By SHELLY SCHAFFER
State Press

The Tempe home of ASU quarterback Jeff Van Raaphorst is a "total loss" after it was gutted Wednesday by a kitchen fire that also injured his roommate, fire officials said.

Junior architect major Perry Vettrano was lightly burnt on his shoulders and chest and his hair was singed, "but he is OK," said Jim Gaintner, Tempe Fire Department assistant chief. Vettrano was treated at the scene.

Gaintner said the fire at Springtree Condominiums, 2035 S. Elm St. was caused by grease overheating on the stove, "which caught fire and spread throughout the condominium."

"Heavy flames went throughout the second story, two-bedroom apartment and extended through the attic," he said.

"It is a total loss with $40,000 estimated in structure damage and $40,000 to $50,000 damage to contents."

Vettrano said he left the kitchen where he was cooking tacos on the stove about noon.

"I heard an explosion, and when I came back in (the stove) was on fire," he said. "I tried to get to the fire extinguisher under the stove, but the heat held me back."

"I ran next door to get a hose, but it was broken, and the fire was already in the living room. The flames spread very quickly."

Gaintner said none of the adjoining apartments were damaged.

"It was a fast moving fire, but we contained it to that area," he said.

"The call went out at 12:17 p.m.; we arrived at 12:22 p.m., and the fire was under control at 12:35 p.m."

Van Raaphorst, who came home from classes about 1 p.m., said: "Most of the things can be replaced. The good thing is that Vettrano is OK. You can't replace a roommate or a friend."

Vettrano said Van Raaphorst "lost things you can't put a price on. Jeff had a whole wall of plaques and trophies, and they're all burned."

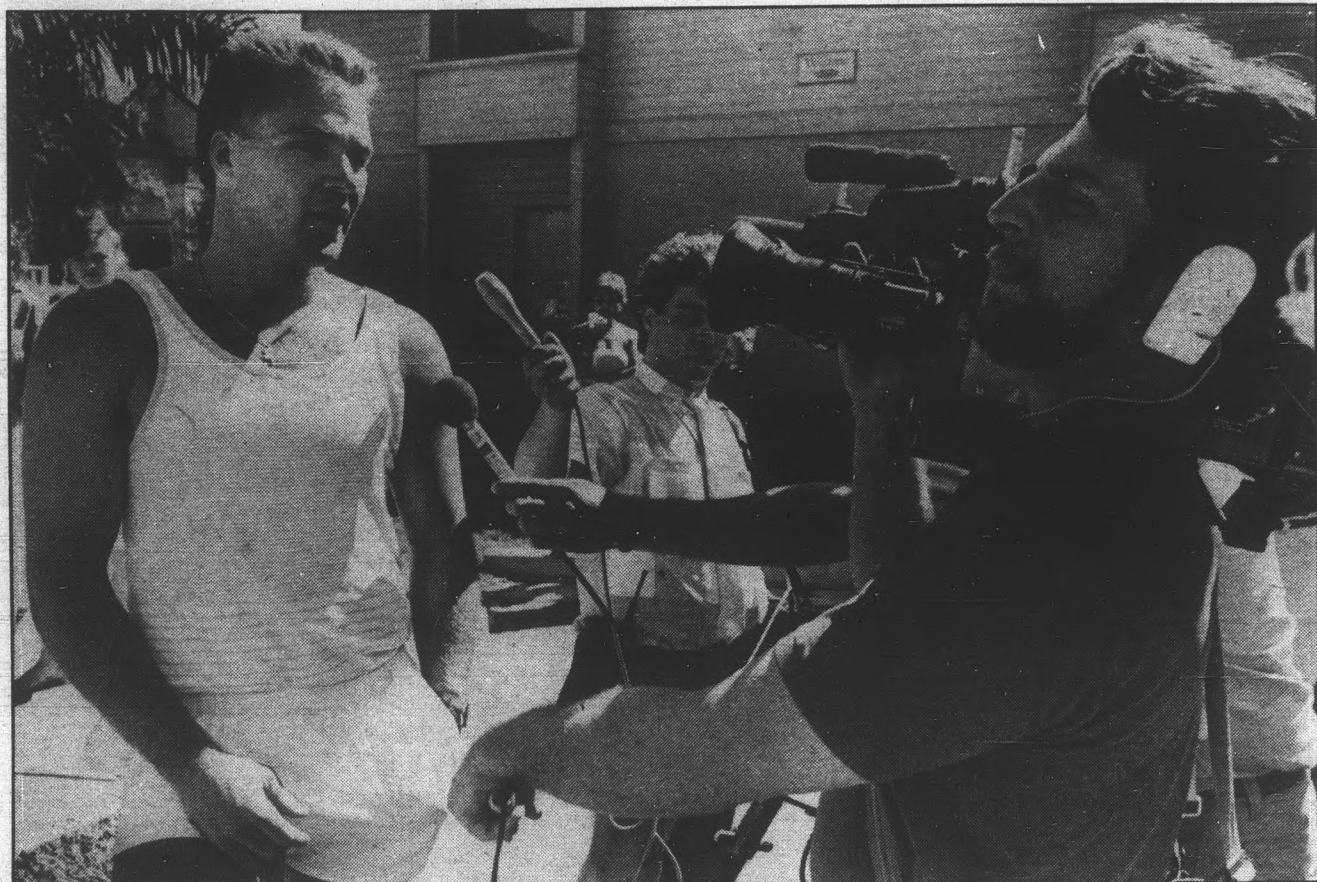

Van Raaphorst did not appear upset about his awards, but Vettrano said, "I think he's more concerned than he shows."

Van Raaphorst said, "All I have is my backpack and what I'm wearing. My most valuable player trophies, Arizona trophies, Rose Bowl watch and sweats were all in there."

Van Raaphorst said he hopes he can replace the Rose Bowl items because only a limited amount were produced.

Van Raaphorst's parents, who live in San Diego, own the condominium, and it was insured.

Marty Grimord, a board of directors member of Springtree Condominiums, said: "All exteriors are covered by insurance. That particular unit has a value of about $70,000 in today's market."

Phi Delts to take part in Greek Week despite ban

By KARI BLAND
State Press

Phi Delta Theta fraternity, which has been banned from all campus social and athletic activities for at least a year because of a Feb. 10 hazing incident, will participate in Greek Week in April, a Student Life official said Wednesday.

Art Carter, assistant dean of Student Life, said the University is allowing the fraternity to participate in Greek Week because it "would have a real negative impact on the entire Greek system."

Greek Week is a week-long competition between fraternity and sorority teams. Phi Delta Theta and Delta Delta Delta sorority are teammates in Greek Games and Greek Sing.

Carter said ASU administrators decided Tuesday to place additional sanctions against the fraternity because it has "a history of pledge problems."

The University investigation sanctions resulted from a hazing incident at the Phi Delta Theta house last month in which a pledge was tied to a chaise lounge, dangled from a second-story balcony and sprayed with water.

"We've had a least one or more parental complaints about hazing in the past," Carter said. "Since 1980, the fraternity has been cited by its national chapter several times. They were not all hazings, but they were irregularities."

In a separate action, the Greek Relations Board on Feb. 17 placed the fraternity on social probation for at least three months.

The sanctions prohibit the fraternity from holding any social activities at their house or participating in any Greek sponsored or sanctioned activity.

The fraternity also is prohibited from participating in any intramurals, club sports or other recreational activities.

But John Halsey, president of the Interfraternity Council, said an appeal of the University's decision is being spearheaded primarily by fraternity alumni in the Valley.

"It is a program in the Greek system that needs to be taken care of, but it is not that severe," he said. "It is unfortunate that such a strong house had to be made an example of."

Carter said the administration put Phi Delta Theta member Morgan T. Neville on probation for allegedly assaulting a State Press reporter at the time of the hazing incident.

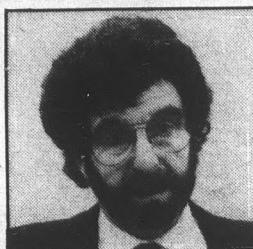

"He has been given notice that if his name ever comes up in the next year in a conduct manner, we will take a much more severe sanction," including possible expulsion, Carter said.

Correction

In its March 4 edition, the State Press incorrectly reported that President J. Russell Nelson would be hosting an awards luncheon on March 19 in conjunction with Academic Excellence Week. In fact, the Student Foundation will be sponsoring a luncheon honoring outstanding campus organizations and leaders on that date. The State Press regrets the error.

Obscene films, books not evil, Playboy lawyer says

By AARYN KEMP
State Press

Obscene materials should not be censored in the United States, an attorney for Playboy magazine said in Phoenix Wednesday.

"I have three daughters, and when they were growing up, I decided — not the state — what television shows they watched and what they read," Burton Joseph told members of the Phoenix chapters of Women in Communications Inc. and the Society of Professional Journalists, Sigma Delta Chi. The groups met at the Phoenix Hilton to discuss First Amendment rights.

Joseph said he does not believe a naked body is evil — "not when there are 10 to 12 acts of violence on television every hour."

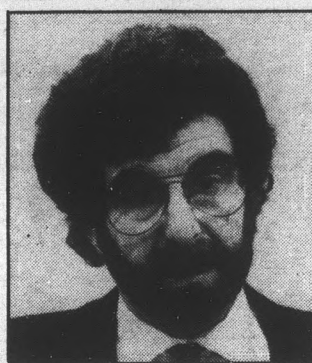

"It has been proven that viewing violent acts can result in an increase of anti-social behavior," he said. "But there has been no data that viewing sexually explicit material results in abusive behavior."

He said society is afraid of a naked breast but does not seem to care about violence.

Joseph was among those who disputed the legality of U.S. Attorney General Edwin Meese's Commission on Pornography, which he said infringed on citizens' First Amendment freedom of expression.

The commission's recommendations, which would have censored sexually obscene materials, were never enforced.

Joseph said it is the First Amendment's philosophy that people should have the right and ability to make choices for themselves.

'Censorship, as an integral part of government, results in totalitarianism.'
— Burton Joseph

"I believe in John Stuart Mills' philosophy that we should be able to pursue our own good in our own way rather than live by what others think is good," he said. "I do not want other people imposing their values on me."

Joseph said humans only need three things to survive: food and water, the ability to reproduce the species and the desire to censor what people see and read.

"Censorship, as an integral part of government, results in totalitarianism," he said. "There are societies in the world where no sexually explicit materials are available, such as Iran, South Africa, Cuba and Russia."

Joseph said the United States has always rejected censorship.

"The founding fathers believed that each person should be free to choose what they want to see by choice of personal values," he said. "They wanted us to be free of state authority."

Joseph said many things in society are more obscene than sexual materials.

"The charlatans on television that ask for money or they will be doomed to death are obscene to me," he said.

Playboy and sex videos are not for everyone, but people have the right to denounce them, Joseph said. He added that a few people should not be able to decide what is right or wrong for all.

Joseph said that in 1968, President Lyndon B. Johnson named a committee to study pornography and its effects.

He said the committee found that the public generally felt there should not be laws governing the availability of sexual materials to adults, whether or not they are obscene.

"Congress rejected this report," Joseph said. "They said it was not an accurate perception."

"But there were similar findings in western European nations that were in accordance with the committee's findings."

Joseph said Congress' report was ridiculed by the media and by academic communities.

"There are two kinds of people in society," he said.

"First, there are First Amendment junkies, like myself, who have naive views that the (U.S.) Constitution and wisdom should be enough to permit each person to see whatever is available to them. Then there is the greater good who think consensus is required for decency."

Where do university salary savings go? Mecham aide asks

By TINA DAUNT
State Press

The governor's office will investigate how Arizona universities are spending leftover money from unfilled faculty positions, Gov. Evan Mecham's education adviser said Wednesday.

Jim Cooper said the investigation is part of the governor's analysis to determine the amount of state funding used for instruction. The analysis will be released before the final state budget hearing in May.

"We're concerned that the universities are not using their money for what it was appropriated," Cooper said. "Every year the university gets a lump sum of money to pay faculty. If the money is not used for salaries, we want to know where it went."

Academic Vice President Jack Kinsinger said unused faculty funding, or salary savings, often compensates for deficiencies in the operating budget.

"When a unit has salary savings, they have the option of hiring people or using the money elsewhere," he said. "If the operating budget is insufficient, the college can use the salary money for services, personnel or other operating costs."

Kinsinger said usually ASU's operating budget is inadequate, and the colleges are forced to use faculty funding for other expenses.

But he said a large portion of faculty savings from the 1986-87 budget was returned to the state because of the governor's budget cuts.

"The Legislature thinks we have extra money floating around," Kinsinger said. "The fact is, many colleges have fallen short on operations. The Legislature doesn't understand."

But Cooper said funds should be used for their appropriated purpose.

"Other state agencies have to get permission from the Legislature when they want to use salary money in other areas," he said. "We've let the universities get away with spending the money without prior approval."

Dean John Kraft of the College of Business said the funds from 21 unfilled faculty positions, totaling about $900,000, were used for operating costs in the college.

"The budget was not sufficient," he said. "We needed the money to run the college."

Alan Carroll, ASU's budget director, said the University will not know the total amount of salary savings for all ASU colleges until May.

Spring break a time to learn meaning of 'friends'

It's finally here. I've always liked spring break. Yes, I'm sure everyone likes it, but to me its meaning is much more than a couple of days without school.

It gives me a chance to reflect back on the previous year and plan out my goals for the upcoming year. Besides that, I get to sit around with all of my old friends in Mexico and talk about "glory days."

I can just picture it now. We'll be sitting around Don's house sipping on a Corona and arguing with Lamby over whose cassette is going to get played next. I've always been a Jimmy Buffett fan — he and Mexico just seem to go together so well.

Lamby, on the other hand, is into Midnight Star and the Gap Band. Needless to say, south of Ajo about all we listen to is Buffett.

So, here's the picture. We're sitting on the balcony with a couple cases of beer, and listening to "Changes in Latitudes." Women and water are in short supply.

So what do we talk about? No matter what we start talking about, we usually end up in a discussion about friendship.

What is a real friend?

A. Marcus Brnovich Columnist

In my opinion, "friend" is probably one of the most overused words (next to love, of course). I personally place a high value on both concepts and I hate to see people driving down the value of both because of misuse.

During my freshman year in an ethics class, one of the best topics we discussed was the issue of friendship. Specifically, our class was concerned with Aristotelian notions of friendship.

Basically, Aristotle thought of friendship as the greatest virtue and categorized friendship into three separate classes.

The first level is the "business type" of relations. These people could be your fellow employees or the teller at the bank that you know. These are usually pretty superficial.

The next level is the casual acquaintances we all have to deal with. These might be the people we go to the Cannery with, or play basketball with on the weekends. There is a type of relation going on, but it's just not as binding.

The last level was what Aristotle considered the highest. To call someone a friend meant a lot. Friendship requires a lot of other virtues we don't think about. To be a real friend, you have to possess many other virtues like honesty, loyalty and courage. That is why at times the people who are closest to you can hurt you the most. For example, if someone you don't know tells you that you are inconsiderate, it doesn't mean as much as if one of your close friends had said the same thing.

Someone once told me, "You can count your 'real friends' on one hand. If you have to use your other hand — or, for that matter, your toes — you probably don't know what the word friend means." That profound statement says it all.

So as I am sitting down in Mexico with Dave, Don, Spuds and Lamby, we will raise our bottles and toast Jacques and Miami Rick. They are back in Phoenix doing something, but they are still with us in spirit.

The toast is the same as it has been for the last three years. "Here's to the duck that swam a lake and nearly lost a feather; maybe this time another year we'll all get together."

Life just doesn't get much better than that.

Let us in

Editor:

Students are not allowed to play tennis on the eight best tennis courts at ASU. Whiteman Tennis Center is again used only by members of the women's and men's tennis teams. The coaches have the gate keys, and the courts are locked when not used by the team, which means 75 percent of the time those courts are vacant and idle.

Physical education classes no longer meet at Whiteman. Staff, faculty and regular students are locked out. Teams other than ASU and other non-ASU groups are allowed to use the courts. Our vice president for student affairs is looking in another direction away from this sorry situation. The athletic administration apparently has a new policy making Whiteman Tennis Center available only to elite athletes. Who the hell do these courts belong to anyway?

Take a Spanish class

Editor:

Glancing through the State Press and attempting to give the publication no more of my attention than it obviously deserves, my eye was drawn to a cartoon of Uncle Sam and two children holding American flags.

As a bilingual Mexican-American, I am forced to address the narrow-minded Archie Bunker attitude of the cartoonist.

I am an American, but more importantly, I am proud to be able to contribute my language and culture to this melting pot of ours. Without this diversity in language and culture, America wouldn't deserve such a title.

Secondly, I might suggest that the cartoonist take a Spanish class. Not only would it be beneficial to you in the long run with the Hispanic population in the Southwest to comprise the majority by the year 2000, but it might also serve to salvage your credibility among those of us who are able to speak two languages.

The girl in your cartoon is asking "that?" ... not "what?"

Jesus is not a Republican

Editor:

Put away your Bibles and turn off the "700 Club." The conservative movement which began with Donny and Marie singing at the GOP national convention at Detroit in 1980 is over. Just when you thought Jesus Christ was a Republican, President Reagan's former national security adviser, Robert McFarlane, is trying to kill himself, there is a Republican governor in Arizona, who deserves no mention, eliminating the Martin Luther King Jr. holiday and Pat Robertson is running for the GOP nomination for president in 1988.

You know things are bad when a person who was the president's right-hand man tries to take his own life. Perhaps our 76-year-old president, who said on Feb. 9, "So, even though there may be some misguided critics of what we're trying to do, I think we're on the wrong path," isn't telling all he knows about the Iran-contra aid scandal. Logical people don't want to help the contras, but the administration obviously doesn't comprehend what rational thinking people want or don't want.

Pat Robertson, often confused with Jimmy Swaggart, Jerry Falwell, Richard Jackson and James Robinson, will help prove correct the accusation that indeed the Republican party wants to be known as the party of God.

I doubt that Genesis will be the opening act at the Democrat's national convention in Atlanta in 1988, but if the Democrats play their cards right, the Oval Office will be theirs in 1988.

Laughing with Oral

Editor:

I am writing this letter in regards to my mixed feelings about Oral Roberts and his controversial situation. Sometimes, Roberts scares me, but most days, I think he's pretty funny and kind of sad, too.

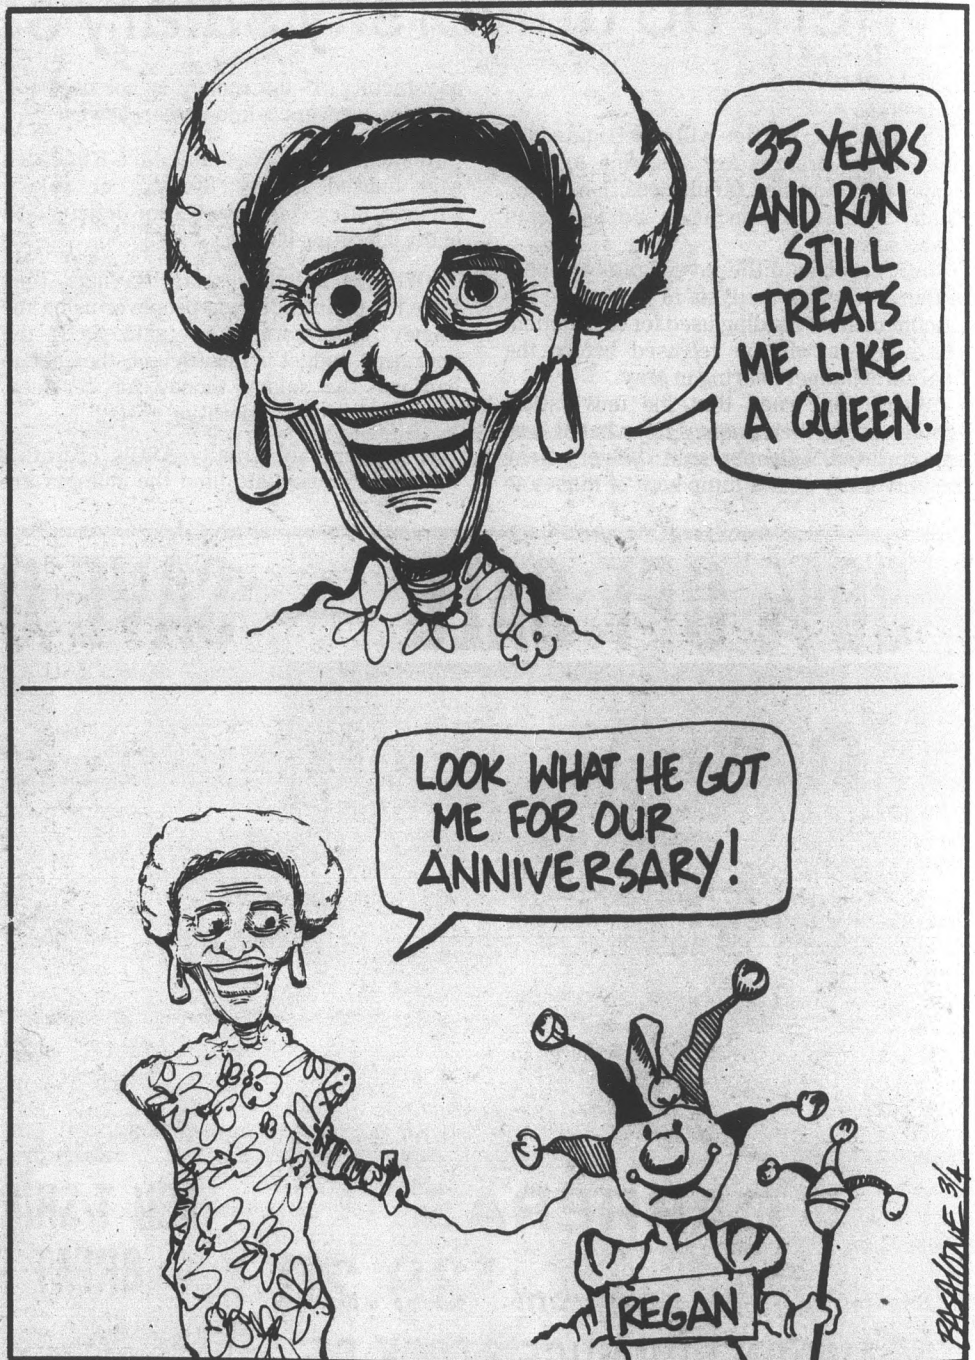

The man is either kicking cow chips around, or else he really thinks he is going to die if eight mill' isn't raised. If he really believes it, he probably will die, which is no big deal anyway.

It's OK with me if Oral Roberts wants to limit himself in this manner, denying the beautiful physical life he has, to chase after demons and demanding gods.

After all, we all create our own realities, and this man is evidently doing a very creative job with his life, and I can respect that. We can laugh at Oral Roberts, or at that crazy movie star, or at ourselves if we want to.

We can cry for them or believe them and see their demons and we can choose not to give a damn. It's all a creative process ... ideas, feelings, beliefs ... so let's enjoy them ... and if something is that funny, then go ahead and belly laugh, and try not to feel to guilty about it.

Campus ideologues disprove myth of ASU 'apathy'

By BOB HEILER
State Press

Every month or so, readers of the State Press opinion page are treated to another letter-writer's complaint that the ASU campus is politically apathetic.

The writer often points out that less than 10 percent of the students vote in ASASU elections, or that few "demonstrations" occur on campus. This is offered as evidence to support the accusation of apathy.

But is this campus really so politically dormant? Are people here really "materialistic Yuppies" that are only concerned with salary levels and unwilling to indulge in the fever swamps of ideology?

When someone like Jed and Cindy Smock comes to campus, there are always plenty of people around who want to listen to them. People turn out to hear them talk about everything from fornication to South Africa.

And they don't just listen. Many of them are quite vocal and fall into one of several categories: casual questioner, sincere truth-seeker or mindless heckler; Jedophile or Jedophobe. These people are many things, but they are not apathetic. Troubled, concerned, obnoxious, ignorant — but definitely not apathetic.

When Brother Jed and Sister Cindy didn't show up last spring, people missed them. The sun started getting warmer and the apathetic ASU students were wondering where that mall preacher was.

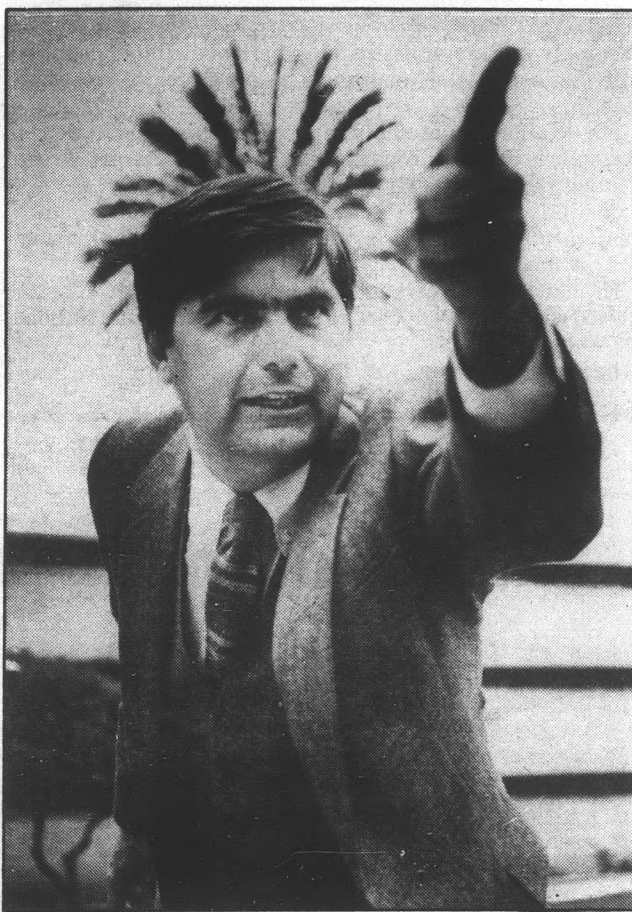

Now if people were just listening because Jed was entertaining, and not because the ideas he discussed were interesting to them, they would hardly bring him up when he didn't show.

Whenever someone who discusses politics comes to campus, people come to listen. And they go away thinking and talking about the ideas expressed in the speech.

When a big-name conservative like William F. Buckley comes to campus, more people show up than the MU Arizona Room will hold. Many of them come because they are fans of Buckley's; many others come because they detest him. But whatever the reason, they come and they listen.

The apathy myth is popular among ASU's "inner circle," comprised of people who like to think they spend more time thinking about important ideas than the apathetic hordes.

But ASU is not an apathetic campus. People make the mistake of thinking it apathetic because there are not many radical groups burning down buildings and trying to occupy J.R. Nelson's office. Although these activities are blessedly less common than they were in 1968, ASU's relative absence of the radical fringe is still apparent.

In other words, ASU is a conservative campus. The average age of ASU students is over 26, a demographic anomaly to say the least. With the increased age comes a certain reluctance to indulge in radical activism, borne of a certain reluctance to run the risk of a night in jail. The mind that gives rise to such activism is not often found in a skull over 25 years of age.

But just because the campus is conservative does not mean it's apathetic. What it does mean is that liberals are uncomfortable, which leads them to write letters about how the campus is apathetic because they can't find enough kindred spirits to suit them.

In fact, an apathetic university is all but nonexistent. When people are in a college atmosphere, they think about politics, whether they realize it or not. Most of the people here are engaged in learning, and therefore have to consider the same political questions that have faced mankind for thousands of years.

Of course, that is not to say ASU is without its left fringe, nor that the campus is full of far-right fascists. If one counted the campus elements that strain the boundaries of the political spectrum, the left end would be found to endure a great deal more stress than the right. Left-wing groups such as the Young Socialist Alliance and United Campuses to Prevent Nuclear War certainly have larger memberships and greater public sympathy than their right-wing counterparts, which do not even exist on campus. We have no Young Americans for Freedom or John Birchers; at least, none that are very obvious.

The conservatives that are here are not militant. They believe in their ideals just as strongly as radicals and liberals — it just happens that one of those ideals places too high a premium on dignity for them to indulge in radical activism.

If someone wants to apply the name apathy to this ideal, so be it. But it does make for a more peaceful environment in which to study, work and live.

And it certainly allows people to consider important questions in an environment much more conducive to clear thought than UC-Berkeley, circa 1968. And the clearer the thought, the better the conclusions.

If that's what apathy does for us, who cares if we're apathetic?

'Workers shall unite; socialism shall flourish'

By KERRY FEHR
State Press

The climate is right for workers to unite and socialism to flourish. At least, that's what two members of the Socialist Workers Party and the Young Socialist Alliance in Phoenix predict.

Joe Geiser, a member of SWP, said capitalism in America has outlived itself and the country is approaching socialism.

Geiser said President Reagan's attempt to fight socialism indicates the presence of a limited amount of socialism in today's society.

"As (capitalism) is collapsing, (politicians) will have to move farther and farther to the right," he said.

He cited Reagan's attacks on legalized abortion, affirmative action and organized labor as proof that socialism is alive and well and that politicians are fighting it.

But Geiser said the people are not so opposed to socialism.

"Statistically, it's a fact that people are more responsive to socialism now," he said. "They are driven towards socialism by hunger."

"The whole system needs to be dismantled."

He said countries that have evolved into socialist societies did so out of poverty and hunger, citing Central America as an example.

Geiser likened capitalism to tyranny. He said when a boss walks out on the production plant floor and tells workers they will work Saturday, the boss is a tyrant. He also said drug testing in the workplace is an example of tyranny.

"The war on drugs is aimed specifically at working people," Geiser said.

Ruth Nebbia, a member of the Young Socialist Alliance, said she also opposes drug testing policies.

"It infringes on the right to privacy," Nebbia said, adding that the policy is based on the premise of "guilty until proven innocent."

'Statistically, it's a fact that people are more responsive to socialism now. They are driven to socialism by hunger. The whole system needs to be dismantled.'

— Joe Geiser

Nebbia, a YSA member since 1980, said the alliance meets weekly to study the teachings of Marx and Lenin.

Even though the Phoenix chapter only has a dozen members, she said the group is strong and active.

"Of course, we're always trying to get more people," Nebbia said.

But Geiser discarded the importance of the size of SWP, which he described as "admittedly small."

"We don't usually talk about the number of members," Geiser said. "The size isn't important at this time."

He said the program is revolutionary: striving for a worker-controlled government.

Nebbia, who also is a member of SWP, said the two groups work together in three major areas: South African divestment, Central American disengagement and labor union rights.

She said YSA believes people soon will tire of being lied to by their government and revolt.

Nebbia said YSA encourages students to become union members, especially in a non-union state like Arizona.

But she added, "We are not union organizers."

Nebbia said YSA advocates self-defense because "you have to defend your right to meet." Similarly, she said strikers have a right to defend their pickets and their jobs.

She said the socialist revolution is imminent "but things are going to get a lot worse before they get better."

"We see violence is going to come from the other side first," Nebbia said. "Attacks are used to discredit the left.

"But once the shit hits the fan, we hope you can vote out the party you don't like and vote in the party you do like."

But voting in a candidate from SWP may not be possible in Arizona.

Jim Shumway, the state elections officer, said state laws allow third-party candidates to qualify for a spot on the ballot during a primary.

But Shumway said Title XVI of the Arizona Revised Statute stipulates that it is unconstitutional for members of the Communist Party to run for office in Arizona.

Shumway also said State Attorney General Bob Corbin, a Republican, handed down a legal opinion in 1984 that any candidate who qualifies, regardless of party affiliation, may run.

"The Socialist Party has never forthrightly come out and said it's communistic and (conspires) to do away with the government," he said.

Shumway said candidates must obtain the number of signatures equal to 2 percent of the total votes cast for the governor in the last general election, or 17,340 signatures, to land a ballot position.

"(SWP) has not qualified during the last several elections," Shumway said.

YSA and SWP part ways on one issue: the distinction between communism and socialism.

Nebbia said there are two schools of thought in regard to the distinctions between socialism and communism. The first theory is that socialism is a first step toward communism. The second theory is that socialism and communism are synonymous.

Nebbia said she believes the latter. But she admits that communism has its problems.

"There will be some repression," she said. "The rich people won't (continue to) become rich at the expense of poor people."

Unlike Nebbie, Geiser said the SWP is completely distinct from the Communist Party.

"They attack us on every point," Geiser said.

"To be a communist, you have to center on workers' democracy," he said. "But they center on Stalinism. The Communist Party is threatened by workers' democracy. It cuts into their power."

Geiser said the most important goal for the SWP is changing the attitudes of the unions.

"(Unions) need to get involved in the six-hour day program to reduce unemployment," Geiser said. "It is on every major union's list but they don't (pursue it) because they don't feel the political support is there."

Secondly, Geiser said bosses need to be taken out of the middle of the production process.

"The money does not come from the bosses," he said. "On one end are the consumers who pay out the money and at the other end are workers who produce the goods."

Geiser denied that capitalists are necessary to supply the funds to establish a business and organize the work process.

"The root of the solution is learning how to help yourself," Geiser said.

Constitution high priority, Nicaraguan prof says

By ED SCHUBERT
State Press

From the time the Sandanistas first came to power during Nicaragua's 1979 revolution, the establishment of a formal constitution has been a high priority, a Nicaraguan professor of law said Tuesday night.

Francisco Castillo, dean of the law college at the University of Leon, Nicaragua, spoke through an interpreter, ASU Law Professor Fernando Teson, to a group of about 50 people at the ASU College of Law.

Castillo said the first step in producing a constitution was the 1984 election of the unicameral National Assembly, which wrote the constitution.

He said 1.5 million people — 75 percent of Nicaragua's population — voted in the election, which was deemed "free and fair" by impartial foreign observers.

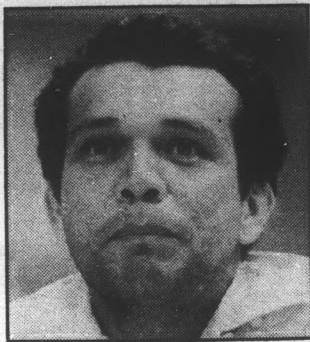

Castillo said once the National Assembly was in session, it created three constitutional sub-commissions:

- The Commission for Constitutional Affairs, which designed the legal and political principles upon which the constitution would be based.

- The Commission for Popular Consultations, which gathered the input of various leaders and organizations, as well as the Nicaraguan people, through a series of open meetings held across the country.

- The Commission for Foreign Affairs, which studied the experience of other countries with written constitutions.

Castillo said the greatest task faced by the National

'The constitution was enacted in the middle of a war imposed by the American government.'

—Francisco Castillo

Assembly was to synthesize the experience of other countries with the needs of the Nicaraguan people as voiced in the open meetings.

The National Assembly approved the constitution in November of 1986. Nicaraguan President Daniel Ortega officially promulgated the constitution Jan. 9.

Castillo said the constitution rested upon three fundamental premises: a mixed economy, non-alignment and political pluralism.

To illustrate Nicaragua's political pluralism, Castillo named seven different parties that held seats in the National Assembly:

- The Sandinista Front, with 61 seats.

- The Constitutional Democrats, with nine seats.
- The Independent Liberals, with nine seats.
- The Social Christians, with nine seats.
- The Communists, with two seats.
- The Socialists, with two seats.
- The Marxist-Leninist Movement for Popular Action, with two seats.

Castillo cited other provisions of the new constitution: •A "right to life" provision which prohibits the death penalty and limits the maximum time a person can be incarcerated for any crime to 30 years.

- Freedom of religion, expression and movement.
- The equality of men and women.
- Social rights, such as the right to an education, housing and health services for all citizens.
- Reproductive rights, such as the right of a woman not to be fired because she is pregnant.

Castillo said the president has the power to suspend some freedoms in the event of "war, economic conditions or national catastrophe."

But he said the president must seek the approval of the National Assembly for the suspensions within 45 days after they are implemented.

Castillo said President Ortega had suspended freedom of movement and the right to strike because of the U.S.-backed contra war.

"The constitution was enacted in the middle of a war imposed by the American government," he said.

ASASU election director to uphold spending limits

By DARRIN HOSTETLER
State Press

The Associated Students Election Director said Wednesday he will abide by current bylaws and enforce all campaign spending limits during the spring election.

Patrick McWhortor said: "The election code is the election code. I am empowered to enforce it as it is, and I will do so."

ASASU bylaws and election code limit executive officer candidates to spending $500 on their campaigns and restrain senatorial candidates from spending more than $100 on their races.

Candidates can be declared ineligible for office if they violate the spending limits.

Potential ASASU presidential candidate Will Murphy resurrected a controversy Monday by announcing that he intends to ignore the limits because they are in violation of the U.S. Constitution.

The ASASU Supreme Court ruled in Murphy's favor last fall after he challenged the limits, and ordered the senate to delete the spending restrictions from the bylaws.

But the senate refused because it claimed the campus court did not have the authority to interpret or cite the U.S. Constitution.

College of Business Sen. John Colombo said, "We don't recognize the court's power to interpret the U.S. Constitution, and we don't abide by any decisions they make on that basis."

Murphy disagreed, saying, "Student government is an agency of the state, and as such, is bound by the constitution."

"If ASASU thinks the court is wrong, then they have the right to appeal to a higher (outside) court."

Due to the conflict between the court and the senate, McWhortor said it was necessary to issue a statement to clarify that spending limits are in effect.

"The goal is to run a fair, clean election, and that's what I'm going to do by using the bylaws, constitution and election code that I've been given," he said.

Murphy said, "For (McWhortor) to ignore the court is for him to say that he's more qualified to determine constitutional issues than they are."

"By limiting spending, ASASU is committing an act of prior restraint, which is blatantly unconstitutional."

Murphy said he is "not going to break any limits because, legally, none exist."

Colombo defended McWhortor and the validity of the limits.

"The limits were put in the bylaws in a mood of fairness," he said. "I have to commend Patrick, he's doing the right thing."

Resolution supporting campus weapons research defeated

A resolution that would have declared Associated Students Senate support for President J. Russell Nelson's campus weapons research policy was narrowly defeated Tuesday night.

Senate Resolution 12 stated that the senate "firmly supports President Nelson's decision to maintain academic freedom by not banning potential weapons research at Arizona State University."

Nelson decided in December to allow faculty members to conduct weapons research despite the efforts of members of the Faculty Senate to ban such work.

The ASASU senate measure failed to pass by one vote.

College of Business Sen. John Colombo blasted the senate for not supporting the resolution.

"The senate has used the argument many times that it's not our place to make resolutions like this. But we do have a place to do it when we take the responsibility to do so," he said.

"Students should have a say in the issue of academic freedom, and we have a choice to take a stand."

College of Engineering Sen. Kevin Anderson, a co-sponsor of the resolution, tried to rally support for the measure.

"This expresses the opinion that the senate supports academic freedom in all areas," he said.

But Anderson encountered resistance from several senators, especially College of Law representatives Ed Rubacha and Phil Stanfield.

Rubacha said, "The academic freedom argument is a smoke screen . . . I think it's wrong to make a statement supporting arms research."

Stanfield agreed, saying, "I'm very hesitant to say that the academic environment is the place to do weapons research."

Stanfield said weapons research on campus may even stifle academic freedom.

"When there are large amounts of money floating around like there is for weapons research, then researchers tend to owe and have an obligation to the people who control the purse strings," he said.

Colombo replied that he is "sorry the specter of money dangling in front of professors bothers (Stanfield) so much, but the point is that professors have the right to do arms research."

Anderson compared the arms research issue to the campus furor over Accuracy in Academia, a conservative-watchdog group that targeted and attacked political science Professor Mark Reader in 1985 for his supposed "liberal bias."

"Everyone was up in arms about AIA. What is the difference between trying to shut up a professor in class and in taking away his right to research?" he said.

Rubacha retorted that "research is not protected under the First Amendment."

"If a professor wants to do arms research he can leave the university and work for a variety of firms doing such work," he said.

College of Architecture Sen. Cindy Stone said she also is concerned about encouraging research on campus.

"I'm 100 percent for academic freedom, but I see too much research and not enough teaching on this campus," she said.

ASU police report

University police reported the following incidents ending noon Wednesday:

•ASU police interviewed three residents of Cholla Apartments for numerous complaints about water balloons thrown from the Cholla balconies.

Police are still investigating.

•A man was arrested at the ASU police compound for criminal trespassing, criminal damage, false reporting and theft, police said.

•A $700 bicycle was stolen from the southeast corner of the MU loading dock, where it was locked, police said.

•Police reported the lights out on the first level of ASU Parking Structure One.

An electrician from the Central Plant found burned electrical wiring at the structure.

•A 1978 Toyota was found by police with four flat tires, a broken windshield and stripped paint in Lot 63, police said.

•Phoenix police recovered a $1,850 Honda Elite motorcycle reported stolen March 3.

•A student reported that an unknown person stole a $200 video-cassette recorder from the lobby of Palo Verde West, police said.

Tempe police report

Tempe police reported the following incidents ending noon Wednesday.

•A 14-year-old Tempe girl was sexually assaulted after she and a friend accepted a ride with three unknown men, police said.

Police said the two girls were inside Circle K, 1315 W. Southern, when a blue Chevrolet Impala pulled into the parking lot, and the girls accepted a ride.

The men released one of the girls at 3425 S. Priest, but took the other to an unknown location in the Phoenix-Guadalupe area where they sexually abused and assaulted her.

•Police are investigating two Tempe men for the possible aggravated assault of a 16-year-old Tempe boy who was allegedly looking over a fence into their home, police said.

Police said the men captured the youth after they watched him climb the fence.

The youth told police the men held a gun to his head and hit and kicked him, resulting in a broken nose and a cut requiring four stitches above his left eye.

Police said the youth was arrested for criminal trespassing and referred to the juvenile division of the Maricopa County Superior Court.

He was released into his mother's custody.

•A Tempe man's 1985 Chevrolet Camaro, valued at $7,500, was stolen when a man purchased the vehicle with a fraudulent cashier's check, police said.

Police have a suspect.

•Tempe police also reported the following thefts:

An unknown person stole a $9,320 1969 Dodge Cornet from 615 E. Apache Blvd.

An unknown person entered a Tempe home through a rear door and stole a five-gallon container filled with $2,005 in miscellaneous change.

Someone stole $2,500 in auto parts from 14 S. Farmer.

$5 million in funds sought for homeless

By VICKIE CHACHERE
State Press

PHOENIX — A former ASU professor and advocate for Arizona's homeless population said Wednesday $5 million could be raised for new shelters if the Legislature approves a bill creating the Housing Trust Fund.

Louisa Stark said if Senate Bill 1336 were approved, home buyers could donate to the fund interest earnings from money placed in escrow accounts. She estimated at least $1.5 million and as much as $5 million could be raised to build shelters across the state.

There are about 5,000 homeless people living on Phoenix's streets and another 2,000 homeless in Tucson, she said.

Stark told the Senate Commerce and Labor Committee the bill also would allow the state to qualify for federal matching funds and private grants.

The bill requires that all money in escrow be deposited in an interest-bearing account. Stark said the average escrow deposit of $500 to $1,000 would generate $2 or $3 in interest payments each month.

About $1.5 million could be raised over a three-year period using those interest payments, she said.

The bill does not allow the Legislature to take funds from escrow accounts of large commercial transactions that are in escrow for several months.

The Housing Trust Fund would dole out money to communities to build homeless shelters and provide low-cost housing for indigent families.

Richard Berry, a Vietnam veteran who has lived in a shelter for the homeless for the past nine years, told the committee that abused women and children living on Phoenix's streets need the most help.

"I am one of the lucky ones," Berry said. "I don't have a drug problem. I'm not an ex-con, and I am not an alcoholic."

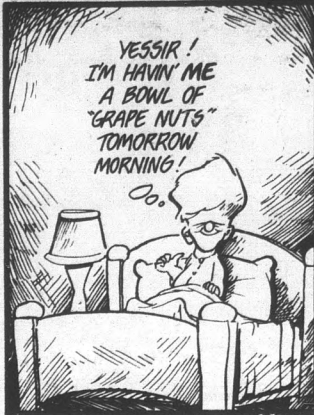

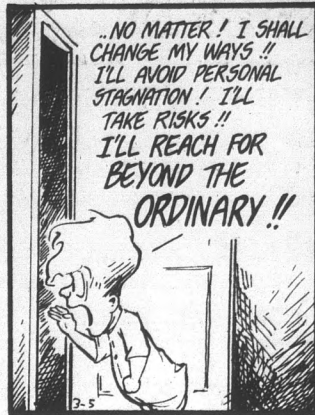

Stark said the availability of low-cost housing has declined during the last decade. She said Tempe would be in line for some of the money from the fund.

"I know in the East Valley there is a lot of interest in helping homeless families," she said.

But representatives of Arizona's banking industry say they are opposing the bill because it singles out banks, savings and loan associations and title companies for funding.

Gordon Murphy, executive vice president of the Arizona Bankers Association, said the proposal also is impractical because most home buyers won't donate the interest payments.

Reagan admits Iranian action was 'mistake'

The Associated Press
WASHINGTON — President Reagan acknowledged Wednesday night that his once-secret Iranian initiative "deteriorated" into an arms-for-hostages deal and said, "It was a mistake."

In a speech prepared for delivery from the Oval Office, Reagan said that "as president, I cannot escape responsibility."

Echoing criticism issued by the Tower commission, Reagan said he did not ask enough questions of his aides about the specifics of the Iran initiative.

However, in remarks prepared for his nationally broadcast speech, he insisted anew that he did not know about the alleged diversion of profits from the arms sale to the contra rebels in Nicaragua.

"As the Tower board reported," Reagan said, "what began as a strategic opening to Iran deteriorated in its implementation into trading arms for hostages. This runs counter to my own beliefs, to administration policy and to the original strategy we had in mind."

"There are reasons why it happened but no excuses. It was a mistake," he said.

Reagan has said before that mistakes were made in the Iran initiative but has not said he committed any of them. He had been urged in advance by Republicans and Democrats alike to make such a statement.

Noting that he has not said much about the affair over the past three months, Reagan acknowledged, "I've paid a price for my silence in terms of your trust and confidence. But I have had to wait, as have you, for the complete story."

Noting the publication of the Tower report last week, Reagan said, "I'm often accused of being an optimist and it's true I had to hunt pretty hard to find any good news in the board's report."

However, he said he was relieved that it said the president "does indeed want the full story to be told."

The address marked Reagan's first detailed response to the Tower commission's criticism of his detached management style and ignorance about the details and consequences of his arms-to-Iran policy.

The speech was widely believed to be a crucial step in the White House drive to repair political damage caused by the affair. Two earlier speeches failed to end the controversy or halt the drop in Reagan's popularity in the polls.

"I take full responsibility for my own actions and for those of my administration," Reagan said. "As angry as I may be about activities undertaken without my knowledge, I am still accountable for those activities. As disappointed as I may be in some who served me, I am still the one who must answer to the American people for this behavior."

Reagan said he found the secret bank accounts and diverted funds, "personally distasteful," but that he had to admit: "This happened on my watch."

Discussing the arms-to-Iran policy, Reagan noted that he has said previously that he did not trade weapons for hostages.

"My heart and my best intentions still tell me that is true, but the facts and the evidence tell me it is not," Reagan said.

Referring to the Tower commission's criticism of his management style, Reagan said, "The way I work is to identify the problem, find the right individuals to do the job and then let them go to it." He said that system brings out the best in people and "in the long run you get more done."

However, he added, "when it came to managing the NSC staff, let's face it, my style didn't match its previous track record. I have this."

Judge bans textbooks from Alabama public

By The Associated Press
MOBILE, Ala. — A federal judge Wednesday banned 31 textbooks from virtually all Alabama public school classrooms, saying they illegally promoted "the religion of secular humanism."

U.S. District Judge W. Brevard Hand said in a 172-page ruling that the use of the textbooks by the state violates the U.S. Constitution's prohibition against government establishment of a religion.

"With these books, the state of Alabama has overstepped its mark, and must withdraw to perform its proper non-religious functions," Hand said in the ruling.

The decision came in a class-action lawsuit filed by 600 parents and teachers, sponsored in part by conservative fundamentalists, who challenged the use of the textbooks in Alabama public schools. They argued in a 2½-week trial before Hand last October that secular humanism was being taught as a religion in numerous books.

The textbook critics objected in particular to the teaching of value judgments.

In "Teen Guide," a home economics book, for example, one of the objectionable passages said, "Nothing was 'meant to be.' You are the designer of your life. If you want some work for it. Nothing is easy. E either.

"When you recognize that y of your life, you will be way a be if you think of your life happens to you."

He pointed to his meeting Tuesday with his overhauled National Security Council staff and said he told them, "There'll be no more freelancing by individuals when it comes to our national security."

He did not mention by name any of the key players in the Iran-contra affair, such as his former national security advisers, John Poindexter and Robert McFarlane, or fired NSC aide Oliver North.

Looking back over the Iranian initiative, Reagan said, "One thing still upsetting me, however, is that no one kept proper records of meetings or decisions. This led to my failure to recollect whether I approved an arms shipment before or after the fact."

"I did approve it," Reagan said. "I just can't say specifically when."

The Tower commission said that Reagan, during one interview, said he had authorized an arms shipment in 1985, but then later changed his story and said during a second interview that he had not authorized it. Finally, Reagan wrote the board a letter a few days before its report was published and said that he simply could not remember.

ASASU drops Sparky question from spring ballot

By DARRIN HOSTETLER
State Press

The Associated Students Senate has decided not to include a question on the ballot during spring elections asking students if Sparky is an appropriate mascot.

Senate Bill 69, which would have placed the question before students during the April 8 and 9 election, was defeated 13-4.

College of Liberal Arts Sen. Mark Isenberg, who co-sponsored the bill with College of Education Sen. Kym Leicht, said the legislation was in response to the attention an anti-Sun Devil group has been receiving in the State Press.

Jack Thompson, a California born-again Christian fighting high school "devil" mascots in the Los Angeles area, has said he will lead an effort to eliminate Sparky.

"With all the media attention (Thompson) has been getting in the paper, I believe this is a question that needs to be answered," Isenberg said.

"Is this just a small minority of students, or is the opinion against Sparky more widespread? I feel it is probably the former, but it is a question that needs to be answered."

But Isenberg met stiff opposition from other senators, who said they are against placing questions on the ballot.

College of Business Sen. John Colombo said "If this were really an issue that needed to be addressed, that would be one thing."

"But let's face it. The State Press has fabricated the whole thing just to fill up space. Placing this on the ballot would make us look silly."

State Press Analysis Editor Ed Schubert, who has written extensively on the Sparky issue, said, "Anybody that would doubt that this story is accurate may contact Jack Thompson at (619) 568-9373."

Isenberg responded angrily to the senate's rejection of his bill.

"I find it disappointing that this body has continued to deny the students the right to vote on student body issues," he said.

"Granted, Sparky may not be as hot an issue as funding the (Lesbian Gay Academic Union), but the senate has denied the students the right to vote on that issue as well."

Sun Devils hope for luck in Pacific-10 tournament

By BOB HEILER
State Press

The ASU basketball team has a shot to make a lot of people look awfully silly.

The inaugural Pac-10 basketball tournament begins tonight at 7 in UCLA's Pauley Pavilion, when ASU takes on the Washington State Cougars.

The eighth-place Devils have beat the No. 9 Cougs twice this season, but coach Steve Patterson wants to avoid overconfidence.

"My concern at this time is that we give Washington State the proper respect," Patterson said. "This is a team that beat both Oregon and Oregon State last weekend and also beat Washington down the stretch."

The Cougars won those games by scores of 79-65, 73-63 and 86-80 respectively.

"It's always tough to beat a team for the third time, and Washington State will carry that extra drive to prevent it from happening," Patterson said.

The Devils lost two tough games to Stanford and Cal last week, but were riding a four-game winning streak before that. The 97-92 overtime loss to Stanford saw guard Steve Beck set a Pac-10 record, hitting nine of 11 attempts from beyond the three-points stripe.

If the Devils beat Washington State, things surely don't get any easier: they'll face regular-season Pac-10 leader UCLA Friday at 3 p.m.

The Bruins, a strong favorite to win the tournament, have a player in the top three in the conference in scoring (Reggie Miller, 573), assists (Pooh Richardson, 174), three-point percentage (Dave Immel, .506) and free-throw percentage (Miller, .822).

In other action tonight, the No. 7 Oregon Ducks take on conference cellar-dweller USC at 9 p.m. The winner of that game earns the right to play the Arizona Wildcats at 9 p.m. Friday.

The Cats finished second in the regular season, and appear to be the big threat in the lower bracket of the tournament.

The Cats are riding a wave from their 19-point drubbing of the California Bears, the Bears' worst home loss in two seasons.

ASU forward Alex Austin slams against Washington. The Sun Devils play in the inaugural Pac-10 Tournament tonight at Pauley Pavilion.

Bobby and Steve take a look at Thompson and Beck

Steve Brennan
Asst. Sports Editor

ASU guard Steve Beck has no regrets about his career with the less-than-spectacular Sun Devils. But those less-than-loyal fans certainly will regret never seeing him play.

Beck, who looks way too muscular to be playing basketball, will be playing his final game(s) with the Devils beginning tonight.

He has established himself as one of the premier athletes to ever wear maroon and gold. Through two coaches and four seasons without a winning overall record, Beck has been one of the true gems of Sun Devil basketball, finishing as the fourth highest scorer in ASU history.

"I had a great time at ASU," Beck said. "I think I made the right choice. I wanted to play basketball, which I did, and make a name for myself, which I feel I did."

In the face of tumultuous coaching changes and player dismissals for "attitude problems," Beck has done what he does best: play aggressive, solid basketball.

"I still feel I made the right choice," he Bobby Thompson is a class act.

His time on the ASU basketball team was not exactly ideal. The team has never had an winning season. Since he's a guard, Thompson has spent a lot of time in the shadow of teammate Steve Beck, the Devils' leading scorer for the last three seasons.

Thompson has spent about half his games as a sixth man, and he has provided a spark for the Devils from that position too many times to count.

That sixth-man spot can get frustrating, especially on a team that doesn't win a lot. But Thompson has never complained before, and he's not about to start now.

"ASU is the best choice I had out of the schools that recruited me," Thompson said in a post-practice interview Tuesday. "Once I got here, I found I liked it even more than I thought I would."

Bob Heiler

Thompson, who after this semester will need just six hours to complete his degree in marketing, says ASU is a great place to go to school and play basketball.

Gymnasts beat No. 1 Utes, even score from 1st meet

By CAROL BOOS
State Press

The ASU women's gymnastics team was pretty tired of the Utah Utes.

It showed in the Devils' performance last night, where they beat the No. 1-ranked defending national champions, 188.75-188.15.

In the season opener, the Devils lost to the Utes, 188.50-180.80, making for a bitter initiation for the young Sun Devils. Only three of the gymnasts were at ASU for the previous two losses to Utah, in regional competition and the NCAA nationals last year.

"I was more concerned with the score than with the win," Spini said. "It helps our confidence a lot to know we can beat the No. 1 team in the nation."

The Devils' consistent performance bested their previous season high of 186.15 by more than two full points. Karli Urban turned in her best all-around score, finishing second with a 37.95. Utah's Kris Takahashi captured first place in the all-around with a 38.05.

The win boosts the Devils' record to 10-5, after difficulty getting out of the blocks. The Utes collected their second loss — the first was to Alabama — making their record 7-2.

The Devils' revenge came at an inopportune moment for the Utes, who brought a television crew from Salt Lake City, which relayed the loss to the Utes' home town.

But Utah did not perform badly, pulling up just 1.6 points lower than its season best.

Despite Utah's perennial domination in the rankings, Spini said the team to beat this year is UCLA, which the Devils took second to last week in the Southwest Cup, 187.05-186.15.

"UCLA has more difficulty (than Utah) in their routines," Spini said.

The Devils trailed after the first two events, but took the lead in the third rotation, while ASU was on the beam and the Utes on the floor.

Senior all-America Shari Mann fell twice, once from the bars and once from the balance beam, but still managed to take third place in the all-around competition with 37.05.

But the key to this win, Spini said, was the consistent performances from the freshmen.

"It's real important for us to get this young team to nationals," Spini said. "We hope to finish fourth or fifth with five freshmen, and surprise a lot of people."

"The kids are getting more confident, especially with the leadership of Shari Mann, Karli Urban and Michelle Hanigsberg, despite her (Hanigsberg) being redshirted."

The Devils face intrastate rival Arizona in the University Activity Center March 14.

ASU freshman Molly Carpenter prepares to hit her vault approach in Wednesday's meet against Utah. ASU beat the defending national champions, 188.75-188.15. Todd Green/State Press

Women's swim team ready for NCAA meet

By STEVE ADAMS
State Press

Coming off a fourth place finish in the Pac-10 championships, the ASU women's swimming team will stay home this weekend to host the Sun Devil Championships at the Mona Plummer Aquatic Center Friday and Saturday.

The swimming team is coming off an impressive performance, according to coach Tim Hill, in which the Sun Devils captured three victories at the Pac-10 championships and qualified all of their relay teams for the NCAA championships in Indianapolis March 19.

"Considering we had the smallest squad in the Pac-10 championships, I am very pleased with our performance and fourth place finish," Hill said.

The Sun Devils have not had much time to rest as they will be hosting their own championship against Colorado State, different U.S. swimming teams and swimming clubs from around the area starting on Friday.

"This will be basically a meet in which we are more concerned with having more people qualify for the NCAA rather than who wins the meet," Hill said. "I am not worried about the outcome."

Hill is hoping that Carolyn Mills, Brandi Suttle, Bente Rist and Myra Shaw can all qualify this weekend for the NCAA and join some of the other women swimmers.

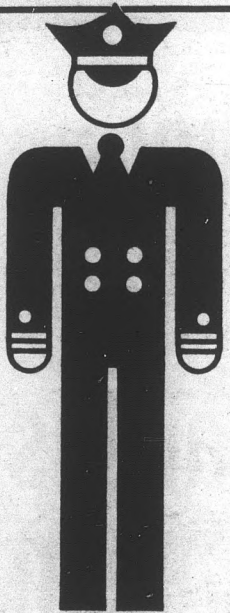

"These women all have the potential to swim well and qualify, and I hope they can do it in their individual events," Hill said.

Carolyn Cast, Terri Baxter, Beda Leirvaag and Susie Mortenson are the other swimmers who have already qualified for the NCAA along with diver Tracy Cox.

Along with qualifying a number of swimmers for the NCAA, the Sun Devils as a team have enjoyed a successful year up to this point and Hill hopes that all the positive momentum can give them a strong performance in the NCAA.

"We will use this weekend as a final tune-up before the NCAA and go into the championships hopefully having a lot of fun," he said.

ASU's accomplishments thus far this year include: being ranked as high as seventh in the coaches poll, defeating UA (a feat which only two other ASU teams have been able to do this year), defeating a heavily favored USC team on the road in November and finishing fourth in the Pac-10 championships.

Beck

said. "That stuff doesn't really matter when you're on the floor. It matters in recruiting, but once you're here it makes no difference," Beck said.

Beck was recruited by former coach Bob Weinbauer from Southeastern High School in Detroit as a sharpshooter. Since then, he has more than lived up to expectations, leading the Devils in scoring in three of his four years and averaging in double figures in all.

"My first couple of years I was just doing what I did best," Beck said. "I shot the ball because I was a shooter.

"The last couple of years I've been working harder. I started getting recognition and it made me want to work," he said.

This season Beck has almost doubled his scoring total, and has averaged 19.2 points a game, despite the worst team record of his career.

A quiet person both on the court and off, Beck was nicknamed "Smoke" by his teammates, but one of his passions is watching violent movies, i.e. "Rambo."

A lesser-known story about Beck concerns his tryout for the ASU football team in August of 1985.

Beck, who played football in high school and had been offered a scholarship to play football at Michigan, traveled to Camp Tontozona for summer practice.

After two days of practice, Beck decided football wasn't going to be his claim to fame.

"It was just too hot, man," he said. "If I hadn't already had a scholarship, if I needed it, I could have stuck it out. But since I already had it, I quit."

It seems ironic that he actually could have ended up playing the Wolverines in the Rose Bowl two years later.

Certainly those people who haven't seen Beck play as a Sun Devil will get a chance to see him in another uniform.

Beck has been in the eyes of a number of NBA recruiting people (including Weinbauer for the Philadelphia '76ers), as well as the Detroit Lions, who have also shown an interest in his football-related talents.

With 14 more credits to go before graduation with a degree in physical education, Beck is ready to get out.

"I've been here long enough," he said. "But it seems like the four years go by quick, though. You turn your head when you're a sophomore and all of the sudden you're a senior."

Thompson

college," Thompson said. "Academics, basketball and good social life. I think I got them all here."

Thompson also got his name at the top of the all-time ASU assist list, dishing out 451 to best Lafayette Lever's 444.

The assist list is right where Thompson belongs. In order to have a lot of assists, a man has to be unselfish — an attitude that has allowed Thompson to make the most of his ASU career.

Thompson plans to return to ASU for the fall '87 semester to complete his degree — another thing that separates him from the average athlete.

Thompson likes the team's outlook for next year, even the absence of himself and Beck leaves some questions in the backcourt.

"We've got a lot of young guys that are good and they happen to be tall," Thompson said. "Our leaving will have an effect, but with Arthur (Thomas), Tyrone Mitchell, Mike Redhair and Terence Wheeler, they'll be all right."

"Arthur has already proven what he can do, and Terence Wheeler is going to surprise a lot of people."

Thompson has watched ASU through a controversial coaching change, but says that things like that have little effect on anything except recruiting.

"You don't care about that once you're here and on the floor," Thompson said.

Sun Devils lose to Chicago Cubs in "fun" game

By DAVE HODGES
State Press

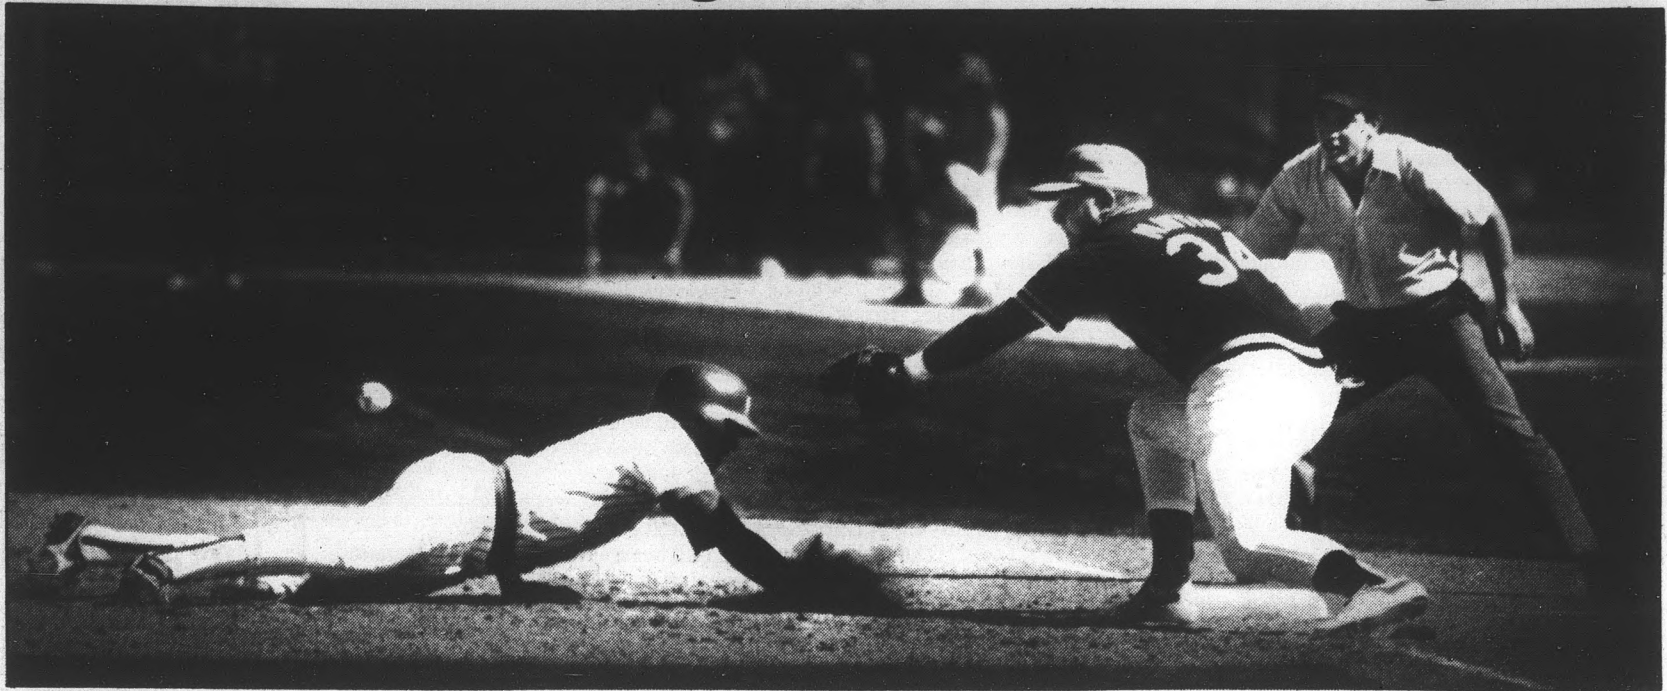

Shaky ASU pitching and defense lifted the Chicago Cubs to a 10-4 victory over the Sun Devils Wednesday at Mesa's HoHoKam Park.

But at least it didn't count. The Devils went into the exhibition game looking to have a good time and, according to centerfielder Mike Burrola, that's just what they did.

"It was a blast," Burrola said. "We knew we had nothing to lose today, so we just went out and had a lot of fun."

Burrola had more fun than anyone else, going three-for-four, including a mammoth home run in the eighth inning that brought the crowd of 3,532 to its feet.

"I was kind of surprised I hit as well as I did," Burrola said.

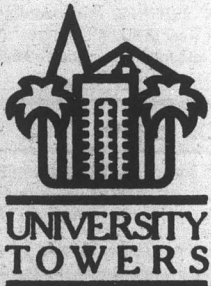

ASU first basemen Tony Mattia waits for the ball in a pickoff attempt as Cubs centerfielder Dave Martinez dives back to the bag. Martinez was safe on the play.

said. "Especially using a wooden bat." Since the game was being played in a National League ballpark, there was no designated hitter rule and wooden bats had to be used.

Bystanders jokingly suggested Burrola stick with the wooden bat for the regular season.

"No," he told them, "The ball still jumps better off the aluminum bats."

ASU coach Jim Brock — who coached third base during the game — used seven pitchers during the contest.

ASU also made five errors.

The Cubs did not play any of their "star" players, with the exception of Shawn Dunston, who played only one inning.

Chicago took a 3-0 lead during the first inning on a single by Chico Walker, doubles by Dave Martinez and Rafael Palmeiro and a triple by Dunston.

The Devils closed the gap to 4-2 during the top of the third inning. Mike Benjamin led off with a bunt single and was thrown out when Tony Mattia reached first on a fielder's choice.

Mattia then moved to third on a single by Martin Peralta, and scored on an RBI single by Burrola.

But the Cubs pulled away, scoring two runs in both the fourth and fifth innings.

Brock, who said he also had some fun during the game, said there will be a few changes in the offensive attack of the

'It was a blast. We knew we had nothing to lose, so we just went out and had a lot of fun.'

Sun Devils (8-10, 0-3 in the Pacific-10 Conference Southern Division).

"There are going to be some things we normally haven't done," Brock said.

He said one way the Devils will implement some new "special" plays is by having himself as the third base coach.

"There's just not enough time to send special plays in from the dugout," he said. "We will score some runs we otherwise would not have, but we'll also have more outs if I coach third base."

Brock also jokingly said the Cubs were lucky they were playing at HoHoKam and not at Packard Stadium.

"The Cubs know if we had been able to use the designated hitter, we would have won today," he said.

Brock will have the chance to prove that statement when ASU plays host to the Seattle Mariners Monday at 1 p.m. at Packard Stadium.

The Devils continue Six-Pac play with a three-game series against UCLA Friday, Saturday and Sunday at Packard.

Methodist church to investigate SMU football money payments

DALLAS — Southern Methodist officials Wednesday called for a church-sponsored investigation into conflicting statements by SMU board members and Gov. Bill Clements about illicit cash payments to football players.

Clements, who resigned as chairman of the SMU Board of Governors before taking office in January, said Tuesday that he and other board members were aware of the practice and decided to "phase out" the payments after the NCAA put the school on its sixth probation in 1985.

But current board members, who met Wednesday, said they were stunned by Clements' comments, denied any knowledge of payments to players and said anyone with such knowledge should resign from MSU.

"Everyone unanimously said they were not aware of any continuing payments," board chairman William Hutchison said.

The board asked the president of the United Methodist Church's College of Bishops to appoint an "external committee" to investigate the accuracy of the board members' statements.

Asked about the members' continued denials they knew anything about the payments, Clements said Wednesday: "Well I'd just keep talking to them if I were you. Everybody has to say what they're comfortable with."

The governor also denied the reaction to his comments would have any political effect on his administration.

Clements' statements in his regular weekly news conference marked the first time anyone had linked top school officials to knowledge of the payments.

Last week, the NCAA abolished SMU's 1987 football program as part of the the harshest penalty ever imposed against a collegiate football program. The NCAA said a $61,000 slush fund set up by a school booster was used to pay 13 players.

At the time allegations of the latest payments surfaced, SMU already was on a three-year probation that began in August 1985. In assessing SMU's seventh probation last week, the NCAA said payments continued through December 1986.

Hutchison said Wednesday he could not explain the contradictions between the board's statements and Clements' comments.

He said he spoke with Clements by telephone after the governor's news conference Tuesday and that Clements told him that "the Board of Governors as a board was not a part of this thing. The Board of Governors was not involved."

Clements, on Tuesday, did not elaborate on the time frame for phasing out the payments.

In an interview with the Dallas Morning News, Clements said the board decided to continue payments to 26 student athletes after "the advice of counsel and collaboration" with others.

He said "at least half" of the 17 board members "understand the details of what we are talking about. But the other half accept in good faith that we in a judgmental sense made the right decision in the interest of the institution."

The decision stemmed from a "moral obligation" to honor commitments to the players who were receiving money, Clements said.

But the Dallas Times Herald quoted an unidentified booster who was one of nine banned from associating with the university in 1985 as saying "strong threats were made by football players" that they would go to the NCAA if the commitments were not honored.

Lumberjacks head into tourney, ready for repeat of last season

By The Associated Press

FLAGSTAFF — Montana State may be the regular-season champion, but Northern Arizona senior forward David Duane says his Lumberjacks could be the team to beat in this week's Big Sky Conference basketball tournament in Flagstaff.

Northern Arizona was the league champion last season and will host the tournament, which starts Thursday and winds up Saturday night. The winner of the 12th annual tourney receives an automatic berth in next week's NCAA Division I playoffs.

Although the Lumberjacks wound up fifth in the eight-team conference this season with a 5-9 record, Duane pointed out that his team finished with a flourish by winning four of its final six league games.

"I think we have a good shot at winning it," said the 6-foot-7 Duane, who led Northern Arizona, 11-16 overall, in both scoring (16.6 points) and rebounds (8.1 per game) this season.

"We have a lot of momentum going into this tournament and we've been playing well. You also got to figure in the 7,000-foot altitude. We're used to it and that should be to our advantage. The other schools might have a problem with it," Duane added. "Things look good for us. The talk is we're one of the teams to beat and I can see why."

Lumberjacks Coach Jay Arnote, however, said Boise State may be the hottest team and the tournament favorite.

The Broncos of Coach Bobby Dye won nine of their last 10 games to finish 21-6 overall and 10-4 in the Big Sky — second behind Montana State, which was at 21-6 overall and 12-2 in the conference.

"I'm glad we have some momentum going into the tournament," Dye said. "We had some flu problems and some injury problems the last week or so, but we're in better shape now. We won here last Saturday night (beating Northern Arizona 83-81 in overtime), so we should have confidence going in."

Montana, the league's third-seeded team with a record of 18-10 overall and 8-6 in Big Sky play, opens the tournament with Thursday's noon MST game against sixth-seeded Idaho (15-13, 5-9).

Second-seeded Boise State faces seventh-seeded Idaho State (12-15, 5-9) at 2 p.m. Thursday with top-seeded Montana State squaring off against eighth-seeded Weber State (6-21, 4-10) at 7 p.m. The day's final game is set for 9 p.m. with Northern Arizona meeting fourth-seeded Nevada-Reno (13-14, 7-7).

Montana State won last year's Big Sky Tournament in Reno and closed out the regular-season last Saturday with a 96-86 win over arch-rival Montana, snapping the Grizzlies' 15-game winning streak.

Bobcats Coach Stu Starner said he is counting on big tournaments from forwards Tom Domako and Kral Ferch.

Domako, a 6-foot-8 junior, led the league in scoring this season with a 21.9 point average while Ferch, a 6-4 senior, was fifth at 16.9 per game.

Montana, coached by Stew Morrill, has pinned its hopes on senior center Steve Vanek and senior guard Scott Zanon. Vanek paced the Big Sky in field-goal percentage this season at 64 percent while Zanon lead the league in 3-point goals (36) and minutes played (37.9 per game) and placed second in assists at 5.1 per game.

Boise State features the league leaders in steals — junior guard Doug Usitalo with 2.9 per game — and free throw percentage with sophomore guard Chris Childs shooting 89 percent.

Big Sky

Coach Larry Farmer's Weber State Wildcats have senior forward Harry Willis, who led the Big Sky in rebounding (12.1 per game) and blocked shots (1.3 per game), plus senior guard Robert Maxwell, who had a league-leading 5.4 assists per game.

Nevada-Reno's Wolf Pack, coached by Sonny Allen, has senior center David Wood — the conference's second-best rebounder this season and junior guard Boris King, who placed third in the scoring race with 17.5 points per game.

Coach Jim Boutin's Idaho State Bengals feature the conference's second-best scorer in senior swingman Donn Holston (18.1 points per game) while the Idaho Vandals of Coach Tim Floyd feature junior guard Kenny Luckett, who finished ninth in scoring at 15.7.

Kite's wins mysterious; domination of Inverrary

By The Associated Press

CORAL SPRINGS, Fla. — Tom Kite's mastery of the south Florida tournaments is well documented.

But the mastery is a mystery.

"I don't know. I don't understand it. I can't explain it.

"But I sure do enjoy it," Kite said before a practice round for the $600,000 Honda Classic that begins Thursday on the Tournament Players Club at Eagle Trace.

In recent years, Kite has accounted for one-third of his nine career victories with wins at Inverrary (the forerunner to Honda), Doral and Bay Hill.

And the quiet little veteran has been a title-contender in those three events more than a dozen times.

Last week, at Doral, was a case in point.

Coming from five shots off the pace in the final round, he tied for second. He missed three putts of about 3 feet in length in the last round, and fell three shots short.

Kite collected $74,667 for the effort and became only the fifth man in PGA Tour history to go past $3 million in career earnings. His career total of $3,013,297 put him on a plateau reached previously only by Jack Nicklaus, Tom Watson, Lee Trevino and Ray Floyd.

Appropriately, his earlier money-milestones also were achieved in the south Florida tournaments. He went past $1 million with his 1981 victory at Inverrary and he passed $2 million with his 1984 triumph at Doral.

"It wasn't always like that," said Kite.

"I didn't play particularly well down here for a long time.

"Something got me started. I don't know what it is.

"Maybe it's the time of the year. I usually come into South Florida swinging pretty well. I don't mind playing in the wind. And it's bermuda grass, like I grew up on.

"Maybe it's all those things."

Others challenging for this week's $108,000 first prize include Masters champion Jack Nicklaus, British Open king Greg Norman of Australia, U.S. Open titleholder Ray Floyd and defending champion Kenny Knox.

Also in the 144-man field are Payne Stewart, Bernhard Langer of West Germany, Andy Bean and Mark O'Meara.

Angels' Howell gets attention in spring camp

By The Associated Press

MESA — The Angels' Jack Howell spent the early phase of spring training in the background.

Though Howell also was ineligible for arbitration and stood to have his contract renewed by the club on Thursday, more fuss was made over Wally Joyner and Kirk McCaskill.

But Howell, a smooth-swinging, left-handed hitter with excellent power, figures to move to the forefront once the contract web is untangled and attention shifts to the field.

The Angels have decided they can no longer afford to wait for a spot to open up for the third baseman's valued bat. So they've created one — having re-signed veteran Doug DeCinces, they decided to turn Howell into a left fielder.

The outfield isn't totally alien to Howell, 25, but he hasn't played there regularly since high school. He played a handful of games in left last season and impressed Manager Gene Mauch with his ability.

"I spent a week in the Instructional League (in November) playing strictly left," said Howell.

"I worked on getting used to the ball coming off the bat. My arm is good enough to adjust to throwing from the outfield, but I had to work on the different footwork."

The spring experiment involving Howell is pivotal to California's 1987 plans, since his conversion would allow Brian Downing to take over as designated hitter.

Reggie Jackson and Rick Burleson, who platooned as the club's primary DHs last year, are both gone.

Mainly, though, left represents Howell's only access to the starting lineup. And the Angels want full use of the bat which produced a .272 average with four homers and 21 RBIs in only 151 at-bats in 1986.

"I wonder what I could do over 130-to-160 games," said Howell, who has hit .373 and .359 in two years of Triple-A ball. "Each year, I've gotten more at-bats (with the Angels). But I'm looking forward to getting a lot more.
