Greeks' board puts Phi Deltas on probation

By KARI BLAND
State Press

The ASU chapter of the Phi Delta Theta fraternity was placed on social probation Wednesday night for a Feb. 10 incident during which a pledge was tied to a chaise lounge, hanged from a second-story balcony and sprayed with water.

The Greek Relations Board met last night in a closed meeting at the Theta Chi fraternity house, 410 Adelphi Drive, to hear testimony about the incident.

Greek Relations Board Chairman Alex Duhamel said the probation prohibits the fraternity from holding "any functions sponsored by Phi Delta Theta at their house, such as formals."

Duhamel said the duration of the probation will not be less than three months or longer than one year. The probation is subject to review.

"We feel that social probation was the best fit punishment for Phi Delta Theta because it decreases the likelihood of the occurrence of any type of incident that may put the Arizona Beta Chapter's charter in jeopardy with their national chapter," he said.

Duhamel said the ASU chapter also was placed on probation by its national chapter, which is calling the situation "a crisis."

"I think the punishment was good," he said. "I'm happy with it."

The investigation stems from an incident during which freshman Anthony Palmeri was hanged from the balcony of the fraternity house while tied to a chaise lounge after he

LGAU to pursue lawsuit despite criteria deletion

By DARRIN HOSTETLER
State Press

The lawsuit filed by the Lesbian and Gay Academic Union will not be affected by the deletion of funding criteria for campus organizations in the Associated Students Senate bylaws, an LGAU co-chair said Wednesday.

Denise Heap said: "There will be no impact on our decision (to file suit). We plan to pursue this."

The LGAU filed a lawsuit in federal district court Tuesday against ASU, several administrators and 16 ASASU senators and executive officers.

The suit alleges that ASASU, by denying the LGAU funding, violated the group's rights to free speech, assembly, association, equal protection and due process of law guaranteed by the first and 14th amendments.

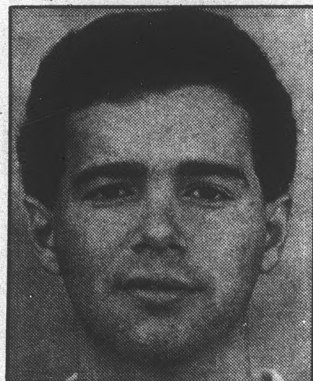

The senators were given formal notice of their status as defendants in the suit during the senate meeting Tuesday night.

Later the same night, the senate passed Senate Bill 60, which eliminated all guidelines that restrained the funding process.

The bill struck the requirements that prohibited the senate from funding "controversial" groups or clubs whose "primary purpose is to promote a sexual preference." The LGAU was denied funding under these guidelines.

Heap said she was "very pleased the senate repealed the bylaws, but we are attacking what they have done in the past."

The lawsuit and deletion of the funding guidelines were prominent topics in the senate offices Wednesday, as senators named in the suit defended their actions and speculated on the outcome of the LGAU's action.

College of Business Sen. John Colombo, who opposed the deletion of the guidelines, angrily asserted the senate's right to deny the LGAU funds.

"I have failed to see any educational potential in the LGAU," he said. "I have denied funding to them in the past and will continue to deny funding on that basis."

"It's annoying that because we didn't fund them, they take us to court to try and force student representatives to do so."

"I have been acting on behalf of my constituents and personal beliefs, and I won't be forced into funding any group because they are a special class."

Colombo denied that the senate had violated the LGAU's constitutional rights.

"We just aren't granting them an endorsement in the form of funding," he said.

"They don't have a right to be funded. They have a right to request funding, and nobody has stopped them from doing that."

College of Liberal Arts Sen. Mark Isenberg, a defendant in the lawsuit who voted to strike the funding criteria, said, "If the LGAU put half as much energy into fund-raising as they do suing us, they would have more money that they know what to do with."

Isenberg said the deletion of the funding guidelines was not a direct response to the lawsuit.

"We've been debating this issue for months," he said. "The lawsuit was not the catalyst for our actions."

College of Law Sen. Phil Stanfield, a supporter of the LGAU's funding efforts, said the bylaw changes would "probably not seriously affect the suit legally."

"But attitude-wise, the change may mean a lot."

Stanfield agreed with Isenberg that the senate did not change the bylaws because of the lawsuit but said the suit did have some effect on the senate's actions.

"I'm not accusing senators of being scared," he said. "For once, everybody in the senate saw the issue clearly."

Stanfield said the lack of bylaw criteria will complicate the funding process because each group and its activities will have to be considered individually.

Many groups that have not received funding in the past, such as religious organizations, will clog the process by increasing the number of applicants, he said.

"The appropriations process will be a zoo," he said.

Stanfield said he may try to get an LGAU funding bill in front of the senate.

"If that gets through, well, we'll see what happens," he said. "If it gets denied, I would guess there might be an amendment to the complaint."

"Just because the discrimination is no longer codified (in the bylaws) doesn't make it any less wrong."

Stanfield said no one is trying to force the senate into funding the LGAU.

"There are ways they could be legitimately denied funds," he said. "For instance, a good argument could be made that the LGAU does not adequately represent gay students. Maybe they are too radical."

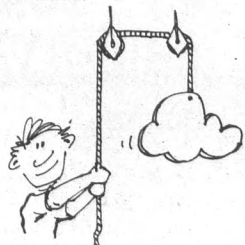

"They just can't be denied just because they are the LGAU."

Senate, House to consider separate bills on King holiday

By VICKIE CHACHERE
State Press

PHOENIX — An Arizona Senate committee will vote today whether to create a state Martin Luther King Jr. holiday, while the Arizona House of Representatives considers a similar bill.

The Senate Government Operations committee's decision follows more than three hours of testimony Tuesday from both sides of the holiday issue, including Valley religious and labor leaders and Mechem supporters.

Committee member and House Minority Leader Alan Stephens said Tuesday night he did not know if the testimony persuaded any of the six Republicans on the committee to vote in favor of Senate Bill 1083.

"We're going to sleep on it and perhaps during the night those people will search their conscience," he said.

The House will vote on a similar measure today, after its bill was passed by a House Rules Committee Tuesday.

About 500 people crowded the committee's hearing room for the three-hour debate. Approximately 30 speakers testified in favor of the bill before the predominantly black audience.

Another five speakers urged the committee to kill the bill, some saying the measure dishonored Presidents Lincoln and Washington because it combines their birthdays into one holiday. The opposition also told the committee not to approve the bill until FBI records on King's activities are released.

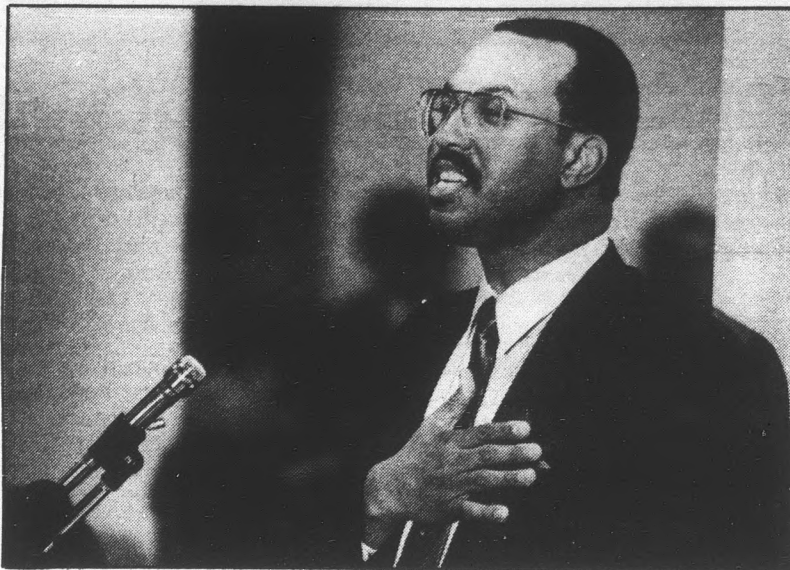

Sen. Greg Lunn, D-Tucson and a co-sponsor of the bill, said the Legislature's support of the bill would imply Arizona is against institutionalized segregation and racism.

"This piece of legislation is less to honor a man than it is a movement that he has come to symbolize in the popular conscience," he said.

Rev. Warren Stewart, chairman of Arizonans for a Martin Luther King Jr. Holiday, said King deserved a holiday because he represented American ideals, and should be honored as Presidents Lincoln and Washington.

"Was Martin Luther King Jr. a saint? No," Stewart said. "But Lincoln and Washington were not perfect."

He said Arizona needs the King holiday to repair its national image and to send a message to the rest of What's Tempe's real motive?

Casey O'Hara is just a man who wants to provide a service to the ASU community.

Standing in his way is an unemotional city council, which is once again stamping approval on legislation that could interrupt O'Hara's small roadside business.

City Councilman William Ream said the city is afraid that O'Hara may be sued and the city would have to pay for any amount in a judgment against the hot dog stand.

One has to wonder just what the Tempe City Council is concerned about, or what its motives are.

Casey O'Hara, a three-year vendor who has provided good food and service for those who need a quick lunch, has neither the resources nor the need to pay a high premium for a $1 million insurance policy.

It is no secret that the Tempe City Council was a hostile board when it removed the ordinance requiring mobile carts to move every hour. One must wonder just what has precipitated the council's passing of a resolution requiring vendors to carry that much personal-injury and liability insurance.

What incidents could occur? Will someone choke on a hot dog? Will the potato chip rack suddenly decide to attack Joe Student as he puts extra mustard on his lunch? Will O'Hara's change machine spit quarters and put someone's eye out? We would like to know the answer to these questions.

But the council seems to operate on a double standard. Vendors like O'Hara must, by law, obtain the insurance within the next 30 days, yet Tempe restaurants do not have any obligation to carry that same insurance.

It seems as though restaurateurs have pressured the council into creating a law that may force these "vagabond vendors" out of business.

Ream said that if O'Hara cannot obtain the policy, the city may make an exception to the rule and allow Casey's Hot Dog Stand to continue in business. We would have to see that to believe it.

O'Hara is doing nothing more than fulfilling his American dream, but the Tempe City Council is making it a nightmare.

Let O'Hara keep doing what he does best: selling good hot dogs at a reasonable price.

Subtle messages of 'Amerika' missed by liberals

This has been an interesting season on television. First, CBS runs their hostile anti-nuke program called "My Dissident Mom," and now, ABC is running the moderate mini-series "Amerika."

Moderate? Well, even though the idea if a Sovietized America may seem extreme, the actually underlying point is moderate (as well as important).

David Wyre, the director of the series, even admitted this. He said that the Soviet occupation as portrayed in the mini-series is not as harsh as it has actually been in other areas (e.g., Poland, Afghanistan). He said, "... from a purely logical point... it was moderate." But that was exactly his intention. He wasn't out to show the Soviets as aggressive barbarians who invade the United States. No, his point is a subtle one.

People seem to be having a hard time picking up the point of the series.

I know in our room, my roommates and I have a phone answering machine. This week we have posed the question, "How do you feel about the mini-series 'Amerika'?" So far, the results are running about two to three against it. Judging by some of the comments left on the machine, it is obvious

A. Marcus Brnovich
Columnist

some people are missing the point.

I hate to burst liberal bubbles out there, but the series is not anti-Soviet propaganda.

So what is the point of the controversial mini-series?

The point that "Amerika" is trying to make is that apathy and internal decay will lead to the fall of America. Our country will not be overcome by some foreign power (as long as we are strong militarily), but a slowly rotting of the democratic conditions will lead to an eventual collapse.

When was the last time you got out and voted? Hmmm. Well, it doesn't seem like a lot of people realizing what a privilege voting is.

The great Constitution, which is the basis of the freedoms we enjoy, will celebrate its 200th anniversary this year. Have you ever sat back and thought about how great the Constitution really is?

Something I've never seen on this campus is a pro-Constitution rally. Instead, what I see are groups demanding that the U.S. government do this or that. Now, I realize this people have a right to their opinion, just like I have a right to mine.

"Amerika" is showing how, if certain factions are allowed to dominate the political scene with no opposition, they can impose any form of government. With no one caring, or interested, a small minority can rise to control the majority before enough concerned people realize what it happening (e.g., Nazi Germany). It could be a communist totalitarian state or a right-wing fascist state.

I'm encouraging everyone to try to watch the rest of the mini-series.

As you are watching, think about the Constitution. I know our country is not perfect, but as a line from the movie "Amerika" stated, "If democracy cannot survive here, then it doesn't have a chance anywhere."

A. Marcus Brnovich is a junior majoring in political science.

If you aren't a devil, be a wildcat

Editor:

Please allow me to take a quote from Dean Smith's book, "The Sun Devils: Eight Decades of Arizona State Football."

"What's in a name? A rose by any other name might smell as sweet, but an Arizona State team known as the Sahuaros, or the Cactus Wrens, or the Rattlesnakes might just smell."

For as long as people have been expressing their ideas, other people have been there to criticize them. To be sure, constructive criticism is the cornerstone of change, but there are those who are more obsessed with publicity than with practicality. ASU CAUSA chairman Mark Barry and "born-again" Californian Jack Thompson are two such individuals. Their absurd campaign against Sparky, the Sun Devil mascot, is just one more example of the manipulation of public sentiment for personal gain.

Mr. Thompson's successful campaigns in California high schools have given him the spark to try and bring his act to Arizona, and a major university. He obviously has no idea what the Sun Devil means to all who have experienced Arizona State. Nor does he know the history of the Sun Devil here in Tempe. A quick history lesson from Dean Smith's book is therefore required.

Selection of the Sun Devil name in 1946 was a stroke of genius. It gave Arizona State a name unique among American Colleges — one of climatic identification and aggressive purpose. Formation of the Sun Angel Foundation in the summer of 1946 brought about a growing clamor for a new start and a new name for Arizona State teams.

M.O. Best, a regent and Arizona State supporter, is credited with choosing the name, the Sun Angels, because they were unselfish benefactors of a reborn college in the Sun Country. Soon the Sun Angels were urging Arizona State students and administrators to adopt a complimentary name — Sun Devils.

A State Press editorial on Oct. 11, 1946 endorsed the Sun Devil: We are on our way to a greater Arizona State. The change to a striking new name would be one step toward that goal.

On Nov. 8, the student body voted on the change. It was an overwhelming victory, 816 to 196.

The Sun Devil mascot had hardly been adopted when students devised a maroon and gold costume, fork and devil headpiece for a cheerleader to wear at football games. Sparring opposing players, performing gymnastics stunts, and racing into the stands to plead for louder cheering, the personified Sun Devil became a tradition.

What rational person would honestly believe that having a "Smurf" for a mascot rather than Sparky would affect the basic moral fibre of the school?

CAUSA believes that having the pope in Sun Devil Stadium is the "height of idiocy." They are just using the pope's visit as an excuse to start an uproar. The pope hasn't stated a concern, so why should Mark Barry? I think people who truly love their religion and trust in it don't concern themselves with pettiness such as this.

Maybe Sparky should be put on trial for promoting the devil, just as it happened years ago with the Salem witch trials.

This is a university, not a high school. You are not forced to be here. If Sparky offends you, leave. No one is asking you to stay. Transfer to Tucson and become a Wildcat.

Let's not forget the alumni. Since the Sun Devil was adopted in 1946, a lot of people have passed through ASU. I guarantee that they will unite to fight for Sparky. This is one battle that our students and alumni will back unquestioned.

Barry said his group will follow the lead of any group interested in banning Sparky. I welcome the challenge, and I will back any group that would fight this vital battle.

It is tragic that semi-fanatics like Thompson and his cohorts are permitted to subjugate the well-intentioned spirit of the schools in this country. Let's not let it happen here.

Stand up, ASU, and be heard now and not be sorry later. You remember the last governor's election, don't you?

Circumstances of Sun Imp's birth are mysterious

By CAROLYN NELSON
State Press

How dare self-proclaimed "born again" Christian Jack Thompson, the leader of a movement to ban ASU's mascot, say that "Sparky" is the emblem of the devil?

After all, everybody knows that ASU's Sun Imp mascot was sparked by a pen in or near the hand of Walt Disney, right?

Well... maybe.

Perhaps befitting his impish image, the Sun Devil is surrounded by a myriad of conflicting accounts of his creation.

In the beginning — 1946, to be exact — a special committee organized by the Phoenix Thunderbirds, an alumni group later to become the Sun Angels, met to create a team name more in keeping with the area's newly minted "Valley of the Sun" image.

The committee believed the old logo, the Bulldogs, which served the teams for 24 years, was too commonplace. Arizona State College needed a mascot that would help promote the institution in its post-World War II growth spurt.

Diehard Bulldog supporters suggested Sun Dogs. Another choice was Devil Dogs, a synthesis of the old name and "dust devils" — small wind storms common to the desert.

An article in the Dec. 15, 1961 issue of the State Press credits Arthur E. Burgher, the committee chairman and eventual first president of the Sun Angel Foundation, with combining the two suggestions and arriving at Sun Devils. However, ASU historian Dean Smith wrote in his 1979 book, "The Sun Devils," that two-time regent and staunch Arizona State supporter M.O. Best invented the moniker.

The book, published by the ASU Alumni Association, chronicles the history of football at Arizona State.

Additionally, the Tau Sigma Phi fraternity receives mention in the 1947 "Sahuaro" yearbook for its efforts in finding a new name for the school's varsity teams.

In November 1946, the student body conducted an unofficial vote on adopting the new mascot. The Sun Devil triumphed over Pete Jr. the Bulldog with 81 percent of the support.

The insignia was touted on campus as the only one of its kind, and the 1947 yearbook featured a drawing of an elfin Sun Imp with large, pointy ears and a sharp beard.

The figure known today as "Sparky" has been attributed to Berk Anthony, an illustrator then working for Walt Disney.

According to the 1961 State Press story, Phoenix attorney Walter E. Craig contacted Anthony, a former schoolmate. Craig was the vice president of the Sun Angels when the article was published.

However, the Tempe Daily News reported that Donn Kinzle, the track coach at the time of the name change, enlisted the artistic talent behind the running fiend, and it was no mere Disney employee who penned the Sun Devil.

"It was Kinzle who enlisted famed cartoonist and filmmaker Walt Disney's help to design the impish Sun Devil . . ." pronounced an article from Oct. 10, 1981.

The "Sparky" character first came to public view in an advertisement for Bright's Style Shop in the Sept. 26, 1947 State Press. Wearing a shirt with the design drawn on it, "Sunny Angel" tipped ASC coeds on Bright's sales and new merchandise.

On Friday, Nov. 14, 1947 — the eve of the football game against UA — the running devil made its debut on the masthead of the campus paper. No explanation of the figure ever appeared in the State Press.

Similarly, the Arizona Statesman, the Alumni Association's newsletter, made no mention at that time of the origin of the insignia.

Could the two groups who had supported the Sun Devil most enthusiastically a year before, the students and the alumni, have become so blase that Walt Disney's creative contributions received no press?

Even the small details of "Sparky's" genesis are the subject of disagreement.

The logo was not trademarked at the time it was drawn, a fact which almost drove the University to adopt a new insignia for licensing purposes in the early 1970s. However, the figure is identified as the "Disney designed copyrighted 'Sun Devil'" in the April 15, 1948 Statesman.

Although the 1961 article in the State Press states that Anthony drew the Sun Devil free of charge, a letter regarding the copyright status of the emblem lists a cost of $75. The letter was written May 19, 1960, by Dick Finley of Associated Students of ASU.

So who created Sparky? Walt Disney cartoonist Berk Anthony? Disney himself? None of the above?

Perhaps only Sparky knows.

Perhaps his secret accounts for his impish grin.

Is ASU headed down the road to Stonehenge?

By PATRICK J. KUCERA
State Press

In the movie "Footloose," actor John Lithgow portrays a preacher bent on ridding his little Colorado community of rock 'n' roll because he believes it causes an increase in alcohol abuse, drug use and fornication. Yet, Lithgow realizes he's caught in his own trap when he tells an overzealous citizen who wants to burn books, "Sin does not reside in these books. It is in man's heart."

Like the charges against rock 'n' roll, some individuals contend the ASU community is being lured into sin because of "Sparky," our beloved mascot.

There seems to be growing concern that Sparky is satanic and leading impressionable college students down the road of the dark side, complete with virgin sacrifice, trips to Stonehenge and the casting of spells.

On the other side of the coin, many see Sparky as harmless and cute and not the denotation of evil in the modern era.

The debate centers around a number of theological questions — none of which have easy answers.

The main source used in the fight against or support for ASU's mascot is unquestionably the Bible. From Genesis to Revelations, Scripture concerning Satan, Lucifer, et al. is readily available. A profound fear of Satan's power grasping the college community by the neck has the concern of those who feel threatened by the fallen angel.

"Thou shalt not have any other gods before Me. Thou shalt not make yourself an idol . . ." says the Book of Exodus. Sparky, some would claim, violates both passages. As avid ASU fans pound their hands on their knees and scream, "C'mon, Devils! Kill 'em," and the proliferation of Sun Devil paraphernalia is apparent, we seem to be putting the god of Sun Devil athletics above the true God.

However, many Christians would contend that we do not worship the "Devils," but support a local sports collective whose mascot is appropriate to the hell-like terrain and atmosphere of the Valley of the Sun. It is also maintained that no proof has been produced showing that ASU alumni, students, faculty, staff or supporters worship the Sparky logo and personify him to the point where Danforth Chapel is used for Sparky services at midnight during a full moon.

Of course, other Scriptural quotations can be used, but like much of the Bible, interpretation heavily influences what many believe the "good book" says.

Even the denominations within Christianity cannot agree if the use of a "demon" mascot can be construed as unintentional praise of the Prince of Darkness.

The Catholic Church believes that Satan's power is limited and man can overcome it if he believes in Jesus Christ. But the Church does not seem worried about the issue, as Pope

High school students resist mascot change

By AMY FRISCHKNECHT
State Press

School spirit should be an important characteristic in the life of a high school student body. Such support and backing is exactly what a high school needs to withstand the new movement to abolish mascots thought to have hidden satanic meaning.

Jack Thompson, a born-again Christian and leader of this movement, is currently working to persuade citizens of Apple Valley, California, to abandon their town's high school Sun Devil mascot.

Kylie A. Hendricks, a senior at Apple Valley High and feature editor of her high school newspaper, said school spirit has definitely picked up since this controversy began in 1984.

"You ask anybody on campus how they feel about it and if they want the (Sun Devil) changed, and obviously you are in Sun Devil territory, so you're not going to find people who want to change it.

"I'd say there are about 98 percent (of the students) who say 'leave it alone,'" said Hendricks. "But there is that two percent who are very into the Bible and don't feel it is a good representation for a bunch of high school kids."

Hendricks said the majority of the Apple Valley community is also in favor of keeping the mascot:

"We have thousands of alumni who live here and they're on our side, obviously. If the name does change, the drugs and the alcohol and everything any other campus has is not going to change."

Hendricks said the school had a band banner with a picture of the Sun Devil on it, but that they recently changed the banner in an effort to "calm it down."

"It's still spirited," said Hendricks. "Just for these people (the concerned Christians group) we've kind of calmed down what they've picked on."

"It's just so they realize we're not changing because of them," said Hendricks. "Whatever little things we can do, we'll do it but we won't change everything because of what they want."

Hendricks went on to say that Thompson is doing all he can do by gathering signatures from citizens who feel the mascot should be changed, but said that many of the signatures are coming from people who do not live in the community.

"Half of his signatures have come from people who drive through town," she said. "Apple Valley is a stop before you get to Las Vegas. He's not going from house to house, so who knows who these people are? You don't know that they're actually community people or even if they know the school."

Thompson said he feels that by the school's action of changing the banner, the pressure is starting to break Apple Valley already.

"People will begin to realize what effects this (mascot) has," he said. "We don't hate these people. We love them."

Thompson denied the charge that his signatures were invalid and said his group has received them from registered citizens of Apple Valley.

"They would have to be registered in order for them to go up in front of the school board," he said.

Hendricks said the controversy will not stop until a vote is conducted and the only people who will be able to vote are

Movie host pleads no contest to sexual battery

By BEN McCONNELL
State Press

Ed Muscare, a.k.a. Edmus Scarey, the former Channel 15 movie host, pleaded no contest in Florida Wednesday to charges of sexual battery involving his 13-year-old nephew.

Muscare, 54, was released on his own recognizance from Orange County Circuit Court in Orlando, Fla. A sentencing hearing with Judge Ted P. Coleman is scheduled for April 21.

Tim Berry, spokesman for the Florida state attorney's office, said Muscare probably will spend a year in prison, followed by 15 years of probation, if he consents to counseling.

Muscare was not available in Florida for comment.

Court documents said Muscare performed fellatio on his teenage nephew.

The case stems from an August 1986 sexual encounter Muscare allegedly had at a family reunion with the 13-year-old. The boy's name was not revealed.

After resigning from his "Friday Night at the Frights" duties on KNXV-TV and dodging authorities, Muscare turned himself in to San Diego, Calif. authorities in mid-October.

Tempe resident Scott E. Long, who headed a short-lived committee that sought to petition Muscare to return to Channel 15, said the former host's admission of guilt is a "sad, sad thing. I'm very disappointed in what (Muscare) did to the boy."

"Maybe through this experience he will learn something that we all should already know," Long said.

John Paul II will still speak here on his trip through "Sun Devil Country."

Certainly the name or logo of ASU is innocuous at best. However, very fundamentalist groups swear Satan is affecting the students at schools who keep a demon mascot. Unfortunately, the stripping of a Sun Devil mascot at a high school in California resulted in the school mascot being changed to the "Aztecs." Historians can verify the atrocities the Aztecs did under their gruesome reign.

One must wonder if a non-demon-sounding mascot would be acceptable, despite the connotations of the new mascot — i.e., would Hitler High be somehow less "evil" than Beelzebub Prep?

The use of the devil at ASU is taken out of context. The "Sun Devil" is never mentioned in the Bible or any other religious manifesto known to man. The "devil," however, has been used for a variety of purposes. C.S. Lewis' "The Screwtape Letters" is a book of letters from one devil to another. One could hardly call Lewis an occultic practitioner.

But the effect of the devil at ASU seems to be non-existent. ASU was recently dropped from being the nation's number-one party school, and churches serving the University community tell of active student participation.

If sin is rampant on this campus, one could accuse Sparky of the problem. But one would have a difficult time blaming the same rampant sin at the University of Texas on the Longhorn.

Should ASU abandon the "Sun Devil"? Of course not. But for those who are offended by the "Sparky" character, they can rest assured that if their faith is sincere, they have nothing to worry about, and no one is going to convert to Satanism by attaching a "Sun Devils are Number One!" bumpersticker to their car.

After all, sin does not reside in the bumpersticker or the stadium or the sweatshirt; sin resides in men's hearts.

those who are involved with the school.

Thompson said the principal of Apple Valley High School, Tony Balsamo, is a graduate of ASU and he "brought the (satanic) feeling with him" when he came to the high school.

"You can't ignore the statistics of the high drop-out rate, the suicides, drugs and alcohol," he said.

Thompson said he would be coming to ASU and he hopes for the same success here.

Laura Gabler, principal secretary at Apple Valley High School, said the school mascot was voted on by the student body when the school first opened 20 years ago in 1967.

"The name had nothing to do with Mr. Balsamo," she said. "The students suggested the names and then voted on them. Sun Devil was the one that won."

Hendricks said if it ever did come to the point where the school would have to change the mascot, they would want to keep desert and Apple Valley in the name.

"Someone came up with the Happy Apples," she said. "It became a joke around school. What if they did change the mascot? Can you imagine the costume of a Fruit of the Loom running down the football field?"

Hendricks said no matter where Thompson goes and what school he fights with over a mascot change, there will be a fight with the students of Apple Valley:

"No matter how long the mascot has been with the school — if it's been five years, 15 years or 20 years — it doesn't matter. Everyone is going to fight to keep it.

"The logo hasn't harmed the school," she explained. "The only thing that has harmed the school were the 'bad' students who walked onto campus. They walked on campus before they saw the mascot and they had the problem before they walked onto the campus."

Disabled child care topic of new classes

By MICHAEL ROWELL
State Press

Arizona is in need of specialists in the care of handicapped preschool children, but until recently ASU had no program to fulfill it.

Two courses are being offered for the first time this semester as part of the College of Education's Early Intervention Specialists Project.

The project is the result of a $270,000 three-year grant approved last year by the U.S. Office of Education. The first $80,000 of the grant was received Aug. 1.

The project is designed to:

- Educate specialists to develop, supervise and administer appropriate services for toddlers and preschool children with special needs.
- Prepare specialists certified to teach preschool children with special needs.
- Lead to a master's of education degree with a concentration in early intervention.

Project Director Thomas Roberts said the program is interdisciplinary, integrating courses in special education, early childhood education, family studies, nursing and social work.

He added the federal government is supplying the grant in hopes that a program will be developed to assure people will be trained to work with children with special needs.

Roberts said special needs include sensory, physical, language and learning problems.

Project Coordinator Sarah Robinson said although there is evidence of a special problem, it is difficult to determine its exact nature at such a young age.

About 24 students are enrolled in the current courses, Developmental Assessment for Preschool Children and Program/Instructional Management.

A summer course and two fall classes also are planned.

Perry Hill, an Associate Superintendent at Tempe Elementary School District, said although the district does not have a shortage of people qualified to work with handicapped preschoolers, there will be a greater demand in the future.

played a joke on active members by stealing their food.

Palmeri said he "extremely deserved" to be hanged from the balcony and was rescued later by his pledge brothers.

He said fraternity members offered to let him down, but he refused because his "pledge brothers would be there to rescue me."

But Duhamel said the fraternity was "not found guilty of hazing because hazing is such a fine line, and everyone has their own definition on hazing, but it is serious."

He said the national chapter has mandated that the fraternity's pledge program be revamped.

Duhamel said the board considered other punishments, such as not allowing the fraternity to participate in intramurals, but decided they were not as encompassing as social probation.

"We could have restricted them from fall rush but that could have drastic effects on how strong their house is," he said. "We don't see that as very positive."

Duhamel said the fraternity also is being encouraged to bring a program called "Hazing on Trial" to ASU to "educate the Greek system on the possible implications of hazing" before the end of this semester.

Duhamel said the board heard testimony from the fraternity's president, pledge trainer and Palmeri, who still contends he was not hazed.

University policy prohibits any campus group, including fraternities, from participating in hazing.

The policy defines hazing as "any activity ... created, intentionally, whether on or off campus, by a group ... or a member of that group ... in which members or prospective members are subjected to activities which harass, intimidate, physically exhaust, impart pain, humiliate, cause undue mental fatigue or distress, or which cause mutilation or laceration of the body or parts of the body."

The policy includes activities that "have a foreseeable potential for resulting impersonal injury ... mental distress, panic, human degradation, or public embarrassment."

The policy states that "hazing cannot be justified on the premise that the participants took part voluntarily ... or that no injury in fact was suffered."

Interfraternity Council President John Halsey said the Greek Relations Board is made up of "cream of the crop" fraternity representatives, including past presidents and executive officers.

"Their purpose is to hear disciplinary sanctions," he said. "They also hear University conduct matters."

Anyone can file a complaint with the board or the University can recommend a matter be investigated.

the country that the Arizona Legislature is "devoid of miopic, narrow political viewpoints."

"The only reason that they would have for voting against this holiday is that they are racist," Stewart said. "You are judging the man, his movement, his message, by the color of his skin, not the content of his character."

Eldridge Cleaver, a former militant black leader who is now a conservative Mormon, drew objections from the audience when he told the committee that Martin Luther King did not deserve a holiday.

Cleaver, also a former leader of the Black Panthers who was brought in from California by the John Birch Society to testify, said many great men have lived, but there should not be a day set aside for each one.

"I think this is a grave mistake to turn (King) into an object of idolatry and construct a cult around his image," Cleaver said.

"I strongly object, from the bottom of my heart, that free men and women gathering in solemn assembly can be intimidated and told that the only reason that they would vote against this holiday is that they are racist," he said.

Cleaver accused holiday supporters of threatening to withdraw black votes for some legislators if the holiday was not approved, adding he would be considered a "white racist" for speaking against the King holiday.

"You are trampling on Martin Luther King's grave when you use the very same tactics to get people to vote for this bill as Martin Luther King died fighting against," he said.

So You're Going to Graduate, Congratulations . . .

So you're going to graduate.

Congratulations!

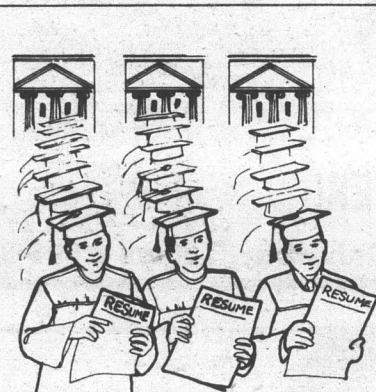

After years of study, it's time to leave college, get a job, and start your career.

That's a big change in your life. Are you prepared for it?

How will you find a job?

Use Want Ads? Send resumes.
Use Placement Services? Send resumes.
Use Referrals? Send resumes.

Send a lot of resumes.

Each semester millions of students graduate from thousands of colleges and enter the job market.

How will they find jobs?

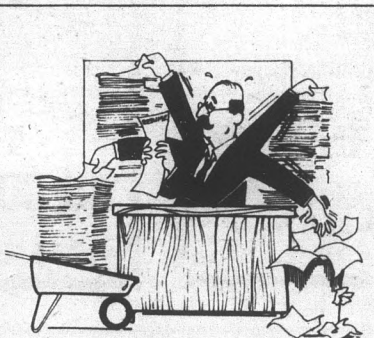

By sending resumes.

Resumes a lot like yours.

Because they're a lot like you. About the same age. About the same education. About the same qualifications.

All applying for the same jobs.

You have a lot of competition.

Consider the employer.

All those piles of resumes to plow through.

Your resume is in there . . . somewhere.

How is an employer to distinguish your resume from the hundreds of similar resumes he receives?

If only he had a chance to get to know you before he decided who to interview.

What a difference that would make! After all, employers don't hire qualifications. Employers hire people with qualifications.

But your written resume can only present your qualifications, not you.

Consider:

The Video Resume.

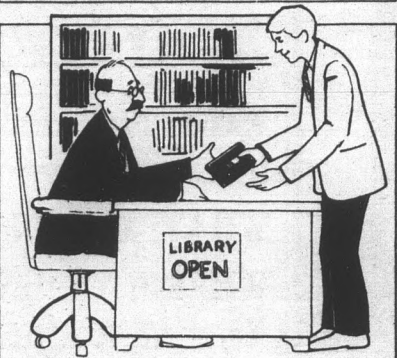

A pre-interview discussion with you on standard 1/2 inch VHS tape.

The Video Resume presents you with your qualifications to get you that job interview.

The Video Resume. Today's Resume. The Human Resume. The Living Resume.

Now an employer can get to know you before he decides who to interview.

And you can interview with employers who really want to interview you.

Now consider:

The Video Resume Library.

A database of Video Resumes used by employers.

Why would employers use the library?

Because interviewing is expensive and time consuming. Knowing more about the person, in addition to the qualifications, lets them make better interviewing decisions.

And that saves them time and money.

The Video Resume Library can introduce an employer to hundreds of qualified graduates.

It can introduce you to hundreds of potential employers.

Stop!

Sounds like a good idea. You'll think about it when you graduate.

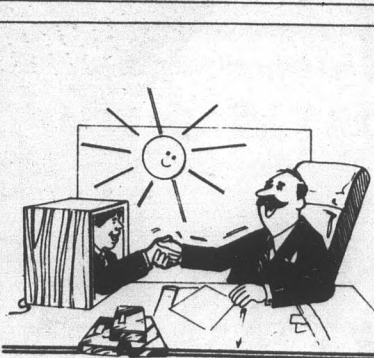

But you need your Video Resume now.

Why?

Because employers are interviewing now. They need your Video Resume now . . . in the Video Resume Library.

So don't miss the boat.

If you don't have the time for them now, they may not have the time for you later. By then they'll have made their hiring decisions.

What's it cost for a Video Resume?

The first 200 students pay only $49.95. That's almost a 40% savings off the regular $79.95 price.

What's it cost to join the Video Resume Library? Nothing! It's free. The library is wholly supported by subscribing employers.

So why wait?

ASASU sets up trip to regents meeting

State Press Staff Reports:

Associated Students of ASU is sponsoring a caravan to the Arizona Board of Regents meeting in Tucson Friday for students who want to voice their opinions on Gov. Evan Mecham's proposed $60 tuition increase.

The regents are expected to vote on Mecham's proposal after the governor presents a report explaining why the tuition increase is needed.

ASASU President Chris Cummiskey said interested students should call ASASU at 965-3161 to reserve car space.

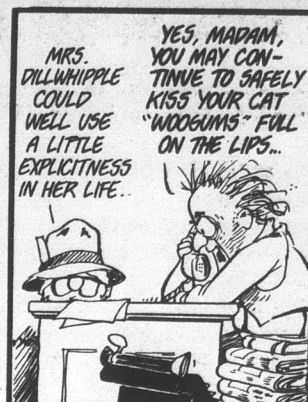

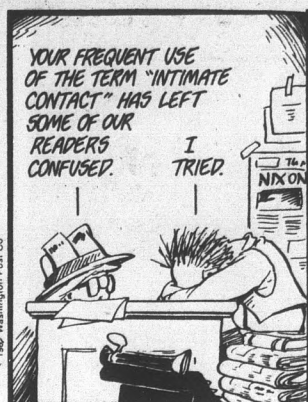

The caravan will leave at 8:30 a.m. from the ASASU office at the MU and return at 5:30 p.m.

"This is a good opportunity for students to make a statement to the board and Gov. Mecham during 'the call to the audience,'" Cummiskey said.

He said about four students randomly will be selected to address the board regarding tuition. So far, 10 students have signed up for the caravan.

Teacher says kids concerned about chances of nuclear war

By ED SCHUBERT
State Press

Children have a higher level of anxiety over the possibility of nuclear war than is generally realized, a Mesa elementary schoolteacher told about 15 members of United Campuses to Prevent Nuclear War in the MU Yavapai Room Tuesday.

Linda Hardert, who teaches gifted fourth, fifth and sixth graders, said her students frequently express fear of dying in a nuclear war.

"I've heard a lot of concern voiced by the kids," Hardert said. "I don't bring it up. They bring it up."

"They hear it in the news. They hear their parents discussing it. It's all around them."

She said she noticed the children's fear when one of her classes made "personality boxes," in which they put 12 objects representing their personalities, including "My greatest fear."

Hardert said she made a personality box too, and for her greatest fear included a small bracelet which said, "No more Hiroshimas."

She said her students didn't know what "Hiroshima" meant, but when they were told, a nine-year-old girl exclaimed, "At last there's someone who thinks the way I do!"

Hardert said she developed a two-week teaching unit designed to allow children to address their anxieties relating to nuclear war.

She said that during the first week, her students express their fears in poems and drawings. In the second week, they use poems and drawings to express ideas for a solution to the arms race.

"A problem is simply a solution that hasn't been found yet," Hardert said. "If we don't look at war as a problem we can solve, it will eventually destroy us."

She read a poem by a sixth-grade girl written when fears were explored during the first week of the unit:

*The day it hits we'll be standing,
Standing together or alone.
We'll be waiting for anything;
A few goodbyes and a few tears,
A few hugs and a few sharing fears.
We'll wait for the unexpected,
And expect to keep our fears inside.
When we see the light,
We'll hold on tight,
For soon there won't be anyone waiting,
Together or alone,

In the second week, when solutions were explored, Hardert said students frequently suggested world government, electing responsible officials and cooperating with the Soviet Union as means of preventing war.

She read a letter from one of her students to his counterpart in the Soviet Union, which began:

*"Dear Ivan,
Would you come to America to talk and make friends? That way when the adults die all of the kids will be friends and the world will be peaceful..."*

"(Children) are becoming more cynical about adults and adults finding solutions," Hardert said.

She said one of her students wrote a letter to President Reagan on the arms race, but it was never answered — not even with a form letter.

Hardert's husband, ASU sociology Professor Ron Hardert, also spoke at the meeting and said recent research shows that children's fears are greater if they perceive their parents and other adults to be unconcerned about nuclear war.

"When they send letters to Ronald Reagan in the White House and get no reply, not even from a flunky, they figure it's the same old stuff," he said. "The adult generation does not care."

Two-game win streak

Devil hoopsters hope to spoil Huskies' hopes

By STEVE BRENNAN
State Press

The ASU basketball team, at a high point this season following an upset victory over Pac-10 leader UCLA, hopes to add to its two-game win streak tonight as the Washington Huskies visit the University Activity Center at 8:00 p.m.

The Sun Devils, (4-10, 8-14), had their most successful road trip of the season last week, defeating the Trojans of USC Thursday and Pac-10 leader UCLA Monday.

ASU had not won back-to-back games since Dec. 20, when it defeated Fresno State, (67-66) and NAU, (76-54).

"I think the kids are starting to believe more in themselves and the team's ability to win," ASU coach Steve Patterson said. "So much of this game is mental, confidence, momentum and what we've lacked most of this year has been that we were going to get it done when it came down to the crunch time."

ASU is now out of the Pac-10 cellar, and could move near the middle of the conference with wins tonight and Saturday against Washington State.

"We had an awful lot of close ball games this season and have, generally, been disappointed in the end," Patterson said. "That's why both of these games (USC and UCLA) were so important."

Patterson also said the wins eased a great deal of pressure on the coaching staff.

"It helps our credibility because at some point you begin to sound kind of hollow unless there are some positive results," he said. "I asked Herb (assistant coach Herb Livsey), 'How long can they (the players) hang in there?'"

"And he just said to me, 'Probably as long as we can. If we can hang in there, they'll hang in there.' I think that's probably true."

The Huskies, picked as an early season conference contender, are 8-6 in the Pac-10 and 14-11 overall, and have gone 4-5 since they last met the Devils, an 81-72 Washington victory in Seattle Jan. 15.

"I'm sure they are a little disappointed about the way their season has gone," Patterson said. "They felt they would be in contention at this time, so I'm sure there is a high level of frustration on their team right now."

"But that kind of frustration can make for a very dangerous team."

Washington will be led by 7-foot center Chris Welp, who is averaging 20.4 points and 8.8 rebounds a game, and 6-foot-9 forward Phil Zevenbergen with a 16.4 scoring average and the same number of rebounds.

Last week the Huskies lost to California, 70-68, and defeated Stanford, 70-65.

"We have not played well against this team," Patterson said. "I don't know the exact reasons why, but I'm sure partially it is because of their great size. We struggle against the very big teams because of our lack of size."

ASU will be led by guards Arthur Thomas, who hit the game-winning three point shot against UCLA, and Steve Beck, who leads the team in scoring with a game average of 19 points.

ASU guard Bobby Thompson has 431 career assists, and is shooting for former Sun Devil Lafayette Lever's school record. Thompson needs only 14 in his final five games to break it.

Saturday the Sun Devils will play their final home game of the season, against WSU at 1 p.m. in the UAC.

Guard Arthur Thomas, shown here taking the ball inside against UA, hit a three-pointer at the buzzer to give the Devils a victory over UCLA last weekend.

Senior guard Bobby Thompson needs just 14 more assists to break Lafayette Lever's all-time record.

Devils win exhibition meet; travel for rest of '87 season

By CHRIS DORSEY
State Press

In their last home meet of the season, the ASU grapplers crushed Athletes In Action (AIA) 30-9 in an exhibition meet.

The Sun Devils skipped the Fullerton Duals last weekend, making this their first match since defeating Cal Poly-San Luis Obispo and Fresno State.

Coach Bobby Douglas saw his team begin the meet with a victory in the 118-pound match.

ASU notched two quick wins to pull out to a 12-0 lead. Zeke Jones (118 pounds) continued his winning ways as he technical-falled Jay Olinger. The Sun Devils received a forfeit in the 126-pound class.

The momentum shifted when AIA scored a win at 134 pounds. Mike Burch decisioned Glenn McMinn, 7-5. Freshman Dan St. John gave ASU another three points with his 6-3 win over Tom Riley.

Another of Douglas' freshman, Tommy Ortiz, recorded a notch in the win column after his 10-7 victory over Ray Caldwell. The next match saw AIA add another three points to their total with a Rafe Munford win over Wayne Sharp, 11-8.

Sun Devil sophomore Travis Fagen earned a big win over Keith Fisher, 5-2. All-America John Ginther added to the ASU total, decisioning Steve Ross, 8-6.

In the 190-pound match AIA scored their last win to reach their total of nine points. Jon Lundberg beat Mike Davies 14-8. Rod Severn (HWT) received a forfeit to make the final tally 30-9.

The next time the Devils take to the mat will be March 8-10 at Palo Alto, Calif. at the Pac-10 Conference championships. Going into the Pac-10 meet ASU is ranked seventh, according to Amateur Wrestling News, with a dual record of 12-7.

Women cagers lacking offensive breakthrough

By STEVE ADAMS
State Press

The ASU women's basketball team, on a five-game losing streak, hopes to snap out as they face Washington and Washington State this weekend.

ASU dropped two games last weekend, a 93-66 decision to 18th-ranked USC and then bowed to UCLA, 88-77.

"We just couldn't get into playing our game against USC," coach Juliene Simpson said. "We came back to play a good solid game against UCLA on Saturday, but came out on the short end of the stick."

The two losses have dropped the Devils to

3-11 in the Pac-10 and 9-13 overall and moved them into a tie with UA for eighth place in the conference.

Simpson has pointed the finger at the offense the past couple of weeks. Defensively, the team has done well, she said, but the defense can only do so much.

"Our defense has been doing a great job, especially in our strong areas of boxing out and rebounding," she said. "However, as in the USC game, the baskets were just not there."

Patti Pepler led the Sun Devils in scoring in both games, compiling 22 points against USC and 18 against UCLA. Pepler was 16 of 24 from the field and 8 of 8 from the free-throw line.

Simpson is hoping that the Devils can snap out of their losing ways before tonight, when ASU travels to Seattle take on the 19th-ranked Washington Huskies. Saturday the Devils go to Pullman to play Washington State.

The Huskies (10-2 in the Pac-10 and 18-4 overall) are currently in second place in the conference only half a game out of first.

Washington is coming off a 67-57 win against Stanford, and boasts one of the top scorers in the conference in Lisa Oriard, who is averaging 14.6 points per game.

In the last meeting between the two teams, the Sun Devils came out on top in the University Activity Center, downing Washington, 78-64.

ASU leads the series between the two teams 3-0 and is 1-0 at Hec Edmundson Pavilion. However, the Devils may not find the going easy as Washington has a 39-game home winning streak entering the game against ASU.

"It is going to be a tough game especially since it is on the road, but we have had some success with Washington and hopefully that will continue," Simpson said.

The Huskies attack is led not only by Oriard, but also by guard Lisa Raschkow who is third in the conference with assists averaging 6.4 per game. Forward Yvette Cole will also be a threat as she is coming off a 34-point spree against Stanford.

As a team, Washington pulls up at No. 1 in scoring defense, averaging 65.0 points per game and assists averaging 19.8 per game. The Huskies rank no lower than fifth in any category, except for rebounds and free-throw percentage.

"They have a very balanced team and are strong in most areas," Simpson said. "We need to play our game from the beginning and not get caught up in theirs."

On Saturday, the Devils will enter Bohler Gym in Pullman to tip-off against the Cougars, who hold the distinct honor of being in last place in the conference with an 0-12 record.

ASU defeated WSU in its last meeting, rolling over the Cougars in overtime, 95-83 at the UAC. The Devils lead the series 1-0.

"This is a game that we have the potential to win," Simpson said. "It would be a real boost for the team, and probably get us back on the right track."

Guard Cathy Gonzalez will be the Cougar player to watch, as she scored 20 points the last time the two teams met in Tempe.

"WSU has no real scoring threats on the team, or any player to single out that we need to watch out for," Simpson said.

"But, anything can happen and we can't just let our guard down and think that we will beat WSU," she said.

The Cougars currently rank no higher than fourth in the conference in any category. They occupy the cellar in field goal percentage and scoring margin and are only scoring 65.7 points per game, putting them at No. 8.

The Sun Devils currently boast three players that are ranked in the top fifteen in the conference in scoring.

Forward Sherry Poole leads the team in scoring, averaging 17.1 points per game. Poole is also shooting 51 percent from the field and averaging 81 percent from the line. Pooles' free-throw performance has placed her at No. 25 nationally in this category.

Poole was also named to the all-academic Region 8 team for the second straight year and is on the national ballot for academic All-America.

"There is no question that Sherry has always been an outstanding player for our team and very consistent," Simpson said.

Guard Patti Pepler pulls up at No. 2 on the team in scoring, averaging 16.1 points for the season. Pepler also ranks 27th nationally in free-throw percentage, averaging 88 percent, good enough to put her in at No. 2 in the Pac-10. She is also averaging 6.2 assists per game.

The third top scorer on the team is forward Robin Connolly, who currently is scoring an average of 15.2 points per game. Connolly is also averaging 4.3 assists per game.

As a whole, the team is averaging 73.5 points per game, which moves them up to No. 5 on the conference list. The Devils do rank last in scoring defense and have been outscored by their opponents on the average of 9.3 points per game.

"That brings up my point about how the offense has to come through for us," Simpson said.

"Right now, we want to continue to try and play the spoiler role and get some more wins," she added.

DePaul mentor voted AP basketball coach of year

Meyer laughs at honor awarded after 3 years

By The Associated Press

NEW YORK — DePaul coach Joey Meyer laughed at the news that he led nominations announced Wednesday for The Associated Press Coach of the Year in college basketball.

"I'm flattered," he said. "I never really thought about it. This is just my third year. I'm so used to the shadows, it doesn't jibe with my mentality."

Meyer received 316 points and 12 first place ballots to 308 for Iowa's Tom Davis, who also had 12 first-place votes. John Chaney of Temple was third with 11 firsts and 296 points followed by Jerry Tarkanian of Nevada-Las Vegas, who had 16 first-place votes and 268 points. Paul Evans of Pitt was fifth with 167 points and three first-place votes.

Balloting was conducted among the college basketball poll writers and broadcasters who participate in the weekly AP Poll. They voted for five coaches, with a first-place vote worth 10 points. Nominees got 8 for second, 6 for third, 4 for fourth and 2 for fifth.

Bob Knight of Indiana (96 points), Purdue's Gene Keady (92), Cliff Ellis of Clemson (75), Providence's Rick Pitino (74) and Dean Smith of North Carolina (72), completed the top 10 finishers, who all appear on the final ballot. Last year's winner, Kentucky's Eddie Sutton, did not receive a vote.

The same panel will vote next month for Coach of the Year and the winner will be announced at the Final Four in New Orleans.

Meyer served as assistant coach at DePaul under his father for 13 years. Twice during that period, in 1980 and again in 1984, Ray Meyer won The AP honor. Joey Meyer still refers to his father as "Coach."

"I struggled the first two years after I took over from Coach," Meyer said. "You can make excuses, you can feel sorry for yourself. It was getting to me. We were not playing well and it was a difficult two years.

"In the long run, I think that helped, though. It hit me between the eyes that I don't have all the answers. Some assistants think they do."

Meyer said his father, who travels with the team doing radio and television work, helped him over the rough times.

For his first two years as coach, Meyer said he often second-guessed his own moves. "When you struggle, you feel like you need to do something different," he said. "I went through a lot of struggles. This year, I decided not to worry about things. If (what I do) is wrong, it's wrong."

Meyer's team, which finished 18-13 last year, is ranked No. 4 and went into Wednesday night's game against Iona with a 23-1 record.

Davis and Evans both took over new programs this season. Davis came to Iowa after coaching at Boston College and Stanford and has the Hawkeyes ranked No. 7 with a 22-3 record.

Red Sox resign "Oil Can" Boyd for big cut in pay

By The Associated Press

BOSTON — General Manager Lou Gorman was happy to put salary arbitration behind him for another year after the Boston Red Sox won their case Wednesday with pitcher Dennis "Oil Can" Boyd.

Arbitrator Glenn Wong sided with the team's offer of $550,000 instead of the $695,000 sought by Boyd. The loss was the 14th for the players in 21 decisions.

It was the team's second arbitration victory in as many tries. An arbitrator earlier ruled against left-handed pitcher Bruce Hurst.

The Red Sox avoided arbitration hearings by signing third baseman Wade Boggs and second baseman Marty Barrett to multiyear contracts and shortstop Spike Owen to a one-year deal.

Wong, a sports law professor at the University of Massachusetts at Amherst, issued his ruling one day after a hearing in New York.

"Both sides presented their cases well, and I honestly didn't know which way it would go after the hearing," Gorman said. "I'm just glad it's over and we can forget arbitration for another year."

Boyd, 27, earned $375,000 in 1986, when he had a career-best 16-10 record during a troubled season.

He had an earned run average of 3.78 in 30 starts, despite missing about a month at midseason.

But Boyd's problems never entered into the arbitration process, Gorman said.

"We just stuck strictly to statistics, we kept away from all the personal things," he said. "And Dennis seemed in a very good frame of mind. I kidded him at one point for sitting throughout the four-hour hearing. I'd never seen him sit for so long."

Boyd was 11-5 when he was suspended without pay for three games after storming out of Fenway Park July 9 upon learning he had been bypassed when pitchers were selected for the American League All-Star team.

Boyd was scheduled to rejoin the Red Sox after the July 15 All-Star Game. But the suspension was continued, with pay, after an altercation with police in Chelsea, where he and his wife lived.

Boyd admitted himself to the University of Massachusetts Medical Center in Worcester for observation on July 17, and was discharged a week later. The Red Sox reinstated him on July 31, and Boyd rejoined the team the next day when it returned from a West Coast road trip.
