Students may vote on court's limits

By KATY MCGREGOR
Staff Writer

A bill allowing students to vote on defining the jurisdiction of the Associated Students of ASU Supreme Court has been denied immediate consideration by the ASASU Senate.

The bill was referred to the senate's finance committee and will be voted on by the full senate after spring break.

The bill requires a majority senate vote for inclusion on the ballot, and can become law through a majority student vote.

An amendment to the ASASU Constitution which would have had the same effect was defeated last month by the senate.

Amendments require a two-thirds senate vote for approval.

Senate Bill 83, if passed, would limit the supreme court to matters that require interpretation of the ASASU constitution and by-laws.

SB 83 would require any case "involving the principles of federal, state, or constitutional law" be denied jurisdiction by the ASASU court.

The bill would place proposed changes in the court's jurisdiction on the spring 1985 election ballot and allow ASU students to decide the matter.

Because of the concern surrounding similar bills in the past, Eddie Goitia, senator from the College of Business Administration, suggested it should be "the right of the students to vote on it."

In other senate action, a senate petition was sent to Betty Turner Asher, vice president for student affairs, requesting her office to formulate and initiate a program to provide special housing for married couples and newly arrived foreign students.

No housing is available for couples during spring and fall semesters.

The senate also approved $810 to send nine students to the California conference of the model United Nations.

Concerning upcoming senate elections, a "precinct idea" will be used to assist ASU students voting for senators for the first time, said Nancy Parks, vice president of campus affairs.

Tulsa coach picked for ASU job Inks one-year contract

By TOM BLODGETT
Sports Editor

John Cooper, head football coach at the University of Tulsa, was named Thursday as the coach at ASU, ending a month-long search to replace Darryl Rogers.

"Naturally I'm very happy," said Cooper, who received a one-year contract with a five-year verbal commitment. "Arizona State has had some great coaches with Dan Devine, Frank Kush and Darryl Rogers."

Cooper, 47, compiled a 57-31 record at Tulsa. His teams have won or shared the Missouri Valley Conference championship the last five years, and have had only one losing season — the first one in 1977 — during his tenure.

"My first year was just horrible," Cooper said with his slight southern drawl. "We went 3-8, but after that we went out and got nine (junior college) transfers and turned it around. We were the NCAA's most improved team."

Before taking the Tulsa job in December 1976, Cooper was an assistant for 14 years, making stops at Oregon State, UCLA, Kansas and Kentucky.

A bleary-eyed Cooper, wearing a jacket with a Sparky emblem attached to the lapel, was introduced to Valley media Thursday at a press conference, along with his teary-eyed wife Helen.

"I actively pursued this job," Cooper said. "I called Dick Tamburo the day it opened up and let him know I was interested."

"Tulsa was good to me, but I have no regrets about leaving. I made a decision. Let's get on with it."

But it was in the last couple weeks Cooper's name started coming out as a candidate.

Cooper said he received a call Wednesday from Tamburo. He and his wife then flew to Denver to meet with Tamburo and ASU President J. Russell Nelson.

Cooper said he then flew to Phoenix, his first visit ever to the city, to meet with the search committee.

Search committee chairman Albert McHenry, an electrical engineering professor, said the committee met last night at about 11 p.m. and voted unanimously to recommend Cooper.

"About the only ones who aren't going to be happy that we've made a choice are the airlines," Tamburo said. "I won't have to be flying in and out anymore."

Cooper's name often was overshadowed by those of other coaches reportedly in contention for the job. Among the coaches who turned ASU down were UCLA's Terry Donahue, Brigham Young's LaVell Edwards, Virginia's George Welsh and West Virginia's Don Nehlen.

Former Tulsa coach John Cooper shows where his allegiance now lies at a press conference introducing him as the new ASU football coach.

The fact that ASU talked to these coaches before deciding upon him did not bother him, Cooper said.

"A lot of people dated Helen before I got married to her," he said jokingly.

He said many factors attracted him to ASU.

"Just about everything, really — the school, the facilities, the weather, the administration," he said. "I haven't seen much but when I was driving through here."

"If you open your eyes, you've got to be impressed."

Originally from Tennessee, Cooper graduated from Iowa State, where he was a three-year letterman at tailback and safety before serving in the Army. He and his wife have two children: John, 22, and Cindy, 16.

Senators work on budget freeze

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate Budget Committee, working on a budget freeze for 1986, voted Thursday to deny both hospitals and doctors any increase in Medicare payment rates next year.

But on a 20-0 vote, the Republican-controlled committee rejected President Reagan's recommendations to raise costs to Medicare patients.

The vote paved the way for another possible vote later in the day on a proposal to cancel next year's Social Security cost-of-living increases.

Before turning to the medical program for the elderly, the committee also voted to permit Medicaid costs to rise with inflation rather than accept the cuts Reagan recommended.

The panel also rejected Reagan's call to eliminate federal aid for mass transit and abolish the Urban Development Action Grant program and the Economic Development Administration.

Committee aides said in two days of voting the committee had found $8.7 billion in deficit savings from domestic programs — more than $11 billion less than Reagan requested in the same programs.

Thai army successfully pushes Viet troops from attack position

BANGKOK, Thailand (AP) — The Thai army said it drove Vietnamese troops from a line of hills inside the border Thursday, repelling the largest single incursion into Thai territory in the six years since the Vietnamese invaded neighboring Cambodia.

Moving behind air strikes, they ousted the Vietnamese from positions they had taken for a planned attack on the last major Cambodian rebel base, Thai military officers reported.

Thailand placed long stretches of its border with Cambodia on full alert. The army sent reinforcements to the area of the three-day battle.

Between 800 and 1,000 Vietnamese soldiers pushed into the hills approximately two miles across the frontier to try to gain the high ground in Thailand and encircle the Tatum camp, which is perched on a cliff just inside Cambodia and surrounded by land mines.

Army spokesman Maj. Gen. Naruedol Dejpradiyuth said Thai forces killed approximately 100 Vietnamese since the incursion began Tuesday in Surin and Sisaket provinces in the northern border area. Thai casualties were put at 18 dead and 36 wounded.

Checkpoint shutdown protested; senators ask to meet with Reagan

TUCSON (AP) — Authorities quelled a protest at the Naco border checkpoint Wednesday, hours after a group of senators asked President Reagan for a meeting to discuss the deteriorating situation.

Naco Mayor D.L. Romo said approximately 2,500 persons swarmed along the border to protest Saturday's decision to close the checkpoint "for the first time in history."

The federal government closed nine stations, including Naco, Saturday after reports surfaced that Mexican drug traffickers were planning to kidnap or attack U.S. customs inspectors. In addition to Naco, checkpoints at Sasabe and the Marley Gate pedestrian crossing in Nogales were closed.

Senators from border states, including Arizona, asked Reagan for a chance to discuss possible emergency measures that could be taken to restore order. They also said they are concerned about the administration's methods of waging a war against drug traffickers.

Bodies of 1982 political hostages found in Zimbabwe jungle graves

HARARE, Zimbabwe (AP) — The remains of a young American and two other foreign tourists kidnapped by rebels in 1982 have been positively identified, Prime Minister Robert Mugabe announced Thursday.

The three identified men and three other foreign tourists were kidnapped as political hostages and marched into the jungle at gunpoint July 23, 1982.

The remains were among skeletons found in three graves last week in the western Lupane district of troubled Matabeleland province.

The prime minister said in a statement released at the news conference officials of Joshua Nkomo's opposition party "had knowledge of both the abduction and the killing of the six tourists." He said he based his charge on information from two captured members of the kidnap gang and Lupane villagers.

According to Mugabe, the gang members also said five of the victims had been shot dead and the sixth strangled three days after they were captured.

Nkomo and his opposition party, the biggest in Zimbabwe, deny government charges that they direct the rebels.

Mugabe said the kidnappers had demanded that the government release two former Nkomo commanders in return for the tourists.

WE ARE CHRISTIANS ONLY

Our lives often become cluttered with complexity — burdened with increasing demands and filled with the latest gimmicks and gadgets. At times like these we often long for simplicity — a shedding of the excess baggage that keeps us from enjoying life at its fullest.

Restoring a sense of balance often means reducing our life to its essentials — re-evaluating, recovering lost ideals and a commitment to pursuing life in a different way.

This is also true in Christianity — and this is the common goal of the people of the Tempe church of Christ. We are seeking to restore in the 20th century the uncluttered simplicity of first century Christianity.

We believe that by following the Bible as our only authority for faith and practice we can reduce Christianity to its original purity and essentials.

We seek to "continue steadfastly in the apostle's teachings" as the first Christians did (Acts 2:42).

Let's be Christians only is our only goal. We share an ideal — a commitment to restoring the spirit and practices of the first Christians.

Come share the ideal — we are

Student Health Center aids in combat against flu

By PATRICK J. KUCERA
Staff Writer

A number of students have reported having a virus with flu-like symptoms, but the number of students who have the virus is not a significant increase over last year, the director of Student Health said.

"We have had an increase in students who have been coming in with a flu-like virus (since the flu season began)," Dr. Monty Roth said. "But most of them have not had any complications."

Roth said the symptoms the virus produces are similar to those caused by influenza, but a positive diagnosis of the flu cannot be determined.

"In diagnosing the flu, you have to do a viro-culture, and that can be done through the state," he said. "But we have seen many cases that would appear to be the flu."

He said the local communities are reporting cases of the flu and similar viruses, but was not sure about Tempe.

"I know there have been cases reported in Phoenix," Roth said.

However, he said the number of "flu-like" cases coming in to the Student Health Center is not a substantial increase.

"I don't think it is an unusually significant number," Roth said.

If a student begins showing signs of the virus, Roth said the Student Health Center will provide the student with ways of making him "comfortable." These may include use of analgesics or antihistamines.

He said the anti-flu medication stock at the Health Center is not recommended for general use, but suggested that all students who fall into high-risk categories of influenza obtain preventative flu shots prior to the season.

"We have tried to push for students to get their flu shots," Roth said.

However, he said the number of students who fall into the high-risk categories is a "relatively small percentage" of the entire University population.

Symptoms of the flu-like virus includes a sore throat, runny or stuffy nose, headache and a moderate fever, Roth said.

In some serious cases, a person with the virus may develop complications like pneumonia, he said.

"The major thing is to be aware that if you don't feel better in a day or two, you might want to check for complications," Roth said.

He said he expects the current flu season to last for only a few more weeks.

"I suspect it will not last more than another three weeks, at the most," he said. "It is a very seasonal disease."

In a related note, Roth said the Student Health Center set up a booth on Cady Mall Thursday to offer students free inoculations for rubella and rubeola.

The decision to establish the booth on the mall stemmed from recent reports that severe outbreaks of the diseases are occurring across the country, he said. Tucson Amphitheatre High School is the latest in a series of schools reporting an outbreak.

Roth said the number of students who have taken advantage of the free shots was "a good showing."

police report

Police said an ASU student told them a man followed her through the parking lot west of McClintock Hall late Wednesday, talking to himself and using vulgar language towards her. He was described as a tall, thin man with short blond hair, wearing a light-colored shirt and jeans.

In other activity, University Police reported the following incidents in the 24-hour period ending at 5:30 a.m. Thursday:

- A black 1980 Motobecane moped with gold trim valued at $1,000 was stolen from Lot 30 sometime Wednesday morning, police said.
- Vandals pulled the locks from three lockers in the Physical Education Building East sometime between Tuesday and Wednesday, day, police said. An employee reported finding the locker handles with master locks in a trash can and the lockers empty. Police do not know the type of instrument used to remove the locks from the door. Police said a staff member at the Physical Education East Building told them he did not know whether or not the lockers were being used. Damage was estimated at approximately $100.

- Two tires and their rims valued at $180 were stolen from a 1977 yellow Datsun truck in Lot 17 early Saturday, police said.
- A 4-by-8-foot map of Arizona valued at $120 was stolen from a wall in the Tourist Information Center in the MU sometime between Feb. 27 and March 1, police said.

- Two backpacks were stolen from the shelves at the ASU Bookstore Wednesday, police said. A blue backpack with silver straps valued at $35 was taken at approximately 10:30 a.m. The backpack, which contained a calculator, a Timex watch and text books, had been left unattended for 10 minutes. A dark brown backpack valued at $62 was also taken sometime between 3 p.m. and 4:15 p.m.

Youthful stand-up preacher preferred over Jed, Cindy

Editor:

I would like to share my perception of an event that occurred on campus last Friday (March 1). I went to see for the first time the Jed and Cindy exhibition. When I got there Cindy was on duty and the situation was as expected; she was performing her act of moral outrage and many students were there for the carnival atmosphere. I found it harmless fun but quickly boring. I did notice one young man who was trying to hold a dialogue with Cindy about the true message of the Bible, but his attempt was in vain. Cindy was there for demagoguery and not discourse.

I wandered off, but in passing back that way I saw that the young man had gained center stage. His whole demeanor and message were in stark contrast to Cindy's. He didn't see the message of religion as a condemnation of others for their "sins." Instead he quoted passages from the Bible that spoke of humans loving and cooperating with one another. He didn't scream at people but talked to them. And they listened instead of jeering.

Cindy had lost control and from out of the crowd appeared Jed. In a dramatic gesture

Jed told the crowd that if they wanted to listen to this guy go ahead, but I'm going over here to preach! He stormed off a few feet and began his buffoonery. He obviously was expecting the crowd to follow him and leave the young preacher embarrassed. But to my initial amazement and then joy only a few of us deserted the young man. We stayed to hear the young man say his "peace," a message of love and cooperation.

I am not a religious person in the traditional sense, but I certainly agree with the values the young man was speaking for. I cannot see any value in the message of hate that comes from Jed and Cindy. As an old-fashioned, outdated liberal concerned with social justice, it warmed my heart to see the students of today reject the abusive irrationality of Jed to stay and listen to a quiet, unassuming young man preach a true gospel. Earlier Cindy had used the analogy of Jesus and the Pharisees; but I wonder if she and Jed realize who was more like Jesus and who was more like the Pharisees that afternoon last week.

Women: please read this...

Editor:

I am sharing my experience in hope that someone facing a decision about abortion might read this. I never thought I would have to make that decision. I was always careful — I had an IUD inserted. Unfortunately, I fell on the 2 percent side of its 98-percent effectiveness rate. With my condition confirmed, my secure little college student world was turned upside down. I didn't know if the fetus inside me was a living soul or just a mass of duplicating cells. I was afraid of my parents' reaction. I was afraid of the effects that bearing a child would have on my education and career. I was afraid of the changes that my body had already begun to make. I was afraid of what people would think of me. Confused, afraid and alone, I chose what seemed to be the easy way out.

Many women today claim that they have been victimized by society and the restrictions that it places on them. Changes have been made — there's a lot more freedom of choice these days. But I've learned that sometimes freedom can be a real misnomer. I have never felt more victimized in my life than that moment when, on my back, drugged and helpless, hearing the whirring of the suction machine, knowing what was happening, wanting to stop it but unable to. I felt a part of me being taken away forever.

I was a victim of a society that encourages sex on demand — on television, in the music, in the magazines, in the styles, everywhere. I was a victim of a society that promotes sex without responsibility, a society that puts more value on education and career than on the gift of life. A society where it is more convenient to have an abortion than to have one's wisdom teeth pulled. Cheaper, too. I financed mine on my student loan.

Just a few extras for my learning experience: a good friend on my dorm floor became pregnant the same week that I did.

She opted not to have an abortion. She had been through that experience and said she could never do it again and live with herself. I thought that she must be emotionally weak; I wouldn't have that sort of problem. I had the unwanted privilege of seeing her complete her pregnancy, maintain her 4.0 GPA, and give birth to a beautiful little girl who is in kindergarten somewhere by now.

When I made that decision six years ago, I never imagined that someday I would meet, fall in love with, and marry a paraplegic. Our chances of having our own child are slim at best. Before even getting on the list with a state adoption agency we will have to be married three years, then approved, then wait another few years for delivery. I was informed that having a physically handicapped spouse "substantially reduces" our chances of obtaining an infant. I don't cherish the realization that I may very well have killed the only baby I will ever conceive.

If you are facing the crucial decision of whether or not to have an abortion, I implore you to choose life for that baby that's growing inside of you. Going through with an unplanned pregnancy may be the most noble and selfless act that you ever do. In a society that says "me" first, you can give the gift of life to that child, and the gift of a child to a couple who wants nothing more than to give it a happy and loving home. Please consider this; I sincerely wish I had.

This letter may sound as if I'm plagued with guilt and remorse because of my actions. I'm not... now. I know now that I have a God who forgives (If we confess our sins, He is faithful and just to forgive us our sins and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness — 1 John 1:9). And all we have to do is believe (Romans 3:22). That's grace.

The feminist fraud: no God, no marriage

Rosanne Dupras
News Editor

The grande dame of pushy broads is coming to town tonight, and even though spring break is upon us, I bet some of you will postpone your appointments with merriment in order to catch the show.

That's right. The woman who began her rigorous jungle journey through the dense forests of "oppression" and led American women tripping after her has decided to lumber her way back to Arizona, a place she once called "enemy territory" because of its choice to deny ratification of the Equal Rights Amendment.

I'm referring of course to Miss Betty Friedan, co-founder of the $6.4-million budgeted, 250,000-member National Organization for Women, and of the National Women's Political Caucus.

Besides her claim to be spokesman for the nation's women, what really grates is Betty's insatiable appetite for destruction. She has already made great strides in destroying marriage, the family, and other oppressive, outmoded institutions. But this creature knows no rest. The job will not be done until she also captures the sympathy — and strength — of men as well.

By "men," I don't really mean men. I mean guys like Phil "Is the caller there?" Donahue. You know — the kind of fellows who go along with the feminist fraud in order not to seem "insensitive" or "chauvinistic," at the price of their manhood. Some ASU men may have gotten their feelings hurt when Sister Cindy told them they were a "bunch of wimps." But maybe there's some truth to that charge.

It's pretty limp-wristed for men to buy into the sloppily-wrapped arsenal of feminism Friedan and her clones have suckered them into.

But, in order to be open-minded and, of course, sensitive, why don't we take a look at just what we've been buying into? Here are some of the things Betty and her girls have been saying since their rise to stardom:

• "We must destroy love... Love promotes vulnerability, dependence, ... and prevents the full development of woman's human potential by directing all her energies outward in the interest of others."

— Women's Liberation, "Notes from the Second Year."

• "No deity will save us, we must save ourselves. Promises of immortal salvation or fear of eternal damnation are both illusory and harmful."

— "Humanist Manifesto II," signed by Freidan.

• "If we lose this struggle, we will have little hope in our own lifetime of saving our right to abortion..."

— Freidan, in a NOW-ERA fund-raising letter, March 1978.

• "Marriage has existed for the benefit of men and has been a legally sanctioned method of control over women... the end of the institution of marriage is a necessary condition for the liberation of women. Therefore, it is important for us to encourage women to leave their husbands and not to live individually with men... we must work to destroy (marriage)."

— "The Document," declaration of feminism.

• "As for divorce, Dr. Bane said she sees it as a 'safety valve' for families. 'It makes for better family life,' she said. 'There's no merit in holding families together just for the sake of it. For this reason, divorce improves the quality of marriages.'"

— Tulsa World, Aug. 21, 1977, Associated Press.

• "By the year 2000 we will, I hope, raise our children to believe in human potential, not God."

— Gloria Steinem, editor of Ms. Magazine, Saturday Review of Education, March 1973.

Now wait a minute. Say it isn't so. These feminist heroines suddenly appear to be rather extreme, sort of radical... almost frightening.

Why, even you career-oriented gals out there may be feeling a bit uncomfortable. You should.

In reading the quotations of Freidan, Steinem and other leading feminists, you discover the radical goals they seek — elimination of belief in God, man-woman love, and marriage. By following these mad-women, American females and their "caring" male counterparts believe they are promoting "equality." In actuality, they are destroying the only things that can lead them to true happiness.

Credibility of letter writer called into question

Editor:

Mr. Hussein Mukaled, a Lebanese student, states in a recent letter (March 3) that the solution to the Lebanese crisis is for Israel to "Get the hell out right away..."

Last semester the slogan of the Lebanese Students Association was "Israel Out of Lebanon." Now that Israel is completing its withdrawal from that country, last semester's slogan is obsolete: now Israel must "Get the hell out right away..."

Yet even as Israel withdraws farther south, to less defensible positions, its army is attacked by Shi'ite Moslem terrorists — at the urging of Lebanese President Amin Gemayel!

Why do the Lebanese demand that the Israelis withdraw, then attack them as they do?

Mr. Mukaled, I am in no position to question civil rights abuses you may be aware of personally, but your credibility is not enhanced when you blame Israel alone for the present situation — to the exclusion of the Shi'ites, the PLO, the Syrians and the irresponsibility of your own government.

Research facility to specialize in Chicano studies

By JONATHAN HIGUERA
Staff Writer

The recently approved Hispanic Research Center at ASU may become the leading research institution on Hispanics in the nation, according to the president of Chicano Faculty and Staff.

Business Professor Louis Olivas said the research center has the potential to lead the country in Hispanic research if it is given the proper resources and is effectively managed.

"It will put the University at the cutting edge for research in the Hispanic community," he said. "It will be unique because no other institution has combined the focal points that this one will have."

The Board of Regents approved the research center March 1 at its last meeting.

Olivas said the center's focal points are Chicano Arts, Chicano Science and Technology, Chicano Policy and Chicano Ownership.

He said ASU is rapidly becoming known for its work in specialized research and that "the center will only add to that prestige."

Education Professor Ray Padilla, who is on the committee to find a director for the center, said it is a historic development for ASU and the state.

"The issues that will be researched will be central not only to the Hispanic community but to society as a whole," he said. Padilla said the effort to bring a research center to ASU was well organized and carefully thought out.

"In any minority enterprise there is a certain amount of skepticism," he said. "But as the issues become clear and focused, even the skeptics will come around."

Padilla said a national search for a director is being conducted.

"It is truly an open search for the best and the brightest," he said.

Padilla said the closing date for applications is April 15.

"What we're doing is planting seeds, and sometimes they take time to ripen," he said. A business symposium for the center is tentatively scheduled for April 29.

He said the purpose of the symposium will be to analyze the needs of the Hispanic business community.

"If we're not benefiting the community," Olivas said, "then we would only be self-fulfilling."

Miguel Montiel, professor of social work, is the acting director of the center.

"My intent is to lay some groundwork for the person coming in," he said.

Montiel said whoever is selected as director will have an effect on the center's growth.

"The setting is right and administrative support has been good," he said.

The ASU Hispanic Research Center, located in the College of Liberal Arts, will work closely with the U of A Research Center to see that research projects aren't duplicated.

The two research centers will also develop collaborative projects.

"They were very supportive of our center," Montiel said.

Olivas said the ASU research center is interdisciplinary.

"The center is not limited to Hispanic faculty," he said. "It's open to any faculty member who is interested in research focused at Hispanics."

Montiel said he would like to see activities initiated and also that conferences on immigration and humanities are being planned.

Survey shows increase in funding for students

By the College Press Service

A new survey shows that state grant funding for college students increased in 47 states this year, bringing a "banner year" for state-supported grant programs.

Much of the increase, moreover, reflects student pressure on state governments to improve higher education funding, aid experts report.

"This year is exceptional in the fact that all but three states increased their grant awards to students," said Jerry Davis, co-director of the National Association of State Scholarship and Grant Programs' (NASSGP) annual survey of state student aid funding.

This year $1.4 billion in state grant money was awarded to more than 1.5 million students, the survey shows, a 17.4 percent increase over last year's level.

Most of that money — 84 percent — will fund so-called need-based grant programs which award funds on the basis of student financial needs.

Overall, the survey says, states will fund $1.2 billion in need-based grants, up 15 percent from last year's $10.3 billion.

Since 1980, Davis said, state funding of need-based grant programs has shot up over 42 percent, increasing the number of grant recipients by 15.4 percent.

Such dramatic increases "certainly help a lot of students and provide greatly needed support" in the midst of declining federal grant money, says Dallas Martin, executive director of the National Association of Student Financial Aid Administrators (NASFAA).

The increase in state grant monies is particularly important because it comes at a time when federal grant programs are at their weakest level ever, Martin says.

Martin and other aid experts worry about the increased federal emphasis on loans over grants is forcing many students to incur educational debts they can't repay.

ASU prof writes text on resisting sales

By MELISSA OLSON
Staff Writer

An ASU psychology professor's book about how not to be taken in by common sales techniques will be distributed nationally in April.

"Influence," the first book by Robert Cialdini, 39, is being distributed in a paperback for "popular readers" and a textbook.

"The book is all about recognizing and resisting powerful psychological pressures that cause us to buy things we normally would not," he said.

An ASU psychology instructor is using "Influence" as a supplementary reader in a class this semester, and business and communications instructors have talked about adopting the book in their classes next semester, said Cialdini.

"It tells how us to react and resist the psychological pressures we encounter with ads, salespeople and recruiters," he said.

Cialdini labels such people "compliance professionals," which includes advertisers, fund-raisers, negotiators, lobbyists and con-artists.

"All my life I'd been a pushover to sales people and peddlers, and I began to wonder about the psychology of why some presentations are successful and others are not," he said.

"I spent two and a half years undercover taking training courses for car salesmen, charity organizations, portrait studios and ad agencies."

Six common techniques were used effectively in the activities of each of these "compliance professions," he said.

One chapter of his book is devoted to each of these techniques with a section at the back of each chapter on how to combat them, Cialdini said.

The technique of reciprocation is when companies give us free samples of their product or if someone does a favor for us, he said.

"We feel obligated to give back to people what we have gotten from them," Cialdini said. "The need to give something in return is a rule in our society."

The techniques of commitment and consistency come into play when we make a stand on something, he said.

Organizations which get us to make a small commitment will return for a larger commitment later, he said.

"People tend to automatically follow an authority's direction, or even the symbols of authority," he said when describing the technique of authority.

Symbols of medical authority on commercials and testimonials, such as that of Robert Young for Sanka coffee, are in this category, said Cialdini.

Social proof and consensus, another technique defined by Cialdini, is similar to the authority technique.

"We often decide our correct behavior by looking at how others are behaving; we tend to say yes to something if others like us are saying yes to the same thing," he said.

This is why advertisements show people waiting outside of a store or pulling a product off the shelves, said Cialdini.

Liking, a technique the Tupperware company has capitalized upon, is based on the principle that we tend to say yes to those we like, said Cialdini.

Tupperware is very successful because they found that we are more likely to buy for and from a friend, said Cialdini.

The final technique found by Cialdini is scarcity, when advertisements emphasize a limited quantity or a limited time offer, he said.

"I bought my last television set that way," Cialdini said. "The salesman said it was the last one for that price."

"Sometimes it's wholly honest to use these techniques, like if a product is really scarce," said Cialdini. "It's only when phony statistics or testimonials abuse these tactics that it's dishonest."

Liberal Arts College to give English exam

The Liberal Arts Proficiency Exam will be administered to students from 12:30 to 2:30 p.m. on April 3 in the Language and Literature Building.

The exam is available to students who completed freshman level English courses, but received a "D" grade.

ASU repairing elevators on campus

By CARRIL MITCHELL
Staff Writer

Two of the elevators in the Language and Literature Building are being upgraded, said Dave Brixen, assistant director of physical plant.

"They're not in very good operating condition," Brixen said.

He said the elevators are not dangerous, and if they were found to be unsafe they would be shut down.

According to Ann Bolser, administrative assistant at Hayden Library, the Language and Literature Building isn't the only building that could use elevator repairs. Since Wednesday night, the elevators in Hayden Library are not responding when the button is pushed in the lobby, she said.

"I asked them to notify me when they will fix them but they usually don't. I just come in one day and they're fixed," she said.

Brixen said the elevators are inspected annually by the state and if any are found unsafe they are repaired.

He said the physical plant receives orders for repairs, and then gives the orders to one of the contracted elevator companies.

KAET council airing gets positive response

By TOM STINSON
Staff Writer

Public response to KAET-TV's decision to broadcast the Phoenix City Council hearing for the Camelback Esplanade project was positive, according to the producer of the program.

The meeting, which lasted five hours and 45 minutes, was broadcast live Wednesday evening.

The development site is planned for 24th Street and Camelback Road in Phoenix and was the only subject discussed at the meeting.

"With every program I produce I get telephone calls and letters either complimenting or complaining about the show," said Dan Durrenberger, manager of production for Channel 8.

"People called in and complained about what the speakers had to say," he said. "But all of the comments about our coverage of the meeting were praiseworthy."

"Both sides of the issue were very complimentary (to Channel 8 about the coverage)," he said. "The same can be said for the mayor's office and the (Phoenix) City Council and on down."

Phoenix City Councilman Ed Clark said the coverage reduced the number of people who attended the meeting.

"At the last meeting we held, at the Palace West (Theatre), 1,700 people came," Clark said. "Only six to seven hundred people came (Wednesday evening)."

Clark said the drop in attendance was due to people who wanted to see the meeting, but didn't want to participate.

He said 300 people usually attend city council meetings, but Symington Company, the Camelback Esplanade developer, has caused larger public interest by spending "a million dollars" for advertising.

"(The project) has notoriety because of the advertising," Clark said. "Without it, Channel 8 probably would not have covered (the meeting)."

Clark said broadcasting the council meeting provided a public service, but also considered the effects the broadcast would have on ratings.

"I think Channel 8 was being responsive to an issue that had the attention of the public," Clark said. "And they did it in a responsible way."

He said the coverage was fair and did not affect the normal process of the meeting.

"I don't think that anybody on the stage or in the audience realized that the television cameras were there after the first five minutes," Clark said. "It was too strong of an issue."

"There was no play acting there," he said. Durrenberger said Channel 8 has covered other large public meetings, beginning with the Phoenix District 6 meetings in April 1984.

"Public meetings are cut-and-dried sort of affairs," he said. "We describe what the meeting is about and then watch the participants," he said. "Television's strength relies on its ability to leave impressions."

Project aids handicapped in finding jobs

By JONATHAN HIGUERA
Staff Writer

Disabled youth from Maricopa County will be able to receive job training and employment links to the business community through a federally funded project coordinated by two faculty members from the department of special education, said one of the co-directors.

Steve Owen, faculty associate and Kay Hartwell, education professor, said they hope Project Interface will improve job opportunities for minority handicapped youth between the ages of 18 to 22.

"We're looking at individuals who traditionally haven't been able to find work," Owen said. "And if they have, it's been at McDonalds or a hospital maintenance type job."

The project offers information to disabled youth through a job bank and will provide computer-assisted training in a variety of skills.

While the project is directed toward minorities, it will accept non-minorities into the program, Owen said.

The job training will emphasize computer skills, which fits into the growing electronic industry in Phoenix, Owen said.

Owen said that in the past, disabled youth were not able to find jobs because of employer bias against them, lack of basic skills and the simple lack of jobs.

He said he will be contacting corporations such as Motorola Inc., Sperry Corporation and Honeywell Inc. to make them aware of Project Interface.

"We're looking for jobs that would have the potential for advancement," Owen said. "We're also looking for jobs that provide benefits."

Owen said he is working on identifying possible participants for the program.

"We've sent out letters to all the districts asking for a recent list of all handicapped graduates."

Owen said the Phoenix Union High School District has responded to his letter, sending a list of 256 disabled youths' names who are high school graduates.

In 1983, Arizona had 4,845 disabled youths enrolled in vocational programs and 2,027 in special education programs, Owen said.

Coach passes 1st ASU press test

By TOM BLODGETT
Sports Editor

Everyone in the room tried to size up the football coach. Just who is John Cooper and what will he do here at ASU are natural questions to ask about the unknown newcomer.

And Tulsa? It isn't exactly UCLA, BYU or West Virginia, all rumored sources of an ASU coach.

"I left a better program at Tulsa than you people may realize," says Cooper, who was introduced Thursday as the new ASU coach.

And just how good is the coach?
"I'm a good coach," he says.

Cooper has numbers to back him up, although his school played third fiddle in the state of Oklahoma.

Cooper's recruiting competition came primarily from Oklahoma State. ASU fans will remember the Cowboys, who thumped the Sun Devils 45-3 last season. They are an easily recognizable major college program; Tulsa is not.

"Out of about 10 recruits, I'd say they got about six," Cooper said. "I think I'm a good recruiter."

Without a wealth of talent, Tulsa remained consistent winners. The Golden Hurricane finished 9-2 in 1978, right after his only losing year — 3-8 in his inaugural campaign. In 1982, Tulsa was 10-1.

As an assistant coach, he worked under Tommy Prothro and Pepper Rodgers, each of whom earned strong reputations in their own right.

Cooper credited several other big names in the business, such as former Arkansas coach Frank Broyles and UCLA mentor Terry Donahue, with helping him land the ASU job.

Cooper seemed an unlikely candidate because he won at Tulsa using a veer offense with the option. ASU officials have said all along they wanted someone who would continue using a pro-set.

But the new coach said he would adjust.

"You have to stay one step ahead of the game," Cooper said. "If I've got good talent and don't adjust, I'm not a very good football coach."

Cooper said he would not hesitate to throw the ball if the talent is there.

"I'm not going to throw if we don't have anyone to catch," he said. "I know your quarterback (Jeff Van Raaphorst) has the reputation of being able to throw the football."

Cooper said he believed his Tulsa teams threw the ball effectively, and would have been throwing the ball more this next season because he had three excellent wide receivers.

He set one stipulation down about passing.

"I don't like to throw to backs," Cooper said. "If you are going to throw the football, I believe you should throw it downfield."

He also said he believes creating excitement is part of the job.

"We will do the unexpected," Cooper said. "We are liable to run on third and long or throw on fourth and short."

Cooper said he will assume the job as soon as possible. However, he has not set up much in the way of timetables for the various tasks he faces.

ASU's assistant coaches were to have met with Cooper Thursday afternoon. Cooper said he will talk to those who might want to stay on here and will definitely bring some assistants with him from Tulsa.

The players were also to have met with the new coach Thursday. Cooper indicated he is not very familiar with the squad yet.

"The players I've heard the most about are Van Raaphorst and (running back) Darryl Clack," he said.

Spring football practice, which was postponed earlier this week, remains on hold.

"I like to work backwards from when school is out with these things," Cooper said. "We will get about 20 sessions in."

"We don't have much contact in spring. We like to teach. We teach, teach, repeat, teach..."

John Cooper Staff photo by Todd Green

A spring scrimmage game will be played, as is conventional in the Midwest, according to Cooper.

Ending the three-year losing streak to the U of A will also be important.

"You've got to live with Arizona," he said. "You've got to beat them."

Devil grid players relieved guessing games finally finished

By JERRY BROWN
Assistant Sports Editor

ASU football players assembled at the press conference naming University of Tulsa coach John Cooper as the new coach of the Sun Devils Thursday morning were both impressed and relieved by the announcement.

"He sounds like a good man to me — he's pretty impressive," junior cornerback Bruce Hill said. "I'm ready to play some ball. Everybody has been keeping in shape until we found out what happened."

"I'm glad it's over," junior linebacker John Knight said. "It seems like it took forever. All we could do was wait and see."

Sophomore quarterback Jeff Van Raaphorst said, "We haven't met him formally, but my first impression is he's a good man. I'm happy with what's happened."

Sophomore safety David Fulcher said the team has been keeping ready and staying on weight programs.

"We're here to win the Pac-10 and the Rose Bowl," Fulcher said. "We're all pointing toward that. If I was worried, I would have been here sweating over what kind of coach he is. But it's not like that. We're ready to get started."

Fulcher, an all-American selection by The Associated Press last season, said he feels he will have to prove himself to the new coach.

"I'm no different from anyone on this team," Fulcher said.

Van Raaphorst said the players are relieved the choice has been made.

"It's really been frustrating," Van Raaphorst said. "There were about 100 names mentioned and they all turned out to be wrong.

"The selection committee kept us completely in the dark about the whole thing, which I think is pretty unfair," Van Raaphorst said. "We were the last ones to know about everything, and I don't necessarily agree with that."

Hill was equally confused.

"First we're told it will only take 10 days to pick someone, and then they say 10 more days," Hill said. "Then this morning we got the word that they had somebody."

Lady netters get stiff weekend challenge from NCAA's elite

By BRAD HALVORSEN
Sports Writer

After winning five straight meets without losing a set, the ASU women's tennis team will be tested this weekend when the Devils host Stanford and Southern California.

The Devils (11-4) take on Stanford Saturday at 1 p.m. and USC Sunday at 11 a.m. Both matches will be played at the Whiteman Tennis Center.

The Cardinal and the Women of Troy have dominated women's collegiate tennis in recent years, combining to win the last seven national titles.

The Cardinal (12-0) top the current national rankings with USC (10-0) right behind. ASU moved up from 19th to 14th in the latest standings.

"In the situation we're in right now, we can only gain from playing these teams," ASU coach Sheila McInerney said. "We have nothing to lose; the pressure's on them."

McInerney said both Stanford and USC have not been threatened in any of their matches this year, clinching every match after singles play.

"They're solid all the way down the lineup," McInerney said. "They switch their players around a lot because there's really not that much difference between them."

McInerney said Stanford has five All-Americans, including Patti Fendick, LeAnn Eldreidge and NCAA individual runner-up Linda Gates.

The Cardinal also have Anna Ivan, one of the top freshman in the country.

USC, McInerney's alma mater, has a young team with several All-Americans and four top freshman. The Trojan's top netters include Cecilia Fernandez and Heliane Steden.

McInerney said her goal for the weekend is not to win, but to put up a good fight.

"We want to be real competitive," McInerney said. "Whether we win or lose is not the important thing. We just want to let these top teams know we won't back down."

Grapplers prepare for nationals

By MICHAEL KONZ
Sports Writer

The party is over for the ASU wrestling team.

After setting two conference records at the Pac-10 championships and winning seven weight classes, the Sun Devils must begin to prepare for the national meet in Oklahoma City, March 14-16.

Coach Bobby Douglas said he has already forgotten about the championship meet.

"The Pac-10 is over as far as I'm concerned," Douglas said. "From a coaching standpoint, the Pac-10 was a stepping stone."

ASU had several goals in mind when they won the team championship, Douglas said.

"The goals we set earlier manifested themselves in the Pac-10 championships," he said. "The guys together as a team won it for each other, the school and Arizona. We need something like this to boost our spirit."

"The kids also know that in the past when we've done well at the Pac-10, we've done well in the national meet."

Not everything was perfect for ASU. The Sun Devils suffered several disappointments.

One disappointment came in the 126-pound weight class. Gary Bairos, seeded No. 1, lost 8-2 to Oregon's Glenn Jarrett, the No. 3 seed.

"Gary Bairos had a bad match," Douglas said. "He got behind and didn't catch up."

Douglas said Jim Lefebvre, who lost to Cliff Berger of Oregon State 4-1 in the semifinals of the 134-pound class, came close to qualifying for the finals.

"If Lefebvre would have had a bit more time (he may have won)," he said. "I'm not disappointed, but he came so close he could have done it."

Jim Gressley's final-round loss to David Lee of Stanford due to riding time was unfortunate, Douglas said. Gressley allowed Lee to gain the top position and could not escape.

But the overall superiority ASU showed means the Sun Devils could have trouble preparing for the national meet.

"After winning like we did, there is a fear that we get up so high that we don't come down to earth," Douglas said.

To combat this, Douglas and the team will change their objectives.

"We'll talk about other goals," Douglas said. "I'll talk to them individually and try to get a reading where their head is at. It's like a teacher finding out where his class is before a test."

ASU's experience will help Douglas.

"(The older wrestlers) know what to expect," Douglas said. "They're a tremendous help. They talk to the (new wrestlers)."

But it is more difficult to judge the mental progress of the older wrestlers, according to Douglas.

"It's hard to tell when the upperclassmen are peaking because you're around them so long," Douglas said.

The freshmen wrestlers, Gressley and Chip Park, are in top form, according to Douglas.

"The freshmen are hungry," Douglas said. "When they're at the top of their game, I don't worry about how they do."

Douglas said the Sun Devils will work on conditioning and technique, but in new ways.

"We're going to try to reach another level of conditioning," Douglas said. "We'll change to primarily wrestling. We never eliminate technique, we just won't work so much on it."

The learning process is over. We're trying to do things on reflex. As soon as something opens, we want to be on it."

Douglas will continue to employ videotapes as he did for the Pac-10 championships.

"I can assure you that these guys spend a minimum of an hour a night on tapes," Douglas said. "Video is like another assistant coach."

Small schools to face women in Sun Devil Open track meet

By MICHAEL KONZ
Sports Writer

The ASU women's track and field team will participate in their first meet of the season at the Sun Devil Open on March 9 at Sun Angel Stadium.

Coach Roger Kerr said the the Sun Devils will compete against smaller colleges.

"The first meet every year is a glorified time trial," Kerr said. "We bring in junior colleges to give them a chance to run on a good track. It gives our runners a chance to run against someone other than their own teammates."

ASU will have competition on an individual basis but will easily win the team competition, according to Kerr.

"As a team, we won't have much competition," Kerr said. "To just go out and run we will have some competition."

Kerr said Phoenix College is strongest in the 3,000-yards and high jump, Scottsdale Community College will challenge in the javelin and Glendale Community College has talent in the shotput and discus.

Injuries will limit several Sun Devils' participation and keep others out of the meet, Kerr said.

Julia Schwinghamer and Cathy Miller will run only in the mile relay because of injuries. Schwinghamer has a toe injury and Miller has a quadricep muscle strain, according to Kerr.

Kerr said long-distance runner Heike Thiem will not run this weekend because of a strained arch. Wendy Sihner will also miss the meet because of injuries.

Lynn Nelson, who finished third in the nation in the 3,000-yards last year, may miss the meet because of a leg injury.

"She has tenderness in her leg," Kerr said. "I haven't made up my mind if she's going to run this weekend."

But Kerr is confident the injuries will not cripple the team.

"Injuries in the long distances do not affect us like injuries in other areas," Kerr said. "We have more depth in the long-distance area."

Thiem has recovered from her injury and Nelson wants to run in spite of her injury, Kerr said.

"I'm just not sure if it's in her best interest," he said.

The ASU women's gymnastics team hosts its final regular season meet Saturday against Arizona, Alabama and New Mexico. The meet will be at 7:30 p.m. at the Activity Center. Both Arizona and Alabama qualified for the NCAA meet last season. The Wildcats are led by Kelly Chaplin and the Crimson Tide by Penny Hauschild.

You're about to make a very important decision. Where should you begin your engineering career? You want to be challenged and work in a stimulating environment. You want to work for a company that will recognize your contributions.

Where will you go? A good choice would be Martin Marietta Denver Aerospace.

Martin Marietta's matrix organization will provide you unusual flexibility in determining your career path and accomplishing your personal goals. Here, your talents will be recognized. Your contributions will be rewarded.

In addition, you'll often be challenged by some of the most interesting assignments available in space and defense systems.

For example, we accepted NASA's challenge to design and develop a backpack propulsion system which would accurately and safely move astronauts through space without the use of a tether. Fifteen years later, on February 7, 1984, the Manned Maneuvering Unit was successfully tested.

This paved the way for the Solar Max repair mission in April '84. Future applications of the MMU are now being considered.

The MMU is just one of many responsibilities we have on the Space Shuttle program. And the Shuttle program is one of hundreds of long-term projects you may experience at Martin Marietta Aerospace.

We also have opportunities available in Baltimore, Maryland; Orlando, Florida; New Orleans, Louisiana; and at Vandenberg AFB on the central California coast.

Now that you're about to step out into the world, consider an engineering career at Martin Marietta Denver Aerospace.

See our representative on campus March 25, 26

After interviewing with our representative, pick up our full color calendar poster of the Manned Maneuvering Unit (pictured here).

Invitation to apply for STATE PRESS EDITORSHIP

The ASU Student Publications Advisory Board is now soliciting applications for the State Press editorship for the Fall Semester 1985.

Applicants for the position of editor:

- must have a cumulative grade index of 2.20 or better;
- must have either two semesters' service on the staff of the State Press or responsible editorial experience with a commercial, college, or university newspaper; and
- must have been a full-time student at ASU for at least the two consecutive semesters prior to applying.

Candidates must also:

- submit at least two letters of recommendation from university faculty members and/or professional journalists;
- list on the application form the titles of all journalism courses completed and the grades earned in those courses;
- submit at least two examples of a news story, feature story, or editorial written for the State Press or another newspaper; and describe on the application form the functions and responsibilities of previous positions held on the staff of the State Press or other newspapers.

Candidates must pick up application forms at the State Press office, Matthews Center North Basement. The completed forms must be typewritten.

The deadline for receipt of applications will be Friday, March 29 at 4 p.m.

Applicants need not be journalism majors; candidates from all disciplines are invited, graduate and undergraduate.
