

Wheelchair lift broken, no plans for repair

By MICHAEL BURGESS
State Press

A wheelchair lift, which provided access for at least 50 handicapped students to the basement of Matthews Center, has been broken since August, and there are no plans to repair it, an ASU Physical Plant manager said Tuesday.

Joe Metzger said the lift was not fixed because it does not comply with a state elevator code but could be repaired if the cost is "not prohibitive."

The lift allowed handicapped students to reach the Education Support Program, Upward Bound program, and the State Press offices in the basement.

Jim Hemauer, Disabled Student Resources orthopedic disabilities coordinator, said he called the Physical Plant about the broken lift before the fall semester, but it was a "low priority."

But Hemauer said problems with things like electric doors usually get repaired fairly quickly.

"I called the service desk like I normally do, and at that point I couldn't get a hold of the appropriate person," he said.

Hemauer said he contacted the plant a second time and was connected with someone who deals with elevators.

"They said it would take major repairs and rewiring and that it would take awhile," he said.

"I never thought it would come to this hassle. It would have been nice if they had formally notified us so we could tell students it would be awhile. It's frustrating that it's still not fixed."

Metzger said the breakdown was caused by a "worm gear." The gear, which is in the drive box, raises and lowers the lift.

He said the lift is a "case of something that fell through the cracks."

Tedde Scharf, Disabled Students Resources coordinator, said she wishes there had been more communication with the plant.

"We kept having students tell us the lift was broken," she said.

Scharf suggested moving the programs from the basement if the lift would not be fixed.

"We have at least 50 students who use those services," she said. "They have to be able to get down there."

Bernie Jackson, ESP coordinator, said the broken lift is keeping students from their tutoring services.

He said tutors have arranged their schedules to meet with handicapped students in other areas on campus.

But students cannot access the ESP computers from anywhere else, Jackson said.

Andy Mrozinski/State Press

Tedde Scharf, Disabled Students Resources coordinator, sits at the entrance to the wheelchair lift in the Matthews Center. Scharf said that ASU is an accessible campus overall and the broken lift is an unusual occurrence.

Senior broadcasting major Greg Smith, who is in a wheelchair, said he wanted to place an ad in the student newspaper but could not reach the offices.

"It's upsetting that you can't get where you need," he said.

"By not taking the initiative to fix it, you get the feeling that they are ignoring you. It's frustrating."

Scharf said that ASU is an accessible campus overall, and the broken lift is an unusual occurrence.

2 bills introduced in response to funding debate

By KERRY FEHR
State Press

Two bills were introduced in the Associated Students Senate Tuesday night in response to debates raging over whether the Lesbian Gay Academic Union should have received ASASU funding last month.

Senate Bill 28 deletes two bylaw articles that prohibit the senate from funding any activity that "aligns ASASU into biased sponsorship of a partisan political viewpoint or a controversial matter."

Senate Bill 30 requires a student referendum to determine whether or not the senate shall fund any group or program whose primary purpose is to promote a sexual preference.

College of Law Sen. Phil Stanfield said, "This particular issue is obviously directed at funding the (Lesbian Gay Academic Union)."

The senate denied the LGAU $185 last month on the grounds that the group is controversial.

College of Public Programs Sen. Kate Lehman, co-sponsor of Senate Bill 28, said the controversial clause should be deleted because the senate could not define controversial.

Stanfield, who co-sponsored both bills, said he agreed to support the referendum bill because "it's important that students have a voice in this."

"We're ducking the issue when we don't discuss these things."

Stanfield added: "It's important to put this issue behind us. Debate (on this issue) has taken up an inordinate amount of time."

College of Liberal Arts Sen. Karl Karg agreed.

"Let's settle this once and for all," Karg said.

College of Business Sen. John Colombo said the senate has seen the same debate each year and wants the students to decide the issue.

Sensing that subjecting the issue to a student referendum would indicate the senate's inability to make a decision, Colombo said, "This is not going to remove our legislative responsibility."

Colombo said some senators opposed an earlier referendum bill because it would indicate weakness by having to resort to the students.

He said the LGAU funding is probably the issue students know most about because of press coverage.

Tempe firefighters roll out hoses after responding to a first-alarm fire call Tuesday at the Farmer Education Building. The source of the fire was an overheated generator motor.

Fire threat causes students, faculty to evacuate building

About 350 students and faculty were evacuated Tuesday afternoon when smoke from an overheated motor spread through the Farmer Education Building.

Smoke spewed from the overheated motor of an air ventilator on the first floor and spread to some classrooms through air ducts at about 1:15 p.m., Tempe Fire Department spokesman Cliff Jones said.

Jones said the motor was shut down to clear the smoke, but it took the fire department about 20 minutes to locate and shut down the motor.

Jones said there was no damage to the motor itself and no injuries.

Students and faculty returned to the building at 1:45 p.m.

Propositions would alter budgets, legislative pay

Arizona voters will have the opportunity to vote on six propositions in the Nov. 4 general election. This is the second in a four-part series examining the ballot propositions. Today, the State Press examines Propositions 101, 102 and 300.

By J.B. SINNOTT
State Press

Three of the six propositions on the ballot have received little attention as the number of days until the election grow shorter.

Two of these would amend the state's constitution by altering the governmental budget processes in the state. The third would recommend an increase in salaries for the state legislators.

Proposition 101 would raise the limit on school district spending by 10 percent above currently established limits. Those limits were set in 1980 by an earlier ballot proposition.

A legislative analysis of the proposition says the total district spending limit in the state would increase to more than $1.9 billion in the 1987-88 fiscal year if the initiative is passed by voters.

If the proposition fails, the limits will be about $1.7 billion.

Proponents of the bill, who include school board members, teachers and parents, say the limits set in the 1980 proposition were unrealistic, and some badly needed programs cannot be instituted until the constitutional spending limits are increased.

Opponents, such as the Citizens Tax Committee and Ann Herzer, former candidate for superintendent of public instruction, claim more money will not create better schools and school districts should stick to a limit, like it or not.

Dennis Van Rockel, president of Arizona Education Association, said, "This small upward adjustment can make a big difference for our children."

A letter opposing the initiative, signed by the Citizens Tax Committee, stated, "Obviously, more money is not the answer. Making better use of the money might do the job."

Proposition 102 allows cities, towns and counties to ask voters for a permanent adjustment in their base spending limit every two years.

At present, such requests can occur only once every four years.

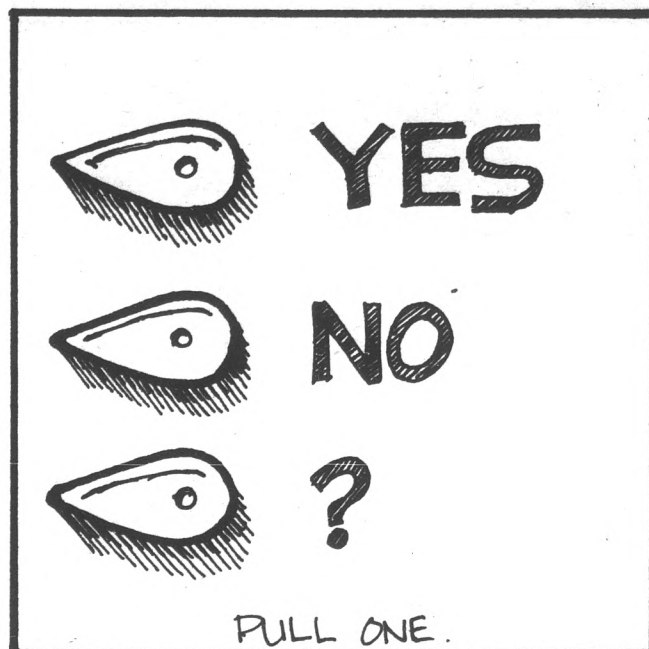

No one submitted arguments for or against the amendment to Rose Mofford, secretary of state, for inclusion in the state's proposition publicity pamphlet.

The legislative analysis said opponents of the proposition say that this is just another way to get more tax money from the voters, and since it is already difficult to organize opposition to these requests, this proposition will force many more voters to cast their ballots uninformed.

Proponents claim the present requirements are unnecessarily hard on areas experiencing an economic downturn or an unforeseen emergency, and that the state should not have to bail out local governments in fiscal trouble.

The third initiative, Proposition 300, would increase the salary of the state legislators from $15,000 to $20,000 a year. The increase was recommended by the Commission on Salaries for Elected State Officers.

Again, there were no arguments pro or con available from the secretary of state.

Advocates of the proposition say the increase would put the salary of Arizona's legislators in line with other legislators throughout the country.

Foes of the initiative say many of the states where legislative members have higher salaries also have a legislature that works full time.

Student groups unite to aid Salvadoran earthquake victims

By ED SCHUBERT
State Press

As San Salvador continues to dig out of the rubble of a devastating earthquake and its aftershocks, Hispanic students are raising money on Cady Mall to aid the survivors.

Steve Escobedo of M.E.Ch.A., a Chicano student organization, said his group will man a table on the mall from 8:30 a.m. to 1 p.m. this week.

He said they will open the collection box on Friday afternoon and write a money order to the American Red Cross.

"It's looking very grim for survivors right now," Escobedo said. "They're pulling bodies out of the rubble and burying them as they are being pulled out."

The earthquake hit El Salvador's capital just before noon Oct. 10. An initial death estimate of 200 is now close to 1,000 as more bodies are being found.

The quake, which was centered 10 miles northwest of San Salvador, measured 5.4 on the Richter scale and was followed by several aftershocks.

Anti-government rebels in El Salvador have called a truce to help the city recover from the disaster.

Escobedo said the Committee in Solidarity With the People of El Salvador

"It seems that whenever the country suffers a natural disaster, the country is united only temporarily," he said. "But then the fighting breaks out again."

He said the government of El Salvador is considering moving the capital to a new location.

"San Salvador is in such a susceptible area for an earthquake that they are thinking of moving the capital more inland to a safer area," he said. "But the president,

Napoleon Duarte, said that would be up to the people.

"The civil war is going to have to end before they even think about moving the capital."

Escobedo said he doesn't know how much money has been raised at ASU so far because they won't open the donation box until Friday, but he said students have been very supportive.

"As Americans we should help all the Americas," he said. "Both the North and South American continents are the Americas, and we should help our fellow Americans in El Salvador."

Delicate matter in the balance

An unfortunate mishap in the Manzanita Residence Hall has caused a re-evaluation to check the security measures used in screening non-residents of that hall.

While the evaluation may be necessary to make sure desk assistants are properly doing their job, it must be understood that workers at Manzanita or any other residence hall are not clairvoyant and cannot be held responsible for every incident that occurs when a non-resident enters the building.

There is certainly a delicate matter hanging in the balance. On the one hand, the Residence Hall Association and the University could establish a policy of making sure that only residents are allowed in the rooms. Random security checks of people in the hall could be made and police enforcement increased so much that five pieces of identification would be required to get to a room.

On the other hand, the residence halls could be opened to anyone who wants to wander in and check out the facilities. If students want safety, they should go to their rooms, lock the doors and barricade themselves in.

However, there is a compromise that could be made.

The present system seems to be working rather well. Incidents will happen just as homeowners and apartment renters experience burglaries and assaults.

Since the overwhelming majority of students who live in residence halls are over 18, they must play a part in determining who enters their room or their neighbor's room, since they are, it is hoped, responsible adults. But a police state is not necessary either.

Barbara Wood, one of the three directors of Manzanita Hall, was correct when she said, "We expect residents to take responsibility for their visitors."

Residents of any hall should take precautions when entering, exiting or inviting guests to their room.

Additional security that may be requested after a horrible incident is not a panacea for preventing crime.

Even the best laid plan sometimes go awry. Those re-evaluating the security system at Manzanita should remember that as they begin their investigation.

Disinformation: a call to arms for the U.S. press

Some media watchers believe the Reagan administration holds the American press in more contempt than any previous U.S. president.

Certainly few things have outraged journalists as much as the disclosure that the current administration had used a disinformation campaign to destabilize Muammar Gadhafi's Libyan regime.

The campaign, which attempted to generate false reports that the United States was ready to clash with Libya again, was aimed at the foreign press. However, it should come as no surprise that among its victims was a top-flight American newspaper, the Wall Street Journal, which reported last August that the two countries were again on a "collision course."

Though the administration denied that it had ever planted stories in the U.S. press, it would be naive to think that reports in foreign journals about U.S. matters would not "blow back," as former CIA director William Colby described it, to the American media. Previous disinformation campaigns abroad, conducted in the 1950s and '60s on a more minor scale, often did come back here and thus were discontinued.

Philosopher Marshall McLuhan once said that the world has imploded since the era of mass communication began. What happens on the other side of the globe can be reported here instantly.

And while the Reagan administration may not have targeted the U.S. media, it certainly perpetuated the disinformation when it came back to the states. White House press spokesman Larry Speakes called the Journal's article "unauthorized but highly authoritative."

Tom Blodgett
Editor

The immediate campaign apparently ended when The Washington Post's Bob Woodward, most known to the public for his Watergate stories, uncovered it. When that first happened, Speakes had to fend off angry reporters and administration officials were busy either denying or justifying the existence of any such campaign.

As the press has pointed out, there really is no justification. Few people would deny the government's right to do such things in times of war, but the United States was not at war with Libya — or even "pretty darn close" as Secretary of State George Shultz contended — in August.

The press, as mediums of the message, should show some indignation and point out that the administration's credibility has been hurt by, in effect, lying to the American people.

But journalists do themselves no favors by raging on the point at length. After all, they have suffered some credibility problems of their own at times.

Instead, they should use this incident as a call to arms. This is not to say that it is a time for a press war on the Reagan administration. Rather, this call is to renew the commitment to carry out their sacred trust of presenting the truth to the American people.

Shultz tried to downplay the incident by telling the press that the administration had not deceived, but was "just using your predictable tendencies to report things that we try to keep secret."

Certainly this is a distortion of what happened. The administration wasn't trying to keep this "information" secret. It wanted it picked up. But there is a lesson for the press in Shultz's words.

"We'll label it a big secret, and you'll find out about it, and you'll report it. We know that. The higher the classification, the quicker you'll report it. So you're predictable in that sense."

Because of fierce competition, the Washington press corps has become anxious to report most any juicy morsel of information fed to it by administration officials cloaked in anonymity. Thus, it has become an easy target for planted stories or disinformation.

The press must approach its coverage of the administration with more caution and restraint. An added dose of skepticism wouldn't hurt, either.

If one thing can be learned by both press and government from this incident, it should be this:

Your first responsibility is always to the people you serve.

Propaganda not gospel

Editor:

Ben Hoglund, in your Oct. 16 editorial, you still spread misinformation about the Lesbian and Gay Academic Union issue and kept the air far from clear.

If the senate had claimed the programs that the LGAU were trying to get funded were inappropriate, there would be no controversy. However, the senate construed an ambiguous bylaw in order to avoid having to explain themselves to a "higher" power that they funded homosexuals.

The bylaw states: "The senate shall not fund any activity that otherwise aligns Associated Students of ASU into biased sponsorship of a controversial matter."

The senate has defined "controversial matter" to mean, in this instance, an entire group instead of a single program. Ben, do you think information about Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome is controversial? Ben, you, like many people in the past, have made the ignorant statement that the bylaws say "controversial nature" — they do not. Also you attempted to substantiate your argument to deny funding by using the feeble argument that the bylaws do not allow funding to a group which promotes sexual preference. Does this mean the Society of Women Engineers should not be funded because they discriminate against men? Something else that needs to be set straight is your accusation that the LGAU presents a biased partisan political viewpoint. The LGAU has the full political spectrum from far right-wing Republicans, like yourself, to far left-wing Democrats.

In closing, I know you have the same responsibility that I do to present things factually, so in the future, please do so, instead of filling the readers minds with inaccurate propoganda being claimed gospel.

Exposing the wasteland

Editor:

I have just read Patrick J. Kucera's editorial of Oct. 17 on "parental apathy" and want to compliment him for writing it and you for publishing it. It is terrific.

Lack of preparation for the most demanding task most of us face throughout our lives and no widely accepted competent parent education program are a national tragedy.

Kucera's insightful article vividly exposes that "wasteland." I plan to quote parts of it (giving credit to him) in my own syndicated parenthood column as well as in presentation I make to parent and related meetings around the country.

I hope he will continue to write on other important subjects as skillfully as he developed this one.

Listeners abstain from alcohol awareness lecture

By TINA DAUNT
State Press

Representatives from Anheuser-Busch came to ASU Tuesday to talk about drunken driving and the importance of the "Buddy System," a program designed to encourage college students to call for transportation when they've had too much to drink.

There was only one problem.

No one showed up to listen to the lecture.

"The response just wasn't favorable," Doug Yonko, corporate communications manager for Hensley and Co., the Phoenix distributor for Anheuser-Busch.

"Usually we have around 50 people at these lectures."

Yonko has been giving lectures and seminars for the past three years on the dangers of drunken driving.

"Due to the efforts of concerned organizations the alcohol fatality rate has decreased by 10 percent," he said.

"We're asking people to be responsible, plan ahead and drink in moderation."

Bob Simmons, the ASU representative for Anheuser-Busch, said four fraternities and three sororities are currently participating in the "Buddy System."

Simmons said the system calls for a participant to stay on call just in case one of their friends has drunk too much and needs a ride home.

"The Buddy System works well because there is always someone you can count on if you need a ride," Simmons said. "It comes down to the responsibility factor."

"If you drink, be safe."

The Anheuser-Busch lecture is part of the Oct. 16-24 Alcohol Awareness Week, sponsored by the Student Health Center.

Since the week started with the kick-off rock concert last Thursday, the health center has sponsored events and lectures and passed out fliers on Cady Mall every day.

Wednesday will feature a lecture on how to help a friend with a drinking problem, and Thursday will feature an alcohol awareness fair on Cady Mall.

Seminar to encourage leadership, raise scholarship funds

By DAVE HODGES
State Press

ASU's ninth annual Student Foundation Leadership Seminar will be held from 9 a.m. to 1 p.m. Oct. 25 at Fiesta Inn, 2100 S. Priest in Tempe.

Neil Giuliano, Student Life program coordinator, said the theme for this year's conference is "Search For Leadership Excellence."

"Our goal for the conference is basically the same as the student foundation, to promote leadership and raise scholarship funds," Giuliano said.

He said almost 100 student leaders are expected to attend the event, which will include speakers, group interaction, a business-wear fashion show and luncheon.

"The event is open to ASU and high school students," he said. "But we don't really expect a big high school crowd since it is ACT (American College Testing Service) day and there are a lot of homecomings."

The keynote speaker for the conference is Joe Bacchus, vice-president for First Interstate Bank of Arizona. Giuliano said Bacchus is widely known as an accomplished motivational speaker and has spoken to leadership groups across the country.

"I haven't heard him speak, but many people have told me he is a motivator and has punch to his speeches," he said.

Other speakers for the seminar include Denise Resnick and Lance Ross, former Associated Students presidents, who will speak on the advantages of being involved in ASU student activities.

Gail Fann, an ASU business communications professor, will lead a group exercise on setting and achieving goals.

Giuliano, former ASASU president in 1982-83, said, "There are two main advantages for the students who attend."

"First, the students will have the chance to interact with each other and meet other campus leaders. The second reason is they will increase their knowledge base on the topics discussed at the conference."

Registration for the conference is $12. Reservations may be made by calling 965-6547 before Thursday.

ASU police report

University police reported the following incidents in the 24-hour period ending 6:30 a.m. Tuesday:

•Someone entered an unlocked room at 414 Adelphi Drive, the Lambda Chi Alpha fraternity house, and stole items valued at $1,022, police said.

Property taken includes a Nikon 35mm camera, 35-70mm zoom lens, MD-12 motor drive, Sony compact disc player with headphones and AC power supply, one disk, an electric shaver and 15 Valley National Bank checks, police said.

•Police reported someone stole a small brown refrigerator, a yellow Timex alarm clock, a small fire extinguisher and a spray bottle from the gatehouse at Lot 40. Estimated value of the loss is $182.

•Police said someone stole a black daypack containing a pair of jeans, an Ocean Pacific T-shirt, a note pad, sunglasses, a watch, two students' ASU ID cards, a room key and a New York drivers license from the weight room Physical Education Building West.

The daypack's owner left the daypack unattended on top of a locker, police said. Estimated value of the loss is $142.

•A student returned to his room at Sahuaro Residence Hall to find the door had been split down the center and the door handle and lock had been damaged, police said. Estimated value of the damage is $77.

•A student was attacked from behind while walking along the bike path on the west side of Matthews Center and robbed of $40, police said.

The student's glasses fell off when he was grabbed from behind by the neck and thrown to the ground, and the student was unable to see who assaulted him, police said.

•Police said a student reported a Caucasian man with dark curly hair and glasses exposed himself to her in Lot 53.

Police said the student reported a similar incident occurred Oct. 18, but said she did not wish to aid prosecution.

•Police said they found a transient sleeping in Danforth Chapel. They said they warned him of trespassing laws and advised him to leave campus.

Tempe police report

Tempe police reported the following incidents for the period ending midnight Tuesday:

•An officer was dispatched Oct. 19 to investigate a family dispute and hot water fight, police said.

The argument began when a woman at the residence, 1865 E. Broadway Road, refused to make a cup of coffee for her husband.

The man made his own drink, but then threw most of it on his wife, allegedly scalding her leg.

The woman later threw warm water at her husband, and stained a freshly varnished table he was working on in the process.

The man responded by pouring varnish in her hair.

She later had to cut off several inches of hair because of the damage done by the varnish.

The woman told police she would aid in prosecution.

•A Marcos De Niza High School student was cited for disorderly conduct Oct. 19 for threatening four other students with an ax, police said.

The student said he was confronted by several persons who were harassing him while he sat in the drivers side of a truck.

The people dispersed when he got out of the truck holding a "medieval battle ax," police said.

The student allegedly said "you got four guys and this makes it equal."

Police charged the man with recklessly displaying a dangerous instrument and confiscated the weapon.

•A man entered the Circle K Convenience Market, 802 S. Hardy, and robbed a cashier at gunpoint Oct. 19, police said.

The man showed the cashier a .45-caliber handgun in his waistband, demanded the money out of the register, said "see you later," and fled the scene on foot.

Police describe the man as Caucasian, 5-foot-9, 150 pounds, 28 years old, wearing a shoulder length black wig and Levis.

The man escaped with $30.

•Unknown persons entered the 9th and Ash restaurant, 850 S. Ash Street, and removed 40 bottles of wine and liquor from the bar Oct. 19, police said.

Police discovered marks on the lower part of a service window frame and determined that it had been pried open.

The alcohol is valued at $400.

•Police said unknown persons entered Church's Chicken, 1102 E. Baseline Road, by breaking the drive-thru window Oct. 19.

The manager of the restaurant arrived for work to discover the floor safe had been opened and $1,007 removed.

The man reportedly "grabbed" the officer in the men's bathroom at Papago Park with the intent of inviting him to have sex.

Babbitt to join law firm's Phoenix branch after term expires

By The Associated Press

PHOENIX — Democratic Gov. Bruce Babbitt, who is exploring a possible presidential bid, will join the Washington law firm of Steptoe & Johnson when his term expires in January, the firm announced Tuesday.

Babbitt "is expected to maintain a strong presence in Washington," according to a Steptoe & Johnson statement released by the governor's office.

Babbitt also will work out of an office the firm plans to establish in Phoenix, said

Steptoe & Johnson Chairman James Holden.

"He has the capacity to attract significant business in Phoenix," Holden said. "That's why he's of substantial interest to us." He did not say what Babbitt will be paid.

The governor was not available for comment because he was in New Hampshire Tuesday evening to appear in a panel discussion at Dartmouth College, an aide said.

Holden said he would not discourage Babbitt from pursuing his presidential ambitions, adding, "He's running a state now and campaigning, and we hope that he can practice law and campaign too."

Holden said his firm concentrates on general corporate practice and that the bulk of its current cases in the Phoenix area involve government contracts. He would not name any of the firm's clients.

He said the Phoenix office would be the first branch established by his firm, adding, "We view it as a growing, interesting, attractive area" that does not have too many lawyers.

Babbitt, a 1965 graduate of Harvard Law

School, was a Phoenix lawyer until he was elected state attorney general in 1974.

Babbitt announced early in 1985 that he would not seek a third term, and he has traveled extensively — particularly in Iowa and New Hampshire — to test the waters for a possible Democratic presidential campaign.

Steptoe & Johnson said it would open its Phoenix office on Jan. 1 and Babbitt will join the firm on Jan. 6, the day after the new governor is inaugurated.

Transmissions inconclusive in Cerritos crash

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — A recording of cockpit conversations provides no indication that the pilot of a Mexican airliner that collided with a small plane near Los Angeles ever saw the smaller aircraft, a federal safety investigator said Tuesday.

But National Transportation Safety Board member John Lauber also said in an interview that the tape has "huge gaps" because of crash damage, and said that some exchanges between the two pilots may have been lost.

"There's no indication (in the tape recording) that they saw anything (unusual) at all," Lauber said. But he added that because of the tape damage, the board cannot "determine definitely" whether the pilots might have momentarily been aware of the other aircraft, a single-engine Piper PA-28.

Transcripts of the cockpit voice recorder tape, information from the Aeromexico DC-9's flight data recorder and other documents from the investigation into the Labor Day weekend accident are to be made public by the board late next week.

Lauber headed the NTSB investigation into the collision Aug. 30 over Cerritos, Calif., in which at least 82 people were killed, including all 64 aboard the jetliner and three in the Piper plane. At least 15 people were killed on the ground when the jetliner fell into a residential neighborhood.

The small, private plane flew without authorization into restricted airspace and collided with the jetliner at about 6,500 feet as the Mexican plane was making an approach to Los Angeles International Airport.

Investigators had said previously that the small plane apparently struck the tail section of the DC-9, severing the plane's horizontal stabilizer. A plane cannot be controlled without the stabilizer.

Lauber said investigators had obtained "some useful information" from the cockpit voice recorder. He did not elaborate. The recorder uses a continuous reel tape to provide a 30-minute record of cockpit conversations and noises in the cockpit.

The other "black box," which houses the flight data recorder, was less heavily damaged.

The flight data recorder provides information about the plane's heading, airspeed, altitude and vertical movement.

Pair cited for 33 counts of neglect at horse farm

By The Associated Press

TUCSON — In the first use of Pima County's new animal-cruelty ordinance, authorities confiscated 11 Peruvian horses Tuesday and cited their owners, an Avra Valley couple, for 33 instances of neglect.

Animal-control officers, accompanied by sheriff's deputies and state livestock officers, seized the horses at the 40-acre Wooden Shoe Ranch, where officials said the animals had been grazing on "bunch grass" with little nutritional value.

The owners, Robert and Charlotte Holland, were cited on misdemeanor charges of cruelty and neglect, and Charlotte Holland also was arrested on suspicion of aggravated assault on a police officer after what officials described as a scuffle with an animal control officer and a deputy.

Denis Viri, operations manager for Pima Animal Control Center, said the Hollands have five days to appear in Justice Court to argue their right to keep the horses. If they lose, the county will auction the horses, and the Hollands could lose the right to own animals for up to three years, Viri said.

The Hollands were cited on three counts for each animal. Each of the 33 counts carries a possible $1,000 fine and six-month jail term.

The Board of Supervisors approved an ordinance last month giving animal-control officers the authority to enforce cruelty laws that only sheriff's deputies previously were allowed to enforce. Viri said the case was the first for county animal-control officers.

The Hollands apparently were breeding the Peruvian Pasos horses for sale, said animal-control officer Phyllis Ness, who also raises Peruvian horses.

Ness said the Hollands had been unemployed since March and could not afford hay.

"Instead of starving them quickly, they were starving them slowly," Ness said.

Group claims responsibility for U.S. writer's kidnapping

By The Associated Press
 BEIRUT, Lebanon — An underground group said Tuesday it had kidnapped an American writer of children's books, claiming the long-time resident of Beirut was a spy for the United States and Israel.
 A handwritten statement in Arabic purportedly from the Revolutionary Justice Organization said it had abducted Edward Austin Tracy, 55, of Rutland, Vt., one of a few Americans who stayed in Moslem west Beirut despite the kidnapping of 60 foreigners there since January 1984.
 Seven Americans are among the 20 kidnapped foreigners who still are missing in Lebanon. The Revolutionary Justice Organization, which is believed made up of Shiite Moslems loyal to Iran, earlier claimed to have kidnapped another of the seven Americans and three Frenchmen.
 Tuesday's brief statement was delivered to a Western news agency in west Beirut. It did not say where or when Tracy was kidnapped.

 State-run Beirut radio quoted police sources it did not identify as saying he disappeared Friday.
 Accompanying the Revolutionary Justice statement was a color photograph of Tracy showing him from the waist up with a rough beard and wearing a blue shirt. He stared dully at the camera.
 A photocopy of the first page of his American passport, also sent with the statement, gave his birth date as Nov. 20, 1930.
 A U.S. Embassy spokesman said he could not confirm Tracy had been abducted, but added: "There is a guy by the name of Edward Tracy from Rutland, Vt., who was born in 1930. Our latest information is that he has lived in west Beirut lately, but we haven't heard of him lately."

Hang gliding reporter tests winds of perspective

By BENNY McCONNELL
State Press

"And for God's sake, keep the nose of that hang glider down and don't stall!"

Those are few words of comfort before the oncoming rush of adrenalin permeates through the body and sends the staunch legs running, with the wings of the monstrous kite level and its nose slightly positive (slightly above eye level).

The anticipation of flight and death sends both halves of the brain into fanciful excitement.

That is how one might describe the beginning experience of hang gliding — the sport professionals make look easy on TV as they plunge off some 2,000-foot cliff overlooking the deep, deep ocean. It's common knowledge to them to keep their noses slightly positive.

This reporter and a companion tossed pragmatism aside, and signed up with Arizona Windsports Saturday to be educated and enlightened on the mysteries of angle of attack, convection and the fear of serious injury.

Doug Gordon, an Arizona Windsports instructor, takes beginners through a maze of dirt and gravel roads past government-built houses for the poor, past Harold's bar in Maricopa Township, to a 30-foot man-made hill about 40 miles south of Tempe resembling "the only nipple in the middle of the desert."

A sometimes light, other times whipping, wind was "perfect" throughout the afternoon, according to the evenly tanned and balding Gordon.

Our Rogallo-wing hang gliders, named after the inventor, retired NASA engineer Francis M. Rogallo, are unlicensed, heavier-than-air, fixed-wing gliders. They are "capable of being carried, foot-launched and landed solely by the energy and use of the pilot's legs," according to Hang Gliding Manual.

The first noticeable thing about hang gliders is they're bigger than one would expect. And a lot heavier.

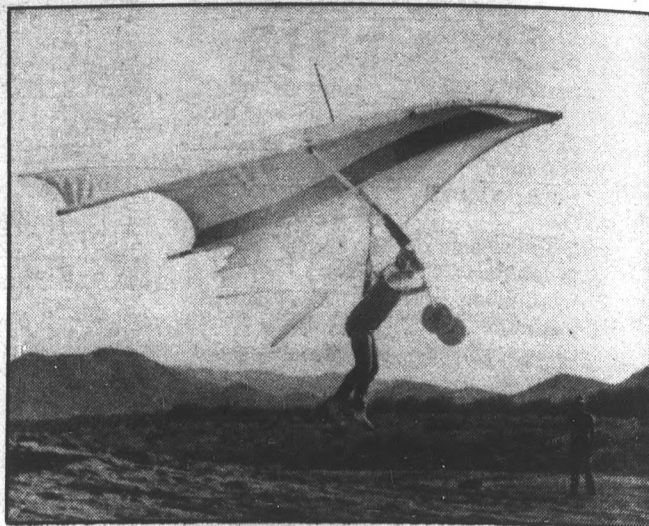

Lugging 45 to 50 pounds on one's shoulders might not seem much to the average football player, but when a skinny, 160-pound writer fights air that's trying to lift a 20-foot wingspan, the sport becomes much more tiresome.

By long practise the management of a flying machine should become as instinctive as the balancing movements a man unconsciously employs with every step in walking, but in the early days it is easy to make blunders. — Wilbur Wright.

The first moments of being airborne in a hang glider are so fleeting when learning this "practised" sport that few words are able to describe the sensation. Except, "Awright!"

For the rest of the afternoon, the group, divided into pairs (except my group, we had three people) hastily improved keeping wings level and noses slightly positive, after everyone showed off a Pete Rose landing — a head-first belly-flop.

Gordon possessed an uncanny ability to predict wind. He was able to see the swaying of trees and bushes 100 yards away that indicated a gust of wind was traveling a jet

With Arizona Windsports instructor Doug Gordon barking instructions through a megaphone, reporter McConnell glides down the 30-foot training hill about 40 miles south of Tempe.

stream along the ground and up the 30-foot training hill. Gordon would holler through his megaphone, "Hold up, we've got a big gust coming."

Sure enough, 15 seconds later a stiff breeze would whip through, making wings unlevel and noses over-positive.

And on my last flight of Saturday afternoon, I was the one who revved up from the top of the 30-foot hill, quickly gained the necessary ground speed, vaulted into the stiff headwind and gained a record-breaking, death-defying altitude.

Typical of my lagging athletic ability, I didn't keep the damn nose down enough and stalled straight into the desert floor.

Dangling from the kite's harness, I hung stunned, thinking I had at least broken my arm at the elbow and done irreparable damage to my already cartilage-torn knee.

But that ol' football coach axiom, "get up and shake off, kid" diluted my supposed injuries and had me on my feet, proud and embarrassed.

Proud I had soared the highest (I think) of all the other beginners learning the sport Saturday afternoon, and actually had a perspective of altitude.

Embarrassed I might have been the first injury to mar Gordon's two and one-half year, injury-free flight school.

This rush of controlled flight, without aid of an engine, actually turns out to be a physically demanding sport, as evidenced by the hunched over body I have been living with the past three days.

Gina Wickey, a pre-law freshman, whips over to the pay phone in the corridor of University Towers, a private residence hall, and punches out the numbers of her calling card. Her eyes spring wide open and dart upward. The commotion on the floors above her is too unreal.

She taps her foot and frantically runs her fingers through her hair. Wickey's face lights up as the person she's calling — her sister Gloria at Sioux City, Iowa's Morningside College — picks up the receiver.

"You're never going to believe this . . ." LIGHTS. CAMERA. ACTION.

Panning up to the sixth floor, Sharon Maller, a sophomore accounting major, turns to her roommate, Heather Kingery, and says, "Well I guess we're not doing our homework today."

Zooming down to the fourth floor, "Campus Man" producer Peggy Fowler looks content as she witnesses the embryonic stage of what could be a box office firecracker. One floor below her, actress Kathleen Wilhoite grins and starts singing while a busy production crew gets ready for another take.

On Monday, RKO Pictures strolled into University Towers and turned the glossy, art deco dorm into a mini movie studio. At last "Campus Man" began filming. Within hours residents flocked — some with cameras in hand — to the balconies to watch.

"Everything seems to be going rather smoothly," Fowler said, grabbing a quick look at John Dye and Wilhoite (Todd and Mollie in the movie). "(University Towers) is definitely interesting. It's better than most locations."

The film is directed by Ron Casden and co-produced by Jon Landau. It also stars Morgan Fairchild, Kim Delaney, Miles

O'Keefe and Steve Lyon. It is based on the true story of the evolution of "Campus Men USA," an all-male pinup calendar that received national media hype in 1983.

Now the hoopla is back, and RKO plans to take the University on a cinematic joy ride for the next eight weeks.

"I get to walk through the halls — about six times," said Joni Clark, a junior business major who was hired as an extra for the project. Clark had the opportunity to walk down the dormitory's corridors at selected intervals.

About the bright pink and blue "Marvelous Marvin" sweatshirt she was wearing, Clark laughed and said, "It's my roommate's sweatshirt. She's like, 'Wear it so my shirt could be on film.'"

One of Monday's scenes had the characters of Todd and Mollie on the third and fourth floors, arguing with each other about marketing a pinup calendar. During the lunch break, Dye and Wilhoite joked with each other as they ate broiled chicken catered by Cinema Edibles.

"We've only known each other for two weeks, but we're very compatible," Dye said of his costar.

"He likes me because I do his laundry," Wilhoite joked while licking her greasy fingers.

Dye laughed loudly, "I do not," he said and the two of them grabbed each others hands and giggled.

About his character, Dye said confidently, "Todd is an entrepreneur; he's very business-oriented."

Wilhoite smirked beside him. "God, I hate people like me," she said playfully with the intent to reveal some dirt on Dye. "Last night he told me, 'Kathleen, I'm not that insecure . . .'"

Dye cut her off, "I did not say that." Dye may be best remembered for his role of Jason (the guy who got Molly pregnant) in "The Young and the Restless." About

ASU's palmy atmosphere, he said, "I went to a school that was in a city, I had an English class on the 14th floor — this place is like a resort."

Wilhoite, who has appeared in "Murphy's Law" with Charles Bronson, offered a broad grin as she talked about Santa Barbara and the University of California, the college she attended.

"If a city was an animal, Santa Barbara would be a poodle — it's strange," she said. "But every kid I've seen (here) could come right off the U of C campus."

Then she was off talking about something else — Dye, of course.

"Oh, remember those Ken dolls? You know the size of Ken's ankles?" she said and pointed toward her costar with a huge grin.

"His ankles, look! They're the same size as his (Ken's) ankles."

Dye proved it by bringing his knees to his chest, his bright yellow sneakers dangling loosely. "I have no ligaments," he said.

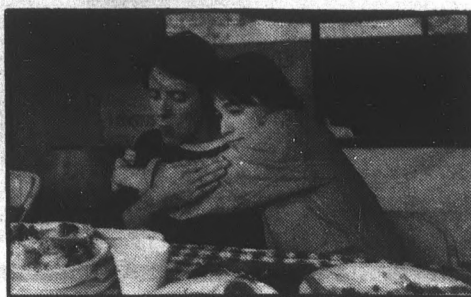

"Yeah, then he says to me, 'Kathleen, you know how leg warmers are supposed to bunch up around your ankles? Well yours fit.'"

When his stand-in, Nicholas Sturm, is mentioned, Dye rolled his eyes and playfully said, "That's my stand-in. He's like 'muscles' and I'm . . ."

"Oh," Wilhoite blasted out. "And just last night he's telling me — I quote again — 'Kathleen, I'm not insecure at all.'"

After lunch, Bill Twinem, a Tempe policeman, gawked at Wilhoite and Dye joking up on the balconies above him.

"Another day, another dollar," he said with a smile. "It's interesting though. But they misled me. I thought Morgan Fairchild was going to be here today."

Hang gliding reporter tests winds of perspective

By BENNY McCONNELL
State Press

"And for God's sake, keep the nose of that hang glider down and don't stall!"

Those are few words of comfort before the oncoming rush of adrenaline permeates through the body and sends the staunch legs running, with the wings of the monstrous kite level and its nose slightly positive (slightly above eye level).

The anticipation of flight and death sends both halves of the brain into fanciful excitement.

That is how one might describe the beginning experience of hang gliding — the sport professionals make look easy on TV as they plunge off some 2,000-foot cliff overlooking the deep, deep ocean. It's common knowledge to them to keep their noses slightly positive.

This reporter and a companion tossed pragmatism aside, and signed up with Arizona Windsports Saturday to be educated and enlightened on the mysteries of angle of attack, convection and the fear of serious injury.

Doug Gordon, an Arizona Windsports instructor, takes beginners through a maze of dirt and gravel roads past government-built houses for the poor, past Harold's bar in Maricopa Township, to a 30-foot man-made hill about 40 miles south of Tempe resembling "the only nipple in the middle of the desert."

A sometimes light, other times whipping, wind was "perfect" throughout the afternoon, according to the evenly tanned and balding Gordon.

Our Rogallo-wing hang gliders, named after the inventor, retired NASA engineer Francis M. Rogallo, are unlicensed, heavier-than-air, fixed-wing gliders. They are "capable of being carried, foot-launched and landed solely by the energy and use of the pilot's legs," according to Hang Gliding Manual.

The first noticeable thing about hang gliders is they're bigger than one would expect. And a lot heavier.

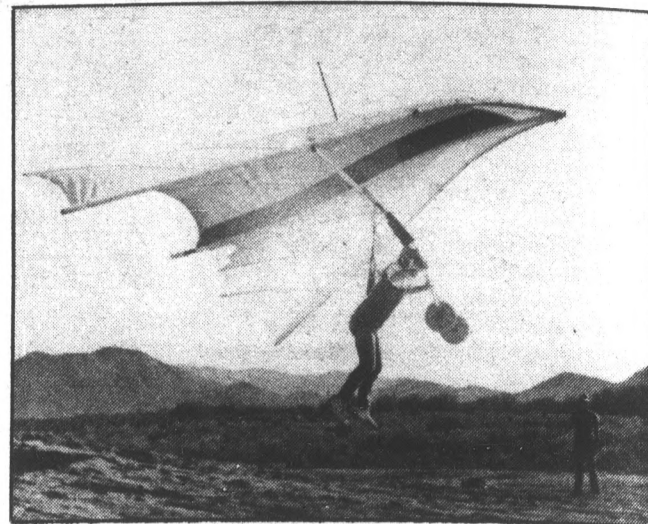

Lugging 45 to 50 pounds on one's shoulders might not seem much to the average football player, but when a skinny, 160-pound writer fights air that's trying to lift a 20-foot wingspan, the sport becomes much more tiresome.

By long practise the management of a flying machine should become as instinctive as the balancing movements a man unconsciously employs with every step in walking, but in the early days it is easy to make blunders. — Wilbur Wright.

The first moments of being airborne in a hang glider are so fleeting when learning this "practised" sport that few words are able to describe the sensation. Except, "Awright!"

For the rest of the afternoon, the group, divided into pairs (except my group, we had three people) hastily improved keeping wings level and noses slightly positive, after everyone showed off a Pete Rose landing — a head-first belly-flop.

Gordon possessed an uncanny ability to predict wind. He was able to see the swaying of trees and bushes 100 yards away that indicated a gust of wind was traveling a jet stream along the ground and up the 30-foot training hill. Gordon would holler through his megaphone, "Hold up, we've got a big gust coming."

Sure enough, 15 seconds later a stiff breeze would whip through, making wings unlevel and noses over-positive.

And on my last flight of Saturday afternoon, I was the one who revved up from the top of the 30-foot hill, quickly gained the necessary ground speed, vaulted into the stiff headwind and gained a record-breaking, death-defying altitude.

Typical of my lagging athletic ability, I didn't keep the damn nose down enough and stalled straight into the desert floor.

Dangling from the kite's harness, I hung stunned, thinking I had at least broken my arm at the elbow and done irreparable damage to my already cartilage-torn knee.

But that ol' football coach axiom, "get up and shake off, kid" diluted my supposed injuries and had me on my feet, proud and embarrassed.

Proud I had soared the highest (I think) of all the other beginners learning the sport Saturday afternoon, and actually had a perspective of altitude.

Embarrassed I might have been the first injury to mar Gordon's two and one-half year, injury-free flight school.

This rush of controlled flight, without aid of an engine, actually turns out to be a physically demanding sport, as evidenced by the hunched over body I have been living with the past three days.

ASU's palmy atmosphere, he said, "I went to a school that was in a city, I had an English class on the 14th floor — this place is like a resort."

Wilhoite, who has appeared in "Murphy's Law" with Charles Bronson, offered a broad grin as she talked about Santa Barbara and the University of California, the college she attended.

"If a city was an animal, Santa Barbara would be a poodle — it's strange," she said.

"But every kid I've seen (here) could come right off the U of C campus."

Then she was off talking about something else — Dye, of course.

"Oh, remember those Ken dolls? You know the size of Ken's ankles?" she said and pointed toward her costar with a huge grin.

"His ankles, look! They're the same size as his (Ken's) ankles."

Dye proved it by bringing his knees to his chest, his bright yellow sneakers dangling loosely. "I have no ligaments," he said.

"Yeah, then he says to me, 'Kathleen, you know how leg warmers are supposed to bunch up around your ankles? Well yours fit.'"

When his stand-in, Nicholas Sturm, is mentioned, Dye rolled his eyes and playfully said, "That's my stand-in. He's like 'muscles' and I'm..."

"Oh," Wilhoite blasted out. "And just last night he's telling me — I quote again — 'Kathleen, I'm not insecure at all.'"

After lunch, Bill Twinem, a Tempe policeman, gawked at Wilhoite and Dye joking up on the balconies above him.

"Another day, another dollar," he said with a smile. "It's interesting though. But they misled me. I thought Morgan Fairchild was going to be here today."

illusion is reality and how they are the same thing after all. "Around the set we say the play is about the reality of appearance and the appearance of reality," Richter said. "It seems reality is a general end-all answer that applies to everyone in the same way. The play shows it's not true; one reality has a lot of definitions."

The play also examines the way we validate or invalidate each other's roles. "We wouldn't have cops or judges if we didn't have thieves," Richter explained.

In the play Richter plays the woman who is responsible for perpetuating men's fantasies. Although she knew she couldn't play Emily from "Our Town" forever, for this role she said she "could use a lot more life experience."

"I need 10 or 20 more years," she said. "I've had to get into her psyche and find what are her motivations."

In her three years at ASU, Richter has had leading roles in several University productions including "She Stoops to Conquer," "Vieuxcarre," "Cabaret" and "Anything Goes."

Richter said these roles have taught her valuable lessons. "I've grown inside," she said. "I can allow people to see more — showing ugliness and extreme joys."

"I'm involved in experimenting with sides of myself that I don't see, but that experts say are innate, and seeing how much I can bring out."

Richter, originally a music major, said theater has "fleshed out" her life.

"There's no upwardly mobile profit philosophy behind it," she said. "It's something from inside you longing to get out."

Richter plans to let that something loose when she takes her show on success' bittersweet road via New York.

"I want to test my mettle, my inner strength, inner viciousness," she said. "I have to find out if I have the stuff."

Like most budding artists, Richter wants to be in pictures. "You have to set your goals high to find out how far you can go," she said. "(Fame) is the gravy. So long as I'm always acting, that will be enough."

"Then again, I might freak and become a marine biologist."

The show runs through Nov. 2 at Drama City on University Drive, east of Myrtle. The theater will be dark on Monday Oct. 27. Curtain time is 8 p.m. except Sundays, when the curtain rises at 2 p.m.

Tickets for the show at $5, $4 for faculty and staff and $3 for students, are available a Gammage and Dillard's box offices and at the door. For more information call 965-3434.

Shrieks of delight fill haunted house

By CARRI L. MITCHELL
State Press

The large, dimly lit building sits on the side of the dark, curving road surrounded only by vacant fields and old, abandoned shacks. Terrified screams from inside shatter the serenity of the night.

No, this is not the screenplay from the latest slash 'em movie but a typical night at John LaVoie's Haunted Mansion.

The Haunted Mansion, located at 5555 E. Van Buren in what was once the old Wax Museum and before that the original Phoenix Zoo, has 32 rooms and more than 11 live skits running continuously.

LaVoie, owner of a commercial brokerage, said he began creating haunted houses three years ago in Tucson. The first house was set up in a 70-year-old, abandoned funeral home. The Tucson Haunted Mansion is currently located in a 50-year-old drug store.

LaVoie wanted to begin a haunted house in Phoenix last year but was unable to secure a building for it. He said the site of this year's house was chosen because of the building's size and secluded location.

Campus radio celebrates 4 years

By RODERICK HARRINGTON
State Press

Arizona State's carrier-current radio station, KASR, is celebrating its fourth anniversary with an extra push to gain recognition on campus, the station's program director said.

Abra White said the celebration centers on several themes, the foremost being the station's tenacity.

"We are celebrating the ability to survive the past four years," White said. "We were once kicked off our frequency and have had to alter our music a little over the past four years as well."

KASR's "modern music," news and sports can be heard in University residence halls through its carrier-current, 660 AM. Currently the station broadcasts from 9 a.m. to midnight, seven days a week, White said.

"The station started out with only about six people," White said. "We currently have over 40 who work in a variety of areas."

White said the station is trying to let students know ASU does have a campus radio station. Tools of promotion include becoming more involved with the school, broadcasting ASU home football games live and becoming more in tune with students on campus.

"We did an extensive survey last year and found that the people who had heard us liked us," White said. Many students, however, are unaware of the station's location, she said.

The radio station became involved in a national talent search for the best "new music" bands earlier in the year in conjunction with Epic Records and the College Music Journal magazine.

KASR was asked to participate as the first Arizona college radio station. The staff has become involved with a similar talent search for MCA records, White said.

"We picked our top 10 bands from over 120 entries from throughout the state," White said. "We picked the top band and then sent a tape of all 10 to Epic records."

The top 10 groups locally were nominated along with groups from 150 other college radio stations located across the country. Epic will then choose their top 10 groups and release a compilation album featuring the groups and their music, White said.

— Abra White

KASR picked Liquid Visual, a two-piece computer-enhanced group, as the top local band for the Epic contest, White said.

Another Phoenix group, Undertow, was tabbed as best local "new music" band for the MCA contest. Original songs were sent to MCA from other local groups such as Chuck Hall and the Brick Wall, Jagged Rocks, Dead Horsebeat and the Elevators, White said.

White added that aside from national contests, KASR remains a training ground for broadcast students at ASU. But it should not be taken for granted, she said.

"A lot of people think that because they get 'A's in their classes, they will find work after graduation," she said. "They can't find work if they don't work at KASR, Channel 8 or the State Press while going to school."

White explained that KASR is built on two foundations, the listeners and what they want, and the training of broadcast students at the University.

"We want to become more involved with the University," White said. "We are planning a float for homecoming and some other activities."

White said future plans for the station involve the hope of upping their power and possibly getting on the FM dial. For now, she said, they want to do everything they can to make ASU aware of its own campus radio station.

"We are constantly promoting the station. We play modern music, have news, sports and offer an important service not only to broadcast students but to dorm students as well," White said.

Haunted

"It's the perfect size. And the atmosphere is good. It is all mood," he said.

The 30-minute journey through the Phoenix Haunted Mansion took 3,000 hours to assemble and 60 employees to run. LaVoie said putting together the new house was complicated because of all the details.

"The first night (the house was open) it wasn't that good," he said. But with the kinks worked out, LaVoie said he is pleased with the effects in the house.

Rooms inside the mansion include the Psycho Bathroom, Jason's Cabin and the Dark Maze of Terror. The maze is a confusing labyrinth where monsters appear from nowhere to complicate escape.

Among the houses' ingenious characters is a Viking/Gladiator wearing plastic armor, a spiked headpiece, and wielding a long sword. The imposing Gladiator plays the part brilliantly, scaring everyone in his path.

Another character in the mansion is Medusa, the mythological snake-haired woman who turns people to stone. In the mansion, she hides in the shadows jumping out and screaming at the top of her lungs. This is guaranteed to shatter a person's reserve along with his ear drums.

Outside the mansion, near the exit, sits an eerie looking organist playing spooky songs on his synthesizer.

'You come out of the house and meet the people that you've been grabbing onto inside.'

—Fran Moyza

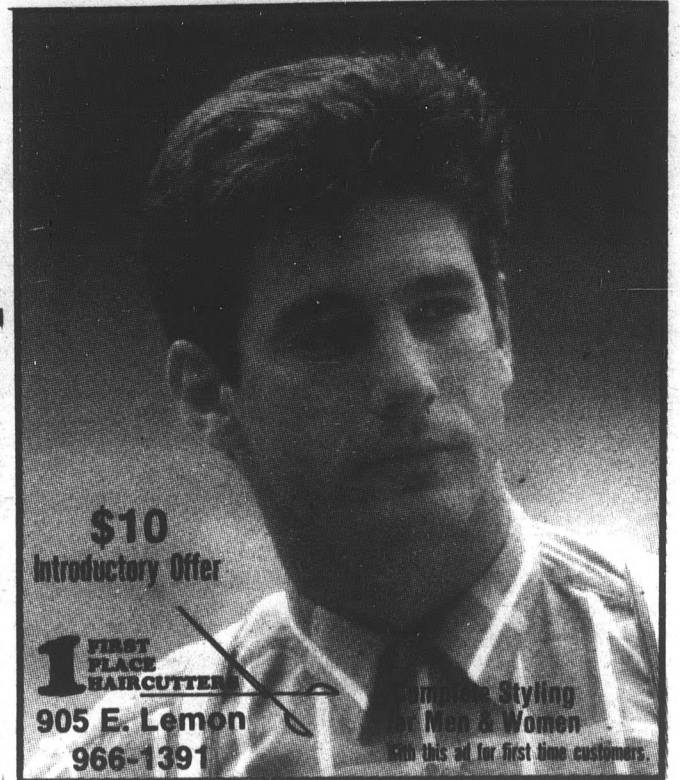

Outside, soft drinks and snacks are available along with Halloween paraphernalia like glow-in-the-dark skull earrings, T-shirts and buttons.

Fran Moyza, a publicist for the mansion, said, "The people (going through the mansion with you) screaming is what scares you. You come out of the house and meet people that you've been grabbing onto inside."

In the last two years, $30,000 of the proceeds have been donated to Arizona Charities, LaVoie said. This year partial proceeds from both mansions will be donated to the Easter Seals Society.

"I don't know what is in all of us that we liked to be scared, but the public just loves it," LaVoie said.

The Haunted Mansion will be operating until Nov. 2. Hours for the mansion are Sunday through Thursday 6 p.m. to midnight and Friday and Saturday 6 p.m. to 3 a.m. Halloween night hours are 5 p.m. to 3 a.m. Tickets are $4.50, $3.50 for children.

Spikers to face Brigham Young with eyes open

By STEVE BRENNAN
State Press

As the halfway point for the 1986 season approaches, the ninth-ranked ASU volleyball team must face one of its toughest challenges in the form of a third-ranked and powerful Brigham Young team Thursday night in Provo, Utah.

The Cougars, led by Saari Virtanen and Mariliisa Salmi, both Finnish National team members, have opened eyes this season with a 23-2 record and a surprising victory at the UCLA National Invitational tournament, attended by five of the top-10 teams in the nation.

ASU coach Debbie Brown describes them as a tall and physically strong team.

"They are a very large team," Brown said. "They have one player who is 6-3 and other players around six feet. They hit the ball hard and block hard."

The Sun Devils, who are 16-2 and riding on a seven-game winning streak, faced a similar challenge early in the season against Nebraska, who later defeated BYU, and came out in the win column.

"We play better when we are the underdog," Brown said. "It is easier to get up for a match when you are not expected to win. We had one of our best practices of the year (Monday), and the girls are really fired up."

BYU coach Elaine Michaelis said her team is playing as well as they could be at this point.

"I think we are playing as well as we need to be against the type of competition we've had," she said.

Michaelis said the UCLA tournament victory was an exciting experience for her.

"I was very excited about the tournament," she said. "We showed good endurance and proved we are able to play with the best."

ASU is a well-rounded and solid team, Michaelis said.

"They are a very nice team," she said. "I think they are certainly one of the strongest teams in the country. They are among 10 or 12 teams that have a good chance of being in the final four, and we should have an opportunity to meet them in the regionals."

"They are fundamentally sound, and a good all-around team. Their personnel is well-trained and I don't expect to see a part of their game that is weak," she said.

Brown said the Sun Devils must rise to the occasion to beat BYU.

"We will have to play one of our best matches of the season to win," she said. "We are going to have to play a good game as a team."

"We are going to match up with them pretty well. We have to serve tough and make it hard for them to run. We also have to pass very well," she said. "They rely on their setter and two hitters, so we will match Tammy (Webb) against their best hitter and it will be important for Regina (Stahl) to do a good job. But it is more important for us to play well as a team."

Despite a closed match with Washington last Friday, the Sun Devils came together against Washington State and are playing well, Brown said.

Michael Scully/State Press

"After Saturday, we were playing steady," she said. "We are playing well right now, so I am confident going up there."

Though it will be a non-conference match, the meeting will have bearing on the organization of postseason bids for both teams.

"It will have an effect on the seeding for the playoffs," Brown said. "It will be an important match in terms of looking down the road to the end of the season."

The Cougars defeated the Sun Devils last season at home in five games, but Brown said that playing BYU at home is difficult because of the nature of the field house in Provo.

"Their gym floor is different," she said. "The area where the coaches are is almost like a dugout because it is lower than the court. It takes a little getting used to."

Following the match in Provo, the Sun Devils will travel to Corvallis, Ore., to play Oregon State Friday night, and to Eugene Saturday night for a match against the Oregon Ducks. ASU defeated both teams earlier in the season in five-game matches.

"The next few weeks are going to be really tough for us," Brown said. "If we can win against BYU it will give us a little momentum going into the Oregon and Oregon State matches and when we come back and play UCLA (Oct. 31)."

ASU-UA outcome could be a moot point

51,952 REFUNDS?

A funny thing happened on the plane ride home from LA Saturday.

The flight was filled with Sun Devil fans taking full advantage of the free cocktails on board. Those little bottles of Tanqueray are just a classic.

Anyway, people were talking about the effect of ASU's win on the Pac-10 race, and someone pointed out that the UA game might just become immaterial, if ASU remains undefeated and UA, UCLA and Stanford each acquire another loss.

Somebody else had the perfect response: "If that happens, we oughta just write 'em a letter and tell 'em we ain't coming."

It might just look something like this:

Dear Larry:

We regret to inform you that, since we are undefeated and have already clinched the Pac-10 title, we feel it is in our best interest to avoid the risk of injury that goes along with our season-finale game against your Wildcats Nov. 22 in Tucson.

Our players have had a successful but long season. An extra week for them to rest could make the difference between winning the Rose Bowl and losing to Michigan.

We are aware that this schedule change will require you to refund the purchase price for all the tickets purchased for this game, your only sellout of the season. We deeply regret any financial strife this might cause your program, but feel this is the only action consistent with our concern for our own interests.

Bob Heiler
Sports Editor

Sincerely,
The ASU Football Program

Imagine, if you will, the reaction this would provoke from Larry Smith, the man who would regard a 1-10 season as not bad, so long as the win came against the Sun Devils.

Can you say "apoplexy?" I thought you could, even if you don't know what it means.

why this is ridiculous.

Reason No. 1: None of those cities really jump out at you and yell "Basketball."

I mean, who wants to play basketball in Toronto? Who wants to do anything in Minneapolis? St. Paul, maybe — but not Minneapolis. The rumor in Minnesota is that Minneapolis isn't really a twin — it has something to do with test tubes.

And with the NBA's drug problem, I should think they would really rather avoid Miami.

Then again, a Miami team could do a lot for a few players. How about these recruiting prospects: Michael Ray Richardson and John Lucas at guards and Len Bias' ghost in the post.

And how about Orange County? My sports guru tells me that southern California has enough basketball teams and has a hard time supporting all the teams that are already there.

Reason No. 8: The NBA has no business wanting to expand in the first place. There are a lot of teams that just can't compete with the big boys already. Unfortunately some of them get into the playoffs, since almost everybody does.

Reason No. 13: This may seem a bit petty, but I personally think that no athletic association ought to be allowed to expand until Phoenix gets either a baseball team or a football team.

FIRE UP THE SECOND TEAM — THE UTES ARE COMING

Utah is coming to Sun Devil Stadium, and it is not going to be a pretty sight.

The Utes are 0-5 and have lost to such perennial powerhouses as San Diego State, Wyoming and the ever-dreaded New Mexico. The Lobos are rewlly tough this year.

Anyway, this game will present some interesting opportunities. First of all, it presents an opportunity for John Cooper to try out anything he wants, from the wishbone to actually letting Jeff Van Raaphorst throw the ball. It is a near certainty that the Devils will not have a tough time with the Utes no matter what they do.

Secondly, it presents an opportunity for some people to win some big bucks. The Sun Devils, the No. 9 team in the country, are only 24-point favorites over the Utes. Look for some bookies to take a big bath on that one.

Speaking of baths, the Washington Huskies are favored by 25 over Oregon, so if you don't feel like winning money on the Devils, put your bucks on the Ducks. All they have to do is stay in the same stadium, and the bookies get hurt hard and deep.

But nobody ever said that was the safest profession in the world.

Cats ready for Golden Bears

TUCSON (AP) — Arizona football coach Larry Smith said Tuesday his 15th-ranked Wildcats need to shake off their mid-season doldrums as they prepare for Saturday's Pacific 10 Conference game against California.

"I don't see the sharpness that needs to be there, both offensively and defensively," Smith said at his weekly news conference.

"The snap isn't there. This time of the year, mentally, you get a little foggy. You've got to fight your way through it," said Smith, whose Wildcats beat Oregon State 23-12 at home Saturday.

Smith said he is most worried about his team's ability to score touchdowns once it gets deep into enemy territory.

In what Smith called "our 20-30-yard-line debacle," the Wildcats were 0-9 when they tried to pass well inside Oregon State territory last week. Their two touchdowns came on plays of more than 40 yards each.

Too many turnovers, some of them from careless mistakes, were also pointed out by Smith.

"I think it is imperative in every game from here on out that we end up on the plus side of the ledger on turnovers," he said.

Smith said, however, that his team (5-1, 2-1) suffered from few injuries as it prepared to take on California (1-5, 1-3).

"Most of it's just bumps and bruises," he said. "So, injury-wise, I think we came out of the game good."

Smith also chided Arizona sportswriters for grilling California coach Joe Kapp about a postgame locker room incident whereby Kapp allegedly unzipped his pants in response to a reporter's question. The incident was said to have occurred following Cal's 50-18 loss to Washington in Seattle on Oct. 4.

"When something like that happens in sports, everybody's going to jump on it and write about it and drain it dry," Smith said.

During a conference call, Kapp initially responded to reporters' questions by denying the allegation.

But then he added, "I shouldn't have done it. I shouldn't have responded that way."

NBA votes to add 3 teams in 1990

PHOENIX (AP) — The NBA's Board of Governors voted Tuesday to expand by one to three teams, but not before two years from now at the earliest and possibly not until the 1990-91 season.

NBA Commissioner David Stern announced at a news conference that a five-member expansion committee would be formed and would decide on the sites and timetable for expansion, which will be announced next April in New York.

The new teams would be added between the 1988-89 and 1990-91 seasons.

The 23-member pro basketball league last added a new team in 1980, when Dallas was granted a franchise.

"The NBA has reached a point in strength where the next logical step for us is to expand. The vote was unanimous, 23-0," Stern said. "The collective force of the presentations given by six cities here this week put away any doubts that we should not be moving aggressively forward."

Representatives from six cities — Toronto, Minneapolis, Miami, Orlando, Fla., Orange County, Calif., and Charlotte, N.C. — all delivered 30-minute presentations to the board Monday.

Stern said the expansion committee "will meet with each of the six applicants again and with any more (cities) that come forward. I would not be surprised that in the next 60 days, there are not more applicants."

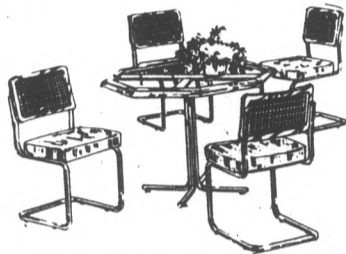

"If they say there is expansion by 1988, everybody will be happy," Schaffel said.

"I think that it's possible," Stern said when asked about the 1988 timetable. "We're really looking for an orderly program for expansion. We have six first-class cities to choose from so far."

Named as chairman of the expansion committee was Richard Bloch, president of the Phoenix Suns. Stern said the other committee members will be William Davidson of the Detroit Pistons, Herb Simon of the Indiana Pacers, Norm Sonju of the Dallas Mavericks and Charlie Thomas of the Houston Rockets.

Miami, Orlando and Minneapolis reportedly are the front-runners in the race to land a franchise.

Fall baseball starts with look toward new

By JAY TAYLOR
State Press

After two consecutive disappointing seasons, ASU baseball coach Jim Brock is looking for things to turn around this year. And he is hoping to get a head start on things during the fall season, which got under way last week.

While the Devils have 20 games scheduled for the fall season, Brock is not concerned about how they do in those games. Well, not terribly concerned, anyway.

"It's not real important to win in the fall," he said. "It's just a lot more fun. If we win I feel better about the club, and the club feels better about itself. There really isn't much difference between a fall record of 15-5 and 19-1.

"But there is a difference between 15-5 and 8-12. What we want to do is have a balanced fall. Anywhere in the 13 to 16 win range will be fine with me."

What Brock and his assistants, hitting coach Jeff Pentland and pitching coach Dub Kilgo, want to do is determine what each of the players is capable of, where they are most comfortable playing and what they need to work on. Brock used Pentland as an example.

"Jeff is a very scientific hitting instructor," Brock said. "In order to improve under him, it takes the players a lot of time to perfect what he wants them to do. In the first place, it takes him a long time to see what he wants to do with a guy's stroke. Then it takes a while for him to get across to the player what he wants him to do, and then the player has to absorb that and have the time to make it work.

"If we didn't have the fall season, we couldn't make those kind of changes because every game in the spring counts toward our chances of going to Omaha (the College World Series), and we have to try to win every game. But in the fall, since these games don't count toward Omaha, we can work on things like that."

What the Devils will be doing this fall is trying to determine where a lot of people will play and let others get used to new positions.

One player learning a new spot is the probable starting second baseman Tim Esmay, who was the Devils' catcher last year. But he injured a finger late in the year and was told he would never be able to catch again.

"Tim is at second now, which is probably the only place he can play in professional baseball," Brock said. "He caught in high school and his first year at Scottsdale Community College. Then he was first team Junior College all-American and Region I player-of-the-year in 1985 at third base, so it's not like this is the first grounder he ever saw.

"He just needs to learn to read the ball, when to charge, and some of the little things that go with playing second base."

ASU baseball coach Jim Brock thinks this year's team will be a factor in the Pac-10 race despite its youth. The Devils are currently playing their fall season.

He doesn't need to learn too much about hitting, as he batted .323 last year with one homer and 31 RBI and 11 doubles.

Another player who is learning a somewhat new spot is third baseman Bob Dombrowski, who played shortstop and second base as a freshman and caught last year. But he had extensive experience at short in high school, when he was AAA Player-of-the-Year at Scottsdale Coronado High.

Brock knows Dombrowski can handle the switch. "He has more than enough tools to play and play well at third base," Brock said. "He has outstanding quickness in his feet and his hands and is a much better athlete than you usually see playing third base."

One player who will be at the same spot as last year is shortstop Mike Benjamin. He is a very steady player who hit .304 with six homers and 32 RBI last year. He will team with Esmay, who is a close friend, up the middle.

According to Brock, he and Esmay could make ASU strong up the middle once they get used to working with each other and become a strong unit.

One infielder who doesn't need much work is first baseman Ted Dyson. But last year's all-Pac-10 selection didn't rest on his laurels in the off season.

"It is amazing the progress he has made in every phase of his game and in his life," Brock said. "He has become an excellent student and a leader of the team as well as a great player. His achilles heel was always his defense, which is why he was always a designated hitter for us in the past.

"But we put him at first last year and he did a real good job. He worked real hard to become a good defensive player, and if he is not the main leader of the team, he's certainly one of them."

In the outfield, the Devils return Dwight Thomas, who hit .303 last year with five homers and 26 RBI, John Finn, who saw limited duty last year and Mike Burrola.

Brock is excited about the potential of the outfielders. "Burrola might have the best physical talent on the team," he said. "He has been plagued by all kinds of strange injuries and illnesses since he has been here, but he has as much potential as anyone, and he has so much talent that if we can keep him healthy, he could really contribute a lot to the team.

"Finn has been moved to center field and we are excited about the progress he has made. He has incredible quickness and a very quick arm. He doesn't have the big cannon, but his throws carry well and get there quick. And with his speed, he can run down a lot of mistakes."

One of the only bona fide power hitters the Devils have is sophomore outfielder Dan Rumsey, who Brock hopes will provide some punch on offense.

With such a young team — only 10 seniors on the 34-man roster — Brock is glad to have the 20 games in the fall for his club to learn what they have to in order to be successful in the fall. And with a good recruiting year under his belt, Brock thinks the Sun Devils may regain their customary place in post-season play.

"Stanford and UCLA, with the pitching they have and what they have back, have to be the front runners in the conference," he said. "Other than that, we have as good a chance as anybody. We should be right in there for third or fourth. But third place gets to go to the tournament and fourth place doesn't, so there is a world of difference there."

Grrr

Sun Devil pitchers have tenacious new look this season

By BOB HEILER
State Press

Nobody tries to take a bone away from a big bulldog.

That may be the task facing opposing batters against the Sun Devils this season, according to newly hired pitching coach Dub Kilgo.

"The thing I like about these guys (Matt Schifler and Linty Ingram) is that they have a bulldog attitude," Kilgo said at practice Tuesday. "They're the kind of guys who are going to go out there and make a team beat them."

Schwabe and Ingram came to ASU largely because Kilgo did, according to head coach Jim Brock. Both had played under him before and came to ASU without being recruited when they found out Kilgo was coming here.

"I'd say the reputation of Arizona State baseball and the fact that someone who had helped their careers and who they wanted to continue learning from was here had a lot to do with (their transfer)," Brock said.

The transfer of those students will help ASU quite a bit, since it gives the squad two more quality pitchers without cutting into its available scholarships, which are still limited by the NCAA as part of penalties imposed for financial aid violations in 1983.

Those penalties kept the team from post-season play in 1984 and have since limited the number of scholarships that ASU can distribute. Instead of the equivalent of 13 full scholarships that other Pac-10 teams receive, Brock has been limited to eight in 1985 and 1986 and will be limited to 11 in 1987 and 1988.

Since his recruiting activity is limited,

"If these guys were not playing baseball, they could probably be playing some other sport."

— Dub Kilgo

Brock is obviously pleased with the package deal of getting a quality pitching coach who brings some of his own talent along with him.

Kilgo was pursued as a possible pitching coach at the end of last season. Tim Kelly, the coach for four years, had left in December to take a job as a pitching coach in the Los Angeles Dodgers farm system. Not wanting to bring in someone new that late in the year, Brock appointed then-junior varsity pitching coach Tom Pratt as the interim coach.

At the end of the season, Brock made a few phone calls.

"The coach at Texas (Cliff Gustafson) is a close friend," Brock said. "I called him and asked him what he would do if something happened to his pitching coach. He said he'd hire Dub Kilgo."

Kilgo used to be the pitching coach at McLennan Community College in Waco, Texas. Brock said that he inquired about him to many other friends in college baseball and heard nothing but good reports.

Kilgo said he has "been made to feel at home" by the coaching staff at ASU.

"I feel like I've never been anywhere else," Kilgo said.

Kilgo also seems at ease with the talent he has on the pitching staff.

"This staff has a lot of depth," he said. "At this point, we're better-than-average all the way down the line.

"What hasn't shown up is a guy who is real dominant."

But that doesn't seem to bother him too much.

"If it stays that way all season, that's OK," Kilgo said. "I don't think we need that kind of dominant pitcher to win."

Although the Devils may not need a pitcher like that, Kilgo thinks that there are several guys on the squad who could develop into that kind of bread-and-butter ace.

"The power pitcher is going to be the only guy who can dominate that way," Kilgo said. "They're the only ones who can just go out there and throw right at the batter.

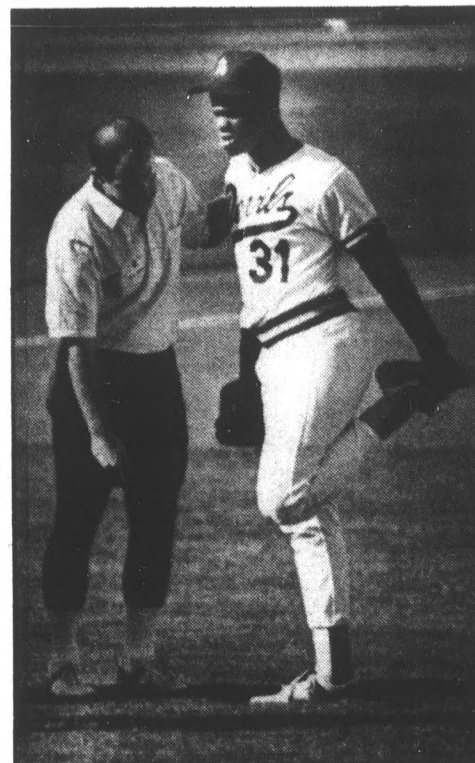

"The finesse pitcher has to try to deceive the hitter."

Kilgo identified Mike Schwabe, Scott Hutson, Gordy Farmer and Schifler as the hurlers who have the arm strength to fill that role.

Kilgo looks forward to coaching the ASU pitching staff because it's big and physical.

"What excites me is that we have a staff full of guys who have a lot of physical ability," Kilgo said. "A lot of times you see pitchers who don't really look like good athletes, but if these guys were not playing baseball, they could probably be playing some other sport."

In fact, the staff has looked so strong that Brock and Kilgo let Royal Clayton, who had the third most innings on the team last year, go.

Staff photo
Pitcher Royal Clayton was cut earlier this season due to a productive recruiting season by the Devil coaching staff.

Clayton compiled a 4-6 record, mostly in relief, last year. But he had a dreadful 6.43 earned run average, which was about in the middle of the pack for ASU and is why it is such a blessing for the team to recruit the pitchers it has.

Sun Devils to work hard in preparation for Utah

By CAROL BOOS
State Press

Although ASU is a 24-point-favorite in this week's match-up against Utah, the Sun Devils are not planning on taking it easy this week during practice. In fact, the Devils worked out in full pads Tuesday in preparation for their first non-conference game in three weeks.

Coach John Cooper said Utah is an unpredictable team, a team they can't afford to let up against now that the destiny of the 1986 Sun Devils is in their own hands.

"They are doing plays that I've never seen before, and I've been coaching 23 years," Cooper told reporters Tuesday at his weekly press luncheon.

And because the Utes are unpredictable, Cooper said the Devils are not concerned with what the Utes are going to do, but with what ASU is going to do.

One thing the Devils are going to do is work on the special teams.

Last week kicker Kent Bostrom missed a field goal attempt. Even though a roughing the kicker penalty, one of four so far this season, gave Bostrom another chance, the Devils are having difficulty placing the ball in the end zone on kickoffs and making vital extra points and field goals.

"We have got to make the extra points and the cinch field goals," Cooper said.

The Utes, on the other hand, may not have the kind of workout that the Devils intend to have this week due to a number of injuries the team has faced. Most of them occurred during the Utes 14-38 loss to Wyoming, Oct. 11.

The Utes have only two original starting players expected to start Saturday.

"We're really banged up," Utah coach Jim Fassel told reporters Tuesday via speakerphone. "We can't afford to go out and hit during practice when we only have two guys in shape, and they are walk-ons."

One key player, Gary Andersen, could prove to be one too many Ute on the injury list. The senior center suffered a knee injury last year against ASU, and it has been a recurring problem since then.

Robby Boyd and teammate stop a USC Trojan last Saturday. The Devils won 29-20.

Michael Scully/State Press

"Anderson being out can really hurt us," Fassel said.

Fassel also said that in comparison to last year's team, the Devils are playing more like a winning team this year. "Both of them scare the devil out of me," Fassel said.

The Devils have met up with the Utes 19 times, 16 in Western Athletic Conference play. ASU is 10-3 at home, 13-6 overall against Utah.

In addition to the disappointment of a 0-5 record, the Utes suffered another setback when a freshman team member died.

"Emotionally, the impact was hard to deal with. Most of the players haven't had to face death yet," Fassel said. "The family was strong and in one aspect, it puts everything in perspective. The kids know you don't know how long you're going to be here, so you do the best you can while you're here."

The Utes may be the underdogs, but they aren't going to go back to Utah without a fight, according to Fassel.

"We are approaching the game to win it," Fassel said. "We're approaching it like this is what we have to do. If we play hard we can win."

Sounds something like the haunting words of Washington State coach Jim Walden.

Hockey club opens season by losing to Phoenix 7-3

By STEVE ADAMS
State Press

Even though it's 80 degrees outside, the Sun Devil ice hockey team has started its new season.

The ASU Ice Hockey Club opened its season Monday in a exhibition match against the Phoenix Roadrunners with a 7-3 loss.

Despite what the score indicates, the game was a lot closer. Dave Cawley, who is the regular goalie, only played the second period because Mark Curtis, sportscaster for KPNX-TV, was appearing as guest goalie.

Curtis proved to be the goalie that broke the hockey team's back. He gave up all seven goals, including five in the third period, three of them coming in two minutes.

The Roadrunners opened the scoring when Lyman Haakstad scored at 14:25 on a beautiful pass from Lyle Dunbar.

The action picked up quite a bit in front of the ASU net during the first period, and in fact the strength of the defense prevented the score from being a complete blowout.

At 5:20 on the first period, the Sun Devils got on the scoreboard when Steve Landreville made a great pass to B.J. LePlante, pulling the goalie out of position and giving LePlante a wide open net to score into.

It appeared as though the period would end tied until, with 47 seconds to play, Dick Ferguson stuffed the puck in and put the Roadrunners up by one goal heading into the second period.

At the start of the second period, Dave Cawley, ASU's regular goalie, came into the game and shut down the offensive line of the Roadrunners, keeping them scoreless in the second period.

Not only did Cawley keep the net shut on scoring opportunities, but it helped to get the Sun Devils back on the right track and brought them out ready to skate and play hockey.

In fact, the lone goal of the second period was scored by ASU.

At 14:34, Dave Peterson put the puck into the net and gave the Sun Devils the comfort of being tied going into the locker room.

The third period brought the return of Curtis at goalie, as well as the return of the Roadrunners' domination of the game.

With 18:35 on the clock, Paul Giacalone brought the puck down the ice and skated around the net; a normally routine play for a goalie when it comes to covering the net.

However, Curtis allowed Giacalone to score, having difficulty maneuvering into a position to guard the goal.

The Roadrunners wasted no time in taking advantage of the poor goaltending when at 16:50, less than two minutes after the first goal, Jim Boyd scored to make the game 4-2 and seemingly to put the game out of the reach of the Sun Devils.

ASU did come back to score one more goal when at 11:19, Scott Buchanan slapped the puck into the net to put the score at 4-3.

The crowd stood on their feet as the Sun Devils kept the pressure on in the Roadrunners' end of the rink. In fact, the Sun Devils had numerous chances to score; but Bruce Bullock, goaltender for the Roadrunners, was up to the test.

Just as it seemed the Sun Devils would tie up the game, the Roadrunners Lyle Dunbar scored at 6:29 to seal ASU's fate.

The Roadrunners scored two more goals to give them a 7-3 victory and an impressive victory over the Sun Devils.

Though the Sun Devils lost the first game, it was only exhibition and will have no effect on the team's chances in the Pacific Intercollegiate Hockey Conference race.

The next home games for the Sun Devils will be Oct. 30 and 31 against USC at the Oceanside Arena.

For more information contact Mike Schwab at 966-4683.

Meanwhile, in intramural news:

•Anybody who is interested in competing in the Team Superstars competition and happens to be in the accounting class that has a test on that Friday evening should not worry. The competition will not interfere with the test, according to Juliette Moore, assistant director of intramurals.

Moore also said that if the ASU-Washington game is played during the day because of television contracts, there will be allowances made so that the competition will not coincide with the game.

•The corec volleyball tournament that was scheduled to take place last Sunday is rescheduled for this Sunday Oct. 26. All the games up to and through the championship game will be played. It is anticipated to run from 10:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m.

Poll predicts Phoenix football franchise

PHOENIX (AP) — Fifty-eight percent of the respondents to a poll on a proposed professional sports stadium here believe Phoenix will have a National Football League franchise within five years, a newspaper said Tuesday.

The Phoenix Gazette said its Market Research Department contacted 800 adults for a poll conducted from Sept. 19-23.

In other results, 76 percent said they favored an NFL franchise in Phoenix, with greatest support among blue-collar workers, men, people under the age of 34 and Phoenix city residents; and 69 percent said they favored a domed stadium.

Mayor Terry Goddard said he thinks the city has a 90 percent chance of landing an NFL team by the 1991 season.

"By all logical implications, we should already have a franchise," he said.

However, Goddard said population and growth aren't the only factors which influence the awarding of franchises. Unpredictable factors include "league politics and the profits of owners," he said.

In August, the city gave exclusive negotiating rights to a group consisting of Martin Stone, owner of Phoenix's minor-league baseball franchise; Kroh Brothers, a Kansas City, Mo.-based development company; and Michael Blumenthal, a San Francisco developer. They have proposed a $150 million multipurpose domed stadium on a City Council-designated site at Seventh Avenue and Jefferson Street.

The Gazette said 41 percent of its poll sample disagreed with the proposed site, but 40 percent favored it and 19 percent had no opinion.

The negotiations are making progress, Goddard said, and a contract should be ready next month.

The city wants to examine every contingency, Goddard said.

"For example, suppose we're awarded a major-league baseball franchise before the NFL makes a decision," he said. In that case, the city would have to decide whether to commission a baseball-only facility or make the developers gamble on a future stadium for baseball and football.

Marc Ganis, who heads the football recruitment effort for the development group, said recent meetings with NFL leaders convinced him the league will not decide on expanding from 28 teams until next summer.

"Phoenix is perceived as one of the top markets," Ganis said. He said he also is pursuing relocation of an existing franchise.
