

3 ASU students foil bank robbery attempt

By MICHAEL BURGESS and LAUREN MILLETTE
State Press

Three ASU students foiled a bank robbery attempt late Wednesday afternoon by tackling a female suspect dressed as a man in the bank's back alley.

The attempt was made at the Arizona Bank, 619 S. Mill Ave., just after the bank closed at 3 p.m.

Junior marketing major Mike Kruse and junior business majors Jeff Whiteman and Scott Beattie chased the suspect after she broke through a locked door and fled on a 10-speed bicycle with about $100.

Jessica Bryn Rigsby, 37, of Tucson, was being held at the Tempe City Jail Wednesday night for investigation of robbery charges.

The men chased Rigsby to an alley behind the bank and pinned her to the ground until Tempe Police officers arrived "about a minute later," Whiteman said.

Kruse tackled Rigsby, who had tossed aside a fake mustache and straw hat that concealed her long hair, before the students grabbed her, Whiteman said.

While Kruse was holding Rigsby, Whiteman said he kicked the blue camera bag the suspect was holding to see if she had a gun.

Kruse said Rigsby yelled, "I didn't do it!" Whiteman said they told her, "Yes, you did do it. We saw you."

He also said Rigsby showed no emotion and said: "I had to do it. They were going to take my house away."

Richard Ellis, head of security at Arizona Bank, said it is corporate policy not to release information until FBI investigations are complete.

Whiteman said the three men and Rigsby were the only customers in the bank.

"Mike and I were in one line, and we saw her walk up to the line next to us," he said.

Beattie, who was in the line next to Whiteman and Kruse, said Rigsby tried to disguise her voice as a man's.

"She said I should go before her," he said. "She wanted to be last in line and closest to the door."

Whiteman said Rigsby looked suspicious.

"She was wearing sunglasses, a fake mustache, and a straw hat," he said. "She also wore a long-sleeve flannel shirt and blue jeans."

Whiteman said Rigsby also looked unusual because she was stiff, stared straight ahead and kept her hand in the blue bag while at the window.

"The teller was calm and said, 'That man just robbed me,'" Whiteman said. "We didn't even think about it. We just said let's go."

"It was so weird watching her."

Kruse said witnessing the robbery was like something on television.

The students described Rigsby as 5 feet 6 inches and about 160 pounds.

A Tempe City Jail spokesman said Rigsby's bail and trial date will be set today.

ASU prof target of Contra death plot, Tambs said

By VICKIE CHACHERE
State Press

U.S. Ambassador to Costa Rica Lewis Tambs is the target of a Nicaraguan Contra death plot, a Washington, D.C.-based public interest organization said Wednesday.

But Tambs, who also is an ASU history professor, said it is the Sandanistas, the Marxist-backed government controlling Nicaragua, who are trying to kill him.

In a telephone interview from the Costa Rican embassy Tuesday, Tambs said The Christic Institute's charge that the Contras are trying to kill him is little more than a rumor "that has been floating around."

Tambs, who is on unpaid leave from the University, said he has received death threats, but the threats were from guerrillas involved in South America's narcotics trade and from Sandanistas backing the illegal drug industry in Central America.

The Contras are U.S.-backed rebels trying to overthrow the Sandanista regime that controls Nicaragua. The Sandanistas took over the country 1979 when they overthrew Nicaraguan dictator Anastasio Somoza.

Tambs, 59, served as ambassador to Colombia from 1983 to 1985. He said he first became aware of a plot against his life there.

"When I was in Colombia, the guerrillas (protecting the drug trade) were after me," he said, adding he thinks the threats stem

'When I was in Colombia, the guerrillas were after me . . . If you look into it, you will see the communist insurgency in Colombia and Peru are in alliance with the drug dealers.'

— Lewis Tambs

from communist-backed interests in the region.

"If you look into it you will see the communist insurgency in Colombia and Peru are in alliance with the drug dealers," Tambs said.

U.S. State Department officials have no independent confirmation that Contra rebels are involved in drug trafficking or in an assassination plot against him, he said.

But Tambs said he has official confirmation that the Sandanistas are involved in drug trafficking, including photographs from July 1984 showing a Sandanista official loading cocaine into a plane bound for the United States.

Robert Hager, an attorney for The Christic Institute, said his organization has spent the last year investigating the Contra plot to kill Tambs and has uncovered a Contra conspiracy to assassinate Tambs and blame the killing on the Sandanistas.

The Christic Institute is a center for public policy and public-interest law. The institute, which works with several religious organizations, has represented and defended church workers in the Sanctuary Movement.

Hager said the Contras had planned to bomb the U.S. embassy in San Jose, Costa Rica, and convince U.S. officials that Sandanistas had done it. He said the Contras hope such an incident would cause the United States to launch a military strike against the Sandanistas.

In August, The Christic Institute charged in a lawsuit against 24 people linked to the rebel group that the Contras had tried to kill Tambs. The suit, filed in a U.S. District Court in Florida, was rejected by a judge, Hager said, but the group will refile a similar lawsuit today in the same court.

The lawsuit asks for $23.8 million on behalf of two U.S. journalists injured in the Contra assassination attempt of Eden Pastora, a former Contra rebel who split with the organization on May 30, 1984.

Eight people were killed in the attack, and 28 were injured. Pastora escaped with minor injuries.

The journalists, Tony Avirgan and Martha Honey, are a husband-wife reporting team working in Central America. Avirgan was working as a television cameraman for ABC News, and Honey was reporting for two London newspapers at the time of the attack.

The lawsuit charges that one of the defendants offered a $1 million bounty for the person who assassinated Tambs.

Twenty-four U.S., Central American and South American citizens are charged with a variety of crimes in the 63-page suit. The charges include illegal transportation of weapons to Central America, involvement in the conspiracy to kill Pastora and drug trafficking.

Arizona senator disagrees with bill to tax student aid

By KIM MATTINGLY
State Press

Arizona Sen. Dennis DeConcini is not happy with the nation's tax reform and said that in a few years Americans will realize "it was not such a good idea after all," the senator's press assistant said Wednesday.

Tim Carlsgaard said DeConcini, a Democrat, did not vote for the bill last Saturday when it was passed by the Senate (74-23) because of its excessive transition rules and a few key provisions.

He also said DeConcini does not agree with the new provision which taxes student aid in excess of tuition and fees costs.

"I'm sure he wouldn't be happy about it," he said. "There's no sense in imposing taxes on students who are trying to get through school."

The nation's tax bill cleared Congress last week and now is being filed. The bill will go to President Reagan who has indicated he will sign it into law.

Carlsgaard said that before the bill went to the joint House-Senate Committee to be compromised, there were about $5 billion worth of transition rules, or special tax exemptions, for selected organizations.

It came back from the conference committee with more than $10.6 billion in "tax breaks," he said.

Included in the transition rules, Carlsgaard said, are exemptions that allow contributors to the University of Texas and Louisiana State University to deduct their donations for athletic seating rights.

The tax bill otherwise reduces deductions for charitable contributions to universities.

Carlsgaard said the exemptions "probably are because some senator from one of these states was on the conference committee writing the bill."

Jennus Burton, ASU assistant vice president for business affairs, said: "That's the way of political life."

"I'm sure (ASU) would have liked to have all kinds of exemptions, but you have to face reality."

There were two concessions in the bill for Arizona which said tax-exempt bonds could be issued up to $391 million for the Central Arizona Project, and $200 million for the Phoenix Sports Stadium.

But DeConcini said, "I'd be willing to give up these two to take out all the others."

Carlsgaard said DeConcini would rather

there were no transition rules, "then everything would be fair, and everyone would be playing by the same rules."

"People are just going to keep coming back for more and more every year, at the taxpayers' expense," he said.

Carlsgaard said Senate Finance Committee Chairman Robert Packwood, R-Ore., and House Ways and Means Committee Chairman Dan Rostenkowski, D-Ill., wrote most of the compromise and the tax exemptions.

As far as the bill's positive effects, Carlsgaard said, "Oregon is No. 1, and Arizona is way down on the list."

One negative for Arizona is a provision that eliminates deductions for state and local sales tax, he said.

DeConcini was "very disappointed" in this provision "because Arizona relies heavily on sales tax," he said.

But he said the senator was happy to see the country's 14 tax brackets reduced to two, and six million of the country's working poor removed from tax rules.

Editor's note: Senator Barry Goldwater, R-Ariz., will give his reasons for supporting the new tax bill Friday.

Cultural research center attracts Hispanic students to ASU

By DAVE HODGES
State Press

ASU's Hispanic enrollment increase may be a result of the new ASU Hispanic Research Center, the center's director said Wednesday.

Raymond Padilla said the center may have attracted the 174 extra Hispanic students who enrolled at ASU this fall.

In a report released Monday, ASU's Hispanic population showed an increase from 4.9 percent to 5.2 percent of the total student enrollment.

The HRC, established in March 1985 by the Arizona Board of Regents, is an interdisciplinary research unit reporting to the dean of the College of Liberal Arts and Sciences.

"I think the center may have had some impact on drawing Hispanic students (to ASU)," Padilla said. "But we're really just beginning. The main thrust of our recruiting is with graduate students."

"But I think as time goes on, we will draw many more Hispanics to ASU. They'll see that the University has taken an interest in Hispanics.

"As we grow, we'll probably gain more Hispanic researchers and professors, which, in turn, will attract more Hispanic students."

Padilla said the research center receives a budget of $130,000 to $140,000 from the University and receives grants from various foundations.

The HRC was designed as a University-wide center to conduct basic and applied research on a broad range of topics related to Hispanic populations, particularly Mexican-Americans.

The center also disseminates research findings to the academic community and the public, and provides public services in areas of importance to Hispanics.

Padilla said four areas have been targeted by the HRC: Hispanic entrepreneurship, science and technology, Hispanic politics and the arts.

"We're producing a 60-minute program for the Corporation for Public Broadcasting called 'Birthwrite,'" Padilla said. "It portrays what it is like growing up as an Hispanic American."

The center is also looking at ways to improve high school achievements for Hispanic students.

He said besides undertaking a wide variety of research projects, the HRC also engages in several ongoing activities:

- The Bilingual Review/Press is an internationally known publications program that prints Hispanic literature and social science research.

- The Electronic Publications Program represents an effort to record and disseminate the results of significant research and creative effort related to Hispanics, using floppy disks.

- The Hispanic Data Archives records research data relating to Hispanics.

"A goal of the HRC is to serve as a resource to the Hispanic research community," Padilla said.

Americans have simplistic view of drug problem

Last week's news flash: It has just been reported that millions of Americans are abusing drugs. This week's news: Recent polls indicate that drug abuse is the number one concern in America.

Next up is a close look at whether the media has given the drug "epidemic" too much coverage.

In reality, the news media has given us no "news" and too much "more of the same" on the drug issue. But it is hard to beat Miami Vice-style drug raids, dead star athletes and addicts shooting up in alleys for great 60-second spots on the evening news. And Americans love to be concerned about world and national problems. Not too much depth, please, just enough to feel informed and make a quick sweeping generalization.

ETHIOPIA: starvation — bad. Solution — pay $10, stand in line, sing songs, feel good again.

SOUTH AFRICA: apartheid — bad. Solution — divest until suppressed minority has no employment, feel good again.

JUSTICE WILLIAM REHNQUIST: fascist, bigot, oppressor of women — bad. No solution. Nomination assured, so change channels, feel good again.

AMERICA: drug epidemic — bad. Solution — declare war on drugs, donate urine, teach kids to say 'no,' feel good again.

While the fact that millions of Americans are abusing drugs has been made crystal clear, the question of why they are doing so has been completely overlooked. If the sources to America's drug addiction are not adequately identified, Band-Aid solutions will be the only outcome of recent media hype, and Americans will soon put the problem out of their minds in anticipation of the next big issue of concern.

If our drug problem is caused by Colombians growing coca leaves, international traffickers sneaking the stuff into the country or seedy-looking dealers selling baggies through the schoolyard fence at recess, then the war on drugs just might have a shot. But the problem and the solution to the drug problem lie on the demand side of the equation and not the supply side. While limiting drug growing, trafficking and dealing is desirable, to do so will not make a large dent in American drug abuse.

Ben Hoglund
Columnist

The President and Mrs. Reagan did address the need to stem the demand for drugs in their recent chat with the nation. Drug testing is aimed at decreasing the demand for drugs by taking away employment from drug users. Mrs. Reagan has been urging students across the country to "just say 'no.'" Both efforts are part of a broader effort to make drug use socially unacceptable. Their success will undoubtedly be greater than supply-limiting efforts, though drug testing has an uncertain future.

While making drugs socially unacceptable may decrease drug abuse, the real question of why the demand for drugs is so high has not been answered. Drug addiction is treated as a disease, but it is not a disease that people catch and then turn to drugs. People turn to drugs for certain benefits and then become addicted. The benefits derived from drugs are somewhat obvious. Drugs provide pleasure, instant gratification and escape. Interestingly enough, so do alcohol and sex, not to mention the permanent escape of suicide. At the source of the drug epidemic is the source of a lot of other epidemics. It is all good and fine to "just say 'no'" when it comes to drugs, but to do so doesn't eliminate the desire for easy pleasure or escape.

The source of the drug problem is, then, the lie that pleasure and happiness are ends in themselves. That pleasure and happiness are real values, and that outside of these, life has no meaning or value, that our purpose in life is to satisfy the desires of pleasure and comfort, that man's only fulfillment is to be found in a feeling.

But life cannot be based on an elusive feeling, and the people who find feelings of happiness and pleasure are usually those who aren't searching for them. Freedom of choice without responsibility of consequence may sound like a great invention, but it is nothing more than an illusion. Drugs may provide a temporary feeling that the illusion is true or a means of numbing the despair caused when the illusion is found to be unattainable, but they do not erase the lie.

This is not to say that people are ascertaining pleasure as a truth, but rather it is the only thing left in the absence of truth. If, in fact, there are no values and there is no meaning to our existence other than to be "happy," then perhaps a future of despair, disillusionment and drugs is the end to which the human race has come.

But before we submit ourselves to such a future, perhaps America's drug epidemic will show us where we've gone wrong in the recent past. If life really had no meaning, what would our basis for "no meaning" be? If men are strictly a physical, intellectual being whose value is based on utility or quality, why then are people with the best of physical condition often unfulfilled? Why does the use of drugs that produce happy feelings produce, in the long run, unhappiness and self destruction?

These examples at least indicate that there is something more to life than searching for happiness. Because this is so, parents and educators are in a place of great responsibility. Both have a crucial role in the formation of values. Parents and educators hold the solution to America's drug problem in their hands. The solution is not a quick fix and it requires a reassessment of the values being transmitted to today's kids. Not as easy as a Band-Aid, but what could be more important than the lives of the next generation?

Unfortunately the American family is not a very healthy institution and our educational system has relinquished the responsibility to present any values or virtues. At the same time television presents easy solutions to difficult problems, rock music touts the freedom to choose without any concept of consequences. What child wouldn't pick candy, and who is surprised that America has a drug problem?

All should be outraged

Editor:
I would like to respond to cartoonist Mike Ritter's Sept. 29 offering concerning Associated Students' refusal to fund the Lesbian and Gay Academic Union. Regardless of where each of us stands on the funding issue, we should all be outraged by Ritter's vicious portrayal of lesbians.

Cartooning makes an important contribution to the maintenance of free and open political discourse. It is perhaps most effective when poking satirical barbs into deserving targets of all stripes. However, it is also subject to the same restraints of fairness, decency and accuracy that guide any other journalistic endeavor.

Ritter's cartoon ignored these restraints and every other canon of good taste. It was a model of stereotypic and prejudicial thinking and set new standards of mean spiritedness. Its comparison of lesbians with Nazis is vulgar beyond words. Above all, it gave no evidence of having any intent to enlighten or promote thoughtful consideration in its audience. Instead, it served only to pointlessly defame one legitimate part of that audience and to offend most of the rest.

While I do not suggest that Mr. Ritter should be muzzled, I certainly think you might at least make an attempt to housebreak him. His present activities are fouling the air and soiling a forum important to all of us.

Statement of conscience

Editor:
I was compelled to write this letter after seeing Mike Ritter's caricature of a typical lesbian on Sept. 29. I am not a homosexual and am not in any way associated with the Lesbian and Gay Academic Union or any other gay organization, so my reason for making this present statement is purely one of conscience.

Simply put, Mike Ritter is a jerk.

Defending ASASU, newspaper

Editor:
After reading stories and letters in the State Press, I write this letter in defense of Associated Students and our campus paper.

The State Press has covered the gay activities, printed cartoons about and has printed letters about it as well. The notion that all people are equal and everyone has their rights is true and just.

Does the State Press not have rights such as freedom of speech and freedom of the press? It certainly does. Mike Ritter's cartoon is an example of this. I beg that you people backing rights not be hypocrites.

The political science majors Joel Sannes and Susan Chubrich (Oct. 1) must be missing the point in their classes. They said, "If the bylaws prevent a fraction of money from going to these groups because they are political' in nature, why can a fraction of that same money be appropriated to fund a 'negative' political statement about the same group?" What does it say about suppression of ideas in your class, Joel and Susan? A democratic society is not formed out of suppression. Anyone who wants to see or hear one side of a story should head east.

ASASU should keep their money. The Lesbian and Gay Academic Union is a controversial group — if it wasn't, people would not be writing in. The rights you have as a person should not be measured against the money you receive as a group. Many organizations charge an entry fee to join. You people have money. Pool it together and do something noticeably constructive with it. Prove your worth.

Defense

Knowledge, not weapons, goal of ASU research

By KIM MATTINGLY
State Press

ASU expends millions of U.S. defense money every year to conduct basic research that contributes to the nation's scientific knowledge base, and if that research somehow advances U.S. military capabilities to the detriment of mankind... well, the University can't control everything.

This is the philosophy expressed by the assistant dean for research in the College of Engineering and Applied Sciences and by several researchers in the department.

Chuck Backus, who is working to increase research in the college, whether through defense funding or other sources, said: "People like to think there's some sinister plot behind defense money, but what we at the University are doing is contributing to the scientific base of information."

"We contribute to the technological knowledge that people use for good or evil. We can't control that."

ASU was awarded $13.8 million in research contracts between July 1, 1985, and June 30, 1986, and issued $62.2 million in research proposals. Most of these are still pending.

ASU research awards this year for July and August alone totaled almost $2.3 million.

The College of Engineering and Applied Sciences currently is working under contract with the U.S. Department of Defense and does research sponsored by the Army, Navy and Air Force.

But ASU is not conducting weapons research or any research that is designed specifically for warfare purposes, Backus said.

"The major part of research in this country is sponsored by defense agencies, but there are no strings attached," he said.

"There is nothing inherently bad or antisacred related to defense type money. It's just another funding opportunity."

"Sure, it helps defense, but it has all kinds of other capabilities."

For example, under defense funding ASU has become the world's leader in the production of gallium arsenide crystals, a semiconductor material that makes computers 10 times faster — whether those computers are detecting a nuclear attack or programming a grocery list.

Semiconductors made from gallium arsenide would suffer little radiation damage in a nuclear attack.

But Gunter Schwuttke, director of ASU's Semiconductor Materials Research Laboratory, said the importance of gallium arsenide lies in its economic uses, "not in its military application."

"Anything in electronics can be used in nuclear defense," he said. "But we are making major contributions in programs which will help us to survive in international economics."

Gunter Schwuttke, the director of ASU's Semiconductor Materials Research Laboratory, shows a gallium arsenide crystal, worth more than $40,000.

"Economic survival is the issue, not war. We need a strong economy, and the key to a strong economy is research."

Schwuttke said the United States is now on the brink of organizing a breakthrough in gallium arsenide production.

"It will generate billions and billions in foreign trade, and that is the importance of gallium arsenide."

David Ferry, director of ASU's Solid State Electronic Center, developed the world's smallest transistor under defense funding in October 1985.

Ferry said: "A lot of commercial things get their start in defense-type research. If 10 percent of the research goes into defense, they're happy. It is not their main purpose."

Ferry said the defense department's main purpose is "to keep the United States working at the frontier of science, so we don't get surprised by another country."

A University statement against weapons research would not affect ASU's current research, he said, "because there's a difference between weapons research and research funded by the defense department."

Backus said: "I think you can challenge anything as it could be used to adversely affect mankind."

"There's no limit to draw the line, but where we draw the line is at classified research."

The University adopted a policy in December 1984 that bans classified and proprietary research — that which is not open to the public — on campus.

"I don't think there should be classified research on campus because anything that restricts the dissemination of information on campus is not in the philosophy or the spirit of why we're here — to contribute to the general knowledge of the country," Backus said.

Brent Brown, ASU vice president for University relations, said the University must give "academic freedom to those who are doing military research just as to any other kind of research."

"There might be a lot of people very opposed to AIDS research, but we can't stop it from being done," he said. "That would be censorship."

Backus said it has always been difficult for society to appreciate the benefits that come out of military research.

U.S. defense agencies "feel a general responsibility for increasing the scientific and engineering knowledge base of the country, which will be useful perhaps to them, but will be useful to everybody else non-military as well," he said.

With the growth of other nation's electronic capabilities, Schwuttke emphasized that this is critical time for the United States to strive to remain at the top of the technological ladder.

Schwuttke said universities, industries and government must unite to stimulate research and advance U.S. technology.

"It is a necessity," he said. "It must become a reality. To raise this nation to the highest level of technology, we must research. If we don't, we disappear."

"Agents of mass destruction" concern senate

By ED SCHUBERT
State Press

Be it moved that research toward the development of nuclear, chemical or biological weapons should not be permitted under the auspices of Arizona State University, whether on campus or at the research park.

The Faculty Senate Statement on Weapons Research, quoted above, also would require an annual report on the nature of all research at ASU and the research park, toward the end of determining if research related to development of nuclear, biological or chemical weapons — also called NBC — is under contemplation or in progress.

The resolution was adapted by the senate last year.

But ASU President J. Russell Nelson returned it to the senate with the request that it be reconsidered. Nelson was concerned that the statement, in its current form, could inhibit the academic freedom of ASU researchers.

J. Lee Kingston, chairman of the Faculty Senate Academic Freedom and Tenure Committee, which considered Nelson's request, said his committee agreed that "academic freedom could potentially be compromised" by the statement as it is presently worded.

He said the statement clearly is intended to prohibit development of "agents of mass destruction." Yet it does not address research on laser technology, which also could be involved in research on weapons of mass destruction.

Kingston said such an omission could result in "inequalities and inconsistencies" — as if the University would be saying NBC research is prohibited, but that "if you are working on laser guided weapons, that's OK."

He said a policy on weapons research based on a "case by case analysis" of specific projects would be preferable to the "sweeping generalizations" of the Statement on Weapons Research. Such a policy could be modeled on the University's current policy guidelines on research that involves human subjects, which require careful scrutiny to ensure the welfare of the subjects.

Presently, the University Statement on Weapons Research is in limbo.

Not having been repealed or revised by the Faculty Senate, it remains the official position of the senate — the reservations of the academic freedom and tenure committee notwithstanding. But because the senate is an advisory body, the statement has no effect on University policy. It is not likely to become University policy as long as both Nelson and the academic freedom and tenure committee agree on its potential impact on academic freedom.

Kingston said "the issue has gone to sleep," and he does not expect it to be revived.

But Peter Killeen, a faculty senator for the department of psychology and a supporter of the statement, said he does expect the issue to be revived this semester.

"What is required is an occasion for the president to make a decision," Killeen said.

He said he expects the senate to request of Henry Reeves, ASU vice president for research, the annual report on ASU research described in the Statement on Weapons Research. This would provide an occasion for the University to decide if the policy is operative or not.

'The ethical problem inherent in nuclear, biological and chemical weapons is that they tend to be used against populations as a whole. They're indiscriminate.'

— Peter Killeen

To Killeen, it is essentially a moral issue.

"The ethical problem inherent in nuclear, biological and chemical weapons is that they tend to be used against populations as a whole," he said. "They're indiscriminate. In the case of nuclear and biological weapons, they could wipe out the population of the Earth."

Killeen said he considers the question of academic freedom "a red herring," arguing that the University guidelines for research involving human subjects provides ample precedent for limiting research when human safety or welfare is concerned.

He compared a policy of not accepting NBC research to the decision of many universities to divest holdings in companies doing business with South Africa.

"Right or wrong, these universities believe it's important to take a moral stand, even if the financial impact of the decision (on South Africa) is almost nil," he said.

But does the higher morality necessarily rest with those who oppose NBC research?

As distasteful as the phrase "weapons of mass destruction" may be, most Americans regard such weapons as a terrible but necessary mainstay of the U.S. policy of deterrence, and would consider their abandonment a dangerous act of unilateral disarmament.

Do universities engage in a sort of unilateral research disarmament when they prohibit NBC research?

"A nuclear war would be globally devastating," Killeen said. "There would be no winners. That the leaders of our country are rushing over this cliff does not mean that some of us should not hold back."

"(Patriotism) was the cry that was used against the men who stood at Concord Bridge — 'Where's your loyalty to King George?'"

"Patriotism does not mean giving Uncle Sam our conscience. We must continue to exercise that — in a university of all places."

Coexistence

Palestinian activist advocates Arab-Israel: peace

By ED SCHUBERT
State Press

At the age of 23, he has already addressed the United Nations and testified before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee.

As a Palestinian peace activist, searching for compromise between Arabs and Jews in Israel and its occupied territories, he defies the image that portrays Palestinians as terrorists.

But as an outspoken advocate of a Palestinian state, he's no one's "Uncle Tom."

Muhammad Darawshe, a founding member of Haraket Esalem A'rabia, the Arab Peace Movement, has spoken at ASU twice, most recently last month to a group of about 30 students.

Darawshe told his mostly Jewish audience that a movement toward coexistence between Arabs and Jews in Israel is in competition with an opposite trend toward extremism and hatred.

He described the process by which he said political extremism had become increasingly acceptable in Israel.

"Ten years ago, the most right-wing party in Israel was the Likud," the party of former Prime Minister Menachem Begin, Darawshe said.

"They were the most awful, terrible right-wing party around. Then, inside the Likud, there was Sharon."

Ariel Sharon, Begin's former minister of defense, became prominent in Israeli politics after the Likud came to power in 1977.

"Then the Likud was not so bad, because we had Sharon," Darawshe said.

Then the Gush Emunim, a movement committed to annexing the West Bank, came on the scene, he said.

Because members of the Gush Emunim have resorted to terrorism and violence against West Bank Arabs, Sharon and other right-wing leaders were perceived as not being so bad by comparison, Darawshe said.

And now there is Meir Kahane, "a Jewish Hitler," he said.

Kahane is a leader of a small political party which seeks to expel all Arabs from Israel and the territories.

Now even the Gush Emunim does not seem so bad because "Kahane is making everybody else look like a leftist," Darawshe said.

He said the trend toward extremism among Israeli Jews is mirrored in the attitudes of Israel's Palestinian population, some of whom actually voted for Kahane in the last election.

"About 100 Arabs voted for Kahane," Darawshe said. "I'm sorry to say that they are not stupid."

"These (Arabs) who voted for Kahane argued 'If the Jews want to be extreme, why not?'"

Darawshe said that with Kahane about, Palestinian extremists can claim, "This is the true face of Judaism."

"The extremists are really feeding each other," he said.

But even as attitudes harden among some sectors of the population, there is nonetheless a growing movement toward Jewish-Arab reconciliation and coexistence, he said.

Muhammad Darawshe

Darawshe said there are presently 34 organizations in Israel working for Jewish-Arab coexistence.

"Six years ago there wasn't even one," he said.

Darawshe said the perception that those who are working for peace are a naive "nicey, nicey type of people" is wrong because Jews and Arabs are being murdered because they stand for compromise.

He said that for coexistence to work Jews and Arabs have to stop dehumanizing each other.

"Some of the kids could not adjust to the fact that I'm an Arab and that I was just being normal with them," he said. "Some of the kids just wanted to come up and touch me, to see if I had real flesh and bones."

"A nine-year-old came up to me and said, 'Are you really an Arab?'"

Darawshe said he replied, "Why, sure, I'm an Arab. Why?"

He said the boy answered, "I thought that all Arabs had tails."

Darawshe said he saw the same misconceptions when he accompanied a Jewish friend who was a guest speaker at an Arab school in Israel.

He said that toward the end of his friend's talk, an Arab girl timidly raised her hand and asked, "Are you really a Jew? You're so nice."

"The only way you can build trust between groups is through interaction," Darawshe said. "The movement is very, very slow, but it is working."

At the same time that Arabs and Jews learn to tolerate and understand each other, there also has to be movement toward a political settlement of the Palestinian question, he said.

"The first political solution is the (Israeli) withdrawal from the West Bank and Gaza and the establishment of a Palestinian state," Darawshe said.

He said Israel needs to talk with the PLO, even though the two parties regard each other as bitter enemies.

"Yes, with your enemies you need to speak," he said. "It is with your enemies you need to make peace. You do not need to make peace with your friends."

Indians air concerns about excavation of tribal grave sites

By BENNY McCONNELL
State Press

The line between grave robbing and excavation in the name of archaeology has been undefined too long and needs to be changed, Arizona Indian leaders said.

Representatives of 19 Indian tribes in Arizona believe the way in which Indian remains have been studied and handled is "garbage exploitation of native Americans." They said the practice has existed unchecked for too many years and needs to be stopped.

"Our main concern is the treatment of our ancestors," said Cecil Antone, a Pima Indian. "When a white man's burial site is excavated, it's called grave robbing. When an Indian's burial site is excavated, it's called archaeology."

But Charles Merbs, an ASU anthropology professor, said the scientific community views archaeology as a way to uncover and understand the complexities of the past and possibly work toward solutions to present and future problems.

Merbs, who represented archeologists during the 43rd National Congress of American Indians in Phoenix last week, said: "I think there's been a serious lack of communication between archaeologists and the Indian community."

"I have seen utter confrontation at the meetings we have had. I think we've been remiss in disseminating the information we have uncovered and explaining it in a matter everyone can understand."

"The medical discoveries (about recent discoveries that early Indians performed brain surgery, suffered from anemia and took care of immobile family members whose bones had fused) caught the delegation off guard."

"It was something we thought we didn't have to document but now it's obvious we have to," he told the biannual meeting of the Arizona Archaeological Conference.

"As far as anthropology is concerned, this is a fairly new issue, and obviously things are going to change," he said.

Antone, who is also chairman of the Intertribal Council Cultural Resources

Committee and lives at the Gila River reservation, agreed communication is at the core of the controversy.

"Yes, communication is the problem. I'm willing to talk to archaeologists. We want to be part of the decision-making process," he said.

"If this is a country that demonstrates democracy, then this is a poor way of demonstrating it. You have to remember that the native Americans were the ones who were here first."

John Lewis, director of the Intertribal Council and a Mohave Indian, said tribal governments and communities need to be involved with excavations and assured that their rights are involved and upheld.

As a sidelight to the controversy, ASU stores about 2,000 Indian skeletons but owns few of them. The majority of the bones belong to other museums, and some are on loan from other countries, Merbs said.

How long ASU keeps the bones depends upon the agreement made between the donors and the University.

He said ASU is sensitive to Indian wishes of not publicly displaying ancient bones.

"We have a definite written policy of not displaying sensitive religious things, and that would include a skeleton in a burial context," he said. "We have a strong program here in human osteology, and we reserve the right to display skeleton material in an educational context."

"We don't identify where it came from unless it's important to understanding the display," he said.

All bones stored in the Anthropology Building and Matthews Center are stored with approval from Salt River Indians, Merbs said.

"Everything is very carefully documented and stored," he said.

The Congress of American Indians has demanded action be taken on resolutions adopted at their meeting last week, and plan to lobby lawmakers on the following:

- That the past and current treatment of Indian remains is totally unacceptable and should be regulated by national and state legislation;

Rick Wiley/State Press

ASU anthropology professor Charles Merbs holds a stereo viewer which gives a 3-D effect when viewing the X-ray of a 2000-year-old skull excavated from Northern Sudan before construction of the Aswan Dam. The skull shows effects of multiple myeloma, a type of bone cancer.

•Demand the return of all remains in the United States and abroad to the appropriate tribes for reburial ceremonies.

Tom Lincoln, supervisory archaeologist for the Bureau of Reclamation in Phoenix said, "I'm really frightened that one day we're going to wake up and there is going to be a law over our heads that is going to be regulating what we can and cannot do."

Merbs said he was certain that legislation protecting the remains would be considered.

Rep. John McCain, chairman of the House Republican Task Force on Indian Affairs and currently running for the Senate seat being vacated by Barry Goldwater, said: "Any decision that is made on this issue has to be made in close consultation with the Indian tribal leaders."

McCain's opponent, Richard Kimball, was out of town and unavailable for comment.

Tim Karlsgaard, spokesman for Arizona Sen. Dennis DeConcini, said his office hasn't been totally informed of the issue, but DeConcini has held that each tribe should have the opportunity to negotiate and decide what action should be taken on issues concerning them.

If legislation is considered for the bones to be reburied in a certain amount of time after excavation, Merbs said, "We would minimally need at least a year to do a decent study, and that's not much time."

"But preferably (we would like) much, much (more time) so other special interests can become aware of what we're studying."

Bill may prevent ASASU members' election bias

By KERRY FEHR
State Press

Associated Students Campus Affairs Vice President LeeAnne Seall said she will support an independent elections department, instead of one supervised by her office, in a senate bill Oct. 7.

The bill goes to the senate with the unanimous backing of the Senate Government Operations Committee, which voted in favor of the proposal Tuesday.

College of Liberal Arts Sen. Mark Isenberg, a former elections director, said the current system allows the campus affairs vice president to influence the elections director in a "real subtle, covert manner."

"There has been a definite tilt in past elections as far as attitudes toward other candidates," he said.

The elections department is under the direction of the campus affairs vice president who appoints a director for the annual spring elections.

Isenberg said the campus affairs vice president could indirectly affect the election results and has in past years.

For example, the campus affairs vice president could suggest to the director that he place more polling booths at one location to favor a particular candidate, he said.

Isenberg said the director also decides how many voting booths to place on campus and who mans the booths.

The director also determines the order the candidates' names are listed on the ballots, he said.

Isenberg is co-sponsoring the bill with seven other senators, including John Colombo, College of Business, and Andrew Goodman, College of Architecture/Environmental Science.

The bill would create an elections screening committee to interview and recommend an elections coordinator.

The committee would be composed of four elected senators and four appointed representatives from each ASASU executive office.

The bill calls for the nominee to be confirmed or rejected at the first senate session meeting of the academic year.

Colombo, chairman of the government operations committee, said the elections coordinator would be less influenced if chosen before the political lines have been drawn in the senate.

Activities Vice President Christine Roth supported the bill in committee, saying "there are valid ways someone could influence" the elections.

Petition seeks to rename building in honor of Challenger crew

A petition calling for the Arizona Board of Regents to change the name of ASU's Classroom Office Building to Challenger Hall will be brought before the Associated Students Senate Tuesday.

The petition, which was approved Sept. 23 by the government operations committee, requests the regents to change the name of the COB to Challenger Hall in memory of the seven astronauts killed last January in the space shuttle explosion.

But the ASASU Senate must approve the petition at its meeting Tuesday before it can be sent to ASU President J. Russell Nelson.

College of Liberal Arts Sen. Mark Isenberg, author of the petition, said he does not expect opposition from the senate.

Senate President Bridget Shelton said that although she had not heard a lot of discussion about the petition, she does not foresee any opposition.

Isenberg said he thought of proposing a name change after he and a friend were talking about the COB and decided "what a stupid name for a building."

He said he wants to place a plaque with the names of the seven astronauts and their fields of study on the outside of the building.

Isenberg also said he plans to have the director of NASA, James Fletcher, participate in a dedication ceremony if the regents approve of the name change.

Isenberg said he hopes the name change and dedication ceremony would bring "national attention" to the University.

College of Public Programs Sen. Cathy

Johnson said during the committee meeting, "I love this."

Johnson also said she has received "a great response" from people, adding, "they really like it."

Isenberg, who attends all regents meetings as the senate-liaison to the Arizona Student Association, said he will be able to explain the petition to regent members if he encounters opposition.

He said he does not know if he will face opposition from the regents because he is unsure of the criteria the board uses when considering a name change.

Optometrists suggest precautions for solar eclipse viewers

By DAVE HODGES
State Press

Arizona optometrists are warning people to use extreme caution when viewing Friday's partial solar eclipse because direct viewing of the sun may cause permanent eye damage.

The eclipse will not be seen in Phoenix, but most of North America will see a partial eclipse of the sun at 11:05 a.m. (Phoenix time).

Marvin Taub, president of the Arizona Optometric Association, said children and teen-agers are the most likely victims of eye injuries due to the eclipse.

"It isn't that young eyes are most susceptible to damage from the sun's rays," he said. "They aren't. But children and teen-agers are often the ones most interested in watching and the ones least likely to take safety precautions."

"After every eclipse, there are reports of young people left legally blind," Taub said.

Taub said eye damage can occur from sun rays that get past the moon. They can burn the retina, the eye's sensitive seeing mechanism, and the result can be a permanent blind spot eliminating central vision.

"Because the retina doesn't have pain receptors, there isn't any pain," Taub said. "And since symptoms might not appear for several hours or days, people aren't aware their eyes are being hurt."

There is no safe way to "directly view a solar eclipse," Taub said, adding sunglasses, smoked glass or double layers of exposed photofilm provide inadequate protection.

Binoculars, opera glasses, telescopes and camera lenses are extremely dangerous to use "because they concentrate the sun's rays," he said.

But Taub said safe "indirect viewing" is possible by using a sunscope. Made from a box which fits over the viewer's head, the sunscope projects the image on white paper inside one end of the box via a pinhole in the other end.

If observers stand with their heads facing the white paper and the pinhole pointed at the sun, the eclipse's entire image can safely be viewed in this manner.

David Stern, a librarian at ASU's Noble Library and an astronomer, said the eclipse will be seen throughout North America, except Oregon, California and parts of Arizona.

"The viewing line is right in the vicinity of Phoenix. It depends on how accurate these maps are," Stern said. "But if it is seen here, it will only last a couple of seconds, and it will be very, very tiny."

Stern said the best view of the eclipse will be off the west coast of Iceland.

Personal car plate stirs 'wee' conflict in Denver

By The Associated Press

DENVER — The personalized license plates on Brad Thomas' car say "OUIOUI," but the state of Colorado says "no, no," because another Colorado resident found the plates offensive.

Thomas, 28, of Littleton, got the plates reading "yes, yes" in French some time ago for his Mercedes 280E.

"It's just an attitude toward life," he said.

But state law dictates that if someone takes offense at the message the plates will be recalled. The only exception is if the plates bear the owner's name, said Debbie Robinson, the Motor Vehicle Division's administrative clerk for personalized plates.

Robinson said that when Thomas' application for the plates came she saw only what most people see: an expression in French.

But somebody wrote to complain that the plates could be read "wee wee," so the state had to order Thomas to return them, she said.

University police reported the following incidents in the 29-hour period ending 5:40 a.m. Tuesday:

- Police said 37 fold-up chairs, valued at $1,110, were stolen from the Gammage Center lawn and driveway sometime between Friday and Saturday nights.
- The chairs were left out Friday night and not noticed missing until the clean-up crew put the chairs away Saturday night, police said.
- Each chair had 'SAMSONITE' stamped on the back.
- An unknown person broke into a locked Toyota truck in Lot 17, and took a green military backpack, Pioneer AM/FM stereo and various other items, police said.
- The thief entered the truck by forcing the passenger's door window down with a blunt object, police said.
- Estimated value of the loss is $950.
- Someone stole a PE3600 weighing scale, valued at $700, from

- Room 126 in the Forestry Services Lab, police said.
- The gray scale weighs by grams and has a seven-inch diameter silver weighing plate, police said.
- A spokeswoman for the lab said the room was unlocked, and someone used a key to get into the main building.
- There are no witnesses or suspects.
- A University truck and a Salt River Project truck collided at the corner of University Drive and McAllister Avenue, resulting in $400 in damages, police said.
- When the University truck was struck from behind, the driver, a University employee, hurt his left knee on impact, police said.
- Paramedics responded and treated the injured man at the scene, and both drivers were cited, police said.
- An unknown person hurled a rock through a 12-by-4 foot glass window in Hayden Library, police said.

- Police said a librarian found the rock and reported $250 in damages.
- A Hewlett Packard 41-CX calculator and Math Pac mini-computer were stolen from a desk in Room 118 of the Technology Center, police said.
- The room was locked when the items, valued at $240, were removed, police said.
- A maroon daypack with ASU gold lettering was taken from the third floor of Hayden Library, where it was left unattended, police said. Estimated value of the loss is $93.
- Police said they found an intoxicated and disorderly man near the Saga food area behind Manzanita Residence Hall.
- The man asked police to call a local alcohol rehabilitation center to send an ambulance to pick him up and treat him, police said.

Tempe police report

Tempe police reported the following incidents for the period ending midnight Tuesday:

- An officer was dispatched Sept. 29 to investigate screams for help at a Tempe apartment complex, police said.
- The officer found a man yelling obscenities and threatening to kill his wife, police said.
- The man was arrested for disorderly conduct.
- Police said the man then punched the officer several times in the chest and shoulder.

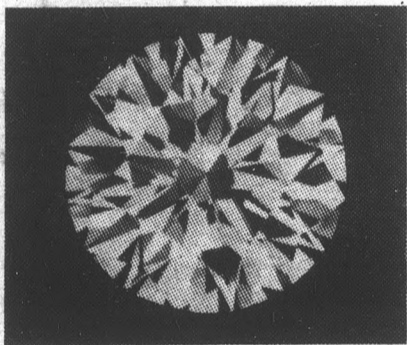

- Police said the man's wife reported that her husband came home drunk and began to beat her.
- Police said the man hit his wife with a baby swing and had beaten her head against a door frame several times.
- The man was also charged with resisting arrest, aggravated assault on a police officer and assault.
- Unknown persons entered a Tempe man's apartment Sept. 29 and removed several items, police said.
- The thief entered the apartment, 1224 E. Lemon St., through an unlocked front door

- between 8 and 8:30 p.m.
- A color TV, valued at $150, a cable box worth $50, and a white push button phone, valued at $50, were stolen.
- There are no suspects in the case.
- A man trespassed onto private property and looked through a window at a dental office, 1844 E. Baseline Road, Sept. 29, police said.
- An employee of the office said the man has been seen by patients as well as employees looking through the window in the past.
- The man is described as Caucasian, 5-

- foot-10, 160 pounds, 35 years of age, with short brown hair.
- He also carries a 'beeper' on his waist.
- An officer apprehended two men Sept. 30 in front of The Vine bar, 801 E. Apache Blvd., when he suspected they were smoking marijuana.
- The suspects were standing on the porch area in front of the bar allegedly sharing a cigarette, unaware that the officer was observing them.
- As he approached the men, police said one of them threw the cigarette to the ground.

Company to market gentler tranquilizer

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Bristol-Myers Co. will begin marketing in early December a new tranquilizer that treats anxiety disorders without causing drowsiness or impairing a person's ability to drive or work, the company said Wednesday.

The Food and Drug Administration approved the drug, buspirone hydrochloride, which will be marketed by Bristol-Myers' Mead Johnson Pharmaceutical Division under the name BuSpar.

The drug, which will be available by prescription, differs from the current class of commonly used tranquilizers, including Valium, which can interfere with normal performance, FDA spokesman Brad Stone said.

"It has very limited side effects as far as causing drowsiness or reducing functional ability," Stone said. "It won't affect your ability to perform everyday tasks like driving or operating heavy machinery."

Clinical trials found no evidence that buspirone hydrochloride causes physical dependency, Stone said.

Bristol-Myers said the drug, when mixed with alcohol, appears to cause none of the adverse reactions that can arise with other drugs, providing an "additional margin of safety for patients."

Additionally, "BuSpar does not cause the euphoric or sedative effects which can often lead to abuse . . . (and) is unlikely to be utilized by illicit drug users," the company said.

Minor side effects caused by the drug can include upset stomach, diarrhea, dizziness and headaches, said company spokesman Scott Litherland.

Sun Devils look for first victory ever over Bruins

By CAROL BOOS
State Press

The Devils go on their first of three consecutive road trips this weekend to face the UCLA Bruins in the Rose Bowl.

The Devils have never beaten the Bruins. "UCLA has been picked by everyone to win the league championship again this year, including me. They are still the team to beat," Coach John Cooper told reporters Tuesday at his weekly news conference.

One thing the Devils will have to do differently this week in order to beat the Bruins is pass effectively. UCLA, currently ranked No. 15, will be tough to beat on the ground alone, according to Cooper.

"Nobody wants to pass more than me," Cooper said. Quarterback Jeff Van Raaphorst told reporters last week he wanted to throw more than he had been.

The Devils came out throwing last week against Washington State, but Van Raaphorst was not up to the task, throwing five interceptions in 16 attempts. He also completed five for 126 yards.

"If he (Van Raaphorst) wants to throw, he'd better throw it a hell of a lot better than he's throwing right now, and he better throw it to the guy who's open," Cooper said. "But, all quarterbacks go through slumps and Jeff is in a slump.

"He's working hard to correct his mistakes. He is the best quarterback we've got and we're trying to get his confidence level back up. He's a competitor. I'll be surprised if Jeff doesn't bounce back."

The Bruins are lead by quarterback Matt Stevens. Stevens is coming into the game having had his best game yet against Long Beach State last week. Stevens completed 18 of 26 passes for 211 yards, raising his total to 442 yards, completing 36 of 66 passes.

The winningest coach in UCLA history, Terry Donahue is in his 11th season as head coach. He enters Saturday's game with a record of 82-32-6 (.708). He is 6-0-1 against ASU.

The Bruins have two key players out for the game: tailback Eric Ball and flanker Karl Dorrell. Starting tailback Gaston Green is still bothered by turf-toe, but is slated to start.

The No. 3 tailback James Primus, who rushed for a career-high 160 yards in the Bruins' matchup against Long Beach last week, is leading the Bruins to a 41-23 victory over the 49ers.

Primus will probably go over the 1,000-yard mark for his career Saturday. He needs just 11 yards.

Primus is the only tailback to play in all three games and he has 202 total yards.

ASU's Darryl Harris has 353 yards, placing him 10th nationally.

After last week's tie with WSU, and the poor passing game, Cooper said he still believes he will need to pass to beat the Bruins.

Cooper goes into Saturday's game with a career record of 67-35-1.

Cooper and Donahue are not strangers. In 1965 and 1966, Donahue was a starting defensive tackle at UCLA. The Bruin secondary coach during that period was Cooper. The following season (1967), Cooper went to Kansas to serve as assistant coach under former UCLA assistant Pepper Rodgers. Another member of that staff was first-year assistant Donahue.

Although the Sun Devils are 7-point underdogs, Cooper is looking for a competitive game.

"I think it'll be a great ballgame," Cooper said. "We're coming off a tie and two tough ballgames and UCLA has had time to regroup from their loss to Oklahoma and get ready for us."

"I think we'll play hard; whether we'll win or not, I don't know. We'll lay it on the line and take our chances."

James Primus, UCLA tailback, rushed for 160 yards last week against Long Beach State.

UCLA journalist calls Devils 'choke artists'

I read an interesting little piece in the UCLA Daily Bruin yesterday. I quote:

"Now that he (ASU coach John Cooper) and his players have become more comfortable with each other, UCLA may not be able to count on the Pac-10 choke artists to suffocate again in 1986."

This little gem of wisdom was brought to the orb by the Bruin's own A.M. Stroud, obviously a competent and objective journalist, considering that the line appeared in a regular news story rather than a column.

Mr. Stroud is a little overconfident. It takes you back to Baltimore, circa 1969 — Orioles or Colts, take your pick.

Bob Heiler
Sports Editor

The Sun Devils, then, could be cast as the New York Mets or the New York Jets. And while I wouldn't want to guarantee a win (a la Joe Namath), I don't think it would comprise a miracle, either.

By the way, I will never understand how anyone from Baltimore could be overconfident about anything.

But I digress. The Bruins' are the egos in question. And a big question it is.

Coming off wins against perennial powerhouses like San Diego State and Long Beach State, not to mention an impressive 38-3 loss against the Oklahoma Sooners, one wonders how any Bruin could muster the courage to call the Devils "choke artists."

But not everyone over there is so confident. Bruin coach Terry Donahue is "worried" about the game, and not without reason.

Gaston Green, the Bruins' starting tailback, will probably not be in top form for Saturday's game due to a case of turf-toe. Green has rushed for 171 yards this year on just 29 carries, an average of 5.9 yards per carry. Tailback Eric Ball is out indefinitely with a pulled hamstring. This leaves James Primus to handle much of the tailback duty.

Many people in L.A. are pretty high on Primus. He's rushed for 202 yards, with 160 against Long Beach State and 46 against San Diego State.

For the mathematicians among you, 160 plus 46 is, in fact, 206. That leaves a grand total of negative four yards against the Sooners.

It's good to see a guy who really performs against the tougher defense.

But the speculation as to how confident the Bruins ought to be is really not essential to understanding Saturday's matchup. A few other things are essential:

- The Devils are up against the wall. No one is going to go to the Rose Bowl with two losses and a tie; so the Devils have to win five of six games against UCLA, Oregon, USC, Washington, California and UA. Four of those teams — UCLA, USC, Washington and UA — are going to be tough games, and losing the first of those four would really put Cooper's Devils in an unenviable position.

- The Devils are angry. The tie against Washington State was an unsatisfying Pac-10 opener. ASU was favored by 16½ points, and although the tie is not as bad as a loss, it is more than sufficient to get the Devils up for this week's contest.

- The Devils are dangerous. The last-second blocked field goal against Michigan State, the 30-0 domination of SMU — even comeback drive that resulted in the Cougar tie — have all proven that this year's Devils have fire in their bellies.

When Darryl Rogers coached here, the team always seemed to lack that kind of courage. Whatever is said about Cooper's game decisions, it is a certainty his players are not cowards.

And if this crop of players remembers that some Bruin hack called them the "Pac-10 choke artists," that fire in their bellies could consume some Bruins.

John Cooper will try to fan the fires inside his Devils this weekend.

Loner

Sun Devil Aaron Cox is all alone to catch a pass in a former UCLA match-up. The Devils will travel to Pasadena this weekend in search of their first victory over the Bruins.

Suns' Davis signs what could be last pact

PHOENIX (AP) — Veteran guard Walter Davis, the Phoenix Suns' all-time leading scorer, signed a new contract Wednesday with the National Basketball Association team and said it may be his last.

"This will probably be my final contract," Davis said at a news conference after signing a two-year pact with an option for a third year. "Three more years in the league, that'll give me 12 years and that's been my goal — to play 12 years. If I feel good after three more years, I may continue but only if I can contribute."

Davis, 32, has led the Suns in scoring in three of the last four seasons. He passed both teammate Alvan Adams and retired guard Dick Van Arsdale last year to become the franchise's all-time leading scorer with 12,582 points.

The 6-foot-6, 200-pound Davis became a free agent after last season and reportedly was seeking a five-year, $5 million contract from the Suns.

Terms of the new pact were not disclosed, in keeping with club policy. But sources said Davis received about a $40,000 increase on the $680,000 salary he earned last season in the final year of a six-year contract.

"It's a three-year contract with an option to terminate after two years if we decide to do that," said Phoenix general manager Jerry Colangelo. "I am personally very gratified to see him sign. Walter's always been a very special part of the Suns' organization and he's made a major contribution to this franchise. To a large degree, he represents what the Suns want to represent in this community."

Last December, however, Davis left the club for a month and entered himself into a southern California clinic for treatment of cocaine and alcohol abuse.

Colangelo said Davis' new contract does not include a drug-testing clause, but the NBA's collective-bargaining agreement protects the Suns from a relapse since it subjects Davis to tests if signs of substance abuse are evident.

"It took great courage to step forward and do what he did," Colangelo said. "If there's someone who had a shot to beat it, it was Walter Davis. I knew he would be one of the few people to lick it."

"I'm just taking it one day at a time," Davis said. "I'm sober now and just ready to play basketball."

"I think I got a pretty good situation here. I got a wife and two kids and I've just started a (travel agency) business. I'm really happy here, and I want to end my career here. Sometimes you have to sacrifice money for happiness."

Cavs get Daugherty; 1st pick inks $6 million deal

RICHFIELD, Ohio (AP) — Brad Daugherty, the first player chosen in the 1986 NBA draft, became the highest-paid player in Cleveland Cavaliers' history Wednesday, signing a guaranteed six-year, $6 million contract.

The 7-footer from the University of North Carolina reportedly will be paid $500,000 in the first year of the deal, with annual raises until reaching $1.5 million in the sixth year.

"The whole situation of signing and money was not that important to me," Daugherty said. "I'm not a very materialistic person. I have other things in my life that are very important to me, and money's not one of them."

Cleveland's highest-paid player previously was center Mel Turpin, who is in the third year of a four-year deal worth an estimated $2.5 million.

The Cavaliers traded with Philadelphia on draft day in June to obtain the first pick overall, sending veteran forward Roy Hinson and $800,000 cash to the 76ers.

They used the selection to take Daugherty, who can play both center and power forward.

"I'd rather play forward, but either one's fine," he said. "I think I can play both positions."

Lenny Wilkens, Cleveland's new coach, said he has not decided how he will use Daugherty.

"It's a little early to say," Wilkens said. "It's safe to say he's going to play both center and forward, but which way we'll open the season with him, we don't know."

Daugherty averaged 14.2 points and 7.4 rebounds per game in four years with the Tar Heels, including 20.2 points and 9.0 rebounds per game as a senior.

He is the only one of Cleveland's top four draft-day acquisitions to sign so far.

Ron Harper, a guard-forward from Miami of Ohio, chosen by the Cavaliers with their own first-round pick, the eighth overall, said this week he expected to be signed by the start of training camp Friday, although his agent was less optimistic.

Also unsigned are Mark Price, a guard from Georgia Tech obtained in a draft-day trade with Dallas, and Johnny Newman, a forward from Richmond, taken in the second round.

Cavaliers' General Manager Wayne Embry said negotiations were continuing with all three players, as well as with veteran guard World B. Free, who became a free agent after last season.

Three-time pro beach volleyball world champ Mike Dodd will be in Scottsdale Saturday for the Miller Lite Arizona Open.

$and Bucks, brews, bikinis liven volleyball action

Beach volleyball will give up the ocean for the desert as the professional beach volleyball circuit moves to Scottsdale for the Miller Lite Arizona Open, held this weekend at Indian School Park.

The tournament, the second of its kind in Scottsdale, is the final stop on a circuit that began last May in Florida and will feature some of the best volleyball players in the world competing for $20,000 in prize money.

Sam Lagana, Promotions Coordinator for the tournament, said Phoenix is one of the better cities on the circuit.

"Phoenix has traditionally been a good volleyball town," he said. "And it has the potential to be a great town, particularly Scottsdale and Tempe."

"This is especially true with ASU going for the volleyball attendance record this weekend. We expect a good-sized crowd to come out," he said.

Among the competitors will be top money-winner Sinjin Smith and Randy Stoklos, who have won close to $60,000 apiece this year, defending World Champions Mike Dodd and Tim Hovland, and Olympic gold medalist Karch Kiraly, all of whom have been members of the U.S. national team.

"These guys are some of the best athletes in the world," Lagana said.

Two teams from Arizona will compete in the tournament; Evan Butler and Kelly Yanez from Phoenix, along with Scott Manning of Phoenix and Don Hudson of Yuma.

Lagana said the Arizona teams should give the predominantly Californian teams good competition.

"The Arizona people should put up a good fight," he said. "They will have the home court advantage, which in beach volleyball is an important factor because the spectators sit only six feet away from the court."

Beach volleyball, Lagana said, is quite different from indoor volleyball, though they share the same rules.

"They have the same court size and net height," he said. "But beach volleyball is played with two man teams, so it is quicker and more exciting. You see a lot more one on one situations at the net, and a lot more hustle. It is exciting, power volleyball.

"The fact that it is played outdoors makes it different," he said. "All sands are different, some are hard and have a good spring to them and some the players have to trudge through. It could be a perfect day in the morning, but turn windy or rain in the afternoon, and they would still be playing."

Lagana said the tournament will be different from those in California because of the climate.

"In Scottsdale you are playing in a grassy park area, and there are no ocean breezes," he said. "So there won't be as much wind, and it will be hotter. I'm not sure what the sand is like, but that will be a factor."

The tournament will begin at 8 Saturday morning and run until 5 p.m. on Sunday. Along with the matches will be the Miss Miller Lite Bathing Beauty Contest, which will select the loveliest bathing beauty in the Scottsdale area at 1 p.m. on Saturday.

Co-sponsoring the tournament are AM/PM Mini Market, Nissan Hardbody Trucks and KKL Radio. Admission to the tournament is free.

Hockey Club checks into action against Phoenix oldtimers' club

By STEVE ADAMS
State Press

Arizona, the land of heat, bronzed bodies and bleached hair, would hardly seem the ideal place to start a sport associated with the dreaded word ICE.

However, that time of year is closing in on us once again. To remind us how fun winter can be, the Ice Devils Hockey Club is checking into action.

The intention of the club is to enter an ASU team in an eight-team men's league.

The players from this team can be moved up to the club team or can just play for the competition provided within Tempe's most competitive league.

The rules are simple — slapshots are allowed, but the check is not in the mail, er, the rules.

The Ice Devils will play 26 games this season, including playoffs, and it all starts Oct. 5.

Some of the opponents the Ice Devils will face off against are UA, California, Stanford and USC.

The majority of the games will be played Sunday evenings at the Oceanside

Ice Arena in Tempe.

Of course, lest we not forget, that this little excursion into semipro hockey will carry a price tag: $210.

This price, though, is based on the assumption there will be 20-man rosters. If not, the price will go up.

Now we all know what happens when one assumes things.

This fee does of course include the jerseys and the ever-so-important hockey socks.

The first big "run for the cup" will get under way Oct. 20, when the Ice Devils face off against the Phoenix Roadrunner Oldtimers Hockey Club.

Oh yeah, just a little something to those folks who don't want to be reminded of winter happenings — don't let it bother you. The NHL, including Stanley Cup play, ran into mid-June this year.

Now on to wide world of intramural sports:

•A reminder from the intramural department to the volleyball players:

Check the intramural board everyday to make sure your team is scheduled to play. There are still a number of teams who are not showing up and consequently are forfeiting their games.

•Flag football action will kick off on Oct. 13. Schedules will be available at the intramural office, Physical Education West Gym lobby on Oct. 9.

•Entries are due for the pool tournament today by 4 p.m. in the intramural office. Tournament dates are set for Oct. 11 and 12.

•Playoff schedules for volleyball will be out Oct. 8. Playoffs get under way Oct. 12.

•The entry forms for three-man basketball are due Oct. 9 by 4 p.m. Schedules will be out Oct. 16, and play starts Oct. 20.

•Men's and women's racquetball single entries are due in the intramural office no later than 4 p.m., Oct. 9. Women's double entries are due Oct. 16.

Brown invites students, faculty, staff to aid in attendance record attempt

Sports editor:

I would like to take this opportunity to invite students, faculty and staff to ASU's volleyball match on Saturday evening, Oct. 4, versus Stanford. At this match, we will be attempting to break the NCAA single-match attendance record for volleyball. The current NCAA mark is 10,645 and was set by Purdue University last year.

In order to break this record, we definitely need your help. I encourage you to come support the volleyball team and take part in this history-making event. In addition to being part of the history-making crowd, I guarantee you will see some outstanding volleyball. We are currently tied for second place in the Pac-10 conference with Stanford. We are ranked 7th nationally and Stanford is ranked 13th nationally. This year's team is by far the best we have ever had at ASU.

If (I mean when) we break the record, everyone at the match will receive a coupon to receive two spaghetti dinners from the Spaghetti Company for the price of one.

We will also give Reebok hats to the first 1,000 in attendance. In addition, we will have a drawing for Reebok shoes and dinners for two at Lunt Avenue Marble Club.

At our intermission, between games two and three, we will have a serving contest in which eight fans will have the opportunity to win a weekend for two in Snowmass, Colo., compliments of Timberline Condominiums and America West Airlines.

Admission is free to students with validated IDs. I hope to see you Saturday night at 7:30 in the University Activity Center. Don't miss it.

Debbie Brown
Volleyball Coach

Editor's note: The State Press incorrectly reported yesterday that all who attended the match would receive two free dinners at the Spaghetti Company. Actually, everyone will receive a two-for-one coupon, provided that the record is broken.

Soccer club announces 1986 tryouts

The ASU Soccer Club will hold tryouts for its 1986 season in the upcoming week.

New coach Mehmet S. Melik said tryouts will be held at Sahuaro Field on Rural Road between Apache and Broadway Tuesday, Thursday and Sunday at 4 p.m.

The season begins in approximately three weeks. Melik said the team will be selecting 18 players, but anyone is encouraged to come out and practice with the team.
