

Hall director tightens dorm security after 2 intrusions

By LAUREN MILLETTE
State Press

The Best Residence Hall director is clamping down on security after two residents reported men had intruded into their rooms during the past week.

Dawn Ferguson said Physical Plant employees bolted and welded shut lounge windows and other public area windows at the women's residence hall last weekend to prevent non-residents from sneaking into the dormitory rooms and bothering residents.

Ferguson said in the past tenants have accidentally left lounge windows open, making it easy for non-residents to get into the dormitory even when the outside doors were locked.

"During the next two weeks, Physical Plant workers will recore the door entrances to both the A and B wings, and new locks will be put on the outside entrances," Ferguson said.

Students will receive a new key to outside entrances once the new locks are put in, Ferguson said.

The beefed-up security follows a series of problems in the residence hall that includes strangers entering the dormitory and harassing students and several thefts.

"If we make sure all the outside doors and windows are locked the only way a stranger can get in is if a resident leaves their bedroom window open," she said.

A Best Hall resident was assaulted Oct. 5, after a man crawled in her second-story window that was left open while she slept, according to University police records.

One week later, another student saw a man's shadow leaving her room when she woke from a nap, police said.

Ferguson said she met with Best Hall residents Wednesday and Thursday nights to inform them about the problems. She also gave residents a description of the suspect that attacked the student and discussed safety points.

A member of the ASU Safety Escort team spoke to the group about protection services available to them.

Cody Hunnicutt, a Safety Escort member and resident assistant for Best Hall, said he has noticed more residents seem conscientious about their security since the talk.

"I have noticed that most women over there seem to be more aware of the problem, and the (resident assistants) are automatically noticing if windows are being left open," Hunnicutt said. "On my rounds early Friday morning, I noticed there wasn't one window left open."

An ASU policeman also spoke to the group about precautions students can take to reduce burglary and assault, Lt. Craig Emanuel said.

Suggestions made to the students include: keeping room doors and windows locked while in the room, especially when leaving the room; making sure the room door is secured after locking and closing the door; and not lending out room keys to friends, Ferguson said.

Resident Kate Lehman said she is concerned about residents who toss their room key out their window down to their boyfriends.

Lehman said: "My main concern about security is the guys who are able to get in unescorted because their girlfriends give them a key to come up to their room. I'm sure there are a lot of room keys floating around."

"Right now, I think we're (residents) fairly safe. But I will feel much better once the new locks are installed."

Emanuel said tenants also were told to keep track of where their roommates are and to know whether the roommate will be back for the evening, so the room door will not be left opened unnecessarily.

Best Hall
Michael Scully/State Press

Hunnicutt said resident assistants are trying to get photo identifications so residents will feel more secure about the men patrolling the hall.

"There is no reason why Best Hall Residents should not feel safe living here," he said.

Combination of problems haunts business college

By TINA DAUNT
State Press

ASU's College of Business is billed as one of the nation's best. The University likes to talk about its rapid increase in enrollment and the credentials of the faculty.

Last year, the school's accreditation was deferred because there were not enough full-time faculty to serve its student population. University officials responded by saying they could solve the problem by hiring new full-time faculty and controlling enrollment.

That, they said, would require increased funding from the Arizona Legislature.

But critics of the school claim that money cannot solve the college's deep-rooted problems. Some of the critics blame the college's problems on ASU President J. Russell Nelson.

There are other factors contributing to the college's problems:

- Enrollment has been falling for the last five years, including full-time equivalencies, which are used to determine the level of funding;

- The number of full-time faculty also has fallen for the last five years;

- The school's budget has risen steadily, but an ever-increasing share of the money has gone to hire researchers instead of classroom teachers;

- As faculty members retired or resigned, the school had to pay higher salaries to attract marketable people. In some cases it had to combine two positions into one, which allowed it to pay the higher salary but also increased the work load of the faculty member.

The most vocal critics of the school are its past administrators and faculty members.

Glenn Overman, who was the school's dean until 1981 and who retired from ASU last year, said that shortly after he stepped down as dean, the philosophy of the Business College changed from quality teaching to research.

Overman, who served as dean for 25 years, the longest tenure of any dean in ASU history, said he also noticed an unusually high number of business professors leaving ASU shortly after the redirected emphasis took effect.

"In my opinion, a lot of people were upset and decided to go elsewhere," he said. "A majority of the professors who were lost were outstanding in their field."

Overman said that while he was dean, outstanding performance was expected of professors in one of three areas — teaching, research or community service. They were expected to perform adequately in the other two areas.

He also said that even though the enrollment had increased, the college was able to keep the classes small.

William Huizingh, who during his 30-year stay at ASU served as Overman's assistant dean, said he left the business school "broken-hearted" when he retired earlier this year. He charged that students are not getting the education they deserve.

Huizingh and Overman said they have written letters to Nelson, asking him to balance teaching and research.

They blamed many of the business college's problems on the dramatic decrease in full-time faculty and the reduction in long-time professors, whom the school could not afford to replace at the market rate.

"Whenever a faculty member leaves, the college will always find it necessary to pay more to induce other professors to leave the school where they're at and join the ASU faculty," Huizingh said. "The business school did not have the funds to replace the professors it lost."

"As a result part-time faculty were hired at much lower rates."

John Kraft, who became business dean last spring, said: "It will take a few bucks to get the school back on its feet. But if we live within our resources we'll be every bit as good as the top research institutes."

Kraft said he believes the students will benefit from the emphasis in research. He also said that professors' promotions are largely based on research, however they have to be "acceptable teachers."

"The students are being exposed to excellent faculty members," he said. "They have to ask themselves why they are at ASU. Most likely it's because they thought it was a good school."

"ASU is going to be a major research university with strong programs. ASU is going to be in the top 30 business schools, provided all our curriculum and budget changes are implemented."

Nelson acknowledged that greater emphasis is being put on research in the business college than in the past but said he does not believe instruction is compromised.

"Each department is allowed to set how much emphasis it is going to put on research," he said. "We ask that both research and teaching be emphasized."

The college now is requesting $1.8 million in additional funding from the Legislature. That is on top of its 1985-86 budget of $11.05 million.

Kraft said the additional funds from the Legislature would enable the college to hire 10 additional full-time faculty positions, in addition to several secretarial and staff positions.

He also is trying to balance the student-faculty ratio by cutting the number of courses offered and by combining two faculty positions into one.

He said that by combining positions, the school can pay a new professor, who might only teach one or two classes, a starting wage of $70,000 to $75,000 a year.

Kraft added that instead of hiring part-time faculty to trim the budget, he is going to control enrollment by cutting the curriculum.

"We can have a high quality program, but we can't satisfy everyone," Kraft said. "We're only going to teach to our budget. If we don't have the faculty, we won't offer the class."

Nelson said the emphasis in research was mandated by the Arizona Board of Regents before he came to ASU.

"I believe research is important because it's one way to keep our faculty members at the cutting edge in their discipline," Nelson said.

The new guidelines for the business college, adopted after Nelson's inauguration, called for professors to devote between 40 percent and 60 percent of their time, depending on their department, to research.

Class sizes also were increased to enable the professors to spend more time researching.

L. William Seidman, who was the dean of the college from 1982 until he resigned in 1985 to become the chairman of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation in Washington, D.C., said the problems in the school were not caused by the trend toward research, but by a lack of funding.

"For as long as I've been here, the business school never got its fair share," Seidman said. "We would tell the administration exactly what we needed, but the money we received was never enough."

"We had to hire the part-time faculty because they were all we could afford."

Huizing said the problem of inadequate resource allocation existed during the growth period of the 1970s, however the college was able to manage its resources and at no time was the college in danger of losing its accreditation.

"I tried to stress to Seidman the importance of keeping statistics for corrective action," Huizing said. "When you don't monitor, you can't make good decisions."

William Reif, who was the assistant dean of the college from 1982 to 1985, said the financial problems were not a case of "someone not paying attention."

"The problems originated from the rapid growth in the '70s," Reif said. "We simply did not receive the funds to compensate for the growth. The transfer of funds is a very slow process."

The change in emphasis from teaching to research also affected some of the school's faculty members.

Wayne Baty, a 60-year-old professor who taught business communications for 23 years, said he was asked to retire five years earlier than he had planned. He said teaching was what he enjoyed the most.

"When they changed from smaller classes to large lectures, it was like trying to teach piano by lecturing," said Baty, who retired last May. "Everything I taught had to do with writing. I never collected a paper or a test I didn't read. "Now the students sit in big classes, listen to the lectures

'For as long as I've been here the business school never got its fair share.'

and answer machine-graded tests. They're missing out. Life is just not a machine-graded test."

Baty co-authored a textbook on business communications, which sold more than a million copies. When the classes were enlarged, the book was replaced because it required the students to write, Baty said.

"They wanted us to go away because we were teaching oriented," he said. "Everyone over 55 was asked to take an early retirement."

"They said the Legislature might pass a bill that would give us $40 extra a month (in retirement benefits). I considered this such an insult. What does a person who truly cares about teaching care about an extra $40?"

Baty said he eventually took the early retirement because he was so upset with the turn the college had taken.

Business College officials say no professor ever was asked to retire early. Reif, now a management professor, said, "When early retirement was made more attractive, we were told to make the professors aware they could retire early."

But Baty's story is not unique.

William Werther, who taught management at ASU from 1971 to 1986, said he left ASU for the University of Miami because he thought "the central administration was trying to turn ASU into a research institute on the backs of the students."

"We used to have one of the finest teaching institutions in the country. But that has all changed," Werther said. "It's hard to take pride in teaching when you are told it just doesn't matter."

Werther, who is now the chair of the management department at the University of Miami, said he gets at least

ASU's skateboarding problems

Skateboarders. Just the sound of that word have caused some students to go into crazy fits.

These fits usually stem from the increased appearance of secondary education types who feel it necessary to terrorize the campus by skateboarding on all the malls, in the buildings and over students.

Although the University has taken some steps to make the area safe from hazardous high school skateboarders, it just does not seem to be enough. How many of us have been literally run down or had a close call with a skateboarder who could care less? If you are in their way, you are just another obstacle they have to overcome.

While it is true that this public institution is open to the public and everyone has the right to walk around or be on campus, no one has the right to endanger other people who are minding their own business.

Unfortunately, it is a difficult battle to catch skateboarders and cite them, but something has to be done.

Maybe the local elementary and high schools would be interested in knowing where their students are. One look at many of these skateboarders will tell you that they are quite young.

According to Arizona statute, education is compulsory to the 10th grade or the age of 16. Maybe the parents of these skateboarders would like to know what the little darlings are doing at school today.

ASU has taken steps to make ASU's malls and buildings safe for the average student. Like bicyclists, skateboarders should be liable for breaking the rules.

Why should students who pay tuition to attend classes here be subject to possible endangerment from students who are skipping mandatory classes? ASU does have many level spots and embankments that are attractive to skateboarders, but that is no excuse for these helions to try to hit people.

It is difficult to determine just what will prevent these people from abusing their rights, but until we find out, maybe a ban on skateboarding will help somewhat.

Apathy poor excuse for not helping crime victims

Imagine being murdered at your home within earshot of 38 people.

It happened 22 years ago to Kitty Genovese, who was murdered as her New York neighbors listened to her screams. No one came to help.

Imagine being repeatedly raped by four men for more than an hour before the eyes of at least 15 other people.

It happened in 1983 to a 21-year-old mother in Big Dan's Tavern, a New Bedford, Mass., bar, while a crowd of drinkers stood by. No one came to help.

These headline tragedies are well-known and their implications about the obligation of bystanders well-discussed. And at last count, the states of Vermont, Rhode Island, Massachusetts and Minnesota have enacted duty-to-assist legislation which requires bystanders to "reasonably assist" endangered persons.

Even so, these cases frightening message still hits home. Imagine being assaulted in your dormitory or apartment and screaming unheeded cries for help for 20 minutes.

It happened Sunday, Oct. 5, 1986, to an ASU student in Best Hall, according to University police. No one came to help.

Although there is no legislation in Arizona attempting to compel "good samaritanism," it doesn't seem unreasonable to expect human decency to dictate it.

In the Genovese case, neighbors who failed to come to the woman's aid could have saved her life. One man called the police only after considerable soul-searching. In the tavern rape, customers walked past the woman as she was attacked on the pool table and ignored her pleas.

Khali Crawford
Arts Editor

In the case of the ASU student, it took 20 minutes of screaming before another resident alerted University police.

Although compared to the others, the results of the ASU case were somewhat less severe — the girl's face left swollen, cut and bruised. In such threatening situations even seconds can mean life or death.

The Best Hall attacker reportedly escaped down the stairwell. He has not yet been apprehended. And odds are he won't see a day of punishment for this assault.

Again, speed is of the essence when reporting crimes; there's no time for soul-searching. Statistics taken from a 1985 report in Psychology Today indicate that there is a 35 percent chance the perpetrator will be caught if the action is reported in progress. If reported only one minute after the event took place, the odds decrease to 10 percent.

For me, those odds aren't good enough.

They could be increased by little more than a helping hand, a confrontation or a phone call. It is not often when victims can call for help; it is sad when their screams fall silent on apathetic ears.

Sociologists say bystanders tend to rationalize or misinterpret what they hear or see.

Even with today's often bizarre events, I say it's fairly difficult to misinterpret a rape or 20 minutes of incessant screaming. These are definite cues that something is amiss.

Yet, they go on ignored. Whether it be fear or uncertainty, it leaves us a call away — to 911 — from saving a life.

Am I too demanding to expect that someone will stop to help me if I am being repeatedly stabbed, or raped or harassed? I hope not.

There's something logistically wrong here. Most of us are curious. We might not admit it, but we all gawk at accidents. Why not put the curiosity to work?

Are we being too hopeful to expect that someone else has already made a call in the event of an emergency? Evidence says we are.

Sociologists are blaming such apathy on the "group effect:" people are less likely to slip out of a crowd or break the prevailing norm.

Whatever label, it's time to set a new trend. I'm not saying "be a vigilante and save the world." I am saying "be a human being and call for help." Is that too much to ask?

Imagine screaming. What if no one comes to help?

Morally unacceptable

Editor:

Unjust and morally unacceptable — that is what ASU West is. I am an angry justice student who wants to say a few words to the administration and faculty.

ASU West was supposedly built because there were people who needed classes on the northwest side of town. This was to be an extension of ASU. Then why are they taking our justice classes and having them taught at ASU West? I will tell you.

The Arizona Legislature won't give them money unless there is a sizeable enrollment so they take our justice program (which happens to be one of the smallest departments on campus) and try to transfer the program over to ASU West.

Not only do they transfer the best classes, but they do not even offer them here. So you are forced to go to ASU West to get the classes you want which (surprise!) raises their enrollment. To top it off, ASU West with its three temporary locations are all between 35 minutes to an hour (depending on traffic) away. I could have stayed in California and commuted to San Francisco State University if I wanted to face the traffic jam blues.

We are not asking much. There are some simple solutions to this problem. Take your choices. Have the classes offered both at ASU West and ASU, offer them as video classes at ASU West but teach them at ASU or provide a bus or trolley to ASU West.

Not only do we pay tuition, but now you want us to purchase a car. I do not understand. Are you here to serve the students or to add another campus to your assets?

Poetic justice

Editor:

The override of President Reagan's veto of the sanctions bill was a legislative defeat for Congress but not for President Reagan. Furthermore, it was an immoral and shortsighted act on the part of our congressmen.

It was immoral for Congress to take punitive actions (sanctions) which mean starvation for hundreds of thousands of blacks, not only in South Africa, but in all countries in Africa dependent upon South Africa economically. It was immoral and suicidal for us, the United States, to take actions (sanctions) which will eventually turn millions of South African blacks and whites over to the communists. Finally, it was an immoral and politically shortsighted act for Congress not to support the government of South Africa in the successful (to date) efforts to gradually eliminate the abominable apartheid.

The efforts (sanctions) by our Congress to destroy the South African government represent both a potential death wish by our sovereign nation (the United States) and support for the evil of envy and preference for economic security over personal freedom which are the essential attributes of the anti-government (communist) forces within South Africa. Time will vindicate President Reagan and his efforts vis-a-vis South Africa and indict the efforts of Congress. It is sometimes called "poetic justice."

Updated act to set GPA policy, limit financial aid eligibility

By KIM MATTINGLY
State Press

Among stricter federal requirements for student aid eligibility in 1987-88, ASU juniors and seniors will have to maintain a 2.0 grade point average in accordance with this year's revision of the Higher Education Act, an ASU official said.

Paul Barberini, ASU director of student financial assistance, said the requirement marks the first time the federal government has dictated academic policy.

"I think it's an intrusion. Each institution should develop its own policy," Barberini said. "It opens the door (to the federal government). What stops them from doing something else?"

The act does not dictate a GPA requirement for freshmen and sophomores.

ASU's own academic policy varies among colleges, and if required grades are not maintained, a student is placed on academic probation.

Academic probation grants students one semester to bring their grades to college standards before expulsion.

Barberini said he does not know if the new GPA requirement for federal financial aid permits flexibility or "probation" time.

'It impacts those who have already severed financial relationships with their mothers and fathers and now have to satisfy a new set of rules.'

— Paul Barberini

"Will the government allow institutions to make exceptions? I don't know," he said.

The 1965 Higher Education Act was revised this year and approved last week by Congress. It now needs President Reagan's signature to become law.

Barberini said the act also restricts students who want to claim independence to increase their financial aid eligibility.

He said independent students must prove they have not been claimed on their parents' income tax for the previous two years before the award year, and they must document that they have earned $4,000 each year during those two years.

Previous law only required independent status for one year and imposed no earning requirement.

Barberini said it will be very difficult to establish independence under the new rules.

"It impacts those who have already severed financial relationships with their mothers and fathers and now have to satisfy a new set of rules."

"Most college students do not earn $4,000 a year."

According to a report from the U.S. Student Association, as of July 1, 1987, a student can also be determined independent if he/she is:

- 24 or older.
- An orphan or ward of the court.
- A veteran of the U.S. armed forces.
- A graduate, professional or married student not listed on his/her parent's income tax forms as a dependent for the award year or a student who has other legal dependents.

•Certified independent by the financial aid administrator for extenuating circumstances.

Barberini said the act also requires all institutions to have a drug abuse program if they want federal student aid funds.

Committee to vote on Graduate College senate delegation

By KERRY FEHR
State Press

A bill to add two representatives from the Graduate College to the Associated Students Senate will be considered tonight, even though a similar proposal was defeated by the ASASU Executive Committee last month.

The Government Operations Committee will vote on the measure and forward its decision to the senate for final consideration Oct. 21.

According to the bylaws, any college that is recognized by the University and operates a college council is allowed to have senate representation.

Amy Abraham, director of the Graduate Student Association, said the Graduate College has met both criteria and should be represented.

But opponents of the bill contend the Graduate College only is an administrative college.

Campus Affairs Vice President LeeAnne Seall said giving the graduate college senate representation would be "opening a can of worms" in which other groups would want to be represented.

Seall said all of the duties of the Graduate College are administrative and should not be considered an academic college.

But the dean of the Graduate College, Brian Foster, said the college awards degrees and approves curricula so it is an academic college.

Foster said he supports the proposal because graduate students have different needs and they "are not being articulated very well right now."

Abraham agreed and said several graduate students have talked to her about their special needs, such as re-entry and married housing.

Foster said there are "a whole series of reasons" why the Graduate College should be represented.

"It's very important that graduates students have representation."

About 25 percent of all ASU students are graduates with special needs, he said.

Seall said graduate students are eligible to run for senatorial seats through their respective colleges and do not need separate representation.

"They have have other avenues" by which to run for senate positions, she said.

Seall said a former ASASU president, Ray Burnell, was a graduate student.

But Abraham said graduates in interdisciplinary programs, such as humanities and public administration, do not have individual colleges and work through the Graduate College for their academic degree.

Seall said those students still are eligible to run under the College of Liberal Arts.

She said graduates also are represented through the GSA.

Seall said most of graduate needs are issue-oriented and can be handled by senate issues committees and the GSA.

ASU police report

University police reported the following incidents in the 28-hour period ending 3:45 a.m. Monday:

•An ASU student woke from a nap in her room at Best Residence Hall to see the shadow of a man leaving her room, police said.

Police said the student reported she could see the man's shadow hiding behind the room divider, but did not hear anything.

The student told police she tried to telephone for help numerous times, but her phone would not work, police said.

A half hour later, she was able to get through to a friend and her friend telephoned University police, police said.

The residence hall director said she was unaware there were any problems with the phones and said it was possible the student's phone was disconnected at the time of the incident.

Police said there are no witnesses or a description of the suspect.

This is the second time someone has intruded into a Best Hall resident's room during the last week.

•Two ASU students took two pizzas from a man delivering pizza to the Cholla Apartments, police said.

The students agreed to pay for the pizzas after police apprehended and questioned them, police said.

The pizza delivery man did not press charges, and the students were not arrested, police said.

•A Phoenix man demolished the fountain at the Sun Dome in Sun City West, police said.

An estimated $300 in damages resulted when the man's car accidentally plowed into the fountain, police said.

Police said the man reported his car hit the fountain when he was picking up a package at the entrance of the Sun Dome.

•A student reported someone had walked on the roof of his Mazda RX7 while it was parked in Lot 35, causing $150 in damage, police said.

•An unknown vehicle caused $70 in damage to 30 feet of a chain link fence at the northeast corner of Lot 51E, police said.

•Police said they stopped a student riding a motorcycle early

Monday morning at the 400 block of Stadium Drive because there have been many stolen motorcycles in that area lately, and the student riding the motorcycle was not wearing eye protection.

The rider told police he was borrowing the bike from a friend, police said.

When police telephoned the owner of the bike, he confirmed he loaned the bike to his friend, police said.

Police said they warned the rider not to ride without eye protection and did not issue a citation.

•Witnesses to an argument between two students in Lot 51E called police to break up an assault, police said.

When police arrived and questioned the students, they discovered the "assault" was just a boyfriend-girlfriend dispute, police said.

The female student told police she was alright, and both students decided not to press charges, police said.

Tempe police report

Tempe police reported the following incidents for the period ending midnight Sunday:

•Police said a man entered the Circle K convenience market, 802 S. Hardy Drive, and robbed a clerk Oct. 13.

The man pretended he had a weapon and took $44 from the clerk.

Police describe the suspect as Caucasian, 5-foot-10, 140 pounds, 24 years old, with red hair and hazel eyes.

He was wearing a blue baseball cap and a green nylon jacket.

•A man allegedly entered his ex-wife's residence and wrote "your dead"(sic) on her bathroom mirror and sexually assaulted her several times, police said.

The suspect allegedly confronted the woman Oct. 6 in her backyard, at the 1000 block of East Frost Drive, hit her several times with a walking cane, and then sexually assaulted her.

The woman's left forearm was broken in the incident.

The man is also suspected of returning to the woman's residence, entering through an unlocked master bedroom window, and assaulting her again at gunpoint on Oct. 7, as well as writing on her mirror.

The woman was treated at Tempe St. Luke's Hospital where she contacted officers.

Police have the suspect in custody.

•An officer was dispatched to the 3400 block of South Priest Drive to investigate reports of harassing phone calls, police said.

A man said he had received three calls, from three different callers. During one of the calls a male voice said "this is the KGB and we are going to kill."

The other two calls made references to the U.S.S.R. and freed journalist Nicholas Danilov.

The victim is of Russian descent.

Police impounded a tape of the calls as evidence and advised the man to contact Mountain Bell's Security Division.

Missing is IBM computer material valued at $2900 and $500 in cash, police said.

Police said the thief entered through a bedroom window and exited through the front door.

Committee seeks to bring 'frightful' TV host back to Valley

By BENNY McCONNELL
State Press

The Committee to Draft Edmus Scarey is on campus this week and, it's horrifically serious.

Letterhead, business cards, news releases, buttons, organizational meetings and candlelight vigils are part of a campaign to put the "Friday Night at The Frights" host back in his part-time Channel 15 castle.

Scott E. Long, committee coordinator, said: "We are very serious about getting Edmus Scarey back on TV in Phoenix."

"You see, David Letterman is not on Friday nights, and Edmus is our Friday night David Letterman," Long said of the perennially disheveled host whose real name is Ed Muscare.

"He has a lot of class, and he's sexy to a lot of women. Elvira (the other late night TV host with a biting wit) couldn't hold a candle to him," he said.

Scarey's Friday night show was known for showing dreadfully bad movies that were only scary if watched with news that an ax-murderer was roaming the neighborhood.

Long, a political activist by day and security guard at night, faithfully banded together with a group of friends on Friday nights to laugh, play with Legums, their tarantula mascot, and of course, recite the Edmus creed:

*I promise every Friday night
instead of going to bedmus,
I will tune in my TV to Channel 15 to watch the scary movie with Edmus.*

After Scarey pulled his disappearing man stunt, Long and his cohorts pooled their energies to form the committee, hoping to collect 10,000 signatures by Halloween night.

Stuart Powell, general manager for KNXV-TV Channel 15, said of the committee, "I'm not sure I understand it because I really don't believe their efforts to bring him back will be a factor."

Powell knew Muscare from working with him on an all-night show at a Kansas City television station that featured phone calls, guest appearances of celebrities and the wonderful, irreverent humor of Muscare.

Scarey disappeared from the show in August, leaving only a letter of resignation for "personal reasons," Powell said.

As far as viewership, he said, "His ratings were excellent. Right around the time he left, his show was really starting to take off. Wherever he goes he has a very loyal and very devoted following."

"If you didn't like the movie he was showing, sometimes he would let people know how long the movie segment was so they could do other things in time to see him do his bit," he said.

The committee hopes to bring Edmus back from the deadmus, possibly into the MU Arizona Room.

The Halloween bash will put the campaign to rest, Long said.

"We're not sure he knows how much he's loved and appreciated here, especially by small children," he said.

"And lovable little old ladies."

Doctors say venereal warts increasing among ASU students

By MICHAEL BURGESS
State Press

ASU's Student Health Center is seeing more cases of venereal warts than both herpes and gonorrhea, the center's gynecological coordinator said Monday.

April Calmelat, said the center is seeing an increase in venereal warts cases on campus this year. She said she treats about three or four cases a month.

"We are definitely seeing more cases," she said. "I don't think students know that it can be potentially cancerous."

Dr. Monty Roth, Student Health director, said venereal warts cases are being seen more frequently.

"Venereal warts along with chlamydia is a problem on campus," he said.

Chlamydia is the most common sexually transmitted disease on campus, he said.

Dr. Robert Nelson, a Scottsdale gynecologist, said he used to see one or two cases of venereal warts a week and now he is seeing two or three cases a week, including quite a few ASU students.

Nelson said it has only been the last five to six years since the different strains of the disease have been identified.

Currently, 42 different wart viruses have been identified and five of these viruses are known to cause lesions of the genital area in both men and women.

He said venereal warts, Human Papilloma Virus (HPV), is a sexually transmitted disease most commonly found in sexually active people ages 18-30.

"The more sexually active the person is, the greater the chance of them getting it," he said. "It is a whole lot more common than people realize."

He said the disease is contracted through direct contact or through mucous membranes. Although it is found in men it is most prevalent in women, he said.

The most common venereal warts is the typical cauliflower-shaped wart that also appears on the arms and hands.

The warts are found on the vulva, vagina and cervix in women, and on the penis in males.

Nelson said the most dangerous wart is a small flat lesion only be visible through a high-powered microscope.

He said the lesions are the primary cause of cancer of the cervix.

Nelson said the only efficient way to detect venereal warts is through regular gynecological examinations and through the use of a colposcope.

The treatment of venereal warts depends on the location and type of wart identified.

The most commonly used treatments are chemical agents, freezing probes, and electric and laser cauterization.

Even with treatment, one out of five patients will have areas of recurring disease and will need further treatment.

Nelson said the way to keep from getting the warts is through abstaining from sexual activity or by using condoms.

Demolition: builder's kin lam

By BENNY McCONNELL
State Press

The College of Architecture and Environmental Design would demonstrate it is concerned about history if it tries to save the Frankenberg house, said Susan Harter, great-granddaughter of one of the house's builders.

The house, listed on the National Register of Historic Places, will be demolished to make way for the $11.5 million School of Architecture expansion.

Construction of the 100,000 square-foot project is scheduled to begin next summer.

The competition rules said the expansion was necessitated by an expected 20 percent increase in the School of Architecture enrollment.

Currently 1,000 students are enrolled in the program. An examination of the competition rules revealed inclusion of the Frankenberg house was not considered.

"If you look at the space the house sits on, you'll see that it's the best possible location to put the expansion in," said Jack Kinsinger, vice president for academic affairs and one of the jury members who selected the recent expansion design.

James Woolf and Milton Meyer built the house in 1910. It is "the best preserved example of rusticated concrete block construction in Tempe," according to house.

Harter, the great-granddaughter of ASU President J. Russell Nelson about historic buildings on campus that are threatened.

"Not only is it a problem at ASU, it's a problem in the town," she said. "So I'm trying to save our architectural heritage."

Harter grew up in a house near the Frankenberg house. "The Frankenberg home was one of the best neighborhoods and that's why I'd like to see it saved."

Before moving into the Frankenberg house, Barbara Ellingson lived with her children in the Architecture Building stands.

"People slept out on the back porch for conditioning," Mark Ellingson said.

"The house had three main bedrooms. It could have had five rooms if you divided it."

"A Methodist church used to stand where now and Forest Avenue ran all the way through," Ellingson said.

Ellingson's father, John, oversaw 100 percent of his 20-year tenure at ASU as director of Construction. Sun Devil Stadium, Gamble Physical Sciences Center were all built under his direction.

The family was required by contract to demolish the house within a year, Ellingson said, and the house was their quarters.

"I regret seeing it having to go down like a very unusual structure with its hand-cast concrete porch."

"I don't think we salvage enough of our history if they just get torn down."

The neighborhood continually faced campus buildings to accommodate increasing enrollment. Other houses in the neighborhood losing to the University.

Rooms in the house were converted into offices. Ellingson's moved out in 1972.

Those with offices in the house agreed to the best of a relaxed, home environment with a noisy University Drive.

"The light coming through the vines is beautiful," said Margot Garcia, assistant professor of Architecture and Construction.

Garcia is beginning her third year in office with five windows. "The screeching of the brakes is the worst I've only seen one accident," she said.

"It's sad because the University has been wondering if the porch is going to fall off."

The Frankenberg house, located at the corner of University Drive and Forest, will be demolished to make way for the $11.5 million School of Architecture expansion.

two calls a month from ASU professors who want to leave the University.

"They (the faculty) are unhappy, unrecognized and unrewarded," Werther said. "They (the central administration) say they're trying to build a better school, but by whose measure? Certainly not the students."

The business college's accreditation was deferred last spring by the American Assembly of Collegiate Schools of Business (AACSB), the national accrediting body based in St. Louis, because there were too many students per full-time faculty member.

According to the AACSB, the school needs to hire 22 full-time faculty members to balance the current ratio.

The college has claimed the unbalanced student/teacher ratio was caused by a drastic increase in student enrollment.

This might have been the case in the late '70s, but in the past five years the enrollment has decreased.

According to ASU Academic Department Profile, in 1981 the total student FTE taught was 6606.7. In 1985-86 the FTE dropped to 6099.4.

The FTE professors, associate professors and assistant professors was 212.68 and the FTE for instructors was 10.64.

In 1985-85 the FTE professors, associate professors and assistant professors had decreased to 193.04 and the number of FTE instructors had increased to 19.0.

Reif said the school was going through a "rather painful" transition.

"ASU is changing," he said. "We can't return to the way we were in the '60s. Maybe the faculty who are dissatisfied with the changes would be happier elsewhere. That's just life."

Reagan optimistic for renewed arms talks with Gorbachev

WASHINGTON — President Reagan told the American people Monday the United States and the Soviet Union "are closer than ever before" to eliminating ballistic missiles and said he remains ready "to pick up where we left off" in an attempt to break the impasse over the future of 'Star Wars.'

In a speech broadcast nationally from the Oval Office, Reagan reviewed the collapse of his summit talks on Sunday with Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev in Reykjavik, Iceland.

"I cannot promise, nor can any president promise, that the talks in Iceland or any future discussions with Mr. Gorbachev will lead inevitably to great breakthroughs or momentous treaty signings," Reagan said.

And he insisted that "we prefer no agreement than to bring home a bad agreement to the United States."

Reagan acknowledged that Gorbachev gave no indication "when or whether" he would come to the United States for the summit the leaders went to Iceland to prepare for.

"Our invitation stands," the president said. "We continue to believe additional meetings would be useful. But that's a decision the Soviets must make."

After refusing to compromise with Gorbachev on the testing of his hypothetical strategic defense system known formally as the Strategic Defense Initiative, Reagan said, "We are dealing now from a position of strength, and for that reason we have it within our grasp to move speedily with the Soviets toward even more breakthroughs."

Reagan had worked on his speech up to the last hour. A U.S. official said that speechwriters reworked drafts that had been prepared in advance, and the president himself made some last minute changes in the text that the White House customarily has ready well in advance of Reagan's delivery.

Reagan's national security adviser, Vice Adm. John M. Poindexter, told reporters Monday that U.S. arms negotiators in Geneva, Switzerland, will try to salvage elements of the accord that won tentative approval at the summit.

Meanwhile, an official traveling with Secretary of State George P. Shultz home from Brussels, Belgium, said that Shultz will attend an international human rights conference in Vienna, Austria, in early November and may at that time meet with Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard Shevardnadze.

In his speech, Reagan said, "Our ideas are out there on the table."

He was referring to the two superpowers' unfinished agreements to phase out medium and long-range nuclear missiles by 1996.

"They won't go away," he said. "We are ready to pick up where we left off... so there is reason — good reason — for hope."

Holloway dismissed; Patterson optimistic

By BOB HEILER
State Press

The ASU basketball team will start practice tomorrow without senior forward Eric Holloway, who has been "basically dropped from the team," according to Coach Steve Patterson.

Holloway's history on the team has been stormy, leading him in and out of probations and suspensions for disciplinary reasons.

"I would really rather not discuss the reasons (for Holloway's dismissal) in the paper," Patterson said Monday. "I think it's really the conclusion of a story that's been well-documented.

"It's just unfortunate that it comes at a time when we're getting ready to start practice and get things going."

The team starts practicing tomorrow, in accordance with NCAA regulations that prohibit coaches from beginning practice too far in advance of the season's schedule.

Holloway was suspended for the last two games of the season last year as disciplinary action for having struck Jonathan Lynn, a student-manager for the team. Before that his relationship with both Patterson and former coach Bob Weinbauer had been strained.

In fact, Holloway's troubles started before he ever played his first game as a Sun Devil. He was suspended for recruiting violations as an incoming freshman.

Steve Patterson

Holloway had been introduced to ASU assistant coach Henry Bibby in February, which violated an NCAA rule prohibiting high school prospects from meeting with recruiters before March.

Holloway was eventually cleared of any wrongdoing in this situation and was reinstated to the team before he ever missed a game. The program, however, was penalized for the infraction.

Before his suspension, Holloway started for the Devils at forward and had been one of the team's leading rebounders.

Though upset about Holloway's dismissal, Patterson was positive about the team's upcoming season without him.

Last season the Devils lacked size under the boards, but with the improvement of center Tarre Isiah and the acquisition of high school big men Mark Becker and Emery Lewis, Patterson foresees a turnaround this season.

"We think Tarre (Isiah) is going to be a key man for us this season," Patterson said. "He's been in the weight room, and he's put on about 20 pounds, and he's improved in a lot of ways.

"In the last few games (last season), he really showed us a lot."

Helping Isiah out in the key will be the freshmen, Becker and Lewis. Although he has not been able to hold official practices yet, Patterson said he is optimistic about the punch that these players can deliver to his front line.

"Emery Lewis (6-foot-10) and Mark Becker (6-9) are going to give us some extra size up there," Patterson said. "They can both add strength to the front line."

Becker led the McClintock Chargers to the Class-AAA Arizona State championship last year, upsetting the previously unbeaten Broncos of Brophy Prep in the finals.

Lewis graduated from San Bernadino High School in San Bernadino, Calif., where he helped his team get to the semifinals of the Class-AA championship.

Although the two are only freshmen, Patterson expects to make full use of their talents this season.

"I think they're going to see substantial action this season," Patterson said. "How else are they going to get the experience unless we give it to them?"

The team returns many other players this season, including guard Steve Beck, who got an honorable mention in the Pac-10 polls last year, and 5-10 spark-plug point guard Arthur Thomas.

Senior forward Eric Holloway has been dismissed from the basketball team. Coach Steve Patterson declined to comment on the reasons for his dismissal.

Everything's coming up Roses for Devils

What a great weekend. Not only did the Sun Devil football team blast Oregon 37-17, but a lot of other good things happened, too. But let's start with the Devils.

It sure was good to see all those points going up on the scoreboard while I was watching the updates on TV, sipping on a cold brew. Coach John Cooper's conservative offense is not exactly known as a scoring machine, and granted, the Duck defense will never be compared to Oklahoma's — or even ASU's — but there were several encouraging things that came about.

One was the seeing fullback Channing Williams have a big day. By gaining 94 yards on just 12 carries, Williams gave an added dimension to the offense. It is usually pretty easy to assume that when ASU runs, it will be the tailback who does it. If Williams can continue to be a force, it will be a boon to the offense.

Jeff Van Raaphorst had another great day, too, lending credence to the opinion that his disaster against Washington State was a one-time deal. In the last two weeks Raap is 29 for 37 for 431 yards and four touchdowns. And no interceptions.

Those are the kind of numbers he used to put up in a single game as a sophomore, and he is still capable of doing it if Cooper would let him throw more. But Cooper is sticking to his conservative attack, running about twice as much as he throws, and he is showing no signs of changing his philosophy.

The encouraging thing is Van Raaphorst seems to be adjusting to throwing less. He is making the most of his opportunities, as his 18.7 yards per completion average against Oregon shows. He is making the best of the situation.

Jay Taylor
Sports Analysis Editor

Another good thing is that Darryl Harris's injured hand is not as bad as first expected. He had X-rays taken Sunday, and they proved negative. The Devils have a strong tailback tandem with Harris and Paul Day, and it would be a major setback if one of them were to go down with an injury.

Against Oregon, Harris had seven carries for 28 yards and Day had 21 for 88. Combined, that makes one real good back. And Day's speed is proving to be devastating, as the Oregon secondary can attest to. He flat outran everyone in catching a 63-yard scoring strike from Van Raaphorst.

There are some other observations I have made on the glorious weekend just past:

Washington State's thrashing of USC may make things a lot more difficult for the Devils. The Trojans are not going to be a bunch of happy campers Saturday after having their butts handed to them by the Cougars.

The fact that ASU shut them out, 24-0 last year will also put the revenge factor on the side of the Trojans. But ASU has had good success against Southern Cal, winning four of the six meetings. The games are always bruising physical battles, and are usually won on the offensive and defensive lines. ASU has the advantage on both fronts.

As far as that school to the south is concerned, few things could have made me happier than seeing its collapse against UCLA. The Cats should have been blowing the Bruins out by a lot more at halftime, having to settle for two field goals down close and failing to convert a fourth-and-one from the Bruin 2-yard line. The score should have been 31-0.

But UA's offense was nowhere to be found, even during the first half. Two blocked punts took care of field position and it didn't have to move the ball. But when it had to move the ball in the second half, it couldn't, with the exception of the drive that put UA ahead 25-24.

The Wildcats struggled offensively all last year, and for all the points they were rolling up early in the season against weak opponents, are doing so again this year. The Cats would have trouble scoring at a convention of hookers.

It is starting to look like my wildest sports fantasy could come true. ASU could very well play UA for the conference title. Going to Tucson and beating the Cats for the title in their own back yard would more than make up for four straight years of disappointments.

Results in: voters pick cotton shirts, 94-2

By STEVE ADAMS
State Press

The "run for the cotton" turned into a stampede as the results of the Cotton Poll are in, and it proved once again that Dino's Doghouse makes things shake, rattle and roll around the ASU campus.

It will come to nobody's surprise that the cotton T-shirts won a resounding victory over the 50-50 blend and have brought the saying "playing for the cotton" back to Tempe.

"The results are not a complete representation of all people who play intramurals, but at least it is a fraction," said Juliette Moore, assistant director of intramurals.

The results of the poll showed that 94 people preferred to "play for the cotton", while only two people wanted to play for the 50-50 blend. There also were two people who preferred to play "for the unknown".

Perhaps these two people would like to "play for the Twilight Zone." You are about to enter a competition both frightening and fascinating.

The results of this poll mean that the intramural department will go back to the 100 percent cotton T-shirts starting next fall.

"We said we would go along with whatever the results would be, and that is what we (the intramural department) are going to do," Moore said.

In the meantime, however, intramural champions are going to have to be content with the 50-50 blend.

Besides the suspenseful Cotton Poll, there was other excitement going on in the wide world of intramurals this weekend.

The intramural pool tournament cued off this past Saturday and Sunday, with well over 100 people competing for the men's class A and B titles.

The men's class A semi-final action pitted Victor Coukoulis against Scott Mars in the first division, with Coukoulis winning two games to none.

In the other semi-final match, Pete Stuhe went up against Kent Veldhuizen with Veldhuizen winning that best-of-three matchup in two straight.

This set up the Veldhuizen-Coukoulis confrontation for the men's class A title.

It was a close match, but Coukoulis emerged the victor, defeating Veldhuizen 2-1 to capture the men's class A title.

In men's class B semi-final action: in division one, Philip Gooran knocked off Dale Banks, two games to none, while in division two, John Barnes bumped off Karl Hatt two games to one.

The final proved to be a cake-walk as Barnes defeated Gooran, two games to none.

In other intramural news:

The women's volleyball tournament is in the heat of things: the Heffers go up against the Mochi Pounders this Wednesday in class A action, to decide who will go to the semi-finals.

Meanwhile, in the women's B division, Rez Rebels will duke it out with Rebel Yell for a semi-final berth and then to hopefully a berth into the finals.

Schedules will be out this Thursday, Oct. 16, for 3-man basketball. The manager of each team is responsible for picking up a schedule at the intramural office.

The deadline is just around the corner for the Team Superstars competition. All entries are due by Thursday, Oct. 23, at 4:00 p.m.

Flag football has kicked off its season with a record number of teams competing for the ultimate in intramural sports: the flag football championship.

The intramural department has a bone to pick with last week's report on the injuries incurred during flag football games. They would like to stress that the injuries to players have gone down since the ruling not to have physical contact went into effect.

Entries are due Oct. 16 for the women's double racquetball tournament. The tournament will be held Oct. 24-26 at the ASU racquetball courts.

The men's class A and women's singles racquetball tournament will get underway this weekend, Oct. 17-19. The action will take place at the racquetball courts on the ASU campus.

Devil spikers find consistency

By STEVE BRENNAN
State Press

ASU volleyball coach Debbie Brown has said all season long that one of the Sun Devils' weaknesses is their lack of consistency, both during matches and going into them. In their last five games, however, the Devils seem to have overcome this problem.

ASU, ranked ninth in the nation, has won five matches in a row, the past four involving only three games each, to boost its record to 14-2 overall and 5-2 in Pac-10 play.

The Sun Devils crushed all four teams in the Northern Arizona tournament this past weekend, defeating Loyola Marymount (15-6, 15-8, 15-12), NAU (15-11, 15-6, 15-11), New Mexico (15-7, 15-7, 15-11), and Baylor (15-5, 15-13, 15-12).

Concerning consistency, Brown said she was happy with the way the team has performed since the loss to Stanford Oct. 4th.

"This weekend proved that we could play consistently," she said. "I'm really pleased with the team. Everyone did a good job."

"Our serving was a lot more consistent," Brown said that even though none of the teams were ranked at the tournament, she expected stronger competition.

"It was good to win all of our matches in three games," she said. "But I thought we would go four games with someone. I thought the teams would be better than they were."

Brown said she was pleased that the Devils played well enough to give the starters a rest and the backup players a chance to gather experience.

"The tournament helped us out in terms of depth," she said. "The starters were able to get a rest, so Tracie Kisro and Noelle (Fridrich) and the others were able to play quite a bit. It gives confidence to the back-up players."

"It was good that we could give Noelle a chance to set," Brown said. "She wasn't quite as sharp as she was against Illinois State, but she hadn't had as much practice setting beforehand. She did a good job, though."

Brown said she was especially pleased with Stahl's performance in the tournament.

"Regina had a really good tournament," she said. "She set very well and had a lot of kills."

Stahl finished the four matches with 120 assists, 9 service aces, 19 kills and 17 digs, even after sitting out two of the three games against Baylor.

The Sun Devils will face the two Washington schools this coming weekend in the University Activity Center, and will travel to Provo, Utah Oct. 23 to take on sixth-ranked Brigham Young, who won the UCLA National Invitational tournament last weekend, finishing ahead of four Pac-10 schools (UCLA, California, USC, and Oregon).

Brown said that if the Sun Devils can continue to play the way they have been, they should not have problems with UW, WSU or Brigham Young.

"I'm pleased with our intensity level," she said. "As long as we continue to play like we are, we should do well. We have the personnel."

Tammy Webb led the Sun Devils in the tournament with 42 total kills, followed by Christy Nore with 41, and Tracey Barberie with 36. Webb also had 9 solo blocks in the four matches.

Baseball to hit Olympics in 1992

LAUSANNE, Switzerland (AP) — Baseball was added to the Olympics on Monday beginning in 1992, while the top officials of the Games said they had reached the limit on the number of sports they were willing to move to try to avoid a North Korean boycott in 1988.

Teams from at least six nations will determine gold, silver and bronze medals in baseball, a demonstration sport in Los Angeles in 1984, Vitaly Smirnov, chairman of the International Olympic Committee's program commission, announced.

He said the IOC's 91st session asked for a complete review of possible eligibility dilemmas with professional players and agreed that the tournament might have to be played on converted soccer fields if the host city doesn't have baseball diamonds.

An IOC member from the Soviet Union, Smirnov also mentioned that his country's Sports Ministry earlier this month had agreed to recognize and promote America's national pastime.

Japan beat the United States for the demonstration gold medal in baseball two years ago.

For 1988 in Seoul, he said, the IOC had voted to add men's and women's events in 50-meter freestyle swimming and team archery, while dropping the open judo class. This will bring the total number of events in the next Summer Games to 237, 16 more than in Los Angeles.

Smirnov said the committee had rejected proposals to add three other new medal sports in 1992 — bowling, women's modern pentathlon and roller skating.

It will give further consideration, he added, to the proposed addition of women's softball, water skiing, martial arts and lightweight rowing, as well as all possible medal additions to the Winter Games.

The 86-member IOC unanimously endorsed a stand taken last month by its Executive Board, giving Pyongyang until one year before the Games to formally accept the proposal to move table tennis, archery and parts of soccer and cycling from Seoul to the north.

If no written agreement is received by Sept. 17, 1987, "then North Korea might decide not to take part in the Olympic Games," Michele Verdier, the IOC spokeswoman, said.

Politically inspired boycotts have hit each of the last three Summer Games.

Park Seh-jik, president of the Seoul Olympic Organizing Committee, said North Korea must be willing to accept the spirit of the Olympic Charter to promote peace through sports.

Seoul, the South Korean capital, was awarded the 1988 Games four years ago. Last year, North Korea said it wanted to co-host the Games, and said it would lead a boycott of the Seoul Olympics if its demands were not met.

Although it has since backed off from demanding a 50-50 split of events, the north still wants more than the four sports the IOC, with South Korean approval, has proposed, most notably weightlifting and wrestling.
