County confirms measles at ASU; student isolated

By PATRICK J. KUCERA
State Press

An ASU graduate student has contracted measles, and the Student Health Center is trying to locate all students who may have come in contact with him, the director of Student Health Services said Wednesday.

Monty Roth said: "We do have our first case of measles on campus. We did not see this person at the Health Center, but the county health department contacted us (Wednesday)."

Roth did not reveal the student's name. He said nearly 8,000 students still have failed to comply with a University regulation requiring all students to have a measles vaccination or provide evidence they are immune.

Students will not be allowed to pre-register for classes starting April 3 if they do not show proof of immunization, Roth said.

He said the person is a 29-year-old, part-time student who was diagnosed over the weekend, and who may have had limited contact with the student body.

"We've been able to focus in on one class that he attended," Roth said. "However, the people in that group are susceptible to measles."

He said the University is lucky the student was quarantined as soon as he was diagnosed.

"I think we are fortunate it turned out the way it did," Roth said. "This is the way epidemics do get started."

The Health Center is getting "fair" response to the immunization requirement, Roth said, but is concerned that many students will try to get immunized the last day before the deadline.

"We may have a rush before pre-registration that we might not be able to handle," he said.

Roth said the center is trying to contact all students who were in possible contact with the graduate student, and he encourages students who may have had contact to get a shot.

"They should know that if they do have the vaccination within a day or two after exposure, their immunity might build up in time to prevent the illness," he said.

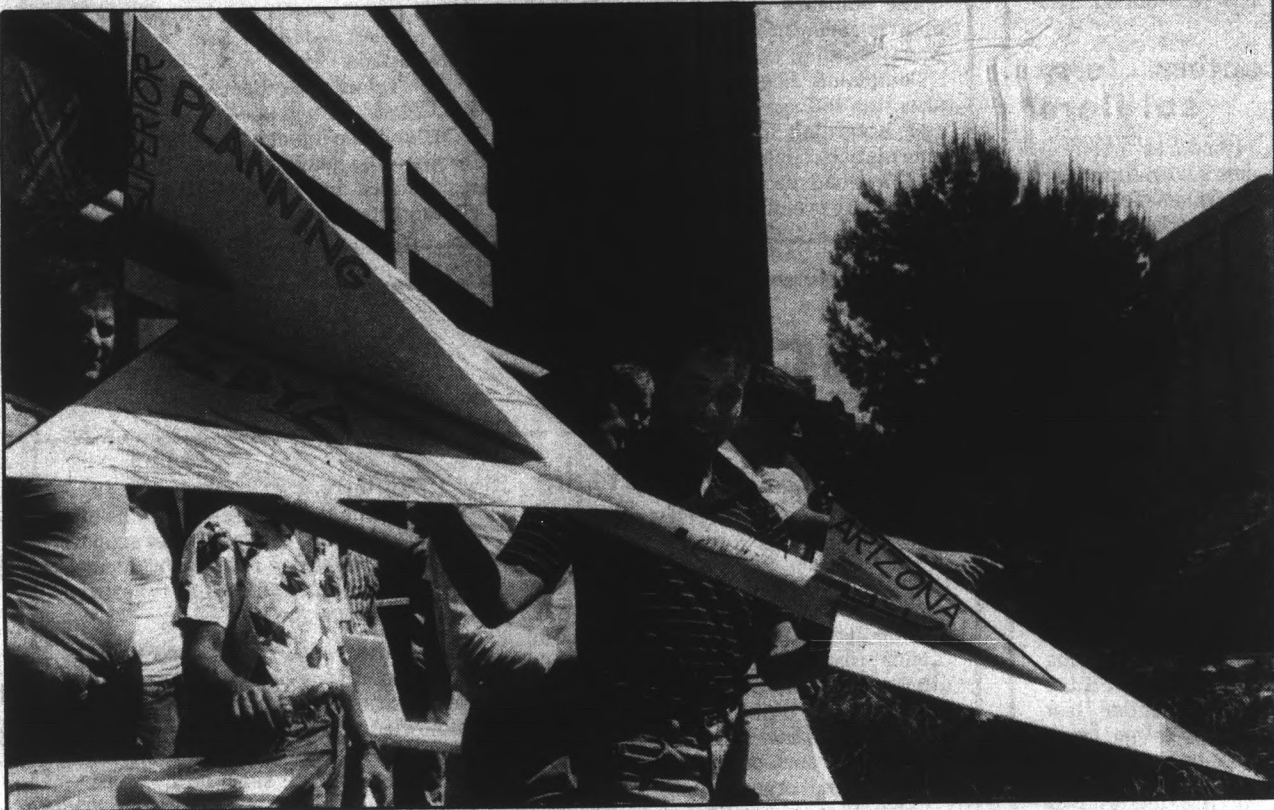

One other ASU student is suspected of having measles, but Roth said the case will not be confirmed until further tests have been completed.

"That case was reported through one of the departments, but it isn't confirmed," he said. "We are trying to contact the members of the classes she was in to alert them."

The Health Center is offering free immunization at the Center and at Sahuaro Residence Hall from 11:30 a.m. to 1 p.m.

ASU's first case of measles comes after nine cases were confirmed at NAU last week.

Roth said the confirmation of measles in the graduate student indicates that the upper age bracket of those susceptible to the disease extends past the average college age.

Kinsinger considers deficiency report 'wish list'

By VICKIE CHACHERE
State Press

ASU Vice President for Academic Affairs Jack Kinsinger said Wednesday that an Arizona Students Association report outlining undergraduate education deficiencies is "shallow and artificial."

"It's more of a wish list," Kinsinger said. "The report deals in realms (where) the students don't really have that much knowledge."

The report, issued by ASA to the Arizona Board of Regents on Friday, targets academic advisement, student/faculty ratios and the undergraduate honors program as deficient.

Kinsinger said the document is not a "careful" study of problems in undergraduate education at the University.

"I wouldn't say that I am opposed (to the study)," Kinsinger said. "I am disappointed. I don't believe it's a well-thought out or careful study."

ASA is made up of the student presidents from ASU, NAU and UA and student representatives.

J.B. Sinnott, an ASA member and one of the report's authors, said the group approached Kinsinger for assistance in gathering statistical information.

Sinnott said the vice president refused to release information and canceled appointments with ASA members.

"It's not like we wanted to hit him broadside," Sinnott said. "I think (Kinsinger) has been more responsive to faculty concerns than student concerns.

"We weren't happy with the way he dealt with it."

Kinsinger said he never denied ASA requests for assistance in developing the report.

"I hardly ever refuse requests from students," he said.

Kinsinger said he is concerned with an ASA request to move control of academic advisement from his office to ASU's Office of Student Affairs.

Under the ASA plan, curriculum

Varnell said that before the report was released to the regents it was reviewed by several ASU administrators, and met with "great reviews."

"I think (Kinsinger's) reaction was because he was unprepared for the report and because he is unresponsive to student concerns," he said.

Kinsinger said: "I think the major problem ensues when you split advising from the colleges."

Kinsinger said ASA had not been asked to make a recommendation on the location of

'It's not like we wanted to hit him broadside. I think (Kinsinger) has been more responsive to faculty concerns than student concerns.' — J.B. Sinnott advisement would be combined with information on University policies, graduation requirements and career objectives in a "University-wide educational planning program."

ASA member David Varnell, Associated Students of ASU president, said the program would be better administered through a different office because it deals more with student life than academic affairs.

"What is shallow is someone who seems to think that one small academic advising unit can meet the needs of 40,000 students," he said.

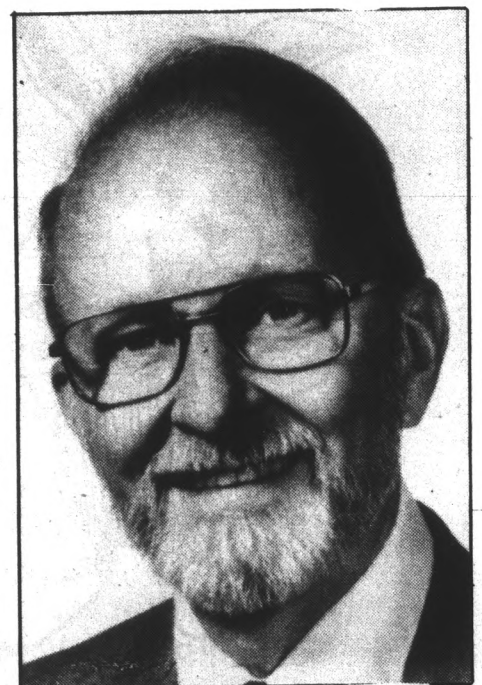

academic advisement, and added, "I don't think any committee should do that."

Kinsinger also said he does not believe that undergraduate education at ASU is bad, although improvements could be made with increased legislative appropriations.

"If you have more money, you can always make things better," he said.

Much of the statistical information included in the ASA report is "taken out of context" to support ASA's "wish list," he said.

"I pay a lot of attention to undergraduate education," Kinsinger said. "I would prefer to see the students get a high-quality education as a first priority."

But Varnell said ASA is more concerned with improving undergraduate education than arguing with Kinsinger over the report.

"We want to work with him," Varnell said. "That's got to be No. 1."

Beirut bomb kills 8, wounds 80 in explosion

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — A car bomb killed eight people and wounded 80 on Wednesday when its load of TNT exploded in front of an east Beirut building housing an office of President Amin Gemayel's Phalange Party.

Police also reported that a series of artillery exchanges and gunbattles in and around Beirut killed 14 people in Lebanon's bloodiest day in several weeks.

At least 70 people, mostly civilians, were wounded in the fighting between Christians and Moslems in the capital and the hills to the east, police reported.

The car bomb contained as many as 440 pounds of TNT, according to an estimate by police explosives expert Roland Jawdeh. It blew up in the Ashrafieh neighborhood outside a five-story apartment building.

The blast set the building on fire and trapped dozens of people on upper floors.

Senate moves toward rebel aid plan approval

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate on Wednesday inched toward likely approval of President Reagan's $100 million aid plan for anti-leftist rebels in Nicaragua after a Democratic leader said the White House "torpedoed" a bid to build a bipartisan compromise.

Sen. James Sasser of Tennessee, who has emerged as a spokesman for Senate Democrats on Central American policy, said genuine progress had been made on forging a united position before Adm. John M. Poindexter, the national security adviser, appeared in Senate Majority Leader Bob Dole's office and intervened.

He said Poindexter vetoed an attempt to write into the aid plan a guarantee of direct talks between Washington and Managua, with no pre-conditions.

He added that he believes the administration felt it need not compromise on the issue because its hand was strengthened by reports of a Nicaraguan raid into neighboring Honduras and the hostile reaction that caused in Congress.

U.S. helicopters ferry Honduran soldiers

TEGUCIGALPA, Honduras (AP) — U.S. military helicopters with American crews ferried Honduran soldiers to a remote border area Wednesday where up to 1,500 Sandinista troops were reported trying to fight their way back to Nicaragua.

U.S. officials here said 14 helicopters from Palmerola air base were carrying infantry and artillery units to the "Las Vegas salient" about 120 miles east of the capital.

The salient is a triangular-shaped area of Honduras that juts into Nicaragua along the irregular frontier between the two countries. It has long been the site of a major camp of the U.S.-backed Nicaraguan rebels, called Contras, who fight the Sandinista government from bases in southern Honduras.

Honduran military sources, speaking on condition of anonymity, said 1,500 Sandinistas crossed the frontier last Saturday in pursuit of rebels and were trapped inside Honduras by Contras who cut off their retreat.

Other sources put the number of Nicaraguan government troops at nearer 800 and said most probably would slip through the net because it was difficult to block all paths.

Coors distributors agree to remove billboard

WINDOW ROCK (AP) — Navajo tribal officials have won an agreement from the distributors of Coors beer for the removal of a controversial billboard located on the border of the huge Indian reservation.

The billboard shows a young Navajo man in rodeo gear and reads, "To the Navajo Nation: Coors is the one."

Complaints began to pour in shortly after the billboard went up two weeks ago, according to Duane Beyer, press-information officer for the tribe.

"It's in bad taste," he said, adding that it allegedly promotes the stereotype of the drunken Indian.

Tribal officials also complained that the wording on the billboard implies some sort of approval by the tribal government or the Navajo people when alcohol abuse continues to be the No. 1 health problem on the reservation.

The sale of alcohol on the reservation is prohibited, although tribal police usually do not arrest people who bring liquor on the reservation for personal consumption.

Joe Maloof, president of the Maloof Co., Coors' distributor in Albuquerque, N.M., said the intent of the billboard was to show the Navajo people that Coors appreciated the loyalty of the Navajos in choosing its product over other beers.

Refugee sanctuary fears illegal surveillance

BERKELEY, Calif. — Fears that a federal government investigation of the Bay Area Sanctuary Movement may include illegal surveillance and break-in tactics resurfaced earlier this month after a mysterious intruder broke into the Berkeley office of the East Bay Sanctuary Covenant.

As in other such break-ins at sanctuary churches and organizations across the country, files apparently were rifled, but nothing of value was stolen.

"It was very strange," the Rev. Marilyn Chilcote, covenant director, said. "I want to know what (the person) was doing there."

The covenant is part of a nation-wide network of groups that provides support to Central American refugees who enter the United States illegally to escape persecution at home.

Citing the trial of 11 sanctuary workers in Tucson, Ariz. — in which Immigration and Naturalization Service officials have acknowledged using paid informants, hidden tape recorders and undercover agents to infiltrate sanctuary groups — Chilcote said she feared the worst.

"I'm not willing to make a direct accusation, but when things like this happen in this way, you have to wonder."

Director says education key in dealing with AIDS

By ED SCHUBERT
State Press

ASU is not in danger of an AIDS epidemic despite three diagnosed cases on campus, the director of student health services said.

Monty Roth, presenting ASU's new policy guidelines on AIDS to the Faculty Senate Monday, said three people have been diagnosed by the Student Health Center as carrying HTLV-3, the AIDS virus.

"It's fortunate the virus is fragile," and not communicable by casual contact, he said.

Roth said that if AIDS could spread like other diseases, "we would have major, major problems in this country."

But because AIDS only can be spread by sharing blood and body fluids, "any kind of social contact, including rooming with someone who has AIDS, is not a risk," he said.

According to the University AIDS policy, persons with the disease will not be restricted from normal activities or from common campus areas, such as cafeterias, swimming pools or theaters.

ASU also will not require students, faculty, staff or prospective employees to submit to AIDS screening tests.

However, the report stated that "all individuals are urged to observe measures and practices to prevent possible transmission of the AIDS virus, (and) infected individuals must take responsibility to strictly observe such measures.

"Prevention of transmission is best accomplished through the education of students and staff regarding behaviors known to transmit the disease."

The policy gives ASU Student Health Services the responsibility of developing "an ongoing educational program that can provide information to all levels of the campus community" and responding to each case of AIDS.

Roth said AIDS education will be a major feature of Health Awareness Week, which begins Monday.

After the meeting Roth said evangelist Jerry Falwell's association of AIDS with just homosexual and bisexual men is "unfair."

"It's pretty clear that AIDS is affecting a wide section of the population," Roth said. "To connect AIDS with any group is unfair and improper."

"I think it's extremely important for people to understand the disease, and it's extremely important not to discriminate against any group."

Parking lot for Libya not a bad idea after all

Patrick J. Kucera
News Editor

After a round of terrorism, Moammar has decided that the United States is actually the bully for entering the Gulf of Sidra and firing upon ships and missile bases.

However, the United States had every right to fire upon Libya and its psychopathic dictator.

The main concern of many people in this country is whether or not the last two days of military battles were all worth it.

The Gulf of Sidra has been disputed waters ever since strongman Khadafy took hold of the oil-rich country.

He claims the Gulf is the territory of Libya and all those who cross the "line of death" are violating Libyan airspace and water ways.

Some will say that Khadafy's claim should just be honored and then everything would be at a less-heightened state of tension between our two countries.

It is only a small piece of water that is not used very much by anyone and it would not affect the state of the world, they say.

It is, nonetheless, a matter of principal. If Libya is given this piece of water, then what is going to prevent other countries from maintaining that the gulfs, straits, or waterways near their countries are their airspace and threaten anyone who crosses them with aggression?

The repercussions are serious. The straits between Indonesia and Malaysia would be cut off when one of those two countries declares domain over it.

The Cape of Good Horn would be severed if Chile or Argentina said the area between the Cape and the Antarctic basin was theirs.

The Soviet Union could literally swallow up the Black Sea. Mexico and the United States could seal off the Gulf of Mexico and back it up with military might.

The Persian Gulf, the Tasman Sea, the Caribbean, the Red Sea and the Panama Canal could all be cut off from international sailing if Khadafy is allowed to have his way.

It is important to point out that only one country in the world recognizes the Libyan claim to the Gulf — Upper Volta. Not even the Soviets are willing to grant Moammar his claim.

Everyone agrees that the Gulf of Sidra is not very important. But a man who threatens and attacks the world by murdering 11-year-old girls in international airports needs to be taught a lesson.

Some maintain the United States provoked Libya into attacking the Sixth Fleet. One has to wonder how?

If sailing in international waters provokes Libya into launching missiles and sending tugboats to take on the U.S. Navy, Khadafy is a bigger lunatic than the world previously thought.

Even the Libyan News agency, JANA, said Libya fired upon and shot down two U.S. warplanes first. Therefore, Libya has told the world that they cast the first stones.

The United States retaliated to prove its point — Khadafy has no right to push around the rest of the world just because he thinks he is Allah's gift to the human race.

Khadafy can continue his terrorism in the world — hijacking planes and boats, shooting women and children who are on vacation and bombing the embassies of anyone who disagrees with him.

But if he doesn't mind, the free world will continue to exercise its right of free passage to within 12 miles of the coast of any country.

Khadafy has harassed this great country long enough and now we are turning the tables on him.

If Khadafy wants to battle with the United States, that is his prerogative.

But he should understand that Western Europe can always use a giant parking lot and Libya may end up being it.

A few beers and a little fist between bed fellows

Michael Adamson
Opinion Editor

This nationalistic breast-beating scene is getting out of hand. The United States, the so-called "Leader of the Free World," has reduced foreign policy to the level of a typical Queens street fight. A few beers and a little fist have merely been exchanged for a few missiles and a little war.

What the hell are we doing 100 miles off the coast of Libya? Wouldn't the bureaucrats in Washington be just a wee bit nervous about Libyan warships hanging out 100 miles off the Atlantic Coast?

Except for giving all the bulletheaded in America the opportunity to make statements like "I think they ought to make Libya a parking lot," this week's events can only be viewed as dangerous, worthless and frontally ignorant.

Khadafy is a seriously deluded individual. For some reason, a lot of military people around the globe possess this trait. He has caused death and destruction in many a varied location, some of it provoked, most of it on his own initiative. Why would anyone want to give him another excuse to go over the deep end?

These actions, which are leading to an escalation of military conflict, are the product of perverted ideas about how to preserve freedom in the world.

Because the United States is playing self-annointed world policeman, people are going to die a senseless death. And death is not fun, especially when it is not for any defensible reason.

Between the Middle East, Southeast Asia, South Africa and Central America, the United States has managed to cover all the fronts. Sooner or later, one of these regions is going to blow up because our foreign policy does such a good job of destabilizing any region we apply it.

Ronald Reagan, Caspar Weinberger, Newt Gringich, John Lehman, Patrick Buchanan and the rest of the old men in Washington who seem so eager to play strongmen don't have to fight their own wars. They've got plenty of draft-age men to try to do the job for them. All they have to do is develop national "policy."

But let's say we go ahead and waste Khadafy in one swift blow. Then what? While Khadafy may be responsible for a number of acts of violence, his elimination will not make much of a dent in the level of terrorism worldwide.

One very good reason for this is that the United States is a major supporter of terrorism itself. Another player in the game. Our support, or, at the very least, tolerance of Israeli terrorism in Lebanon and of government terrorism in El Salvador and Guatemala far outweighs the atrocity of a few airport bombings or even the terrorism of the Sandinistas thus far.

The Pontius Pilate routine just won't wash anymore. Neither will this "keeping-the-world-free-for-democracy" act. Let's face it, our policymakers are engaging in one big game of Risk.

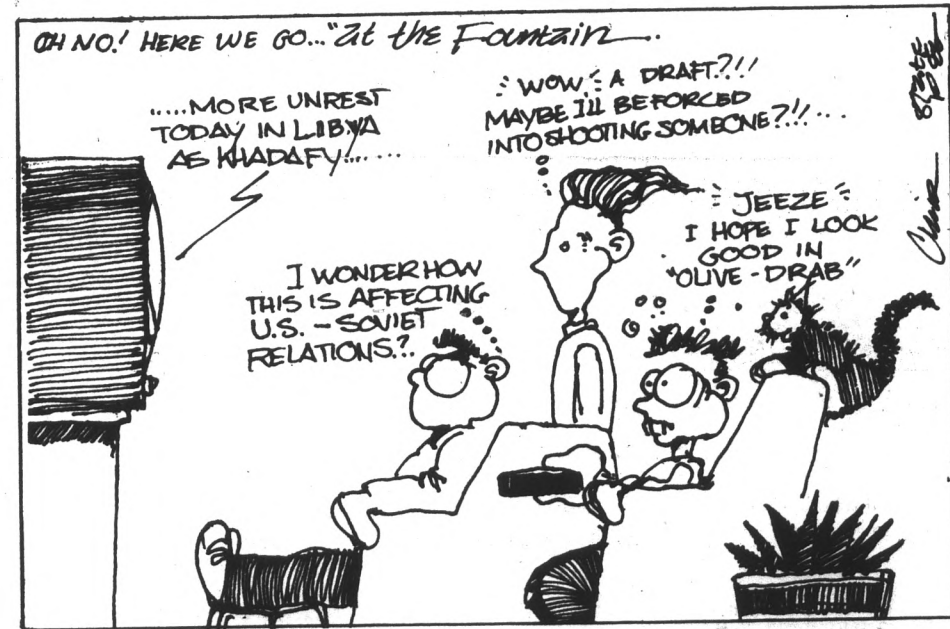

What are the deaths of tens of thousands of people by military-manned death squads, not to mention the countless arrests and acts of torture, which have occurred in El Salvador since 1979, if not acts of terrorism? What does one label the similar plight of the Guatemalan people at the hands of their brutal regime? Perhaps the slaughter of civilian refugees at Sabra and Shatila in September 1982 can be passed off as unavoidable circumstances.

That fact remains that the U.S. government only objects to terrorism that is contrary to official policy, which, by the way, does little to advance the causes of peace and freedom around the globe. Compared to such acts mentioned above, Khadafy suddenly seems very minor league indeed.

Khadafy today, some other yet-to-be-targeted maniac tomorrow. As a matter of policy, it is an excellent diversion from the bloody history we ourselves are creating. As long as attention is focused on "them," no one will bother to question "us," and all will be well, especially when it is wrapped in neat little buzz words like democracy, freedom and liberty.

Terrorism anywhere is not to be tolerated. But before we can think about the Khadafys of the world, we've got to clean up our act. Until then, this week's spat can be viewed as little more than a street fight between criminals.

Virtue begins at home.

'Big Stick' policy loses sight of democracy

Editor:
In response to Michael Adamson's article on Central America (March 20), he should realize he is not alone in his view.

To add to what was said about the "Big Stick" policy of the United States, now that President Reagan has lost his fight for the contra aid, it appears we will have to find some other poor helpless country to pick on. Why is it that the president can't see that this so-called "democracy" that we intend to sell to everyone isn't welcome in some countries. Ever since the Teddy Roosevelt era of imperialism, the United States has lost sight of the entire meaning of democracy. We fail to realize that we become just as guilty as the Russians when we try to impose our political beliefs. Imperialism brings about selfishness.

President Reagan was quoted as saying, "If we do not approve the aid to the contras, communism will be at our doorstep and history will be its witness to blame." Maybe Reagan should read up on his history and glance at a map as well. In case he hasn't noticed, Russia just happens to be few miles from Alaska and our dear friend Mr. Castro is our neighbor down the street. Also, it seems that the president has to touch fire a few times before he realizes it burns. If Vietnam didn't teach us to mind our business, I'm sure the Sandinistas will.

The bottom line is this. Until we realize that both communism and democracy are going to be around for a while, someone in the White House ought to show the president a better way to deal with the problems that arise. The major lesson that Reagan should learn from history is that unilateral declarations concerning foreign policy in the past, such as the Monroe Doctrine and the Roosevelt Corollary, have indirectly led us into wars. If we live in a true democracy, then let the people decide if they want war or if they want the $100 million to stay at home. If the president really wants to spend the money that badly, there are about 40,000 students here at ASU who could really use it.

ASAS WHO

Low turnout for student elections: how significant?

By STEVE WATERSTRAT

State Press

Two commodities are sure to be scarce on this campus at the waning of a spring semester: clothing and voters for the student election.

Almost no one complains about the clothes part. But for some, the voter turnout is of higher importance.

Last spring less than 4,000 students voted in the Associated Students of ASU election. Enrollment at the time was nearly 38,000.

President David Varnell, commander-in-chief of student government, was elected with only 1,580 votes a year ago. His only opponent, Paul Barker, mustered a mere 1,046. Senators from some colleges can win with about 50 votes. In half the senate races last year, contenders would not have needed any votes other than their own, since they were running unopposed.

ASASU is a dynamic group that commands nearly a million-dollar budget and engages in high-minded debates on the more important aspects of life and fairness in student funding. It has captured the attention of the Valley's major print media but has not grabbed the interest of the student body it represents. At least not to the point where these people are willing to take the time to vote.

That is the reality on a campus with about 85 percent commuter students, averaging 25 years of age, who work, are perhaps married and do not spend much time on campus when they are not actually in class. The younger students, who do not have family responsibilities, can find plenty of diversions, like enjoying their youth in a Sunbelt climate, to keep them busy. That does not leave much time or interest for student government.

This attitude is personified by Craig Herman, one of two candidates for the ASASU presidency. Running on a platform of "I don't know and I don't care," Herman seeks to capitalize on the pervasive student sentiment and calculates that he has more than a 30,000-vote lead.

"I figure I'm the people's choice," he has said several times.

Herman has not explained how the students who do not vote constitute a voting bloc. He is obviously gambling that, through his novel approach and total disassociation with ASASU, he can lure some of those non-voters to the polls. Then again, he probably doesn't know if he cares if he wins.

His attitude flies right in the faces of those who have made ASASU the center of their life this year and equally offends candidates in this spring's election.

Personifying this attitude is Chris Cummiskey, Herman's opponent for the presidency. As a senator last year and the executive vice president this year, Cummiskey is serious about ASASU. So when Herman jabs at the importance of ASASU, using the voting tallies as ammunition, he strikes right at the heart of Cummiskey's assumed importance.

The same importance is shared by Varnell. Their policy and philosophical differences are well known among ASASU observers, but the two both agree on ASASU's importance.

"When I stepped through the door, I was representing 40,000 students," Varnell said.

A lot of these students may feel they have no connection to ASASU if they have never used any of its services or asked for club funding. But when student officers pressure the administration or the Arizona Board of Regents on parking problems, tuition or book prices, it affects every student, regardless of whether he or she votes or cares about ASASU policies and politics.

In addition to such general student advocacy, a lot of students would be at a loss if not for some of the nuts-and-bolts programs, like Legal Services and the Tenants/Commuter Students Association.

The Bike Co-op has long lists of students whose bicycles it has repaired at no charge, and the Safety Escort Service has answered nearly 3,000 calls for safe passage this school year.

These departments and 10 others come under Amy Young, vice president for campus affairs. She describes a more down-to-earth ASASU than its lofty image: "We're just regular people who care about the campus."

She sees ASASU as the students' link to the administration, a group of "channel finders" for student concerns.

With a large student body like ASASU to coordinate programs of student interest, Young says the students keep control of what programs are available and how they are run. There is something to be said for students going to their peers, rather than the University, for help.

"I just can't see the administration running all of these services," Young said.

Neither can Betty Turner Asher, the University vice president for student affairs. Her office would have to take responsibility for most of the areas under ASASU if there were no student government.

Which brings up one of the basic considerations at any university: economics. ASASU functions through students expending their energy for minimum wage to supervise other students volunteering their time. Now if ASASU's budget approaches one million dollars, what would it cost for the University to provide the same services?

"I couldn't begin to estimate that," Asher said. "The help we get from them is just unbelievable."

Next week, when it is time to decide who will provide that help, some students they may base their decision upon whose opinions they like on controversial funding policies that apply to a few hundred dollars in appropriation money. Others may vote for according to who they think is and is not a "junior politico" playing games in student government.

But most will not vote at all, because with a scarcity of clothing on campus, the exercise of democracy faces tough competition for the students' concentration.

Associated prudence: managing nearly $1 million

By MICHAEL KONZ

State Press

Four young ASU student government executive officers control $23 for every University student.

That figure does not sound impressive, but it extrapolates to an Associated Students of ASU budget of $908,173 for fiscal year 1985-1986. Just below $1 million — controlled by four officers who are not yet 25 years old and were elected last year by less than 10 percent of the student body.

Handling that kind of money has provided a real-world responsibility for ASASU President Dave Varnell, Executive Vice President Chris Cummiskey, Campus Affairs Vice President Amy Young, and Activities Vice President James Emmelkamp.

Varnell said the responsibility hits him when he realizes that he only has $200 in his bank account.

"When I see five times that amount, I'm wary about spending it," he said. "My initial reaction is that I'm spending around $20 per student. I have an accountability to stretch that as far as possible."

ASASU Coordinator Gary Kleemann agreed with Varnell's assessment, but after seven years as adviser to student government he is no longer concerned with the students' judgment.

"College students are bright or else they wouldn't be here, and the people who are elected tend to be brighter — they're leaders," Kleemann said. "Students, when given the information, make quality decisions 99.9 percent of the time."

The executive officers share the final budget responsibility, depending on their jurisdiction:

•Varnell and Cummiskey oversee the $360,802 for administration, which includes campus clubs and organizations, club sports and public relations;

•Emmelkamp oversees $368,302 — the largest amount of money — for the activities area, including homecoming, intramurals and the lecture series;

•Young oversees $156,754 for campus affairs, including women's services, the minority affairs board and ASASU elections; and •Cummiskey oversees $22,315 for the college councils' budgets.

William Cabianca, ASU associate vice president for student development, said this budgetary responsibility is part of the educational value of student government.

"The major idea behind student government is to give the students a chance to learn about not only the political process, but the fiscal process," Cabianca said. "If someone else does it, then the students don't learn."

The ASASU budget process begins a year earlier in late August or early September when the Senate Finance Committee develops budgetary forms. The forms are sent to various organization directors, who develop a budget with justifications on a line-item basis.

The proposals are submitted to the appropriate vice president, who develops a recommendation. This is forwarded to the Executive Budget Committee, composed of the executive officers and Kleemann.

The EBC forwards its recommendation to the finance committee, which holds hearings and votes on the budget requests. These are passed on to Varnell, who has line-item veto power.

In January, the final budget proposals are in the administration's hands, where they are treated like any University budget request.

By May, the budget has reached the Arizona Board of Regents, who approve it.

"I'm proud of our funding process," Kleemann said. "It requires substantial student development. It's not one or two people — it's a large number of student people."

Kleemann, 40, said the size of ASASU's budget and its approval process cannot be compared to the budgets of NAU and UA because of the different responsibilities involved at each university.

He added that the budget varies with the government. "It's an annual thing," he said. "Different administrations emphasize different things. I suspect it will continue to be that way."

Cabianca, who has been associate vice president for three years, said ASASU officers sometimes trip up with the budget.

"Once you give students responsibility and learn to work with them, you find mistakes are made," he said. "But it's not seen as bad but as a learning opportunity."

"You say, 'With this group, this is what they did, but ultimately they have to live with their decision.' It's a big part of reality."

An integral part of this learning process is Kleemann, who is closely involved with the budgetary process.

"One of my major jobs is serving as an adviser," Kleemann said. But he adds that ASASU "is really a student government. It is a political body, and decisions are made on a political basis, as they should be."

Cabianca said: "It's a large budget, and it warrants careful monitoring. Gary does much of the monitoring. He becomes a constant administrator of the budget."

For the executive officers' part, they are paid minimum wage for 20 hours of work a week. Varnell is paid for 50 weeks a year, while the vice presidents are paid for 48 weeks.

This translates into a salary for Varnell of $3,350 and $3,216 for the vice presidents.

police report

A man exposed himself to two ASU students Monday evening in Lot 55, police said.

An ASU student said she was walking east on Stadium Drive with a friend when a man drove by in a truck and smiled at them.

The man drove back toward them, still smiling. He then turned into Lot 55 and stopped.

The man motioned for the women, and as they walked toward him he said, "What are you doing?"

The women told police that when they came to the driver's window, they noticed that the man's pants were pulled down and he was masturbating.

One woman said to the man, "You sick son-of-a-bitch!" and threw a cup of Coke at the car door as he drove away, police said.

The man was described as blond, approximately 6 feet tall, 190 pounds and in his early twenties.

The truck was a black Nissan with a stripe on the side.

In other activity, University police reported the following incidents in the 24-hour period ending at 6:30 a.m. Wednesday:

An ASU student was assaulted by two men early Saturday morning at the Cholla Apartments, police said.

The victim said he had argued with a friend earlier that day in Cholla. On his way out of the building, he saw his friend and another man standing in the lobby.

The man said both men began punching him, but he made no attempt to fight back. He managed to get back in the elevator and go to the sixth floor to call a friend for help.

When he returned to the first floor, the men still were there. The man said he tried to get back into the elevator, but the two men pulled him out and hit him with their fists.

After the assailants left, the victim drove to Tempe St. Luke's Hospital. He was treated for a dislocated elbow and numerous bruises and released.

The assailants are described as two black males in their early twenties. Both had short afro hairstyles. One of the men was wearing a white T-shirt, shorts and sneakers. The other man was wearing a black leather jacket and pants.

Seall: publicity would enhance services

Name: LeeAnne Seall
Birthdate: Jan. 26, 1965
Hometown: Xenia, Ohio
High School: Las Vegas Valley High
Major: Elementary education, junior

LeeAnne Seall is running her campaign for campus affairs vice president on the theme "Reaching Out to Serve."

The director of Associated Students of ASU's Course Source said the 14 departments under campus affairs need to be expanded and receive more publicity.

"The main problem with campus affairs is that students can't use the services offered if they don't know about them," she said.

Seall said students do not know, for example, that the Safety Escort Service offers protection all over campus, not just around Cady Mall.

"People on the north side of campus rarely use the service, and two female dorms and Manzanita are there," she said.

Seall said a Safety Escort Service satellite station should be started away from the central location at the MU so students would not have to wait as long for an escort to arrive.

Due to a lack of publicity, she said, students often are unaware of the services that ASASU offers, such as Legal Assistance, which provides free legal advice to students and faculty.

Seall said she would increase publicity of the bike co-op and book exchange because "they are programs that directly serve the students."

She also said she would increase publicity of academic services, such as the Course Source, a booklet ASASU distributes that contains information on classes.

LeeAnne Seall

"The Course Source is an absolute must," she said. "It is a direct benefit to students when registering for classes."

Seall said she would introduce a network program of campus clubs, organizations and services.

"If the many services on campus were to combine programming, they could reach so many more students and have a greater impact," she said. "It would also avoid duplication of programs."

The networking program will provide more quality programming and increase its organization, she said.

Seall said ASASU "grossly overlooks" graduate students.

"Night students are not able to use services that are closed in the evening," she said. "And there is no graduate orientation program."

Seall said the graduate students may be better served by the graduate college instead of ASASU, but she would like to see a graduate lounge in the MU.

"A graduate lounge would provide the grad students a place to meet other grad students, study or just relax," she said.

As a voting member of the ASASU Senate, Seall said she would support the campus clubs and organizations funding guidelines adopted by the Senate.

"They are pretty much common sense," she said. "Political, religious and gay groups will probably fall under controversial matter, but it will be up to the Senate to define 'controversial.'"

Seall has served as the College of Education Council president and an ASASU senator.

She is also a member of the Campus Affairs Coordination Council and the Faculty Senate Academic Affairs Committee.

Longstaff: campus in need of change

Name: Derek Longstaff
Birthdate: Oct. 14, 1965
Hometown: Scottsdale, Arizona
High School: Phoenix Gerard High
Major: Political science junior

"I'm the David Letterman of politics," said Derek Longstaff. "I think if he was running for student government, he would be a lot like me."

"He'd be a little bit of a smartass, too, but he would be looking to make some changes."

Longstaff is running his campaign for campus affairs vice president on the theme "Time for a Change."

"It's not original, but it's the way I feel," he said.

Longstaff said there are some valuable services under campus affairs, but, "I hate to see people sit around and smile and say that everything is going so well — I don't think it is."

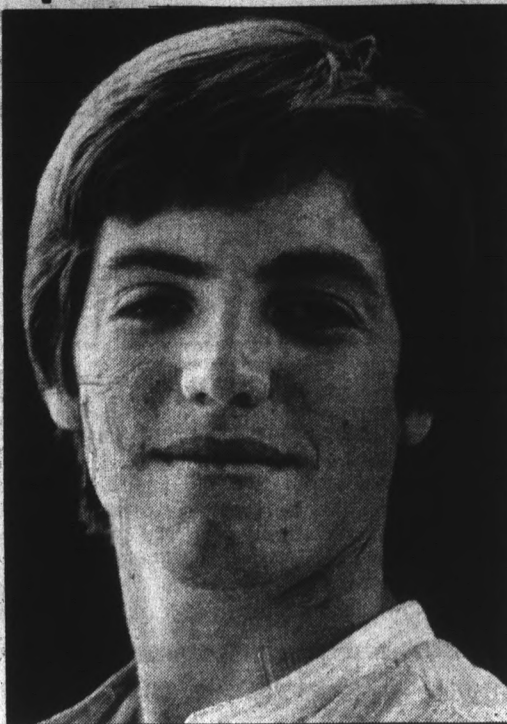

For example, he cited Black Heritage Month in February.

"ASASU really should have gotten behind that program," Longstaff said. "It shouldn't have been No. 10 on their list of 'Things To Do.' It should have been first or second."

Longstaff said by increasing publicity, campus affairs could "really shake things up."

He said that translates into getting typically apathetic students involved.

"To get those 'non-traditional' students involved, you need to get them to identify with you," Longstaff said. "I'm more likely to identify with the average student than other people."

Derek Longstaff

Longstaff also said the Office of Campus Affairs should "take some chances" by offering some "controversial programs about topics, like the nuclear arms race."

As a member of the Senate, Longstaff said he would work against the campus club funding bylaws.

"I don't know what authority they have to set such a ridiculous policy," he said. "Seventy-five percent of them are common sense, but the other 25 percent are ridiculous."

"The bottom line is to fund a program based on its own merit, not the club that is sponsoring it."

"If a club is denied funding while I am in office, and it is a club that benefits students, I will personally fund that club out of my own salary," Longstaff said.

Longstaff said he will not mix religion and politics as an executive officer.

"I don't really want to make this an issue," he said. "But a vast majority of students think that many policies are muddled by personal religious beliefs, and I want to make it clear that it will not be the case with me."

Longstaff also is against excessive ASASU spending.

"I don't want anymore money spent on T-shirts and crap just for (the officers)," he said. "I would rather see that money go toward worthy programs."

Longstaff, who was the MU Activities Board vice president in 1985, said he "helped make MUAB a more visible group as far as activities go."

While working on the MUAB, Longstaff said he got the "non-traditional" student involved.

"I pulled people from all over campus," he said. "They weren't all white bread. There was a lot of rye and pumpnickel. I'd like to see more of this in ASASU."

THE FIRST CONTRACEPTIVE THAT COMES WITH SOMEONE TO TALK TO.

It's the Today* Sponge. And unlike most contraceptives, it has its very own phone number. You can call our Today Talkline at 800-223-2329 (in California 800-222-2329) 24 hours a day if you need advice, or any information about birth control. Or if you have any questions at all about The Sponge.*

Chances are, you already know the Today Sponge is small, disposable and very easy to use. But you may be wondering how it works.

Primarily, The Sponge works by releasing Nonoxynol-9 (a safe and effective spermicide) continuously for 24 hours. It also helps block the passage of sperm to the uterus, and even traps and absorbs sperm. For a full 24 hours.

The Sponge is very effective—as high as 91%.* In fact, no reversible method other than the Pill or IUD is more effective. And few are easier to use.

All you do is wet The Sponge thoroughly with water and insert it. You never have to apply or reapply spermicide. So lovemaking can be spontaneous, and free of interruptions.

What's more, you don't need a doctor's prescription for The Sponge. It's available at your local drug store and at selected supermarkets.

So if you're looking for an easy birth control method you can really trust, pick up the Today Sponge.

Then if you still have any questions, just pick up the phone.

*Women can expect an annual effectiveness rate of 89-91% if they use the Today Sponge consistently and according to label instructions. In clinical trials including women who did not use the Today Sponge consistently and properly the effectiveness was 84-87%. Use as directed. © 1986 VLI Corp. By the Intercollegiate Press
Representatives of University of Nebraska's unchartered sororities say the Panhellenic Association's policy of recognizing Greek organizations is unfair.

The current policy limits minority students' choices when they look for Greek houses that cater to their interests, said Holly Ashmore, president of the organization, the Rosebuds of Alpha Kappa Alpha, and Arlett Brooks, a member of Delta Sigma Theta.

According to Panhellenic's "Procedure for Admission of New Member Groups on Campus," any organization wishing to be recognized as a UN sorority first must be recognized by the sorority's national chapter and have 35 previously approved members. The sorority also must exist on campus for six months before its application to the national chapter.

Survey reports salaries rise for journalism grads

By National On-Campus Report

The median beginning salary at newspapers for 1985 college journalism and mass communications graduates rose to $13,520 from the previous year's $11,960, according to a survey by the Dow Jones Newspaper Fund.

The survey also found that newspapers and wire services have the lion's share of such graduates last year, outdrawing all other media with 3,162 recruits.

In addition, efforts by the newspaper industry to hire minorities have been paying off. Daily newspapers hired nearly 14 percent of all minority graduates — up considerably from 1975, when dailies hired only three percent.

Once again, Sun Devil baseball coach Jim Brock finds himself amidst team controversy.

Brock: missing players will not play major role

By BRAD HALVORSEN
State Press

Two suspensions and a dismissal have cut the size of the ASU pitching staff this week, but Coach Jim Brock said the actions should not play a major role in the Sun Devils' three-game series against Stanford.

The first game with the Cardinal starts at 7 tonight at Packard Stadium.

Brock handed down a five-day suspension to reliever Royal Clayton and a 10-day suspension to freshman pitcher Jeff White on Tuesday. Both were cited for breaking team rules.

On Monday, Brock dismissed infielder/pitcher Vince Shinholster from the team for disciplinary reasons.

"I really don't think it will be significant," Brock said. "Now, if it were (pitchers Tony) Harris, (Mike) Thorpe and (Kurt) Dempster, then you might have to start worrying."

Brock said the three pitchers may not have been called on to pitch against the Cardinal, even if they were eligible.

"We would, of course, like to have them in there," Brock said. "But it's not in a lead-pipe sense that they'd be in there anyway."

Clayton, a junior right-hander with a 2-2 record and 6.14 earned run average, could be eligible to play in Saturday's game, depending on when he completes his punishment of running 48 miles.

Brock devised a formula for punishing suspended players 12 years ago and still uses it today. The rule broken by Clayton, which remains confidential, drew a 48-mile penalty. No more than 10 miles can be run per day.

Clayton can complete the mileage Saturday morning and be eligible to play in the afternoon.

White, however, drew a 96-mile penalty and will be ineligible until the end of next week. White has been one of ASU's most active freshmen, posting a 3-1 mark after pitching in 12 games and starting six.

His ERA of 3.82 ranks second on the team, behind Harris' 3.75.

Out of 12 pitchers on the ASU roster, seven have thrown more than 20 innings. With the absence of Shinholster, Clayton and White, that number shrinks to four.

Dempster, Harris, Thorpe and David Cassidy are the only pitchers available for the Stanford series who have seen significant action this season.

The other five pitchers — Reggie Leslie, Jeff Sutter, Eric Patterson, Jerome Braatz and Will Womardt — have combined for 20 innings — 14 until Tuesday night's 16-9 victory over Grand Canyon College at Packard Stadium.

The Devils' team ERA stands at 5.31 for the season, 5.81 against Six-Pac competition. In the last 11 games, Devil pitchers have yielded an average of more than eight runs per game.

Dempster has been the most consistent Sun Devil pitcher recently. The sophomore right-hander has pitched two straight complete games, including 10 innings in ASU's 7-4 victory over California Saturday.

Dempster is slated to start Friday's game against the Cardinal, while Thorpe will open the series tonight. Saturday's pitcher is undetermined.

Brock said Harris and Cassidy will be the first relievers against the Cardinal, with Patterson and Sutter as other potential candidates.

Stanford baseball leads Six-Pac

This is the third in a series previewing ASU's competition in the race for the Six-Pac title. Today, a look at Stanford.

The Six-Pac coaches didn't think the Stanford ballplayers had it in them. However, as the record currently shows, the Cardinal posts a 19-8 overall record and a 5-2 Six-Pac record, holding a first place position in the Pac-10 Southern Division.

The pre-season coach's poll had Stanford placed second, under UA. Stanford disproved that prediction recently, taking two of three in its series with the Wildcats.

The Cardinal will bring their first place record to Packard Stadium tonight, kicking off a three-game series with the Sun Devils. ASU is currently 24-13 overall and 4-5 in the Six-Pac, fifth in the division.

Last season, out of two series, the Devils beat Stanford only once.

Stanford's sophomore DH/backup catcher Doug Robbins will be playing at first base for the series. He has the top batting average of the team (.386) and is second in RBI with 19.

Utility infielder Ken Green, a senior, will play second base. Last year he appeared in 29 games, mostly as a defensive replacement in the late innings at third base. He hit .100 on 3-for-30 at bats throughout the year.

Freshman Frank Carey will play his backup position at shortstop. He was an all-CIF (California Interscholastic Federation) shortstop in the past two seasons out of Granite Hills High School in San Diego County. He was also named All-Southern California and holds the San Diego County record for most stolen bases in a career (95).

Originally the second base starter, junior Ruben Amaro will be moved to third base for the series. He is currently fourth in batting average (.305). Consequently, his best game last season was against ASU when he went 3-for-4, which included a home run, and drove in three runs.

Starting outfielder Walt Harris, a senior, will cover left field. He has hit over .320 the last two seasons and has a career batting average of .323. He also leads the team in stolen bases with 21.

Centerfield will be covered by senior Mark Davis, starting outfielder. He is third on the team in batting average (.320), leads in home runs (3), and is third in stolen bases with 12.

Junior Toi Cook will play at his starting position in right field. He committed only four errors last season and had 134 putouts. He is currently second on the team in stolen bases with 14.

"We have one of the best outfields in all of collegiate baseball," said Stanford head coach Mark Marquess. "We have three outstanding defensive players who can also hit and run extremely well."

Junior all-America candidate John Ramos will play his starting position as catcher. His current batting average (.337) ranks second on the team and his 23 RBI leads it.

"He can hit for an average and with power," said Marquess. "He is also an outstanding defensive catcher with a strong arm and quick release."

Playing DH in the series will be senior outfielder Mike DeBannon. He entered this season with a .312 career batting average.

In the first game of the series, Stanford will send right handed sophomore Jack McDowell to the mound.

Softball team travels to Houston tourney

By ANDREW DELORENZO
State Press

The Sun Devil women's softball team is in Texas today to play in the Houston Invitational Softball Tournament, which runs through Saturday. If the Devils play as well as they did in Monday night's doubleheader against Utah, they will be a tough team to beat.

The Sun Devil team, whose ranking just jumped from 12th to 10th nationally, raised its record to 16-8, outlasting Utah 1-0, in 10 innings to complete a doubleheader sweep at the Sun Devil Club Stadium.

Designated hitter Jodi Rathbun, who joined the team this weekend after the conclusion of the women's basketball season, collected three hits to lead ASU past the Utes in the first game, 8-1.

Utah's record fell to 7-7.

In the nightcap, the Devils and Utes went into extra innings with the score knotted at zero. The umpires decided to utilize international tiebreaking rules, which places the last batter from the previous inning on second base to start the 10th inning.

ASU catcher Angie LoSasso, who started the inning on second, scored on an errant throw by Utah shortstop Shannon McBride to give the Devils the victory.

Freshman pitcher Becky Stevens gave up only three hits and walked one while striking out nine to earn the win for ASU.

"Becky pitched her best game of the season," ASU coach Mary Littlewood said. "She had good control over all tier pitches and threw the ball very well."

The Devils had an opportunity to go ahead in the third inning when junior Lynn Whitey ripped a one-out triple to left field. The chance was wasted when ASU left Whitey and Linda Neeley stranded in scoring position.

ASU had another opportunity to score in the fifth but Whitey was thrown out at the plate to end the inning.

"We had some chances to score, but we just made a few baserunning mistakes," Littlewood said.

In the opener, the Sun Devils pounded Utah pitcher Michele Townsend for three runs in the third inning, when Rathbun hit a two-out single to score Sheila Winchell and Neeley. LoSasso followed with a single to left to score Karen Fifeild.

ASU blew the game open in the fourth by scoring three runs on five hits. Neeley, Fifeild and Rathbun highlighted the inning with RBI singles.

Michele Gravatt picked up the win for ASU in the first game. She went 5½ innings giving up five hits and striking out four.

Duke, Kansas, Louisville and LSU ready for finals

DALLAS (AP) — Duke's Mike Krzyzewski, making his debut as a coach in NCAA basketball's Final Four, said Wednesday he is not worried about being a rookie.

"I'm too excited to feel the pressure and I hope the players catch onto it," said Krzyzewski in a telephone news conference with the other three coaches. "I talked to (Indiana Coach) Bobby Knight and he's helped me get prepared."

The top-ranked Blue Devils meet two-point underdog and second-ranked Kansas Saturday 30 minutes after Louisville and eight-point underdog Louisiana State University play in Reunion Arena.

The first game begins at 3:42 p.m. EST. The survivors play for the NCAA title Monday night.

Krzyzewski admitted his Blue Devils have shot poorly in advancing out of the East regional.

"I don't know why, because it is one of our strong points," he said. "We've played good defense and we've rebounded well. Kansas is the best shooting team we've played and if we both have hot shooting it could be a high-scoring game."

Duke defeated Kansas 92-86 in December but Jayhawk Coach Larry Brown said his team is vastly improved.

"We'll have to play the best basketball game of the year and quit making turnovers and giving the other team second shots to win," said Brown. "I don't believe their earlier victory over us will have any bearing on the game although we have great respect for Duke."

Krzyzewski said: "Our earlier victory over Kansas doesn't mean much because it happened too long ago. We have two evenly matched teams."

Louisville Coach Denny Crum, who will be in his sixth Final Four, said he was concerned over what he calls LSU's "freak" defense.

"LSU is a hard team to play because of the 'freak' defense," said Crum. "I think we might be a hard team to defense, though, because everyone on our team is capable of scoring 25 points."

LSU Coach Dale Brown, who will be in his second Final Four, said his defense was a "combination of man-for-man and zone coverages. You have to be careful and not get so cute your kids can't do it."

Brown said Louisville was almost impossible to defense.

"They are tough to figure and they have plenty of players who can score," Brown said.
