Unreported rape statistics called 'conservative,' Chief Duncan says

By LAUREN MILLETTE
State Press

Only one in about 25 rapes on campus are ever reported, much lower than the FBI's national estimate, the University's police chief said.

C. Russell Duncan called FBI statistics, which show only one out of every 10 rapes are reported, "conservative."

Only two rapes have been reported at ASU since 1984. "Unfortunately, people just don't report rapes, and students are no exception," Duncan said. "We could be a lot more effective in deterring them if they were reported."

"But since most rapes are by someone the woman knows, the woman usually won't report it because she knows she will probably run into him again sometime on campus."

Tempe Police Officer Steve Crooks said 42 rapes were reported in Tempe between January and October.

"That figure is just what was reported," Crooks said. "We have absolutely no way of knowing how many actually occurred."

"Making a projection about how many rapes there were in Tempe is the most difficult part of the crime to deal with."

"But we do know that of the rapes that were reported it appears that in only slightly less than half of the cases the victim was related to or knew the suspect."

Tempe police rape records show 97 rapes were reported between January 1984 and October 1986.

Duncan said many women accept rape as something they will have to deal with and do not report it because they do not want to appear as the "bad guy" who turns a man into the police.

He said many students deal with the problem with a "well, that's the way it goes" attitude.

But more often, the woman carries the stigma of rape with her for the rest of her life, affecting her marriage, work and relationships with other men, Duncan said.

Lt. Craig Emanuel said University police are certain more rapes occur on campus, but victims have not been coming to law enforcement officials for help.

University Deputy Chief Doug Bartosh said ASU students are not as assertive at reporting crimes as the general public.

"Even with the public's increased awareness of rape through the sensitivity of the courts and television coverage, the change in attitudes toward rape has still not affected the ASU campus," Bartosh said.

About half of the suspects described by rape victims include the father, husband, ex-husband, in-laws, neighbors, boyfriends, employees, roommates and acquaintances of the victim.

Although many people think of rape as the assault-type that happens in parking lots, Crooks said that is not the case.

He said women should keep in mind that rapes are usually planned in advance and happen suddenly so women have to be ready to handle an attack at all times.

Crooks said rapists usually look for two things in a victim: a lack of self-assertiveness and a lack of presence of mind — meaning the woman is not paying attention to her surroundings.

"A woman does not have to look like Bo Derek to be raped," he said. "National crime reports show 4-month-old babies have been raped and so has a 104-year-old woman."

Contrary to what most people believe, the main motive behind rapes is not sexually oriented, Crooks said.

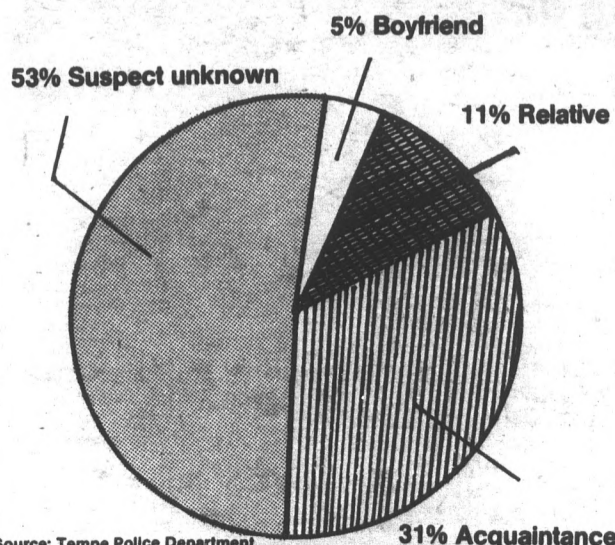

"Most men rape to hurt and humiliate the victim." A woman should develop a plan to protect herself, he said.

The Tempe police department offers seminars to teach women precautionary self-defense against rapists, and ASU Counseling and Consultation offers advice to those who have been raped.

Crooks said: "Women are reluctant to report even a minor suspicion, comment or gesture because they feel we will think it's insignificant or we do not have the time for something that seems trivial. But that's just not so."

"Most people would be surprised to know that it's little tidbits of information from the public that often helps us solve our cases."

ASASU Senate kills bill to add graduate seats

By DARRIN HOSTETLER
State Press

A bill that would have added two representatives from the ASU Graduate College to the Associated Students Senate was defeated Tuesday night after more than an hour of debate.

Although the Senate Government Operations Committee approved the bill Oct. 14 by a 4-1 vote, seven senators voted against the bill during senate deliberations to defeat it.

Supporters of the bill argued that representatives from the Graduate College are necessary because the needs of graduate students are not being met.

Activities Vice President Christine Roth, who co-sponsored Senate Bill 23 with College of Public Programs Sen. Kate Lehman and College of Liberal Arts Sen. Karl Karg, told the Senate that graduate students deserve representation.

"ASU has one of the largest graduate populations in the nation, currently nearing 12,000 students," Roth said. "This is a chance for the senate to add two active and knowledgeable senators to its ranks."

According to the ASASU bylaws, any college that is recognized by the University and has a college council is entitled to senate representatives.

"As far as I can interpret the bylaws and constitution, there is no reason why the graduate students should not have representation," Lehman said. "They are not getting adequate representation, and they should be."

But opponents of the bill claim there are sufficient resources to meet the needs of graduates and that giving two senate seats to graduate students would constitute double representation.

Engineering College Sen. Kevin Anderson said: "I fail to see how (graduate) students have more in common with each other than undergraduates of their own major."

"Graduate students are already represented by their college."

College of Law Sen. Phil Stanfield said graduates have "more potential for input than any other group before us" because there are graduate students in every college.

Several senators also challenged the legitimacy of the bill saying that the Graduate College is merely an administrative body and that it does not operate a real college council.

But Roth disagreed and said the Graduate Student Advisory Board serves as a college council.

Amy Abraham, director of the Graduate Students Association, expressed disappointment at the defeat.

"It is really unfortunate that the senate has chosen to say that they don't recognize the Graduate College as the eleventh college on campus as the administration does," Abraham said. "ASU and the University of Arizona are the only schools in the Pac-10 without graduate students on the student senate."

College of Business Sen. John Columbo, who voted against the bill, said there is nothing stopping the senate from considering postgraduate legislation.

"We should consider matters as they come up, and graduates should feel free to participate in their respective college councils," he said.

Fierce fighting clouds Proposition 103 campaign

Arizona voters will have the opportunity to vote on six propositions in the Nov. 4 general election. This is the third in a four-part series examining the ballot propositions. Today, the State Press examines Proposition 103.

By J.B. SINNOTT
State Press

Far outshading the other five initiatives on the ballot is the hotly contested Proposition 103. Proponents of the proposition say it's a cure for the insurance crisis; opponents say it will make victims suffer even more.

Proposition 103 would change the Arizona constitution to allow the Legislature to set limits on punitive damage and the amount of attorneys' fees that can be paid out of court-awarded damages. It also allows damages to be paid on a payment plan.

Fighting on both sides of the issue has been fierce. Insurance companies, businesses and professionals have been struggling to keep the momentum generated by a strong media drive for the initiative going, while lawyers, Common Cause and Gov. Bruce Babbitt have staged a strong anti-proposition campaign.

Those in favor of the initiative say a yes-vote will help make insurance affordable for businesses, governments and individuals throughout the state.

They say the limits on lawyers' fees coming from damage awards may cut down the number of frivolous suits filed in the state, thus helping unclog the state's judicial system.

The foes of 103 say the insurance crisis has been manufactured by greedy insurance companies wanting to keep their wallets well-padded.

They say a jury of peers is much better qualified to determine damages, and that limits on attorneys' fees will cause many time-consuming or difficult injury cases to be turned down by the lawyers.

A flurry of letters, both for and against the proposition, were received by the secretary of state. A survey of those letters, however, hardly helps straighten out the matter.

It is almost comical to compare the claims made by advocates and detractors of the proposition.

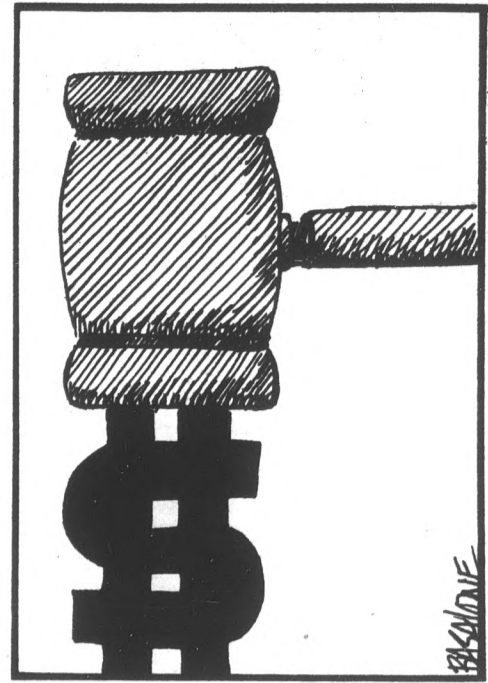

A letter from Neil O. Ward, president of the Arizona Medical Association, is in favor of the proposition because the insurance nightmare has threatened "many leisure activities like horseback riding, Colorado River raft trips — even Little League baseball."

Jim Skelly, chairman of the House Judiciary Committee, disagreed. He said 103 "will negate the fundamental rights which the framers of our Constitution held dear."

Other letters use what seem to be scare tactics to win over voters.

A letter from two members of the Arizona Trial Lawyers Association said 103 "would be a step to return Arizona to the medieval days when power and money determined an individual's rights."

The going has been getting more fierce as the election approaches, and both sides promise to have surprises left in their war chests.

Bill limits court's jurisdiction to ASASU constitution, bylaws

By KERRY FEHR
State Press

ASU students could be forced to settle their disputes against Associated Students in courtrooms off campus instead of the ASASU Supreme Court.

The ASASU Senate approved two measures Tuesday that will limit the jurisdiction of the ASASU Supreme Court.

Senate Bill 19, approved by a 17-1 vote, prohibits the supreme court from "declaring the conduct of the senate . . . unconstitutional based upon interpretation of federal, state or U.S. constitutional law."

College of Law Sen. Phil Stanfield said he favors the bill because "people on the supreme court are not competent to make constitutional questions."

But opponents of the bylaw argue the court will be so limited in deciding grievances students will be forced to hire attorneys and sue in courts outside the University.

The senate also approved a resolution which limits the courts only to use the ASASU constitution and bylaws to make decisions.

In light of the resolution, the senate will not abide by a court ruling made last month.

The court ruled Sept. 18 that two campaign spending limits and a $20 deposit required of all ASASU candidates were unconstitutional in a suit brought by senior political science major Will Murphy.

The court ordered ASASU to halt distribution of its bylaws, but ASASU officials did not comply.

Murphy said students will not bother filing disputes with the supreme court because it won't have jurisdiction in most cases.

He said the senate is making it more difficult and costly to settle disputes for both students and the University if plaintiffs file in district courts.

College of Liberal Arts Sen. Karl Karg said he opposed both measures because the senate is "attempting to restrict an equal arm of the (student) government."

Murphy said students may resort to the administration for help settling disputes.

The court cited a 1976 U.S. Supreme Court decision that spending limits and the deposit requirement were an unconstitutional denial of a candidate's rights under the First and 14th amendments of the U.S. Constitution.

Karg, the only senator to vote against both propositions, said the senate "sometimes gets carried away" with its power.

Murphy said the senate is usurping the court's power and would be similar to congress passing a law reaffirming another law already declared unconstitutional by the U.S. Supreme Court.

According to the ruling, the deposit requirement assumes a candidate will break ASASU election codes before the election even begins.

The court said that ASASU, as an agency of the state, is subject to the requirements of the First Amendment.

According to the Murphy ruling, the court "cannot uphold those provisions of the ASASU constitution and bylaws which bring those documents in conflict with the U.S. Constitution."

Lottery system for selling concert tickets ridiculous

This is a tribute to the art of standing in line, and to those who stood with me.

The other day, I was trying to imagine what this world would be like if there was no music.

It was a scary thought.

So, I quickly banished it from existence and thought about getting a hold of some Billy Joel concert tickets.

Buying tickets for the Piano Man's concert was the first time I have ever participated in a position lottery.

It's an ordeal I'd rather not have to go through again.

I must have been suffering from temporary insanity when I arrived at Gammage Center at 4 a.m. — the very early morning — just to get in line so I could be reassigned to another position a few hours later.

I thought I was playing it smart by going early. I knew there would be a lottery, but I guess I just didn't understand their version of the game.

For some reason, I was under the impression that you would be given an assigned position in line, according to when you arrived at the ticket office.

"Camping out," as it is called, doesn't have to be a drag. It can be rather fun if you're dressed warmly, and if you happen to make friends with other loyal fans.

One out of two isn't bad.

I met some pretty decent people. It's amazing how fast you can make friends when you're sitting in the dark of night with people you've never seen before.

The conversation takes a turn, and someone says, "I'm

Amy Frischknecht
Asst. Managing Editor

originally from New York." Then someone says, "Really? I was born in Ridgewood, N.J." Out of that pitch-black night comes a shriek — "I lived in Ridgewood!"

And then there is that old excuse that everybody loves to use — "It's a small world."

"Lotteries are a waste of time and totally defeats the purpose." This was my line of the night. While I and newly aquired friends sat around in the moonlight, we talked about life, tried to avoid politics and wondered how we could go about protesting a lottery.

There is a way to make everyone happy. How about first come, first serve? I don't know who came up with that idea, but it should apply here. Buying concert tickets was, and should remain, the ultimate test of survival of the fittest.

I can understand why University security is so partial to lotteries. This way, there are no riots; no trouble. To them, it is the fairest way to sell the hottest tickets in town.

I tend to agree that it is a safe way to go, but fair? They'd have to do some real convincing to make the purchaser believe that.

Another reason lotteries are enacted are so people won't camp out. It would be naive of me to suppose they don't want any of us to get frostbite. Maybe it's because they are afraid out-of-towners will come to see the Gammage Center lit up at 4 a.m. Fans in sleeping bags would ruin to beauty of Gammage.

If lotteries did not exist, many fans would have had much better seats simply because they have the right attitude for getting out there early and making sure they are one of the first in line.

Imagine how preregistration would be if there was a lottery to determine who, out of 40,000 students, gets to register first. Talk about riots. Students would be absolutely irate!

It's an idiotic idea. How different are the two events? One is a prerequisite to a satisfying life. Hopefully I'll get a job when this is all over.

The other is a brief bit of entertainment and enjoyment that helps us survive the first event.

The University Activity Center clearly seats a lot of fans. Some people hold preregistering and seeing their favorite recording artist on the same plane.

For me? Well, it depends on who is playing.

It's only fair that the lottery system be dismissed as a ludicrous idea — for preregistration and concerts.

Air is not clear

Editor:

In response to Ben Hognlund's column concerning Lesbian and Gay Academic Union funds (Oct. 16) in which "the air (was) cleared:"

If, as Hognlund writes, "out of ignorance or deceit, the LGAU has led many to believe that they (the LGAU) were wrongfully denied funding," I seem to be the victim.

Hognlund first dismisses the complaint that "Associated Students discriminated against the LGAU" by telling us that "discrimination means to differentiate and distinguish between." Thank you, Hognlund. My dictionary confirms this. My dictionary continues: "to make a distinction in favor of or against one person or thing as compared with others."

Next, he answers the complaint that "the ASASU Senate acted in a prejudicial manner" by telling us that because of limited funds, "senators should choose wisely..." No one needs to be told of limited funds, but if prejudice exists, does "senators should choose wisely" answer the complaint?

Later, Hognlund concedes that "the use of the word (controversial) should and probably will be deleted" from the bylaws, but tells us that Executive Committee policy will not fund organizations that "promote a sexual preference." My same dictionary defines "promote" as "to contribute to the growth or prosperity of." I attended an LGAU meeting, Hognlund, and not only did I somehow manage to escape unconverted, but I remain somewhat puzzled how one concludes a sexual preference is being promoted?

Hognlund continues to support the denial of funds to the LGAU by telling us "a major purpose of the group is to promote social and political legitimacy..." which, he says, is a political viewpoint in violation of Executive Committee policy. Is Hognlund saying that no group funded by ASASU should have political legitimacy? Neither do I see how promoting social legitimacy is equated with promoting sexual preference.

I attended the above-mentioned LGAU meeting with a foreign student who, when asked if she was aware of a homosexual population at home, replied, "Of course." But when she asked me, "Why do some Americans treat homosexuals so poorly?" I didn't have a good answer.

In closing, I include a sentence from an earlier State Press column composed by Hognlund. Although obviously taken out of context, it comes off with a strange ring to it. "Those who attempt to open their minds completely run the risk of having their brains fall out."

Flushing for opinions

Editor:

The State Press has many good writers. Unfortunately, your sports department can use some work. Bob Heiler is probably the most revolting newspaper writer I have ever encountered.

It becomes more and more obvious that Heiler has little or no idea of what he is writing about. Not only is he ignorant, but his sense of humor is lacking. For instance, I refer to the Oct. 22 article dealing with NBA expansion. In his article, Heiler has the gall to rank on all six cities hoping for a professional team. He also went as far as to mock a dead man. Truly tasteless.

What's your problem, Bob? Why don't you do the sensible thing and throw away all of your pens and burn your State Press badge? I sincerely hope that you are not a journalism major, for you haven't the slightest clue of how to cover sports. The only thing you can do effectively is insult people. Bob, when we want your opinion, we will flush for it.

Your feeble attempts at humor make me gag. Bob, there are 1,001 comedians out of work and you continue to be a geek. Why? Your picture in the State Press is comedy enough for the reader. Bob, it is customary to open your eyes when you pose for a photograph.

I hope that a letter such as this will help Bob Heiler see the light. Journalism simply is not his cup of tea. But don't despair, Bob. McDonald's is still hiring.

Business College

Are more professors needed, or fewer students?

By TINA DAUNT
State Press

Although nobody seems to agree on the source of the College of Business' reaccreditation problems, everyone seems to have a theory.

The present dean, John Kraft, says the college just doesn't have enough money, and that enrollment is growing beyond the capacity of the college's funding to keep pace.

Then there are two former deans. These gentlemen have both abandoned ship for one reason or another. One left the college; one feels the college left him.

L. William Seidman, the dean from 1982-1985, is now chairman of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, a position that is both lucrative and prestigious. He left the business college as a career move — from a position in academia to one in the "real world."

One day, Glenn Overman, dean from 1956-1981, looked around the business college, a place which he understandably thought he was familiar with after 25 years and found it quite unrecognizable.

The philosophy of the college has changed completely. Professors are now expected to spend the majority of their time researching instead of teaching.

Overman retired, convinced that the students are not receiving the education they deserve.

Last spring, the American Assembly of Collegiate Schools of Business deferred ASU's accreditation because there were too many students per full-time faculty member — which is to say, there were too few full-time faculty members per student.

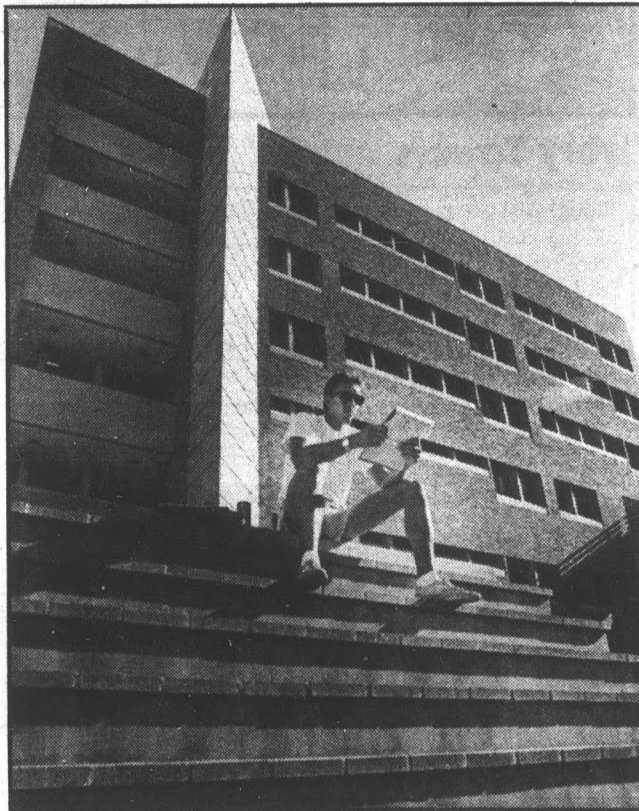

Now, the way one chooses to view the situation is critical. The choice carries with it certain implications about what might be done to correct the problems.

If one decides to think that there are too many students for the faculty to handle, then the conclusion reached is that the enrollment ought to be limited. If one decides to think that there are too few faculty members for the students, then the conclusion will be that the faculty ought to be expanded, or that the existing faculty members ought to devote more time to their students.

But which direction should be pursued is really academic. The fact is that ASU is in no position to do either.

It's just not consistent with University policy. The administration wants two things for ASU: research emphasis and larger enrollment. And those things prevent the business college from employing either escape route.

In 1982 and '83, the business college started losing professors. The budget for the '82-'83 school year included 212.68 full-time equivalency faculty members. By 1985-86, the number had dropped to 193.04, the result of a steady decline over the four years. The decline was caused by an increasing number of professors leaving the college because they were unhappy with the new research emphasis, Overman said.

Rick Wiley/State Press

The East wing Business Administration building looms over Larry Goff, a junior marketing major, as he studies for a Marketing 300 class.

The problem does not stop with the decline in faculty. According to Seidman, the college could not afford to replace the faculty members it was losing because of the extra money required to lure respected professors away from their existing jobs at other schools. As a result, the college was forced to make up the teaching time it lacked by adding part-time instructors and lecturers.

But there is another reason that ASU could not afford to hire the full-time faculty needed. The college was in the market for respected researchers, which is definitely a sellers' market. These were the only faculty members that could be hired if the college were to remain consistent with the research emphasis of the University.

The ASU business college is the focus of some important struggles — struggles between research and teaching, between faculty expansion and enrollment reduction, and between need and availability of funding. And until those struggles are resolved, the college will continue to fight its unbalanced student/faculty ratio.

If the ratio does not fall, the college probably will have its accreditation deferred again. Each time the college has its accreditation deferred, the problem may get worse, for several reasons: it will be harder still to lure good professors to a college that may lose its accreditation, especially when a 16 percent shortage of business professors exists throughout the nation. In addition, the business community may begin to lose faith in the college, causing its reputation to suffer still more.

This would have the effect of lowering the enrollment; few students want to attend a college with an ailing reputation. But if limiting the enrollment by raising the entrance requirements is frowned on by the administration, it hardly seems likely that it would welcome enrollment reduction through this process.

So the problem remains. The student/faculty ratio is 29:1. It needs to be 24:1, a difference of 22 full-time equivalency faculty members. It doesn't take Pythagoras to see that there are only two ways to change a ratio: increasing or decreasing one side of the colon.

The college is attempting to alleviate its problems within the existing framework of administrative policy. In an attempt to limit student credit-hours, they have cut the number of non-business majors permitted to take business classes and reduced the number of business classes required to graduate from the college.

Now this might seem like the college's way of passing along the problem to the students. By making them take fewer classes in their major to graduate, the college may be turning out an inferior product.

Not so, according to Kraft. Cutting the curriculum not only helps solve the problems but has the effect of giving the ASU business graduate a more liberal education, which is something that the business community wants to see in its incoming employees.

Hence, the choice is left to the prospective student. The business college is offering a wider liberal-arts curriculum, and the student must decide whether that is the kind of education he wants. Those who want something else will just have to look somewhere else to find it.

Which is precisely the position in which ASU professors found themselves in 1981. The emphasis shifted from teaching to research, and left some professors, unwilling to take part in that shift because they were dedicated to teaching as a top priority, looking elsewhere. Now it's the students' turn to decide whether they want to take part in a shift from a curriculum that strongly emphasized business classes to one that gives slightly more weight to liberal arts classes.

The business college accounts for about one-fourth of the total ASU enrollment. If the students jump ship as fast as some of the faculty did, maybe ASU will solve its parking problem.

Quality, accreditation must be college goals

By BEN HOGLUND
State Press

The Continuing Accreditation Committee of the AACSB dealt a serious blow to the College of Business in its report deferring ASU's renewal of accreditation.

According to the report, "On the basis of both qualitative considerations and quantitative measures set forth in the Accreditation Standards, it was the consensus of the Accreditation Committee that disconformities from minimum accreditation expectations in the area of admissions, personnel, curriculum, and financial resources are sufficiently serious to impair the overall quality of programs in business administration and management."

While a deferral of accreditation is a serious thing, the business college's current accreditation remains intact until March 1987. At that time the AACSB Accreditation Committee will review the business college's progress in addressing its concerns. Dean John Kraft has indicated that there is little chance of the business college actually losing its accreditation.

Faculty members, in general, seem encouraged by the approach the new dean is taking. Dr. William Verdini, who serves on the Business College Reaccreditation Committee, spoke positively of Kraft's efforts to develop a close relationship with faculty.

Jeff Harrison, an assistant management professor, said of Kraft: "(He) is up to the challenges we face. He is an excellent administrator and has made many difficult decisions that will move our college forward."

In addition to Kraft, ASU President J. Russell Nelson, the Arizona Board of Regents, and even the state Legislature have taken steps to ensure the college is reaccredited next spring.

Reaccreditation, though, is only the first step if the College of Business is to reach the excellence to which it aspires. To be accredited, after all, only indicates that the college has met minimum standards established by the AACSB.

There appears to be a great disagreement over exactly what kind of quality or excellence the College of Business should attempt to achieve. Being that resources are limited, some aspects of educational excellence receive priority over others.

Educational quality is best evidenced in terms of products. The most obvious products are students and published research. Research usually is evaluated in terms of quantity and students in terms of quality.

Because of this, a program emphasizing research may be able to gain greater short-term recognition or increased reputation than a program that emphasizes quality instruction, which is much more difficult to quantify.

It should be recognized, however, that in the long run, any recognition of excellence in a program will largely depend on the quality of its graduates.

Many argue that President Nelson's emphasis on research is a mistake, because instructional quality has decreased as a result. In deferring accreditation, the AACSB certainly indicated that the quality of education being delivered to students needs to be re-examined.

A survey of university presidents conducted by U.S. News and World Report last year listed the following characteristics as most essential to an excellent educational program:

- Strength of curriculum;
- Quality teaching;
- Relationship between students and faculty; and
- General atmosphere for learning.

Clearly, those presidents surveyed saw research as secondary to instruction.

While research is necessary to ensure that material presented is up to date, an atmosphere of publish or perish is hardly conducive to quality instruction. If research goals require class sizes to balloon, then it is being pursued to the detriment of instructional quality.

That class size has a negative impact on the ability of an instructor to teach and students to learn is self-evident to students and faculty. President Nelson, however, consistently has denied that there is any relationship between class size and educational quality.

Students and faculty who have had a class with more than 300 people have experienced little student-faculty interaction and no required writing or presentations. Last year, the college even experimented with instruction by television set.

The main complaint against an overzealous research program is this: to the extent that the business college is excellent, it is so because of faculty who are excellent educators first.

It is the instructors who take the time necessary to go beyond the bare minimum. It is those who come to class prepared, whose lectures supplement rather than summarize the text, whose tests require more skill than filling in a computer sheet.

It is these instructors who are penalized the most by the current research emphasis. The balance between research and instruction should be closely scrutinized as the College of Business sets goals beyond simply being accredited.

A heavily research oriented program may not be the best way to long-term excellence, and it certainly is costing a lot of the little guy who is footing the bill.

Former NASA analyst says crash report ignores facts

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The former NASA budget analyst who warned, before the Challenger explosion, that engineers were worried about leaks in space shuttle booster rockets, says a presidential commission ignored substantial evidence in its investigation of the accident.

Richard Cook said the commission's report failed to hold NASA's top officials responsible for letting the shuttle fly when they knew of the leak problems, and failed to determine who was responsible for overriding objections to launching after a night of subfreezing temperatures.

"The biggest gap in the commission's report," Cook wrote in the November issue of Washington Monthly magazine, "is not its failure to explore whether there was a cover-up, but its failure to explain why there was so much pressure to launch that day."

"What possible pressures were acting upon them (NASA officials) to cause them to send up a space shuttle that they knew could explode?" he asked.

Cook's article brought no new facts to light. But in it, he criticized "the extent to which the commission avoided drawing obvious conclusions and asking obvious questions."

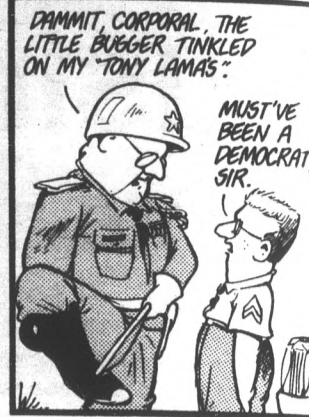

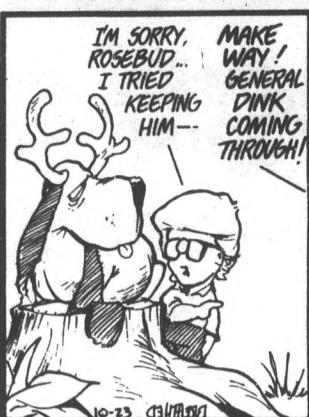

In its five-volume report, submitted to the president on June 9, the Rogers Commission said "the decision to launch the Challenger was flawed. Those who made that decision were unaware of the recent history of problems concerning the O-rings and the joint and were unaware of the initial written recommendation of the contractor advising against the launch..."

Absolving NASA officials, Cook said, ignores evidence presented to the committee "that those officials were fully aware of the long history of problems that led to the explosion" and that the commission "left unchallenged statements by NASA officials that were contradictory and often obfuscatory."

Tass discloses execution of Soviet labeled as CIA spy by U.S. defector

By The Associated Press

MOSCOW — The official Soviet news agency Tass on Wednesday announced the execution of a Soviet man who was accused of working for the CIA and reportedly was turned in to the KGB by American defector Edward Lee Howard, a former CIA employee.

Tass did not say when the Soviet, Adolf Tolkachev, was executed. A U.S. newspaper reported earlier this year that Tolkachev had been put to death.

Spy trials and executions are not always reported by the Soviet press, and when they are, the reports sometimes come long after the trials take place.

The announcement of Tolkachev's execution came during a period of heightened Soviet-U.S. tension over a series of diplomatic expulsions.

A military tribunal convicted Tolkachev of "high treason in the form of spying," Tass said.

The agency said Tolkachev was executed after an appeal was turned down.

Executions in the Soviet Union normally are carried out by firing squad.

Tass described Tolkachev as "a staff worker of a Moscow research institute." It said he was arrested by the KGB, the Soviet secret police, and "exposed . . . as an agent of U.S. intelligence."

The agency did not say when Tolkachev was arrested or when he was put on trial.

"It was established in the course of the investigation that Tolkachev, in pursuit of selfish ends and on account of his hostile attitude toward the Soviet state, had maintained espionage contacts with U.S. intelligence agents who had been in Moscow under the guise of U.S. Embassy personnel," Tass said.

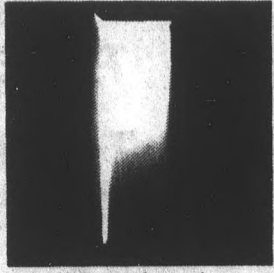

It did not list the charges against Tolkachev.

The Los Angeles Times, quoting unidentified sources, reported from Washington earlier this year that Tolkachev had been executed because of information provided by Howard, who defected to the Soviet Union in August.

ASU police report

University police reported the following incidents in the 24-hour period ending 8:30 a.m. Wednesday:

- A red wallet containing $245, an Alabama drivers license, a United Bank check guarantee card and a set of keys was stolen from a bench at the northeast corner of Physical Education Building West, where it was left unattended, police said.
- A student's navy blue and multicolored thread Italian designer jacket, valued at $150, was stolen from the basement of the computer room at the Business Administration Center, where it was left unattended, police said.
- An ASU student was arrested for an outstanding warrant and charged with failure to appear in court, police said. University police brought him to Maricopa County Sheriff's Office for booking.

- An officer questioned a juvenile who was sitting in a car in Lot 39 for a suspiciously long time, police said.

Police said the boy reported he was waiting for a friend who was visiting another friend, but was unable to furnish police with the names of the friends.

While inspecting the vehicle, the officer saw clothes, a backpack, hair spray and wine bottles in the back seat, and the boy was sitting on a blond wig, police said.

The officer checked the license plate number and the boy's identification with a national crime computer and neither were wanted by police.

- Police found an abandoned 10-speed bike at the Business Administration Center reported stolen last August, police said.

The bike was impounded for safekeeping until the owner can identify it, police said. Estimated value of the bicycle is $60.

- A student found her 10-speed bicycle locked with someone else's lock to the bike racks on the west side of Hayden Library, police said. The responding officer removed the lock.

Tempe police report

Tempe police reported the following incidents for the period ending midnight Wednesday:

- A Tempe man inadvertently placed two Jeeps in a lake at the ASU Research Park Oct. 21, police said.

The man told police he and his girlfriend were out celebrating her birthday when they decided to drive his Jeep into the park and "talk."

They drove the 1986 Jeep onto a grassy knoll about 20 feet above the lake. The man said they both remained in the vehicle, but neither was behind the wheel.

While "talking" to his girlfriend, the man accidentally hit the gearshift knob with his knee and knocked the transmission into neutral.

The man said by the time he got behind the wheel, the Jeep was in the lake and water was up over the seats.

Police said the couple borrowed a 1985 Ford Bronco and attempted to tow the first vehicle out of the lake, but only managed to get the Bronco stuck in the water as well.

Damage to the lake and shoreline is estimated at $300.

Park management and the man negotiated a work agreement to pay off the damage.

- A man robbed a Tempe woman waiting in a bank teller line at the Western Savings Office inside Smitty's, 3230 S. Mill Ave., police said.

The victim was preparing a deposit slip, with money laying on a counter next to her when she was approached by the suspect.

Police said the man grabbed $140 off the counter and ran out the door.

The victim chased the man out the door, but when she reached for the money, he pushed her away and fled on foot.

Police describe the man as black, 5-foot-9, 155 pounds, 27 years old, with black hair and two-days growth of beard.

- Police said two men robbed the cashier booth at the Exxon self-service gas station, 809 S. Rural Road, at gunpoint Oct. 21.

The suspects entered the booth and told an Exxon employee to give them the money from the register.

They received $350, told the cashier to lay on the floor because they had a "friend waiting outside with a shotgun" and fled the scene.

Gorbachev: talks define road to arms reduction

By The Associated Press

MOSCOW — Kremlin leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev told the Soviet public Wednesday night the Iceland summit brought the United States and Soviet Union closer to agreement while clearly defining the many obstacles to arms control.

Speaking on national television for the second time since the summit with President Reagan, Gorbachev said the Oct. 11-12 meetings in Reykjavik encouraged the Soviet leadership on the possibility of reducing nuclear arms.

"It was perhaps the first time in many decades that such a big stride was made in the quest for nuclear disarmament," the Communist Party general secretary said, according to a Radio Moscow translation of his address.

"I still consider that as a result of the meeting, we achieved a higher stage not only in analyzing the situation but in defining the aims and framework of possible agreements, agreements on nuclear disarmament," he said.

However, Gorbachev said the summit "also threw into bold relief the difficulties on the way to a nuclear-free world" adding that "circles associated with militarism" were frightened by the progress made in Reykjavik.

In Iceland, the superpowers reached a tentative agreement on making huge cutbacks in their nuclear arsenals. But the agreement foundered over Reagan's space-based missile defense program known as "Star Wars."

ASU College of Engineering seeks site for new science, technology complex

By TINA DAUNT
State Press

After receiving $5 million from the federal government, the College of Engineering and Sciences is searching for a location to build a $25 million Center for Science and Engineering Technologies, a college official said.

Charles E. Backus, assistant dean for research, said: "We've been waiting for the money for a couple years."

"We might build the center in one of the existing parking lots or in the area where the U.S. Forest Service (building) is located," he said. "We would like to keep it near our existing buildings, but we're not sure yet."

The U.S. Senate appropriated the $5 million to ASU from the budget of the Energy and Water Subcommittee Friday.

The University originally requested the full $25 million from the Department of Defense budget, but withdrew the request and asked for $5 million from the Water and Energy Subcommittee budget this year and $20 million next year, said Tim Carlsgaard, a spokesman for Arizona Sen. Dennis DeConcini.

"There were a lot of schools requesting a lot of money from the department of defense," Carlsgaard said.

"We figured we would have a better chance of getting the money if we pulled back and requested it from the federal appropriations committee.

"We don't think we'll have a problem getting the rest of the money next year."

'After we find a location, the next step is to meet with the design review board and then contact an architect.'

— Charles E. Backus

Backus said the college only needs $5 million this year. "It will be awhile to before we actually break ground," he said. "After we find a location, the next step is to meet with the design review board and then contact an architect." Backus said it will take at least three years to complete the center.

According to a report presented to the Senate Appropriations Committee, the 200,000 square-foot center will include:

- A large centralized computer facility to support faculty research in computer science and computer-aided engineering.
- Specialized laboratories for microwave analysis, signal processing and fiber optic communications research.
- Instructional laboratories and student microcomputing resources.
- Offices, classrooms and seminar rooms.

Lonnie Ostrom, the director of development, said ASU has been working with Cassidy Associates, a lobbying agency in Washington for the past two years.

Late-night TV host arraigned on sex charge

By BENNY McCONNELL
State Press

Former local late-night television host Edward Muscare was formally arraigned in Florida Superior Court Wednesday on a sexual battery charge involving an alleged incident with a 13-year-old male relative.

Jim Solomon, assistant public information officer for the Orange County Sheriff's Office, said Muscare, 54, was brought to Florida Monday by sheriff's deputies and is being held on $25,000 bail.

Solomon said if Muscare is found guilty, he could face "at least 15 years" in prison.

The name of the boy, the family's name and Muscare's relation to the boy cannot be released, according to Florida state law.

Muscare is the former host of KNXV-TV's "Friday Night at the Frights," a popular late-night movie program.

The charges stem from an alleged Aug. 23 incident in Orlando, Fla., where Muscare was attending a family gathering, Solomon said.

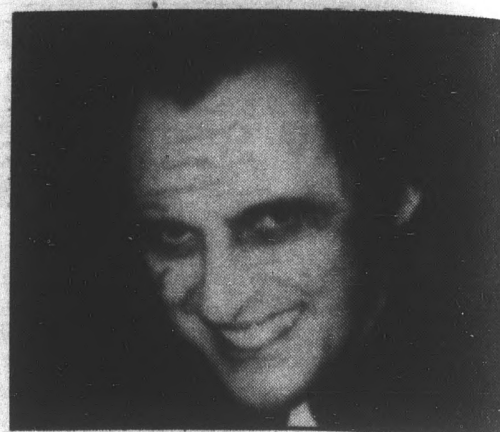

A warrant for his arrest was issued Aug. 28, and two weeks later Muscare called investigating detective James Lutrell to ask if he was wanted by Florida authorities.

Lutrell told him he was and should surrender.

Muscare was caught by San Diego authorities last week at his trailer in San Diego and held on $27,000 bail, which was later revoked.

Muscare and his lawyer could not be reached for comment.

Scott E. Long, coordinator of The Committee to Draft Edmus Scarey, a group formed to try to petition the disheveled host back to Channel 15, also could not be reached for comment.

ASASU collecting signatures urging low tuition increases

By KIM MATTINGLY
State Press

Associated Students will be on Cady Mall today attempting to get a few thousand ASU students to sign cards asking for lower tuition increases for 1987-88.

ASASU President Chris Cumiskey said the cards, along with more than 1,000 others signed Tuesday, will be presented to the Arizona Board of Regents at Friday's tuition hearing in Tucson.

They read as follows:

Dear members of the Board of Regents:

As a student of ASU I would like to express my concern regarding a possible tuition increase. When deciding on a specific figure, please carefully consider the financial limitations of an average student. In the light of increasing limits on financial aid, the cost of my college education is constantly accelerating. Your fair and realistic consideration of this request, for only a nominal increase in tuition, is urgently requested.

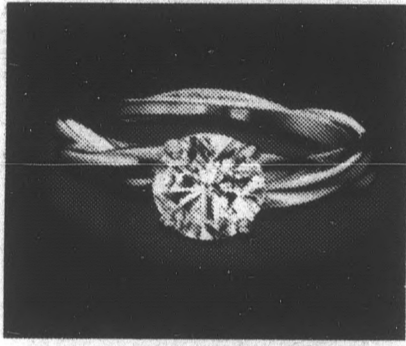

The card has a line at the bottom for student signatures.

Cumiskey said, "We feel this is a more effective way for ASU to express their tuition concerns, rather than packing the Board of Regents meeting room."

NAU presented 850 similar cards to the regents at their October meeting in Flagstaff, he said, and board members "expressed appreciation."

Cumiskey said the cards also will be taken to the presidents of all major organizations on campus to be signed by club members.

Colleges avoid large enrollment drops with aggressive recruiting campaigns

By College Press Service

PRINCETON, N.J. — American colleges have not yet suffered the long-expected Great Enrollment Drop of the Eighties mostly because they have learned how to sell themselves better, a new report released by the Educational Testing Service said.

Some public colleges now spend an average $30 per student on recruiting. Private colleges may spend as much as $500 per student.

"An unprecedented marketing and recruiting effort by the nation's postsecondary institutions during the first half of the decade" has helped avoid the big enrollment drop — thought to be as much as 20 percent by some observers — expected during the '80s, said ETS researcher Hunter Breland.

Public four-year colleges have boosted their recruiting budgets by 63 percent or more since 1980, more than double the inflation rate, he said.

Schools figure they have to recruit students aggressively if they want to survive.

"Everybody fights for (students)," said Leroy Twilley, Western Illinois University's admissions director. "In Illinois last year, we graduated some 138,331 high school students."

"Figure that about one-half of those go to college. Next year, we project about 138,900 students. Then the slide begins."

"In 1991, we'll be down to about 119,951 graduates. That's quite a drop," Twilley said. "College enrollment is closely allied to high school graduates."

Gerald Bowker, of the University of Tennessee, said, "We are all competing for the top high school graduates."

Bowker figures the new emphasis on recruiting is here to stay.

"Colleges really need to work on developing their image, regardless of whether we are in good times or bad times," Bowker said. "It doesn't stop because last year was a good year."

So WIU's Twilley came up with a "Western Advantage" ad campaign.

Last week, Twilley hosted a banquet for about 100 potential students, and is preparing a direct mail campaign.

"We are doing everything from buying mailing lists from national testing companies, sending letters, inviting people to college activities, college tours, high school visitation, telemarketing, et cetera, et cetera," Twilley said.

Such campaigns, regardless of ETS's findings, don't always work.

The University of the District of Columbia last week announced its enrollment this fall is down by 1,000 students, continuing a seven-year slide.

The slide has cost UDC about a quarter of its student body despite a hefty $257,000 marketing campaign designed to "stop the hemorrhaging of enrollment," said spokesman John Britton.

"I'm afraid we have a serious problem," said N. Joyce Payne, chairwoman of the UDC board of trustees. Attracting students has become much too competitive for us not to maintain an aggressive position."

The campaign, including radio, newspaper and bus ads, produced over 15,000 mail and telephone inquiries, but the number of applicants fell.

Doctor prescribes 'safe sex' as AIDS deterrent

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Offering a prescription for avoidance of AIDS, the surgeon general counseled Americans Wednesday to disdain "freewheeling casual sex" and begin sex education for children as early as the third grade.

Dr. C. Everett Koop, releasing a report on the increasing problem of acquired immune deficiency syndrome, said the disease already has killed almost 15,000 people. He said the figure will increase 12-fold in another five years.

Because an estimated 1.5 million people are infected with the virus, and because these people are able to spread the virus to others, each individual must take steps to avoid the disease, Koop told a news conference.

"Clearly this disease, which strikes men and women, children and adults, people of all races, must be stopped," he said.

President Reagan had asked Koop to put together a report explaining the disease to the public. In his report, the surgeon general said education and so-called "safe sex" are key weapons against AIDS — until vaccines and effective treatments are developed.

While some promising AIDS treatments are becoming available, Koop said, no cure is in sight, and a preventive vaccine probably will not be available before the end of the century. This, the surgeon general said, leaves prevention as the main strategy against the disease.

"AIDS is not spread by casual, non-sexual contact," Koop said. "New infections can be prevented if we, as individuals, take the responsibility of protecting ourselves and others from exposure to the AIDS virus."

Many people, particularly the nation's youth, are not getting information about AIDS that is vital to their health, he said.

Koop also said that more efforts have to be made to reach minority populations, which have a disproportionate number of the AIDS cases.

"While blacks represent only 12 percent of the U.S. population, 25 percent of all people with AIDS are black," he said. "Another 12 percent of AIDS patients are Hispanic, while this group comprises only 6 percent of the population."

Young people are not being educated because of reticence in dealing with subjects such as sex, sexual practices and homosexuality, Koop said.

"This silence must end," he added. "We can no longer afford to sidestep frank, open discussions about sexual practices — homosexual and heterosexual.

"Education about AIDS should start at an early age so that children can grow up knowing the behaviors to avoid to protect themselves from exposure to the AIDS virus," he continued.

Education concerning AIDS and other diseases associated with sex primarily should be the job of parents, but schools have to play a role when children start inquiring about sex — usually when they are in the third grade, Koop said.

AIDS, an incurable condition that results in destruction of the body's infection-fighting immune system, has been diagnosed in 26,566 Americans to date, 14,977 of whom have died. No one is known to have survived it.

The virus that causes AIDS is spread through intimate contact with victims' bodily fluids, such as blood and semen, and more than 70 percent of cases have involved promiscuous male homosexuals. Other high-risk groups include intravenous drug abusers and those receiving infected blood or blood products.

The surgeon general also noted that sexual promiscuity plays a large role in the spread of AIDS among homosexuals, and is a factor in heterosexual transmission, which represents a low but rising number of cases in this country.

"Couples who engage in freewheeling casual sex these days are playing a dangerous game," Koop said. "What it boils down to is — unless you know with absolute certainty that your sex partner is not infected with the AIDS virus, through sex or through drug use, you're taking a chance on becoming infected."

People should know their sex partners and question them about how many other sex partners they have and whether they are involved in intravenous drug abuse, he said.

The best protections against sexual spread of AIDS are abstinence and using condoms, which block transmission of the virus, Koop said.

The surgeon general said blood supplies are as safe as modern technology can make them and that screening tests and donor selection have substantially cut the risks of this route of transmission.

Single copies of the report, in the form of a 36-page pamphlet, are available from the U.S. Public Health Service by writing: AIDS, P.O. Box 14252, Washington, D.C., 20044.

Survivor tells others to resist suicidal urges

By The Associated Press

SAN FRANCISCO — Kenneth Baldwin knew suicide was a horrible mistake the moment his hands slipped from the railing and he plunged off the Golden Gate Bridge.

But luck gave him another chance, and the man who beat 100-1 odds of survival says he's "thrilled to be alive" and urges others contemplating suicide to give life another chance.

"Things are going very, very well," Baldwin, 29, said in a telephone interview from his home in Tracy, about 60 miles southeast of San Francisco. "I'm happy with my job, and my family life is fantastic, stronger than ever..."

Depressed about his "dead-end" draftsman's job and failure to capitalize on a psychology degree, Baldwin had been contemplating suicide for about a week before he made the 249-foot jump on Aug. 21, 1985.

He told his wife he'd be working late and would be unable to pick up their 3-year-old daughter from the babysitter. What he really planned to do was kill himself.

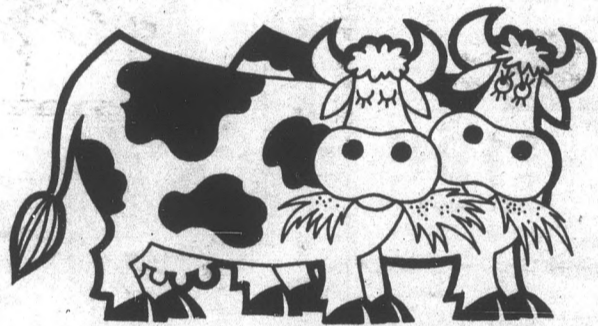

Jumping was the most appealing method because "it wasn't messy," Baldwin said. But he also wanted to make a statement to the world, "Hey, look, you treated me really badly, that this is what you get for it."

Baldwin walked to the center of the span, grabbed the rail and vaulted over.

"I panicked when I pushed off and saw my hands leave the guardrail," he said. "I instantly knew I had made a big mistake."

The impact with the water after a three-second fall at 75 mph has been likened to a speeding car crashing into a brick wall.

More than 1,200 people are believed to have gone over the bridge's edge since it opened in 1937, according to the California Highway Patrol. Nineteen have lived.

Meese force to target hard-core porn

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Attorney General Edwin Meese on Wednesday launched a nationwide campaign against hard-core pornography, creating a task force of prosecutors in the Justice Department so that the $8 billion smut industry can be "pursued with a vengeance and prosecuted to the hilt."

Meese declared there has been an "explosion of obscenity" in the past 15 years in the United States, and he told a news conference he will implement most of the 92 recommendations made in July by the Attorney General's Commission on Pornography.

The announcement delighted anti-porn activists and angered civil libertarians.

An anti-smut unit of at least a half-dozen federal attorneys will begin work within 30 days in the Justice Department's criminal division, prosecuting what Meese said are "organized criminal enterprises that have taken over the large-scale production and distribution of obscenity."

The targets of the campaign will be child pornography and movies, magazines or other pornographic depictions of sadomasochism and violent or degrading sexually explicit conduct.

In addition, a center for obscenity prosecution will be established in the criminal division to train attorneys in obscenity prosecutions and advise state and local governments.

"We are very impressed with the attorney general's response," said the Rev. Jerry Kirk, president of the National Coalition Against Pornography, a group of religious leaders. "The focus . . . on child pornography and violent, degrading pornography is where . . . it needs to be."

But Barry W. Lynn, legislative counsel of the American Civil Liberties Union, said at a separate news conference that the "hoopla" surrounding the task force and the center will frighten people into stopping distribution of sexual material.

And Lynn argued that establishing anti-porn units within the Justice Department could have a "chilling effect" on constitutional rights.

Meese also endorsed a legislative package that would allow prosecutors to go after the illegal proceeds of obscenity crimes and make it a felony for porn producers to use performers who are under age 21.

In response, Lynn said those old enough to vote and serve in the military at 18 would be prohibited "from choosing to be a centerfold at the age of 20½."

The ACLU official called the provision for forfeiture of assets a "dangerous and draconian instrument" that could allow prosecutors to seize the light fixtures as well as explicit material.

Meese also signaled the Justice Department's entry into two sensitive areas of concern to civil libertarians — cable television and pornographic telephone messages, also known as dial-a-porn.

The department's legislative package will include proposals to prohibit cable TV programming found to be obscene and to prohibit obscene material communicated over the telephone.

"Materials that are entitled to First Amendment protections will not be subject to prosecutorial action by this department," Meese insisted. "There will be no censorship by the Department of Justice as long as I am attorney general."

He said adult magazines such as "Playboy" and "Penthouse," while "offensive to some . . . nonetheless have been recognized by the courts as within the bounds of protected speech."

Warner supports stricter laws for violent criminals

By MICHAEL ROWELL

State Press

PHOENIX — Carolyn Warner, Democratic candidate for governor, said Wednesday that violent criminals should not be given a third chance.

"I propose that, when a felon with a violent prior record is convicted of a dangerous crime against another person, we sentence him to 25 (years) to life," Warner said.

"I have no tolerance for violent criminals. The public doesn't either."

Warner also commented on her independent opponent Bill Schulz's proposed program of intensive probation.

She said she supported his program on a limited basis but differed with his claim that 51 percent of Arizona's inmates are convicted of non-violent crimes.

"He's wrong, dangerously wrong, because what he must classify as a non-violent offense is the burglar, the drug pusher and the arsonist," Warner said.

"Yet the drug pusher is a potential murderer, so is the arsonist," she said. "The victim of a burglary has indeed been violated."

Warner said she doubted Schulz's program would cut costs, because non-dangerous first-time convictions are already eligible for probation.

On the topic of property crime, Warner said that 50 percent of all property crime is committed by juveniles and proposed establishing a separate department for juvenile corrections.

"We need to get tough on chronic juvenile offenders, so that these hardcore kids will be off the streets longer than three-and-a-half months."

"We also need to focus on (the portion) of the juvenile population that can be turned around with special services."

Democratic gubernatorial candidate Carolyn Warner outlines her views on the Arizona criminal justice system at a press conference Wednesday.

"I propose increasing and expanding the special supervision now in effect for juveniles," Warner said.

She also said illiteracy and lack of education contributed to the high proportion of repeat criminals and proposed requiring that "good time" credits (time taken off for good behavior) only be earned by inmates who make a "real effort" to learn to read, get high school diploma equivalents or develop a skill in high demand.

Warner said two-time violent offenders who receive a mandatory term of 25 years could use this method to reduce their sentences.

On the subject of family violence, Warner said, "We need to increase the number of child protective service workers, and we must understand the dynamic of family violence."

Warner said Phoenix's policy of arresting an abusive spouse immediately and holding that spouse overnight "seems to work" and suggested taking this approach statewide.

"A swift and certain response prevents future violence," she said. "But let's face facts, those trips to jail that work so well take time and take police off the streets."

"We need to increase our police forces and encourage police intervention when appropriate."

Lawmen seek student in Prescott abduction

By The Associated Press

PRESCOTT — Authorities have issued an arrest warrant for a Louisiana man accused of abducting an 18-year-old woman who was driven to New Mexico, a Yavapai County sheriff's official said Wednesday.

Sheriff's Lt. Bill Maughn said Mitchell Bono, of Opelousas, La., is accused of abducting the woman after picking her up Saturday night to go to a dance at Embry-Riddle Aeronautical University, where the 21-year-old Bono is a student.

The woman told investigators that Bono confronted her with a bottle of chloroform, and said he would use it on her if she didn't accompany him, Maughn said. The woman said they drove to Winslow, where they spent Saturday night at a hotel, Maughn said.

On Sunday in Roswell N.M., Bono allegedly sped off after the woman got out of the car when a police officer pulled Bono over after he allegedly ran a red light, Maughn said.

Research links heart failure to cocaine use

By The Associated Press

STANFORD, Calif. — Cocaine can cause permanent, life-threatening damage to heart muscle tissue, which may explain why some outwardly healthy people suddenly die when they abuse the drug, researchers reported Wednesday.

The researchers examined the hearts of 30 people whose deaths were linked to cocaine and found a particular type of muscle damage in 28 of them.

Less severe damage was found in only nine of 20 people who died of overdoses of drugs other than cocaine. Those people were used as a control group in the experiment.

"The evidence is mounting up that cocaine is not the benign drug it was once thought to be," said Dr. Henry Tazelaar, a Stanford University surgical pathologist who coordinated the study.

"Although some people may be more susceptible than others to these effects of cocaine on the heart, the bottom line seems to be 'don't fool with cocaine.'"

Tazelaar said his study appears to be the first to find a specific lesion in the heart muscle in a group of cocaine users.

The lesions, known as "myocardial contraction bands," appear microscopically as red streaks on the heart tissue. Tazelaar said the bands are caused when muscle cells are immobilized in a permanent state of contraction.

"Once it's happened, the cells are essentially useless," he said. "It's an irreversible process."

Bang-up job

Injury-ridden Utes to square off against Devils

By JAY TAYLOR
State Press

You would think that the University of Utah, a so-so Western Athletic Conference team, would be overmatched playing the ninth-rated team in the country, the 5-0-1 Sun Devils of the Pac-10.

And considering that the Utes are currently ranked 105th and last defensively among the nation's Division I-A schools, there would seem to be even less room for optimism.

But throw in the fact that the Utes have been devastated by injuries this year, and you have the ingredients for a seriously bad Saturday evening in Sun Devil Stadium when Utah takes on ASU at 7:30.

Eddie Johnson

Things have been so bad for Coach Jim Fassel that he is not even going to make his team practice in pads this week in hopes that he can preserve some of his players for Saturday. The Utes only have two players on defense starting at the same position they began the year at. Both of the inside linebackers are walk-ons.

All of that has allowed opposing offenses to go through Utah like water through a sieve. The Utes allowed 501 yards last week in a 47-43 loss to New Mexico, and that brought their total defense average down to 534.4 yards per game.

It's tough to win games that way, and the Utes are living (well, sort of) proof. Their 0-5 record includes losses to San Diego State, 37-30; Ohio State, 64-6; Air Force 45-35; Wyoming 38-14; and New Mexico. In addition to the 534 yards per game it is giving up, the Utah defense is allowing 46.2 points per game.

But despite the battering they have taken, Fassel said the team has not given up.

"Just as we get some guy in there, some others go out," he said. "But the attitude is good. They are out there fighting, and they are playing as hard as they can play."

While the defense has been dreadful, the offense has been good, averaging 25.6 points per game, one-tenth of a point more than ASU's.

Quarterback Larry Egger leads the offense, although he too has been injured for a good portion of the year. He has a sore passing arm, and his status for the ASU game is still questionable. Fassel said he will probably keep Egger out of practice this week to rest the arm, but that will hurt his timing. He was pulled out of the New Mexico game for that reason.

Another weapon the Utes have is running back Eddie Johnson, who rushed for 1,021 yards as a freshman, the only back in Utah history to do so. Last year he was hit with injuries, but still gained 384 yards on only 75 carries for four touchdowns.

"Eddie Johnson is playing very hard," Fassel said. "He came back after last year with the attitude that he really wants to play well."

The Utes are not alone in the injury department, although ASU's problems are far less severe. Cornerback Anthony Parker will miss his second consecutive game with a knee injury and a swollen thigh.

Also banged up in the USC game were: tight end Stein Koss and center Kevin Thomas (both with knees); tight end Jeff Gallimore (back); and tackle Jim Warne (foot).

Sun Devil noseguard Larry McGlothen closes in on Ute quarterback Larry Egger in ASU's 34-27 win over Utah last year.

Athletes must resist sports agents' temptations

Anyone who has ever known an athlete who almost played professionally comes to a few sobering realizations.

The other day I spoke with a friend who fell into that category. Conversations like that always leave me a little haunted.

This particular friend played baseball in high school and went on to play two years of college ball. He got a chance to go into the minor leagues, and because he had always hated school, he jumped at it.

For a while, he did alright. He was a good hitter with average fielding abilities at his position, second base. He was chasing the big-league dream that so many young boys indulge themselves in on summer afternoons, and he was loving every minute of it.

He was spiked in the ankle one day on a steal attempt. The spike severed a tendon, and the fantasy world started to crumble.

At first, the injury did not seem as though it would cause the end of his career. He had some pain, lost a little speed, but he was still a good hitter. He bounced around to a few different teams, and he developed a slight limp when his leg was not warmed up.

But eventually, he had to get out of baseball. He became convinced that his chances at making it big were not good, and he did not want to do anything halfway.

Bob Heiler
Sports Editor

He is an insurance salesman now, a job that he does not particularly care for. And his story is hardly unique.

For every man playing in major league baseball, there are hundreds in the minors and thousands who didn't even make it that far. And every one of them once entertained dreams of big-league fame, glory and money.

Now the average guy on the street might find it awfully easy to discount the trials and tribulations of has-beens, might-have-beens and never-weres. And that instinct is not wrong, so long as the situation is understood clearly.

To be sure, some of the athletes who didn't make it have no one to blame but themselves. Some didn't have the heart to make it, some never really had the talent. Those cases are simple enough: somebody made a bad career decision and had to pay for it. It happens to everyone, not just athletes.

But some of these guys — my friend was one of them — are persuaded that they do have the talent needed to make it. Sports agents convince them that they ought to devote their lives to a professional career. And some of those agents are not the slightest bit interested in whether they are telling the athletes the truth.

These unscrupulous agents play on the athletes' natural desire to believe that they are good enough to make it big. They use the athletes' pride to lure them into dedicating themselves to a sport, for the simple reason that the agents stand to gain something from that mistaken belief.

Agents get a percentage of the money that their clients are able to draw. Good agents make a lot of money because they get a reputation for protecting their clients' interests well, and therefore they get a lot of outstanding prospects to manage.

But some of these agents just dabble in the business. Not interested in really developing a reputation, they are content to make the smaller sums of money that can be gleaned from getting a few questionable athletes to go for small contracts that they eventually lose.

Athletes need to be aware of these people. They need to watch out for them and check out the people who claim to have "their best interests at heart."

It isn't easy. It is far easier to listen to these people for the simple reason that they are invariably saying things that the athlete wants to believe. And everybody tends to believe what they want.

But the risk inherent in pursuing a professional athletic career is great enough. Every sport carries with it the possibility of injury, and every athlete needs to be in the right places at the right times to make it big.

Increasing the chances of disappointment is not a good move, especially when the deck is already stacked against you. It's something that simply has to be avoided in order to preserve the greatest probability of success.

Even if avoiding it means having to resist the temptation to believe what you wish to be true.

Dreaming is one thing. Ignoring reality is something else, and something dangerous.

Independents make history with volleyball wins

By STEVE ADAMS
State Press

The Indies and the Thundering Heard made history Monday night, becoming the first two independent teams to shut out the Greeks in A and B league volleyball in the same year.

The Indies and the Thundering Heard captured the men's A and B intramural volleyball championships Monday night. This was the first year, according to intramural department records, that a fraternity team has not won at least one of the championships.

"It's a terrible thing to say, but our main goal was to beat the fraternities," said Richard Wall, manager of the Indies.

"This year, I think, was an off year for the fraternities." The Indies bumped off Phi Delta Theta in two straight games, 15-12 and 15-9, to capture the men's A title.

"This feels real good," said Wall. "We put together a pretty good independent team, other than the Patchwork, who was the only other independent team."

The game against the Phi Delts may have looked like an easy time because of the scores, but according to Wall, that was no indication of what really happened.

"Patchwork beat us the first game of the regular season, and they were really good," Wall said.

"But when the Phi Delts knocked them out in the playoffs, we got really worried about what our chances against them would be like."

An important key to the Indies winning the championship was keeping the Phi Delts crowd out of the game.

"We had to make sure we didn't let their crowd get to us and that it didn't break our concentration," said Wall.

"That is how the Phi Delts beat Patchwork. Our strategy worked," Wall said.

The Phi Delts were not the only ones who had fans routing on their team. The Indies had the support of the ASU women's volleyball team.

"We happen to know the girls on the team, and since we go to all their games, they were nice enough to come and cheer us on for our games," Wall said.

The Phi Delts did play extremely well, according to Wall, and they were blocking especially well.

"They never got the ball up as well as we did, and that was a determining factor in our victory," Wall said.

As far as the victory being in the bag after the first game, it was not until the last point that the Indies could breathe a sigh of relief and carry home the championship.

In the men's B championship, the Thundering Heard had a much more difficult time disposing of Sigma Nu, carrying the best-of-three series to the limit, winning 7-15, 15-9, 15-11.

"We did really well, and we all played as a team," said Bret Sackett, manager of the Thundering Heard.

The championship started off badly for the Thundering Heard when Troy Balsley, one of their key players, broke his finger in the first game and had to be replaced. They lost that game by eight points.

"We were a little worried when Troy left the game, but we knew that we would just have to try that much harder to win," Sackett said.

Work hard they did, as they came back strong and won the next two games to win the championship and keep their overall record unblemished at 6-0.

"I was really disappointed that for all the teams that signed up to play volleyball, so few teams actually stuck with it," said Sackett.

"Even so, we played all-out in every game up through the final.

"We knew that if we got too sure of ourselves, that would be a sure way to blow any chance we might have to win."

Sackett went on to add that he feels a lot of people took them lightly because of their name.

"Since we weren't Greek, many teams probably thought that it would be a cake walk to beat us," said Sackett.

"I guess our victory speaks for itself."

ASU, other Top 20 schools try to move up in AP rankings

Staff and Wire Reports

ASU faces Utah this week, a game the Devils are picked to win by 25 points. But if the Devils are to rise in the national rankings, the other Top Twenty games are crucial.

The big game of the week pits No. 2 Alabama against No. 6 Penn State.

It rarely snows in Tuscaloosa, Ala., but a few flakes — alias snow jobs — were sighted this week.

Tuscaloosa is the site of Bryant-Denny Stadium where second-ranked Alabama (7-0) tangles with No. 6 Penn State (6-0) on Saturday and where never is heard a discouraging word that might find its way onto Penn State's bulletin board.

For example:
•Alabama linebacker Vantriese Davis:

"It's a personal challenge for me to go up against a great back like D.J. Dozier because ever since I was in high school, he was one of the running backs I admired the most."

•Alabama defensive tackle Derrick Slaughter: "I look at their fullback, Steve Smith, like a small 'Refrigerator' type of guy. He's got speed and he's big."

•Alabama fullback Kerry Goode: "The Penn State teams I have played in the past haven't been as sound as this year's team."

Both teams enjoyed surprisingly easy tuneups last week, Alabama thrashing Tennessee, 56-28, and Penn State pounding Syracuse, 42-3.

On paper, Alabama has played the tougher schedule. But Ohio State got off to a slow start, and Florida, Notre Dame and Tennessee all are under .500.

Alabama is a 6-point favorite. The pick is Alabama, 24-17.

Last week's prediction record was 38 right and 13 wrong for a percentage of .749; for the season, 255-96-7—.727. Against the point spread, last week's mark was 20-16-1—.555; for the year, 115-111-4—.509.

No. 3 Nebraska (favored by 17½) at Colorado: Nebraska 35-13.

No. 4 Michigan (by 16) at Indiana: Michigan 28-14.

No. 5 Oklahoma (by 33) at Iowa State: Oklahoma 45-10.

No. 7 Auburn (by 9) at No. 13 Mississippi State: Auburn 27-13.

Oregon at No. 8 Washington (by 25): Washington 31-13.

Utah at No. 9 Arizona State (by 25):

Arizona State 49-17.

Rice at No. 10 Texas A&M (by 30½): Texas A & M 45-7.

Northwestern at No. 11 Iowa (by 32½): Iowa 38-14.

North Carolina at No. 12 LSU (by 10): LSU 24-17.

No. 14 Arkansas (by 10) at Houston: Upset Special of the Week . . . Houston 24-20.

California at No. 15 Arizona (by 32½): Arizona 37-17.

No. 16 Clemson (by 10½) at No. 20 North Carolina State: Second Upset Special . . . North Carolina State 30-28.

Washington State at No. 17 UCLA (by 14): UCLA 28-17.

No. 18 Southern Methodist (by 4½) at Texas: SMU 24-14.

Southern California at No. 19 Stanford (by 1): Stanford 24-21.

NFL cancels plans for exhibition at UA

TUCSON (AP) — A planned National Football League preseason game in August between the Denver Broncos and Green Bay Packers in Tucson has been canceled, officials said Wednesday.

NFL Expansion Ltd., a group headed by NFL Hall of Fame quarterback Bart Starr, had planned to sponsor the Aug. 14 exhibition game at Arizona Stadium on the UA campus.

Bob Bockrath, the school's associate athletic director, said, "NFL Expansion Ltd. unexpectedly notified us they are no longer interested in sponsoring a professional football game and are withdrawing their commitment to sponsor the game. They indicated that they could not find a commercial sponsor willing to underwrite the game."

Several former UA players currently are on the Broncos' roster, including wide receiver Vance Johnson, defensive back Randy Robbins and linebacker Ricky Hunley.

Proceeds from the game would have benefited the Arizona Homebuilders Arthritis Association and the Vince Lombardi Cancer Research Fund.
