South Africans agree apartheid rips native land

By KELLY PEARCE
State Press

Two native South Africans, one black and one white, agreed during a Wednesday ASU debate that the moral issue of racial segregation that divides their native country needs to be addressed.

Stuart Pringle, a white South African film producer, and Mark Mathabane, a black South African native who has become a United States author, presented their views on a growing problem between two peoples to a near-capacity crowd of 200 in the MU Pima Room.

Apartheid is a racial policy separating blacks and whites in South Africa.

The debaters, brought to campus by the Associated Students Political Union, used the past to paint a picture of what they feel is happening in South Africa.

Pringle traced the historical evolution of the African bushmen from a clan-state to a nationalistic country.

"The bushmen taught me that we have a common humanity," he said. "Through them I have found the very essence of goodness in man."

"Underneath our black, white, green or polka-dotted skin there is a common goodness," Pringle added.

As the bushmen emerge from the brush and slowly become a nation, they will encounter war and strife amongst blacks and whites, he said.

Pringle said apartheid exists because of social development.

"They need to experience every stage of development," Pringle began. "The cannot leap-frog across the Iron Age to get to the Nuclear Age."

Jill Lindsey/State Press

Stuart Pringle, a South African film producer, tells an ASU audience that apartheid exists because of the social development. Pringle debated Mark Mathabane, a South African and U.S. author, on the issue of apartheid Wednesday night in the MU Pima Room.

On the other side of the stage, Mathabane used his nightmarish childhood to show a different kind of apartheid. As a young boy, he and his family slept on cardboard boxes and felt the "pangs of hunger" daily, he said.

"This is the apartheid I know," Mathabane said.

He said apartheid is "formal 20th century slavery." "To me and to millions of my brothers and sisters, apartheid is real and can be defined in human terms," Mathabane said.

Pringle said the only way to alleviate apartheid from South Africa is through education.

"We're the only ones on the planet doing anything to help," he said in defense of white people in South Africa.

"I'm trying to understand apartheid," Pringle added.

But Mathabane already knows what it feels like.

"The bitter, oppressed inhabitants (of the town he was born in) lived in shacks," he began. "I was born in one."

Mecham given extra week to prepare for trial

By BEN MCCONNELL
State Press

The Arizona Senate on Wednesday night granted Gov. Evan Mecham one more week to prepare for his impeachment trial.

The Senate also affirmed its controversial rule allowing the lawmaker-jurors to meet in secret during impeachment deliberations.

After a voice vote, the Senate decided to begin its impeachment trial of Mecham Feb. 29. The 30 lawmakers will serve as the jury in the case.

Murray Miller, the impeached governor's attorney, had filed two motions with the Senate Tuesday to postpone the impeachment proceedings. He contended that holding the impeachment trial first would prejudice a criminal-trial jury.

The first motion asked that the impeachment begin 20 days after a verdict in the criminal trial. It was voted down on a voice vote.

The other motion petitioned that the Senate's trial begin in 90 days, on May 17, the day of the recall election Mecham is facing. The Senate voted to defeat that motion 24-5. Presiding Officer Frank X. Gordon, chief justice of the State Supreme Court, told Miller that he could not introduce another resolution.

But after a brief recess, Gordon said he had ruled incorrectly. The Senate OK'd the week-long extension after Senate counsel William French said he had no objection to the Feb. 29 trial start.

A little more than a week after the impeachment trial begins, Mecham must answer charges that he knowingly filed false campaign documents, then lied about them before the state grand jury. That trial, slated to begin March 9, is expected to last up to six weeks.

Sen. Alan Stephens, a Phoenix Democrat, said that presentation of the governor's side in the impeachment trial "could be for his benefit in the criminal trial."

The House voted Feb. 5 to send 23 articles of impeachment, or charges, to the Senate. Mecham is accused of obstructing a criminal investigation, concealing a $350,000 loan and illegally borrowing money from state funds.

The Senate also voted down two resolutions that would have amended the lawmakers' ability to call a secret session during the impeachment trial.

Over the weekend, Miller and several news organizations protested the secret conference clause, which was adopted last week when the Senate wrote its impeachment guidelines. Miller and media organizations argued that the conferences would violate the state's open meeting laws.

The rule allows the senators to call a private conference at any time during the trial to consult with attorneys William French and Paul Eckstein.

Stephens proposed an amendment that

Babbitt expected to drop out of presidential race

By VICKIE CHACHERE
State Press

Bruce Babbitt, whose rocky campaign for the presidency was dealt a fatal blow in Tuesday's New Hampshire primary, will drop out of the race for the Democratic presidential nomination today, campaign aides said Wednesday.

Scott Phelps, a Babbitt spokesman at the campaign's Phoenix-based national headquarters, said staff members were notified Wednesday that Babbitt will abandon his 2-year-old campaign in a news conference today in Washington, D.C.

Babbitt, the former Arizona governor who chose not to run for re-election to seek the presidency, placed sixth among the seven Democratic hopefuls in Tuesday's New Hampshire primary.

"There's a point in which you draw the curtain gracefully," Babbitt told the Associated Press in a Wednesday telephone interview. "That's the way I am leaning right now."

The New Hampshire primary was the second major defeat for the Babbitt campaign in eight days. He placed fifth in the Feb. 8 Iowa caucuses, leaving him with little media and voter attention in the eight days before New Hampshire.

"It's sadly inevitable," said Phelps, who served as Babbitt's press secretary during the last year Babbitt was governor. "I think he's doing the only thing he can do."

The campaign will finish about $250,000 in debt and leave just six other men competing for the Democratic nomination.

Babbitt had considered hanging on until the March 8 "Super Tuesday," when 20 states, mostly in the South, hold caucuses and primaries. But the Iowa and New Hampshire losses kept Babbitt from capitalizing on media attention needed to increase notoriety and campaign donations.

"It doesn't make any sense to campaign on borrowed money," Phelps said. "You just end up in debt."

Vada Manager, another Babbitt spokesman, said it would have cost Babbitt about $25,000 a month to continue to travel and pay salaries for a campaign manager and a press secretary, the basic necessities for the race.

Duane Garrett, a San Francisco attorney and a key Babbitt adviser, said in a telephone interview from Washington,

Israeli soldiers kill Arab, wound 4 during raid on occupied West Bank

HEBRON, Occupied West Bank (AP) — Israeli soldiers fired on a crowd trying to stop them from making arrests during a pre-dawn raid on an Arab village Wednesday, killing one and wounding four, witnesses and the army reported.

A merchants' strike in the occupied West Bank and Gaza Strip kept most Arab businesses closed except for the three hours from 8 a.m. to 11 a.m. Numerous cases have been reported of threats to shopowners who remain open.

Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir returned from Italy and rejected a trade of territory for peace with the Arabs. United States Secretary of State George P. Shultz proposed the idea, and it was accepted by Foreign Minister Shimon Peres, Shamir's partner and rival in the governing coalition.

Neighbors identified the Palestinian killed in Shuyukh Village, 20 miles south of Jerusalem, as Ismail Hussein Mohammed al-Halaiga, 21, a university student. The army confirmed the death.

An army officer at the village said the soldiers aimed at legs only, but doctors said the victim was shot through the heart.

According to U.N. figures, 55 Palestinians have been killed since riots began in the occupied territories Dec. 8, nearly all of them shot by Israeli soldiers.

President's fiscal 1989 budget probably his least contentious

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan on Wednesday prepared to send his fiscal 1989 spending plan to Congress and launch the last and likely least-contentious budget debate of his presidency.

The $1.1 trillion fiscal blueprint being unveiled Thursday was expected to reprise Reagan's oft-rejected requests for cutting domestic programs, with some new proposals for transferring government functions including parks management and perhaps Amtrak railroad service to private industry.

Gunmen kidnap U.S. Marine on south Lebanon highway

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Gunmen on Wednesday kidnapped a U.S. Marine officer serving with the U.N. peacekeeping force in south Lebanon as he drove along a highway. It brought the number of Americans held hostage in Lebanon to nine.

U.N. and Pentagon officials identified the victim as Lt. Col. William R. Higgins, 43, a native of Danville, Ky., and chief of an observer group attached to the U.N. Interim Force in Lebanon.

The 76-officer U.N. group from 16 countries monitors cease-fire violations on the Lebanon-Israel border. Higgins was the top-ranking American officer assigned to the force's observer group, holding the title of senior U.S. military observer.

There was no immediate claim of responsibility for the abduction, which occurred about 4:15 p.m. on the coastal highway between Lebanon's southernmost port of Tyre and the border town of Naqoura, the location of UNIFIL's headquarters.

ASASU seeks support for April 'Springfest' carnival

By SCOTT LUCK
State Press

Move over UofA "Spring Fling" and UCLA "Mardi Gras," because ASU now has its own "Springfest," scheduled for April 15-17 at Tempe Diablo Stadium.

But Associated Students needs campus support to turn the first annual carnival into an ASU tradition.

ASASU Activities Vice President John Fees said support for this year's carnival will determine if there will be future ASU carnivals. "If we don't have a good turnout and support by the students, this is going to answer the question of whether or not we want to do it again next year," Fees said.

The official name of the festival is "98 KUPD-ASASU Presents Springfest for MS (Multiple Sclerosis)," and it will feature carnival rides, food and crafts booths, and live entertainment, ASASU Special Events Director Nick Spino said.

ASU campus organizations, including fraternities and sororities, are encouraged to participate by renting a booth and selling their wares.

Spino said ASASU will garner a slight percentage of student groups' gross sales and charge $75 to rent a booth. However, he said groups will still be able to make healthy profits, and terms can be made so they do not have to pay the whole rental fee up front.

Off-campus groups are also encouraged to participate and are asked to pay $125 for a 10 x 10 space with a canopy for food booths and $150 for arts and crafts booths.

Organizations selling food must obtain health permits, and ASASU asks that the group donate 25 percent of its gross receipts.

Spino would like interested student organizations to contact him at 965-3161 as soon as possible so ASASU can organize and prepare for the event. Applications are available in the ASASU office (MU 208-J).

Organizations are also being sought to do volunteer security, promotion, coordination and clean-up work.

The admission fee is expected to be between $2 and $3, and the funds will benefit Multiple Sclerosis.

Spino said the admission fee will depend on how much it will cost to get a nationally-known band for Saturday, April 16. He said he could not reveal the name of the group because negotiations have not yet been finalized.

Also appearing will be Dave Pratt and the Sex Machine Band on Friday night, and several local bands are expected to perform throughout the carnival.

After a great amount of student interest in a campus carnival was expressed, Fees decided to explore the possibilities for such an event.

Fees said a great amount of research was put into the organization of this year's carnival, including an analysis of successful festivals at other universities.

Fees said past ASU carnivals were unsuccessful, but he expects this year's event to be a success because of its grand scale.

Spino said the most outstanding aspect of ASU's inaugural carnival is that it is being organized with great diversity for a large audience. "I'm really excited that ASASU's first carnival is on such a large scale and should be greatly successful," Spino said, adding that more than 30,000 people are expected to attend this year.

Budweiser is a primary sponsor, and beer sales will be permitted because the carnival will be held off-campus.

ASASU has promoted educational substance-abuse programs in the past and will offer such booths at the stadium entrances and exits.

This year's carnival is an off-campus "community event," and Fees said next year a sponsor such as Pepsi or Coca-Cola will be sought to avoid having a sponsor tied to alcohol production.

Spino said next year's ASASU carnival will be funded from the profits of this year's festival. All of the profits from each successive carnival will be turned over for the next year's events, Spino said, so the "Springfest" will grow in the future.

Next year's carnival is scheduled for the ASU Band Field. Fees said this year's festival will serve as a learning experience so ASASU can conduct its own, independent festival in the future.

Fees said ASU Legal Counsel drafted a contract that ensures ASASU will not have any financial liability this year if the carnival is unprofitable by placing financial responsibility upon the other sponsors.

Associated Students OKs sale of 'Bud' for April student fair

ASU students will be able to sip a "Bud" while enjoying the festivities of the 98 KUPD-Associated Students off-campus "Springfest" in April, then visit an ASASU educational booth on substance abuse as they exit, Activities Vice President John Fees said.

The inaugural carnival will be held off-campus, and co-sponsor Budweiser's taps will flow freely during the April 15-17 event at Tempe Diablo Stadium. Carnival rides, concession booths and live entertainment will be the primary attractions for the "98 KUPD-ASASU Presents Springfest for MS (Multiple Sclerosis)."

Fees stressed that the presence of alcohol was not meant to serve as an attraction.

"This event is not being held because of the alcohol. This event is being held to involve students, the community and hopefully showcase a lot of the student organizations on campus," Fees said.

Student organizations are being asked to rent a booth for $75 and sell anything from food to artwork. ASASU will receive a percentage of the funds from product sales.

ASASU has no official policy against alcohol sales at off-campus events, but its executives initially did have some misgivings about becoming involved in this year's carnival.

However, after making several stipulations, ASASU decided the benefits to ASU students outweighed the possible negative aspects the presence of alcohol could present.

ASASU President Karrin Kunasek said, "Ideally we wanted to have it on campus and without alcohol. However, it is a one-time event and off-campus."

Future carnivals will be held on campus, at the ASU Band Field, and alcohol will not be allowed, ASASU Special Events Director Nick Spino said.

Fees said a sponsor, such as Pepsi or Coca-Cola will be sought to replace Budweiser for next year's festival.

Fees said ASASU decided to become involved in the event

Nation and world love to hate Arizona's Mecham

Kim Mattingly
Washington Correspondent

WASHINGTON D.C. — I can't get away from it. Almost 2,000 miles away, and he's still in my every conversation, every open newspaper, every illuminated television. Ol' Ev has made quite a name for us Arizonans in D.C., and a reputation known among folks from all over the country.

I've met a lot of them in my first two weeks here — from various backgrounds and political affiliations, with various levels of intellect and zeal for the current issues. But one thing they all have in common is their interest in the infamous Gov. Mecham. Folks from Mississippi, New York, Ohio, Michigan, Maine, Timbuktu . . . it doesn't matter; they've all got a Mecham joke to share.

In fact, the only person who HASN'T had some question, wisecrack or degrading comment about Arizona politics was a woman sitting next to me on the flight from Phoenix. She was from Honduras and spoke no English. For a welcome change of pace, we talked (in Spanish) about Reagan, the contras and other things I used to talk about before Mecham was governor.

But on the flight from Houston to Washington, I wasn't so lucky. A couple on their way to the National Christian Broadcasters Conference found out I was from Arizona and asked me that oft-mentioned rhetorical question: "How in the world did he get elected in the first place?"

Suddenly feeling somewhat defensive, I said: "Probably the same way Jim Bakker got to the top of the PTL Club." (It changed the subject, anyway.)

In Washington, Mecham is a hot topic with Capitol Hill reporters, staffers and even obscure interns.

A 22-year-old from Topeka, Kan., and his buddy from Saltenburg, S.C., said they'd like to run for the Arizona office.

'As a citizen of the state of Arizona, I am embarrassed, defensive and sad.'

Their platform — recited along the lines of a Bartles and James commercial — goes like this:

"Hi, I'm Kelly Milligan and this is my friend Hal Millard. We're running for governor and lieutenant governor of Arizona. We ain't been there, but we figure we couldn't do any worse. Besides, we like everybody . . . even homos. Thank you for your support."

Back on the Hill, reporters in the press gallery think they're original when they say, "We hear Mecham declared a new state holiday . . . in honor of Jimmy the Greek!"

Ha. Ha. Ha. I just can't laugh anymore.

I used to seek refuge in World News Tonight. Please, tell me anything — about Israel, Afghanistan, New Hampshire. But what's the top story? Why, Mecham's impeachment, of course!

I watch him every night on national news; I read about him every morning in the Washington Post; I'm asked about him every day by reporters, politicians, students and D.C. natives.

Even an obviously senile old woman following me around the grocery store chatting about toilet paper noticed my ASU T-shirt and remarked, "Ah yes, don't you have a governor problem?"

Problem? Let's call it by its proper name: a state tragedy. Forget the land of sunshine; forget the Grand Canyon State; forget the fourth fastest-growing state in the nation. We're the state with the governor . . . THE governor.

As a journalist, it wasn't a bad topic to write on. But as a citizen from the state of Arizona, I am embarrassed, defensive and sad.

Impeachment? Indictment? I won't surmise on Mecham's guilt or innocence. But I know we learned our lesson the hard way. The recall election offers a rare second chance, and let's hope this time, voters will be there to set Arizona on the right track again.

And as for me, I'll lay low. A man on the subway the other day asked me where I was from. I thought for a moment . . . "Uh, Aaaaah . . . Alaska."

(Editor's note: Kim Mattingly, former State Press city editor, is currently serving as an "obscure intern" in the House of Representatives.)

'Yes'

Editor:
I would like to respond shortly to the editorial run by the State Press on Feb. 17, 1988, titled "Israel/Palestine: Reasoned campus discussion." For me the editorial addressed some very important issues.

It raised the issue that a peaceful demonstration can take place on this campus which highly offends one people in support of another without evoking any physical confrontations. Placing a swastika on the Israeli flag is not something that should be taken lightly. In the past such action has caused violence. I for one am happy to say that this time it did not, due to the poise and conduct of many Jewish students who allowed the demonstration to continue peacefully.

It also raised the issue that what happened on Cady Mall on Fri., Feb. 13, was not quite understood by the editorial staff of the State Press. To label the verbal confrontation which occurred after the rally dispersed between myself and about eight Palestinian supporters as a "mob scene" is quite inaccurate. Sometimes it is necessary to voice one's opinions when the opportunity presents itself. This is what I did, and seemingly people cared enough to listen.

There was no name calling by either side during the debate after the rally as the State Press claims. Things may have gotten loud, but shouting is a lot healthier than fist fights.

As for the editorial's comment about "inconclusive non-arguments," I must say that this is blatantly incorrect. The discussion on Cady Mall was a healthy one.

It raised several points of view that the people listening may not have previously known. In my opinion, any discussion between pro-Israel supporters and pro-Palestinian supporters is beneficial.

On this note I will say that I agree with the State Press editorial. I think it is high time for issues to be debated in an open forum between the two parties involved. The campus would benefit greatly from such an event. It would provide an opportunity for both sides to speak their minds and for all the others in between to make up their minds as to what is really happening.

With this I extend an outreached hand to any Palestinian who is willing to sit side by side with me in an open forum. Whether this forum is mediated by the State Press or not is of minor significance to me. I choose only to speak with any Palestinian who is willing. The details can be ironed out in the days to come.

I know that I pose a difficult challenge to the members of the Palestinian community here on campus. Many Palestinians have been ostracized by their own people for talking peace. But I say it is time to take a stand and break the norm. Unless this is done the situation will only stagnate. The college campus is a microcosm of world opinion and we can have so much impact on the world if we only try. It is possible for us to take the first steps toward peace. Let us do so now.

'No'

Editor:
In response to your editorial (Feb. 17, 1988), as an Arab student who has been at ASU for almost eight years, I cannot accept the State Press as a mediator. The reason is simple: The State Press is not a neutral party to the dispute between the Palestinians and the Israelis. They have and still are taking positions with the Israelis, as can be witnessed by the strange behavior and weird and unrelated questions its reporters asked on Cady Mall last Friday: "How long have you been at ASU?" "What is your major?" "How many are in your group?" "Where do you get support from?" "Do you believe that there are Mossad (the CIA of Israel) agents on campus?"

The number of detective type of questions far exceed the relevant ones. Nobody asked us "Why are we out here?" or what caused the courageous uprising in the West Bank and Gaza Strip, or why Israel is not, as it often claims, a democratic society.

The State Press either does not publish on its pages the Palestinian point of view or publishes it after altering and censoring the article it receives, under its subjective policy, to make it completely different from the original one!

So, to the State Press we say: WE DON'T TRUST YOU. You are biased to the Israeli side. Besides, we refuse to sit with the representatives of Israel, and if you think this is unacceptable, ask the Israelis for their explanation for the act of several soldiers in the Israeli army who tried to bury four Palestinians alive and you will understand our position. To us they are the enemy who wants to liquidate the Palestinian people and at the same time wants to make peace with its neighbors. This is simply paradoxical.

Finally, stop talking about democracy and the free press or else accept our challenge, as Palestinians and Arabs, to an honest, frank and uncensored dialogue through the State Press.

The End

Babbitt's future is promising despite campaign crash

By DARRIN HOSTETLER
State Press

Former congressman and presidential candidate Morris Udall once said that "Arizona is the only state in the union where mothers tell their children that they can't grow up to be president."

As if to confirm that statement as fact, former Arizona Governor Bruce Babbitt — his candidacy reeling from stunning blows in Iowa and New Hampshire — will announce today whether he will abandon his quest for the White House.

Whatever his decision, it is not too early — although perhaps a little ghoulish — to begin the autopsy of Babbitt's 1988 campaign. Even if he opts to continue in the race through the March "Super Tuesday" primaries, his candidacy is on its last legs.

But after his presidential hopes for this year are put to rest, there will still be many questions remaining about the campaign. Babbitt's presidential chase has been an interesting affair, and the candidate himself — not yet 50 years old — has established himself as a force to be dealt with in future political contests.

What happened to Bruce Babbitt?
And more importantly, what's next?

What do you do with a presidential candidate who is intelligent, universally acclaimed as honest and forthright by members of both political parties, and who is not afraid to literally stand up and take a firm position on controversial issues?

It would appear that the logical action would be to grab such a person and thrust him or her into a party nomination, with an eye toward capturing the highest office in the land.

But politics is not always a rational game, and we thus often end up doing something quite unexpected with such presidential hopefuls:

We send them home.

Bruce Babbitt followed all the rules in Iowa, the host of the first presidential test of the election year. He arrived on the scene more than a year in advance of the Feb. 1988 caucus date, developing a grass-roots campaign organization and attracting the attention of the Iowan electorate.

The former governor took hard-line stands on the issues and ingratiated himself with voters by participating in such events as a state-wide bicycle race last year.

He also managed to become a favorite of the Iowa media by cracking jokes and suddenly loosening his previously starched demeanor.

When Babbitt stumbled on television early in the campaign, often fumbling and stuttering, he took the edge off his blunders by quipping: "If they can teach Mr. Ed to talk on television, they can teach me."

Babbitt did prove trainable, and later made headlines for "standing up" during a television debate several weeks before the Iowa caucus, challenging his Democratic opponents to admit that they were going to be forced to raise taxes once in office.

Some called it trite, but trite sometimes sells in Iowa. And as the new darling of the national media three weeks before the caucus, Babbitt appeared set for a suprisingly strong performance.

But in the end, only about 6 percent of caucus-goers "bought" Babbitt, and he couldn't shake the label of "unelectable" placed on him by the defeat — which resulted in a poor 4.5 percent showing in New Hampshire.

The man who Gary Hart said had demonstrated more "in terms of courage and commitment and integrity" than anyone in the race simply didn't excite the voters.

Steve Mounteer/State Press

The candidate fields questions at Iowa press conference . . .

One possible explanation, favored by Babbitt staffers, is that a large turnout in Iowa offset knowledgeable voters who really understood the issues that Babbitt set forth. Babbitt Deputy Press Secretary Vada Manager said last week that the large influx of voters, educated mostly by Gephardt, Dole and Robertson television ads, damaged the Babbitt campaign — which had been constructed on a grass-roots, face-to-face level with individual Iowans.

"The large turnout definitely hurt us," Manager said. "A lot of people came in off the street who wanted to participate in the caucus without knowing much about the candidates."

"So they voted for names they recognized (from television)."

It is also probable that although Babbitt made great strides in his television image and his handling of the media as the campaign progressed, his early TV problems damaged him in the long run.

David Yepsen, the chief political reporter for the Des Moines Register, said "some people never quite forgot the image of Babbitt stuttering and squinting."

Another possibility is that while Babbitt was outspoken and honest about his stand on the issues, he simply failed to put forth positions palatable to the electorate.

"Being forthright and taking strong stands on the issues isn't going to help if the voters don't agree with the stand," ASU political science professor John Geer said.

"A candidate could have a strong stand in favor of nuclear war, but that won't get him elected."

Geer points out that Babbitt had to tackle controversial issues in an effort to "shake things up" and try to gain ground on the distant frontrunners.

Despite an growing realization among Democrats that taxes will probably have to be raised by the next president, whoever he may be, Babbitt's emphasis on that topic may have hurt him even among those who agree and admire his candid position.

"I think deep down Democrats know that taxes will probably have to be raised," Geer said, "but they want all other possibilities exhausted first."

A Des Moines Register poll a week before the Iowa caucus showed that nearly two-thirds of those surveyed favored a plan — like that put forth by Massachusetts Gov. Michael Dukakis — to gather delinquent and uncollected taxes in an effort to decrease the deficit before actually hiking tariffs.

Despite the rejection of Babbitt by the voters, the governor's staffers say neither they nor the governor have any intention of "watering down the Babbitt message."

Scott Phelps, another deputy press secretary, said that "Babbitt will continue to foster frank debate on such issues as the deficit and our relationship with Mexico, and maybe the voters in later states will decide that this message is what they want to hear."

Although other staffers, like Phelps, express optimism, the financial realities of a major presidential campaign will probably force Babbitt out of the race today. If not, he will surely be left running a low-budget campaign similar to that of Gary Hart — emphasizing controversial issues and hanging on in an effort to garner further name recognition and contacts in search of another political objective.

What that objective might be is anyone's guess.

Former Iowa State Democratic Chairman Arthur Davis, now an independent political analyst, said Babbitt is a popular politician and a strong candidate for a cabinet post in a Democratic administration — possibly as Secretary of the Interior — or as a candidate for president in 1992 or 1996.

"Agree with him or not, Democrats and Republicans respect Babbitt for his grasp of the issues," Davis said.

"His stock is going to rise within the party."

Babbitt campaign chairman Duane Garrett told Associated Press that the former governor has future prospects and has gained influence within the Democratic Party as a result of his campaign.

"I think he has certainly emerged as the intellect and the conscience of the party," he said.

"(If Babbitt plans to run in the future) I would recommend that he do a regular column, participate in forums and television panels, and writing a book would make a lot of sense," Garrett said.

Whatever Bruce Babbitt does with the rest of his career, many of his campaign workers are leaving his campaign with a jaundiced eye. Their man has been beaten by a field of candidates dedicated to traditional politics — including the waffling and flip-flopping that is such a crucial part of presidential races. And they wonder why.

Many of them, working for the first time for a candidate who they truly believe in, can not seem to understand why the voters rejected a man almost universally respected for bringing a tough but true message to presidential politics.

Brad Golich, a 23-year-old Babbitt worker who followed the candidate to both Iowa and New Hampshire, said: "They say Bruce Babbitt is too decent and honest to be president."

"But maybe the public is not being honest with themselves."

10th petition filed on voters for Mecham impeachment

By VICTOR BARAJAS
State Press

A petition was filed Wednesday to recall yet another House Republican who voted in favor of impeaching Gov. Evan Mecham.

Bev Hermon, R-Tempe, was the 10th Republican targeted for a recall election, which would probably take place in late December if enough signatures were gathered. Eight other House members and Attorney General Bob Corbin have also been threatened with recalls since Mecham's Feb. 5 impeachment.

"I can see why people who are extremely supportive of the governor would feel that their rights have been violated and they would like a way to fight back," Hermon said.

"In this case, I think the purpose is to further single out people who voted for the impeachment, although there certainly are a lot of us."

Gail Gibson, who filed the petition, said Hermon "has shown that she is not sensitive to the majority of her district, 27, by voting to impeach Governor Mecham."

According to the petition, the governor should have been impeached only if other measures for removing him had failed.

Jenny Norton

But Hermon said the petition is "nothing more than harassment," adding that the petitioners may be sending a message to Senators who may be thinking of convicting Mecham.

A recall campaign would require 5,581 valid signatures of registered voters in her district by June 16.

Bev Hermon

Hermon said since a recall election would occur after primary and general elections, the whole purpose of the petition would be defeated.

"These people are exercising their right to recall, but the timing makes it pretty unrealistic," Hermon said.

Jenny Norton, a House Republican who was subjected to a possible recall last week, said the recall of Hermon is "despicable."

"Bev Hermon has not only served her community and the legislature for six years... she's one of the most bonafide public-office holders I ever met," Norton said.

She added that although a recall election for either representative is realistic, "I doubt that many people have ever voted against her."

Norton's recall petition, filed on the grounds that she did not represent voters and taxpayers, was refiled by Gibson after the first petition was overruled.

But earlier in the week, Norton announced her candidacy for re-election.

Recall elections would probably be slated for Dec. 20, about one month before the expiration of the representatives' terms.

Among the other lawmakers targeted for recall were House Speaker Joe Lane, R-Wilcox, who hired Special Counsel William French, and Judiciary Chairman Jim Skelly, R-Scottsdale, who chaired the House select committee on impeachment.

House Republicans 'beg' Rhodes to run in recall election

By BEN McCONNELL
State Press

Fourteen House Republicans "begged" former Arizona Congressman John Rhodes Wednesday to run in the recall election of Gov. Evan Mecham.

Jenny Norton and Bev Hermon, both Tempe GOP representatives, joined fellow Republicans in asking Rhodes to put his name on the May 17 ballot. Rhodes is expected to announce his candidacy Friday. He already has registered his name with the secretary of state's office indicating that he may be a recall candidate.

Rhodes could not be reached for comment Wednesday night.

The former 30-year congressman could have quite a bit of company on the recall ballot. By Wednesday, at least 72 people had taken out petition-gathering packets. Democrat Carolyn Warner, who challenged Mecham in 1986 and lost, already has announced she will run again.

Fledgling candidates must gather at least 3,336 signatures of registered voters by March 18 to get on the ballot. Among those candidates are Republican national committeeman

Jack Londen, a conservative.

Londen said Wednesday that he is running so voters will have a conservative to pick if Mecham is unseated before the election. But Londen said he will withdraw if Mecham makes it to the ballot.

The impeached governor's trial in the Senate is slated to start Feb. 29. He is charged with obstructing justice, concealing a $350,000 loan and illegally borrowing state funds.

His criminal trial begins March 9. He faces six felony counts charging him with concealing the loan and lying about it to the state grand jury.

"I am literally begging John Rhodes to get in this race," Norton said, standing amongst her GOP colleagues. She added that she will actively recruit other lawmakers to support Rhodes' expected candidacy.

Chris Herstam, the Phoenix lawmaker who led the cavalcade of Republicans in the announcement, insisted he does not know if Rhodes will run, adding that he hopes the unified plea will convince him.

"Mr. Rhodes is by far the best qualified to lead Arizona out of this time of political trauma," he said. "The people of our state are crying out for the leadership that he can provide."

But Rhodes' gubernatorial ambitions may be dashed if the Legislature passes a bill that would cancel a recall election if its intended recipient is removed from office prior to the ballot.

Acting Gov. Rose Mofford, a Democrat, would officially assume the chief executive position if Mecham is impeached or resigns.

Herstam said he "respects" Mofford, but added that "Rhodes would make the best governor."

Other Republicans who joined Herstam, Hermon and Norton in supporting Rhodes were: Jim Green, Jack Jewett, Bart Baker, Larry Hawke, Jim Skelly, Don Strauch, Bob Hungerford, John Wettaw, Jim Hartdegen, Bob Broughton and William Mundell.

Skelly, the Scottsdale Republican who chaired the House's select committee on impeachment, said he supports Rhodes because "he will bring stability to this state and he has a proven track record."

"He will put this state back on the course it needs to be on."

Volunteers for GOP candidates campaign at ASU

By VICKIE CHACHERE
State Press

Volunteers for the five Republican candidates for president brought their campaigns to ASU Wednesday in a short meeting with about 30 students in the MU.

Local representatives for Vice President George Bush, Kansas Sen. Robert Dole, former Delaware Gov. Pete du Pont, New York Rep. Jack Kemp and television evangelist Pat Robertson touted the candidates to students and passed out bumper stickers and literature.

The forum, sponsored by ASU's chapter of the College Republicans, was the first chance students had to meet with local campaign coordinators on-campus.

"All of the Republican candidates are first-rate," said Barry Coughlin, a Bush representative who traveled from Kansas City, Kan., for the forum.

"Each one of the Republican candidates is heads and shoulders above the Democrats."

Bush won Tuesday's New Hampshire primary with 38 percent of the vote, placing nine points ahead of Dole, who finished with 29 percent.

Kemp was third with 13 percent, followed by du Pont at 10 percent and Robertson with 9 percent.

Du Pont has scheduled a news conference for Thursday afternoon and is expected to announce his withdrawal from the campaign.

Coughlin, who worked on the Reagan-Bush campaign in 1980 and again in 1984, said, "There is a dimension of George Bush that goes beyond all the other candidates."

Jack Kemp

He said Bush is better prepared for the presidency because of his business background, his military experience and his tenure as CIA director and U.S. ambassador to the United Nations.

Mark Anderson, a Kemp campaign worker, said voters are not looking for an "establishment" Republican in the 1988 election.

"I think most of us, we look at the political process and we are not really inspired by politicians."

He said Kemp is trying to expand the Republican party to include groups that have shied away from the party in the past, mainly minorities and the poor.

Alan Tindell, a du Pont campaign volunteer, said he doubted that du Pont would be in the race much longer, but urged the students to study some of du Pont's social security reforms and support the ideas.

Du Pont is proposing that workers be given the option of being removed from the Social Security system. The workers will continue to pay the tax, but will be given a tax credit and will be urged to invest that money in their own retirement account.

Du Pont said that system would reduce the number of Social Security recipients while keeping stable the number of workers paying into the system.

Zane Smith, a Robertson volunteer, touted Robertson's business experience and said the founder of the Christian Broadcast Network would bring government into a "business-like atmosphere."

"We're in a deficit situation and we've had professional politicians running this country too long," Smith said.

William Havranek, a Dole volunteer, said, "Basically Bob Dole is a politician, he's not afraid of that reputation."

Student who faked death 6 years ago pleads guilty to kidnapping

By MIKE BURGESS
State Press

ASU student Rory Foster, who allegedly faked his death six years ago to escape kidnapping charges in Pasadena, Calif., has pleaded guilty.

Foster, 29, entered his plea Feb. 4 before Pasadena Superior Court Judge Coleman Swart. He is scheduled to be sentenced May 5.

Until his sentencing, Foster will undergo a 90-day evaluation by the California Department of Corrections to determine if he should be sentenced to prison or is fit to be placed on probation, said Burton Schneirow, a Los Angeles County Deputy District Attorney.

The computer sciences graduate student had entered an innocent plea Oct. 16. He confessed to the kidnapping and the falsification of his death during an interview with a State Press reporter after his arrest Oct. 1.

He is still being held in Los Angeles County Jail in lieu of $1 million bond.

"It is a tremendously painful thing for him and it continues to be," Foster's attorney, Mark Heaney said, declining to comment on why his client changed his plea.

"We're hoping that at the time of the sentencing the judge recognizes his accomplishments and the unusual circumstances," Heaney said. "This was far from a typical kidnapping — it's not like he took a child. It was more of a domestic problem that got out of hand."

Foster, then 23, and Rene Delcid, a Honduran national, allegedly kidnapped an illegal alien named Carlos Carillo at gunpoint in 1981 and were arrested when they turned the man over to Border Patrol agents.

Carillo was reportedly having an affair with Delcid's wife.

The men escaped charges when two death certificates stating they had been killed in a car crash in Honduras were presented to court officials.

Foster, who came to ASU last fall on a full scholarship from American Telephone & Telegraph, was arrested by ASU police as he left an afternoon class. He was reportedly turned into authorities by Delcid.

Meanwhile, Foster is still under investigation by several federal agencies.

"There are certain aspects of that case that we are still dealing with," said Dave Small, Special Agent in Charge of the FBI in Phoenix. "When we resolve them the case will be closed or there will be additional prosecution."

The U.S. Custom's Service has been investigating Foster's involvement in the smuggling of a priceless Honduran artifact into the United States.

Elderly Tempe woman killed, 4 others injured in accident

By MIKE BURGESS

An 86-year-old Tempe woman was killed Tuesday when the car in which she was riding attempted to make a left turn and was struck by another vehicle, police said.

Edith Casey, 2401 S. College Ave., No. 112, was taken to Scottsdale Memorial Hospital, where she died almost two hours after the accident occurred at the intersection of Broadway Road and College Avenue about 4 p.m., said Officer Roger Austin, a police spokesman.

Austin said Casey was traveling westbound in a 1984 four-door sedan when the driver of the car, 74-year-old Lorraine Clem, of California, attempted to make a left turn onto College Avenue and was struck by a 1987 Mitsubishi.

police report

Clem suffered possible back injuries and was taken to Scottsdale Memorial Hospital, where she is listed in stable condition. Leo Clem, 77, a passenger in the back seat, is also listed in stable condition.

The driver of the Mitsubishi, 18-year-old Erin Mohr, of Mesa, and Penelope Williams, 17, of Scottsdale, were taken to Tempe St. Luke's Hospital where they were listed in good condition.

Austin said the accident is still under investigation and no citations have been issued.

In other incidents:

•A man unaffiliated with the University was arrested and charged with attempted bicycle theft Tuesday, police said.

Lorenzo Espinoza was booked into Maricopa County Jail, Mesa, after he allegedly tried to steal a bicycle from the east side of the Language and Literature Building.

•A backpack and its contents were reported stolen from Hayden Library Tuesday night, police said.

•A vehicle parked west of Palo Verde West Residence Hall sustained $450 in damages to its right side and front windshield Tuesday, police said.

Students interested in becoming the student representative on the Arizona Board of Regents for the 1988-89 school year can pick up an application at the Associated Students' office (MU-208J).

Applications are due in the office by noon Feb. 29, ASASU State Relations Director Michael Konz said.

The student regent serves as a participating, non-voting, member of the board and represents the students of the three Arizona universities. The representative is chosen from the three universities on a rotating basis for a one-year term, and ASU will provide the regent for the upcoming academic year.

Current student regent Joe Mikitish, of

ASU prepares to serve Board term

UofA, said candidates do not need any specific background, but must have a genuine concern about the issues of higher learning in Arizona.

Mikitish said the student regent's primary responsibility is to represent student concerns and interests.

"The student regent plays a particularly important role because he or she... has the perspective of the student who is directly affected by the regents' decisions.

"I think the best part for me is the chance to affect decisions that directly impact students," Mikitish said.

Although the student regent does not have a vote, he or she may make motions and participate in debate. Mikitish said board members go out of their way to make students feel comfortable and become involved.

Mikitish said he keeps in close contact with the three university student governments and is involved in a variety of decisions, ranging from programming of classes to capital expenditures for new buildings.

Mikitish admitted that being a regent means a "tough, hectic schedule to keep," but he urged any ASU student interested in an "advocate's role for students in higher education" to apply.

Two letters of recommendation are required with the application, and Mikitish suggested requesting the letters from people candidates have worked with. It is best if the persons making the recommendation can verify the applicants' communication skills, which Mikitish termed extremely important for the regents' job.

Applicants must be currently enrolled resident students in good academic standing and should have a familiarity with the state legislative and Arizona Board of Regents process.

A committee will choose three finalists, and the Arizona governor will make a selection that must be confirmed by the state senate.

Students who would like more information may contact Konz at 965-1151.

$500 scholarship available to 1 student leader from each college

By KELLY PEARCE
State Press

If you can sway an audience with your forceful words or have a following of people who look upon you as their leader, you may be eligible for the $500 Student Leadership Scholarship offered by the ASU Student Foundation.

Ben Loya, scholarship chairman for the organization, said one student from each college on campus will be awarded $300 in cash and $200 book credit.

"The scholarship is based on leadership qualities and potential," Loya said.

Interested applicants must have at least a 3.0 grade point average.

The scholarship opportunity, which has been offered for the last six years, requires that a "simple" application be filled out by Feb. 29, Loya said.

The application consists of four short-answer questions asking students what leadership training and goals they have.

But Loya said the scholarship does not apply only to ASU leadership accomplishments.

"One of the questions on the application asks students to explain one situation where they used leadership to impact someone or some group," Loya said. "This also extends to the community and not just the campus."

He cited examples in which a student discussed how she began a neighborhood watch program and a student helped raise money to help a disabled person.

"We have a broad definition of leadership," he added. "You can be a leader in different situations."

After the applications have been reviewed, three to four applications from each college will be chosen and students will go through an in-depth interview March 21 or March 22.

Winners will be announced the following day.

Recognition will be bestowed on the college winners at the Campus Leadership Awards ceremony March 30.

Loya said publicity has been a problem in the past and many students do not know about the scholarship. Last year, there were no applicants from the nursing and architecture colleges because no one heard about it, Loya said.

"It is so hard to get the word out," he said.

Through banners, flyers and word of mouth, he hopes to make students aware.

The foundation, limited to 35 members, prides itself on bettering the ASU campus with the motto "students bettering students," Loya said.

Their purpose is to recognize and promote leadership and to raise and award scholarship funds, he said.

Applications for the leadership scholarship are available in the Student Services Building, Room B229 or by calling Student Life at 965-6547.

Texans offer support for $4.4 billion supercollider project

WAXAHACHIE, Texas (AP) — Texans have put their frontier spirit solidly behind the $4.4 billion "supercollider" atom smasher, Gov. Bill Clements told U.S. Department of Energy officials to the applause of a crowd of 600 Tuesday.

"Contrary to some other areas in the United States who are reluctant to participate in this razor edge of technology and engage in what I call frontier spirit, we in Texas believe in this project and this community is 100 percent behind it and that's the best we can say for it," Clements said.

Waxahachie is one of seven sites under consideration for the supercollider, an atom smasher and research laboratory where protons will speed along a 53-mile circular tunnel to crash into each other in the hopes of discovering a unit smaller than a quark, which is one billion times smaller than a molecule.

Scientists say the supercollider will provide new depth in high-energy physics research, the field that studies the fundamental nature of matter and energy.

Clements spoke near the beginning of a public hearing on the environmental impact of the project on Ellis County, south of Dallas.

Officials said 112 people had signed up to make comments during the 4½-hour hearing Tuesday afternoon. A second hearing was scheduled for 7 p.m. and was expected to go into the night.

William Hess, director of the DOE task force charged with selecting where the supercollider will be built, told the audience that officials will return to Ellis County in March to assess geological and real estate considerations.

Ira Adler, deputy director of management for the Energy Department's Office of Energy Research, began the hearing with an explanation of the technological, educational and economic advantages of the supercollider project.

"The SSC (superconducting supercollider) will advance the long quest to disclose what we are made of," Adler said. "History teaches us that discoveries in basic research have a profound impact on our lives."

When completed in 1996, the facility is expected to provide jobs to 2,500 people with a $270 million annual payroll.

New laser surgery procedure faster, cheaper, experts say

PHOENIX (AP) — Arterial blockages commonly treated with bypass surgery may soon be replaced by laser surgery, which is faster, cheaper and greatly reduces recovery time, medical experts say.

About 1,000 physicians, scientists and surgeons from around the world attending a two-day conference on laser surgery here watched a Phoenix surgeon Tuesday night open the blocked arteries of a 52-year-old woman with a laser probe in less than five minutes.

The surgery at Humana Hospital Phoenix was telecast live to the conference via a small camera inserted into the pelvic area of the patient.

A closed-beam, metal-tipped laser probe was inserted into the woman's arteries where it vaporized the plaque-caused blockage.

Dr. Edward B. Diethrich, who performed the surgery, said the unidentified patient did not lose any blood and was scheduled to be released from the hospital within 24 hours.

She would have required about a week's worth of hospital care if she had undergone traditional bypass surgery, said Diethrich, medical director at the Arizona Heart Institute in Phoenix.

He said the patient smoked a pack and a half of cigarettes a day for 35 years and had a family history of heart disease. The arteries that furnish blood to her legs were partially blocked and such restricted flow sometimes leads to amputation, according to Diethrich.

About 500,000 people nationwide suffer from the same kind of arterial blockage and it can lead to a stroke or a heart attack if not treated, Diethrich said.

"We are just at the beginning," said Dr. Rainer Moosdorf, a cardiovascular surgeon from West Germany.

Diethrich said laser technology in treatment of arterial blockages has advanced faster than he imagined and he "never thought we'd be doing this a year or two ago."

Alcohol

this year despite the presence of alcohol because of the opportunity to co-produce this year's carnival without financial liability.

ASU Legal Counsel drafted a contract that absolves ASASU of any financial risk this year, Fees said.

Fees also said ASASU insisted that "Budweiser" would not be mentioned at the beginning of the carnival's official title and that ASASU be allowed to set up educational booths on substance abuse at stadium entrances and exits.

In addition Fees said the price of beer will be so high that students will not even be able to get drunk. "The price of beer is extraordinary," Fees said. "You're not going to buy six beers. It's too expensive."

Fees said Budweiser, who holds exclusive rights for alcohol sale at the event, will not be able to set their own price, and ASASU will be involved in the price-fixing process. Fees said cups of Bud will go for between $1.50 and $2.50 — a price he termed "inhibiting."

Kunasek agreed, saying, "The price of the beer is going to be so high that I don't believe people are going to go and get schnockered."

But just in case a student happens to get drunk, ASASU will provide transportation to and from campus. Fees said the service will be provided to anyone needing a free ride.

Because there will be alcohol at the event, Fees said the carnival will provide the perfect atmosphere to sneak an important message to a usually unreachable audience.

"People are not going to substance-abusing (programs) no matter how much we want, but if you get them to something fun, then hit them with a message, that's what makes a difference."

Bruce Babbitt

Babbitt

"Virtually no one runs for the presidency in this modern era and wins the first time."

Garrett said Babbitt will do better if he uses the 1988 campaign to introduce his name to voters and keeps in the political spotlight during the next four years to build support for the 1992 campaign.

Babbitt's campaign, bankrolled by $1 million, began before Babbitt left the governor's office when he set out on a bicycle ride across Iowa nearly two years ago.

The first national glimpse of the campaign was a sour one, when Babbitt's performance on a nationally televised debate earned him poor ratings. Babbitt spent the next several months working on his television presence by having campaign workers follow him around with a video camera.

He fared better in later debates, but a poll taken in October showed that only about 2 percent of the voters recognized his name.

The campaign, built around a proposal of a 5-cent national sales tax and a focus on children's issues, saw its biggest boost in December when Babbitt literally stood up for increased taxes during another nationally televised debate.

Dan Hubbard, an analyst with Washington-based National Strategies, said Babbitt's frank approach to campaigning may have alienated voters.

"I think what he was talking about were not the things the voters wanted to hear," Hubbard said. "He definitely leveled with people, and people in this country don't always want to hear the truth."

Babbitt's tax stand earned him several weeks of favorable media attention — some analysts billed him as the only candidate willing to confront the tough issues — and increased donations, but not enough to lift the campaign past fourth place in Iowa polls.

"I think he has altered the face of this campaign," Phelps said. "He has forced other candidates to adhere to issues they didn't want to address."

Babbitt's Iowa campaign fell short of projection Feb. 8, when he placed fifth behind Missouri Rep. Richard Gephardt, Illinois Sen. Paul Simon, Massachusetts Gov. Michael Dukakis and the Rev. Jesse Jackson in the Iowa caucuses.

"We had to do well in Iowa and New Hampshire to get the attention to become a household name," Phelps said. "We put all our eggs in those two baskets."

The Phoenix campaign headquarters, located in the Town and Country Shopping Center on Camelback Road, will move to smaller offices to complete its paperwork during the next several months, Phelps said, adding that staff members probably won't transfer to other campaigns.

"There are a lot of campaign workers out there whose heart and soul are in politics," Phelps said. "They live for working for a candidate every four years, moving from campaign to campaign."

"Most of us who work for the Babbitt campaign are people who have known and worked for Babbitt for a number of years."

"We're a different kind of campaign in that we basically have worked for the candidate that we have always had trust in."

'Gastronomic world's fair' to open in Paris by 1990

PARIS (AP) — A deserted district in eastern Paris is about to be transformed into a vast food, wine and restaurant center on the banks of the Seine River.

The Zone d'Evolution Urbaine de la Seine — or ZEUS — is expected to open in 1990, drawing food and wine professionals, cuisine-mad Parisians and like-minded tourists.

"We expect ZEUS to be the biggest, most efficient food and wine market in the world, a permanent gastronomic world's fair," said Jean-Pierre Hennequet, executive president of the project.

A streamlined commercial center will be complemented by a park, two hotels and a renovated warehouse district for stores and restaurants.

"The commercial area will cover roughly 1,345,000 square feet," Hennequet, a 40-year-old entrepreneur, said.

The Right-Bank site on the Seine's Quai de Bercy was a gigantic 19th-century warehouse area — mainly storing wine, now housed more efficiently in other parts of the city or country.

In the same general run-down area a 1977 renewal project created the Bercy Omnisports Palace, a huge amphitheater and exhibition building.

Work is just beginning on the crescent-shaped permanent sales exhibition designed by architect Henri La Fonta. The futuristic glass building will furnish showrooms and office space for both large and small food and wine companies from France and abroad.

Initial financing for the project, to cost over $300 million, is coming from a group of French banks headed by Credit National, as well as from American banks Citicorp and Bankers Trust. The city of Paris will participate in the public park project.

A major partner in the project will be Trammell Crow Mart in Dallas. The ZEUS project is aimed at combining the best features of American trade marts and urban renewal shopping center successes such as Boston's Faneuil Hall or Harborplace in Baltimore.

"We want our area to be just as appealing to the public as these American centers," Hennequet said. "Furthermore, it will be educational as well, since a food and wine museum is planned."

The tree-shaded alleys and brick warehouses in the renovated old part of the area will be used for pedestrian streets, housing restaurants and shops selling everything from china to linen. The more attractive of the old wine warehouses are already classified as national monuments and will be refurbished along their original lines.

"These old wine depots will make great restaurant settings — for everything from simple wine bars to starred gastronomic havens," said Hennequet, who added that a few famous restaurateurs have already shown interest in creating a Bercy branch.

"There will probably be regional French and foreign restaurants as well," he said.

For those who want to stay near the fair as they sample everything from simple sausage to great wine, there will be two modern hotels in medium-priced categories, with about 350 rooms each. The city-sponsored park area will be at least partly based on gastronomic themes.

"Through all these sectors we want to increase food and wine exports and trade," Hennequet said, "but we also want to make the world sit up and realize that yes, France is really No. 1 in the culinary arts."

Arizona copper companies object to U.S. trade agreement

PHOENIX (AP) — Representatives of Arizona copper companies said a trade agreement with Canada represents an insidious threat to the U.S. copper industry's long-term bottom line.

The agreement, signed Jan. 2 by Pres. Ronald Reagan and Canadian Prime Minister Brian Mulroney, could give a competitive advantage to Canadian mining and metals production, said Robert J. Muth, vice president for government and public affairs for ASARCO Inc.

One portion of the pact will eliminate over the next 10 years the 1- to 4-percent tariffs Canadian producers pay to sell their products in the United States.

Mining officials have objected to the plan because the Canadian government heavily subsidizes natural resource industries such as copper, lead, zinc, potash and timber.

They claim the plan will increase the flow of non-ferrous metal imports from Canada to the United States.

"It will produce unfair competition," said

David Ridinger, president of the Arizona Mining Association, which represents the five copper producers in the state and several small silver and gold mining firms.

"The agreement is seen as good for the processing and manufacturing industries in the U.S., but it gives the Canadian companies involved in natural resources one leg up on their American counterparts," Ridinger added.

Richard Pendleton, senior vice president at Phelps Dodge Corp., the largest U.S. copper producer, said in the next downturn, Canadian competitors will be able to "move aggressively into our market at a time when we can least afford it."

In the bad times, domestic copper producers have been left to their own devices to cut costs or close mines while their counterparts to the north receive government subsidies such as favorable loan rates.

Soviets battle U.S. embassy fire

MOSCOW (AP) — Soviet firefighters chaperoned by Americans extinguished a fire Wednesday in the U.S. Embassy, the aging building the United States has been unable to abandon because of bugging devices that permeate a new structure.

About 150 embassy employees were evacuated and sent home for the day, embassy spokesman Richard Gilbert said. No one was injured.

U.S. Embassy officials said Soviet firefighters were called to put out the fire in an unoccupied fifth-floor residential section after they decided embassy personnel couldn't extinguish it on their own.

The Soviets responded promptly and were escorted at all times by American employees," inside the building, said Gilbert, who briefed reporters in the wet snow outside the mustard-colored embassy's main door after the fire had been brought under control.

The 10-story embassy building on busy Tchaikovsky Street near the center of Moscow has been the source of controversy for more than a year.

Last spring U.S. officials said they had determined a new eight-story red-brick office building directly behind the old one could not be occupied immediately because of Soviet listening devices apparently installed during construction.

The $191 million structure was already five years behind schedule at the time. Proposals have included razing part or all of the new structure or building a new office to house communications and secret operations. U.S. Reps. Dan Mica, D-Fla., and Olympia Snowe, R-Maine, said in April that the old embassy building rented by the United States since the early 1950s was a firetrap and unsafe by accepted standards for general working conditions.

A renovation of the building has been under way since then.

Gilbert said the fire "might be construction related," although its cause has not been determined. It apparently started near a stairwell, he said.

He said there was no damage to the main working areas of the embassy, which begin on the sixth floor.

Embassy Second Secretary Michael Hurley, who was in his eighth-floor office at the time of the blaze, said the smell of smoke increased before he evacuated.

"Somebody came through shouting excitedly, 'There's a fire, everybody out of the building,'" Hurley said.

He said he locked up his safe and left the building by a stairway that normally is closed. "The lower I went, the more smoke I could see," he said.

"People were excited, but there was an orderly exit," Hurley said.

Embassy employees gathered in the rear courtyard to watch the blaze.

"Flames were leaping out of the building. Obviously it was a very hot fire, and it was coming out of one window," Hurley said.

Last fall, employees underwent fire drills conducted by State Department experts, Hurley said.

would have eliminated the rule, and Tony West, a Phoenix Republican, offered a compromise resolution that would have permitted private meetings in certain instances.

But in debate Wednesday, Senate President Carl Kunasek, a Mesa

Republican, argued that the impeachment court rules written last week "were not adopted lightly — they were arrived at after due consideration."

"To change the rules now ... is ill-advised," he said.

Neither resolution obtained a required two-thirds majority.

Protester occupation of UM building ends

AMHERST, Mass. (AP) — A six-day occupation of a University of Massachusetts building by minority students ended Wednesday after protesters and the school's chancellor agreed on reforms to correct alleged racial harassment on campus.

The takeover ended just before 1 p.m. when 150 minority students walked onto the steps of New Africa House and began to sing a gospel song, then raised their fists in a victory salute.

"We, the Third World students, wish to acknowledge the time and effort of the administration and the support of those on campus and elsewhere in the world," said Dwayne Warren, 22, a senior who served as spokesman for the protesters.

The five-page agreement was worked out between Chancellor Joseph Duffey and nine of the protesters late Tuesday night following nearly four hours of negotiations.

The pact included a promise to change the school's student conduct code to allow suspension of students found to commit acts of racial violence or harassment.

In addition, Duffey promised extensive renovation of the New Africa House and funds for educational and cultural activities for minority students.

Duffey also agreed to increased funding for the recruitment of minority students and teachers, but he rejected a demand for student involvement in hiring faculty members. Duffey also consented to the formation of a student committee to monitor progress of the pact.

The students said they debated the administration's response until just before noon Wednesday. An early-morning deadlock among protesters temporarily spread rumors that they would take over another campus building.

Protesters said racial tensions at the university began with a clash between blacks and whites following the 1986 World Series.

Josella Costello, 24, a junior who remained at the New Africa House during the vigil, burst into tears shortly after the takeover ended.

"I feel like I'm going to faint — I haven't been able to sleep and I haven't been able to eat," Costello said, "but it was all worth it."

About 200 spectators, including Amy Carter, daughter of former President Jimmy Carter, watched the end of the takeover which began Friday morning. Carter, 20, was among 14 people arrested in November 1986 at the university during a protest of CIA recruitment on campus. She was later acquitted of trespassing and disorderly conduct charges.

Prior to the Tuesday negotiation session, protesters dropped their original demands for the suspension or dismissal of five white students accused of beating two blacks Feb. 7 and the suspension of campus police officers accused of forming a line-up of blacks the same night in a search for men who allegedly harassed women.

The protesters said they were satisfied the university or courts would deal with the incidents properly.

Suspect in Prescott homicide arrested

PRESCOTT (AP) — A Prescott teen-ager was arrested Wednesday in connection with a shoot-out at a residence here during an apparent robbery attempt that left two men dead and an elderly woman hospitalized, authorities said.

Michael Anthony Scarry, 19, was taken into custody by Yavapai County Sheriff's deputies and booked into the county jail on charges of homicide, attempted homicide and armed robbery, said Maj. Frank Weymonth.

Anne Banks, 60, stumbled into Yavapai Regional Medical Center late Tuesday night and said she had been beat on the head and her husband shot at their home. Authorities found Victor Banks, 84, slain on his living-room couch and another man — later identified as Danny Clarence Selig, of Prescott — dead on the floor.

Weymonth said the elderly couple had been watching television when Scarry and Selig, age unknown but believed to be in his 20s, apparently broke into the home about 10:30 p.m. Tuesday in a robbery attempt.

Banks, who was armed, ordered the intruders to get out and there was an exchange of gunfire, Weymonth said.

Scarry reportedly fled the scene and Mrs. Banks managed to drive herself to the hospital for treatment of a head wound from being struck, possibly by a gun butt, Weymonth said.

Annette Funicello appears in Tempe for the opening of Billy's Cafe.

Mousketeer Skips back from the beach into Billy's

By JOAN MCKENNA
State Press

Annette Funicello no longer wears Mousketeer ears, but she is still classic Disney.

Polite, warm and modest, she would make the animated genius proud.

"Walt Disney was my mentor," she said. "I considered him a second father.

"He was special, kind-hearted . . . a sweetheart of a man. You could just sense his love of children."

Funicello joined his close-knit family in 1955, after Disney spotted her dancing the lead of "Swan Lake." He was looking for a girl to complete the cast of "The Mickey Mouse Club" and asked her to audition.

She quickly became one of the most recognizable teenagers in America and branched out into films and recording.

Her gratefulness to Disney and respect for his ideals influenced her long after a 1965 departure from his kingdom.

"When I was working (for Disney), we all signed a morals clause saying you do not drink or smoke in public.

"I still don't. I smoke occasionally, but I never would in front of kids. That's the least I can do for them."

Funicello said adults are surprised to hear her say that.

"They say 'You mean you drink? You mean you smoke?'" But the revelation is misleading. Funicello's lifestyle could hardly be called wild.

"I don't like the Hollywood scene," she said. "I don't go to the parties, and I don't like premieres. Basically I stay at home.

"A lot of people take it the wrong way and feel I'm standoffish."

Funicello resides in the San Fernando Valley with her husband, Glen Holt, and their three children.

Neither her 22-year old daughter nor younger sons have expressed interest in following in her footsteps, but she knows how she would respond.

"I've never discouraged it," she said. "But if they were really interested, I would discourage it because there is no Walt Disney anymore. It's a whole different ballgame.

"He sort of took all us under his wing. He was very

'I love Skippy. I was raised on it. You can put it on so many things. Have you ever had peanut butter and scrambled eggs?'

protective. It can be a really cruel world."

She said her children have their own interests and pay little attention to "Annette."

"If a rerun comes on the air, they'll say 'Mom, you're on again,' and walk out of the room," — which is the type of atmosphere Funicello loves.

"Absolutely, I feel the best at home with my family. We rent videos, and I love to cook.

"I realized a long time ago that adoration is not where it's at."

But Funicello has stayed in the limelight, co-starring with Frankie Avalon in beach films and promoting Skippy Peanut Butter.

She said her decision to do the latter was more personal than business.

"I love Skippy," she said. "I was raised on it. Super Chunk is my favorite. I put it on so many things, like fruit. Have you ever had peanut butter and scrambled eggs?"

But Funicello no longer promotes the product, as she is working on one of her own — Italian sauce. She is part owner and spokeswoman for Armanino Foods, a company offering five Italian sauce flavors for use on everything from spaghetti to chicken.

"Be creative," she said.

Her acting career is on hold as she waits for response to the European opening of her latest film, "Back to the Beach." A sequel or series is possible on the homefront.

But home is the key word.

"My first priority has always been my family," she said. "I've turned down jobs requiring on-location shooting."

Funicello said she looks for a "good strong PG"-rated role in prospective jobs and sees new opportunities in the latest industry trend.

"Everything sort of goes in cycles," she said. "For a while movies were real violent and suggestive. Now everything is comedy.

"I think the Disney product today (i.e., "Three Men and A Baby," under the Touchstone name) would not offend Disney. I think the movies are in good taste, which is basically what he stood for."

. . . And for what Funicello continues to stand.

Rockin' around the clock with milkshakes and malts

Richie, Potsie and the Fonz are many people's only taste of life in the 1950s.

The standard impression is Arnold's hamburger joint, rocking with juke box music and malts.

But "Happy Days" is television . . . make-believe. Now for some reality.

Billy's Cafe, just opened in Tempe, is a spit-shined remake of the old soda shops, complete with black-and-white checked floors, red-covered booths and German jukebox.

And the businessmen behind it have that Cunningham-family quality.

Arizona native Bill Paterson is the creator. He had lived in Chicago for a while, but returned to Phoenix in December.

"I used to work here as a busboy 20 years ago," he said. (The restaurant was known as Hobo Joe's at the time.) "I wanted to do this in Chicago. When my wife and I came here, I noticed there were no '50s or '60s restaurants in this city.

"I was going to purchase the Dash (Inn, located next door), but then I saw this place."

Paterson assembled three former Chicago co-workers to head up the business. He had been general manager of the windy city's Hotel Moraine, and brought with him Billy's general manager, Nick Agostinelli, Executive Chef Robert Burg and Decorator Roy Slocum.

Agostinelli and Burg, both 24, are too young to be riding old memories. But they seem wild about the nostalgic theme.

"Everybody's going back to the old kind of music, cars, clothes," Agostinelli said. "Here, somebody can relive the '50s decor and have a good meal for under $5.

"And at 9:30 at night we will turn the whole place into a dance floor."

Burg added he thought the '50s were taking off all over the country. "The time era is the most likeable," he said. "The '70s and '80s don't have a lot to show us."

Billy's replaces the ill-fated Fortune Cookie Chinese Buffet, at 625 East Apache. Paterson said he thinks Billy's is more suited to students.

"The reason that place didn't make it was kids wanted a place that they could go," he said. "I love the kids. I want to make sure this is fun."

Response indicates he is succeeding.

"Everybody thinks it's going to be a hit," hostess Rodi Fisher said. "They love the atmosphere. We've been packed." Fisher is an ASU student, as are most of the employees.

A group dining close by echoed Fisher's sentiments and praised the food.

"It's definitely quality food," Tempe resident Mark Murdock said. "The hamburgers are excellent, and the vanilla shakes are the best."

Murdock's friend kept repeating that his meal was "bodacious."

Other guests complimented the cleanliness, waitress enthusiasm and variety of food.

The menu offers burger selections ranging from basic beef ($3.50) to those dressed with bacon, blue cheese or chili.

Other sandwiches include Sloppy Joe's, tuna salad and grilled cheese.

Entree lovers can have anything from fried chicken in a basket to a roast turkey platter. Agostinelli emphasized that nothing on the menu is priced over $5.

Nostalgics will be happy with the fountain selection: ice cream sundaes, sodas, shakes and malts, plus brownie concoctions, all under $2.

And of course, root beer and cream soda are available.

Billy's walls hold a few memories of their own, with original '50s oversized bottlecaps hanging in the front dining room and 30-year-old posters of Elvis and Marilyn Monroe in the west wing.

Another familiar face graced the place last weekend — that of former Mousketeer Annette Funicello, in-house for Billy's opening.

"I think it's fabulous," she said. "I have a rumpus room done just like this — in black, white and red. Obviously I like it."

She said she thinks the 1950s revival is amazing. "Even younger kids are interested in the music. I love it."

Paterson said he hopes to draw all age groups and is waiting for his liquor license to be activated within a week.

But he added that while some might think this puts him in competition with the Dash Inn, "the Dash is a landmark. I think there's enough business for everyone."

Wildcats can clinch Pac-10 with victory

(AP) — Third-ranked Arizona can clinch a tie for the Pacific-10 Conference basketball championship Thursday night when the Wildcats meet Southern California at the Los Angeles Sports Arena.

If the Wildcats beat the Trojans, they could earn their second Pac-10 title in the three seasons by defeating UCLA Saturday at Pauley Pavilion.

Arizona has a 12-1 conference record and a 23-2 overall mark.

Southern Cal, 3-9 in league play and 5-16 overall, suffered its worst loss ever earlier this season at Arizona's McKale Center when the Wildcats rolled to a 92-48 victory.

Southern Cal Coach George Raveling praised Olson for doing "a yeoman's coaching job."

Raveling said he thought it must be difficult for Olson to get his team to play at 100 percent every game at this stage of the season, "because what is there left?"

600 UA tickets remain

The Sun Devil ticket office reports there are still 600 student tickets remaining for the ASU/UofA basketball game on Feb. 25 at the Activity Center.

Tickets for the general public against the top-ranked Wildcats have been sold out for weeks. Ticket office personnel urge students to buy the tickets as soon as possible to avoid being shut out.

The tickets, priced at $3.50 each, are available to full-time ASU students with a validated ASU ID at the ticket office on the west side of the Activity Center.

Higgins' 5 hits lead Devils to victory

By DEAN GYORGY
State Press

Kevin Higgins went 5-for-5 as the Sun Devil baseball team downed Chapman College, 10-6, on Wednesday at Packard Stadium.

Second-ranked ASU raised its record to 16-1, including eight victories in a row. This year's team is the best out of the blocks since the 1978 club, led by Hubie Brooks and Bob Horner, which went 17-1.

As was the case in Tuesday's victory over the Panthers (6-5-1), the Sun Devils wasted no time in taking the lead.

John Finn drew a walk to open the ASU first inning. Coach Jim Brock then called for the hit-and-run, and Higgins hit the hole, sending a single to right that put runners on at first and third with nobody out.

Brock said the hit-and-run will be used often this year, as the Devils become more aggressive on the basepaths. With speedy Pat Listach hitting ninth, and Finn batting first, Higgins will get many opportunities on the "hit" side of the play.

"I like it," Higgins said, "because there's no hesitation. You know you're swinging away."

"He's got extremely good bat control," Brock said, "so he's not going to swing through and leave us hanging very often."

Mike Burrola followed Higgins with a double to the gap in left-center that put the Devils on the board.

Steve Willis then singled down the line in left for his first of two RBI on the day. The hit brought his hitting-streak to 10 games.

ASU took a 4-0 lead into the second, when

A Chapman player slides into the base to avoid a pick-off attempt by Sun Devil first baseman Steve Willis. ASU won Wednesday's game, 10-6. The team travels to California on Friday to play UCLA.

Jack Bessley/State Press

the bottom/top of the order worked their magic again.

Listach led off with a hit to shallow center field, where most hitters would be content with a big turn at first. But Listach never slowed up, and he went diving into second with a double.

Finn then singled him home. He has been swinging a hot bat, going 8 for his last 14.

"As a little man, and the lead-off hitter, my job is to get on base," Finn said. "But whenever you get a chance to knock in a few runs, that's exciting."

Higgins brought Finn around to make it 6-0. It was the second of his five hits. No Sun Devil had gone 5-for-5 since Rick Morris did it against Lubbock Christian in 1986.

"I once had a 6-for-6 day in high school," Higgins said. "But today overshadows that by far."

ASU starter Gordy Farmer had a comfortable cushion to sit on and, outside of an unearned run in the third inning, he was strong into the fifth.

Farmer (0-0) only managed 4 2/3 innings before being knocked out, so he did not reach the necessary five innings needed for a victory. But during that time, he struck out a career-high seven men, while walking five.

Los Angeles road trip crucial for Sun Devils

By CHRIS DORSEY
State Press

When your car is in desperate need of a tune-up it relies upon the expertise of Mr. Goodwrench. In this case, the ASU basketball team is the automobile and Coach Steve Patterson is the mechanic.

ASU is in need of several changes in spark and personnel, and Patterson must correct these problems in order to earn victories at USC and UCLA, this weekend.

The Sun Devils (13-10, 6-7 Pac-10) have been struggling of late. Patterson's crew has dropped seven of their last 10 games, including three straight.

Currently, ASU stands alone in sixth-place, two games behind the Bruins (10-12, 5-6).

UCLA will be the Devils' first test of the crucial roadtrip. ASU must beat the Bruins in order to keep in contention for postseason play.

In the last meeting between the two schools, UCLA humiliated the Sun Devils on national television, 94-81, in Tempe.

Sophomore center Mark Becker had a career night against the Bruins, missing a triple double by one rebound. He finished the evening scoring 19 points, pulling down nine rebounds and distributing 10 assists.

However, Becker has missed practice this week due to bronchitis. This will hurt ASU as the team will miss his 9.3 points and 5.6 rebounds per-game. The Sun Devils will also be without the vital experience he lends to the team.

Patterson could call upon young center Emory Lewis. Lewis, a 6-10 freshman, gives the Sun Devils added height to play along with 6-7 Trent Edwards and 6-7 Eric Holloway.

Lewis came off the bench last week to score eight points and haul in five rebounds.

The frontline is scoring 55.9 of the team's 77.8 points a game. Holloway accounts for 14.8 points a clip while junior John Jerome is averaging 9.3 points a game.

But this weekend will be a tough one. ASU has only pulled off one win in the last five meetings; that coming at Pauley Pavilion.

Last year at UCLA, Devil guard Arthur Thomas hit a three-point basket to beat the Bruins, 67-64. Patterson and

The drive for a National Championship by the men's tennis team hit a roadblock this weekend in Southern California.

The Sun Devils, 6-3, were undefeated until they met UCLA on Friday. The team lost all its singles matches and declined to play out the doubles matches.

Coach Lou Belken gave the reasoning; "If one coach does not want to play the rest of the match, they don't play it. But the match has to be clinched up to that point.

We had three matches over the weekend so we wanted to stay rested."

Belken said that UCLA is a very tough team to beat at home.

"Stanford hasn't won at UCLA," he said, "and they've won five of the last nine national championships."

On Saturday, ASU played sixth-ranked USC, a team Belken considers to be the best in the country.

"The better-ranked teams have some injuries right now," Belken said. "USC has the healthy players."

The Sun Devils lost to the Trojans, 6-1, and played only one doubles match. In that match, Mike Holten and Brian Gyetko lost to the No. 1-ranked team of Scott Melville and Eric Amend, 6-4, 7-5.

The current rankings have ASU at No. 23; their first ranking of the season.

"We're a little disappointed about the rankings," Belken said. "But you have to start somewhere."

The Sun Devils' top doubles team of Holten and Gyetko is eighth in the country. It is the first time any ASU players have been ranked in the top-10.

On Monday, ASU lost to fifth-ranked Pepperdine 7-2.

Belken said that, despite the losses, he was encouraged by the team's play over the weekend.

"We were in all three matches," Belken said. "They were just tougher on the big points than we were. We hope to mature into those types of situations very quickly."

"Even though we lost three I feel it was productive."

Belken also said that the players learned some important things about themselves.

"One, we learned that we wanted to win," Belken said. "And two, we saw that we could compete against them at their own place. They have to come to us next."

Belken said that as good as the Sun Devils are at the top singles positions, the whole team needs to play well.

"We thought we were as good as them at one through four," Belken said. "We played the best in the country and competed really well."

"We have to have great efforts at the bottom (five and six). We'll feel a lot stronger with (Dan) Marting in there."

Marting has been out the first part of the season due to a pulled hamstring.

The team's major strength was not given a chance to shine.

"We thought we would do really well at doubles," Belken said. "Unfortunately, we didn't get to play much there."

No. 1-ranked ASU badminton team confident for nationals

By CHRIS PIRKEY
State Press

Badminton is HOT at ASU. It is more than hot, it is sizzling. ASU has the No. 1 collegiate team, the top man and the top woman player in the nation. It looks like ASU will again be a force to reckon with at the badminton Collegiate Nationals.

ASU coach Carol Fisher is still in charge of the best team in the college ranks, despite the fact that she lost six players to graduation last year. Liz Aronsohn is the top woman for the Devils and Benny Lee is the top man. Assistant coach Nina Lolk said she expects the Sun Devils to compete well March 4-6 at the Collegiate Nationals in Philadelphia.

"As far as we know we shouldn't face anybody that could challenge Benny and Liz," Lolk said. "It (the competition) should pretty much be between the people on our team."

Aronsohn, a Swedish import, is looking forward to the nationals and is not at all bothered by her No. 1 status.

"I don't think about (it) that much," Aronsohn said. "I just enjoy playing and I'm happy I'm here. My goal is to be No. 1 in the nation."

Lolk said the team has been working on conditioning drills to prepare for the nationals. Sprints, running and net drills are among the conditioning exercises the team has been emphasizing this season. Lolk said it is mandatory that players be able to move quickly around the court. She feels they have made improvements on these skills since last fall.

"It's real important to move and use the same steps from corner to corner and from side to side," Lolk said. "We're doing it all of the time; (we are) always running around the court."

While teams across the nation might not provide stiff competition for ASU, some members said that it is definitely provided by other people on the team. Lolk said the men are very competitive with each other, while the women are not.

"There's a big gap between Liz and the other girls," Lolk said. "The men are much more even, closer to each other."

Aronsohn said women get along and support each other off the court as well as on, and feels the team members have good relationships with one another.

"We get the chance to learn things from each other," Aronsohn said. "It will be fun going to Philadelphia as a team."

Joel Kiernan, a member of the men's team, said that the men are "very competitive" but that they get along well with each other. He also expects the team to fare well in Philadelphia and is confident they will win.

The next and last stop for the badminton team is the U.S. Closed Nationals, March 28 through April 2 in San Jose, Calif.

Peggy Fleming remembers feelings of 20 years ago

CALGARY, Alberta (AP) — When Peggy Fleming watches the U.S. women figure skaters, she remembers her own feelings just before the performance that won America's only Olympic gold medal 20 years ago: cool as ice on the outside, screaming butterflies on the inside.

"I look at the tapes. I look calm as anything," Fleming said on Wednesday. "Inside, I was just going, 'AUGHHHHHHH! Get me out of here! Yikes! Yikes!' But I knew I couldn't leave the building until I'd been through my routine."

And when she was finished, she had struck gold — not just at Grenoble, but for the next two decades, and counting.

For years after she turned professional, her name packed the house at ice shows. She was the first skater to do a command performance at the White House. She performed with U.S. skaters in their first trip to China. She designed a line of skating clothes. She became a figure skating analyst for ABC Sports and a spokesperson for the California Raisin and the National Pork Producers Council.

This to the tune of a reported $1 million a year since 1968. "It is amazing," Fleming said between sips of cabbage soup and Earl Grey tea. "I'm amazed all the time, from my background, my family, and not having money and being in this expensive sport. It's a difficult sport — emotionally and financially."

"And I was basically very shy, and ended up being in a sport where you have to be in front of all these people. It just knocks me over."

She knocks people over, too. In the glamorous world of figure skating, no one is more effortlessly glamorous than Peggy Fleming. It's in the eyes — wide, blue and expressive — and the flawless skin, courtesy of heredity and her dermatologist husband, Greg Jenkins.

There's more to her than that. Beneath the sequins that glittered before the ABC cameras on the night of the pairs finals, Fleming wore long underwear. Scratch the superstar, and find a dedicated wife and mother who would just as soon help 11-year-old son Andrew with a school project as run off to the Olympics.

But 1968 was another time. That was the year the 19-year-old from San Jose, Calif., already a two-time world champion, proved again that she was the absolute best.

"You can't hide too much as a figure skater as to what kind of a person you are, because it's such an expressive sport, it really reveals a lot about you," said Fleming, now 39. "And it's generally right — what you see out there is the way they really are."

Scott Hamilton is fun-loving, Katarina Witt is sweet as strudel, and Debi Thomas has an off-the-wall sense of humor. Peggy Fleming is crystal over steel, leather under lace.

"You can't see it on my face and you can't see it in my actions. I just do it. It's just there," Fleming said of her competitive spirit. "It's subtle."

company will be looking to perform the same task. But this UCLA team differs from last year, it is missing All-America forward Reggie Miller.

The Bruins are led by Trevor Wilson. The 6-8 sophomore tore ASU apart in Tempe, scoring 24 points and collecting 14 rebounds.

Even if the Sun Devils can contain Wilson, the UCLA backcourt can also pose a problem.

Bruin playmaker Jerome "Pooh" Richardson is leading the team with 140 assists, a 6.6 mark per contest. He is also scoring 12.7 points and adding in 5.2 rebounds a game.

"UCLA is a very powerful team; a very dangerous team," Patterson said. "They are always better at home and making a bid for the tourney."

The Sun Devils will complete the roadtrip at USC where they will meet the Trojans.

USC (5-16, 3-9) is struggling as it winds the year down. The Trojans are tied for last place with their disappointing record.

"USC is still struggling, but they are a team I respect," Patterson said. "In our first meeting they were very physical. They have a lot of inside strength."

In the first meeting, the Sun Devils slipped past USC, 78-74, after coming from behind.

Like ASU, the Trojans have dropped three straight games.

The Sun Devils will be looking to get back on the winning track and complete a successful season.

Soviets hand Americans 7-5 Olympic hockey loss

CALGARY, Alberta (AP) — The U.S. hockey team ran out of miracles Wednesday night, losing 7-5 to the Soviet Union in their first Winter Olympic meeting since the stunning American victory at the 1980 Lake Placid Games.

This one fell just short for the United States, which rallied from a 6-2 deficit to 6-5 but couldn't get even, despite outshooting the high-powered Soviets 12-4 in the final period.

The loss left the Americans on the brink of elimination from making the medals round, with a 1-2 record and having to beat Norway and West Germany to even have a chance. The defending gold medalist Soviets are now 3-0 and virtually assured a spot in the medals round.

The top three teams from each of the two pools make the medals round.

With Vaicheslev Fetisov, their all-star defenseman from their main Red Army club, leading the way with two goals and three assists, the Soviets continued the domination of Americans in international play.

The victory was the sixth in eight meetings with the United States in Olympic play since the Soviets played their first Olympic game in 1956. The only time the Americans have beaten the Soviets in the Olympics came in the gold-medal winning years of 1960 and 1980, the last time a dramatic 4-3 victory that was coined the "Miracle on Ice" at Lake Placid, N.Y.

The Soviets have never lost to the Americans at the World Championships, holding a 22-0 advantage.

The Soviets looked every bit the team that U.S. Coach Dave Peterson called the strongest in the Winter Olympics.

Fetisov set up Sergei Makarov at 7:23 and then Alexei Kasatonov at 9:41 to help the Soviets grab a 2-0 lead after one period.

Fetisov also set up Kasatonov's second goal at 8:58 of the second period and later scored himself at 18:46 to give the Soviets a 6-2 lead after two periods. Both of Kasatonov's goals and the one by Fetisov came on the power play.

The Americans made things interesting on Lane MacDonald's second goal of the game and one by Scott Fusco in the first six minutes of the third period, but the Soviets held on to improve their chances for the six-team medal round and dampening those of the Americans.

Fetisov then scored the clincher when he sailed in from the blue line, split the U.S. defense and put a backhander past Chris Terreri with 2:01 left.

The Soviets have two games left in the preliminary round, against unbeaten West Germany on Friday and third-seeded Czechoslovakia on Sunday.

Zurbriggen falls, loses quest of 5 gold medals

CALGARY, Alberta (AP) — Pirmin Zurbriggen lost his shot at a second gold medal in a tangle of skis and poles, and the Americans tangled with the Soviets Wednesday in their first Winter Olympic hockey summit since the miracle of 1980.

Unrelenting winds that reached 50 mph wrought havoc on the Olympic schedule, delaying the double-gold quest of Matti Nykanen, the "Flying Finn." Nykanen was going after an unprecedented second victory in ski jumping when the 90-meter team event was postponed until Thursday.

The final two runs of the women's luge also were postponed.

The Soviet Union picked up two more medals — a silver and bronze from its women's cross-country team — to run its count to nine. That's six more than Finland, Switzerland and the Netherlands.

The United States still has just one medal, a pairs figure skating bronze by Jill Watson and Peter Oppegard that could have been a silver but for Watson's costly pratfall. Speed skater Eric Flaim almost got the United States its second medal in the 5,000-meter speed skating event. He missed the bronze by 1.17 seconds, finishing fourth.

Zurbriggen had only to finish the second run of a slalom race to have earned his second gold, in a new Olympic event called the combined, a downhill-slalom hybrid. Instead, he fell when he hooked a gate with his right ski, and that ended any talk of an Alpine sweep.

"I felt I was skiing well, and I was very surprised to see the gates between my skis," the 25-year-old Swiss said. "I am disappointed, but the downhill was my main goal, and I still have more chances for gold."

Zurbriggen, one of the most versatile skiers in the world, won the traditional downhill gold medal on Monday, then finished first in the combined downhill Tuesday. And talk was: Is this the next Jean-Claude Killy? Can Zurbriggen sweep all the Alpine events, as Killy did in 1968 and as Toni Sailer did in 1956?

He provided the answer Wednesday, but with the addition of two more Alpine events, Zurbriggen still could win four golds, one more than either Killy or Sailer. Standing in his way will be the Italian, Alberto Tomba, the best slalom skier in the world and the man battling Zurbriggen for the World Cup title.

Zurbriggen was tied for sixth after the first run of the slalom, and that would have been plenty to win the combined gold. He passed the midway point of the second run with the fifth-best time, but with 25 seconds gone in the run, he hooked his right ski around a gate.

His left leg slid out as he careened through another gate. Desperately trying to regain his balance, he fell, crashed through several more gates and rolled over on his back.
