C., would hold the increase far below the range proposed by Reagan.

Goldwater offers list of unneeded military facilities for major savings

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sen. Barry M. Goldwater made public a list on Tuesday of 22 military facilities around the country which he said could be closed for a saving of $500 million a year if the White House were willing to endorse so politically unpopular an idea.

Goldwater, chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee, said the list was provided by Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger in response to Goldwater's request for ways to save money.

But the document stated that it "should not be considered an official Department of Defense representation" even though it was prepared by the Pentagon.

Last month Goldwater suggested closing obsolete bases was one way to cut defense spending. But at that time he didn't cite any specific bases.

It would cost $2.5 billion to close the bases because of the expenses of moving people and reassigning duties, he said, but the Defense Department would save money in the long run.

"What this really means," Goldwater said of the list, is that the Pentagon thinks the facilities "could be closed with little or no adverse effect on our nation's security."

Because of the political unpopularity of this idea, instead of proposing that the facilities be shut down, he introduced a bill which would make it easier for the Pentagon to close outmoded facilities.

House may approve farm credit aid

WASHINGTON (AP) — The House moved Tuesday toward approval of a credit bailout for financially troubled farmers and their lenders, setting up a politically charged confrontation with a veto-minded President Reagan.

As several hundred farmers lobbied on Capitol Hill for more government aid, Democratic house leaders predicted an African famine relief bill with farm credit amendments attached would pass easily and go to Reagan for his signature or veto.

Reagan "seems to want the farmers to cry 'uncle' before he gives them the help they need," said House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill Jr., who decided to shortcut normal procedures and send a Senate-passed version of the bill straight to the White House.

The bill includes several provisions easing credit for farmers whose debt loads prevent them from getting new loans for spring planting: $100 million in interest subsidies, $1.85 billion in new loan guarantees and approximately $7 billion in immediate advances on crop loans normally not received until harvest time.

Rebel chief willing to hold territory if necessary for Congressional aid

WASHINGTON (AP) — The chief Nicaraguan rebel commander said Tuesday his forces are willing to accept heavy casualties in seizing and holding territory inside Nicaragua, if that is needed to win renewed U.S. aid from Congress.

"It would be costly for us, but to get the funds, we'll pay that price," said Enrique Bermudez, military commander of the U.S.-backed Nicaraguan Democratic Force, the Honduran-based rebel army known by its Spanish initials FDN.

Bermudez also said allegations that his troops are continuing to commit serious human rights abuses are "propaganda" from Nicaragua's leftist Sandinista government.

However, the Americas Watch Committee, which issued a report Tuesday containing such allegations, said none of its information had come from the Sandinista government.

The 97-page report by the New York-based private human rights group said all sides in the Nicaraguan conflict have violated laws of war, but while the government has reduced its abuses in the past year those of "contra" rebels have continued unchecked.

Bermudez appeared at a Washington news conference along with three FDN field commanders as part of the rebels' campaign to persuade Congress and the American public that the insurgents deserve renewed U.S. backing. The CIA funneled $80 million to the rebels from 1981 to last June, before Congress stopped the aid. Reagan is seeking $14 million more.

Bermudez said congressional backing for the rebels is vital if the insurgents are to maintain morale and continue receiving assistance from other sources, which he would not identify.

Taxpayers claim excess benefits; Congress considers repealing law

WASHINGTON (AP) — Taxpayers are claiming more than $3 billion a year in excess tax benefits by overstating deductions for business use of automobiles, the Internal Revenue Service said Tuesday in urging Congress not to repeal a new law requiring better recordkeeping.

As IRS Commissioner Roscoe L. Egger Jr. appealed to the House Ways and Committee to support the stiffer rules, nearly two dozen members of Congress testified repeal was the only way to provide relief for paperwork-weary farmers and businesses.

The Treasury Department pledged to work with Congress to refine the disputed rules, which affect as many as 30 million vehicles.

ASU offers measles inoculation

By PATRICK J. KUCERA
Staff Writer

The director of the ASU Student Health Advisory Committee (SHAC) said Tuesday that he is requesting that all students get inoculations for measles before they leave the state for spring break.

Mark Carpenter said the American College Health Association contacted him to let him know about problems with a current measles outbreak in the East and in the industrial Midwest.

"There is a concern that students (from ASU) will meet friends and other people when they go back there for spring break," Carpenter said. "They may come in contact with the virus and bring it back here."

He said a measles outbreak or epidemic at ASU could pose a variety of obstacles.

"It is very likely there would be a problem," he said.

Even students traveling to Florida run a risk on contracting the disease, because students from the East Coast will be vacationing there as well, Carpenter said.

He said an inoculation for measles should be a "high priority" on the list of all students before leaving campus on spring break trips.

"I would consider this first and the plane tickets second," he said.

If students are not sure if they have been inoculated, they can get free immunization from the Student Health Center, Carpenter said.

Dr. Monty Roth, director of the health center, said last week the state had given the immunization serum to ASU for distribution.

Carpenter said the outbreak of measles occurred so rapidly, the SHAC did not have enough time to notify the campus population.

"Because of a time factor, we haven't been able to get organized," he said.

The inoculation takes about five minutes, Carpenter said, so it will not take a lot of time for students to receive the injection.

Roth said if a measles outbreak occurs on campus, the University could choose to require all students to show proof of immunization before they are allowed on campus or into classes.

Because of the susceptibility of young adults to the virus, Roth said complications from measles are possible, including pneumonia and in some instances, death.

As of 3 p.m. Tuesday, Principia College in Illinois had reported two deaths stemming from the measles and 79 additional cases.

Judy Swanson, a worker for the Maricopa County Health Department, said Tuesday that an outbreak of rubeola has occurred at Amphitheatre High School in Tucson. Riverside, Calif is also reporting that some residents have contracted the disease.

Carpenter said the inoculations have been available for students since last Friday and the health center will continue to distribute the vaccine.

Roth said students who are not sure about previous inoculations can take the shot again without any problems.

The Student Health Center is open Monday through Friday, 8 a.m. to 5 p.m.

police report

An ASU employee reported that someone attempted to enter Room 229 in Wilson Hall through a second-floor window sometime between Friday and Monday, police said. Police found an old ladder near a broken window behind the building. Police said nothing was missing from the room, but damage to the window was estimated at $50.

In other activity, University Police reported the following incidents in the 24-hour period ending at 5:30 a.m. Tuesday:

•A resident of Palo Verde West Hall reported receiving annoying phone calls Monday, police said. The student told police he started receiving the calls on Jan. 24. The person calls several times during the day and either says nothing or hangs up right away. Police said he received five successive calls Monday morning and also in the afternoon.

•A student from Cholla High School in Tucson was injured Monday night while playing basketball against Alhambra High School in the University Activity Center, police said. The student fell and hit his head on the floor of the gym, injuring his neck. Tempe Fire Department paramedics took him to Tempe St. Luke's Hospital, where he was X-rayed and released.

•A red 1984 50cc Yamaha motorcycle was stolen from Lot 51 near Manzanita Hall sometime between Saturday and Monday, police said.

•Vandals scratched both sides and broke the right rear tail light of a blue 1980 Pontiac while it was parked in Lot 51 Monday, police said. Damage was estimated at $300.

•A silver and black Azuki 10-speed bicycle valued at $200 was stolen from the rack near Manzanita Hall sometime between Thursday and Monday, police said.

•A blue backpack was stolen from a locked 1979 blue Volkswagon parked in Lot 40 around noon Monday, police said. The car had been broken into through a side window. The backpack contained a sociology textbook, a study guide and a brown leather wallet containing various credit and identification cards. Total value of the theft was estimated at $50.

•Four name plates valued at $40 were stolen from outside Room 116B of the Engineering Center, E-Wing Saturday, police said. The plates were slid out of their metal brackets.

•A dark green 10-speed valued at $35 was stolen from the Palo Verde East Hall west entrance sometime between Jan. 15 and 30, police said.

Dr. Morgan's Human Sexuality class, revisited

Matthew Scully
Columnist

When we last visited Professor Owen Morgan he was telling us all about "joyous living." o.m., you may recall — "o.m." is what he goes by — teaches a course in Human Sexuality, to 883 of you this semester. I don't see much of him these days, except sometimes on campus carrying his films to and from class. But I paid him a call the other day and I can tell you that nothing has changed. As one of his students put it to me, o.m. is still "one beautiful dude." He may even be the most popular professor on campus. And not merely because he teaches that particular subject. What those 883 really dig is the warm, caring, cheerful way in which he goes about teaching it. o.m. is one dude who really cares about his students.

Last year I heard him lecture on "interpersonal responsibility." "My people," he gushed, his arms folded in a cradling position, "my people don't hurt one another." I don't recall that he gave any other reasons for acting responsibly. It was enough that we were "his people." What higher authority could we require?

o.m., after all, is our friend. He is always there to help us overcome our silly inhibitions, to lead us from the darkness of archaic moral codes, to relieve us of our guilt, to "explore," as he promises in the syllabus, "the human meanings of human sexuality, with all their variety, depth, and richness." He is sensitive, tolerant, understanding.

And of course "non-judgmental." He's everything we're about. That's what makes him so beautiful. He's just, like, I mean, so special.

Now if you didn't know how truly beautiful he was, you might well take him for a lecherous old windbag. But no. That would be a value judgment, and o.m. is beautiful. The dude is so open-minded that just last Friday he allowed Brother Jed Smock into his class to say a few words for morality. Now there was a sight. A Christian preacher and the High Priest of Hedonism, side by side. Brother Jed, of course, is a very remarkable man himself, though not nearly as popular as o.m., or as beautiful.

He made his case as well as a man could in that setting. There was polite applause when he came into the classroom; for a little while the students listened respectfully, though a few did rise to leave, their feelings injured by all the value judgments they were hearing. No dude was going to lay a guilt trip on them, man. But even o.m.'s people could endure only so much of this. And in due course all the usual questions came up.

Just as when Jed is preaching out on the mall, in this class you could elicit a burst of angry cheers merely by asking, "Who are you to judge?" or "What right do you have to condemn us?" "Give us a straight answer!" demanded one student after these questions were asked, again to a round of applause. Or you could get an easy laugh by asking Brother Jed how he pays for his suits, or his transportation, or why he doesn't get a real job, or whether he has ever lusted after Sister Cindy. . . o.m., ir-repressible wit that he is, got a laugh by giving a suggestive twist to the title of Jed's book, Who Will Rise Up? Now who else but old o.m. could think of that? What a special guy.

Brother Jed had answers to these questions, perfectly straight answers. But it was of no avail. The show had gone just as the director had expected. Brother Jed had been quickly cast in the role of a modern-day Cotton Mather — a preposterous figure who goes about preaching without regard for the feelings of those he seeks to correct — playing opposite the warm, loving, compassionate, sensitive, understanding, tolerant, straight-talking liberal: o.m. He'd been brought in only for contrast, to provide a caricature. The "religious perspective" had been heard, and having thus proved its open-mindedness the class could now resume its exploration for sexual "variety, depth, and richness." How could Brother Jed in a single class period teach the moral life to students who for a full semester will hear nothing but how beautiful and free they are? It is asking an awful lot, and I think o.m. knows his people better than that.

'You would think a class in human sexuality might find some relevance in standards that arise from thousands of years of human experience.'

Odd, isn't it, how these same students listen so patiently, so uncritically, to their master? Here is a man who stands up there each morning telling them they can do it all — love without responsibility, reap joy without effort, sin without guilt. And they don't doubt it for a moment. He tells them, in his casual, matter-of-fact way, not to worry about the moral restraints others would impose on them. And they don't worry. Never mind what others say, he tells them with an air of authority, just do what feels good.

You would think a class in human sexuality might find some relevance in standards that arise from thousands of years of human experience. But not here. Here they question authority, every authority but the High Priest. And they try to be more . . . enlightened, more scientific, about such things. Here normal behavior is determined not by moral standards but by statistics. And new data is always coming in.

They really believe him, most of them. They just sit there, enthralled and exhilarated, confident that o.m. will lead them aright. They do not seize upon his contradictions. They do not question his motives, or wonder when he's going to find a real job. They don't laugh at him, at his obsession with sex. No way, man. He is o.m., their trusted friend, the man who gives them straight answers. And they're his people.

A man who ventures to suggest that perhaps they're not quite so beautiful after all is met with skepticism and anger. They don't need a religion because, thanks to o.m., they already have one — "joyous living." But the same skeptics who roar their disapproval of Jed Smock attend to o.m.'s every word, lapping it up like so many kittens at the milk saucer.

Speak a word of truth to the crowd and you're a religious fanatic; flatter the crowd, and you're a beautiful dude. Preach, and you have to preach outdoors, relying on your wits to draw an audience; pander, and you get a lecture hall with a congregation of 883. Between the two of them it looks very much as if o.m. is doing a good deal more harm than Jed Smock. But then, hey, that's a value judgment. And who are we to judge someone so beautiful, so special?

Bryant, Thomas publish objectives, concerns

Editor:

This is an open letter from the Black Student Union (BSU) at ASU regarding BSU statement of objectives and concerns.

The BSU is an organization designed to promote the campus cultural, social, and academic well-being of the black students at ASU. BSU is an organization composed of members of the ASU campus. The only way the organization will operate effectively is to have the entire black faculty, staff, students, and progressive whites unite for a common cause.

To those who are asking what is the cause, what are the issues, what are the concerns: first let us clarify that when we say our concern, we include all of us, blacks, other minorities, and progressive whites. We realize the burden of responsibility falls upon no single individual or one group of individuals. The following concerns should be discussed and are of importance to all of us.

• Assurances that our University has no investment in South Africa or is connected to any company that has South African investments.

• What efforts are really being made toward the recruitment of more minorities at our University (faculty, students, and staff)?

• How much of the $10.7 million decision package approved by the Board of Regents last semester will be applied to the development of a minority cultural center?

• The offering of more minority courses would not only provide a truly cross-cultural education, but would be a substantial aid in our retention efforts.

• The responsibility of student government is to fund ethnic minority organizations, yet this function has not been carried out to our satisfaction.

• An increase in the depth of orientation, longer period of orientation, and an increased number of student minority advisers should be provided to increase recruitment and participation of minority students.

We feel strongly that the following actions are needed to insure a progressive university.

1. Establish annual meetings with college deans and student affairs directors to increase flow of information as to University's response to the tri-university report, establish a time period for response to these requests, and give the deans and directors an opportunity to gain input and insight on minority issues from the minority point of view.

2. Establish a program to fund high quality cultural events for minority students.

3. Establish a working group in the Faculty Senate to develop a program to sensitize faculty to the minority student experience on a predominantly white campus.

4. Develop a cultural/social center to promote cross-cultural understanding among the ethnic minorities at ASU.

5. Develop a series of basic skills courses to help minority and non-minority students increase readiness for academic competition at ASU.

In conclusion, we quote the late Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr.: "Time is neutral, it can be used positively or negatively. . . we must make it clear that the time to do right is now, and that the time is always right to do right."

On large sized classes in the Business College

Robert F. Gwinner
Guest Columnist

Most of the departments in the College of Business are now offering their basic courses in the large lecture format. This program was begun in recent years on a limited basis and was implemented fully with the opening of the new building addition in fall 1984. At that time, three large lecture halls were made available for instruction.

From recent articles in the State Press, it appears that there is a degree of dissatisfaction on the part of some students who are taking the basic courses in the large lecture format. To these students, "bigness is badness." In other words, courses instructed in the large lecture format have to be bad because there are a lot of students and the instructor cannot establish a close one-on-one student-faculty relationship. A commonly held view on the part of those who are disgruntled is that there is a general "lack of concern" for the students and their problems in the large sections.

The large section format at ASU may be a relatively new phenomenon, but this pedagogy has been a fact of life at most major universities for a long period of time.

Undergraduates of more than 30 years ago remember classes of several hundred students. Today many universities instruct some of the basic courses in classrooms of more than 2,000 students. While it is doubtful that the College of Business will exceed classes of 300 to 500, it is likely that the large lecture format is a firm reality at ASU. Furthermore, it is probable that more and more divisions on the campus will go to the large lecture format as lack of resources continue to restrict their programs.

For those who are aware of the problem, the resource base of the College of Business is a big factor in the decision to offer large classes. With more than 10,000 students and a limited faculty, something has to give. The demands on the faculty are great. Explicit criteria for merit pay increases, tenure, and promotion must be met. Those criteria include very rigid performance requirements in the three areas of teaching, research, and service. While large classes are not a panacea, they do provide a degree of flexibility in spreading the faculty teaching load in an effort to enable the faculty to meet the rigid requirements now imposed. Although sizable increases in new faculty positions would serve a similar end, the reality of such increases is not a viable one.

So much for the facts. This does not solve the students' perceived problems, nor does cognizance of the facts eliminate the view that "bigness is badness." Something even more fundamental must be addressed here. There must be an awareness of the basic goals of the educational system. Those goals must speak to the importance of achieving excellence in the classroom. To this end, it may be observed that there are concerns also about small sections. The size of a class in and of itself does not make for good or bad instruction, a good or bad class, or a good or bad education. In other words, the achievement of excellence is not a function of size.

Another important point that should be addressed is the issue of visibility. While students may feel anonymous in the large classroom setting, their professors are highly visible. That visibility increases along with the increases in the size of a class. In the aggregate, visibility is reflected in one's teaching load. As an example, my personal teaching load has increased from approximately 300 student credit hours per semester when I was teaching senior and graduate level courses to more than 2,000 student credit hours this semester when I am teaching approximately 700 students. This is a sevenfold increase in visibility.

Increased visibility is accompanied by a large increase in responsibility to do an outstanding job in the classroom. In support of "student concerns" over large classes, I would argue for an administrative response that establishes excellence in the classroom as the primary goal of large lecture instruction. Those assigned to the task of instructing the large classrooms must do so with a high level of organization and sensitivity to the needs of their students. Fortunately, student responses notwithstanding, the College of Business has worked diligently to achieve this end. Teaching excellence has always been and will continue to be a primary goal of the college.

To insure that students receive the quality education that they most surely deserve, however, there must be a commitment that is shared by both the faculty and the administration of the college and the University. If, because of resource limitations, the administration must commit to the large lecture class format, teaching assignments for large classes must be given to those who are willing to take on the task and to those who have the best talents to handle the job. Once committed, the administration must be willing to reward those faculty members accordingly. By the same token, instructors accepting the responsibility to work with the large classes must do so with the full knowledge that they are "on stage" and highly visible to the student world.

If there is some thread of agreement here, perhaps we can get on with the business of teaching and learning. Controversy over the size of classes should not be at the heart of the College of Business at ASU. Without qualification, excellence must be the issue at hand. This, of course, applies to both students and faculty. Professors must strive for excellence in their teaching and students, in turn, must reach out for excellence in their learning. Something less should not be tolerated by the students, the faculty, or the administration of our University.

Robert F. Gwinner is a professor of marketing in ASU's College of Business.

Secular humanism not the answer

Editor:

Miss Kreimerman says she cannot follow any religion blindly (Feb. 27). She is totally right. God would not want us to follow Him out of ignorance or blind faith. If He was the true God He would supply us with plenty of evidence. Which is why one should be a Christian, because there is plenty of evidence. Evidence that is not based on subjective experience (although that is part of it), but on historical facts.

Christianity is not based on works, or moral, ethical modes. It is based on the person of Jesus Christ and God's grace (Ephesians 2:8). No man is good enough for God. It doesn't matter how many good works one does, man can't earn his salvation. Since man could not get to God, God came to man in human form (Jesus Christ), and died for all men, so that those who believe in Him shall be saved. Christianity is exclusive (Acts 4:12).

According to the laws of karma in Hinduism, man is suffering for the sins of his previous life (which he doesn't remember). If you help someone, say a blind man, you undo the punishment that the gods meant for him to have. That is why there are no Hindu hospitals, food banks, orphanages, etc. Yet how many Christian organizations are there?

Jesus claimed to be God in a number of passages (John 10:30-33, John 5:17-18, John 8:58). The apostle Thomas called Jesus his Lord and his God in John 20:27-29. Jesus blessed those who believed that He was God.

Jesus fulfilled 61 major prophecies, such as being born in Bethlehem (Micah 5:2, Matthew 2:1), being betrayed by a friend (Psalm 41:9, Matthew 10:4), having His side pierced (Zechariah 12:10, John 19:34), etc. Jesus could not have deliberately fulfilled all of the prophecies because He had no control over 1) the place of His birth, 2) the time of birth (Daniel 9:25), 3) the manner of His death (Psalm 22:16), 4) His piercing, 5) His burial (Isaiah 53:9) or 6) His betrayal. The prophecies Jesus fulfilled are very specific; however, one could find some of the prophecies fulfilled in other men, but not all 61 major prophecies (not to mention 200-plus ramifications). In fact, if anyone can find someone, other than Jesus, living or dead, who fulfilled half of the predictions concerning the Messiah, which are given in "Messiah in Both Testaments" by Fred John Meldau, the Victory publishing company of Denver will give you a $1,000 reward!

Christianity stands or falls on the resurrection of Jesus (1 Corinthians 15:14). Due to space I can't list the proof of the resurrection, or any other evidence. However, if anyone has any doubts about the resurrection, please write a letter to the State Press stating why you do not believe in it, and your explanation for the empty tomb.

Schubert letter misread; State of Israel thriving

Editor:

In response to the anonymous rebuttal to Ed Schubert's letter: I think that you have interpreted Ed Schubert's letter to the editor incorrectly.

First of all, Schubert was just stating that Jews and Arabs can live in peace in Israel. This is a positive statement, not a fanatical or racist opinion.

Second, Jews have existed for 4,000 years despite narrow-minded anti-semitic views such as yours. Zionism has existed for 4,000 years and for the past 37 years Israel has grown to be a prosperous state, both militarily and economically. I'm happy to conclude that the state of Israel is here to stay, and views such as yours are doomed to reality.

Painting 'A' on Tempe Butte harmless freshman tradition

Editor:

Is the harmless prank of painting the 'A' on Tempe Butte such a horrible deed? These "vandals," as you so eloquently put it in your March 4 edition, have done nothing more than had a little harmless fun. The 'A' is not being bombarded with graffiti and obscenities, it is merely being repainted a more lively color. The rich tradition of freshmen painting the 'A' white has only come about due to the richer, stronger tradition of changing the color in the first place. I'm not saying that the painting of the 'A' should be freely allowed — that would take the fun out of it. All I ask is that this nonsense about its removal stop.

I don't think Mr. Bill Ream knows the value of ASU students. Let's just say that all 40 some-odd thousand ASU students refused to do business in Tempe? The same food and other products can be purchased in Scottsdale, Mesa or Phoenix, so it wouldn't be difficult. I think this would change Mr. Ream's attitudes. It is my opinion that Mr. Ream owes us all an apology and possibly an 'SU' to complete our present 'A.'

McCain talks to ASU about Vietnam War

By DOUG NEWMAN
Staff Writer

Rep. John McCain, R-Ariz., spoke about his experiences as a prisoner of war in Vietnam, the current state of affairs in Southeast Asia and the lessons he feels we should learn from that conflict in a speech to a small group at the MU.

McCain recently returned to Vietnam with newsman Walter Cronkite in preparation for a CBS news documentary to be aired April 10 in commemoration of the 10th anniversary of the fall of Saigon.

"The Vietnamese want very much at this time in their history to normalize relations with the United States for the purposes of seeking our aid and that of Western countries because their economy is in such terrible condition," McCain said during the speech Sunday.

"I feel that because I was one who returned from that conflict, I have an obligation to those friends and comrades of mine who did not," he said.

McCain said the Vietnamese were astonished that Americans are still concerned about their prisoners of war and those classified as still missing in action.

According to McCain, this issue has more visibility in the United States than it did five years ago.

"(This) is directly related to the reconciliation that has taken place between the Vietnam veterans and the American public in the last five years," he said.

He said the Vietnam War Memorial is now the second most visited place in Washington, D.C.

McCain said many people have adopted the attitude that "whether we happen to agree or disagree with our involvement in that part of the world, we should not place the blame on those young men and women who willingly served."

McCain said there are still 2,000 men who are unaccounted for in Southeast Asia.

"The first question that is always asked of me is 'are there any left alive?'" said McCain. "I simply don't know."

"Until we know, the tragedy will remain in the minds of the families of those still unaccounted for," said McCain.

He went on to describe his impressions of his return to Vietnam.

"The worst impression was the day Walter Cronkite and I returned to my old prison," he said.

"The Vietnamese still steadfastly deny that there was any mistreatment of the men that they held captive.

"The impression that I had of the countryside was a picture that you could have taken between 300 and 400 years ago."

He described women in rags bending over planting rice seedlings in the paddies.

There was no mechanization, McCain said. Water buffalo are still commonly used for agricultural purposes.

"A case can be made that their economy is worse off now than it was during the war," he said.

"They lost a lot of the (economic) aid they were receiving, both from Western countries that were sympathetic to them and from the Chinese," McCain said.

He said the Vietnamese population increase has outstripped their economic growth, and the country's leaders are doing very little about it.

McCain said that the Vietnamese had lost the sympathy of many nations that had previously supported them in their conflicts with the French and the United States.

"Their invasion of Cambodia removed the last vestiges of sympathy the West might have had for them," he said.

McCain said those who thought that all would be well in Indochina after the United States left were mistaken.

"One of our biggest problems in Vietnam was our basic misunderstanding of the nature of the adversary."

He described a 1964 speech by President Lyndon B. Johnson in which he said he would give the North Vietnamese $2 billion in economic aid if they would desist from their activities in South Vietnam.

"We were up against an adversary that was tough, tenacious, and willing to make every sacrifice for the achievement of their goal," McCain said.

Blacks honored in conference

ASU will host the sixth Annual Black Youth Recognition Conference on Saturday, March 16.

The conference recognizes outstanding achievement of black junior and senior high school students from Arizona as well as the achievements of black students at Arizona's colleges and universities.

"Preparing for Excellence: The Road to Success" is the theme of the conference.

Nearly 2,500 people are expected to attend the day-long event which will feature a series of workshops, entertainment sessions and award presentations.

The keynote speaker for the conference will be Joe Black, vice president of special markets for the Greyhound Corporation. He will speak about "Today's Black Youth."

Workshops will cover topics ranging from "The Black Youth in the Employment Picture" and "Preparing for Excellence in the High Tech of the 80s" to "College and You: A Mind is a Terrible Thing to Waste" and "Developing Black Leadership: Become the Leaders of Tomorrow."

The entertainment portion of the day will feature well known jazz singer Margo Reed as well as "Kawambi," a dance and drum ensemble under the direction of Consuelo Davis.

Registration for the conference is $1.50 per person or $3 per family. A continental breakfast and lunch are included in the registration fee.

For more information, contact Jackie Platt at 256-3207 or Helen Knox at 257-9339.

Senate committee approves bill to change term of student regent

By VICKIE CHACHERE
Staff Writer

A bill which would change the beginning date of the term for student member of the Arizona Board of Regents has been approved by the Senate Education Committee, according to a committee intern.

The bill would change the term's starting date to July 1 from the present starting date of May 15 to allow for the student regent to take part in the budget-planning process.

The bill has gained the support of the regents and is waiting for final action from the Senate before being sent to the House.

"We have heard from past student regents that this would be more beneficial because it would be at the beginning of the academic year," said Shari Lewis, assistant director for personnel and government relations for the board.

Lewis said the new starting date would give the student regent an opportunity to become familiar with the board before the budget issues are brought up in the spring.

"It gives them a chance to get their ears wet," Lewis said.

The change of the date would also allow for members of student associations from ASU, NAU and U of A to have a full year to screen applicants for the job, the bill states.

The legislation will not alter the term of this year's student regent.

The intern, who wished not to be identified, said the term of the new student regent will end in May, and a new student board member will not take office until July.

The legislation is sponsored by the Senate Education Committee.

The intern said there has been no opposition to the bill and little is expected.

Lewis said, "There has been no indication of opposition at all."

ARE YOUR DRINKING BUDDIES THINKING BUDDIES?

Good times mean getting together with good buddies and Budweiser. There's something about a couple of beers with friends that makes for great camaraderie.

Beer is meant to be enjoyed by adults socially. It is also the beverage of MODERATION. Good judgment should be used whenever you drink.

Make sure "your drinking buddies are thinking buddies" and exercise good judgment. Especially if they drive! When they need a good friend... think for them! Don't let them get behind the wheel — the outcome could be disastrous.

Greeks nominate 14 grads for participation honors

By KATY MCGREGOR
Staff Writer

ASU's Greek system has nominated fourteen graduating senior members to receive awards for their participation in campus and fraternal activities, said the chairman of the Opening Ceremonies Committee for Greek Week.

Six men and eight women from ASU have been nominated for the 1985 Greek Man and Greek Woman of the Year awards, said Don Steward.

The awards are part of Greek Week activities taking place March 29-April 8, he said.

Lynn Brysacz, a graduate intern in the Greek Life Office, said the Greek system has been part of ASU since 1947.

Steward said the awards started 30 years ago and were originally called the Apollo and Andromeda awards.

Members of fraternities and sororities will cast votes for the Greek Man and Greek Woman of the Year awards at the end of the month, Steward said.

Nominees for the men include Ed Finer of Kappa Sigma, Bob Venberg of Sigma Nu, Jeff Swenson of Theta Delta Chi, Jeff Rovner of Sigma Alpha Epsilon, Brian Eason of Sigma Phi Epsilon and Terry Flood of Pi Kappa Alpha, he said.

Women nominated for the honor are Cathy Carroll of Chi Omega, Deanna Trevino of Kappa Alpha Theta, Katrina Gonneman of Alpha Chi Omega, Christina Mastrangelo of Kappa Kappa Gamma, Janet Wallace of Gamma Phi Beta, Brigita Bilsens of Delta Delta Delta, Angela Greener of Kappa Kappa Gamma and Sherry Lowe of Sigma Sigma Sigma, Steward said.

Each person nominated was sent an application and judged on a point system developed by members of the Opening Ceremonies Committee. A designated number of points is allotted for each activity the nominee participated in on campus and in their respective houses, Steward said.

Winners will be announced March 29 at an Opening Ceremonies banquet attended by Greek leaders and ASU administrators he said.

Other Greek Week activities include Greek Sing, an annual musical production performed by fraternities and sororities at Gammage Center April 4, Brysacz said.

Greeks will also be competing for prizes during Greek Games March 30, she said.

The theme for this year's Greek Week is "If they could see us now," Brysacz said.

Winners of Greek Sing and Greek Games will be announced at Closing Ceremonies, April 8 at Big Surf, she said.

Udall's local office needs intern for remainder of semester

By MELISSA OLSON
Staff Writer

A student intern is needed to serve in U.S. Rep. Morris K. Udall's Phoenix office for the remainder of this semester, according to the head of the Arizona Democratic congressman's local office.

Applications to fill four intern positions for the summer semester are also being accepted until May 30, said Mary Montano.

Interns in the Phoenix office will answer constituent information requests, do case work for individuals and federal agencies, schedule Udall's appearances and represent the congressman at various events, said

Montano.

Preference is given to applicants from District 2, but any ASU student may fill the Phoenix position, she said.

The summer positions will involve between 12 and 24 hours of work a week, earning three to six credit hours in the political science department.

Applications for fall semester internships in Udall's Washington D.C. office arrived in the Student Life Office last week, said Neil Giuliano, program coordinator of Student Life.

Giuliano distributes the applications and provides information to students about the internships.

Fall interns will work full time answering constituent mail, attending congressional hearings, conducting research and doing administrative tasks.

Some of the Washington positions will pay salaries depending on the intern's duties, said Giuliano.

Deadline for applications for the fall semester is April 15.

Washington applicants must be Arizona residents, registered voters and at least 18 years old.

Between 15 and 20 applications are usually received from ASU students, said

Giuliano.

The ASU applications are combined with applications from other areas in Udall's district.

Udall's Phoenix office acts as a "conduit" for constituents in District 2 to voice their opinions and to receive explanations of Udall's votes and views, said Montano.

The Washington office deals more with legislative duties such as research and grant advocacy, she said.

Students interested in the Phoenix internship should contact Cassandra Mason-Motz at 261-3018 for applications and more information.

Numerous ASU organizations assist adult re-entry student

By CARRI L. MITCHELL
Staff Writer

This is the first of a two-part series on students who have returned to ASU to improve their education. Today, the State Press looks at the variety of organizations on campus that offer support for these specific students. Tomorrow's report will look at the specific problems encountered by returning students.

Students who have returned to ASU in order to advance their careers, change their jobs or enrich their lives can receive support and assistance through numerous campus organizations, according to the associate dean of Student Life.

Joanne O'Donnell said the majority of returning students are over 25 years old and have returned to gain a graduate degree and make themselves more marketable.

"The ones who haven't finished their undergraduate degrees need more support and help," she said.

O'Donnell is also the director of the Adult Re-entry Program which sponsors the Contact for Adult Re-Entry (CARE) program. The organization coordinates activities for re-entry students within other departments of Student Affairs, she said.

Through the CARE program, re-entry students can receive help brushing up on their study skills and learning about career opportunities.

Students can also attend a weekly "brown bag" luncheon where information is given and informal discussions are held, she said.

O'Donnell said the program also holds a spring orientation for women from community colleges who are interested in coming to ASU. This year's program will be held on April 19, she said.

"(Women students) seem to be more intimidated by the size of the campus," O'Donnell said.

Betty Turner Asher, vice president for Student Affairs, said, "We get a large number of re-entry students. Some come from the community colleges.

"The Maricopa Community Colleges do an excellent job on re-entry programs," she said. "I'd like to build upon that excellent start."

Asher said ASU is trying to create a good re-entry program so incoming students will not feel like they are being thrown into a huge, impersonal campus.

"Most re-entry students have a sense of lack of belonging. If we could create a greater sense of belonging on campus, that would help some of their needs," Asher said.

Asher said many of the re-entry students have a lack of self-confidence that goes away after they have successfully completed some of their courses. She said they realize their inadequacies are not real.

People return to the University, Asher said, because they either want to get a degree that is more marketable, or they want to enrich their lives by exploring new areas.

Asher said most of the existing programs are aimed at women because they seem to become more involved in organizations.

Another group on campus that helps re-entry students is the Association of Women's Active Return to Education (AWARE). AWARE is a support group designed to help women reach their academic goals, said Marilyn Mason, the faculty advisor for AWARE.

Mason said the program tries to provide a place where re-entry students can meet other students in their same situation.

AWARE also offers students "survival seminars" which teach skills in note taking, resume writing and other areas to improve their study skills. They also teach them about campus resources, she said.

Mason also said the group meets every other week on campus to discuss topics to help the students adjust to campus life.

"We try to make the information center on topics that have been requested by the students," Mason said.

According to the Registrar's Office, 1,581 students were re-admitted to the University this semester. Of those students 72 are listed as unclassified, 154 are trying for a second bachelor's degree, 510 are seniors, 469 are juniors, 270 are sophomores and 106 are freshmen.

Both Mason and O'Donnell said the number of re-entry students has stabilized and has not increased much this year.

"We have a bigger group in the fall semester, which doesn't really bother us because there are more new students in the fall," Mason said.

Mason said the group's goal is to help students acclimate themselves to the campus.

Asher said, "I wish we had a place we could call a re-entry center, but since space here is so limited we don't, but that is my ideal."

Reach

Student Life answers questions pertaining to ASU

By NICOLE MASSIE
Staff Writer

An infinite number of questions regarding ASU can be answered by persons working for the REACH program, housed in the Office of Student Life.

The program is designed to educate, advise, counsel and help students at ASU, said Adrienne Sanden, the program's director. REACH is staffed by professional and student staff members and gives access to information about ASU, its resources, clubs, support groups and other forms of campus involvement and activities, Sanden said.

Jo Anne O'Donnell, associate dean of Student Life, who initiated the program in 1983, said the number of students participating in REACH has gradually increased.

"The program has been going for five semesters and it is safe to estimate more than 100 students have participated in it," she said.

She said the organization began as an aid to students who wanted to become familiar with ASU and the services the campus has to offer.

The staff is comprised of about 25 ASU students from various class levels who receive credit for counselor education, Sanden said.

"It is a good learning experience for the students involved," said O'Donnell. "Students seeking help are probably more comfortable talking to another student than a member of our staff."

"The students are an extension of our staff," she said. "These para-professionals can be just as qualified as the professional staff."

The student staff members assist the professional staff to identify student needs and help resolve student problems, Sanden said.

The REACH program is designed to be utilized by everyone at the University, Sanden said.

"We help men and women in about equal numbers," she said. "We also help independents, sorority and fraternity members, minorities — everyone."

According to Sanden, if the staff does not have the requested information members will "make the referrals and set up the appointment for the student."

A student can also gain access to student advisors through REACH, Sanden said.

Advisors can explain ASU policies on mall use and other facilities and raising funds and can give students a good understanding of their rights and obligations, Sanden said.

The REACH staff conducts workshops to instruct campus organizations on subjects ranging from time management, goal setting, team building and nutrition, Sanden said.

"We also arrange for speakers to appear at clubs and other organizations," she said.

"We will be recruiting for a new staff in April," Sanden said. "The person applying should be sincere and have a desire to help others."

Women's service club awards ASU student

An ASU re-entry student has been awarded the Soroptimist International of Tempe's 1984-85 Training Award, said Mary Garcia, publicity coordinator for the Soroptimist Award.

Carol Allen returned to school after 14 years to obtain a degree in elementary education.

"I completed three and a half years of college and then quit to marry and raise a family," Allen said.

The Soroptimist award is given to a woman who works, lives or goes to school in Tempe, who is the head of the household or a financial supporter and who is trying to enter or re-enter the business community using education to enable her to gain a higher position, Garcia said.

Allen received a $500 scholarship award and is eligible to win the regional award of $1,500, Garcia said.

"The thing that is most gratifying to me is to have the moral support of successful women," Allen said. "It was like they were saying, 'We made it and you can too.' It was a morale booster."

Allen said she heard about the scholarship from the Association of Women's Active Return to Education group and a friend suggested she apply.

Applicants were required to submit two letters of recommendation, Allen said. The applications were reviewed by four judges from the community, she said.

Garcia said the applications were reviewed by members of the Tempe Soroptimists and then reviewed by community leaders.

"They're looking for women who are involved in the community, have a good school record and are the head of the household," Garcia said.

Allen is the mother of four, ranging in ages from 2 to 12.

"I'm the sole support of four children, it's imperative that I get a job," she said.

Carol Allen

Allen said time is her most valuable commodity. This semester she is taking 12 hours.

She re-entered school in August after moving to Mesa from Dewey, Ariz. She plans on graduating in May.

"I'm excited about education. This is where my talents lie," Allen said.

After graduation, Allen hopes to get job in an east side school district and continue her education by trying to receive her master's degree.

"I spent the last 14 years in Dewey, Arizona being a homemaker. It was a real change to move to the big city," she said.

Soroptimist International of Tempe is part of the Soroptimist International of the Americas. The organization is a service club founded for business and professional women. It has more than 35,000 members in 20 countries. The Tempe club has approximately 20 members, Garcia said.

Jazz Week offers activities for music enthusiasts

By MELISSA OLSON
Staff Writer

Jazz Week activities continue today and Thursday with classes and concerts on campus for jazz enthusiasts as well as for music students.

Four jazz musicians are participating in ASU classes, master classes, clinics and concerts.

The master classes are oriented toward jazz students, but anyone is welcome to attend, said Sheri Shembab, student assistant to Chuck Marohnic, director of the Jazz Week activities.

The clinics are geared for players of the specific instruments, but anyone can gain information about jazz from them, said Shembab.

Joe Daley, tenor saxophone clinician from Chicago, has taught great saxophone players such as David Sanborn, Richie Corpolongo, John Klemmer and Bill Evans. He has played with the Maynard Ferguson Band and the Witty Herman Band, she said.

Joe Diorio, guitar clinician, is founder of the Musicians Institute in Los Angeles, encompassing the Guitar Institute of Technology as well as divisions for bassists and percussionists, said Shembab.

Bob Magnusson, bass clinician, recently returned from the Linda Ronstadt and Nelson Riddle Orchestra Tour. He is a premier Los Angeles bassist and has played with nationally renowned artists, she said.

Joe LaBarbera, drum clinician, has recently been on tour with Tony Bennett, said Shembab.

All clinicians will perform a jazz ensemble at 7:30 tonight in the Music Theater. Admission is $3.

Chuck Marohnic, ASU associate professor of music, will play piano with the clinicians at this performance.

Today's Jazz week activities begin with an "open jam" with all clinicians at 10:30 in the Music Theater.

The Jazz Fundamentals class will be joined by Daley and Magnusson at 12:40 in Gammage Center Room 212.

Diorio will join the Jazz Pedagogy class at 1:40 in MUS 283. All clinicians will join the Bob Ravenscroft Combo at 3:40 in Gammage 212.

Master classes from 5 to 6:30 will be held by Diorio in Gammage 212, and by LaBarbera in Gammage 209.

Thursday's activities begin with all clinicians joining Improv I and Advanced Improv classes at 9:40 and 10:40 a.m. in Gammage 301.

The clinics continue with the Advanced Combo Techniques class at 11:40 a.m. and 1:30 p.m. in Gammage 311.

The Fred Forney Combo will meet with Diorio and LaBarbera at 3:40 p.m. in Gammage 213.

Also at 3:40 p.m., the Chuck Marohnic Combo II will play with Daley and Magnusson in Gammage 206.

Master classes will meet with Daley from 5 to 6:30 p.m. in Gammage 213, and with Magnusson in Gammage 212.

Jazz Week activities will end with the Thursday night performance of Jazz Band II with Diorio at 7:30 p.m. in the Music Theater. Admission is $1.

Jazz guitarist Joe Diorio keeps in time with the ASU Jazz Band at Gammage Center. Diorio, who has been playing for more than 35 years, is at ASU in conjunction with Jazz Week.

Author to give talk on works

Paul S. Donhauser, author and ceramicist, will lecture on his work at the ASU School of Art at 7 p.m. Monday.

Donhauser's lecture is part of the University's Monday Night Visual Arts Lecture Series, and will be held in room 220 of the Art Building. The lecture is free and open to the public.

Donhauser, a professor at the University of Wisconsin-Oshkosh, became the first American to receive the Grand Prize of Faenza at the 35th International Competition of Ceramic Sculpture.

Donhauser is a member of the International Academy of Ceramics and the American Crafts Council, and he was recently nominated for Who's Who in American Art.

During the current semester, Donhauser is a guest artist at the ASU School of Art.

Music used in treatment of mental, physical handicaps

By JOHN CONWAY
Staff Writer

Music therapists are not singing psychologists.

They are nationally registered therapists who have combined music and psychology to treat the mental and physical handicaps of humans, said Barbara Crowe, assistant professor of music therapy.

According to an office worker in the School of Music, there are 31 students at ASU majoring in music therapy, one of ASU's larger disciplines.

"People say, 'Well, how does music cure people?' Well it doesn't, it's a tool we use," she said.

"We involve a client in a therapeutic situation by using an activity - our activity is music," Crowe said.

Sandra Ransom, a junior music therapy student, meets once a week with a nine-year-old boy who is mentally ill, blind and suffering from cerebral palsy, to improve his verbalization and coordination and to lengthen his attention span.

Ransom uses a tambourine, drums, a horn, an omnichord and other instruments in her sessions with the boy.

Ransom would not guarantee how extensive the treatment will be in terms of success. However, she said by playing the instruments, the boy's strength will build in his right hand. Once this is accomplished, more intricate movements may be attempted.

"He doesn't have a lot of coordination. He'll play with his right hand, but he likes to use his left hand - he likes to grab things with both hands," Ransom said.

"Row, row, row your boat," is one of many songs sung and played to the boy by Ransom as a means of increasing his verbalization.

As the boy sings the lyrics, his speech habits improve because he is speaking in complete sentences.

Cindy Spitler, faculty associate in the School of Music, said these skills can be practiced at home.

According to the boy's mother, Mary Frances Lewis, "(The therapy) has really opened up more verbal communication."

Ransom is enrolled in one of four required pre-clinical classes.

Students in the pre-clinical classes are placed in working situations that may involve a hospital patient recovering from a head injury, geriatrics, the mentally ill or the physically handicapped.

"Until you see the handicapped child, talk to them and react to them, you're going to be nervous," Crowe said.

The pre-clinicals prepare the students for their internship and certification test, Crowe said.

Both Crowe and Spitler are registered and certified music therapists.

A registered music therapist must earn a bachelor's degree in music and work six months as an intern at a hospital, a school, or a private psychiatric facility. A test is required if the registered therapist wants to be certified, Crowe said.

The association is in the process of upgrading the standards, said Crowe, who expects certification to be a requirement for all future music therapists.

Most music therapy students must leave Arizona for internships because the state has only one certified training site, located in the Paradise Valley School District, Crowe said.

Laura Gillis, a senior music therapy student, chose to conduct this semester's pre-clinical at the Arizona State Mental Hospital and is working with approximately eight male patients classified as "dangerous to self and others," she said.

Gillis, a guitarist and vocalist, incorporates her own music into sessions with the patients.

She said her songs are about everyday life, because that's what she is dealing with - people having problems with everyday situations.

Stress reduction and relaxation is one of five goals that Gillis hopes to achieve with her group.

"One guy came in and you could tell he had a lot of pent-up energy," she said. "He couldn't even close his eyes. Even during the session he said, 'I can't relax.'"

If a person is being bothered by external things, it seems an impossibility to solve any problem, Gillis said.

"Relaxation is a method of focusing. If you can focus on one problem at a time in a relaxed frame of mind, you'll be able to get in touch with your inner wisdom," she said.

Gillis uses an old man with a long white beard who is very wise as the personification of inner wisdom in one of her three sessions this semester.

Gillis introduces her group to the old man after they lay on the floor, close their eyes and dream of a place where they feel comfortable, like a meadow or the beach.

When the patients are sufficiently relaxed, Gillis introduces the man into their make-believe environment.

"I can't say all people, but in a lot of cases people can solve their own problems if they get in touch with their inner wisdom," Gillis said.

Society promotes trade, international development

By MELISSA SMYTH
Staff Writer

Students and staff interested in exchanging information with representatives from foreign countries can meet contacts through the Society for International Development (SID), the founder of the Arizona Chapter said.

Associate Professor of History Roger Adelson said, "We bring in out-of-town visitors from the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund — it's a way of getting students an entry into this field of international development."

SID is an independent, non-profit organization based out of Rome which promotes trade and international development between individuals, businesses and organizations, Adelson said.

With 10,000 members worldwide, SID is the largest international development organization in the world, he said. Adelson founded the Arizona Chapter at ASU in 1983.

Arizona SID is a state-wide organization, Adelson said, but many officers and members are affiliated with and work at ASU.

The chapter is currently hosting a series of lectures Saturday mornings in the MU Cochise Room focusing on crises facing the African continent.

Approximately 25 Africans and various Africa experts volunteered to speak on famine, social dilemmas, political crises, environmental problems and what is being done nationally and globally to deal with these problems, Adelson said.

"To make the organization work you've got to have some kind of focus," he said.

Adelson said he hopes to use the Arizona Chapter as a statewide information network and a forum for seminars and conferences.

For example, the Retired Foreign Service Executives Club has approximately 30 members in Phoenix, he said.

"Aren't they a local source we can tap?" he said. "Wouldn't you want to know these people are available as consultants?"

Adelson said the Arizona Chapter could also bring together specialists, such as bankers involved in international financing and ASU agricultural professors to exchange information.

"We'll try to break down the barriers of specialization that have plagued development," he said. "They need to talk to people who specialize in different ways."

A computer information center developed by the Arizona Chapter will serve as a data base for the organization, he said.

The Arizona International Trade and Data Network (AZINET) will include all private and public agencies, organizations, businesses and individuals in the state that are involved with international development, he said.

Prof to develop computer program to teach students math

By NICOLE MASSIE
Staff Writer

An ASU professor of elementary education has received a grant from the National Science Foundation to develop a computer program designed to teach math to University students.

Gary Bitter, also the director of ASU's computer institute, received $228,235 Friday to institute the program which will begin within the next few weeks when a building to house the project is located.

"The project is also called the 'Math Fitness Program' or MFP," Bitter said.

According to Bitter, the project begins with a computer-assisted test which takes approximately an hour and will diagnose the student's weaknesses and prescribe a program of study.

"The students set their own goals on the basis of the results," he said. "The computer provides instruction and manages the program."

Bitter said students may be uncomfortable when they begin working on the computer.

"Once the program is worked out, the student has no problem with the computer," Bitter said.

This program gives an alternative to students who may lack the skill required for more advanced math programs, he said.

These students previously would have been forced to enroll in basic math courses at junior colleges, Bitter said.

The grant is based on a study done by the National Conference Board of Mathematics, he said.

"The study showed the need for basic math courses increased 75 percent from 1975 to 1980," Bitter said.

He said the University could not provide for an increase in the number of math classes offered to students because of a lack of funding and instructors.

A pilot study conducted by Apple computers in 1980 revealed that computers can be used to improve mathematics instruction.

"The model of the program is similar to a health spa," he said. "The student goes in, is tested, and sets his own individual goals."

He said the program is designed for freshman and sophomore students who plan to become teachers.

"Two years research will be done to see if the program is effective," he said. "If it is, the program will be dissimulated by early 1988."

Deines' silent leadership not unnoticed by coaches

By JERRY BROWN
Assistant Sports Editor

This Saturday at Tucson's McKale Center, forward Jim Deines will slip on his ASU basketball uniform for the final time. The occasion will pass without much fanfare.

It is unlikely that his uniform number will be retired, or that a plaque recording his accomplishments will be installed on the Activity Center concourse.

His career totals, which include averages of 8.7 points per game and 6.1 rebounds per contest this season, will not challenge school records.

But Jim Deines, as the saying goes, came to play basketball every night he laced up his size 14½ Nikes.

Forced to play out of position — center — during much of his last two seasons, Deines drew the defensive assignment on players like A.C. Green, Deditief Schrempf, Wayne Carlander and Blair Rasmussen.

And in a sport that demands a tremendous vertical jump, Deines spent a good deal of his four-year career horizontal. Whether bearing the brunt of oncoming fastbreaks in hopes of drawing an offensive foul or diving after loose balls he claimed in the name of ASU, Deines used his most potent weapon — sheer hustle — to the utmost.

"He played with more intensity on the floor than anyone. He is great to watch," said Ned Wulk, ASU coach for 25 years, the last during Deines' freshman season. "He's improved tremendously and has had an outstanding career."

"When I think of Jim Deines, I think of a player that works harder than anyone I've ever coached," said Deines' present mentor, Bob Weinbauer. "I could never ask anything more of him than he's already given."

Deines, who hasn't lost the deep drawl he brought with him from Springdale, Ark., four years ago, attributes his style of play to his high school coach.

"Even in high school, I was the same kind of player," Deines said. "I had more bruises at the end of the game than anybody. I was always hurting someplace."

Deines came to ASU in 1981, the year after the Devils, led by Alton Lister, Lafayette "Fat" Lever and Sam Williams, finished 24-4 and went to the NCAA tournament.

With Williams and Lister graduating, Wulk needed help in the front court. And the skinny freshman who had never been away from home for more than a weekend was asked to contribute in a hurry.

He did not disappoint.

"That year Fat Lever was the only starter coming back," Wulk said. "Deines really came on for us. By midseason, he was starting and playing well. He progressed faster than we thought."

Deines had considered other schools, such as Louisiana Tech and LSU, before deciding to come to Tempe.

"I'd never been further west than Utah (where he spent a week) in my life," Deines said. "I was homesick for the first three weeks, but then I said to myself 'Look, you're not going home, so get used to it.'"

"When I left home the temperature was 10 degrees below zero," Deines said. "And when I got here, it was 70 degrees. I knew right away I made the right choice."

Both Wulk and Weinbauer went to great lengths to bulk Deines up, listed liberally in the media guide at 210 pounds, a weight Deines also claims is accurate. It was a futile undertaking from the start.

"We thought we could beef him up, but he kept playing it all off," Wulk said. "He lost it all by the end of the year."

"We tried everything to put some weight on him, but it just slides back off," Weinbauer said. "I wish I had that problem. I look at food and gain three pounds."

Deines can't figure it out either. "I was on a protein diet where I had to lift weights and drink chocolate protein junk," Deines said. "I lost seven pounds."

Undaunted, Deines drew the defensive assignment against the Pac-10 elite. And although guarding Schrempf, Green and Carlander was no picnic, Deines said he met his toughest test when ASU traveled to Japan for a tournament last December.

"Xavier McDaniel of Wichita State was the toughest player I've ever guarded," he said. "He really had some great moves."

Deines' free throw shooting was a chink in his armor during his first three years. He shot just 49 percent from the line over three years.

This year he is shooting almost 58 percent. Determination strikes again.

Deines said the highlight of his career came when ASU qualified for the National Invitational Tournament in his sophomore season. The Devils lost in the second round to Texas Christian 78-76 in a game Deines thought they should have won.

"We should have beaten TCU. That would have put us up against Nebraska," he said. "We would have had a real chance if we won that one."

Deines has had some discussions with people in Italy about playing there next year, and Weinbauer said the Continental Basketball Association is also a possibility. But Deines wants to do one thing for certain — graduate.

"I'm about 17 hours away now," said Deines, a liberal arts major. "But I want to see how far I can take basketball first."

Although Deines has spent much of his career sweeping courts around the Pac-10 with his uniform, it is a good bet that whatever he chooses to do from this point on, he will land on his feet.

Coach Brown's last stand: a final plea to the powers that be

Jerry Brown
Asst. Sports Editor

Well, midterms are out of the way — back to important things.

The coach campaign seems to be steaming along quite nicely, thank you. It's been a month since everybody's favorite sidewinder headed for Detroit. (I wonder if they were showing Darryl around the Silverdome when the roof collapsed yesterday. The ultimate editorial statement.)

But I haven't heard word one from the big guns over at the Activity Center. Dick Tamburo must have qualified for a free trip to Hawaii by now. Talk about a frequent flier.

You'd figure they might at least have gotten on the horn to give me a buzz, but no. Not even a careless whisper so far.

With people dropping like flies in the coach derby, I figure there's no time like the present. I'm the man they're looking for, but my pleas seem to be falling on deaf ears.

Here are a few of my 27 reasons why I should coach the ASU football team:

•Reason No. 7 — Punctuality. I have missed only one day in my two years at ASU. I usually make it to my classes, too and sometimes I'm even on time. I got one of those combination alarm clock/telephone/radios and it works like a charm.

•Reason No. 16 — Halftime speeches. Used to be one of my weak points, but after watching a few episodes of "Hill Street Blues," I'm ready to roll. Sure, I'll have to make some changes. I can't very well scream, "Let's be careful out there!" and expect aggressive play in return. Perhaps I'll pick Gary Busey as an assistant coach. What an actor.

•Reason No. 1 — Women. I can't tell you how many times I was called a chauvinist for comments about women in my last column. Right after they were done screaming, they asked, "Would you really make a quarter of a million dollars if you were named coach?" As soon as I said yes, I was invited to a hot tub party and named a judge in time the other team scores on ASU. I will do push-ups on the high mat in place of Sparky. We better have a helluva defense, 'cuz my record is six. (But they were Marine push-ups.)

And get this: On crucial fourth-down plays at the goal line, I promise to accept the fans' judgment, which will be registered on huge applause-o-meters in the corners of each end zone. How would you make the call?

There's no reason why we shouldn't help each other. You want a winning football team and I want to be disgustingly wealthy. You want to go to the Rose Bowl, I want to own the Rose Bowl.

You want a winning football team and I want to be disgustingly wealthy. You want to go to the Rose Bowl and I want to own the Rose Bowl.

the "Aerobics Teacher of the Year" contest. Broads on parade. I love it.

•Reason No. 2 — Money. I figure if I invest in the right IRA accounts in two or three years, I can start looking for my own island. After ASU wins a couple of Rose Bowls (I'll beat Terry Donahue and UCLA just to rub a little salt in the old wound) I'll be making the pro-am golf circuit and a dais regular on Dean Martin's "Celebrity Roasts." Downing shish kebab with Charlie Callas and Foster Brooks. I can live with it.

•Reason No. 3 — More Money. See reason No. 2.

•Reason No. 11 — Fan satisfaction. Every

Our first game next year is against Michigan State in Lansing, just a few short hours driving time from Detroit. Now I want to be able to tell Mr. Rogers that not only do we have a competent successor, but one who is paid better.

Sure guys, go ahead and talk to Harvey "I won't" Hyde and Al "I wish" Luginbill. Go ahead and ask coaches from Toledo and Tulsa. Tulsa? Come on.

Well Russ, the price tag is up to $275,000 per year and the offer is limited. Sit down with a cold one and think on it. You can pay me now or pay me later.

Hoyas regain No. 1 spot in poll

By The Associated Press

Georgetown and St. John's, who split their regular-season games, split the spoils this week.

The defending NCAA champion Georgetown Hoyas were the unanimous choice for the No. 1 spot in The Associated Press college basketball poll after trouncing St. John's 85-69 and Syracuse 90-63 last week.

But St. John's, which fell to No. 2 in the nation after spending five weeks atop the poll, clinched the Big East Conference title with Georgetown finishing second.

The Hoyas, 27-2 overall and 14-2 in the Big East, held the No. 1 spot from the preseason poll until their one-point loss to St. John's on Jan. 26. This week, after crushing the Redmen, Georgetown regained the top spot by receiving all 60 first-place votes and 1,200 points from the nationwide panel of sportswriters and broadcasters.

St. John's, 25-2 overall and 15-1 in conference play, had 1,127 points.

Big Ten champion Michigan, 23-3, held on to third place with 1,087 points, while Oklahoma, the Big Eight regular-season champion, jumped two places from last week's poll, moving from sixth to fourth with 989 points.

Memphis State, the Metro Conference regular-season champion, fell from fourth to fifth with 937, while North Carolina, one of three teams to tie for the Atlantic Coast Conference regular-season title, jumped from eighth to sixth with 756 points.

Duke, which finished fourth in the ACC after a 78-68 loss to the Tar Heels, grabbed the seventh spot, 11 points behind North Carolina, and Louisiana Tech, the Southland Conference regular-season champion, fell one spot to eighth place with 732 points, 12 more than Georgia Tech, one of the ACC co-champions.

The Top Ten was rounded out by Kansas, second in the Big Eight behind Oklahoma.

Nevada-Las Vegas leads the Second Ten, followed by Virginia Commonwealth, Syracuse, Illinois, Tulsa, Loyola of Illinois, Georgia, North Carolina State, Louisiana State and Southern Methodist.

Louisiana State, 19-8, is the only new team in the Top Twenty, replacing Arizona, 20-9, which lost Pac-10 Conference games to Washington and UCLA last week.

Last week's Second Ten was Kansas, Syracuse, Southern Methodist, Georgia, Tulsa, North Carolina State, Virginia Commonwealth, Illinois, Arizona and Loyola, Ill.

Southern Methodist, which had been ranked as high as second during the season, fell from 13th to 20th after losing Southwest Conference games to Texas Tech and Houston.

Lady netters capture BYU Invitational, top Grand Canyon

By BRAD HALVORSEN
Sports Writer

The ASU women's tennis team is on a roll after winning the BYU Invitational last weekend and scoring its fifth straight 9-0 victory Tuesday with a victory over Grand Canyon at the Whiteman Tennis Center.

The 19th-ranked Devils, 11-4, have beaten the Antelopes twice this year in love matches.

"I just hope we're smart enough to realize that the competition has not been that great," said ASU coach Sheila McInerney, whose team faces No. 1 Stanford and No. 2 Southern California this weekend.

"I told them to go out (against Grand Canyon) and concentrate as best as possible. By concentrating and playing well, we'll improve for the weekend."

No. 1 netter Sheri Norris came the closest to dropping a set against the Antelopes, falling behind Jo Murto 3-1 and 5-4.

"I guess I didn't warm up enough or something," Norris said. "But once I got going I played better. I knew if I kept enough balls in I would win."

Norris stormed back to a 7-5, 6-2 victory. Norris has played Murto, a former ASU student, several times and has never lost.

Carol Coparanis, Beth Smigel and Jane Paulson all won love-sets on their way to straight-set victories.

No. 2 Coparanis defeated Canyon's Lynda Whitman 6-0, 6-2; No. 4 Smigel topped Lynne Rabe 6-0, 6-1; and No. 5 Paulson smashed Lisa Alfano 6-0, 6-2.

"I thought it was a lot easier this time (compared to the teams' first meeting at Grand Canyon) because we've had a lot of matches behind us," Paulson said.

At No. 3 singles, Kristi McCormick defeated Linda Bolan 6-4, 6-2, and at No. 6, Kay Miyagi handled Maggie Sweigart 6-3, 6-1.

Miyagi had not played a singles match since the second match of the year against NAU.

The Devils had no problems in doubles, losing a total of eight games in the three matches.

McInerney gave the normal No. 1 doubles team, Norris-Coparanis, the day off, and Paulson-McCormick stepped in to chalk up a 6-2, 6-0 victory over Whitman-Murto.

Smigel-Therese Arildsen crunched Bolan Alfano 6-2, 6-2 at No. 2, and Janette Smiley-Elise Richman took Rabe-Tali Lee 6-0, 6-2 at No. 3 doubles.

Last weekend at the BYU Invitational in Provo, Utah, the Devils proved that winning isn't everything.

Breezing to victory with 9-0 sweeps over all three opponents, the Devils returned home unsatisfied because they did not have an opportunity to play the tournament's top two teams, No. 11 U of A and No. 17 BYU.

"We were disappointed," McInerney said. "That's why we went there, to play Top 20 teams. They were both ranked ahead of us and it would have been nice to play one of them."

The original bracket paired ASU and BYU in the semifinals, if the teams advanced that far. But the format was switched to a dual match play at the last minute, and ASU drew three of the weaker foes — Nebraska, Cal-Irvine and Iowa.

BYU also won all of its matches, including a 5-4 decision over U of A, but ASU took home the championship due to the final number of matches won (27).

"I was pleased with the way we played," McInerney said.

Beth Smigel won all six of her sets in singles play. Carol Coparanis, Therese Arildsen, Kristi McCormick and Jane Paulson each dropped one set while No. 1 Sheri Norris lost a pair of 4-6 sets.

Men's tennis team loses to defending champion Bruins

By MICHAEL KONZ
Sports Writer

Although the ASU men's tennis team lost to fourth-ranked UCLA 8-1, coach Lou Belken was not completely disappointed with the play of the Sun Devils.

"We didn't play bad," Belken said. "Obviously, we hope to do better than 8-1. They're the defending NCAA champions and they have all their people back. Right now they have a stronger program."

But Belken won't give UCLA too much credit.

"I guess they're a little tougher, but I don't want to concede that," Belken said. "We know we can compete with those teams."

The Bruins' courts had a great deal to do with the outcome of the match, according to Belken.

"UCLA's courts are very slow, whereas our courts are fast," Belken said. "Now there's a place where there is a home-court advantage. They probably have the No. 1 team for matching players and court speed."

"We'll see what happens when they come over here."

ASU had a chance to win three singles matches but only capitalized on one opportunity.

Keith Thomas lost his match in the No. 1 spot after winning the first set and leading 4-2 in the second set.

"In Thomas' case, he was too conservative," Belken said. "He needed to go out and press the other player. He didn't do that."

Stan Perry won the first set of his match but lost the second set after having a match point in a tie-breaker.

Dewey Grattan won his singles match to save the Sun Devils from a shut out. Ironically, Grattan came from behind to win. He defeated Randy Park 3-6, 6-4, 6-3.

In other matches, the score was not indicative of the match.

"Andy Roediger lost 6-0 in the second set, but he lost 4-3 in all of the games," Belken said.

Belken was encouraged by the performance of his lower players.

"You can't be completely pleased because they didn't win," Belken said. "They played pretty good matches, but I feel we're capable of winning at four, five and six (position) against anybody."

ASU lost all three doubles matches to UCLA, but Belken plans to change that.

"Their doubles are stronger," Belken said. "We hope to rectify that."

ASU's doubles program showed signs of becoming stronger at the Pacific Coast Doubles Championship tournament.

The Sun Devil team of Mike Colloca and Brien Sullivan advanced to the round of 16 out of 85 teams.

The ASU teams of Thomas and Roediger, Perry and Jim Baumann, and Jeff Karp and Michael Holten also competed.

Belken said the performance of Colloca and Sullivan helped their chances of playing for ASU.

"They've been asking for an opportunity to break into the lineup," Belken said. "They took advantage of the opportunity. Both of their styles are suited for doubles."

Center receives Plummer's name

The ASU Aquatic Center was renamed the Mona Plummer Aquatic Center by the Board of Regents Friday.

Plummer, an associate athletic director, served as the ASU women's swimming coach for 22 years, between 1957 and 1979.

On June 10, Plummer will be inducted into the Hall of Fame of the National Association of Collegiate Directors of Athletics. She has been in the ASU Athletic Hall of Fame since October 1984.

ASU President J.R. Nelson, who proposed the name change to the Board of Regents, released a statement which said Plummer was an integral part of the ASU athletic department.

"This University is privileged to have the nation's top women's swim coach associated with our athletic department," Nelson said. "Throughout her service as head coach, as associate professor of physical education and as associate athletic director, she has brought pride and distinction to the University."

Troy Crowder, special assistant to Nelson, said the proposal enjoyed tremendous support.

"It was pretty clearly understood that this was a choice that had a great deal of support, especially from the people that dealt with Mona Plummer," Crowder said. "Everyone is delighted."

Under Plummer, the women's swim team won eight national championships. She coached nine Olympians and more than 40 All-Americans and became one of the most successful women's swim coaches in the nation.

Plummer coached the U.S. swim team in the 1973 World University Games in Moscow and was a member of the coaching staff in the 1979 Pan-American games.

From 1977 to 1980, Plummer served on the U.S. Olympic Committee.
