Robertson upsets Bush, places 2nd to Dole

By VICKIE CHACHERE

State Press

DES MOINES, Iowa — TV Evangelist Pat Robertson scored an upset victory over Vice President George Bush Monday when he captured second place in the Iowa caucuses, overshadowing Kansas Sen. Bob Dole's first-place finish there.

"It was a fair fight, we got whipped," said Richard Vond, Bush's national political director.

Robertson was the favorite of 24 percent of the voters in a GOP straw poll Monday night.

Dole garnered 38 percent of the vote, while Bush, who left Iowa at 5 p.m. Monday to campaign in New Hampshire, chalked up just 19 percent.

Robertson, in a short statement to reporters, said, "This is not just a victory for me, it's a victory for all of America.

"This is the test I had looked for to see if the base that was supporting me would indeed be broadened."

Vond, who said he never ruled out Robertson's potential with voters, said, "That doesn't mean to say that's going to be enough to knock us out of New Hampshire." He predicted that Bush would be "back in the saddle again as the Republican frontrunner" by next Tuesday's New Hampshire primary.

"There is no shock value to Bob Dole winning Iowa," Vond said. "He won fair and square."

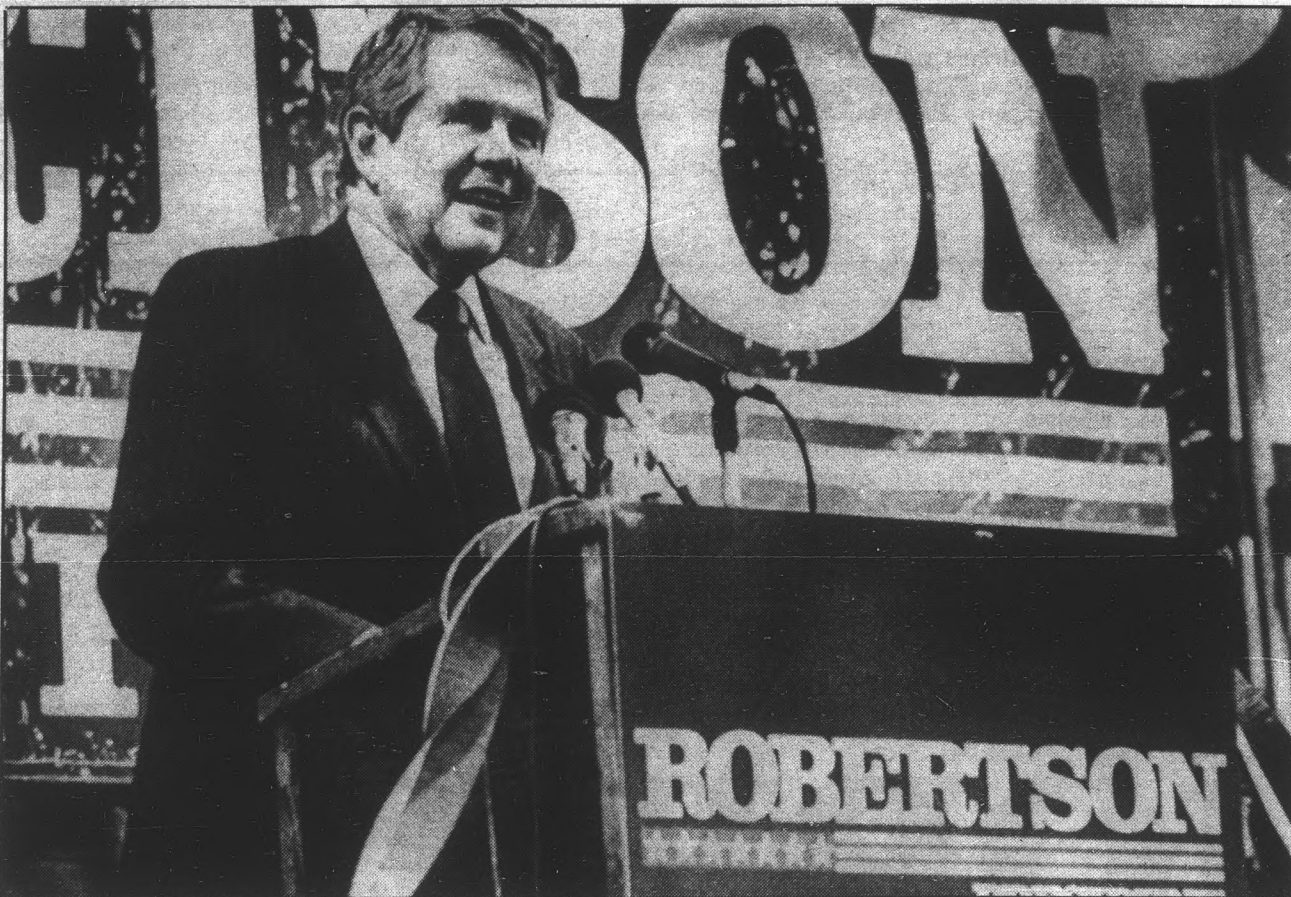

Vond also said that Bush will be "stronger than an acre of garlic" during the March 8 Super Tuesday primaries and caucuses.

New York Rep. Jack Kemp placed fourth with 11 percent, and former Delaware Gov. Pete du Pont captured 7 percent. Former Secretary of State Alexander Haig received less than 1 percent of the vote.

Iowa Sen. Chuck Grassley, Dole's strongest Iowa supporter, said that Robertson's contribution to the GOP campaign was wounding Bush, but doubted that the former Baptist minister would do well in other states. Grassley also attributed Robertson's success to a campaign-long war between Dole and Bush.

"I don't know what factor it had in this race, but I know as a fact of life Iowans do not like mudslinging."

Register poll released Sunday, told reporters earlier Monday that phone banks of his campaign offices have received increasing calls from caucus-goers who said they were committed to Robertson's candidacy.

"We are getting switches from other candidates, which in my estimation is very encouraging as we go to the caucuses tonight," Robertson said around 2 p.m. Iowa time.

"I think third place would be very good because it would put me in the upper echelon of the Republican candidates. Second place would be excellent because that would mean I was able to defeat a sitting vice president who won here in 1980. If I win first place that means I'll be the next president of the United States," he said.

A record 250,000 Iowans turned out at Monday night's caucuses to indicate their preference for president. A win in Iowa can mean increased financial support and a barrage of media attention for candidates seeking their party's Acting Gov. Mofford pledges 'smooth transition'

By BEN McCONNELL

State Press

PHOENIX — Acting Gov. Rose Mofford assumed gubernatorial duties Monday after Gov. Evan Mecham temporarily bowed down.

Mecham said that during a meeting Monday morning he told Mofford "that I'll be available to help in any way I can. I'll be happy to be a spokesman for Arizona whenever and wherever she would be most happy to see success in Arizona projects."

Mofford, a Democrat, in an effort to shore up support and get advice, also met Monday morning with former governors Paul Fannin, Jack Williams, Sam Goddard and Raul Castro.

Late Monday afternoon, Mofford appeared with House speaker Joe Lane, Reps. Jim Ratliff, Debbie McCune and James Hall and with Sens. Alan Stevens and Bob Urdane. During the meeting, Mofford said, "The transition of governorship will be very smooth.

"He (Mecham) will not be left out or hung out to dry."

Meanwhile, members of the House voted 42-18 to pass three articles of impeachment against Mecham on to the Senate.

The counts, which were subdivided into 23 categories, accused Mecham of concealing a $350,000 loan from Tempe developer Barry Wolfson, loaning $80,000 to his auto dealership from a special fund and trying to impede an investigation of an alleged death threat against a woman who was testifying before the state grand jury.

The charge of alleged obstruction of justice was broken down into eight charges, filing false campaign documents was broken into 11, and misuse of state funds into four.

Debate on the House floor about the impeachment sounded similar to the Friday impeachment vote.

Rep. Don Aldridge, R-Lake Havasu, said passage of the impeachment articles was akin to "throwing mud on the wall and hoping it will stick. It doesn't seem to make any difference whether we are fair or not."

The trial in the Senate is expected to begin on or around Feb. 22.

In a prepared statement, Mecham said that he would not challenge the state's constitution, which requires him to step aside to allow the secretary of state to govern.

Department of Administration director Max Hawkins was placed on administrative

ASASU legislation eliminates limits on campaign spending

By SCOTT LUCK

State Press

Students who wish to run for office in the Associated Students Senate or executive branches in the April 5 and 6 elections may now spend an unlimited amount of money on their campaigns, according to new ASASU election codes.

College of Business Sen. Ted Ballard, a member of the Committee on Government Operations, which introduced the bill, said Monday the previous campaign spending bylaws were struck from the election codes to quell arguments concerning their constitutionality.

In the spring semester 1987, ASASU presidential candidate Will Murphy intentionally violated the executive spending limit, after the ASASU Supreme Court ruled the restriction was unconstitutional. The ASASU Senate refused to accept the court's decision, saying the court did not have the authority to interpret or cite the U.S. Constitution.

Although candidates have no limits on their spending, the senate believes it will not adversely affect elections.

"We don't think it's possible for someone to buy the elections," Ballard said. "We still feel it's possible to run a fair election, and even if you don't have a lot of money, you can win."

Previous election codes stipulated that executive candidates could spend a maximum of $500 in a general election, while senatorial candidates could spend a total of $100.

Babbitt continues in race despite Iowa

By VICKIE CHACHERE
State Press

DES MOINES, Iowa — A beleaguered Bruce Babbitt pledged to continue his campaign for the presidency Monday night, after finishing fifth among seven candidates in the Iowa caucuses.

"Obviously, I am a little disappointed," Babbitt said after final results from the caucuses showed he was the choice of just 9 percent of the estimated 140,000 Democrats who participated in the caucuses.

"We know we have a long road ahead in New Hampshire," Babbitt said, referring to the state's Feb. 16 primary.

Missouri Rep. Richard Gephardt won the Iowa caucus, followed by Illinois Sen. Paul Simon in second place and Massachusetts Gov. Michael Dukakis in third.

The Rev. Jesse Jackson, in his second bid for the presidency, placed fourth ahead of Babbitt. Former Colorado Sen. Gary Hart, who re-entered the race in December after a seven-month absence, picked up just 1 percent of the vote.

Tennessee Sen. Albert Gore, the seventh Democrat in the race, chose not to participate in the Iowa caucus.

Babbitt, speaking to about 200 supporters late Monday night, said: "I want to dispel any lingering suspicion by saying that we are going to go onto New Hampshire.

"I will count this as a victory if each and every one of you walk away from this tonight not sad, but proud to carry on. Will you do that for me?"

Babbitt, who spent two years campaigning in Iowa, had enjoyed a barrage of media attention in December in January after he literally stood up for increasing taxes during a nationally televised debate.

Babbitt has based his campaign on children's issues, including a national day-care program, and his plan to create a 5-cent national sales tax to help offset the federal deficit.

Political analysts have said that Babbitt needed to finish at least third to attract campaign contributions needed to boost his standing in New Hampshire and in the 20 states that will participate in "Super Tuesday" on March 8.

"I feel like a kid standing around the bonfire at the end of summer camp," Babbitt told the crowd. "It's all over, but I'm coming back to camp."

Mike McCurry, Babbitt's press secretary, said that the large voter turnout helped Jackson and hurt Babbitt's chances. McCurry said that if turnout would have been at about 80,000, as the Democratic party had projected, Babbitt would have done better.

Steve Mounter/State Press

Former Arizona governor and presidential hopeful Bruce Babbitt garners support for his campaign.

McCurry added that Babbitt's poor showing, despite the attention heaped his campaign, indicated that the media has less influence in the race than had been thought.

Babbitt, during a press conference earlier in the evening, said he was puzzled by political situation in the state.

"The voters are looking for a new direction," he said. "And they have heard intonations of change, but they have not emerged clearly."

First Democratic caucus ends in virtual deadlock

By DARRIN HOSTETLER
State Press

DES MOINES, Iowa — Three Democratic Presidential hopefuls battled to a virtual deadlock Monday night in the Iowa presidential caucus, with Missouri Representative Richard Gephardt capturing a narrow victory.

With 67 percent of Iowa precincts reporting, Gephardt had claimed 27 percent of caucus delegates.

Illinois Senator Paul Simon held 24 percent and Massachusetts Gov. Michael Dukakis won the support of 21 percent.

"I'm absolutely thrilled that the voters of Iowa decided to stand up for me at the caucus," Gephardt said.

"Let's move on to New Hampshire and the White House."

The next major test of the 1988 presidential campaign is the New Hampshire primary, Feb. 16.

The Rev. Jesse Jackson claimed 11 percent of the Iowa delegates, former Arizona Gov. Bruce Babbitt earned 9 percent, and 1 percent of the caucus-goers pledged their support to Gary Hart to round out the field.

Six percent of caucus delegates were undecided. Tennessee Sen. Albert Gore bypassed Iowa to concentrate on the South. Simon, the second-place finisher, said he was pleased with his strong showing.

"For someone who started off at 1 percent of the vote recognition a year ago, we're doing all right," Simon said.

"My hope is that we can finish second in New Hampshire as well."

Dukakis supporters held a large victory party at the Des Moines Bohemian Club, where the Massachusetts Governor gave a brief speech last night amid cries of "Duke!"

"We're well on our way to the Democratic nomination," Dukakis said, speaking of his third place finish.

"It is going to be a close fight all the way, but after all, 10 months ago nobody in Iowa knew what a Dukakis was."

"Now look what we've done," he said.

A tense group of Gephardt supporters watched the caucus results trickle into the ballroom at the Des Moines Starlight Best Western Hotel, the site of the Gephardt victory celebration.

Gephardt Iowa Campaign Chairman Steve Murphy said he was not surprised by the congressman's narrow victory.

"We expected the closeness of the race," Murphy said.

"But Gephardt has done well driving home the message that it is time to take over our economic destiny again, and Iowans listened."

Iowa State Democratic Party Chair Bonnie Campbell said a "record number of Iowans participated in the caucus," but exact figures were not available at press time.

Babbitt Deputy Press Secretary Vada Manager said the large turnout hurt the former Arizona governor.

"A low turnout would have helped us, since we have a small, dedicated core of followers," Manager said.

"We didn't do as well as we would have liked, but we will be moving on to New Hampshire."

Former Iowa State Democratic Chairman Arthur Davis, now an independent political analyst, called the Gephardt win "indecisive."

"Three candidates have survived quite equally, and I don't

Pat Robertson

Iowa caucuses unleash demons of the religious right

Darrin Hostetler
Opinion Editor

Des Moines, Iowa — 7:15 P.M. — On the way back from the airport today, where I was covering Richard Gephardt's return to Des Moines, I gave two reporters from Newsweek a lift back downtown.

Their first comment upon hearing I was from Arizona was: "That Mechem is a crazy bastard, isn't he?"

Well, yes. We chuckled over some governor anecdotes, and talked about the recent impeachment proceedings, but the car soon turned quiet. The gentleman in the passenger's seat, a hyper sort obviously in search of something to spark conversation, turned to me and said: "How about Pat Robertson?"

Well, how about him?

The TV evangelist huckster turned presidential hopeful is scaring the living hell out of Republicans here and nationwide, because as I sit here tonight the word is that Robertson may finish second in the GOP caucus and possibly, dare we say it, first.

The top spot isn't likely, but even a second place finish would inflict heavy damage on national frontrunner George Bush, who is trailing Bob Dole by 14 percent in Iowa polls.

And while Robertson probably could never muster enough support to capture the Republican nomination, he could easily get enough delegates to be a force at the GOP convention.

Impossible, you say, for a right-wing fundamentalist like Robertson to succeed as a politician.

Impossible? It's strange but true — Robertson is a threat, and his candidacy may cause serious waves later on, beginning with what may happen tonight.

Believe it or not.
Just ask Mr. Ripley.
Or Evan Mechem.

It is amazing how quickly one can make the conversational leap from Arizona's governor-in-limbo to Robertson.

Both are members of the right-wing fringe, zealots who believe they have a hot line to God. And as Mechem's deal goes down in Arizona, Robertson's stock is rising in Iowa.

Robertson's legion of television followers are here in full force, and they are ready for a holy war.

It has been suggested that because as few as several million Republican votes could lock up a nomination (Ronald Reagan won in 1980 with only 7.7 million), Robertson is already well on his way. He has collected three million signatures from supporters and his Christian Broadcasting Network (seen on cable TV) has compiled lists of millions of backers ready to give their vote, their checks and their souls to Robertson in

'The minute you turn the Constitution into the hands of non-Christian people, they will use it to destroy the very foundations of our society.'

his quest for the presidency.

To Robertson's "flock" he is more than a politician; he is the voice of God on Earth. And he has a pool of 48 million voters — primarily "born again" Christians who say they "approve" of Robertson — to draw upon.

Those are ominous totals. Especially when you look at Robertson's record.

Although he today denied that he wanted to make the U.S. a Christian nation, saying "that is not possible under our constitutional system," a glance at the Robertson quote book is cause for alarm:

followed by a Soviet attack on the Middle East and a nuclear war. — Nov. 1979

Although thankfully incorrect about that last prediction, it raises some fearful possibilities.

How does a president who genuinely believes an apocalypse is part of Biblical prophecy reconcile that belief with his duty to protect the nation in the event of a crisis? Would he be as careful in skirting the edge of nuclear disaster?

The question is a valid one for Robertson, the hard-line anti-communist who views the U.S. as a theocracy standing in opposition to the Soviet Union.

And there are other concerns for all minorities — Jews, Catholics, Blacks, ad infinitum. The civil rights of all are threatened by a man absolutely intolerant of all who are not white, Anglo-Saxon and, above all, Christian.

Robertson is fresh from a preliminary Michigan caucus, where he claims his "enemies" have "cheated" him out of a victory.

Where have we heard terms like that before?

The TV terror is determined not to let it happen again — he has installed a multi-million dollar system to independently gauge caucus returns tonight. And he says he will protest the caucus if his numbers don't coincide with those of the Republican party.

"My numbers (in Michigan, showing a Robertson victory) are right," he said. Just like Mechem's polls.

Evan Mechem and Pat Robertson are cut from the same cloth. They are both paranoid, intolerant charlatans who presuppose divine guidance and the right of kings. But keep in mind that there are no constitutional provisions to recall a president.

They are both symptoms of a larger problem — the huge sector of the population that has utterly confused private religious convictions with a political duty to impose those same convictions on others.

What we will do when we must confront them, which we will have to do sometime — maybe tonight — I don't know.

But it is an important question, and it is important that we heed the warning signs up ahead. Mechem and Robertson are only the flagbearers. The whole army is out there.

It is odd that a group so thoroughly undemocratic are participating in such an inherently democratic activity in these cold Iowa counties tonight.

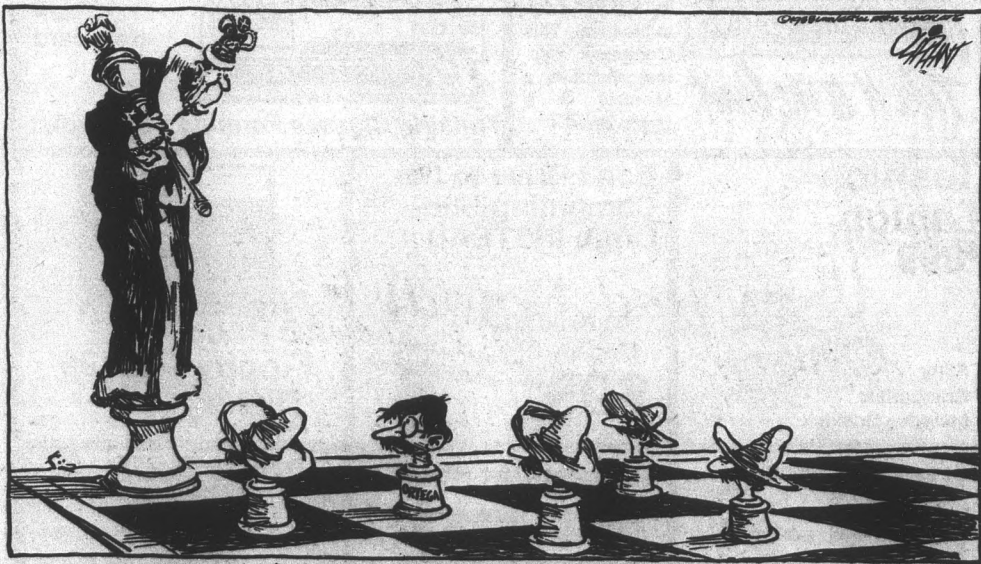

But I hope participating is as far as they get. America does not need another Evan Mechem.

8:13 P.M.

And now that I've gotten that off my chest, I'm going to get out of this hotel room and into the frenzy of activity in Des Moines — the caucus return center, the candidate "victory" parties, etc.

And maybe I'll put on a Robertson for President button and drift through his celebration over at his headquarters at the Trade Center. It couldn't hurt to get a little familiar with Pat.

After all — know thy enemy..

The Candidate

Remembering the day I let Ev Mecham use the phone

Ed Schubert
Asst. Opinion Editor

Evan Mecham is a willful man. We all knew that by the end of last week's impeachment hearings, during which the governor forced the House of Representatives to change the rules that had applied to every other witness and allow him to be questioned by House members, rather than by the House attorneys.

Having wrung that concession from the legislature, he then forced a perfectly legitimate question to be stricken from the record simply because he didn't like it.

In both instances, the governor won by simply refusing to budge. It's a behavior I've witnessed often enough in working with primary-age children — only when they do it, we call it "tantruming" and put them in the "Time Out" corner. But the Arizona House of Representatives isn't equipped with a "Time Out" corner, and Mecham got his way. I guess Arizona's visionary founding fathers didn't think of everything after all.

But I had first encountered Mecham's willfulness eight years ago when he was the Republican candidate for governor against Bruce Babbitt and I was an air-traffic advisor and clerk at a small airport near Parker, Arizona.

(Parker, with its single traffic light and numerous cowboy bars, is the Platonic form of a small Arizona town. Located due west of ASU on the Colorado River, the town is set on a one-square mile tract of land and surrounded on all sides by an Indian reservation — with whom it is constantly feuding. As a result, something like a siege mentality has set in — the town motto is "Parker puts the smile on Arizona," but it could just as easily be "Circle the wagons!")

Anyway, I figured there must be a big-shot in town the day a large, twin-engine plane landed at the airport and was met by several prominent Parker citizens.

Later that same day a short, thin, frail-looking man came into our small terminal building and met me at the office door.

"He just kept looking at me as if I had given him the wrong answer, and he was patiently waiting for the right one. "Uh-oh," I thought."

"May I use your phone?" he asked politely in a soft, reedy voice.

"Sure," I replied. "There's a pay-phone just outside to your left, by the Coke machine."

The man didn't move or change his expression. He just kept looking at me as if I had given him the wrong answer, and was patiently waiting for the right one.

"Uh-oh," I thought. "Maybe this is somebody important." So I said: "Ah . . . or you could use the phone in the office here."

He then smiled, said "Thank you," and spent the next twenty minutes or so sitting with his feet up on my desk, talking politics while I made myself scarce. Then he went out to his airplane and flew away.

As his supporters milled back through the terminal, I asked LaVelle MacIntire, Parker's funeral-home director and a local Republican leader, who the man was.

"Oh, that's Evan Mecham, whom we hope to elect as our next governor," he replied.

"Oh," I said. I didn't know. I had only been in Arizona a few months.

Not long after that, I was with my conservative, Republican parents, who were watching TV when a Mecham ad came on the screen.

"I'm Evan Mecham," he announced. "Your candidate for governor!"

"That's what you said yesterday, bud!" my dad responded angrily — meaning, I think, that he would decide who his candidate for governor would be, thank you.

I just thought to myself: "Huh. That's the little guy I saw at the airport the other day."

And now it turns out that the same little guy is governor, at least in title, and is dealing with the legislature in much the same way that he dealt with me at Parker Airport: by refusing to budge until he gets his way.

I wonder what would have happened if I had refused him eight years ago.

Perhaps, rather the being governor of the state of Arizona, Ev Mecham would still be standing in front of the office door in the terminal building at Parker Airport, waiting to use the phone.

nomination for president.

Robertson, who had stationed his own campaign workers at precinct sites to monitor caucus results, traveled to 53 rural Iowa cities in the past five days.

He said he believes his campaign is drawing from other camps because of the "broad base" of campaign backers including Democrats who are unhappy with the seven Democratic hopefuls.

"They see me as a non-politician," said the 57-year-old founder of the Christian Broadcasting Network. "I think they don't think that those in Washington have the solution."

Bush, who defeated Ronald Reagan in Iowa during the 1980 caucuses, told employees at a Des Moines insurance company earlier Monday, "Please go to your caucuses and vote for me."

"I am standing here as vice president of the United States because of the Iowa caucuses . . . I want to win this, I believe I am going to, and I want to win it with Iowa standing by my side."

Bush and Dole, the highest ranking among the GOP contenders and the closest to Ronald Reagan, have spent the past week engaged in a battle of words that saw Dole confront Bush on the floor of the U.S. Senate last week after Bush accused Dole of "cronism."

Bush contends that Dole improperly helped a former aide secure a $30 million Small Business Administration contract. Dole said he did nothing unusual or unethical in the deal.

Sunday, Bush apologized for also questioning the handling of a blind trust set up for Dole's wife, Elizabeth Hanford Dole, who served as transportation secretary in the Reagan cabinet before quitting last year to campaign for her husband.

Speaking at a luncheon for the Des Moines Chamber of Commerce, Dole joked, "It's going to be clear and cold tonight and if you're undecided or if for some unbelievable reason you're not for me, don't go out, stay in."

"Take your Sudafed, turn on television, go to bed early, read about it in the morning papers. But if you are for Bob Dole, we want you out there early."

Du Pont, speaking to reporters Monday afternoon, said, "I would say if the vice president finished second, that's kind of tough for him, if he should finish third, that would be disastrous. My job in Iowa is to beat Jack Kemp."

But John Buckley, a Kemp spokesman, said, "All we cared about was being competitive to the relative frontrunners. Pete Du Pont did not accomplish what he set out to do."

Buckley predicted that Kemp will win New Hampshire and that Robertson will do poorly there because, "It's not the same evangelistic environment. There isn't the network of churches."

The candidates will move on to New Hampshire for the Feb. 16 primaries, considered equally important to sustaining a campaign.

"Iowa and New Hampshire have lead the nation as a pair," said du Pont, who bills the New Hampshire primary as the "gateway to the White House."

"I don't read anything into Iowa until we see what happens in New Hampshire."

The Iowa race, which has been going on for nearly two years, has been dominated by debates over farm subsidies, revisions in U.S. trade policies and Social Security.

leave Monday and replaced with Don Olson, the acting director for finance for the department. Mofford said the action is effective immediately.

Hawkins confirmed by phone that he had been placed on leave but refused to comment.

Mofford said Hawkins was the first targeted for administrative leave because "the department of administration has control over so many agency heads."

"It was nothing personal," she said.

No one in Mecham's cabinet will be fired, Mofford added.

"When you have to tell somebody that you're putting them on administrative leave, it's heart-wrenching," Mofford said.

Ken Smith, Mecham's press spokesman, said he no longer will serve as press liaison, adding he hopes to find another job in state government.

Mecham said the May 17 recall election will be "the only way we can truly clear up the atmosphere of discord, venom — and unfortunately, I must add the word hate — that has manifested itself in our capitol city."

"I believe the people knew what they were doing when they elected me, I believe they will renew that statement again on May 17."

Mofford said in a news conference that she will support a Martin Luther King Jr. holiday if presented to her by the Legislature.

"This has been a national symbol for disunity," Mofford said.

Mofford said that Sunday and Monday were "very trying days."

"I'm 65 years old and that just increased to 85," she said. "There is a new era out there, but this job is a killer regardless of who has it. I don't want to be another (former governor) Wes Bolin. He died because of the stress."

to resign his seat in the spring 1986 after it was discovered that he actually spent more than his $100 limit on signs, said "I believe that there should be a spending limit because there are people who can really outspend people."

In addition to the deletion of the spending limits, restrictions on the total amount of donations candidates can receive from one source have also been struck.

An amendment attached to the spending resolution allows ASASU Election Coordinator Shannon Sellers to stipulate "time, manner and place" restrictions, as she sees fit, to "ensure any candidate does not have an unfair advantage" in an election. Sellers said she is in the formulative stages of drafting the restrictions.

The amendment was introduced by previous elections coordinator Patrick McWhorter, who is now a College of Liberal Arts senator.

Other election code changes include:
• A security worker will be added to aid the two poll workers at the voting booths, in order to ensure the safety of the ballots and to protect the sanctity of the voting process.

• The ballot will contain no voter identification and will be protected by a ballot jacket, which may include the student's identification number.

• All poll workers and security workers must sign a document stating that they are not affiliated with any campaign team.

Presidential race draws politically minded students to Iowa

By DARRIN HOSTETLER
State Press

DES MOINES, Iowa — The frozen fields of Iowa are a long way from the sunny malls of ASU, but several politically-minded Tempe students and alumni can be found here, braving the cold for their candidates.

A few prominent figures in the Iowa stage of the presidential race, including Bruce Babbitt's Deputy Press Secretary Vada Manager and Iowa Democratic Party Communications Director Phillip Roeder, are ASU alumni. But the Babbitt campaign has been an especially big drawing card for younger Arizonans looking for a chance to get in on the "ground floor" of a national campaign and gain experience preparing for today's crucial Iowa caucus.

Brad Golich, who graduated from ASU last May with a bachelor's degree in finance, quit a job with Proctor and Gamble to come to Iowa and work as a county field coordinator for Babbitt.

"I got a call from a friend of mine who said things weren't looking too good for Babbitt in the polls, but that he could use a field coordinator," Golich said.

"I guess I felt like I have a higher calling than selling soup and oil."

Golich's duties include everything from working with Iowa's senior citizens and arranging speaking engagements for Babbitt to calling precinct captains and Democrats in his county, urging them to support the former Arizona governor.

"Basically, I sell Bruce Babbitt as hard as I can," he said.

The 23-year-old Golich, who was involved in student politics at ASU, said he came to Iowa because of Babbitt's sincerity.

"I really believe in him," Golich said. "I get disgusted with some of the campaign staffs around here because they seem very cynical and uncommitted to their candidate."

Golich said that because of a lack of funds, the Babbitt campaign has relied on a dedicated group of younger workers, rather than hiring "political pros."

"The atmosphere around (Babbitt headquarters) is hyped, because we really feel strongly about the candidate," Golich said.

Ed Sullivan, a senior political science major from ASU, came to Iowa to "get a look at what it is all about."

"Being a student of the political process, I find it fascinating being here and watching the character of a campaign develop," Sullivan said.

Sullivan, who ran unsuccessfully for ASASU president last spring, is also working as a county coordinator for Babbitt. Sullivan said he wavered before finally accepting the position in Iowa.

"When I first told my parents I wanted to go, they told me I didn't know what I was getting into," he said. "They told me: 'They don't pay you; you'll starve.'"

Fortunately for mid-level campaign staffers like Golich and Sullivan, most candidates do provide some meals and a small monthly stipend for their out-of-state workers.

Golich and Sullivan live in a home rented by the Babbitt campaign in suburban Des Moines with a constantly changing number of workers — sometimes as many as 10 sleeping in the house at one time.

"We call it the political flophouse," Sullivan said.

Both Babbitt workers agree that the close quarters contribute to the excitement and the atmosphere of the campaign.

"Things are so tight now in the race, that we feel every person we reach might make a difference in the caucus," Golich said.

"We're all really together and working long hours."

Although both Golich and Sullivan agree that the experience has been worthwhile, Sullivan plans to return to ASU after the caucus to resume his studies, while Golich will stay on with the Babbitt campaign.

"I'll go wherever they need me; I'll do everything I can to get the job done because I really believe in Bruce Babbitt," Golich said.

"At what other time in my life will I be able to just pull up ropes and do this?" he said. "It's not going to be my career, but for now it is an incredible experience."

Democrats

see Gephardt getting that much of an advantage out of it in Iowa," he said.

Most of the Democratic hopefuls avoided discussing the issues Monday, making only a few appearances and preparing for tonight's caucus activities.

Gephardt spent most of the day privately with his family and staff. He spoke to the press for only a few moments at the Des Moines airport after arriving from Waverly by private jet.

Standing behind a podium on the windswept tarmac, the Missouri Senator thanked Iowans for their support during his campaign.

Simon spent the afternoon going door to door, shaking hands and urging uncommitted Iowans to "go to the caucus tonight, and please support Paul Simon."

Dukakis spoke to high school students in West Des Moines Monday morning, where he said Iowa should continue to be the initial testing-ground for presidential candidates.

Hart told supporters in Des Moines that his campaign "will only get better as it goes on" before flying to New Hampshire to begin a push for the Feb. 16 primary.

Recent polls place Hart fifth among Democratic candidates in New Hampshire, attracting three or four percent of the electorate in the small New England state.

Jackson attended a breakfast with senior citizens in Sioux City and delivered a rousing speech to a group of that town's municipal employees, who recently settled a strike.

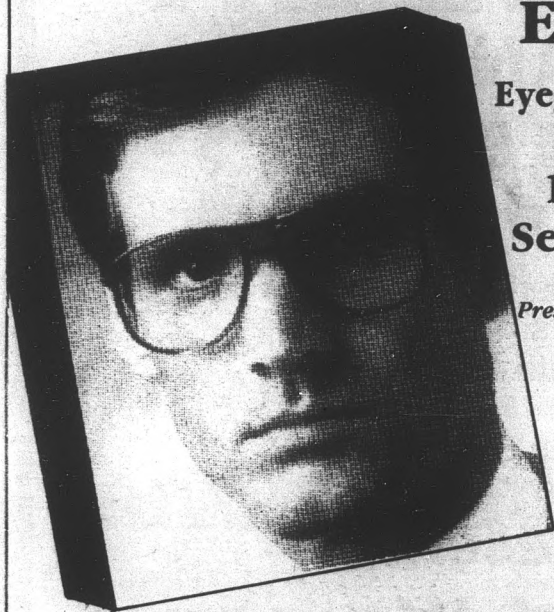

Jackson also spoke briefly to students Monday afternoon at a rally at Iowa State University before returning to his campaign headquarters in Greenfield.

Mesa man arrested after parking space argument

By MIKE BURGESS
State Press

A Mesa man was arrested after he allegedly entered a Tempe apartment and threatened its owner after an argument about an assigned parking space, police said. John Martinez, 44, 1915 S. 39th St., was booked into Tempe City Jail Saturday and charged with criminal trespassing and threatening and intimidating. The incident occurred about 6:21 p.m. at 1235 W. Baseline Road, when Martinez allegedly threatened 20-year-old Fred Grunsby, and left. Grunsby, who lives at the apartment complex, grabbed a 9mm pistol and followed Martinez into the parking lot, said Officer Roger Austin, a police spokesman. Grunsby fired two gunshots into the ground after Martinez allegedly confronted him, Austin said. In other incidents:

•A green and lavender Raleigh men's 12-speed bicycle was stolen from the north side of the Aquatic Center, police said.

Pain

Conditioning program produces results with ASU athletes

By CHRIS PIRKEY
State Press

If you were to walk past the wrestling room in the ASU Activity Center one morning, an unusual sight might greet your eyes.

A petite blonde, not more than 5 feet 4 inches tall, would be leading a group of men through torturous exercises designed to make even Jane Fonda wince in pain.

The group of men nimbly follow their mighty leader into positions they never dreamed their bodies would be in at 8 a.m. on a Monday. Pain is etched in their faces as some of them struggle to complete one of the three kinds of push-ups they must do.

A janitor calmly walks in, cleans off a nearby counter, and goes about his business, unaware of the clash of muscle and minds going on around him.

Who are these men, and what are they doing here, succumbing to the horrors of v-sit rollovers?

On this particular morning, it is the men's swimming team. At other times of the week it is the wrestling squad. And during football season, you can find 250-pound linebackers concentrating on balancing their massive bodies on one foot, all under the command of energetic Mary Lea.

Lea is a conditioning coach for all of the above sports, and the exercises are used as a supplement to their regular workouts and practices.

At the moment she is working with the men's swimming and wrestling teams, but will be adding track (men's and women's) to her conditioning schedule in a few weeks.

Her conditioning program consists of stretching, breathing, and strengthening exercises, seasoned with a martial-arts flavor. Lea holds a black belt in karate and has been participating in the martial arts for 18 years.

Her first experience with athletes occurred when she was in Iowa, where she designed a program for World-Cup wrestling contender Chris Campbell. But Lea has not always worked with athletes.

"I taught dance for 20 years," Lea said. "I developed the program for everyday people at first, based on a combination of exercises. Then Chris (Campbell) came to me, and wanted me to design a program to strengthen the weak side of his back. He won the World Cup in wrestling that year."

Lea became interested in helping others after Campbell told her that her program was exactly what athletes needed to supplement their training. Interested, Lea contacted the football conditioning coach at Iowa and started working with the offensive line, designing a program using her experiences in the martial arts, dance, and the exercise fields.

Starting the program was easy for Lea. She said she just combined the different disciplines that she was involved in, and translated them into a program for athletes.

"It was a unique combination of skills — something I had a background in," Lea said.

Lea came to Arizona a year ago from Iowa to explore coaching possibilities and to help manage a health club, which she has taken a few months off from to get back into athletics.

Her start at ASU consisted of helping football players Anthony Parker, Floyd Easley and Jeff Joseph in a knee rehabilitation program. She said it started off with just the three of them, but the numbers quickly climbed.

"They (Parker, Easley and Joseph) started bringing in their friends as they got stronger," Lea said.

Easley, a senior who plays free-safety on the team, said Lea has helped him a lot, and that he has seen an improvement in several different areas.

"She has helped me as far as my flexibility and speed," Easley said. "She has just about loosened and tightened every muscle. She is really good."

Ed Urbano, a graduate student who is planning on trying out for the 1988 Olympic wrestling team, said Lea has increased his strength as well as his flexibility.

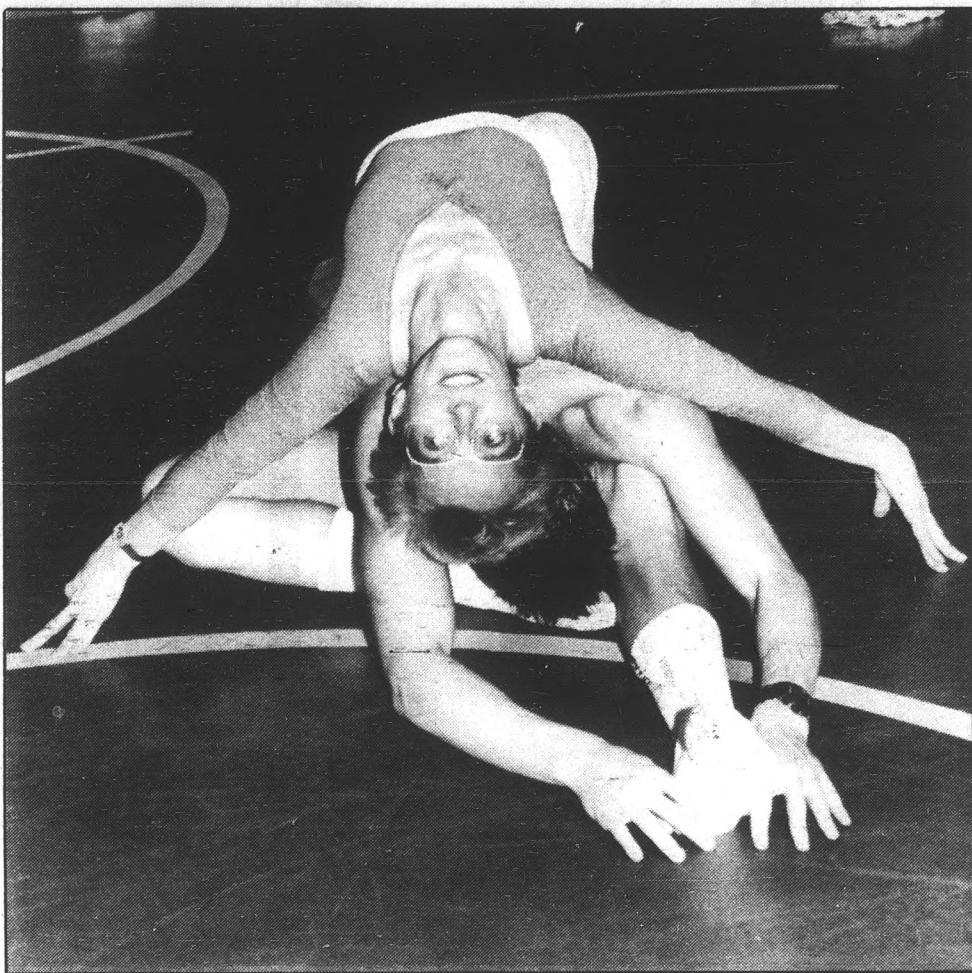

"She has helped me to center my balance," Urbano said. "I knew I needed to increase my flexibility, and it has helped."

As well as teaching physical exercises, Lea also teaches athletes how to train their minds for competition. She incorporates several concepts from karate and tai chi, and is constantly offering advice and pointers on how an athlete can improve his or her mental performance in a meet.

ASU swimmer Eric Fuchs believes the mental aspect of Lea's program is the most important. Fuchs said there is more to think about in his sport than just swimming laps, although people rarely talk about it. He feels Lea is doing something that has previously been unexplored.

"She's trying to teach us mental focus," Fuchs said. "She's trying to get our minds in sync with our bodies. That's very important."

Lea said she loves her work and likes the athletes she conditions. She said the fact that she is a woman has not presented any problems in her training of the male teams, and she feels she has the respect of all of her athletes. If she does not, she knows how to command it.

Sundi Kjenstad/State Press

Mary Lea, a conditioning coach for many ASU athletic teams, demonstrates one of her techniques as she works with a member of the men's swim team.

"All I have to do is go down and do two-finger push-ups, which very few of them can do," Lea said, laughing. "I then get their respect."

Apart from being just another coach to the guys, Lea likes to think she is also a friend to them — someone they can come to with their doubts. She also believes they are dedicated and willing to work with her.

"They tend to work very, very hard for me, but then they also share a lot of their problems with me; a lot of their concerns," Lea said.

Fuchs said that the swim team and even he himself doubted Lea's program at first, but now "everyone's coming around." He added that the fact that Lea is a woman doesn't bother him or make him uncomfortable.

"She was introduced to us as being a black belt in karate," Fuchs said. "I've heard what they (black belts) can do. I knew she was very strong, even though she's only about a 100 pounds or so."

"I think a lot have benefitted from it (the program). They are able to get their bodies to go beyond what their used to."

Lea said the benefits of her job are unnumbered, and has never tired of working and training her athletes as far as they want to go.

"Basically I just love to be able to make someone better than they are today," Lea said. "Each day I just try and make them a little bit better."

ASU gymnasts looking to improve in weekend tourneys

Jack Beasley/State Press

ASU gymnast Jody Newman performs a routine on the pommel horse during a meet against Houston Baptist in the Activity Center. The Sun Devils will compete in two California invitational meets this weekend.

By GARY JACKSON
State Press

The ASU men's gymnastics team will be "California dreaming" as it heads to the West Coast, hoping to improve its record during two invitational meets this weekend.

On Friday, in the UC-Santa Barbara Invitational, the Sun Devils will compete against Cal State-Fullerton, Illinois, Minnesota, Santa Barbara, and UCLA — the defending national champion.

On Saturday, ASU will participate with Illinois, Minnesota, Nebraska, New Mexico, Stanford, and host UCLA.

"I'll bet we'll do better in the second than the first," coach Don Robinson said.

Last year the Sun Devils made several road trips in which they competed on consecutive days.

ASU usually finished with higher scores in the later meets, Robinson said.

"If we score in the high 270s we'll be happy," Robinson said. "We can qualify for nationals with scores in that range."

Robinson said he is hoping the Sun Devils will get some good scores and come out with a balanced overall record.

ASU has an opportunity to leave California with a 14-6 record if it wins both meets, but it will be a difficult task.

Robinson said that none of the teams in either tournament are weak.

ASU had a 3-3 record going into a four-team tournament at Nebraska on Sunday, but came out short on the scores, and brought home a 3-6 mark.

While Nebraska boasted a 281.10 score, ASU finished in last place at 272.40.

"We felt we should have beaten at least two of the teams," Robinson said. "But we had an epidemic of mistakes."

"There were a lot of highlights, but the misses outweighed them. We can't have that this week."

Robinson said the gymnasts have all been competing for over 10 years, and many change their routines all the time over the course of their careers.

But changes lead to mistakes, he said.

"There shouldn't be changes this time of year," he said. "If a gymnast can't hit every time, he's not only hurting himself, he's hurting the team."

In practice on Monday, the team was working hard to execute their routines cleanly.

"We had high scores from Jody (Newman), Licurgo (Diaz-Sandi), and Paul (Linne)," Robinson said.

"Paul is extremely strong," Robinson said. "He could win the rings nationally."

Although it takes a lot of effort to compete on the rings, Linne performs his routine smoothly, he said.

"A lot of strength is involved, but he swings very nicely," Robinson said.

He said Newman also contributes a great deal to the Sun Devil scores.

"He hurt his ankle, but now he's back in floor doing a good job," he said. "He could very easily be the top all-rounder. But if you are weak in one area, it pulls you down."

The team is loaded with freshmen, but the talent level makes up for inexperience, Robinson said.

"Freshman Kevin Singer did exactly what was expected of him," Robinson said about his previous performance.

"There are a lot of freshmen on this team," he said. "When you are in that situation, people usually say you are in a rebuilding year."

"Rebuilding year my butt. I want to win."

"UCLA will be the toughest to beat in the two meets," he said. "They are always in the Top 5 and have been in the Top 3 in the last seven or eight years."

"I hope we can do well in both meets," Robinson said. "We need to."

ASU SUMMER PROGRAM IN SPAIN
June 14-August 4

A seven-week culturally oriented session includes two weeks stay in modern apartments on the beach in Almuñécar (near Málaga), four weeks in Madrid, and fifteen days of cultural travel through most of Spain. Courses, offered both in Spanish and English, concentrate on Spanish civilization, language and literature. ASU students, faculty, staff, and members of the community are invited to participate.

The program cost of $1,665 includes room and breakfast, all cultural travel, and six hours of ASU academic credit (undergraduate or graduate). An informational meeting will be held on Thursday, February 18 at 7:00 p.m. in Rm. A-18, Language & Literature Bldg. A video film of the last year's program will be shown.

For information and application forms contact Michael J. Flys of the Department of Foreign Languages, 965-4565 or 894-6155.

ASU SUMMER PROGRAM IN FLORENCE, ITALY
June 16-July 23

This year's ASU Summer Program in Florence, Italy will be held June 16 to July 23, 1988. ASU students, faculty, staff and members of the community are invited to participate in the program, which offers courses in the Italian language, European history, and the art history of Renaissance Florence.

The program cost of $1,750 includes room and breakfast for the duration of the program, seven hours of ASU academic credit and three in-country excursions. A meeting for those interested in knowing more about the program will be held Thursday, Feb. 11 at 1:40 p.m. in the Language and Literature Building A-18. Slides and a video will be shown.

For information and application forms, contact Dr. Pier R. Baldini, Department of Foreign Languages, 965-7783 or 965-6181.

Pair reaches tennis semi-finals

By DAVE BIGOS
State Press

Two ASU tennis players lost their first match of the year, keeping them out of the finals of the Rolex National Indoor Intercollegiate Tennis Championships.

The tournament took place in Minneapolis over the weekend, and featured some of the best collegiate players in the country.

Sun Devils Mike Holten and Brian Gyetko advanced all the way to the semi-finals before losing to Todd Hershey and Eric Nixon of Ball State, 6-4, 7-5.

The event marked the first time ASU has ever had any players reach the semi-finals in the prestigious tournament.

After beating Brian Page and Brandon Walters of Clemson, 4-6, 6-3, 7-5, in the first round of the tournament, Holten and Gyetko defeated top-seeded Ashley Rhoney and Brett Garnett of Southwest Louisiana, 6-3, 7-6 (9-7), to advance to the semis.

Gyetko, a freshman, and Holten, a senior, were not seeded in the event.

"After winning Milwaukee (the Milwaukee Classic) and not being seeded, I was surprised," Gyetko said. "It's a lot of politics with who gets seeds.

"We were representing the Pac-10, which has some of the best players in the country."

Hershey and Nixon were the top seeds at the Milwaukee Classic but were also unseeded at the Rolex.

"I was happy with the way we played," Gyetko said. "We felt like we were the best team there."

The loss was only the second ever for the two players. Their first loss came last fall at the semi-finals of the Ryders Rolex Championships against Rhoney and Garnett. At that time, Rhoney and Garnett were the top-ranked pair in the country.

With their record this season, Holten and Gyetko already have just about enough wins to reach the NCAAs in May. Gyetko says he is confident they can do well there.

"I feel we can win the NCAAs in Georgia," Gyetko said. "I felt like we should have won this one."

Holten and Gyetko return to the court today as the undefeated Sun Devil tennis team competes with a host of foreign players when they take on U.S. International at 1:30 p.m. at Whiteman Tennis Center.
