Accident

Tempe paramedics prepare Joel Nelson, 27, of Mesa, for transport to Desert Samaritan Hospital. Nelson and a car driven by Alfredo Gomez of Tempe collided Tuesday evening at Butte Drive and Lemon Street. Nelson sustained a possible broken arm. Gomez was cited for failure to yield, according to Tempe police.

Students suffer anxiety, university poll reveals

By KERRY FEHR
State Press
High anxiety.

Forty-four percent of ASU students polled said they suffered from it in a survey conducted by Associated Students and the Research Program in Student Affairs last fall.

According to the survey, 8 percent of the students polled said anxiety was a major problem.

Nine percent of the students polled, which would convert to 3,500 if the survey is representative of the entire campus, said they have thought of committing suicide during the year preceding the survey.

But only 2 percent, or 800 students, said they considered their suicidal thoughts a major problem.

The report said "the irony with all of these health and wellness related needs is that less than 25 percent of ASU students have ever received any professional mental health services."

Loneliness also was a problem for approximately 12,000 students, according to the report.

Thirty percent said loneliness was a problem, and six percent said it was a major problem.

The report concluded that ASU students may be avoiding counseling because "there appears still to be a stigma about mental health services which is most intense among the segment of our population which reports the greatest needs."

"We may need to target an educational campaign for ASU undergraduates on the use of mental health services to reduce/alleviate stress-related problems."

S. Leellen Brigman, co-director of the Student Opinion Survey, said approximately 200 copies of the report were distributed to members of ASASU and college deans in August.

The Student Opinion Survey polled 38 randomly-chosen classes.

She said ASU students are surveyed each fall, and the results are used for program planning or revisions by ASASU and University administration.

Brigman said she plans to include questions about "campus friendliness" in the November survey.

Budget still to face 6 percent cutback

By KIM MATTINGLY
State Press

ASU is still planning for a 6 percent budget reduction despite an Arizona Board of Regents decision to limit the cuts to 3.24 percent, the academic affairs vice president said.

Jack Kinsinger said the University is planning for the larger cut because Gov. Bruce Babbitt has not formally responded to the regents' rejection of his July request for a $24 million cut in spending at ASU, NAU and UA.

Babbitt requested that the three universities cut 6 percent of their $400 million budget because of an anticipated $60 to $120 million state revenue shortfall.

The regents rejected this request at their Sept. 5 meeting in Tucson and proposed that all state agencies absorb a 3.24 percent cut.

ASU will lose about $4.5 million from its 1986-87 budget under the revised cutback.

Kinsinger said, "We are hoping to go with what the regents proposed, but it's prudent to be conservative."

Unlike other state agencies, the regents are not required to comply with the governor's request because they are not under his jurisdiction.

But if Arizona still faces a revenue shortfall in January, the state Legislature can impose cuts in university spending, Kinsinger said.

He said the ASU officials are asking each college to submit plans for a 3.1 percent cut, and preparing to make up any additional cuts with "institutional resources," such as tuition collections.

Because ASU enrolled more students than originally projected for the 1986-87 academic year, Kinsinger said there are "additional collections" that can help offset a 6 percent cut.

But both NAU and UA officials said they are only utilizing the regents' 3.24 figure in planning their cuts.

George Cunningham, UA vice president for administrative services, said, "We are complying with what the regents have indicated should be generated in terms of savings."

Unlike ASU, UA has no specific plan for a 6 percent savings.

Frank Besnette, NAU vice president for administration and finance, said, "We are following the direction of the Arizona Board of Regents, and we are planning with a 3.24 figure."

But Besnette said NAU has not forgotten Babbitt's 6 percent cut request.

"We certainly haven't put it out of mind," he said. "If someone said you must comply, we would do it. But right now we're on a 3.24 figure and keeping our fingers crossed."

Babbitt not planning budget-cut revisions

Arizona Gov. Bruce Babbitt does not intend to revise his request for a 6 percent budget reduction, nor work to spread cuts more evenly to all state agencies, Babbitt's press secretary said Tuesday.

Scott Phelps said: "The governor laid down his proposal. He doesn't have any plans to redo the whole plan to fit the (Arizona Board of) Regents' request."

The regents rejected Babbitt's 6 percent cutback request for university spending and suggested instead that all state agencies absorb 3.24 percent cuts.

Phelps said, "The Board of Regents is saying 'Isn't this a better way to do it?' and the governor is saying 'no.'"

Phelps said Babbitt's budget office reviewed a number of options, and a "6 percent set-aside was our best guess as sufficient insurance against a possible revenue shortfall."

"It's all well and good to say we're going to cut 3 percent, but the state can't spend money it doesn't have."

Phelps said that when the Arizona Legislature convenes in January: "Money on paper is not going to be in the bank, and someone's going to have to come up with a new plan."

"The regents will either have to make more cuts or the Legislature will have to issue a new budget."

ASU stands to lose almost $9 million under a 6 percent cut, UA $13 million, and NAU about $2.5 million.

Regent's President Jack Pfister said, "I don't think we can as yet plan on 3.24 percent. We made the proposal, now we have to wait and see the reaction of the governor and the Legislature."

"(Babbitt has) indicated only that he will seriously consider the regents' request. Universities have to be very careful until we know for sure."

Pfister said the university system will "need to do some lobbying of state legislators to get them to go along" with the 3.24 percent plan.

Those adversely affected by the regents' proposal will certainly lobby against it, he said.

Pfister said those affected in their plan, that were not affected in the governor's, include primary and secondary education, the Legislature and the Department of Economic Security.

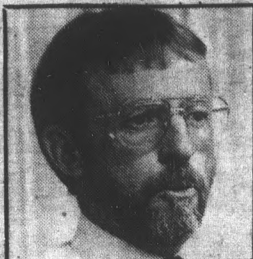

The regents are asking that the governor "broaden the base" and include more agencies in his cutback request, he said.

But state Budget Director Joe Smith said, "Obviously we looked at that, and decided (the 6 percent cut) was the best course of action."

"I would like to see the universities come back and give the full 6 percent as requested."

Warner welcomes Schulz candidacy, plans to continue campaign strategy

By TINA DAUNT
State Press

PHOENIX — Carolyn Warner said Tuesday that she is welcoming Bill Schulz to the governor's race but has not decided if she will challenge nominating petitions filed for Schulz.

"All I have to say is, 'Come on in, Bill, the water's fine,'" Warner said. "Obviously, I am aware that the Arizona State Democratic Party is in the process of scrutinizing the petitions that were filed last Friday.

"I have no idea what the outcome will be or if, in fact, a legal challenge will be pursued."

Warner, who has been superintendent of public instruction and a member of the Arizona Board of Regents for 12 years, is running against Republican candidate Evan Mecham, a Glendale car dealer.

Schulz entered the race more than a week ago. He turned in more than 31,000 signatures supporting his candidacy. He needs 10,259 valid signatures to qualify as a write-in candidate on the November ballot.

Warner said she believes the impact of a third candidacy has implications on other races in addition to the governor's race, and she can understand the concern of the Democratic Party.

"Even though Schulz is not a problem for me," she said, "he could be a problem for others seeking offices."

"With Mr. Schulz entering the race, there could be an increase in voter turnout, which could prove negatively."

Warner said that regardless of whether there are two or three people on the ballot she is moving ahead with her campaign.

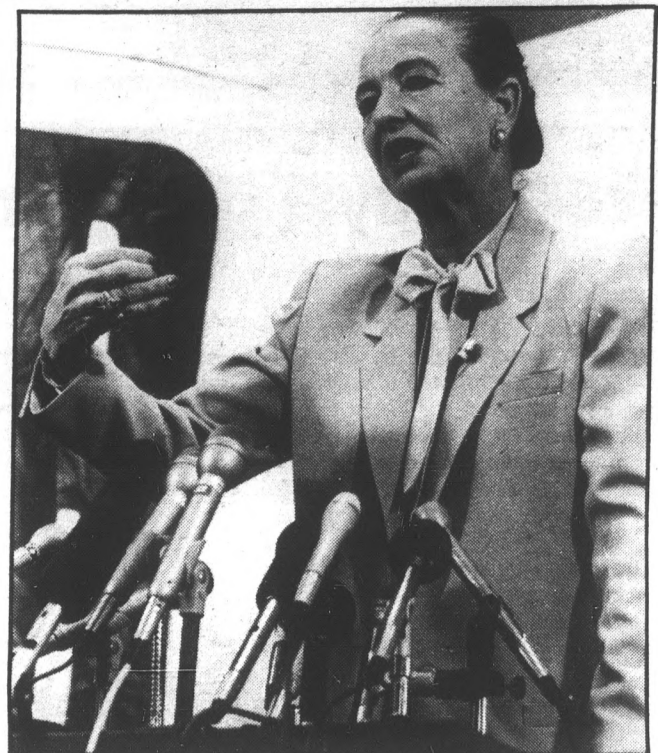

"I won a tough primary election," she said. "There are six weeks to go until the general election, and I am moving ahead with my campaign — period."

Warner said in the six weeks remaining in the race, she will campaign in the same manner she has since the start.

"I'm not changing my strategy," she said. "Who I'm running against makes little difference. It's the issues that are important."

Warner said she is willing to discuss these issues with any of her opponents.

"People deserve to know just how those who seek the public trust would administer the public's business and that's fine with me," she said. "I look forward to a spirited campaign."

Officials delay printing ballot to verify Schulz' petition signatures

By The Associated Press

PHOENIX — Lawyers for the Democratic Party went to court Tuesday to try to keep independent gubernatorial candidate William R. Schulz off the ballot.

State officials agreed to hold off on printing the ballot as Judge Jeffrey Cates of Maricopa Superior Court appointed a special master to look into claims that Schulz lacked the necessary signatures to qualify for the November ballot.

Schulz, in a telephone interview, said he believed he would be upheld but said the party was perfectly within its rights to file the challenge.

Meanwhile, the Democratic Party's gubernatorial candidate, Carolyn Warner, said at a news conference she would welcome Schulz into the race but did not want to tell her party's officials what to do.

Schulz supporters filed more than three times the required number of signatures on nominating petitions last Friday, but Democratic Party officials who have been reviewing the signatures since then said Tuesday that about 75 percent of the signatures appeared to be invalid.

State law requires Schulz to have amassed more than 10,000 signatures from registered voters who did not vote in the Sept. 9 party primary or sign nominating petitions for any other gubernatorial candidate.

But more than half the signatures reviewed by party workers do not appear to have been registered, and further checks on the remaining signatures are likely to turn up instances where the signer voted or signed a prior petition, according to Glenn Davis, the state party's executive director.

"Based on our review of it, it doesn't appear he has sufficient signatures," Davis said.

"The checking so far indicates that at least 50 percent of the signers of the petition are not eligible voters," the attorneys added in a prepared statement. "The remainder of the checking requires the use of the counties' computer services. We are therefore asking that official certification be held up until Friday."

Secretary of State Rose Mofford agreed to hold off on certification, and Cates scheduled a hearing for Friday afternoon.

Although Friday is the legal deadline for filing a challenge, Mofford had said she needed to know by Tuesday because of the time needed by elections workers.

"If we waited until Friday, we would never have the ballots printed," she said.

Schulz declined to predict how many of the signatures would be found valid, saying he had not organized the drive.

"I think I'm a qualified candidate," he said. "I'd be very surprised if I'm not."

Schulz' press spokesman, Mark Regan, called the challenge "a minor hurdle" and predicted that no more than 10 percent of the signatures would be thrown out.

Warm days, then 'snowbirds'

Well, in case you did not notice, fall is officially here.

That's right. At 12:59 a.m. Tuesday, summer was overtaken by the time when the leaves are supposed to turn brown, red and orange.

Fat chance.

So it has been a bit cloudy and cool and rainy, but local weathermen are predicting we will have to wait for another three or four weeks before cooler weather becomes a permanent part of the Arizona lifestyle.

According to Jim Howl, weatherman for KTVK-TV, Channel 3, temperatures will be warming over the next few days. Today is supposed to be 90, Thursday will be 93, Friday will be 95 and by Monday, all Hell will break lose and Phoenix will reach the century mark once again.

All right. Who's in charge of the whole thing?

The upper Midwest and New England states are cooling off rather quickly as the arctic chill creeps down from Santa Claus country.

If Phoenix temperatures remain in the 90s, then guess what will happen when word gets back to Milwaukee, Detroit, Minneapolis and Orono, Maine that Phoenix is still tanning itself.
SNOWBIRDS!!

They will flock to the Valley like flies to a lump of sugar.

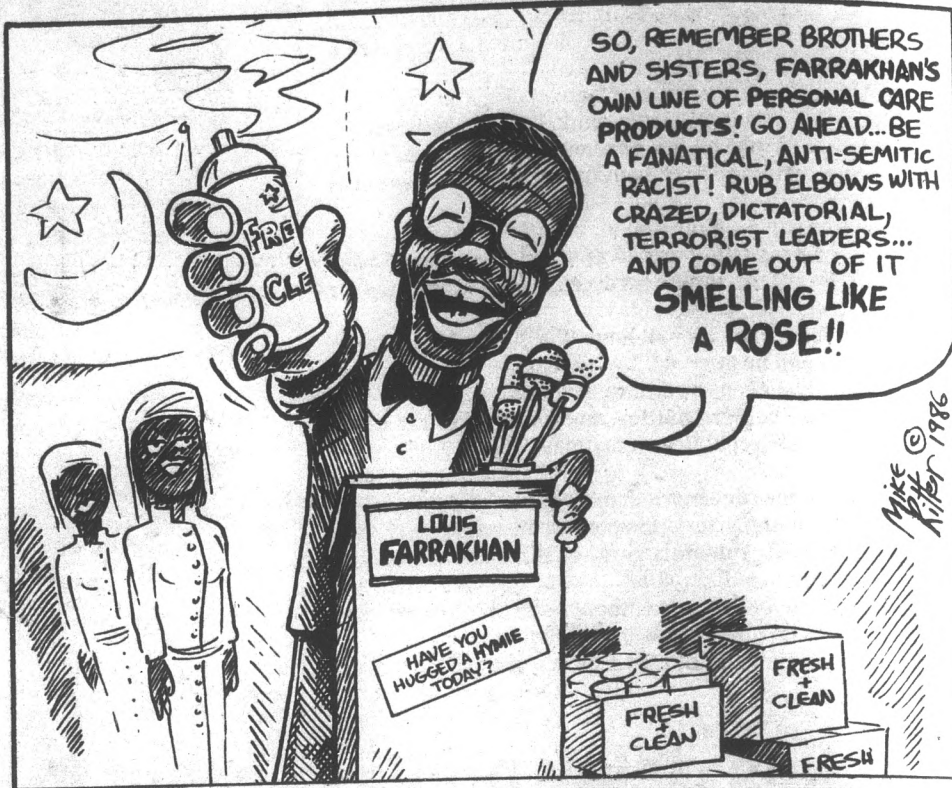

Funny-looking license plates will inundate Phoenix, Scottsdale, Glendale, Sun City, Paradise Valley, Mesa and our own beloved Tempe. There will be no stopping them until next May.

They will Sunday drive on Thursday and generally make a mess of things that aren't messy.

Arizonans will be forced to keep their children in the house.

All of this because summer refuses to give way to fall.

We guess there is only one thing to do. It is time to pray for a blizzard.

Schulz, courage, parking make for good reading

Democrats have sounded the alarm with the entrance of Bill Schulz into the gubernatorial race. They fear he will split the party and cause Carolyn Warner to lose the November election.

And so the Dems have declared open season on the millionaire aspirant, including completely dirty suggestions of Schulz being "mentally unstable."

They are evaluating whether to challenge the signatures on Schulz's petitions, which is, of course, their right.

But state Democratic Party Chairman Sam Goddard has been throwing in charges of loading the petitions with just any old signature. He has heard "reports" of such.

I've got an additional report for Mr. Goddard. I cannot speak for every Schulz worker, but I was asked as late as Friday whether I was a registered voter and whether I voted in the last primary.

I am, and I did. They thanked me. At ASU, they only collected signatures of people who were, but who hadn't.

Schulz has taken the criticism in stride. I hope his attitude continues to be such.

The powers that be in the Democratic Party accuse Schulz of circumventing the political process, and one party worker said his campaign was a slap in the face of everyone who voted in the primary.

I'm sorry, but I don't feel the sting of that slap.

It seems the politicians are yelping about Schulz short-circuiting the political process because it is a process that benefits them.

Tom Blodgett Editor

But Schulz's entry should be welcomed, if not by politicians, by voters, because it means they have more of a choice.

That's what the electoral process is all about.

So why does Dan Rather insist on signing off his evening news telecast with "Dan Rather. Courage. Good night."?

It must take a fool's courage to utter that phrase every night.

I mean, c'mon, it's not exactly "And that's the way it was, Wednesday, Sept. 24. This is Walter Cronkite."

I suppose Rather wants us to associate him with courage. I'm not sure that it takes a good dose of that to sit in front of a camera and read what is on the teleprompter.

It looks like the worst form of propaganda. Isn't that what propaganda is about — making associations without explaining what the association is about?

I mean, how would it strike you if Josef Mengele got up in front of the camera and said, "Josef Mengele. Humanitarianism. Good night."

Not that Rather is Josef Mengele — although it would be good for Mengele if he believed in the "hide in plain sight" theory — but you get the point.

ABC must sense that sports fans really loathe the word "taped," because they hedged quite a bit on that word Saturday during the USC-Baylor game.

I didn't really notice it at first — it may have been going on for some time now — but up where the screen occasionally flashes the word "Live," ABC had cleverly posted "Not really live."

And Josef Mengele is not really live, either.

From not very specific words to extremely exacting, we find that parking and transit services has painted the words "No parking, stopping or standing" outside Drama City near College and Forest avenues.

I tell you this as a word of warning. If you should happen across a friend outside of Drama City, please don't stop to chat.

Rumor has it that the last two persons to do this were bound, gagged and forced to watch Laverne and Shirley reruns for 16 hours on end.

Then they were issued an $18 ticket.

Sixteen hours of the "Big Ragu" is just too brutal. And then to throw in a ticket. Do these people know no mercy?

The ASASU Supreme Court is examining whether this fits under the "cruel and unusual punishment" standard set down by the U.S. Supreme Court.

Letters

Arabs and Jews as friends

Editor:

Once again, we are hearing the cries for sympathy from the Palestinian movement.

On Sept. 18, the State Press published a letter from the General Union of Palestinian Students that focused on the events at Sabra and Shatila refugee camps. First off, the letter grossly misrepresented the unfortunate occurrences of that day.

The author wrote the letter as if he was a member of the Israeli army, therefore making himself an expert on the internal affairs of Israeli military operations. Furthermore, only 800 people were killed, not 1,800, and the "band of militiamen" that performed the atrocities at Akka Hospital were never identified in his article. At that time in 1982, there were several factions of people at war in Lebanon, and there is no written documentation that says that the "band of militiamen" were Israeli, Drews, Phalange or Palestinian for that matter.

However, these issues are not what upset me the most about this letter. The fact that the State Press even printed it is what upsets me. The job of a newspaper is to cover the news of today, not the news of four years ago. Just as a news story concerning the economy four years ago wouldn't concern me as a consumer today, this letter does not concern me as a person today. The events in France, Turkey and Pakistan, in my opinion, are of more relevance to the world situation today.

This does not mean that I wish to get into the game of hurling numbers of dead people around, because both sides could sit and cry about the casualties of the past. For the past 2,000 years, Arabs and Jews have been at war. Should we start counting from then how many have died?

The question of who has more rights to the land is irrelevant because both sides could prove their claim with volumes and volumes of documentation. The question that needs to be addressed is: can Arabs and Jews live as friends, not enemies? For me, the answer is yes, for I am the product of a Muslim father and a Jewish mother. From their marriage I have found that the Arab-Jew conflict is a cultural one. My suggestion is not that the two cultures get married, rather my suggestion is that they learn to live together side by side.

Those extremists who wish to take the foolish way out are nothing but non-thinkers. It is easier for them to shoot at the thinker rather than talk to him. And fortunately, if the thinker is proud of who he is then he must learn to fight back in order to stay alive.

My plea to the PLO and the General Union of Palestinian Students is to stop dwelling on the past and to stop aiming for revenge of those past events as has been the case in the recent terrorist attacks in France, Turkey and Pakistan, because revenge only leads to more revenge by the other side. If you shoot at me, my reaction will be to shoot back at you. If you talk to me, my reaction will be to talk with you. I know that there is a considerable risk in attempting to talk due to the threats of the extremist non-thinkers, but don't you think the challenge is worth our mutual peace?

In conclusion, I would like to coin an old phrase. "Talk is cheap," especially when you consider the price we have to pay for fighting.

Prof: 'enemy thinking' causes undue hate

By ED SCHUBERT
State Press

The human species has ingrained habits of non-rational thinking that could lead us to destruction, a psychologist said at a meeting of the ASU chapter of United Campuses to Prevent Nuclear War.

David Whitsett, a professor of psychology at Northern Iowa University, said: "I think you know that between the United States and the USSR we have 18,000 megatons, which if it were used, could destroy every major city in the world 60 times over."

"We add to it every day."

Whitsett discussed the causes of the nuclear arms race with about 25 UCAM members Friday in the MU Navajo Room.

"The possibility that we will have World War III, and that it will be a nuclear war, is 100 percent — unless we do something to change our direction," he said.

"What is the psychology of the arms race? What is it that sustains something that seems so crazy?"

He said the answer was largely because "we are preoccupied as a species with 'enemy thinking.' We don't realize how ingrained it is."

Whitsett said that when President Reagan labeled the Soviet Union the 'evil empire,' he was engaged in enemy thinking: the tendency to drastically oversimplify complex problems into a simple 'good guy/bad guy' formula.

He said that human beings tend to identify individuals and nations as "the enemy," and then through a process of selective perception, filter out any new information that does not fit the stereotype.

"We develop an early impression of a nation, group or person," Whitsett said. "Then all the information we encounter on that nation, group or person is squeezed to fit the original perception."

"If we decide Gorbachev is a bad guy and then he says 'Let's reduce nuclear arms by 50 percent,' we think, 'What's he up to?'"

He said enemy thinking allows us to interpret any actions by the Soviet Union that are confusing or ambiguous in the worst possible light.

If the other side is evil, "we then by contrast are the good people. It makes us feel good morally," he said.

The perception that we are morally righteous "justifies acts we commit that we could not justify otherwise" such as invading other countries, overthrowing governments and supporting dictators, Whitsett said.

"The Soviet government does exactly the same thing with respect to our government," which explains much of the aggressive behavior of both nations, he said.

Both nations believe that "the end justifies the means in the struggle between good and evil, or evil will overcome the good," he said.

"Enemy-based thinking starts from the wrong premise," Whitsett said. "If you start from that premise, you're lost."

He warned UCAM members against allowing enemy-based thinking to influence their beliefs and actions.

"Some of you think Ronald Reagan is the enemy, but he isn't," he said. "The people who want ASU to be a center of military research are not the enemy."

Whitsett also said that the kinds of changes needed to reverse the arms race are just the changes that humans tend to resist most strongly.

"We have an inability to adjust to change when the change is big," he said. "Our flexibility is at its worst when we are frightened."

But he said it is critical for UCAM and other anti-nuclear groups to believe that their efforts are not futile, despite the obstacles to peace inherent in the political process as well as in human psychology.

ASU police report

University police reported the following incidents in the 24-hour period ending 7:30 a.m. Tuesday:

•Two IBM personal computers and four color monitor screens were stolen from Payne Hall, Room B-159, police said.

Estimated value of the loss is $4,000. Police said there were no signs of forced entry.

•Police said a burglar entered a room at 606 Alpha Drive and took $420 in cash, two personal checks totaling $15, a pair of prescription glasses, valued at $120 and a radio valued at $100.

There are no suspects or signs of forced entry, police said.

•A student found his brother's stolen men's blue 18-speed Fuji bicycle, valued at $500, at the bike racks at the Physical Science A-wing, police said.

•An abandoned women's Murray 3-speed bike was found on the railroad tracks south of the University Activity Center and impounded, police said.

•A 12-foot truck tore down a portion of hot wire leading from a light pole to the rear of 418 Adelphi Drive, damaged the support cable and broke an electrical wire, police said.

The driver tried to drive under the 10-foot light pole wire, police said.

Police said the truck driver was delivering food to the residence when the damage occurred.

Arizona Public Service responded to fix the damage, but were not able to give an estimate of the damage at the time of the report, police said.

•A Honda car received $350 in damages after another vehicle hit it and damaged the driver's side of the car and fender, police said.

Police said a student who said he witnessed the "hit-and-run" left a note on the Honda's window, stating the vehicle was a tan 1984 van with the Arizona license plate 3MA296.

•An unknown person threw a river rock through the plexiglass basketball backboard at 609 Alpha Drive, causing $400 in damages, police said. There are no suspects or witnesses.

•An unknown person removed the red louvers from the rear window of an imported car parked on the second floor of the parking garage, police said. Estimated value of the loss is $400.

•A group of female students called police to the Palo Verde East lawn area to investigate a male student that had "scared them and caused them to be concerned for their safety" because he paced near them, police said.

•An unknown person broke a glass door at the north entrance of the Matthews Center, police said. Estimated cost of repairs is $100.

•Police said there are what looks like pry marks on the upper left corner of the door to the first floor of the Old Main Building.

•Three bikes were booted at the north side of Hayden Library because they were not parked in marked areas, police said.

Tempe police report

The Tempe Police Department reported the following incidents for the period ending midnight Monday:

•A Tempe man was assaulted by three former fraternity brothers outside a party Sept. 19, police said.

Police said the man was leaving a party at 1216 E. Vista Del Cerro, when he was struck from behind by one of the attackers.

Police said the other three men hit the victim at least 15 times in various parts of his body when he was standing and after he fell to the ground in an attempt to protect himself.

The victim said he took four "sucker punches" in the face when he broke away and climbed into his vehicle.

The victim's 1986 Nissan truck sustained $200 in damage when one of the attackers kicked the driver's side, police said.

Police said the victim has not been associated with the fraternity for two years and said he did not know why he was attacked.

•A man was observed masturbating in the bushes at the 1000 block of South Mariana Sept. 20, police said.

A woman saw the man walk across the yard near her apartment while watching her closely.

Police describe the man as a 23-year-old Caucasian, 5 feet 11, 165 pounds, with brown hair and a thin beard and mustache. He was wearing a light blue T-shirt and white shorts.

Police have a suspect in the case.

•A Tempe man's car was set on fire while parked in his driveway Sept. 18, police said.

A neighbor heard a "crashing" noise after midnight, noticed the fire, and called the police, police said.

When the Tempe Fire Department arrived, the car was fully engulfed in flames.

Police said someone smashed the left rear window of the car and set the back seat on fire.

Student parking attendants learn to take abuse

By TINA DAUNT
State Press

By night, they're "just one of the guys" having fun at a college party. But by day, they've lost their popularity.

They're parking service attendants, the students who ticket the cars at ASU and work the guard gates.

"We're just normal students doing a job," said Charles Wakefield, attendant manager. "People don't understand we do much more than just give tickets."

"We jump batteries, put up signs, paint curbs and help with parking during the games. We're here to help the students, not hinder them."

Wakefield, a junior management major, said becoming a parking attendant is not easy — it requires weeks of study.

"Our employees are in training for six weeks before we send them out on the field," he said. "They have to know the violation codes, parking lots, license plates and rules and regulations of the school."

"They also have to be able to work with people, especially irate people."

"People scream and shout and rip up the tickets in our face. We just try to be as nice as we can."

Wakefield said he is worried one of the attendants will get hit by a car.

"Sometimes people will be so angry when they are issued a ticket, they'll drive out of the parking lot carelessly," he said.

"Luckily, no one has ever been hit, but there have been a few close calls."

Dressed in blue T-shirts, the attendants are on duty day and night.

"Basically the students do it because they need a job," Wakefield said. "There are over 40 (attendants). Most of them are fun and easy-going."

Darin Kraetsch, a junior pre-law major who works at a guard gate, said he considers his job "very important."

"We're the first people to come in contact with visitors," he said. "We can either give them a good impression or a bad impression."

Kraetsch said he enjoys his job but he has to put up with a lot of verbal abuse.

"People scream and yell and complain," he said. "I just smile and say 'have a nice day.' One guy even tried to bribe me with $20."

Kraetsch said some people crash their cars through the barricade on a weekly basis.

Wakefield said he encourages the parking attendants to "be as nice as possible."

Parents turned in by daughter plead innocent to drug charges

By The Associated Press

SANTA ANA, Calif. — A couple whose 13-year-old daughter turned them in for alleged cocaine abuse pleaded innocent Tuesday to drug possession charges and sought placement in a narcotics education program.

Judith and Bobby Dale Young probably will qualify for the program, and charges will be dropped if they complete it, said Deputy District Attorney James Mulgrew.

On Aug. 13, after hearing a church lecture on the evils of drugs, their daughter Deanna went to Tustin police with a trash bag that police said contained $2,800 worth of cocaine plus marijuana, pills and assorted paraphernalia.

Municipal Court Judge Manuel Ramirez ordered Young, 49, a bartender and building contractor, and his 37-year-old wife, who is a U.S. Bankruptcy Court clerk, to return to court Nov. 6 for a decision on their request. He turned the case over to the Orange County Probation Department for a recommendation on whether the couple qualifies for the program.

Mulgrew said the couple appear to be "statutorily eligible" for the drug education and rehabilitation program that would last about a year.

"It's not a real heavy rehabilitation, live-in type program. The rehabilitation is more an education process. It's designed primarily for lightweight users," the prosecutor said.

He said the program is commonly used for first offenders who are charged with relatively minor drug offenses, have no serious criminal record and are judged likely candidates for rehabilitation.

Attorney Ronald Brower, standing in for the Youngs' defense attorney, Gary Proctor, agreed: "This is not a program for heavy drug addicts. It can be as little as four meetings, where you go and they instruct you and expose you to materials on drug addiction."

After Deanna went to police, she was immediately taken from her parents and placed in a county home.

Israeli jets bomb Palestinian guerrilla bases near Beirut hills

By The Associated Press

BEIRUT, Lebanon — Israeli jets divebombed Palestinian guerrilla bases in the hills east of Beirut Tuesday, setting at least four targets ablaze, police said.

The raid came one day after Israel massed troops along the border with Lebanon in an apparent warning to Shiite Moslem guerrillas to cease their attacks in south Lebanon, near Israel. The border situation was quiet Tuesday.

Syrian President Hafez Assad was quoted as threatening a "stunning retaliation" if Israel invades Lebanon.

Police said huge clouds of smoke billowed from the bluffs of Bayssour, Keyfoun, Eitat and Shimlan, 12 miles east of Beirut, after strikes that began at 5:30 p.m. It was the 10th Israeli air raid in Lebanon this year.

Israel's military command in Tel Aviv said all planes returned safely and reported hitting bases used for attacks on Israel by the Abu Moussa guerrilla faction and the Democratic Front for the Liberation of Palestine.

The Abu Moussa Fatah-Uprising, which broke away from PLO chairman Yasser Arafat's Fatah, said in a communique in Beirut that its bases east and southeast of Beirut sustained considerable damage in the air raid.

The Abu Moussa group said no Palestinians were killed or injured. Police said two militiamen from Druse warlord Walid Jumblatt's Progressive Socialist Party, which controls Lebanon's central mountains, were wounded.

The party is allied with Palestinian guerrilla groups backed by Syria.

The Israeli planes made at least four bombing runs in 40 minutes, with eight jets taking part in each sortie, police said. The pilots released red balloons that distracted the guerrillas' shoulder-fired, heat-seeking SA-7 missiles.

Beirut International Airport was closed for 30 minutes during the attacks, with one commercial flight diverted to Cyprus and four other flights delayed, aviation officials said.

But tension lessened Tuesday at the Israel-Lebanon border. Israeli troop and tank reinforcements rushed there Monday, poised for a thrust into south Lebanon to put down a surge of guerrilla attacks by Iranian-backed Shiite extremists.

The threat raised fears of a new military collision between U.S.-supplied Israel and Soviet-equipped Syria on Lebanese soil for the second time in four years.

"If it (Israel) attempts a new invasion, the retaliation will be stunning. It will be a surprise to all," Assad was quoted as saying by the leftist Beirut newspaper Al-Hakika.

It said Assad's remarks were made Monday in Damascus, the Syrian capital, during a meeting with Lebanese politicians.

Israel humiliated Syria in a 1982 invasion of Lebanon that drove Syrian troops and Palestine Liberation Organization guerrillas from Beirut.

The Syrians redeployed in northern Lebanon and the eastern Bekaa Valley, where they keep 25,000 troops under a peacekeeping mandate from the Arab League. The Syrians have been in Lebanon in force since 1976 when they came in to snuff out the civil war between Christians and mostly Moslem leftists.

Fugitive possibly linked to 3rd Midwest slaying

By The Associated Press

WRIGHT CITY, Mo. — A fugitive who allegedly killed two people and abducted several others during a three-state rampage eluded a dragnet Tuesday, and authorities said a third slaying might be the work of the same gunman.

Some residents of this small town kept their doors locked and guns loaded, as more than 100 heavily armed officers using dogs and helicopters conducted the hunt for Michael W. Jackson, 41, of Indianapolis.

Jackson had vowed not to be taken alive, the Indianapolis Star said. He was believed to be armed with a sawed-off shotgun and a pistol.

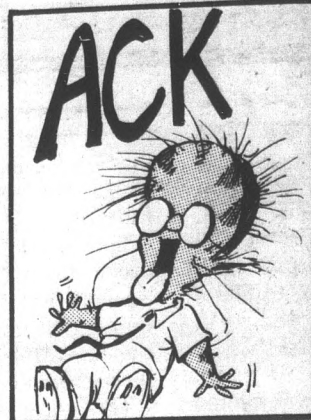

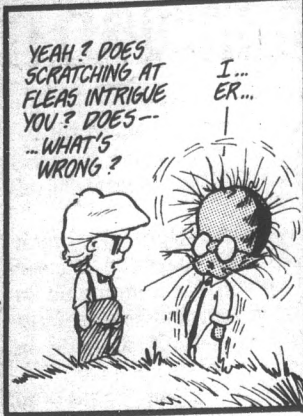

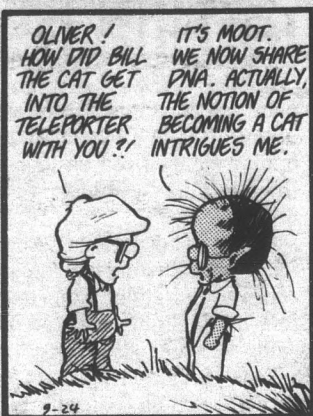

Missouri Highway Patrol Capt. John Ford said there had been few leads. But he said authorities suspected Jackson was still in the area because there had been no reports of stolen vehicles and Jackson apparently fled on foot after a gun battle with a local police officer.

"We've got nothing, but everyone is still out, and that will continue until he's caught or it's determined that he's out of the area," Ford said.

Officers carrying automatic weapons stopped cars and searched passing freight trains. A man with an appearance similar to Jackson's was picked up hitchhiking in the area but later was cleared and released.

Police announced that a man initially thought to have died of head injuries when his car crashed into a light pole along Interstate 70 late Monday in St. Peters, about 20 miles east of Wright City, had actually been shot to death.

Graduate Student Association

ATTENTION COLLEGES, DEPARTMENTS AND STUDY CENTERS

"MONEY-FOR-GRAD-RESEARCH-AVAILABLE"

The Graduate Student Research Program encourages graduate students to submit proposals between $200 and $2,000 for research study monies. Fall semester applications are available September 15 through October 17, 1986 in the Graduate Student Association Office, Memorial Union, Room 208-H. Fall semester applications must be submitted no later than 12 noon on October 17, 1986. The application must be submitted to: Office, Dean of Graduate College, Wilson Hall 112.

A committee composed of graduate students and faculty members will review proposals using the following criteria:

- 1) Is the research meritorious within its own field?
- 2) Is the research methodology sound?
- 3) Are the objectives of the project feasible to attain within the grant period and the proposed budget?
- 4) Are other sources of funding available to the student?

The program provides university support, as well as financial support, and provides graduate students experience in writing and submitting grant proposals. The program attracts graduate students and is helping promote ASU's national recognition as a major research university.

Neil Diamond will be at the ASU Activity Center on Thursday and Friday at 8 p.m.

Thinking man's play opens fall series

By MATTHEW CARY
State Press

Some plays are written to entertain, like "Camelot." Other plays are written to disturb, to provoke the audience and make it think. "Through the Leaves," the first show of Drama City's 1986 season, is one of the latter.

Written by Franz Xaver Kroetz, "Through the Leaves" is the season opener of ASU's Scholarship Series at Drama City. It is directed by William Akins and runs Sept. 25-28. Curtain times are at 8 p.m., except on Sunday, when it will begin at 2 p.m.

The play is the story of an intense love affair between two German workers: Martha, portrayed by ASU associate professor David Vining, and Otto, played by ASU assistant professor David Barker.

Akins chose to do "Through the Leaves" because he, Vining and Barker wanted to work together on a show. The play, designed and directed by Akins, is comprised only of faculty members.

"I see the play as theatrical research — experimentation," said Akins. He admits that the play may be very different from what theatergoers are used to.

"There is a significant distinction between high-school theater and college theater," he said. "We warn people that it's material for adults."

Akins also chose the play because its author, one of the most produced playwrights in Germany, is not widely known in the Valley.

"The language (of the play), although very sparse, has its own poetry. The characters are unusual but simple people," Barker said. "I hope the play moves the audience in some way, whether it shocks them, infuriates them or makes them wonder about the kinds of people (in the play.)"

Barker has found working on the "Through the Leaves" a rewarding experience.

"It's a very exciting and different show to work on," he said. "When you're working with people who have a lot of experience and are committed to the success of the project, then certain things fall into place."

Barker also enjoys the play because Otto, his character, is a far cry from his own personality.

Keeping with the unusual nature of the play, Akins cast David Vining as Martha the butcher. Akins said he cast a man in the role because he felt "it would keep the play experimental and I felt it would be a challenge for Vining as an actor." He also felt that the many references to Martha's unattractiveness made him want the character masculine in appearance.

In order to portray a woman, Vining spent the last few weeks observing women and their interactions with men. He even had a couple of women tape their voices for him so he could develop a realistic female voice.

Vining admits the psychology of Martha has been easier to develop than her physical aspects.

"It is my theory as an actor that any human being can imagine the experiences of any other human, male or female," he said. "The emotional qualities (of a woman) aren't different or any harder to define."

The three men are not sure how "Through the Leaves" will be accepted, but Akins said he is sure it will be an "invigorating evening of theater."

Tickets for $5, $3 for students and senior citizens, can be purchased at the Gammage box office. Drama City is located on University Drive, east of Myrtle Avenue.

"Shanghai Surprise" ★
"You smell so bad I can't think straight..." — Madonna in "Shanghai Surprise"
Pop's sultry princess pretty much sums up her own movie with that statement. But not even her sexy image can help her or hubby Sean Penn in Handmade Films' "Shanghai Surprise."

And what a surprise this trip to Shanghai is. Are we to believe this could be the same film that producer George Harrison splurged nearly $30 million on? Let's hope not, for his sake. If this is truly the movie everyone has been boasting about for 11 months, hyping it up to be the next box office mega-hit, Harrison and others will soon be leaving the bank with empty pockets.

Will the real "Shanghai Surprise" please stand up! Here's two very bankable superstars: a publicity-starved singer and her flash bulb-darting, fist-in-the-face husband. What a great idea it would be to put this highly visible duo in a movie of their very own (how cute). It could have worked with a decent script and two other stars who could exhibit a trace of chemistry on the screen.

That's why the final product fizzles. "Shanghai Surprise" is to movies what aftershave is to diet soda. The only difference here is that "Shanghai" is much harder to swallow.

The film takes place in the Orient during the so-called 1937 Japanese Occurrence. Madonna plays (get this) an innocent missionary named Gloria Tatlock who's searching for a lost treasure of opium for its life-saving potential as morphine. PLEASE! She seems far more likely to play someone in the missionary position than the missionary profession. This is the woman who owns the "Boy Toy" belt buckle.

In the film's introduction, the opium is in the possession of Walter Faraday (Paul Freeman). Walt and his partner Willie (Richard Griffiths) have a run-in with the evil Mei Gan (Kay Tong Lim) over the drugs, but Faraday blows the man's hands off with a tricky Shanghai surprise army belt and escapes. (Wait, it get's better.)

W surprises in Shanghai

Later everybody and Buddah's brother wants the lost opium. Tatlock seeks the help of loudmouthed and grumpy Glendon Wasey (Penn). After convincing him to help her on her quest, they're off to find the drugs that will save Tatlock's poor soldiers of fortune.

The search for the opium is long and tedious. Some China doll has a few clues to its whereabouts, so Wasey ends up in a Chinese sex parlor searching for the stuff. He's fascinated with the charming bedspread design and forgets about his original intent.

Here Madonna should have sung "Papa Don't Preach" to the cute sexpots; it could have pepped up the film. Instead she smokes several packs of Winstons (the missionary thing to do), heads back to Wasey's hotel bed and awaits his return.

It's obvious that these two don't mesh on the big screen. In this romantic comedy, they create about as much char sma together as two wet noodles lost in a spaghetti pot.

They even ruined their own sex scene! The minute Madonna jumped into Penn's bed she utters, "let's hurry up and get this over with..."

C'mon. This isn't the Madonna we all know and love. Everybody knows she's been forking in millions selling sex. Why stop now? Even Penn, who has an impressive track record with roles in "Bad Boys" and "The Falcon and the Snowman," is gravely miscast.

Too much predictability weighs this film down. You've got those usual battles between the good and evil, some cliched dialogue and too many mindless instances where Madonna squeaks out childish gibberish that doesn't relate to anything in the universe.

Incidentally, Mei (exploding hands) Gan is still looking for the opium. He eventually turns up again sporting white porcelain hands, which he probably had custom made at Jimmy Wong's Toilet Shop on Shanghai Avenue.

The rest of the film is equally unimpressive as the two frolic through one misadventure and the next.

When the two cherubs get locked inside straw baskets toward the melodramatic finale, it's a shame they weren't kept there.

River Phoenix shows no fear as he confronts town hood Kiefer Sutherland in "Stand By Me."

★★★★ Excellent; ★★★ Good; ★★ OK; ★ Flop

"Stand By Me" ★★★★★

A brilliant story about four young boys who hope to find the dead body of a missing youth. The film is genuinely appealing as it takes the audience back to the good ol' days when friends were the only things that really mattered. Directed by Rob Reiner. Playing at Mann Superstition 5. Rated R.

"Avenging Force" ★½

Michael Dudikoff stars as an ex-CIA agent who finds himself at odds against some assassins who are after his political pal. Steve James, William Wallace and John P. Ryan round out the cast. Showing at Mann Sun Devil 6 in the Cornerstone Mall. Rated R.

"Desert Bloom" ★★★★★

Newcomer Annabeth Gish is spellbinding in this often stylistic story of the fears and apprehensions of those who lived in Las Vegas during the first atomic bomb testing. Jobeth Williams and Jon Voight star. One of the best movies of the year. Look for it at Oscar time! Playing at Los Arcos Mall at Scottsdale and McDowell roads. Rated PG.

"The Dirt Bike Kid" ★½

E.T would have a galactic fit if he saw ex-"Real People" co-host Peter Billingsley fly through the skies on a dirt bike. Get Real! Playing at AMC Fiesta Village 6. Rated PG.

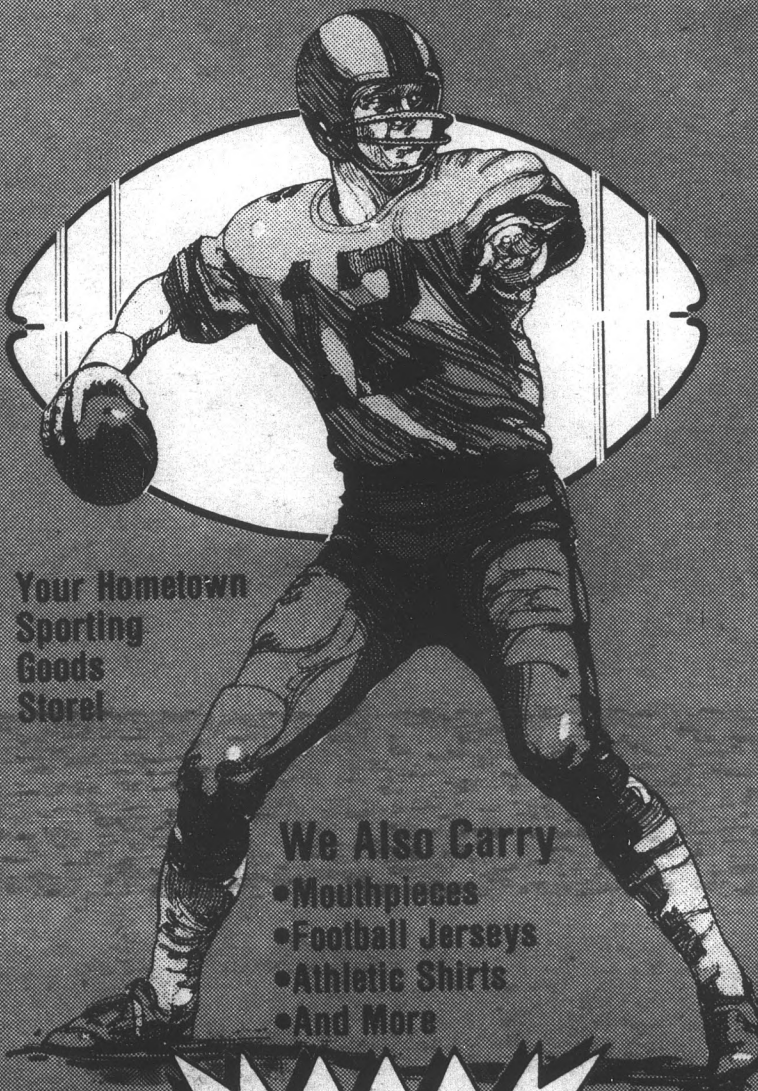

"3 Men and a Cradle" ★★★★★

Three bachelors play the maternity game with an abandoned baby girl and the results are often hilarious. This well-written foreign film won three French Oscars last year. Look for the American adaptation soon. Playing at Los Arcos Mall. Rated PG-13

Motown singer, lyrics, harmony return to '80s music scene

Eddie Kendricks, formerly of the Temptations sings his heart out at the Feast of San Gennaro last weekend.

By RODERICK HARRINGTON
State Press

Eddie Kendricks, an original member of the Temptations, said he believes the quality of music is improving with better lyrics and harmony making their way back into the field.

Kendricks appeared Saturday with fellow ex-Temp David Ruffin at the Feast of San Gennaro festival in Scottsdale.

The duo also sang the national anthem before the ASU vs. Southern Methodist University game Saturday night.

Kendricks and Ruffin made up half of the popular recording group the Temptations when it formed in the '60s. The group was a vital part of the Motown era of popular music.

The group had worldwide hits with the songs "My Girl," "Pappa Was a Rolling Stone" and "I Wish It Would Rain," among others.

Before taking the stage for the first of two festival shows Saturday, Kendricks said the music business has finally gotten over some problems that existed not long ago.

"I think the artists had to bring lyrics and harmonies back," he said. "For a while during the 1970s, the only important thing was the beat, but that is changing now."

Kendricks said much of the credit should go to Lionel Richie, Hall and Oates and others who stress lyrics in their music.

Ruffin and Kendricks use music from the Temptations in their shows now but are doing newer songs as well, he said.

"We just finished a new album which we are hoping will be out in time for Christmas," he said. "We didn't really expect it to be finished so soon, but it will be out sometime in the near future."

Despite lasting more than two decades in the music field, the duo required the help of some younger artists last year to close up

launch themselves back into the spotlight, Kendricks said.

While appearing at the Apollo Theater in Harlem, Kendricks and Ruffin were joined on stage by fellow musicians Daryl Hall and John Oates.

"We gave them a big break in 1966, before they were even a group," Kendricks said. "So last year, they gave us a break."

That break included a successful album and video from their Apollo performance. Kendricks agreed that they were a "salt and pepper" Temptations, referring to the mixture of two white and two black singers.

"The combination obviously worked well," he said. "Everyone really enjoyed the sound we produced."

Ruffin and Kendricks did individual sets during the festival in Scottsdale, then united on stage for an energetic performance featuring music of the Temptations.

The Feast of San Gennaro was a success and will become an annual event in Scottsdale, stage manager Mario "Merle" Bregante said.

Bregante estimated that between 15,000 and 20,000 people came to the event on its opening day Friday.

"We were hoping for and quite frankly expecting this big of a crowd for the event," Bregante said. "When you offer people good entertainment for free, you are going to get this kind of a turnout."

Hemsley still charming in irreverent new show

NEW YORK (AP) — If you loved the bullying George Jefferson, you'll be charmed by the conniving Deacon Ernest Frye on NBC's new series, "Amen."

Not one to tamper with success, Sherman Hemsley hasn't changed his blowhard character one decibel for this promising new program set in a black, big-city church.

The show premieres Saturday night. Deacon Frye's father founded the First Community Church of Philadelphia, and the son runs it like a corner grocery. He's even installed a time clock for the preacher to punch in and out.

In the opening episode, the incumbent minister resigns after the deacon berates him for being too fat.

There's only one applicant to replace him, Rev. Reuben Gregory (Clifton Davis), a handsome and superbly educated young man.

As Gregory ticks off his theology degrees, Deacon Frye interrupts, "Do you believe in God?"

The deacon later helps set up an illegal, under-the-table offer to a high school basketball star who belongs to the church.

Though the devil and the deacon have $20,000 on their side, Rev. Gregory's eloquence lures the young athlete back to the straight and narrow.

Anna Maria Horsford plays the deacon's daughter, eventually to become the romantic interest for the minister. Barbara Montgomery and Roz Ryan play two strong-willed ladies of the congregation, and Jester Hairston plays the browbeaten but feisty trustee, Rolly Forbes.

Davis, a Seventh-Day Adventist minister in real life, is a smooth, relaxed foil for Hemsley, who is about half as big and twice as loud.

It's a cause for regret that John Hancock, a striking comic actor who has the round shape and burning eyes of a jack o'lantern, has only a brief role in the series as the departing preacher.

"Amen" won't be about organized religion.

"I'm not as much interested in bringing religion to television as I am in getting a kind of universal moral message around that people can be kind to each other, that it can be a better world if we apply certain Christian principles to living," Davis told television writers in California.

"Amen" is, however, taking some of the music of the black churches.

Gospel star Andre Crouch wrote the theme song, and the church choir is heard singing "Going to See the King" in the premiere episode. It's a welcome touch.

With an engaging cast and its mix of comedy and down-to-earth problems, "Amen" has the elements of a hit.

"Designing Women," the 9:30 entry on CBS' women's night lineup on Mondays, is a witless, nasty sitcom about four harpies who run an interior design business in Atlanta.

In the first episode on Monday, thrice-divorced Suzanne Sugarbaker (Delta Burke) is looking for a new gynecologist. Let the yucks begin.

Suzanne chooses a doctor who was formerly married to her partner Mary Jo (Annie Potts) and promptly falls in love.

Band's LP skips in musical dead zone

Hunters & Collectors — "Human Frailty"

It's easy to tell good bands from bad ones.

It generally has to do with style, but pompous hairdos or plain technical spit 'n' shine can also make a group shift across that line. What's hard to do is listen to 10 cuts from a band squatting in the gray area between good and bad.

With "Human Frailty," Hunters and Collectors reclines right in the middle of the dead zone. And it's almost easy to dismiss them as being at home. Almost.

They bring across a simple sound with bass, drums and guitar standards, but there are also one or two things threatening to break them out of the mold.

A Ricky Ricardo-style horn section pops in to show that things don't have to follow a format written in stone studio walls. But things don't liven up as often as they could.

A pounding bass pulse carries danceable tunes hungry for a catchy hook. Mark Seymour's vocals carry a bland, echoing sound that might have seemed haunting had they come from Simple Mind's Jim Kerr. But Seymour's single-tone personality only blends the vocals out of the forefront.

records

If the music walks mediocre territory, the lyrics are a different story. Each song pokes out an abstract message about relationships.

"This Morning" shows how blind faith can act as a last resort to save an ending romance. "Throw Your Arms Around Me" has the girl from a one-night stand on a prima donna level, ready for worship.

"Is There Anybody In There?" stands out with more serious subject matter: the indifference with which the media sometimes shows us what's wrong in the world.

Hunters and Collectors have some of the right pieces. It only remains to be seen if they can fit these pieces into a legitimate whole.

Confidence

Washington coach: ASU 'over Cougars' heads'

By Staff and Wire Reports

After a 30-0 win, ASU football coach John Cooper has identified the obvious danger going into the conference season against Washington State Saturday: overconfidence.

"We can't have a letdown this week," Cooper told reporters Tuesday at his weekly news conference. "Washington State is a very dangerous football team. They'll come down here and throw caution to the wind. They will let it all hang out and play a wide-open football game both offensively and defensively."

The Cougars will arrive with a 1-2 record and a roster riddled with injuries, but Cooper is still taking them very seriously.

"They always play ASU tough and it'll be a knock-down, drag-out fight," Cooper said. "All you have to do is look at the stats of last year's game up there. They had 25 first downs against us. They moved the football. We were lucky to get out of there alive."

The Sun Devils won 21-16 last Oct. 26 at Pullman, Wash., to take an 8-5-1 lead in the series that began in 1960. Washington State last won here in 1983 by a 33-21 score.

But judging by the comments of Cougars coach Jim Walden, the Devils could scarcely be too confident going into Saturday's matchup.

Walden said his club this year "is not only not a good team, we're a bad team."

"We're in over our heads against ASU. Even if we play over our heads, we're still overmatched this week," Walden said in a telephone conference call. "We're playing embarrassing football. It's been a comedy of errors. We have the worst kickoff team in history. We could pick six kids out of the stands and it couldn't be any worse."

"In the last two games (a 20-13 loss to San Jose State and a 31-21 loss at California), the kids absolutely just quit. This bunch threw in the towel and we're going to get rid of them. I wouldn't even recruit these players again."

'We're in over our heads against ASU. Even if we play over our heads, we're still overmatched this week.'

— Jim Walden

Walden said he has resorted to full-scale scrimmaging this week and several of his starters have gotten injured.

"The list will get bigger," he said. "That's the price you have to pay for not playing the game the way it's supposed to be played. We might only have 40 players left to take on this trip."

"We're going to get our brains knocked out anyway. I don't give a hoot about the rest of the season except to rebuild the dignity in this program."

Walden, despite his criticisms of the Cougars, says he is concerned with his players' attitudes, and with getting their confidence rebuilt.

"My plan is to get these kids to feel good about themselves and restore some respectability and some pride. Someone has to jar them back to reality."

Cooper said he doesn't believe in Walden's tactics, "but I think he's one of the top coaches in collegiate football. His team will come out here with fire coming out their nose. They'll play hard."

"I know what he's going through. I've been there. I got beat 59-20 by West Texas State my first year of coaching at Tulsa (in 1977). Thank God it was the last game of the

A look at football; from the nice guys to the bad

Did you see the Sports Illustrated poll on the 10 cleanest players in the NFL?

Walter Payton of the Chicago Bears finished first. "If there's a prince of football, put him at the top of the list," said Lions defensive end William Gay.

Mike Singletary of the Bears was the runner-up. I guess he gets along with the rest of the players in the league. But I wonder how he gets along with the Bears. I think it would be like putting Imelda Marcos and Corazon Aquino together at a fashion show.

Third place goes to Steve Largent of the Seahawks, according to the informal poll of more than 200 NFL players.

Giants Lawrence Taylor and Howie Long of the Raiders tie for fourth. Wait a minute, that can't be the same Howie Long I know that plays for the Raiders.

Mike Haynes, the Raiders defensive back, captures fifth place. How do these defensive players stay in the league?

Another tie goes to Cowboy Tony Dorsett and Dolphin Dwight Stephenson. Riki Ellison, a 49ers linebacker, says Dorsett is like a comedian. "He keeps smiling even when you knock the hell out of him — like the joke is on you or something. Then he gets up and skips away like nothing's wrong."

Charlie Joiner of the Chargers fills the seventh spot. Mark Gastineau, Jets defensive end, and Clay Matthews, Browns linebacker tie for eighth.

Carol Boos
Asst. Sports Editor

Raiders running back Marcus Allen comes in ninth. Players say he doesn't hit you until he knows you've seen him first. Sounds like a game plan for Bronco coach, Dan Reeves.

In last place, David Logan of the Bucs.

I like to know that nice guys can finish first. But it isn't always the nice guys that finish first; sometimes it's the bad guys that come out ahead.

Take for instance, Oklahoma Sooners (the No. 1 team in the nation), Brian "The Boz" Bosworth.

This guy is 6-foot-3, 240 pounds and is a spitting image of the neighborhood bully who picks on the kid for not only his lunch money, but his milk money too. The only difference is the kid is a running back.

No, I'm not saying that running backs are wimps. But when a linebacker — whose jersey number (44) is engraved on the side of his head, just below his orange mohawk hair cut — goes for your eyes rather than the padding on your body, I would give him my lunch money too.

This guy is mean: his idea of a perfect game is hurting someone on every play.

Bear quarterback Jim McMahon, is just as mean. But he has found different people to take it out on, like NFL Commissioner Pete Rozelle.

This is the guy who fashioned the latest style of headbands last season. This season it is posters.

McMahon is dressed in leather, high-top boots and of course, sunglasses. Standing in front of Soldier Field, he holds a loaded crossbow.

Maybe he needed to make some extra money after the fines he incurred last year.

Whatever his reasons, this isn't a person I would want my kids to look up to, much less grow up to be like.

And it's becoming a trend. Kenny Easley of the Seattle Seahawks has a poster out called "The Enforcer."

Football used to be a pretty good field to go into.

OK, so McMahon has already sold 35,000 posters at $4.95 a shot, and with expected sales to reach 500,000, he should live comfortably.

But facts remain, the NFL is a professional league. And Rozelle should decide if he wants the players who represent the league to promote such products as United Way or the poster industry.

In the meantime, I think I will buy my nephew a soccer ball.

Intramural golf will stand; winners' reactions mixed

By STEVE ADAMS
State Press

The Intramural Department's decision, made late Monday afternoon, to let individual golf titles remain tied rather than organize a sudden death playoff has evoked mixed reactions among participants.

"I'd like to play again," said Clay Coffeen, one of three who finished first in the men's division.

"I really blew it and if we played again I know that I could win it.

"I do understand though how it would be hard for the intramural department to get everybody together again to play the sudden death.

"Next year they said that if there is a tie after the tournament is over they would play a sudden death right away to decide the winner," Coffeen added.

Shawn Anderson, one of the women's first place winners, didn't mind the intramural committee's decision.

"I didn't mind. It doesn't matter to me that it will remain a tie," Anderson said.

Anderson said it didn't matter whether she won the tournament or not.

As the decision now stands, those players who tied in their respective divisions will all be co-winners and will each receive the Intramural Golf Champion T-shirt and a beach towel.

"We felt that it would be just too hard to get all the players together again next Sunday to decide a winner," said Juliette Moore, assistant director of intramurals.

Donna Johnson, another top finisher in the women's division, didn't mind the intramurals decision either.

"Their decision is fine with me. If the playoff was held this weekend I couldn't play anyway, because I will be out of town," said Johnson.

Johnson also said it would have been difficult to have a sudden death playoff considering that everybody leaves right after they are done playing.

"It's kind of hard to know who won the tournament, let alone have a sudden death playoff, when all the players leave right away when they are finished and don't even wait around to learn the results.

"I know that when I finished at four, I wasn't going to wait around till 5:30. That's when the official said the players would be all done," added Johnson.

The final results of the 1986 Men's Class A and Women's Intramural Golf tournament have three men sharing the men's championship and four women sharing the women's championship.

In other intramural news:
•Intramural volleyball has entered its second week and a number of teams in the men's and women's divisions remain undefeated.

In women's Division A, the Mochi Pounders lead the pack with a 2-0 record. In Division B, Kappa Delta II and Kappa Sigma Stardust round out their league with records of 2-0.

Meanwhile in men's action, the Pikes, Theta Delta Chi and the Phi Dels carry records of 2-0 in the A Division while eight teams in Division B also boast records of 2-0.

•The date for the individual's meeting for flag football was inadvertently stated as Sept. 23. The actual date for this meeting is Sept. 30 at 3:30 p.m. in the Physical Education West Building, Room 157.

•The entry deadline for the intramural men's and women's swimming and diving competition is Sept. 25. All entries are due before 4 p.m. on Sept. 24 in the P. E. West Building, Intramural Office.

Devils successful at sending players on to NFL

By JAY TAYLOR
State Press

Most people don't think of ASU as one of the country's big "football factories" like USC, Alabama or Texas. But the evidence shows if you want to play pro football, you have as good a chance of getting there from ASU as anywhere else.

There are 25 former Sun Devils currently playing in the NFL. Some are just marginal players, some are at the top of their profession and some are taking a lot of heat for the way they have been playing.

But let's look at the guys who are playing well now. Gerald Riggs (running back, Atlanta) led the NFC in rushing last year and is near the top of the league again this year. He has been all-Pro three years in a row and is widely recognized as one of the best all-around backs in the game.

Riggs ranks 10th on the Devils' all-time rushing list with 2,086 yards on 386 carries for 17 touchdowns. He averaged 5.4 yards per carry over his four years, the best of which was his senior year in 1981 when he rushed 148 times for 891 yards and six touchdowns.

Mike Haynes is another player who is among the best in the league at his position. The Raiders' defensive back is a perennial starter in the Pro Bowl. He helped lead the Raiders to a Super Bowl win over the Washington Redskins after the 1983 season.

In the 1974 season at ASU, Haynes led the nation with 11 interceptions and was drafted by the New England Patriots after the '75 season and traded to Los Angeles during the 1983 season.

The Dallas Cowboys' Danny White is probably the best-known ASU alum in the NFL. When White went to the pros after the 1973 season, he held most of the Sun Devil passing records and led the Devils to records of 11-1, 10-2 and 11-1 and three consecutive bowl wins. He still is the career leader in passing yardage and touchdown passes.

The Devils were ranked sixth nationally after the 1971 season and ninth in 1973 behind White.

But at the other end of the spectrum from White is Mark Malone. He inherited the job after Terry Bradshaw retired and the Steelers' experiment with David Woodley didn't work. Now, in Malone's second year as the starter, the Steelers are going nowhere fast. They have started 0-3 for the first time since 1970 and the fans in Pittsburgh are getting restless.

A radio station in Pittsburgh held a poll to see who fans thought should be the starting quarterback. Malone got a not-too-overwhelming 17 percent support rate. One has to wonder how long Chuck Noll will wait before making some sort of change.

Paul Moyer of the Seattle Seahawks has done a good job as their nickel back and on special teams for the last four years. I remember one time in particular when he broke Chuck Muncie's nose tackling him in a game with the Chargers.

Moyer had a particularly good day last week against the Patriots. He blocked a punt that was recovered for a Seattle touchdown, then recovered a fumble to thwart New

Pac-10 sends hordes into pros

Where do they come from?

For those of you who wonder which conference sends the most players to the National Football League, wonder no more.

The Pac-10 is the NFL's top breeding ground.

Of the 1,260 players on active NFL rosters, 169 played their college football in the Pac-10. That means 13.4 percent of the league came via the Pac-10.

Three schools — USC, ASU and UCLA — are the dominant teams in developing pros. Those three schools alone have produced 95 players, or 7.5 percent of the league, an amazing statistic.

Southern Cal is the runaway leader with 46 players in the NFL, more than any school in the country. If you want to be a pro football player, your best bet is to become a Trojan.

USC is particularly adept at developing offensive linemen and linebackers, with 14 of each in the league. They also have two Heisman Trophy winners, Marcus Allen and Charles White, in the league.

The Trojans also tend to make their mark once they get to the NFL. In addition to the countless all-Pro selections they have had, USC has been represented 53 times in the Super Bowl, 13 in just the last five years.

ASU is second in the conference at producing pro players. The Devils have 25 players currently on active rosters (see story above).

UCLA is third with 24 players in the NFL, the most notable of whom is Seattle Seahawk safety Kenny Easley, a perennial Pro Bowl participant and one of the hardest hitters in the game. But he is far from the only noteworthy Bruin. San Francisco has two Bruins on its roster who have made quite a career for themselves in six-time Pro Bowl guard Randy Cross and Wendell Tyler. Jay Schroeder turned the Washington Redskins around with his play at quarterback last year. And St. Louis picked place-kicker John Lee, the most accurate kicker in the history of the Pac-10.

Surprisingly, Oregon has the fourth-most players in the pros, with 15. Some have gone on to great careers like Dan Fouts, one of the most prolific passers in NFL annals, and tight end Russ Francis of the 49ers.

California has placed 14 players in the league. One Golden Bear alum, Wesley Walker of the Jets, almost single handedly beat the Miami Dolphins by catching four touchdown passes last weekend.

Washington and Stanford are tied for sixth with 13 players each in the NFL. The Cardinal has four quarterbacks in the league: Jim Plunkett of the Raiders, Turk Schonert of Cincinnati, Steve Dils of the Rams and of course John Elway of Denver.

Former Husky Curt Marsh has been a mainstay at offensive tackle for the Raiders, and quarterback Steve Pelluer is currently the backup to Danny White at Dallas.

Washington State has 11 players in the league, including two from last year's team. Running back Reuben Mayes is now with New Orleans and quarterback Mark Rypien is backing up Schroeder at Washington.

Arizona is ninth with nine players in the league. Denver seems to be a favorite destination for the Cats, including wide receiver Vance Johnson and high-priced linebacker Ricky Hunley.

Oregon State has only two players in the league.

—JAY TAYLOR

John Lee, now with St. Louis, is one of the many Pac-10 players who have gone on to pro careers.

Pros

England's final drive and preserve the Seahawks victory and keep them undefeated.

The Los Angeles Rams have certainly gotten their money's worth out of Ron Brown, a wide receiver who graduated in '82. He returned three kickoffs for touchdowns last year, including two in one game and one in a Monday night win over San Francisco that helped the Rams win the game and clinch the NFC West title.

In nine of the last 11 years the Devils have put at least one player into the NFL who is still active today. And while that is impressive enough, some years are definitely better than others for stocking professional rosters.

The best year ever was 1982. The Sun Devils still have nine players from that year's Fiesta Bowl team who are still playing.

And four Sun Devils have reached the pinnacle of success in the NFL — a Super Bowl championship. Mike Richardson (Bears), Malone, Haynes and White have all made it to the promised land in the professional ranks.

But there also is the other side of the coin. Of the eight Sun Devils who signed pro contracts after last year, only two made opening-day rosters.

And over the past five years, only 19 of 54 have made it in the NFL.

Miami coach: his team better than No. 1 Sooners

Last year's 27-14 victory inspires confidence in Johnson this season

CORAL GABLES, Fla. (AP) — Just like last year, University of Miami coach Jimmy Johnson believes his football team is superior to the top-ranked Oklahoma Sooners.

Last year, Johnson kept his opinion to himself until after the Hurricanes beat the Sooners 27-14 at Norman, Okla. This time, Johnson is being a little brasher before the game.

"I felt like we had the better football team last year," Johnson said Tuesday. "I feel like we have the better football team this year."

Johnson then offered further pregame comments about this clash between the No. 1 and No. 2 teams in the country.

"It's going to be a very, very close game between two great teams, and I think it will come down to which team makes the fewest mistakes," he said.

This is only the 20th time the two top-ranked teams in The Associated Press poll have met, the most recent being the Oct. 19, 1985 game between No. 1 Iowa and No. 2 Michigan. Iowa won that game 12-10, giving the top-ranked teams a 14-3-2 record in the matchups.

"For every football fan, player and coach, this is the absolute ultimate in excitement," Johnson said. "You have the defending national champions playing the team that gave them their only loss last year. You've got No. 1 playing No. 2. I know the adrenaline will be flowing for everybody."

But just moments later, Johnson changed his tune.

"This is just our fourth game," he said. "We've won three and we're looking to win four."

He said for the Hurricanes to beat the Sooners, they need to slow down the Wishbone attack directed by sophomore quarterback Jamelle Holieway.

Last year, Holieway wasn't sharp when he took over after the Hurricanes knocked out starting quarterback Troy Aikman. But Holieway went on to lead the Sooners to eight straight victories and the national championship.

The maturation of Holieway isn't the only reason the Sooners may be better this year than last, according to Johnson.

"I think this year, more than others, they have tremendous talent in the offensive line," he said. "They are more physical and quicker. They've always had great talent in the backfield, but now they have that kind of skill behind one of their best lines ever."

Meanwhile, Miami quarterback Vinny Testaverde said, "There are things to be concerned about with Oklahoma, but I wouldn't say we're worried."

EXPLORE THE LIMITS OF YOUR CAREER AT APS!

New graduates... explore the limits of your career at Arizona Public Service Company! With solid management support, state-of-the-art technology and developed career enhancement programs, we'll make the most of your skills and education.

As Arizona's largest supplier of electricity, we offer specialized training programs to new graduates in both engineering and business. The following programs allow you to choose assignments leading up to a permanent position that best matches your qualifications and career interests.

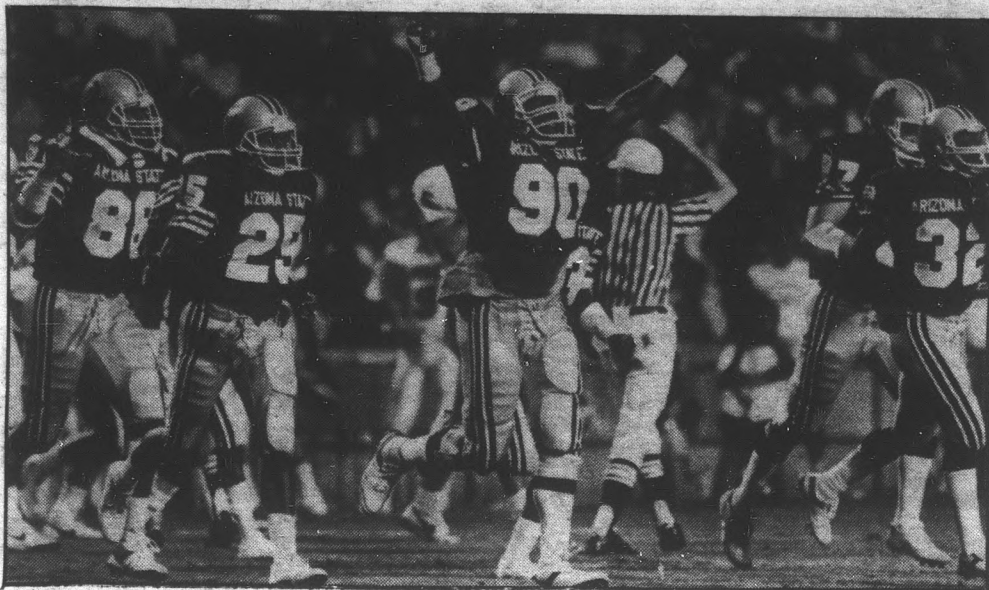

TONE: Our Training and Orientation for New Engineers (TONE) program offers on-the-job assignments for new Electrical Engineering graduates and gives a general, but thorough overview of the company.

CBT: Our Corporate Business Training (CBT) program is a 1 year training and development program designed to allow you, the BS and MBA participants to choose rotating assignments that enhance your career at APS. We're currently seeking new Accounting graduates.

Attend one of our brief presentations and question and answer sessions to find out more about our company and the exceptional career opportunities awaiting you, the new graduate.

Contact your Placement Office for more details. If unable to attend, please send resume to: David Bentler, Arizona Public Service Company, P.O. Box 53999, Station 1102, Dept. ASU, Phoenix, AZ 85072-3999. An Equal Opportunity Employer.

Scott Stephen (90) leads the celebration of Saturday's win. But Coach John Cooper fears a letdown this week.

season. I went out and recruited some new players."

Cooper said the Sun Devils' lofty ranking in this week's poll is just what he expected.

"I told our team that if we won our first two games, we'd be ranked in the top 15. All we got to do now is win the rest of our games and the Rose Bowl," he said.

"But this is a precarious situation. This could change. You lose one game and you're out (of the poll). But it's exciting for me. I told our players, 'We're ranked 11th in the country' and they all cheered. There was only one bad thing — the University of Arizona is 10th."

Red badge of courage.
