

Recall workers 'gay agitators,' GOP chief says

By DARRIN HOSTETLER
State Press

The drive to recall Arizona Gov. Evan Mecham kicked off Monday amid charges from the chairman of the state Republican party that the recall committee members are "homosexual agitators."

In a prepared statement, Republican chairman Burton Kruglick accused the committee of "blatantly lying and using misinformation" in an effort to obtain signatures on petitions to recall the governor.

Kruglick took exception to the comments of recall organizer Ed Buck during an interview Monday morning on KTAR radio. In the interview, Buck allegedly urged people to sign recall petitions even if they support Mecham, so that they can vote in a recall election.

In a tape-recorded interview with Buck, the recall organizer said: "Even if you are a Mecham supporter, then you need to sign the petition . . . the election will resolve the controversy once and for all."

"There is absolutely no truth to that statement," Kruglick said. "Mr. Buck and his band of homosexual agitators are lying to the public in an effort to make people think they must sign the petition if they want to vote in any recall election."

"This is an outright lie by Mr. Buck, because it is not necessary to sign a petition to vote."

The recall movement needs to gather 216,746 signatures in 120 days to force a recall election.

Buck denied implying people must sign the petitions in order to vote.

"I was just saying that all Arizonans, be they Republicans or Democrats, should get involved and sign the petitions," Buck said.

Nancy Blair, a KTAR reporter who conducted the interview, also denied that Buck was trying to mislead voters.

"I think he was encouraging everybody, of all political affiliations, to sign the petitions," she said. "In the context of the conversation I had with him, it is obvious that he did not mean what the Republican Party is saying he meant."

Kruglick, a long-time Mecham supporter, also called the recall members a "fringe group of homosexual agitators," and said "the people of Arizona will reject their lying ways." Republican Party Executive Director Kurt Davis said while the party does not plan to attack the recall committee, they will continue to issue "corrections" when they feel the recall organizers are "misleading" the public.

"We're concerned, not about the possibility of a recall, but about the recall people distributing misinformation," Davis said.

"We won't tolerate that."

Davis said Kruglick's homosexual remark was in reference to "out-of-state gay groups coming into Arizona to help recall Mecham," not to Buck, who is an admitted homosexual.

Search for Kinsinger's replacement to begin in fall

By MICHAEL ROWELL
State Press

ASU President J. Russell Nelson said he would appoint an acting vice president of academic affairs in "the relatively near future" in the wake of current vice president Jack Kinsinger's resignation.

Nelson, who will be responsible for choosing Kinsinger's temporary and permanent replacements, said the search for a permanent vice president would begin in the fall.

Kinsinger, who resigned Wednesday, has been named president and chief executive officer of Chicago Osteopathic Health Systems (COHS) in Chicago, Ill.

Kinsinger will assume his new position Sept. 1.

Nelson called Kinsinger's departure "an important loss."

"I think it's a great loss to the University," he said. "He was a strong academic leader and I think (he) did a remarkably good job during the five years that he will have held the position."

"He was particularly adept at selecting very good people, and had a grasp of the needs and the prospects of this University."

Kinsinger said he was excited about the opportunity.

"But I have extremely mixed feelings about leaving an institution I have grown to love," he added.

Kinsinger went on vacation after informing administration officials of his acceptance of the new position and could not be reached for further comment.

Assistant to the President Larry Mankin said he thought Kinsinger accepted the position because presidency of an organization was the next logical step in his career.

Nelson said he takes pride in the fact that in the last 15 months, three academic administrators have been selected as presidents of other organizations. College of Public Programs Dean Nicholas Henry was recently appointed to the top post at Georgia Southern College, and former Executive Vice President Paige Mulhollan is now president at Wright State University in Dayton, Ohio.

"I think that speaks well of the caliber of people that have been working here," he said.

COHS is a corporation with five subsidiaries: the Chicago College of Osteopathic Medicine in Hyde Park, Ill.; two osteopathic hospitals in Hyde Park and Olympia Fields, Ill.; 25 ambulatory care centers in the Chicago area, a properties corporation and an enterprise corporation.

Kinsinger has been academic affairs vice president since 1982, with responsibility for all academic programs, budgets, personnel and policies. He previously has served as associate provost at Michigan State University for five years and for one year prior to that as assistant vice president for research and development at Michigan State.

Kinsinger's wife, Addie, is employed by KAET-TV (Channel 8) at ASU. She said Monday she would be remaining at ASU.

Kinsinger, 62, began his academic career at Michigan State in 1957 as an assistant professor in the chemistry department. He became associate chairman of chemistry at MSU in 1965, and chairman of the department in 1969.

He served as director of the Division of Chemistry at the National Science Foundation for 18 months before returning to the research and development post at MSU in January 1977.

Recall

Kruglick's accusations came on the day recall organizers visited the Secretary of State's office to officially announce their intentions to launch a recall petition drive.

The leaders of the recall movement fought their way through a pack of reporters and cameramen on the seventh floor of the state capitol building to officially file a "mission statement," proclaiming their intention to recall the governor.

Garry Smith, president of the Mecham Recall Corporation and a self-described "entrepreneur," led the way to the clerk's desk in Secretary of State Rose Mofford's office to receive the "serial number" that officially recognizes the movement.

Smith responded angrily to Kruglick's statement.

"These are just scare tactics from Mecham and his group," Smith said. "The emotion of the people of Arizona is what is going to take this recall through to its logical conclusion."

Buck called Kruglick's statement "an insult to the people of Arizona."

"It doesn't matter if they destroy Ed

Buck, because the recall belongs to the people of Arizona," he said.

Buck said the Recall Corporation has 5,000 people lined up to carry petitions and gather signatures.

"We're going for 350,000 (signatures), we're going to get them and we're going to recall the governor," he said.

Mecham Recall Corporation Secretary-Treasurer Diana Stewart blasted Kruglick for using "smear tactics."

Stewart, a Republican, said: "If this is the way the Republican party in Arizona operates, then I am ready to change my party affiliation."

Mecham had no comment on Kruglick's remarks or the beginning of the recall drive.

But Mariel Antonino, assistant to Mecham press secretary Ron Bellus, said: "We prefer to concentrate on matters of state and giving taxpayers work for their dollar."

"The recall effort is not something we can be concerned with right now."

Recall workers will not begin circulating petitions until Friday, when the state-wide recall effort will begin in force.

Time of transition: West Germans rate superpowers

Carolyn Nelson
Arts Editor

Many Americans were less than surprised last month when a boisterous East Berlin crowd gave police a riot to remember in response to an open-air rock concert taking place on the other side of the 26-year-old Berlin Wall.

But quite a few Americans were more than outraged when, days later, an equally expressive group of dissenters turned out for President Reagan's speech in the western part of the divided city.

Could these be the same people who wholeheartedly greeted John F. Kennedy a quarter century ago, the same Berlin that survived for 18 months in 1948-49 on the 2,343,315 tons of food and coal airlifted into the city by U.S. and British planes?

Yes, according to the results of a study published in the West German weekly news magazine "Stern" before Reagan arrived.

Four decades have elapsed since the United States and Germany struck up their peculiar conquerer-and-conquered relationship after World War II. And as in any relationship, time has effected various changes in the union's visage.

To discover just how the alliance has changed, a research firm working on the behalf of Stern and the Friedrich-Ebert Institution conducted an opinion poll of 1,800 West Germans of voting age in October 1986.

The results show that the polarity in German views of the United States and the Soviet Union is no longer so evident as it has been in the past. As the Federal Republic of Germany finds American politics — particularly defense policies — increasingly objectionable, the country moves closer to a neutrality between the two superpowers.

"Do we love the USA?" writes Sebastian Knauer in his article accompanying Stern's statistics. "Yes, as far as the lifestyle of America is concerned. No, when it comes to power politics from the White House."

For instance, 51 percent of the subjects answered affirmatively to the question "Do you like the Americans," while only 9 percent responded that they did not.

On the other hand, while 49 percent of the people surveyed said they had a good opinion of President Reagan, 50 percent said they did not have a positive opinion of him.

Almost inextricably connected with Reagan is his Star Wars defense plan, which 48 percent of the people surveyed opposed.

However, only 12 percent of the subjects believed the United States is pursuing a strengthened arms race between east and west. Twenty-two percent said the Soviet Union seeks to step up the weapons contest, and 47 percent said both superpowers promote the arms race.

Indeed, the divergence in the West German's opinions of the United States and the Soviet Union is disappearing. According to a 1980 poll, 2 percent of the German population viewed America as a threat to world peace while 71 percent saw the Soviet Union as a danger. By 1986, the figure for America had hardly changed, but only 26 percent of the subjects deemed the Soviets a threat.

Similarly, from 1980 to 1986, a steady 3 percent said the Soviet Union wanted freedom in the world, while the U.S. figure dropped from 52 percent to 22 percent during that time.

It appears the Federal Republic would distance itself from both superpowers. The study states: "The USA is not much more highly regarded than the Soviet Union."

Almost half of those polled said that not only the Soviet Union but also the United States was involved in the internal affairs of smaller countries. Only 24 percent believed that U.S. military superiority over the Soviets would effect European security.

However, 44 percent said that above all, the deterrent of atomic weaponry is the reason that western Europe hasn't been attacked by the Soviet Union in the last 30 years.

Furthermore, 51 percent of all the subjects would regret the removal of U.S. troops from Europe. Only a fifth of the respondents said they would greet the departure of American troops.

"We are not anti-American, but un-American," said German author Hans Magnus Enzensberger, quoted by Stern at a symposium at New York's Goethe Institute.

The West Germans are aware of the role the United States played in their history after the Second World War. They also know the direction in which they want to take their future.

Ask the 'Peeping Tom' press to take a look at itself

Mike Royko
Tribune Media
Services

I call The New York Times, see, and ask for the public relations department. The lady comes on the phone, and I say that I have a couple of questions I'd like answered.

"What are they?," she asks.

I tell her that there are all these names at the top of The New York Times' editorial page: the publisher, the executive editor, the managing editor, the editorial page editor and so on. About 10 editors.

"What I want to know is if they are married. And if they have ever been divorced. And if they have been divorced, when did it happen?"

And do you know what she says?

"I'm not going to give out that information." Click.

How do you like that? Here is a newspaper that has just asked all the presidential candidates some of the most personal questions in the history of American journalism.

All major newspapers ask candidates about their background, but only The New York Times has asked them to turn over any records of psychiatric treatment and other medical records. And to make available their FBI files.

So, let's say that 10 years ago, some guy who is now a candidate had trouble getting it on, as the younger set says, with his wife.

He goes to a shrink and tells him about his frustrating problem.

This is something The New York Times believes it should know about.

Or let's say that 10 years ago, some nut writes a letter to the FBI and says that this or that congressman is really a Soviet agent.

That winds up in the file. And that's something that The New York Times thinks it ought to know about.

Obviously, we don't want a president who is nuts or subversive. But I don't think it is up to a candidate to provide The New York Times with evidence that he is nuts or subversive. If The New York Times or any other paper has any reason to suspect him, it should go out and dig up the evidence on its own.

But if The New York Times thinks candidates should give up every last shred of privacy, who am I to argue with the world's most influential newspaper?

After all, its motives are lofty. It wants to assess the character and judgment and stability of the candidates.

Which is why I called and asked about the marital status and divorces of its top editors.

These are very powerful guys. Their stories, editorials and columnists have shaped and swayed the government's foreign and domestic policies, caused legislation to be defeated or passed, caused candidates to lose or be elected. In other words, The New York Times has, on many occasions, influenced the course of history.

That's very heavy stuff. So it seems only fair that we should have some insight into the character and judgment and stability of these people.

For example, if any of them were divorced, I'd like to know why? Were they frolicking with secretaries? Fathering illegitimate children? Ah, this could call into question their character and judgement and stability.

Were they cruel to their wives? Indifferent to their children? Maybe taking too many nips after work? Ah, further questions about judgement and character.

Am I being unreasonable? Maybe. But, remember, The New York Times was the paper that first raised the question of Gary Hart's womanizing. The Miami Herald did the nasty Peeping Tom job, but it was the Times that put Hart on the spot, causing him to stupidly invite reporters to tail him.

And now the Times has apparently decided to put all candidates on the spot. Sure, the candidates don't have to answer the Times' exhaustive list of questions and turn over private documents. That is their right. But if the candidates don't answer, they risk looking as if they might be hiding something.

Yet, the Times does have the right to ask the questions. I can't argue with that.

But I have the same right. Which is why I was so disappointed when The New York Times' public relations person refused to answer and hung up the phone.

She didn't even let me get around to asking if any of those New York Times editors had ever undergone psychiatric treatment and whether I could see the shrink's records.

Especially those of the editor who dreamed up the presidential questionnaire.

Billionaire Boys Club leader sentenced to life in prison

By The Associated Press

SANTA MONICA, Calif. — The leader of a group of wealthy young men called the Billionaire Boys Club was sentenced to life in prison without the possibility of parole Monday for killing a man who allegedly duped him.

Moments before sentence was imposed by Superior Court Judge Laurence J. Rittenband, the father of the victim stepped to the witness box and denounced defendant Joe Hunt as "a cold-blooded assassin."

"Ronald Levin was the oldest of our three sons," Martin Levin told the packed courtroom. "He was a sensitive, loving young man who was cut down in the prime of his life."

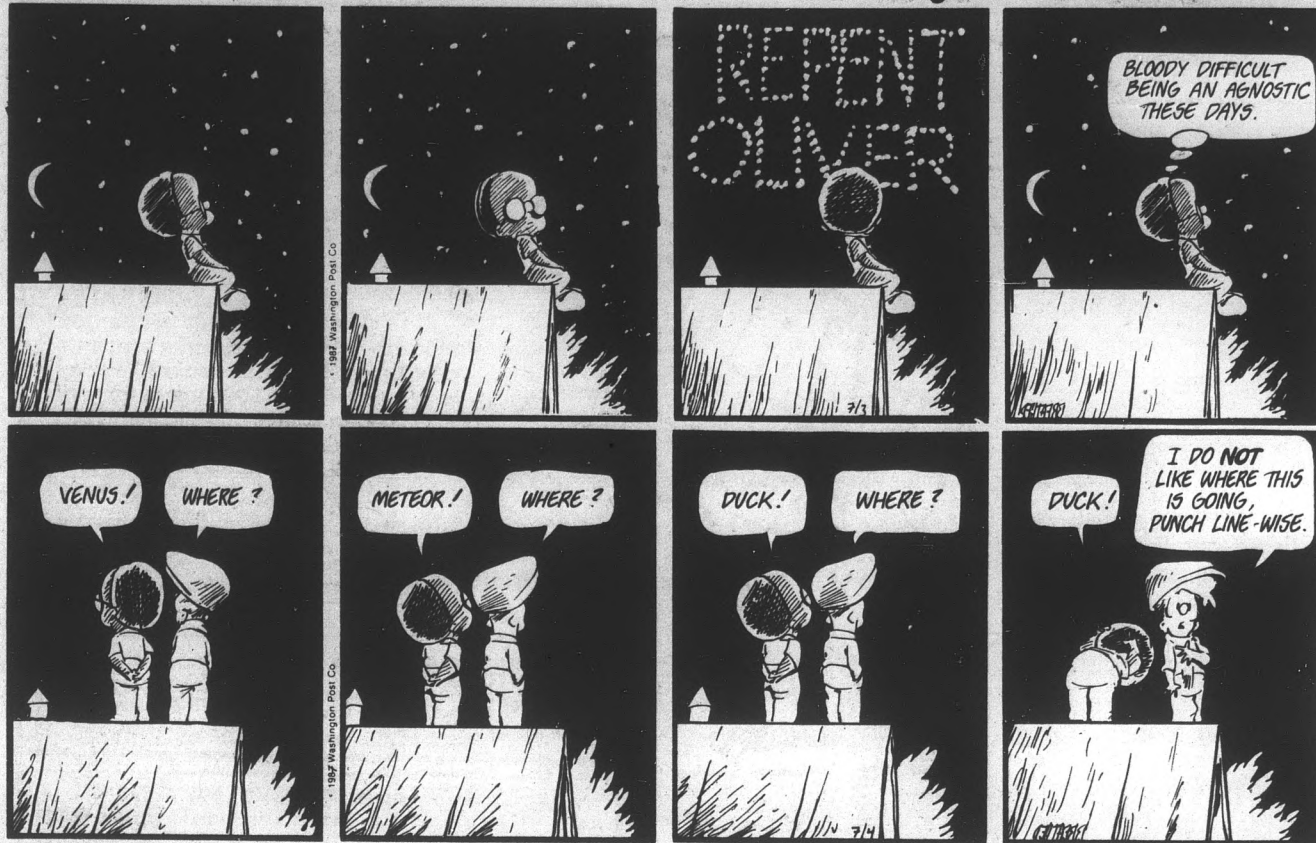

Hunt, 27, leaned forward with his chin in his hands as he listened to Levin's speech.

Rittenband told Hunt he believed it would be a greater punishment for him to spend life in prison than to be executed, "which also would have been appropriate."

Hunt was convicted in April of killing Levin, a con man and entrepreneur said to have duped Hunt in an investment scam. Levin disappeared in the summer of 1984, and his body was never found.

Witnesses at the trial said Levin was killed and his face disfigured with shotgun blasts before he was buried in a remote section of Soledad Canyon. The defense maintained he is still alive.

Hunt's Billionaire Boys Club consisted mostly of buddies from the exclusive Harvard School prep academy.

Mecham predicts recall failure

By The Associated Press

SNOWBIRD, Utah — Arizona Gov. Evan Mecham said Monday that supporters of a recall campaign against him have little chance of success because the effort is being directed by an avowed homosexual.

"I don't think the people of Arizona are going to follow the lead of a person who is an avowed homosexual and has been arrested on drug and morals charges," Mecham said, referring to Phoenix businessman Ed Buck, who is leading the recall drive.

Mecham, who is attending the annual meeting of the Western Governor's Association in Utah, said most Arizona voters like what he has done for the state and would support him in a recall vote even if his opponents collect enough signatures to force a new election.

The conservative Republican reiterated his contention that the recall effort, which officially began Monday, is the product of homosexual activists and renegade Democrats who do not have mainstream support.

The Arizona Democratic Party has not endorsed the recall effort.

"The homosexuals are unhappy because I've publicly said I don't approve of their lifestyle and I said I wouldn't hire anybody who was homosexual," he said.

Mecham said he has potential staff members and other administration employees carefully checked out before hiring them to ensure they are not homosexual.

He said he does not specifically ask them whether they are.

"You don't have to ask people if they're homosexual if you check them out very carefully," he said.

Buck was arrested in 1983 in a Phoenix adult theater for alleged morals violations, and pleaded guilty to a reduced charge. He was arrested in January 1987 on a charge that he attempted to use a photocopied prescription. The case is pending as Buck undergoes a rehabilitation program.

Mecham said he would welcome a recall election because it would give him an opportunity to showcase the accomplishments of his administration.

Convict captured after prison escape

By The Associated Press

SANTA FE, N.M. — One of seven convicts who vaulted out of a maximum-security prison on Independence Day was captured Monday, but his confederates remained at large, authorities said.

Hector B. Torres, sentenced to 21 years for kidnapping, armed robbery and aggravated battery, was captured near the Downs of Santa Fe racetrack south of the city, said state Corrections Department spokesman Don Caviness. He said he had no details on the arrest.

Some 200 law officers using helicopters and dogs continued the hunt for the six other inmates, two of them convicted killers, who escaped from the prison here after pulling a gun on one guard and wounding another. A multiple murderer was believed headed to Oklahoma, while another inmate's clothes were discovered in Santa Fe today.

Corrections Secretary Lane McCotter said Sunday he had authorized officers to shoot to kill.

Authorities today also were looking for three killers who escaped Saturday from the State Prison of Southern Michigan in Jackson.

Roadblocks went up around Santa Fe as authorities conducted a manhunt within 10 miles of the Penitentiary of New Mexico, Caviness said Sunday night.

Death toll rises in African train wreck; 128 dead

By The Associated Press

KINSHASA, Zaire — The death toll in a truck-train collision has risen to 128 with the recovery of three more bodies, which were buried Monday.

The collision Thursday was believed to be the worst train wreck ever in Africa.

The three bodies were recovered over the weekend and buried in Kasumbalesa Shabam. On Friday, 125 other victims of the accident were buried there, the state Voice of Zaire radio reported.

Authorities said 46 people remained hospitalized with injuries, the national Zaire Press Agency reported.

The accident occurred when a trailer-truck collided with a train at Kasumbalesa Shabam near the Zambian border, about 60 miles southeast of Lumbumbashi and about 250 miles north of Lusaka, Zambia.

De-pressing film fails to squeeze laughs from lineup

By CAROLYN NELSON
State Press

"The Squeeze" — ★ 1/2

If the combination of John Davidson, Meat Loaf and "Bonanza" sounds appealing, then rush right out and see

"The Squeeze."

But audiences who expect more from a movie than former minor-league talkshow hosts, former junior-league rock stars and former small-screen hit series will have some trouble stomaching Tri-Star Pictures' latest "production," which will gurgle into theaters Friday.

Michael Keaton plays Harry Berg, a down-on-his-luck compulsive gambler/video artist who finds his life scrambled with the appearance of a mysterious black box.

Michael Keaton, in a distinct step down from his role in the laugh-filled "Mr. Mom" and even the laughable "Johnny Dangerously," stars as Harry Berg, an artist of sorts.

Evidently, there is little demand for statues of prehistoric creatures made from television components in New York City, so Berg supplements his non-income at illegal card games.

Unfortunately, his luck is even more lacking than his artistic ambition, so it is no wonder that his ex-wife has put a skip-tracer on his trail for unpaid alimony checks.

Enter investigator Rachel Dobs (Rae Dawn Chong), a wanna-be detective complete with trench coat and Sherlock Holmes complex.

Then the token topicality of alimony evasion gives way to a run through high-tech, big business and the mafia and down the final stretch of imagination to a $56 million lottery scam.

And, of course, a happy ending.

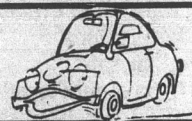

"The Squeeze" marks the lowest ebb of Keaton's comic tide, although Chong's half-witted non-acting has soared to dizzying — and ditsy — heights.

Meat Loaf, as the tall, dark and gruesome bad guy Titus, proves conclusively his ability to sweat on cue; Davidson plays himself almost convincingly.

Similarly abysmal performances are turned in by Leslie Bevis as debutante from hell Gem Vigo, Ronald Guttman as "heady" scam-master Rigaud and Liane Langland, who plays Berg's ex-wife.

The film doesn't lack humor entirely. There are exactly two lines that can evoke an honest chuckle — something about New Jersey being the heart of darkness and a quip about the Beastie Boys.

Otherwise, "The Squeeze" wrings dry its schizophrenic assortment of pretexts faster than audiences can squeeze out the theater doors.

No goal too heavy for Valley's top bodybuilder

Ken Wade and Jaimie Langdon

By DAVID MILLER
State Press

Newly crowned Mr. Phoenix Ken Wade would probably love some pizza right about now.

He certainly deserves it. For years, training schedules and unbending diets have ruled him and now he's got the most prestigious bodybuilding crown in the Valley to show for it. He ought to take it easy for awhile.

But he can't. "This contest was a lot of hard work but the Mr. USA is coming up," he said. "This was kind of a warm-up for that."

And so it's back into the gym. And on to the next show in a series.

It may seem like a grind but Ken Wade is used to the schedule. And he's used to living on a diet of broiled chicken and Malt-o-Meal, and training six days a week, sometimes twice a day. It's not fun, he admits, but there's nothing else he'd rather do.

"You have to be goal-driven to succeed in bodybuilding. That's the main thing," he said.

A graduate of Purdue University with a degree in mechanical engineering, Wade chose to parlay his skills in the southwest, where he could soak up the sun and take the weightlifting that had begun as a hobby in a more serious direction.

"I want to take this as far as possible. I want to be the best I can be," he said.

The Mr. Phoenix contest represents a good stopping-ground-of-sorts on the way. A bodybuilder who wins a major state title has already cleared a strong path towards demonstrating biceps shots on a pro stage. And who knows where else.

"I think I can crack the top 10 (in the Mr. USA)," he said.

"He's got an excellent opportunity to end up in the pros," insists Jaimie Langdon who, as his partner in and out of the gym, should know.

Their training relationship seems to have enhanced their personal one. "It's nice having a girlfriend going through the same things I am," he said. "For instance, when she's dieting so am I. I don't have to worry about her eating pizza in front of me," he said.

Langdon, a 1985 ASU graduate, competed in the female version of the Mr. Phoenix contest. Unfortunately she did not place as well as Wade.

But that wasn't entirely bad. "He said he knew he really cared when his win wasn't as strong as it should've been because I didn't win," she said.

But both agree that there's more to the lifestyle than walking off with the trophy.

"This is my high," Langdon said. "I come here (to the gym) instead of happy hour."

Wade concurs: "It's a lot of hard work but there's no feeling like it. It takes more dedication than any other sport."

Eating remains the hardest portion of the process to control.

"Training's nothing compared to dieting," he said. "But I've learned how to eat. I've got it down to a pattern and my job lets me eat the way I have to. I can take a cooler full of food to work and set it by my desk and eat all day."

He dispels the myth that in order to lose body fat one has to go for long periods without food. "I've got more food in my mouth when I'm dieting than when I'm not," he said. "I just eat smaller portions."

"It's all such a science," he said. And it's one he seems to have mastered.
