Soviet journalists praise ASU's WHIM

By MICHAEL ROWELL
State Press

Five Soviet journalists who attended a humor conference at ASU have written near-glowing reviews of the the University and the conference for Russian publications, an associate professor who translated the articles said.

"As far as ASU goes, we really came off well in the Soviet press," said Lee Croft, associate professor of foreign languages.

Alexei S. Pyanov, the editor-in-chief of Krokodil, Russia's leading humor publication, wrote in the June 17 issue that "(ASU) is a city within a city. It accomodates 43,000 students, has many learning quads (buildings), concert halls, a stadium, church, huge library and a multi-story garage."

Regarding the Western Humor and Irony Membership (WHIM) Conference in April, the writers were impressed with the number in attendance and the depth of the study, and Pyanov wrote: "Many people here for the first time discovered for themselves Soviet humor... and they did not conceal their delight at the drawings and books by Soviet artists."

Croft said generally there was a positive reaction to U.S. humor in the articles, but all of them mentioned the Americans' black humor, particularly Challenger jokes.

Along with Pyanov's Krokodil article, Vladimir Mochalov, Andrey Benyukh, Aramais Saakyan and Valentin Prokhorov contributed to articles for Vosni, Pravda, The Literary Gazette and Trood. The combined circulation of these periodicals exceeds 30 million.

"These are literally some of the most read publications," Croft said. He explained that because these publications are often posted in public places, "each copy printed gets read by many people."

The Soviets also were impressed with ASU's Russian students and library collections, the three-story cacti, Americans' health craze, Disneyland and Rawhide.

The only negative incident in Tempe, according to the Krokodil article, was a note passed to the Soviets' interpreter that read "Which one of you is KGB?" The article went on to call the incident "a reminder of the other America."

English professor Don Nilsen, who has sponsored the WHIM conference for the last six years, said eastern bloc countries have as much humor as the U.S. does.

He said Krokodil, which is totally devoted to satire, has a circulation of 5.3 million every other week, far more than any American humor magazine.

Nilsen said when the FBI found out the Soviets were coming, they sent two agents to interview him.

"The first time I saw them I knew they were either FBI agents or Mormon missionaries, because they were dressed up in suits and had dark ties with white shirts," he said.

Honorary degrees planned for graduation

By DARRIN HOSTETLER
State Press

ASU's summer commencement will include the conferring of honorary doctoral degrees on long-time Arizona Congressman Morris K. Udall and Phoenix cultural and civic volunteer Katherine Herberger.

More than 700 students are expected to participate in the graduation ceremony, scheduled for Friday, Aug. 7 at 4 p.m. in the University Activity Center.

Udall, Arizona's delegate from the second congressional district, has served in the House of Representatives since 1961. He is chairman of the House Interior and Insular Affairs committee and has been active in environmental issues involving nuclear energy, national parks and public lands.

Udall was a presidential candidate in 1976, but failed to capture the Democratic nomination.

Herberger, who has been awarded the Certificate of Life membership by the Phoenix Salvation Army, has been involved in the affairs of that organization and many other humanitarian and cultural groups in the Valley since 1949.

ASU President J. Russell Nelson will preside over the graduation ceremony and journalism and telecommunication Professor Eldean Bennett will serve as master of ceremonies.

Gonorrhea bacteria growing resistant to another antibiotic

By The Associated Press

BOSTON — Bacteria that cause gonorrhea are quickly developing resistance to another antibiotic, and the world may be running out of drugs to cure this common venereal disease, Army doctors say.

The researchers found that 8 percent of servicemen infected with gonorrhea in Korea had strains of the germ that could withstand spectinomycin, a relatively new drug for treating the venereal disease.

Experts expect that this resistance will eventually spread to the United States, where gonorrhea germs are already developing resistance to penicillin and tetracycline.

"We are beginning to run out of drugs," said Dr. John W. Boslego. "What's available currently is being diminished faster than we are replenishing it with new drugs."

Boslego, a researcher at Walter Reed Army Institute of Research in Washington, published the findings in Thursday's New England Journal of Medicine.

At the U.S. Centers for Disease Control in Atlanta, Dr. Jonathan Zenilman said the Army research is important, because it shows a direct link between increased antibiotic use and the emergence of bacteria strains that are resistant to the medicines.

"This has been hypothesized for a long time, but there has been a lack of good data to show it," he said.

The incidence of antibiotic-resistant gonorrhea has increased 30 times since 1980, according to the CDC.

Zenilman said there is currently no shortage of drugs to treat gonorrhea. Besides spectinomycin, U.S. physicians can treat gonorrhea with ceftriaxone and a new class of drugs called carboxyquinolones.

Racist Arizonans and their governor are out of time

David Miller
Sports Editor

"I've got to sign the recall," I said to Tony, who was taking a break from work with me. "And I gotta do it soon. I'm not even registered to vote yet."

Tony, a transportation major at ASU, didn't say anything. "Aren't you going to sign the recall?" I asked. I was sure that everyone I knew wanted Evan Mecham out of office as much as I did.

"Nope," he said. He didn't elaborate.

Tony and I work for the airlines when we're not in school and I'm not at the State Press. There are a lot of students who work part time there.

There are also a lot of full timers who work there.

The break room was quiet for a moment. Everyone concentrated on dinner or on Justine Bateman, who was busy running verbal laps around the track with her TV brother Alex, played by Michael J. Fox. Alex was explaining why he had so much trouble relating to his female boss.

"See Mallory, there are basically three kinds of women: there are those who are nurturing and caring, like mom. And there are those who are aggravating and irritating like you and Jennifer. And then there are romantic prospects, which are everybody else," Alex said. "So where does a cute little number like my boss fit in?"

Mallory couldn't tell if Alex was serious or not.

"I don't like the idea of this recall," said another crew member, a full timer. "I think Mecham should be allowed to finish his term."

I couldn't tell if he was serious or not.

"You don't think the recall is a good idea?" I asked him. His name was Sam.

"No, I don't," Sam said. "We can't just go around recalling everyone we don't like. How would that be if every time people didn't like something an elected official did they were allowed to recall him? How could we function?"

"Well, I think this is kind of a special case," I said.

"Sure, Mecham's done some things that people don't like," Sam continued, "but the man was elected and he should be given the chance to finish his term."

"And the whole thing is really based on this Martin Luther King Day," he said, "which was declared illegal and would've set up a state holiday which you and I would have to pay for. I don't want to pay for it. And I can think of better men to honor with a holiday than Martin Luther King."

Sam's voice started to rise; he obviously felt strongly about the subject. "I mean look at King — he was a womanizer and he was a racist too. Sure he did a lot for the blacks but everything he gained for them he took from the whites. He said he was promoting racial harmony but he never did anything for white people."

"Well, I think the real issue wasn't as much the King holiday as the fact that its rejection was racially motivated. Or at least it looks that way," I said.

"Hey, we're all racists," Sam said. "Don't kid yourself. We're all raised that way and there's a certain amount of it in everybody."

I couldn't argue completely, although I was having a hard time listening to Sam.

He didn't make it any easier: "You young kids say things about race but you don't know, or at least not until you experience it. Wait until they move into your neighborhood. That's why people move out of neighborhoods, because they take over and then they don't want us to live there. I'm from Chicago. If you don't believe me you go there sometime."

"You know, they're always crying about civil rights, but where are the rights for white people?" Sam asked.

"I don't have any problem with them. If they leave me alone I'll leave them alone."

I assumed by "they" he meant black people.

I asked him again about Mecham: "But you don't think Mecham's decision to rescind the King holiday was racially motivated?"

"No, I think he gets a hard time because he's blunt. He's a little rough around the edges, but give him time," he said.

"But Sam," I wanted to tell him, "if your remarks are any indication, people like you and Gov. Mecham have had way too much time already."

Reach Out: Call saves life of 'disconnected' friend

Greg Krzos
Editor

Every once and a while people find themselves in situations that seem unexplainable.

A few weeks ago, I found myself in such a situation while doing my Russian homework late in the evening. I was learning a pattern sentence when I got a weird urge to call an old friend in Chicago. There was no reason why I needed to talk to him really, other than to satisfy my own curiosity and find out what was happening to him at that moment. It was like a hunger pang that needed to be satisfied.

I realized his phone number had been left at work and I was about to dismiss the entire idea when that pang hit me again. Something told me to reach him. I called directory assistance in Illinois and thought I must be crazy for going to all the trouble just to speak with someone I had heard from just a few weeks prior.

The call went through. After two rings it sounded as if someone threw the phone half way across the room when they answered it. Madonna's "Like A Virgin" played in the background and after a few minutes it became apparent that I wasn't listening to an answering machine recording.

I called out my friend's name, but the line went dead. I called back and he answered immediately, saying, "Now is not a good time."

Something wasn't right. I gave him a greeting, figured there was something wrong and told him to cut the bull and talk to me.

But it was no use. He was, terribly depressed and didn't sound like himself at all. When I asked him what was wrong, he gave me a long list of not-so-happy situations that were currently taking place in his life. I did the "friend" thing to do and started spreading sunshine and rainbows all over the place, assuring him that life is wonderful and that "it does get better."

All my wonderful little "pick-me-ups" were interrupted by "buts" and "I don't know," and I decided the best way to handle the situation was to give in.

"You're right," I said. "I mean c'mon, why try making things work out? Why should you feel good anyway? You're life's a mess, you hate your job, your parents won't talk to you, you're broke, this is the worst time of your life and making it work out is pointless and stupid, and besides, why should you feel good when feeling rotten is so much fun?"

There was a quick chuckle on the other end. He excused himself for what seemed like five minutes. There were some weird noises in the background, and when he got back on the line he told me there was something he wanted to tell me.

"Last week," he started. "I decided I wanted to die."

"There's this 'biker' woman at work and I asked her if she could get me a gun — so I could die. I gave her $50 — it was hot — but she came back the next day and told me she couldn't get a hold of the guy who has it. Then I heard a person could overdose on cocaine. There's this guy at work who deals the stuff. I gave him $100 to get some — so I could die. But his contact was out of town and it didn't work out. So, I was sitting here tonight, and when I looked at my stove I realized all I needed to do was turn on the gas — and die. I shut the doors and windows and decided to just fall asleep — and die. So, about an hour ago, I turned on the oven, laid down on the floor, listened to Madonna — and was going to die.

"But then you called," he said. "I remember pushing the phone away the first time it rang, but I accidentally kicked it off the hook. Then I heard your voice on the other end, so I hung up. But then you called back. I decided I'd talk to you for a half hour, we'd hang up and then — I'd die."

I sat there letting the phone hang off of my ear. I came to several conclusions — mainly that my friend works with a bunch of strange people.

I realized then that life never gets that bad and suicide is definitely not the answer. When everything seems to be going wrong, there's always a reason for it to be going right — it's all in the attitude. Generic as it may sound, it's true. Ultimately, it is up to the individual to realize help is only within the reach of a telephone.

The suicide hotline number in Phoenix is 249-1749.

Skateboarding crackdown brings parents' complaints

By The Associated Press

SCOTTSDALE — Three more teenagers have been arrested as a continuing police crackdown on illegal skateboarding in downtown Scottsdale has prompted more complaints by parents who claim police are being heavy-handed.

The three boys, all 15-years-old, were arrested about 2 p.m. Tuesday on the Scottsdale Civic Center Mall after a police officer saw them allegedly riding their skateboards in a prohibited area.

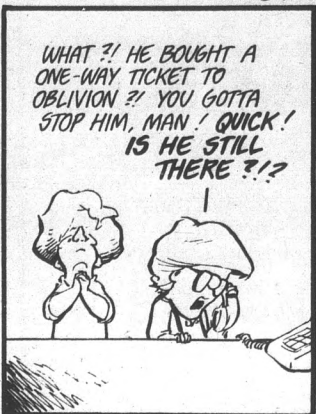

The three were booked at city jail — a process that includes fingerprints and photographing — before being released to the custody of their parents and told to appear in court Aug. 6.

Phoenix resident Diana Boelter, whose son Eric was one of the three, said she was shocked when she learned the boys had actually been arrested.

Ms. Boelter said her son stayed with his friends in a cell at the jail for about half an hour before her husband could get off work and come down to the police station.

She said her son told police it was the first time he skateboarded on the mall, and did not see the signs forbidding the activity.

Police said the juveniles were jailed because they didn't carry any identification, but many youths don't carry any until they begin to drive, Ms. Boelter said.

'Daylights' takes novel approach to 007

"The Living Daylights" — ★★½

What becomes a legend most?

Well, if the subject is super-spy James Bond, then Timothy Dalton, who plays the most recent version of 007 in "The Living Daylights," will soon become legendary.

The character created among the pages of Ian Fleming's famous series of novels celebrates 25 years on the silver screen this year with "The Living Daylights," which opens Friday.

Since 1962, when James Bond made his celluloid debut in "Dr. No," the question, "Who is the best Bond?" has ranked consistently among favorite conversation openers.

Scottish-born Sean Connery popularized the charming but lethal British secret agent in the first 007 flicks, while Roger Moore took over Bond duties in the '70s.

The transition was punctuated by a strained performance by George Lazenby in "On Her Majesty's Secret Service." Even veteran David Niven tried his hand in a comedy rendition of "Casino Royale."

Dalton, however, removes the question from its rhetorical status.

He is what James Bond is all about.

Of course, HQ has armed him with some impressive artillery — like a well-written script and an interesting story line.

Straight-forward cloak-and-dagger action has replaced the space-suit-and-laser scene that characterized many of the more recent films.

And Bond is no longer the neatly pressed, painfully pretty and perpetually prepared hero.

Instead, Dalton portrays a poised, astute but occasionally fallible secret service man, a character who bears a striking resemblance to Fleming's novel spy.

In fact, "The Living Daylights" shines as one of the truest-to-the-word Bond movies yet.

The ersatz defection of a high-ranking KGB official pits 007's instincts against his orders in the middle of a black-market-arms waltz.

His dance card leads him through Austria, North Africa and Afghanistan, the tension building with every step.

Timothy Dalton is all dressed up with plenty of places to go as James Bond in the latest 007 film, "The Living Daylights."

He takes the time, however, for a romantic duet with a lovely Czechoslovakian cellist.

But the Strativarius-toting blonde holds the only bow over Bond's heartstrings.

It seems 007 wears the '80s as well as he wears his tuxedo.

Of course, his wolf-whistle has been reserved for the gas bomb in his key chain.

Topical humor and long-standing Bond film traditions peacefully co-exist among the lush settings and taut action.

As do many of the principles — a R-r-r-russian accent does not necessarily a bad guy make in "The Living Daylights."

Dalton may be the new Bond on the block, but evidently he's quite a quick study.

But then, what else could be expected of the legendary 007?

Museum names mammoth contest

You won't be able to miss the new arrival to the ASU Art Museum's "zoo," a quickly expanding exhibit of animals in art.

The new specimen is a life-sized wooden replica of a baby Asian elephant created by New Mexican folk artist Max Alvarez and donated to the museum by Mr. and Mrs. Arnold Horwitch of Scottsdale.

But while feeding and exercise aren't major concerns, there is a problem with the latest addition to the display, located on the museum's mezzanine level.

The elephant hasn't got a name.

So, to initiate the pine pachyderm into the exhibit, the museum is sponsoring a naming contest for children ages 5 through 12.

Who better than your kid brother to name a fake elephant?

Entry forms can be obtained at the museum, which is located on the second floor of Matthews Center.

To really fan the flames of imagination, the museum has thrown in $100 in cash awards to the first-, second- and third-place winners.

The contest closes Sept. 6.

The winners will be announced Sept. 21 and will receive $50 for first place, $30 for second place and $20 for third place.

Not to malign a certain political party, but hot possibilities include the timely — and alliterative — "Ollie the Elephant," certainly an apt representation of Col. North's headstrong, unmovable character.

On the same track, how about "Mecham the Mammoth"?

After all, the governor never forgets his friends.

Of course, there always are a few handy classics like "Dumbo," "Jumbo" or "Tusky."

The museum is open 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. Monday through Friday and 1 to 5 p.m. Sundays. There is no admission charge.

The ASU Art Museum has added a life-sized wooden statue of a baby elephant to its collection.

Drugs screening Ueberroth's eyes

David Miller
Sports Editor

Baseball Commissioner Peter Ueberroth doesn't want baseball players to take drugs anymore.

He thinks they're bad and he thinks the players that take them are bad too. And he wants to make sure everyone knows this.

Peter Ueberroth likes to give out huge fines to baseball players. But he also appears to be very selective about whom he hands out fines to.

At least Lonnie Smith thinks so. Smith, an outfielder and designated hitter with the Kansas City Royals, and an admitted cocaine user, was recently reprimanded for his hobby by Ueberroth. In an interview in the Kansas City Star and Times he said Ueberroth has basic problems dealing with the concept of drugs and pro athletes.

"I don't see where he's (Ueberroth) doing his part. What has he done? He's done nothing except go to the Little League World Series and say 'Baseball is free of drugs.' "

Baseball is free of drugs?

Perhaps Mr. Ueberroth should watch more TV. Or perhaps he should watch a little less.

Lonnie Smith thinks he should watch a WHOLE lot more — at home, while he's looking for a new job.

Smith, who testified in the 1985 drug trial of Philadelphia Phillies clubhouse caterer Curtis Strong, received what he considers an inordinate penalty. He was required to pay $85,000 to a drug-abuse prevention program, perform 100 hours of community service in each of the next two years and submit himself for random drug testing for the rest of his professional career. But he feels he was made an unfair example by Ueberroth.

"It's not fair," he said. "Look at (Dwight) Gooden. He doesn't have to pay nothing. Where's the justice? Is it OK just because he's a Cy Young winner?"

Smith said that Ueberroth pulled him into his office at one point and asked him how he thought drugs could be removed from the game. Smith told him that he thought the best way would be to have players give anti-drug lectures to other players.

But it seems Ueberroth already had his ideas of how to combat drugs.

He doesn't need your advice, Lonnie. Thanks anyway. He just needs your example. So just hop on up here in the spotlight and take your punishment like a man. Look at it this way: at least you're not locked away.

But perhaps Ueberroth's ideas on combatting drugs should be.

Fugitive charges dropped against former NBA player indicted in Suns drug case

By The Associated Press
SACRAMENTO, Calif. — The Sacramento County district attorney has dropped fugitive charges against former professional basketball player Mike Bratz, who was indicted on narcotics charges in Arizona.

The fugitive complaint was dismissed in Municipal Court Tuesday because Arizona officials failed to forward necessary documentation within the 90-day limit, District Attorney John Dougherty said.

What happens next is up to Arizona, the district attorney said.

"We have been informed that the Arizona indictment has not been dismissed. We have also been informed that the Arizona officials intend to continue to seek a California governor's warrant. If such a warrant were to be obtained in the future, Bratz could be rearrested on the Arizona charges and extradited to Arizona," the district attorney said.

Bratz, 31, who formerly played for the Sacramento Kings, was indicted on April 16 in Phoenix with three members of the Phoenix Suns — James Edwards, Jay Humphries and Grant Gondrezick — plus former player Garfield Heard and several Phoenix residents who were acquaintances of the athletes. Heard's indictment has since been dismissed.

Bratz's lawyer, James Christianson, said he hopes the failure of Maricopa County authorities to file the extradition paper work demonstrates that the case is "coming apart."

"He's pleased but he's not getting carried away," Christianson said. "I explained to him that it's not the end of the story but it's a good start."

The Sacramento Union said Bratz has completed a correspondence course that enables him to take a test for a California real estate license. It said he has a job offer that is contingent on his passing the test and not being convicted of the drug charges.

Packers player sentenced on sexual-assault charge

By The Associated Press
GREEN BAY, Wis. — A professional football player was sentenced Tuesday to two years in prison and fined $15,000 for his conviction on two counts of second-degree sexual assault.

Mossy Cade, a Pinal County, Ariz., native who played for the Green Bay Packers, will be eligible for parole in six months, said Prosecutor Royce Finne, who protested the sentence as too lenient.

"It's outrageous. That's like fining you or me 15 bucks. It's woefully inadequate. In six months, he'll be back," Finne said. "If it had been you or me, we would have gotten an awful lot longer than that."

Cade, 25, of suburban De Pere, had no comment. He huddled with his family and then emerged with his lawyer, Donald Zuidmulder.

"He has no comment he wants to make, but he has acknowledged he has made a mistake and he has asked for understanding and forgiveness. He does not believe his life is over and he does not believe his career is over," Zuidmulder said.

The victim sat in a back row during the sentencing and appeared stunned by the sentence.

Chuck Hutchinson, a scout with the Packers, said there would be a place for the defensive back on the roster if he was free to return to the team.

Cade was convicted May 23 of two counts of second-degree sexual assault and acquitted on a third count after a six-day trial. Each count carries a maximum sentence of 10 years in prison and a $10,000 fine.

He has remained free since his conviction on a $25,000 bond.

The sentencing followed testimony by a psychiatrist who said Cade was not a threat to society. Ralph Baker, testifying at a sentencing hearing, said he started seeing Cade after his conviction and after the third session Cade accepted responsibility.

Baker said Cade's problem is not with sexuality, but with dealing with women he had known over a long period of time, such as the victim, a relative of Cade by marriage.

"He's not dangerous. He's low risk," Baker told the court.

He also said he also felt Cade has an alcohol problem and should undergo treatment.

GET UP TO $5,040 FOR COLLEGE WHILE YOU GO TO COLLEGE.

One of the best things about the Army Reserve, besides a good part-time salary, is the GI Bill. Just a little of your time in the Army Reserve earns you as much as $5,040 to continue your education.

You serve one weekend a month (usually two 8-hour days) plus two weeks annual training, and earn over $80 per weekend to start.

So, if a part-time income plus the GI Bill could help you through college, give us a call.
