

Alcohol in Prof's pub; student tavern likely

By KIM MATTINGLY
State Press

The approval of alcohol sales to faculty and staff at the proposed University Club could uncork a student tavern on campus, the Associated Students of ASU president said.

However, the head of an ASU steering committee finalizing plans for the faculty club, said a student club that serves alcohol should be considered separately.

"If the University Club goes through, students may eventually desire a similar service," ASASU President Chris Cumiskey said. "I think it might be provided. (Alcohol) would certainly be considered in a different light than it is now."

Richard Jacob, chairman of the steering committee and an ASU physics professor, said, "If students want to apply to the (Arizona Board of) Regents for a student club that's up to them. We're totally neutral as we expect them to be neutral on our application."

"A club may well be a possibility for students. Regents think of students as mature adults. Students decide what they want to do, and faculty and the administrative staff decide what they want to do. Both should approach the Board of Regents independently."

The regents have the final decision concerning the sale of alcohol at the University Club, which would be housed in the Fine Arts Annex east of Old Main and provide a place for faculty and staff to dine, meet and entertain.

The steering committee, a board of administrators and faculty members, currently meets every Tuesday. It is hoping to submit its plans to ASU President J. Russell Nelson by November, who will take the plan to the regents, Jacob said.

Jacob added that the University Club will be more than a "bar or a tavern. Most faculty members are not interested in getting snookered. They're responsible people."

He said club members will have to order a meal or a sandwich before they can order a beer.

Molly Broad, executive director for the board, said a preliminary discussion about ASU's University Club at the June regents meeting was received with mixed feelings from board members.

Broad said there are many issues that need to be addressed and resolved, such as the whole effect of the sale and distribution of liquor on campus.

But Cumiskey said, "There is alcohol on campus — that's what I find ironic about the whole thing. There are numerous places where alcohol is served on campus. We're talking about some gray areas."

Cumiskey said fraternities and sororities serve alcohol at their parties, and businesses that lease property from ASU — such as the Dash Inn and several stores in Tempe Center — sell alcohol.

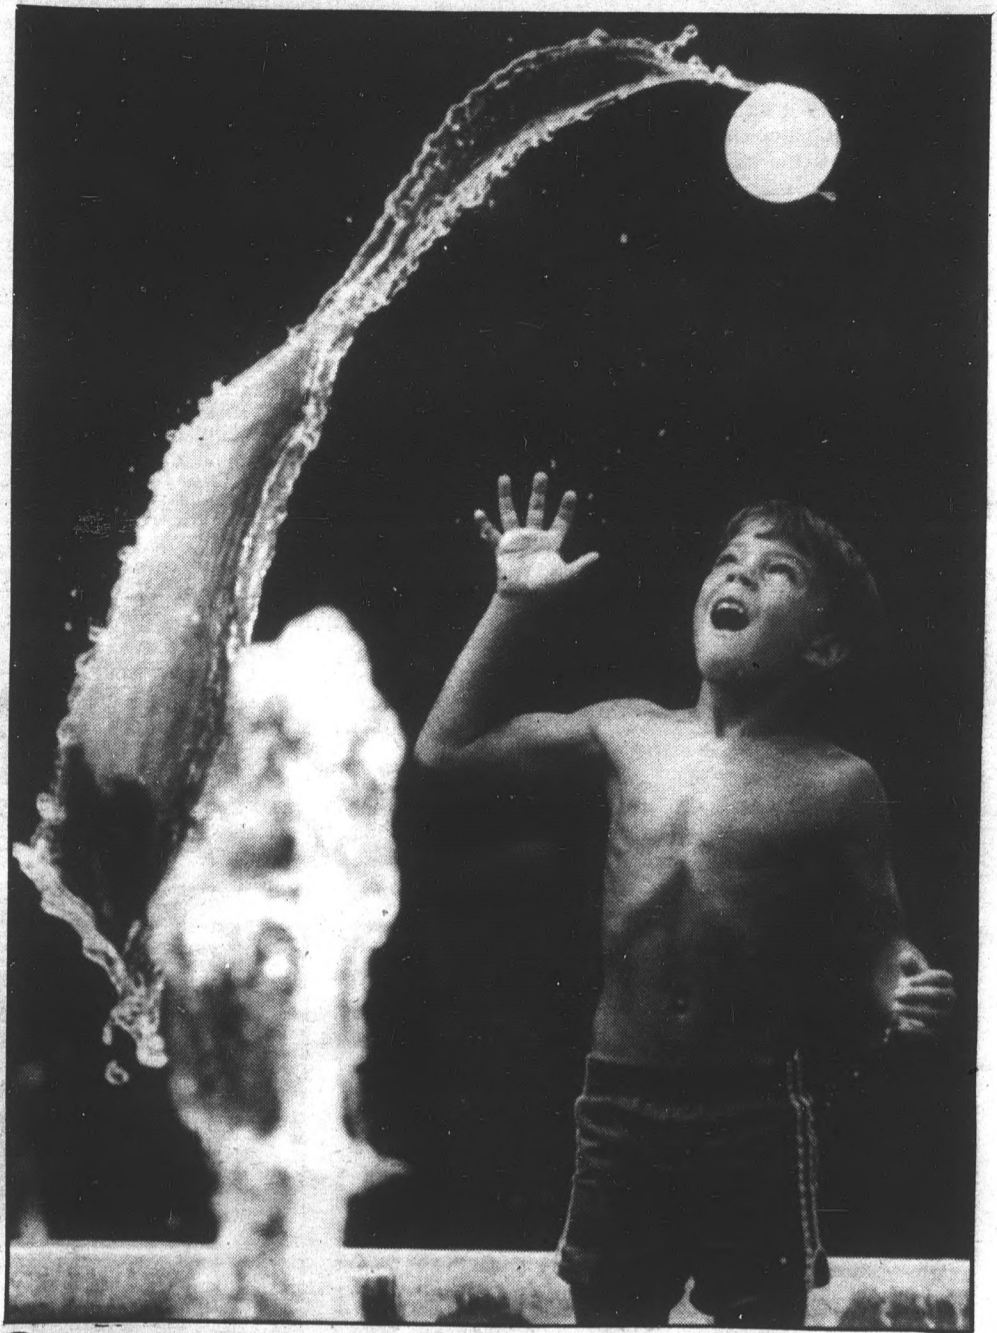

"The University shouldn't just bury its head in the sand," he said. "If we're going to teach responsible drinking, the University should play a part in it."

He said ASASU has taken the position that a University Club would be an asset if it served alcohol on a limited basis or only with meals.

"The purpose isn't to provide a saloon, but a component in staying financially dependent is alcohol," he said. "It's a fact in our society."

"Even club members who don't drink will benefit because alcohol available will lower the food prices," he said.

Cumiskey said ASU has surveyed about 15 other universities with faculty clubs and they said the sale of alcohol keeps their clubs afloat.

ASU grad hopes for success with film production

By VICKIE CHACHERE
State Press

COLORADO SPRINGS, Colo. — ASU graduate Todd Headlee doesn't fit the mold of a Hollywood producer. As the 28-year-old Colorado Springs, Colo., native sips a chocolate milkshake in his hometown Village Inn restaurant, he looks more like Andy Hardy than a movie mogul.

Headlee, creator of "The Men of Arizona State" calendar that inspired a nationwide beefcake craze five years ago, IS Andy Hardy. He's happy. He's optimistic. He's clean-cut. He's in Colorado Springs for his 10-year high school reunion. And, he's about to put on the show of his life.

After four years of struggling in Hollywood as a never-quite-made-it producer, Headlee will begin production this fall of his first film, "Campus Man," which chronicles the exploits of a hunky ASU diving star who finds instant fame after his entrepreneur roommate convinces him to pose for the University's all-male calendar.

The $6 million movie is being co-produced by Paramount Pictures and filmed by RKO Studios. Filming begins at ASU Oct. 6.

The story is based on Headlee's experiences as a college entrepreneur and a male calendar star during the early 1980s

'A movie hasn't really been done about ASU. That fun-in-the-sun, upbeat kind of life.'

— Todd Headlee

and on what he calls the "pressures and jealousies of sudden notoriety."

"(The movie) is sort of a 'Risky Business' type movie," Headlee said. "But cleaner. This movie is so all-American there isn't even a sex scene in it."

It's that "all-American" image, Headlee said, that made the "Men of Arizona State" the second-highest selling calendar — only Ziggy sold more — during the early 80s, and Headlee is banking on that same image to bring in the box office dollars.

"What we are promoting are people who are happy, people who are healthy," Headlee said. "A movie hasn't really been done about ASU. That fun-in-the-sun, upbeat kind of life."

Brat-packers John Cryer (Pretty in Pink), Andrew McCarthy (St. Elmo's Fire) and John Cusak (One Crazy Summer) are being considered for the role of the slick college entrepreneur fashioned after Headlee.

For the diving star role, Paramount is hoping to discover someone with just the right combination of dark hair, blue eyes and diving ability, Headlee said.

"We want this to be a little bit like '10,'" he said. Nobody knew who Bo Derek was before she made that movie. Whoever gets the lead role is going to be an overnight success."

Ron Casden, a pioneer in fashion and music video, will be directing the film, with Producer Peggy Fowler, a 16-year-veteran of the movie business.

Headlee said much of the conflict in the movie — between the diving star and the entrepreneur — is based on a combination of incidents that occurred before he sold the rights to the calendar in 1982.

In the movie, the young schemer pushes his roommate, the diver, into the spotlight, which results in all types of trauma for the reluctant star.

Boy mistakes handgun; shoots younger cousin

BALTIMORE (AP) — A 5-year-old boy mistook a handgun for a toy and critically wounded his 2-year-old cousin, police said.

Dontia Lamont Farrow was shot in the head Saturday night and was in critical condition Monday at Johns Hopkins Hospital.

The victim's grandmother, who cares for him, told police she and other family members left the children alone in the house while the rest of the family worked in the yard.

The 5-year-old apparently found the handgun and, thinking it was a toy, began playing with it.

An investigation is continuing, said Debbie Porter, a spokeswoman for the state police.

1,200 dead from gas; toll continues to rise

YAOUNDE, Cameroon (AP) — Gas spewing from a volcanic lake in northwestern Cameroon killed at least 1,200 people and more victims may be found, President Paul Biya said Monday.

Information Minister Georges Ngango earlier told reporters that military reports from the scene spoke of a death toll of at least 2,000.

"The result of the disaster so far is about 1,200 dead," Biya told a news conference in the capital of this tropical West African nation. But he said the casualty figures were not complete.

He said between 200 and 300 people injured by the fumes were being treated in hospitals, and army teams were still searching the four-square-mile disaster area for more victims of the disaster that started Friday.

"Wind blew toxic gases over the villages, and this is what brought death to the people," Biya said.

Ngango, the information minister, said earlier that many villagers fled the toxic gases while others were evacuated from a wide region around Lake Nios, about 200 miles northwest of Yaounde.

Joseph Mokassa, top staff aide to the provincial governor in Bamenda, the provincial capital, said by telephone he saw many dead but did not have precise figures.

President Paul Biya ordered that the dead be buried immediately to head off the spread of disease.

Officials said the nearest large settlement, the town of Wum with about 10,000 residents, was being evacuated.

A government announcement Sunday night reported the killer gas was hydrogen sulfide, but volcanic experts questioned the analysis.

Haroun Tazieff, France's pre-eminent vulcanologist, was quoted by the French press as saying hydrogen sulfide is light enough to dissipate quickly and has such a strong odor that people would be alerted and flee.

Tazieff said it was much more likely that a large quantity of colorless, odorless carbon monoxide, released from beneath the lake's surface, hugged the ground, killing the villagers before they knew it.

Company fails to find location for waste plant

PHOENIX (AP) — A company under contract to build Arizona's first hazardous-waste processing plant has failed to find water at the site chosen for the facility, officials say.

"It's a very serious concern," Jarrell Southall, contract administrator for ENSCO Inc., said Monday. Water is needed for steam generation and to operate a "scrubber," which will remove toxic materials from incinerator gasses, he said.

ENSCO has a contract with the state to build an incinerator and other hazardous-waste processing facilities on a site near Mobile by early 1988.

Southall said a $50,000 well hit bedrock at 620 feet and no recoverable water was found. A consultant will conduct electronic studies of the soil and rock in the area before another well is drilled, he said.

Despite the water problems, ENSCO remains "generally within our schedule" to begin operating early in 1988, Southall said.

pac-10

University athletes will comply with new policy

CALIFORNIA — With the NCAA continuing to apply pressure for stricter drug testing in college athletes, Stanford is expected to reluctantly implement its own drug testing program next year, following the example of eight other Pac-10 universities.

At the beginning of every sports season, the NCAA requires all collegiate athletes to sign a consent form agreeing to conform and abide by prescribed NCAA regulations.

"We're sort of caught between a rock and a hard place," said Stanford Faculty Athletic Representative Jack Friedenthal. "On one hand, we want people to take responsibility for their own actions. On the other hand, if someone is caught, then we're out of bowl games and championships.

"What do you do when one player blows it — the whole team is out."

In the past, Stanford Athletic Director Andy Geiger has been adverse to drug-testing Stanford athletes and has told the Times Tribune that the University would only institute such a practice if forced by the NCAA.

Once drug testing is implemented, Stanford teams with a possibility of securing a post-season berth would have testing done prior to that competition, and in effect, "give our people some sort of protection," Friedenthal said.

Cutbacks

Students strive to bridge gap between costs, aid decrease

By J.B. SINNOTT
State Press

Between 1,200 and 1,500 ASU students were cut or received reduced aid this year from the federal Pell Grant program, a University official said.

Paul Barberini, director of ASU's Student Financial Assistance Office, said the average reduction was $600 per student.

Barberini said coupled with an increase in educational costs this year at ASU of $400, these students are searching for an additional $1,000 to remain in school.

But Barberini said these students are just part of the hundreds of ASU students that are falling into the gap between paying for education and locating funding alternatives.

"It's sort of like driving down the road and seeing the bridge is out," he said. "What does a student do this year (beyond) what he did last?"

A recent 4.3 percent cut in financial aid, brought about by the implementation of the Gramm-Rudman deficit reduction bill, resulted in a 20 percent cut in Pell Grants, the largest of the grant programs at ASU.

Barberini said the majority of the students who lost money because of the grant program cuts are depending on loans to make up the difference. The trouble is that many of the students who lost grant funds have already reached the $2,500 per year borrowing limit for undergraduates, he said.

Barberini said a major provision of the Congressional budget compromise will likely be an increase in the undergraduate borrowing limit — from $2,500 each year to $4,400 each year.

Chris Cumiskey, Associated Students president, said the trend to increase loan availability while reducing grant money is dangerous.

He said the government is "continuing a policy of indebtedness" that can only lead to future trouble.

Barberini said some graduates are finding they are unable to repay the loans they used to finance their education.

"My concern is that we have public school teachers starting at $18,000 a year with a $13,000 debt," he said.

But Barberini said there are not many alternatives. Most students who need financial assistance are already working and their parents have already been asked to pay "what we thought was reasonable."

He said unless a solution is developed, "The student will potentially cease to be full time or cease to be a student."

"I think we have to communicate to the people in the legislature that financing secondary education needs restructuring."

"We're trying to get the (Arizona Board of Regents) to effect a lobbying effort to the legislature," he said.

The Arizona Students' Association will present a report on financial aid problems at Arizona's three universities in the September meeting at UA.

The principles of a janitor

Matthews Center janitor John Whitehurst was fired last week, ostensibly for insubordination — he refused to be fitted for a uniform in compliance with a new uniform policy for Physical Plant employees.

In essence, however, he has been fired because he refused to be fitted into a social stigma. John Whitehurst did not show up for his fitting because of a principle to which he has held steadfast.

What Whitehurst, who has a keen mind and a sharp intellect, realizes and Del Overstreet, physical plant director, apparently does not grasp is that most of society looks down on janitors. Whitehurst, along with fellow janitor Bill McKinney, did not want to be pigeonholed any further and paid a steep price for their act of civil disobedience.

It is not that John did not like his job. On the contrary, he says he enjoys cleaning things up. He has a sense of pride in his work, comparing it to the pride one takes when cleaning the car.

It's not that he goldbricked on the job. Indeed, he kept to himself pretty much and stuck to the task at hand. He was courteous and prompt when fulfilling requests.

In general, he is a likable man who did a good job.

But he is also a man of substance and principle. When you could get John to stop for a two- or three-minute conversation, you quickly found the depth of the man. He was well versed in many subjects and had obviously exercised his intellect. Indeed, at least one of us has incorporated his thoughts on a subject into a book report for a class.

Those principles led him to take his personal stand against the uniform policy, which requires Physical Plant employees to wear uniform shirts provided by the University during duty hours.

Overstreet told the State Press the uniforms promote a sense of pride and professionalism. Obviously they do not, or Whitehurst and McKinney would have jumped at the chance to wear them. If they promote so much pride, Mr. Overstreet, then why don't you take off your tie and wear your uniform shirt, colored for plant bureaucrats.

Whitehurst's pride came from doing a good job, not something so artificial as wearing a uniform. That should make him a valued employee of the University. Instead it has made him unemployed. Something is wrong here.

It's not Whitehurst's attitude; it's the Plant's uniform policy. A reconsideration of the policy and a rehiring of the fired employees is in order.

Americans disrespectful of country's symbolism

Patriotism.

It is something every American has a sense of — one time or another. That's the problem.

I don't consider myself to be an extreme patriot. I'm not saying it is a bad thing to be an extreme patriot. My grandfather used to get tears in his eyes and a lump in his throat when he saw an American flag and heard "The Star-Spangled Banner."

I think of myself as an American, sometimes proud, sometimes shameful.

During my summer vacation, I noticed something for the first time that really disturbed me. Why is it that businesses around the Valley and anywhere are not bringing the American flag down the pole when the day is done?

I don't know if this tradition is absolute law. The armed forces treat it as so. It was a daily ceremony at camp. (I remember having to be so careful that the flag would not touch the ground.) When it was explained to me that an American flag would have to be burned if as little as one corner made contact with the earth, it seemed like a serious thing.

These days flags are strung up for who knows how long? No one seems to know they're there until they blow away with the heavy winds of the monsoon. (This applies to the Phoenix area.) There's no telling how long a flag can last anywhere else in the United States. I guess it depends on weather conditions.

One night while I was contemplating this column, I took a drive through our city streets. I saw flags still flying long after sunset and without the proper after-dark lighting. Others had torn stripes and ragged edges. Some flags were more of a dingy gray and black instead of a brilliant red, white and blue. Still more were so sun-faded they couldn't legally be called flags.

This seemed to me the biggest contradiction of the year with Americans being the hypocrites. I cannot imagine the negligence of a task that is so simple to do and doesn't take a whole lot of time, not to mention the degree of underlying importance.

Because Independence Day comes only once a year, maybe Americans think this is the only day they are allowed to show respect and praise for their country and their flag. (They are one and the same.) To be perfectly honest, I don't think the majority of this country's inhabitants are that stupid.

This past Fourth of July was one to be remembered by any American who has a television. Sure, Liberty Weekend was a little corny and a little commercial. But hey, that's America.

The reason we spent all that money and time for this production was to reinforce our pride in America and for what it stands.

Amy Frischknecht
Asst. Managing Editor

Anyone who saw the opening ceremonies of Liberty Weekend has got to admit that it was a truly phenomenal event. Spotlited flags waved majestically in the wind as the Statue of Liberty was unveiled, and Neil Diamond belted out his tune "America."

A Navy F-14 hovered above the aircraft carrier where President Reagan had arrived and tipped its nose to him in an act of pride and reverence. You can't help but feel proud to live in a country such as this.

I can't remember the last time I saw a whole crowd of fans at a football game stand, take off their hats and sing "The Star-Spangled Banner." You should not use the excuse that the words cannot be recalled. It's not a sin to fake it until you get the whole song down pat.

Another thing that really irks me is people who talk during the playing of the national anthem. These inconsiderate people should be stared at until they die of embarrassment. Kids and adults who run up and down the bleachers during the playing of the song should be tripped immediately, thereby made a fool of.

Too harsh a punishment? Maybe, but Americans have got to learn that freedom does not come cheap.

Patriotism. It is not something that people should feel silly about having. If for some reason you find yourself blushing from discomfort when your fellow Americans are showing respect for the country, think of how many people in other countries have yet to know the meaning of patriotism and freedom.

Cast informed ballot

Editor:

Don't vote.

Does that sound like heresy to you? It should. You have been taught that it is your civic duty to vote. After every election the papers report the turnout.

Don't go in and punch your ballot just to be doing it. Don't vote — just to satisfy yourself that you are fulfilling some requirement for citizenship. There is approximately one week before the primary election, and you should already have received your sample ballot. Do you know any of the names on it?

Which of those dudes do you want your party "stuck" with? Which of them stand for good principles? Do any of them?

Does old Whozit speak with a forked tongue? Will he vote your tax money for abortions and for gifts to Communist countries and for subsidies to money-losing businesses?

Will he vote to take away your right to keep and bear arms, or your right to educate your children as you see fit?

Ah, here's a familiar name. I'll vote for him. But do I recognize the name because I have seen it on a hundred signs, or because I saw it in the newspapers being indicted?

Don't vote just because you are registered. Vote smart. Don't merely cancel an informed vote. Of course, if you are going to vote regardless, take the next two weeks to find out something about the candidates' positions.

Candidate object of 'smear campaign', prof maintains

By KERRY FEHR
State Press

Allegations that a candidate for superintendent of public instruction misrepresented his credentials are part of "a smear campaign," an ASU education professor said.

Professor Roger Axford, who has done international adult education research in England, said candidate Patrick Walsh's education in England is equivalent to a master's degree in the United States.

Walsh claims he received a master's degree from Leeds University in England, but he actually received a certificate from Bretton Hall, also in England.

He said he has two letters from Bretton Hall stating that his study is "equivalent" to a master's degree in the United States.

Walsh, a democrat, also said Bretton Hall was affiliated with Leeds when he graduated in 1972.

To illustrate the relationship, Walsh said graduates of Mesa Community College can claim they earned a degree from the Maricopa Community College system.

He said ASU accepted 27 credit hours from Bretton Hall in 1979 toward his doctorate degree in elementary education.

Walsh said the controversy over his credentials arose during a political luncheon when a high school teacher from University High School in Tucson — the home high school of Walsh's democratic opponent C. Diane Bishop — stood up and called Walsh a "phoney."

Reginald Barr, a social studies teacher, said he had two telegrams from Leeds University stating that Walsh was never enrolled at the university, and had never earned a master's degree.

Axford said Walsh's certificate is a legitimate degree, and Bretton Hall is a college of Leeds University, just as Oxford University has "constituent colleges."

"(His opponents) are trying to smear him," Axford said. "It's a rotten, damn thing."

police report

University police reported the following incidents during the 24-hour period ending at 1:30 p.m. Monday:

•A pastel print purse containing two checkbooks, a credit card, $3 and pictures was stolen from Manzanita Residence Hall.

The owner reported that the thief walked into her room, grabbed the purse and fled on foot.

Police identified the suspect as a 5-foot-8 black man in his early 20s, with a stocky build. He had a afro-type haircut and was wearing plaid shorts and a yellow tank top.

Tempe officials terminate plans for parking permits

By DAVE HODGES
State Press

Tempe parking officials have called off plans to require residential parking permits on streets north of ASU because of commercial interests in the area.

John Brusky, a Tempe city engineer, said the parking permits would have created too many problems for customers of area businesses to be practical.

Residential permits are required in the 14th and 15th Street areas south of campus and Brusky said the residents love it.

"They've said things like 'I can finally park on the street now' and 'I can look outside and not see cars everywhere.' People are responding to it very favorably. Only a handful are against it.

Last April, Tempe officials removed 26 parking limitation signs in an area bordered by College and Myrtle Avenues and 5th and 7th Streets that prohibited parking between 7 a.m. and 9 a.m.

"The signs just made everyone drive around the block a few times until it hit 9 o'clock," Brusky said. "It was a pain-in-the-neck for just about everybody."

Brusky said Tempe police officers and residents of the area have benefited the most from the sign removal.

"It's made it much easier for the police," he said. "Before they had to plan their rounds to be between 7 a.m. and 9 a.m. up there. It was very difficult to enforce the ordinance.

"The residents love the switch. It has made it easier for everyone, especially the ASU students that have earlier classes."

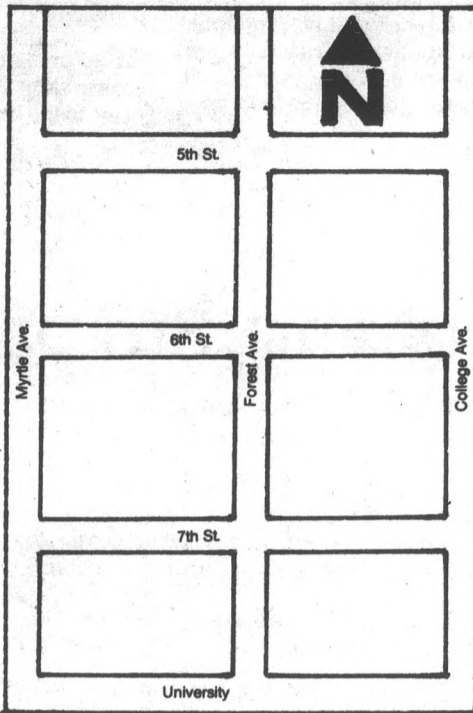

Tempe Police Lt. John Garlington said the new change will also benefit the police department.

"Anytime you have an area with one type of sign, it makes it easier," Garlington said.

"Many areas of the city have all kinds of signs — half-hour parking, two-hour parking, 24-hour parking ... it's very confusing for shoppers, students, residents, even the police.

"It's decreased the area that we have to enforce," he said. "Most of the spaces will be filled every day, but all the cars will be legally parked.

"The area around there is fairly commercial and we have had no complaints

This map indicates where ASU students can park without penalty up there, so why change it," he said.

But Brusky said Tempe officials may be considering more parking changes, including the expansion of residential parking permits.

"I can see permit parking slowly spreading out. The process of instituting it is time consuming," he said. "We send out surveys to the residents and we try to work with them before doing anything."

Brusky said that the city periodically studies certain areas for changes. The next area slated to be surveyed is in the vicinity of Daley Park, south of ASU.

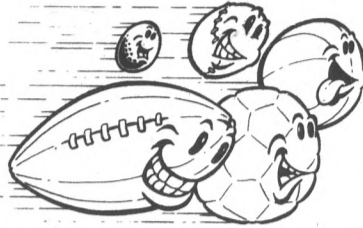

Other areas also scheduled for study include an area west of Mill Avenue, Ash Avenue between Hudson Lane and University Drive, and part of Maple Avenue.

City officials have also studied a portion of Farmer Avenue, but have ruled out the possibility of residential permits because of commercialization in the vicinity

Attorneys request new trial for convicted pilot

By VICKIE CHACHERE
State Press

Attorneys for a Paradise Valley man convicted of manslaughter for the deaths of two ASU students in a 1985 air crash have asked for a new trial.

Attorneys for Robin Thompson argue that Thompson was wrongly convicted in a Yavapai County Superior Court after a witness testified that he believed Thompson was at fault for the crash that killed the students and injured two others.

The attorneys contend it was the responsibility of the jury to determine who was at fault for the crash and presiding Judge James Hancock should have ordered the witness' statement stricken from the court record.

A hearing date on the motion has been set for Sept. 9. Hancock will also be presiding at that hearing.

Suanne Rudley, one of Thompson's attorneys, said it is doubtful that a new trial will be granted.

"It's unusual for a motion for a new trial to be granted," Rudley said. "The Thompsons haven't made any decisions if they want to take this to (an appellate court.)"

Thompson, 21, was convicted in July for his involvement in the April 14, 1985 crash that killed Samantha Fraser, 18, and Timothy Streit, 21. The students were part of an nine-plane group on their way to Grasshopper Point near Sedona for a picnic.

According to a request for a new trial filed in Yavapai County Superior Court, aviation expert Philip Atkins was allowed to state his opinion that Thompson was at fault or caused the accident that killed Fraser and Streit.

Thompson's attorneys contend that Atkins was allowed to convict Thompson, when it was the jury's job to hand down the conviction.

The attorneys also are questioning Hancock's decision to allow information about Thompson's conduct prior to the collision.

Rudley said the court had ruled in December that only information about Thompson's conduct during the 15 minutes prior to the crash could be admitted as evidence.

She said the court's ruling was disregarded when witnesses for the prosecution were allowed to give accounts of Thompson's actions that were not within that time frame, resulting in "highly prejudicial" evidence against Thompson.

University states construction of 2nd, 3rd parking garages

By DAVID ROOK
State Press

Construction of ASU's second parking structure is scheduled to begin later this week, the assistant director of parking and transit said.

Richard Landreth said the second parking garage is scheduled to open by February 1987.

The four-level garage will be built at McAllister Drive and Tyler Street where the McAllister Office Complex now stands.

The garage will provide spaces for about 823 cars.

Bidding for the second parking structure was held in July, but Landreth said no contracts have been awarded yet.

Landreth said the bid for the second garage is projected to be about $2.2 million.

Funding for the parking garage will be part of the $9 million bonding authority that parking services acquired last spring.

Landreth said he is under obligation to spend the entire $9 million in bonding for parking services.

"In fact, plans are underway for the construction of a third parking structure," he said.

"In November, we are scheduled to start structure number three and have it finished by June of 1987," Landreth said.

The third parking structure will be built on the current site of Lot 9, located adjacent to the College of Architecture.

The structure will also be four levels with 530 parking stalls, he said.

Landreth also said construction of more parking garages can be expected as construction of University buildings consume current parking lots.

Harmony

Cooperation, kinship maintain village for 10,000 years

By ED SCHUBERT
State Press

Acoma Pueblo, a small village of adobe houses in western New Mexico, has been inhabited continuously for more than 10,000 years.

And it may hold some lessons for human survival.

Anthropology professor Alfred Dittert, who has been studying the Native American community since 1946, said the pueblo has adapted well to the arid climate of the Southwest.

"Look at it this way," he said. "The Acoma Pueblo has existed in this environment for several thousand years."

In contrast, "we have made such radical changes in the environment because of our technology in the 400 years since the Europeans arrived. It always makes you wonder what it will look like two thousand years from now," Dittert said.

The Acoma religion and culture are important parts of their adaptation to the desert, he said.

"A great deal of it is focused on harmony between people, and between people and the environment," he said.

"Harmony has to exist between people and the universe."

Consequently, cooperation is a highly prized social value in

'There is a lot in the way the native American people looked at the environment that was very healthy.'

— Alfred Dittert

Acoma society, Dittert said.

"In the Southwest, it takes a cooperative effort to exist," he said. "There is a lot in the way the Native American people looked at the environment that was very healthy."

He said the pueblo's social organization illustrates the cooperative nature of their society.

"What they have done is establish themselves in small (clan) communities which have tended to be organized along kinship terms," Dittert said.

He said different clans live in separate areas of the pueblo, with each clan having its own responsibilities to the pueblo as a whole.

"The Cacique (headman) of the village always comes from one clan," he said. "Another clan might be responsible for gathering salt."

"The cohesion of the society is based on reciprocal duties," Dittert said. "That's what keeps them together."

The continuous habitation of the pueblo was disrupted for a short time in 1599, when the Spanish explorer and conqueror Zaldívar destroyed the village and took its inhabitants away as captives, he said.

But many villagers escaped and made their way back to Acoma.

In 1688, Acoma took part in the Pueblo Revolt, during which the natives drove the Spanish out of the Southwest, he said.

Dittert is using a computer to re-analyze the data on Acoma Pueblo that he and his colleagues have gathered over the past four decades.

"What I'm trying to do now is go back and reorganize all this in (an effort to get) new information out of old data," he said.

Treaty conflict delays ASU bid for classical station

By MICHAEL BURGESS
State Press

ASU's application for a classical FM radio station has been returned because it violates a U.S.-Mexican treaty, but the request is expected to be refiled this week, a lawyer for KAET-TV said.

Larry Miller, an attorney with the Schwartz, Woods and Miller law firm in Washington, D.C., said the application was returned because it violates an agreement between the United States and Mexico prohibiting U.S. radio stations within 199 miles of the border from broadcasting into northern Mexico.

The treaty does not specify the watt limitation, but ASU's original application for a station with 130 watts was apparently too much, Miller said.

He said the delay did not cause the University to lose ground in applying for the station.

In June, the Arizona Board of Regents filed an application with the Federal Communications Commission to obtain the 89.5 slot on the FM dial. The slot is reserved for non-commercial public radio.

If ASU obtains the station, it will be operated out of Stauffer Hall by the University's public broadcasting station, KAET-TV, Channel 8.

KAET currently retransmits programs on the Beethoven Network from Chicago that can only be picked up through stereo television.

Funding for the station will come from $250,000 appropriated by the Arizona Legislature.

Additional funding for the radio station will come from grants from the Corporation for Public Broadcasting, which supplies grants for KAET's television programming.

The station also will rely on donations from listeners such as Friends of Channel 8.

Miller said the Maricopa Community College District is the only other applicant for the classical station.

ASU was first given an option to establish a classical music station after KONC-FM switched formats in March. Classical music returned to Valley airwaves on July 14 when KMZK-FM changed its programming to classical music and fine arts.

Lee Frischknecht, KAET assistant general manager, said the return of classical music to the Valley will not stop ASU's bid for a station.

"They have switched their format more than enough for a period of time," Frischknecht said. "That is why we want a non-commercial station."

Bob Baker, operations manager at KONC, said he would welcome competition in the classical music market.

"We need several classical stations just like there are several rock stations," Baker said. "Competition can benefit listeners and us because it makes us look at ourselves."

KJZZ-FM, a jazz station, is located on the Mesa Community College campus.

Students encouraged to explore new Health Dimensions

By MICHAEL BURGESS
State Press

ASU's Student Health Center has started a new program to help students understand their sexuality, keep trim and assist students with alcohol and drug problems.

The program is called Health Dimensions. It replaces and expands the Health Center's former Physical, Intellectual, Emotional, Spiritual program.

Billie Lindsey, a health and physical educator who came to ASU from the University of Iowa earlier this summer, is the director of Health Dimensions.

"The program encompasses the concept of the total person and the nature of health," Lindsey said. "The greatest part of our work is in researching, planning and presenting up-to-date information and workshops to students."

Lindsey said the program's name was changed to make the program more recognizable and easier for students to identify.

P.I.E.S. was an acronym for Physical, Intellectual, Emotional and Spiritual.

"Our programs have really served students in the past," Lindsey said. "We're here to assist students in recognizing that they may have a problem and working out solutions to the problem."

Lindsey said she expects Health Dimensions to continue P.I.E.S.' Alcohol Awareness week and the Great American Smokeout.

Health Dimensions also plans to expand into fitness-oriented programs this semester. The programs will deal with stress management, weight control and assertiveness training.

Beginning Sept. 24, Health Dimensions will offer a "wellness" series, Wednesdays at noon.

The series will present programs on stress, nutrition, evaluating a diet and information on nutrition and cancer.

Health Dimensions is located in the lobby of the Student Health Center.

Students can receive information at the Student Health Center or by calling 965-4721.

ASU researcher appointed to review approval of NutraSweet

By ED SCHUBERT
State Press

An ASU nutritional researcher has been appointed by the U.S. General Accounting Office to participate in a review of the Food and Drug Administration's 1981 approval of NutraSweet.

Woodrow Monte, director of ASU's Food and Nutritional Laboratories, was appointed Aug. 1, to the congressional agency post after fighting FDA approval of NutraSweet for more than five years.

Monte said the artificial sweetener aspartame, marketed under the trade name NutraSweet, contains methanol — methyl or wood alcohol — which is "a very sinister, accumulative poison."

"Methyl alcohol is found in some liquors. It is the substance responsible for hangovers and for the serious consequences of alcohol withdrawal, such as seizures and depression," he said.

"Aspartame is a small molecule made up of three components," including menthanol, Monte said. "When digested, these components are released into the blood stream."

"Aspartame releases into the human bloodstream one molecule of methanol for each molecule of aspartame consumed. That's the basic fact."

But Tim Smith, a spokesman for G.D. Searle & Co., which manufactures NutraSweet, said, "Woodrow Monte is wrong, wrong, wrong."

"The amount of methanol in aspartame is much less than occurs naturally in many foods," Smith said. "One eight-ounce glass of tomato juice yields twice the amount of methanol than in one 16-ounce soft drink containing aspartame."

"Methanol is a very minute by-product, and it's metabolized by the body. It's not harmful."

Don Selvey, epidemiology specialist for the Arizona Department of Health Services' disease prevention division, said DHS "has evaluated NutraSweet and determined that it does not present a health hazard and should not be banned."

Monte cites an Environmental Protection Agency report to support his position:

Methanol "is considered a cumulative poison due to the low rate of excretion once it is absorbed. In the body, methanol is oxidized to formaldehyde and formic acid; both of these metabolites are toxic."

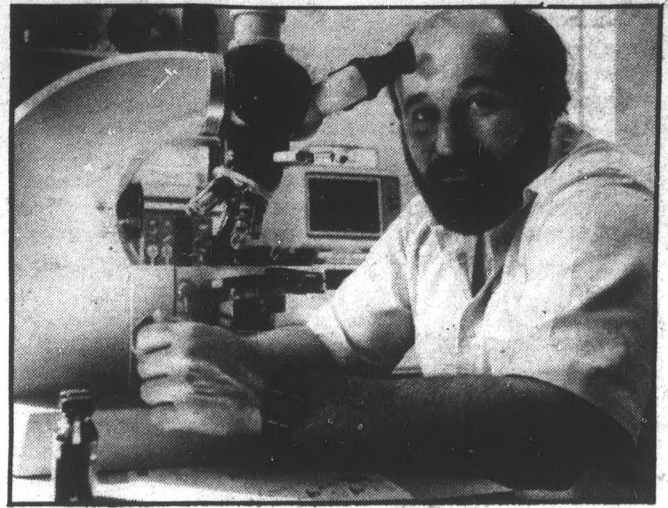

Monte said the EPA considers the consumption of eight milligrams of methanol a day to be the maximum safe dosage, but that an average can of soda containing aspartame has 15 to 26 milligrams of methanol.

Monte said "NutraSweet, in fairly low concentrations, caused seizures and death in monkeys. This was covered up."

"But methyl alcohol is more dangerous to humans by a factor of 10 to 100 than to any laboratory animal. Humans are just so much more sensitive."

"It should not be allowed in the food chain."

Long term effects of methanol poisoning include seizures, deterioration of brain cells, birth defects and cancer, Monte said.

Woodrow Monte

Monte added he believes the reason NutraSweet was approved was due to the power of the NutraSweet lobby, and that there is a strong connection between G.D. Searle & Co., the FDA and the White House.

Movie

That story is based loosely on Headlee's own experiences of propelling his roommate, Dave Lindman, to a top modeling career after Lindman posed for the first edition of the "Men of Arizona State" in 1980.

But the "Men of Arizona State" also changed Headlee's life. He went from waiting tables six nights a week to earning more than $70,000 a year. He also was able to arrange meetings between several of the calendar's stars and a GQ magazine photo crew.

Headlee quickly adds that the three years of calendar success were not all autograph sessions and hunk-crazed women.

"That calendar consumed my life for three years," Headlee said. "All anybody ever wanted to talk about was the calendar. I didn't know who my real friends were and I was the biggest hermit my last year of school.

Headlee sold his interest in the business for $15,000 shortly after he graduated with a bachelor of science degree in business administration. He then took off to Hollywood to launch his movie career.

But Hollywood wasn't all he had dreamed about, Headlee said. While "Campus Man" was little more than an idea for a movie, Headlee found himself in the midst of a financial crisis.

"I went to the beach every day and ate at the finest restaurants," he said. "I wanted to live out a fantasy, I just lived it a little long."

With the profits from the calendars gone, Headlee, now a mailroom clerk at the William Morris Talent Agency at $800 a month, found himself with $3,000 a month in bills.

"The calendars seemed so easy. It took off and it was such a success. I thought when I moved to Los Angeles it would happen again. I had the biggest slap in the face."

Sun Devil strives for record-breaking year

Senior quarterback Van Raaphorst to have his year, lead team to UA win

By JAY TAYLOR
State Press

This should be Jeff Van Raaphorst's year. The senior quarterback is entering his third year as the starter, has had a year to learn coach John Cooper's offensive system and has been injury-free for over a year.

He had a mild case of tendinitis in his arm this summer, but it has cleared up. He ices his arm after each practice as a precautionary measure. The knee injured in the Oklahoma State game of 1984 has given him no more trouble at all.

If he stays healthy, Van Raaphorst will become one of the all-time leaders in Sun Devil history in both passing and total offense.

Knowing the system should enable the offense to be more productive this year than last year, according to Van Raaphorst.

"I feel really comfortable this year," he said. "Basically everything is the same from last year. It's not like I'm having to learn the plays and learn the reads. This year I am just working on the reads and then reacting to what I read.

"We're moving a lot faster than we ever did before because we are just able to pick up right where we left off in spring and last fall, not having to say, 'OK, this is where we line up for the huddle.'"

One thing that will help Van Raaphorst feel even more comfortable is the return of starting wide receivers Aaron Cox and Bruce Hill, who saw a good deal of time last year, along with tight ends Jeff Gallimore and Stein Koss.

Van Raaphorst thinks the tight ends will play a major role in the offense this year.

"I think we have to go to our tight ends more this year because they are so good," he said. "When you throw the ball to the outside as much as we do, it tends to leave big holes in the middle, and as good as those guys are at getting away from people one-on-one and at beating zones, by throwing to them, we will really open up the passing game for us."

If the passing game does open up, Van Raaphorst will have the opportunity to show what he has been working on during the off-season — his consistency.

The single area he wants to improve the most is his interception rate. He said he has been working hard on reading defenses and Jeff Van Raaphorst, shown here in action against UA last year, is ready for his senior season. He hopes to beat the Wildcats this year, but doesn't want to overemphasize the game.

Tradition

Freshmen must accept responsibility to hate UA

Another semester begins. Another crop of new freshmen hits the ASU campus.

There's really no other creature on the orb quite like a freshman. Nothing else captures the same air of enthusiasm combined with slight fear and confusion that makes the species so endearing.

One of the things that freshmen are most enthusiastic about — and often most confused about — is sports. If you read Jay Taylor's advice in yesterday's special section, you got a crash course in how to attend an ASU football game. Jay's last paragraph even highlighted the importance of loathing the Wildcats of the South.

But this is a subject that deserves some more attention. Intra-state rivalry is a difficult thing to handle, and one that is peculiar to the college experience.

In order to hate the enemy properly, one has to hate him for the right reasons. You can't just go around saying that you hate the UA without knowing precisely why. Otherwise, people mistake your normal, healthy hatred of the enemy for some kind of weakness of mind or coldness of heart.

The following are a few suggestions for all of the right reasons for hating the UA.

TRADITION

Hating the Wildcats is an age-old custom here in Tempe. Sun Devils have hated them ever since they were wild kittens; there has always been tension along Interstate 10.

Many these days have a tendency to scoff at tradition. They claim that the wisdom of our age supersedes the silly superstitions and prejudices of all that went before us. They claim that we need not pay attention to tradition, not realizing that they are like leaves of a tree who want to ignore the trunk.

Bob Heiler
Sports Editor

Not only is it unwise to have no regard for tradition, it is fortunately impossible. Each of us owes a significant portion of what we are to what has gone before us; and in this case, hating the UA has definitely gone before us. Despite the dissent of some cat-huggers, the tradition will endure.

HISTORY

One might ask why it's always been a Sun Devil tradition to hate the UA. Obviously the tradition had to begin somehow. Who was the father of our hatred? To whom do we owe the pleasure of being able to engage in cat-hatred?

Well, ironically, we ultimately owe the pleasure to the Cats themselves. You see, it all started many years ago with the UA Sabertooths (or is that saberteeth?). Anyway, they had a coach by the name of Grog Smith, and everybody said he was mean enough to go stegosaurus hunting with a stick.

Grog had this kicker on his team. His name was Grunt Zendejas, and he had a brother who was a head case. His brother played for ASU.

In the first year of competition, ASU had won all but two of its games. The big game was coming up, and the boys couldn't wait to smash the Sabertooths (teeth). Whatever.

It was this game that Grog Smith chose to introduce his new recruit, a 178-foot-long, 4,800-pound freshman brontosaurus that he had trained to be a center.

These were the days before the NCAA had minimum ACT/SAT score requirements.

Then-ASU coach Rock Cooper cried foul, but to no avail. The UA was eventually fined for an obscure rule that specified the species of athletes, but that didn't change the outcome of the game — the feline critters won 27-24 on a last-second Grunt field goal. The Devils were knocked out of their Granite Bowl berth, and everyone on the team passed into utter obscurity.

So the right to hate the UA is ours. It was paid for with the very lifeblood of former Devils. In fact, it is a sacred trust left to us by our ancestors.

I have a friend who graduated from ASU and is now doing graduate work as a Wildcat. This can be a difficult thing for one to come to terms with, in light of the obligation placed upon us by the tradition of UA hatred.

But like the Christian doctrine of "love the sinner, hate the sin," it represents a challenge to our perspective. We have to learn to "love the student, hate the school."

It isn't easy, to be sure. No one ever said hating the UA was going to be easy.

It is, however, something on which each incoming freshman can bring to bear all of the enthusiasm and vigor for which his species is known.

For if each new generation does not infuse the tradition with energy, it will quickly dwindle and die.

And if you can't hate the Cats, who can you hate?

Men's golf coach resigns, fate of team unknown

By ANNETTE DE LA CRUZ
State Press

ASU golf coach George Boutell's resignation has left the athletic department wondering who will give direction to the men's golf team.

One possibility is interim coach Bill Mann.

Mann, who hasn't been on the intercollegiate golf scene for ten years, is no stranger to the Sun Devil golf program. He served as head coach for 15 seasons (1961-76), tutoring 24 all-Americans — including former coach Boutell.

"I've had some very rewarding experiences with ASU golf," Mann said. "From seeing the program develop during my time and with George, I'd hate to see it not continue as a driving force in collegiate golf."

"I have no thoughts or decision as of right now," Mann said. "I feel like I'm in a whirlwind with everything happening at once."

After 11 seasons as the head golf coach at ASU, Boutell announced his resignation.

"Although the timing of this resignation is extremely bad, I regretfully say that I am not happy in my position as head golf coach at Arizona State University," Boutell said. "Such unhappiness is not fair to the people I coach nor to the many boosters. I feel I have learned all there is to know about this profession and that it is time to move on."

Boutell, a 1967 graduate of ASU, was the first all-American in ASU history. He achieved this feat in 1966. During his college career he won several major tournaments including the Tucker Invitational, the Arizona State Amateur, the Southwest Amateur, the Trans-Mississippi Amateur and the Eastern Amateur.

His accomplishments in the coaching arena are just as numerous: six top-10 NCAA finishes, nine top-20 NCAA finishes, two Pac-10 championships and eight top-three conference finishes. He also coached 19 all-America golfers,

'The Oregon game is going to be the key. We can't afford to let down that week just because it is right between UCLA and USC.'

—Jeff Van Raaphorst

wants to become more of a complete player. "I'll do anything it takes to win," he said. "I don't want to go out on a marginal team. I want to go out on a really good team, and I think if I can cut my interceptions down and throw as many touchdown passes as possible, we should be able to win."

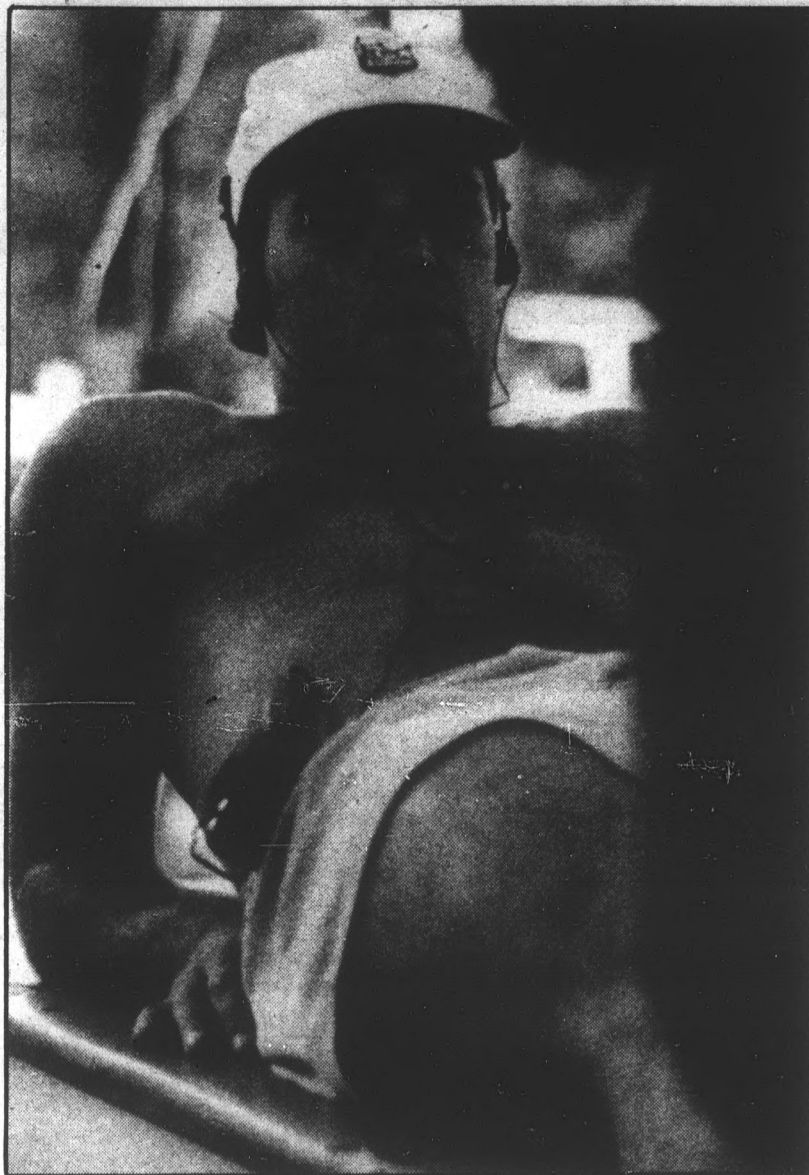

The key to winning in Van Raaphorst's mind is a fast start. He said if the Devils can win early and build confidence, they could be tough to beat later in the year.

After opening with three home games, ASU hits the road for games at UCLA, Oregon and USC.

"The Oregon game is going to be the key," he said. "We can't afford to let down that week just because it is right between UCLA and USC. We really have to guard against that."

And right in the middle of things is where Van Raaphorst wants to be at the end of the year. He, like all the other players, wants to beat the UA this year but said they can't put too much emphasis on that one game.

"We just have to take the game one week at a time," he said. "They have played well against us the last few years, and it would be great to go out with a win over them, but we can't look by anything else and overemphasize the UA game."

Notre Dame key player injured in car accident

SOUTH BEND, Ind. (AP) — Notre Dame basketball star David Rivers, injured in a weekend automobile accident, might not recover in time to play in the 1986-87 season, a surgeon said Monday.

Rivers, a guard who transformed a sluggish team into a fast-breaking one in his first two years, was listed in stable condition after surgery for a severe abdominal cut suffered in the accident Sunday, said a spokeswoman for Elkhart General Hospital, located about 20 miles east of South Bend.

Spokeswoman Barbara Barrett said Dr. Kirby Gross, the operating surgeon, predicts a complete recovery for Rivers, but his return for the coming season is questionable.

"He said (Rivers) will definitely be able to play, but it's really too soon to tell how soon he'll be back, whether it's this season or not," Barrett said.

"(Dr. Kirby) doesn't foresee any long-term disability," she said.

Notre Dame coach Digger Phelps said Rivers' recovery is the highest priority.

"As far as basketball, I'm really not concerned about that right now," Phelps said. "Knowing David, his will to live and his will to compete kept him going."

Rivers, 21, a junior from Jersey City, N.J., led the Irish to a 23-5 season last season, averaging a team-high 16.7 points per game. He scored 25 points in a 90-83 loss to Arkansas-Little Rock in the first round of the NCAA tournament.

Rivers was injured when a van driven by former teammate Ken Barlow went out of control after Barlow swerved to avoid an oncoming car about 15 miles southeast of the university campus, police said. Rivers was thrown through the windshield when the van rolled, police said.

Barlow, a first-round NBA draft pick of the Los Angeles Lakers and later traded to the Atlanta Hawks, was treated for minor cuts and released, police said. Elkhart County sheriff's Capt. Dennis Bechtel said tests showed neither Rivers nor Barlow had used drugs or alcohol before the accident.

Bechtel said the accident investigation is uncompleted, but the van apparently was traveling at "a pretty high rate of speed."

Jim Carter, 1983 national champ, and six conference individual champions.

"Any time you lose some of the stature and coaching ability of a George Boutell, you are disappointed," ASU Athletic Director Charles Harris said. "In this case the loss goes deeper because of his great strengths within the community and because he is an alumnus."

Newcomers to the ASU golf program have mixed reactions to the sudden resignation of coach Boutell.

Jack Bendetti, a graduate of Phoenix Brophy Prep, would have liked to play under Coach Boutell.

"I kind of wish he was still here," said Bendetti. "My brother played under him, and I got to know him pretty well. He was a great guy and a great coach."

Jaime Hidalgo a Tempe Corona del Sol graduate is a bit less skeptical about the coaching change.

"I've lived around ASU all my life," said Hidalgo. "I'm just happy to be here and be a Sun Devil. It doesn't matter who I'm under."

Mann's tenure extends through Oct. 15, with the idea that there may be some future for him as coach, but a national search for a permanent successor to Boutell is underway.
