

U.S., Iran conflict continues in Persian Gulf

American forces destroy 2 Iranian oil platforms

From Staff and Wire

MANAMA, Bahrain — American forces destroyed two of Iran's Persian Gulf oil platforms Monday, sank or damaged four attack boats and disabled two frigates that fired missiles at American planes, U.S. officials reported.

Iranian naval forces responded with attacks on Arab oil facilities; U.S., British and Cypriot commercial vessels, and a press helicopter chartered by NBC.

No American casualties were reported, but Defense Secretary Frank C. Carlucci said a Cobra attack helicopter with two crew members was late in returning to a Navy cruiser and a search had begun.

Monday's conflict between the United States and Iran was the most intense since President Reagan ordered last summer that Navy forces be strengthened in the gulf, where Iran and Iraq have been at war since September 1980.

Washington called destruction of the oil platforms a "measured response" to the explosion of a mine, allegedly planted by Iran, that blew a hole in an American frigate last week and wounded 10 sailors.

Reagan said Monday's operations were a warning to Iran that "we will protect our ships and, if they threaten us, they'll pay a price. We undertook this action to make sure the Iranians have no illusions about the cost of irresponsible behavior."

Iran's official Islamic Republic News Agency said there were deaths and injuries aboard the platform but it did not say how many.

An ASU professor, who also is an American foreign policy expert, was critical of the U.S. attack on the Iranians, but said it only agitates already tenuous relations the two countries share.

"This is a (U.S.) tit-for-tat coercive policy," political science professor Patrick McGowan said. "It (the policy) didn't work in Vietnam."

Although the fighting between the U.S. and Iran in the gulf was the most intensive to date, McGowan said it will not lead to a direct war between the two countries.

"I do not see support for getting into a war with Iran," he said.

But Iran claimed U.S. helicopter gunships fired at Iranian troops in the southern Faw peninsula and Tehran radio said,

An Iranian fire-fighting tugboat extinguishes the Iranian-owned oilform Sirri after U.S. warships attacked it. Earlier in the day, U.S. warships also attacked Sassan oil platform. The attacks came two days after the U.S. warship USS Samuel B. Roberts struck a mine injuring 10 sailors.

"American forces have entered the war."

In Washington, Pentagon spokesman Fred Hoffman denied the Iranian claims. No U.S. military forces have been involved with Iraqi units, he said.

Iran is not capable of mounting an effective attack on U.S. forces in the gulf and likely will retaliate with more terrorist incidents, McGowan said.

Monday marked the second week terrorists held a Kuwait Airways jumbo jet and 35 hostages captive. The plane, carrying 112 passengers, first landed in Iran, where 57 hostages were released and additional hijackers reportedly boarded the plane.

On Reagan's instructions, at about 9 a.m., two groups of Navy warships struck the Iranian oil platforms Sassan and Sirri-D, 100 miles apart in the southern Persian Gulf.

They gave the Iranians advance warning to evacuate the platforms, which have been used as speedboat bases for attacks on neutral shipping. Reagan ordered the attacks as retaliation for the mine that holed the frigate USS Samuel B.

ASU West officials begin plans for 'core campus'

By SHERI JOHNSON
State Press

With the completion and dedication of ASU West's Fletcher Library in March, school officials have turned their sights on future buildings for the "core campus" at 4701 W. Thunderbird Road in Glendale.

The campus, claiming 13 acres on the 300-acre site, is scheduled for completion by January 1991. It will consist of seven buildings, including the library and a physical plant already completed, said Jay Canchola, assistant to the vice president at ASU West.

The 11,000 square foot physical plant, the first building to be completed, provides power and cold water to the library and is set up to service the entire "core campus," Canchola said.

"We spent lots of time during planning to try to anticipate growth of the campus," he said.

When the campus is complete, it will form a U-shape around a courtyard, Canchola said.

"The buildings will surround a large lawn and landscaped area," he said.

The completed campus will facilitate 10,000 students, Canchola said, although initially he estimates there will be about 5,000 students enrolled.

There are about 3,200 students enrolled this semester at ASU West, with campuses at Montebello, Alhambra and the American Graduate School of International Management, he said.

Construction began in December for one of two classrooms planned for the site.

Scheduled to be completed by January 1989, the three-story, 72,000 square foot building will cost $5.5 million and features a 200-seat tiered auditorium, Canchola said.

"Its (the auditorium's) original intent is going to be for a classroom lecture hall," he said. "My guess is that it will get more use than that. We're already getting requests from various organizations outside of ASU West to use our facilities for meetings."

Unlike the library, which is constructed of brick and limestone, the classroom will be steel-frame construction with a brick and limestone facade, he said.

Canchola said construction of the remaining buildings is scheduled to begin this year.

"We're going to start construction on the rest of these buildings within, probably, the next six to eight months," he said.

The buildings will include a 59,000 square foot classroom laboratory/computer center, a 92,000 square foot Student Services Building, an 83,000 square foot Faculty Office Building and an 80,000 square foot Administration Building.

Report cites problems in ASU academic advising

By VICKIE CHACHERE
State Press

Academic advising at ASU continues to be a severe problem for students because of inadequate resources and a lack of faculty commitment, the Arizona Students Association annual undergraduate education report said.

The group also is calling for the formation of a task force composed of administrators, faculty and students to investigate advisement practices at ASU.

ASA, a student lobbying organization, said that although there have been improvements in academic advising during the past several years, students still do not receive adequate advising because there are too few advisers in each college.

Furthermore, professors either do not have enough time to meet with students, devote themselves to research or public service or opt not to advise students because they are not properly rewarded for aiding students, the report said.

The report, which will be presented to the Arizona Board of Regents Thursday night and includes recommendations for improvements at NAU and UofA, also recommends that:

- The regents continue to emphasize improving the quality of graduate teaching assistants and continue to monitor ASU's testing of foreign teaching assistants for English proficiency and use of teaching assistants in freshman- and sophomore-level classes.

- ASU officials increase funding for the general studies curriculum to offset increasing enrollments.

- The regents continue to direct the University in monitoring the quality of introductory math and English classes, while allowing the programs more money to hire instructors and keep classes small.

- Further centralization of student services in order to increase efficiency, effectiveness and ease for students.

- Set up a formal review process for minority recruitment and increase financial aid to attract minority students to the University.

- Re-evaluate decision packages in the University's 1988-89 state budget request and give priority to those funding requests that impact the quality of undergraduate education.

Mick Dalrymple, executive director of ASA, said some of the areas targeted in this year's report are the same problems ASA has been asking the board and ASU to solve for the past three years.

"I think things are being done, but I think things move slowly," Dalrymple said. "From the universities' standpoint, trying to improve a whole university... takes a long time."

"The changing of attitudes takes a long time."

Israeli court convicts Demjanjuk of Nazi war crimes against Jews

JERUSALEM (AP) — Retired Ohio autoworker John Demjanjuk was convicted Monday of Nazi war crimes by an Israeli court that said there was no doubt he was "Ivan the Terrible," a death camp guard who ran gas chambers that killed 850,000 Jews.

The three-judge court convicted Demjanjuk of the four counts against him: war crimes, crimes against the Jewish people, crimes against humanity and crimes against persecuted people.

Demjanjuk, 68, listened to the guilty verdict from a cot in a cell next to the courtroom. Six police officers had carried him there feet first after he said he was unable to sit down because of a back injury.

He was the second person to be convicted of war crimes in Israel. Adolf Eichmann, architect of Adolf Hitler's "Final Solution" for the extermination of European Jewry, was hung in 1962, the only person to have been executed in Israel's 40-year history.

The Ukrainian-born Demjanjuk, who lived in suburban Cleveland before his extradition to Israel in 1986, could face the death penalty when he is sentenced April 25. Observers have said it was more likely he would receive a life prison term.

"We determine decisively and without hesitation or doubt that the accused John Demjanjuk who is on trial before us is Ivan, known as 'Ivan the Terrible,' the operator of gas chambers," presiding Judge Dov Levine said.

Defense attorneys have said they would appeal the verdict, which came after the court spent 11 hours reading the 450-page summation. Before it was announced, Demjanjuk's attorney and relatives said they expected a conviction.

"These are old-fashioned hanging judges," said Demjanjuk's son, John Jr. "It's a disgrace to the word justice."

"The writing is on the wall," added Demjanjuk's son-in-law, Ed Nishnic. "This is going to go down in history as the most lopsided case ever conducted anywhere in the world."

Dukakis predicts New York victory; Jackson, Gore ask voters for upset

NEW YORK (AP) — Michael Dukakis predicted Monday he would post a "great victory" in the New York primary that would place him firmly on the road to the Democratic presidential nomination, but Jesse Jackson and Albert Gore Jr. exhorted their supporters to deliver a poll-defying upset.

In its final 24 hours, the campaign was nothing if not blunt. New York Mayor Ed Koch, a Gore supporter who has sharply criticized Jackson in recent days, was branded a "lunatic" by Jackson's campaign manager.

University expenditures remain constant

ASU vice president for research expects increase in future levels

By KRISTI ELLIS
State Press

Total expenditures for research activities is at a constant level and matches that of last year despite an increase in the number of grants, ASU's vice president for research told the Faculty Senate Monday.

"People are just not spending money," Henry Reeves said. Total expenditures in research activities through February 1988 was $20.1 million.

Reeves anticipates an increase in those expenditures. English professor Bert Bender asked Reeves if the only important research is that which brings in money.

Reeves answered: "If you want to think about becoming a 'Research 1' university, by definition you have to discuss it in terms of dollars."

However, Reeves also pointed out that his office has done things in the past year to indicate that money is not the only thing it is interested in.

For example, last year he said his office gave a substantial amount of money to establish programs in the College of Fine Arts and the College of Business.

The programs receive little money from federal agencies, he said.

Reeves gave a partial breakdown of grants that have been awarded to the University this year:

•$25.5 million for all grant contracts, constituting a 10 percent increase over last year's $23.2 million.

•$19.3 million in total research grant contracts awarded during the current fiscal year, which is a 23 percent increase from the $15.3 million awarded in fiscal year 1987.

The College of Liberal Arts and the College of Engineering and Applied Sciences make up 96.1 percent of total research grant expenditures.

In other business:

•The Senate announced its officers for the forthcoming year: Chair-elect of the Faculty Assembly will be Harold C. White, Department of Management; Secretary of the Faculty Assembly will be Paul Wong, School of Social Work.

•Karrin Kunasek, president of Associated Students announced that ASASU will give a report on undergraduate education to the Board of Regents this week.

The report found that there has been significant improvement in graduate teaching assistant programs, general studies programs and student services.

However, areas such as advising and minority recruitment and retention need a lot of improvement, according to the report.

Kunasek also said that undergraduate recruitment of top scholars is in dire need of an increase in support by academic affairs.

ASU professor receives awards for cancer, AIDS research

By MICHELLE ALLMAN
State Press

ASU chemistry Professor G. Robert Pettit was selected to receive the 1988 Chemical Pioneer Award for his work in cancer research and also received an $80,000 grant to assist in his AIDS research.

Pettit, who heads ASU's Cancer Research Institute, has been at ASU since 1965. During the past 23 years he has built a reputation as one of the nation's leading disease chemists.

Pettit is one of only 100 chemists ever to receive the Chemical Pioneer Award from the American Institute of Chemists. Other recipients have included Carl Marvel, Glenn Seaborg, Carl Djerassi, Paul Flory, Linus Pauling and Herbert Brown.

William Glausinger, chairman of the ASU department of chemistry, said, "His (Pettit's) selection ... this year brings further distinction to his world-renowned program for cancer research and reflects very positively on the Cancer Research Institute."

ASU's Cancer Research Institute is devoted to the "isolation and purification of naturally occurring anti-cancer compounds, especially from marine plants and invertebrates (which are) known to be generally free from cancer," Pettit said.

The AIC selects no more than four chemists annually from a roster of those who have had a major impact on advances on the chemical profession. Pettit will receive his award at the AIC's 65th annual conference Sept. 24 in Long Beach, Calif.

The AIC cited Pettit "for his pioneering contributions to the chemistry of natural products and chemotherapy, encompassing the isolation, structural elucidation and synthesis of promising anti-cancer agents from marine organisms and terrestrial plants."

Pettit's AIDS research also focuses on the use of oceanic organisms in the development of drugs to combat the disease.

The alternatives: It's OK to say 'No' to Jesse Jackson

Ed Schubert
Asst. Opinion Editor

The Democratic National Convention won't be for another couple of months. And it will be held in Atlanta, not Chicago.

Nevertheless, every breeze that wafts from the east brings to our nostrils the odor of a political slaughterhouse.

The remaining Democratic candidates have spent the last year or so crisscrossing the country proclaiming their political idealism. Now, they are talking and acting like savage political animals who devour raw meat by the pailful.

Perhaps this is what the American people like about the Democratic Party — it satisfies a basic, primordial need for violence.

If Michael Dukakis wins today's New York Democratic primary he will very probably win the nomination. But the Democratic Party is still faced with the thorny problem: What to do with Jesse Jackson?

In two previous columns, I had taken the position that Jackson deserves the vice-presidential nomination by virtue of his good showing in the primaries.

But now that the showdown approaches, I hereby recant this heresy.

As an American, I find that I care about this country too much to want a man as unqualified and potentially dangerous as Jesse Jackson one heartbeat away from the presidency.

And as a Democrat, I find myself too partisan to want to see the ticket shot down in flames by all those other Americans who are too patriotic to trust Jackson with the nation's second highest office.

There's no reason to do it. If Dukakis wins the nomination, he will have the same prerogative as any other nominee: to request of the delegates a running mate of his choosing, or to leave the decision to the convention. There has never been a rule that the runner-up must become the running mate.

Andy Young and Jesse Jackson, both aides to Dr. Martin Luther King, split company shortly after King's martyrdom in Memphis.

Jackson's subsequent career has been marked by shameless self promotion, which seems to have begun the moment the bullet hit Dr. King.

Jackson has always claimed to have cradled the dying King in his arms on the Memphis motel's second story balcony, and to have been the last person to speak with assassination — King chiding Jackson for not wearing a tie.

Shortly after King died a crucial, emergency meeting of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference was called. Jackson was not present. He had flown to Chicago, there to appear the following day on the "Today" show and before the city council, on both occasions wearing a shirt he claimed was stained with the blood of the murdered civil rights leader.

Jackson's exploitation of the assassination has not endeared him to the King family. Coretta Scott King has steadfastly refused to endorse Jackson. On the Sunday before the Super Tuesday primary, she and Jackson stood side by side at a memorial service for King — Mrs. King coolly averting her gaze from Jackson the whole time.

While Jackson has spent two decades basking in his self-created identity as King's successor, Andrew Young — who was much closer to King, and whom most of those close to King considered to be the true heir — has been making solid, incremental gains.

Elected to Congress in 1972, Young was chosen by President Carter as the U.S. ambassador to the United Nations in 1977. Young's administrative experience as Atlanta's mayor, a post he has held since 1982, combined with his background in Congress and the United Nations, render him an ideal Democratic vice presidential candidate.

What an irony it would be if Jackson, having seized King's legacy through showmanship and hype, should have paved the way to the White House for King's true, more modest heir.

'Perhaps this is what the American people like about the Democratic Party — it satisfies a basic, primordial need for violence.'

However, if Dukakis wins the nomination, he must make his choice within certain constraints. If the Democratic Party is to keep faith with the black people within its ranks, Dukakis' running mate must be a black man or woman.

And if the party is to keep faith with the nation as a whole, that black vice presidential candidate must be a man or a woman with qualifications to indicate that he or she could walk into the Oval Office and lead the free world at a moment's notice.

Fortunately, we have no shortage of people who hold such qualifications. We have Barbara Jordan of Texas and L.A.'s quietly competent mayor, Tom Bradley.

Or the host of the convention — Atlanta Mayor Andrew Young.

And what an irony that would be.

him. Jackson's intent in all this to suggest he is King's spiritual successor.

But recent scrutiny by the national press — such as an in-depth story in the current (April 11) Washington Post Weekly Magazine — casts Jackson's role in an entirely different light.

In the first place, Jackson was not on the balcony when King was shot. That famous photo of King standing on the balcony, flanked by Jackson and Ralph Abernathy, was taken the day before the assassination. When the shots rang out, Jackson was standing with a group of King's supporters in the parking lot below the balcony. And there is no conclusive evidence that Jackson ever made it up on the balcony to King.

As for Jackson's claim to be the last person to have spoken to King, they did exchange a few words just before the

Unions and unity

Editor:

It seems that Ed Schubert has a problem with economic democracy. He has condemned trade unions in general and the American Federation of Teachers and University Employees Local 2050 in particular on the basis of untrue statements (April 15, 1988).

First he states that no one relishes asking President Galgano for permission to work at ASU, implying that this is what would be required for a worker to be employed if ASU became a closed shop. Membership in the AFTUE does not require President Galgano's approval.

Any member has the right to recruit other members, and if anyone in the union objects to the addition of a member, a vote is taken, and majority rules. Many union members, myself included, value President Galgano's advice and opinions because of his experience with union work, but he is not a dictator — he can be overruled by majority vote.

Schubert also complains about excessive dues. The AFTUE dues structure is based upon ability to pay. Student workers pay monthly dues of $5.25, graduate assistants and staff $10.50, and professors $21.00. Furthermore, dues are not imposed by the national union but are decided by the locals. Any change in dues must receive the approval of the majority of the membership. Since the local membership sets the dues, if Schubert calls this union victimization of employees, he would have to conclude that the workers have chosen to victimize themselves.

As for "voodoo economics," the figures I presented prove that the money necessary for $15.83 per hour is present in our economy. It's just a matter of redistributing it. A combination of taxing the wealthy to increase the pay of state employees (like Mr. Schubert) and either rigidly enforced price ceilings or indexing the minimum wage to rise automatically with the Consumer Price Index would enable such a minimum wage to be universal and prevent it from falling victim to inflationary retaliation from big business.

Such an increase to $15.83 per hour would be unrealistic to expect from the legislators now. The important thing is to campaign for the currently proposed increase and to ask our congressmen to implement a system to index the minimum wage to either the mean wage or the Consumer Price Index.

Schubert again goes out of his way to announce that I am a member of the Young Communist League. This is true. The Young Communist League is an open organization, and I have nothing to hide, but since Schubert is critical of my double duties, I must point out the irony of this being written by a Zionist — one holding and preaching a philosophy which is internationally recognized as racist — associating himself with the supposedly non-racist and equal opportunity State Press. A cliché about people living in glass houses comes to mind.

Unions are not perfect, and sometimes they fail, especially when the workers do not support them or in states with right-to-work (right-to-scab) laws, but when considering the feeble bargaining power of one worker against a large corporation and the past and present success of unions, they deserve the support of the workers. While unions may not succeed every time, they succeed far more often than workers going it alone.

Unity is the only way.

'Simon says' while Jackson screams double standard

Mike Royko
Tribune Media Services

Four years ago, Jesse Jackson went to the Democratic convention as a loser. He had run in many primaries but picked up only a modest 465 delegates.

But he still wanted to be a player in the big political game, so he took his small stack of chips to the convention and played them for all they were worth.

Give him credit. Jackson accomplished his goal. Despite having few chips, he was in the game. He had his name placed in nomination, he strutted and preened, was treated like big heat by the news media, and the Democrats wound up letting him make a prime-time convention speech on TV.

Now it is four years later. And we have another loser who wants to go to the convention and still be a player.

This time it is Sen. Paul Simon, the bow-tie man from Illinois.

Simon has suspended his campaign. He's tapped for money, and the voters are yawning. But he hasn't officially dropped out. So under the party's new rules, he gets to keep his 170 delegates, most of which he won in Illinois.

Why does he want to keep them? Obviously he doesn't expect the nomination. But he'd like to have some influence at the convention, maybe a small say in who his party's candidate will be.

Sure, he has only a modest stack of chips. But if the game gets wild, as it well might, his little stack could start looking bigger.

Simon wouldn't be the first politician to do this. Throughout the history of political conventions, favorite-son candidates, primary also-rans and others have arrived with a handful of delegates as political leverage.

But suddenly this is not an "honorable" thing to do. Who says so? Jackson says so.

Jackson is miffed because Simon won't formally drop out and surrender his delegates. Of course Jackson is miffed. That's because he would inherit most of Simon's Illinois delegates, having finished second in the Illinois primary.

Jackson now describes the Simon delegates as "delegates which in fact belong to me."

I'm not sure I understand why he considers them as delegates "which in fact" belong to him.

I voted for a Simon delegate who won. It is not my intention that this delegate "belongs" to Jackson. And I'm sure that the many voters of Illinois who voted for Simon delegates didn't intend for them to belong to Jackson.

To be blunt about it, many of those who voted for Simon's delegates did so precisely because they didn't want Jackson representing their interests at the convention.

Jackson's campaign manager, a hired political gun named Gerald Austin, oozed contempt when he talked about Simon and his delegates. He said:

"He (Simon) shouldn't have been a candidate for president. He shouldn't have been in it this long. He's still in it, and now it is becoming an embarrassment for him, not us."

Austin didn't explain why it is an embarrassment for Simon to hold on to his delegates in 1988, yet it wasn't an embarrassment for Jackson to hold on to his in 1984.

And I'm not sure what he meant when he said that Simon shouldn't have been a candidate in the first place. Because Simon didn't make it? In that case, Jackson shouldn't have been a candidate four years ago because he didn't make it, either.

Or is he implying that Simon isn't qualified? True, Simon isn't very pretty, and he doesn't speak in rhymes, but he does have some redeeming qualities.

I've followed the careers of both men for many years. Simon was a respected state legislator and an honest reformer before anyone in Illinois heard of Jesse Jackson.

Later, Simon was elected lieutenant governor and to Congress while Jackson and his Operation Push were shaking down businessmen.

Simon has been an active and valued member of the Democratic Party for most of his life. Jackson is a recent arrival. Until recently, he played political footsie with the Republicans when it suited his purposes.

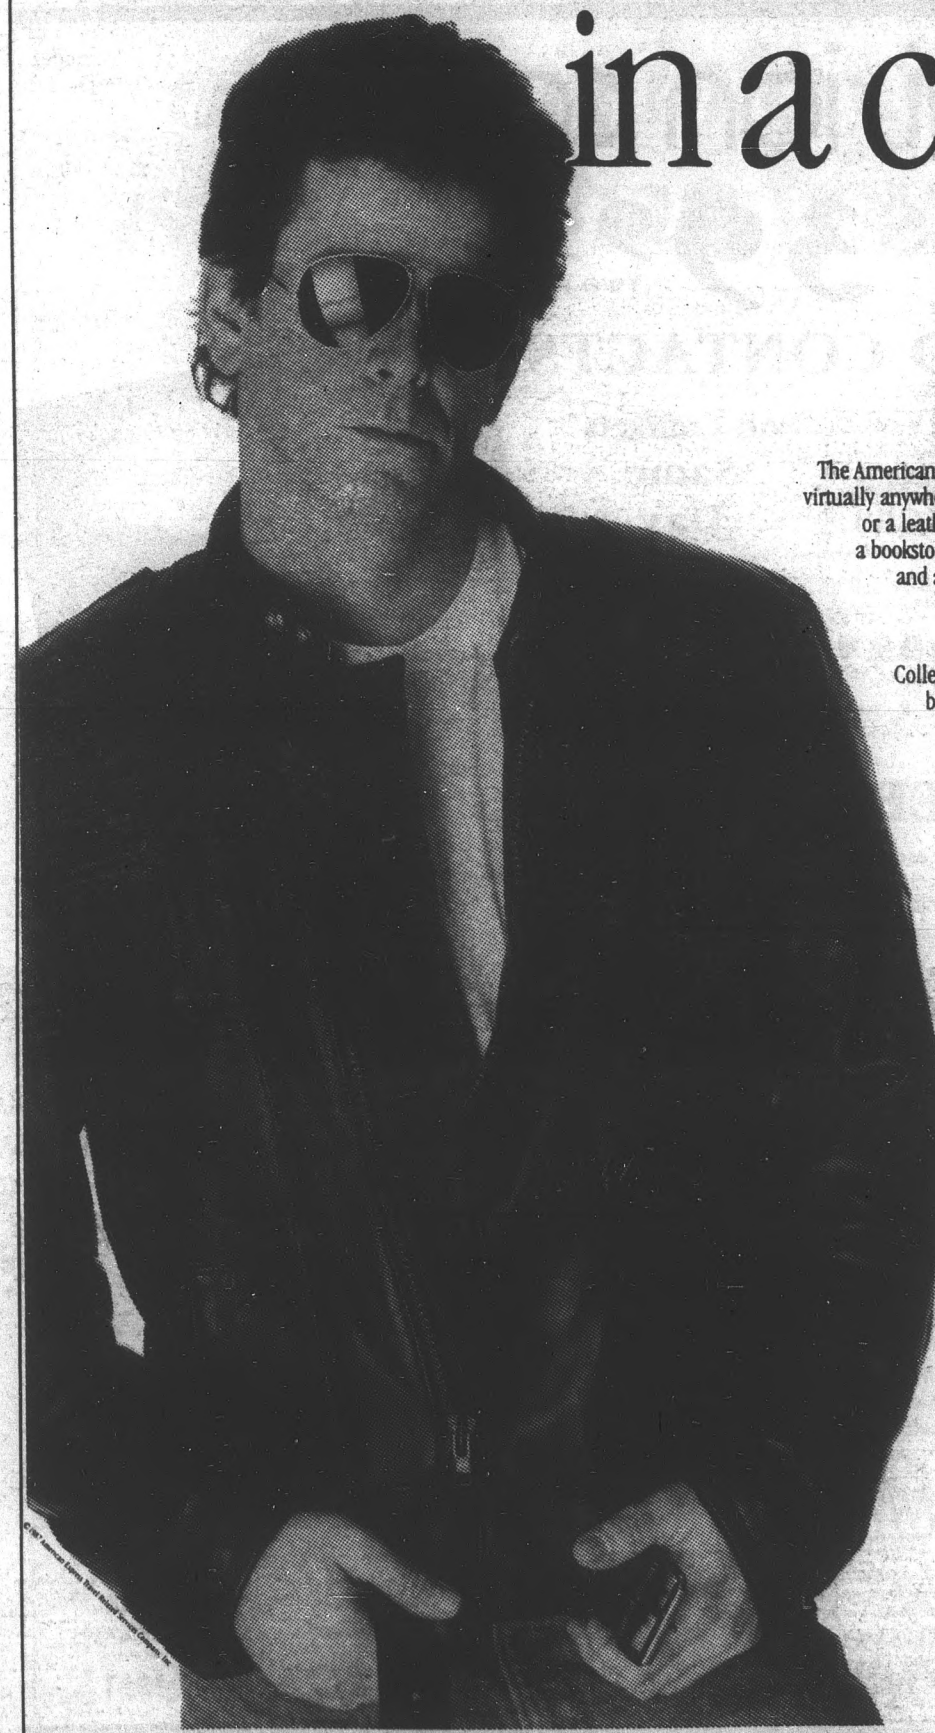

Simon has run for office and won many times. Until Jackson decided the White House would be a nice pad, he hadn't run for anything but the nearest TV camera.

Of their track records, I'd say that Simon has earned the right to have a small voice when the Democrats gather in Atlanta, just as Jackson used his delegates to have a much louder voice four years ago in San Francisco.

Jackson has always liked making up new rules as he goes along. For Simon, he seems to have come up with another one:

Do as I say, not as I did.

Conference sponsors hope to educate public on TB

By MICHELLE ALLMAN
State Press

The Arizona Lung Association and the Arizona Department of Health Services are sponsoring a conference on tuberculosis April 28 and 29 in an effort to educate people who believe the disease is not an issue in the 1980s.

The 1988 Conference on Advances in Tuberculosis Control is primarily focused on the education of health care professionals but is open to the public.

Health officials with Disease Prevention at the ADHS said there is a common misconception among most people that tuberculosis is not a valid health concern in modern society.

"We definitely consider TB an important health issue," said Pat Regan, who handles ADHS tuberculosis records.

"It is not as common as it used to be because of a change in diet and habits, but in 1987 we had 277 cases in Arizona," Regan said.

The Health Services register keeps track of the 7,600 people in Arizona who have or are recovering from tuberculosis, Regan said. Health Services follows patients' progress through treatment.

"Every month, some people drop off the list," she said. "But some are always added."

Monty Roth, ASU's Student Health Center director, said he believes TB is a pertinent issue at ASU.

"We have had some cases — it is pertinent because there are select groups that are more susceptible to tuberculosis," Roth said. "From a public standpoint it is not as serious as it used to be."

At one time people with tuberculosis were told to move to Arizona because the dry climate would aid in recovery. But that has changed, according to Regan.

"The Arizona climate was once considered conducive to recovery," she said. "But now, Arizona isn't better than any other part of the country."

According to the American Lung Association, 15 million Americans are infected with tuberculosis germs. Most who actually get the disease have had the live germs in their bodies for a long time.

The symptoms of TB include a chronic cough, constant tiredness, weakness, unexplained weight loss, loss of appetite and spitting up blood. Health experts recommend that people with these symptoms should see a doctor immediately for a TB test.

Physicians test patients by putting a material called tuberculin on the surface layers of the skin, usually on the forearm.

The place on the skin where the test was made is examined a few days later, and the size and thickness of the mark is noted. From this, doctors can determine if there is significant reaction.

The Student Health Center performs routine skin tests for tuberculosis, Roth said.

Treatment usually does not require hospitalization, according to the American Lung Association. Patients typically receive a combination of several drugs, in most cases to be taken for nine months.

Regan said the goal of Atlanta's Center for Disease Control is to eradicate the disease by the year 2000.

"It is definitely an issue that needs to be addressed," Regan said.

Blue Cross, Blue Shield to take over ASU insurance coverage

By DENISE FISHER
Contributing Writer

ASU students who purchase University medical insurance are covered by Mutual of Omaha, but in August, Blue Cross & Blue Shield of Arizona will take over.

University medical insurance office employees disagree about why the change has been made, but they do agree that Blue Cross & Blue Shield will be beneficial to students.

"My understanding is that Mutual of Omaha's rates are going up higher than the slight increase of rates that will result from going to Blue Cross & Blue Shield," said Steve Hassler, a clerk in the student medical insurance office.

During the 1987-88 school year, the medical insurance cost for a student without dependents was $222; it will be $275 for the coming year.

The difference "has nothing to do with the new insurance company," Shivers said. "It has to do with the rising cost of health care."

Insurance coverage for University students is decided by the Arizona Board of Regents. The board solicited proposals from many different insurance companies and chose Blue Cross & Blue Shield for its coverage and low premium rates, Shivers said.

Monty Roth, director of Student Health and a member of the regents' insurance committee, said that other bids received from insurance companies ranged from $330 to $395.

Students will be able to buy the new coverage Aug. 18 on an annual basis or for the fall semester.

Students who are currently covered by Mutual of Omaha will experience "no interruption in coverage," Shivers said. "It's going to be a very smooth transition."

There are differences in the coverage between the two carriers.

Under Mutual of Omaha, even if the student was referred by the Student Health Center to an outside medical source, the student had to pay a $100 deductible.

With Blue Cross & Blue Shield, students referred by the Student Health Center will not pay a deductible, and they see a preferred provider, Shivers said.

A preferred provider is an area doctor or hospital listed with Blue Cross & Blue Shield's preferred provider program.

Essentially, the carrier encourages people to use those doctors or hospitals and requires a deductible if a preferred provider is not used.

There will be brochures that list members of the preferred provider group available for students when they sign up for the insurance. Promotional brochures explaining the new policy are now available at the insurance office in the Student Health Center.

"We will make absolutely sure that students are aware of the preferred provider list," Shivers said. "It will be to their benefit to go to those preferred providers."

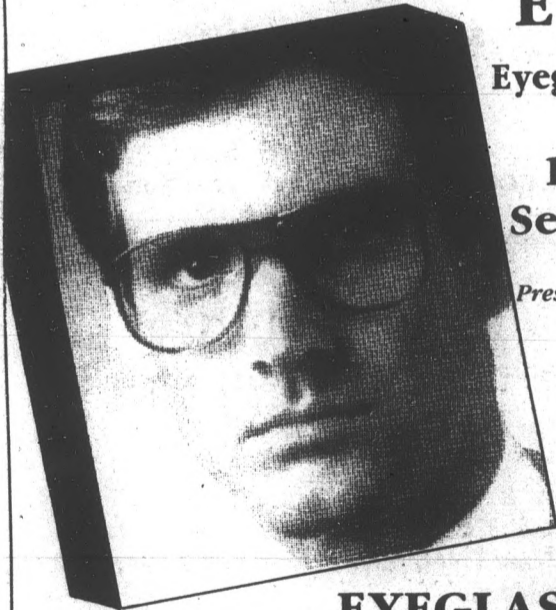

Another coverage difference concerns coordination of benefits.

Robbery suspect arrested after car chase

By MIKE BURGESS
State Press

A Tempe man, who was out on bail awaiting trial for four armed robberies, was arrested early Monday after he allegedly robbed a convenience store and led police on a 14-mile high speed chase, police said. He was also charged in connection with an April 2 convenience store robbery.

Police said Chad D. Golladay, 19, 589 W. LaDonna Drive, was booked into Tempe City Jail and charged with two counts of armed robbery, grand theft auto and unlawful flight.

Golladay is accused of leading police on a 100 mph chase through residential areas of south Tempe and north Chandler about 12:18 a.m. after he allegedly robbed the Circle K store at 1010 W. Southern Ave. about two hours earlier.

Police said a vehicle matching the description of police report

Golladay's was also seen at the Circle K store at 939 W. Baseline shortly after the robbery. A clerk at the store later identified him as the suspect who robbed the store April 2.

In addition to the two robberies, Golladay is also accused of stealing an $8,000 1983 Pontiac Trans Am from Earnhardt Ford, 777 S. Baseline Road, where he works as a mechanic.

Police said Monday's chase began when Golladay allegedly fled a police cruiser that approached the Trans Am in the parking lot of the Circle K store at 3408 S. Mill Ave.

Golladay allegedly fled south on Mill Avenue to Baseline Road where Officer Richard Eccles lost sight of the vehicle.

Sgt. Mike Poth spotted the vehicle at Guadalupe Road and College Avenue and continued the pursuit through south Tempe and into north Chandler. He lost the vehicle in a residential area near Baseline and Price Roads, police said.

Golladay was arrested about 15 minutes later at the Briarwood Apartments, 3175 N. Price Road, Chandler, after police received an anonymous phone call, police said.

He denied involvement in robberies and the car theft, police said, but was arrested after police said they found the keys to the Trans Am and a roll of money. They also said they found in the car a 12 pack of beer and bag of Doritos taken from the Circle K on Southern.

In other incidents:

•A "very dirty" man, armed with a revolver, robbed a Tempe gas station of $150 Sunday night, police said.

Police said the man, who is possibly a transient, walked into the mini-mart at the Billy Bain Chevron, 1926 N. Scottsdale Road, at about 10:40 p.m. carrying a plastic gas can.

He approached the clerk, displayed a .22-caliber blue steel revolver and said, "I need all the money now."

The suspect stuffed the cash into a green trash bag filled with holes and told the clerk to go into a back room, then fled, police said.

Police described the suspect as Caucasian, 45 to 50 years old, 5 feet 6 inches, 135 pounds with brown eyes and gray collar-length hair with a few days growth of beard. He was last seen wearing a chamois shirt, jean jacket and pants.

•A two-month-old infant was found dead inside her crib early Sunday, police said.

Police said Amanda Josephine Karmo was found unresponsive by her mother at their home in the 1800 block of South Greentree Drive at about 7:50 a.m.

The child was last checked by her mother about midnight and was fine. She had seen a pediatrician a week early and was in excellent health, police said.

Detectives said they believe the child may have died from Sudden Infant Death Syndrome, but are awaiting autopsy results from the Maricopa County medical examiner's office. Foul play is not suspected.

Attack

Roberts on Thursday.

Both platforms were destroyed and left ablaze, one by naval gunfire and the other by explosives placed on it, according to statements in Washington.

The Iranian news agency said U.S. warships hit the Sassan platform at 9 a.m. and, 23 minutes later, the Nasr platform off nearby Sirri Island.

Sirri Island is one of the makeshift oil export terminals in southern waters to which Iran ferries oil from its main Kharg Island terminal in the northern gulf. Kharg has been a frequent target of Iraqi air raids.

The Iranian agency said Foreign Minister Ali Akbar Velayati wrote a letter of protest to U.S. Secretary-General Javier Perez de Cuellar that said, in part: "Iran will never submit to the policy of violence and intimidation, and will definitely respond to the cowardly U.S. attacks."

After the U.S. attacks, Iranian gunboats went on a rampage in the southern gulf. They attacked oil facilities and commercial vessels at the Mubarak oil field off the Sharjah emirate, and hours later assaulted a Cypriot freighter leaving the United Arab Emirates with a load of fertilizer.

Carlucci said a Navy helicopter was fired upon during the raid on the platforms but not hit. Iranians shot at a press helicopter carrying an NBC-TV crew and an Associated Press photographer, but missed.

AP photographer Norbert Schiller said the "Iranians fired at least half a dozen .50-caliber rounds and small arms fire" at the helicopter.

He said part of Sirri-D collapsed and the platform still was burning before sundown. Sassan was badly damaged "but the main structure was still standing and the fire was put out by five Iranian tugboats, which also fired at our helicopter," Schiller said.

Two Iranian warplanes tried to harass a U.S. warship but the ship fired missiles and the aircraft fled, shipping sources in Dubai reported.

They said an Iranian patrol boat fired at the U.S. cruiser Wainwright, one of the ships attacking Sassan and Sirri-D, but did not hit it. Frigate Simpson returned fire and sank the Iranian boat, the sources added.

The U.S. receives about 7 percent of its oil from ships that pass through the gulf.

CAS director cites importance of studying Western Europe

By KRISTI ELLIS
State Press

A university cannot be considered a "major" institution unless it devotes some of its energies to studying Western Europe, according to Gerald Kleinfeld, director of ASU's Consortium for Atlantic Studies.

Western Europe is growing more powerful economically, and Arizona, as well as the rest of the United States, will benefit from an awareness and understanding of this change, Kleinfeld said.

"It's important for research, knowledge and understanding. Our students who will be entering a world of work will find this an economic juggernaut," he said.

CAS was organized in February and has devoted its energies to the study of West Europe and West European-American relations.

The organization concentrates on studying the 20th century in West Europe and contemporary affairs by looking at modern history, economics and government.

CAS recently co-sponsored the German-American press seminar with the Walter Cronkite School of Journalism, and the two are developing a number of media programs for the future.

The German government has agreed to give a half million deutsche marks to finance various programs during the next several years.

Kleinfeld said they don't want to create an imbalance; they want to represent Europe as a whole.

For that reason, the first major project — at the end of next October — will focus on Italy.

On April 28, CAS will host a symposium on U.S. and European communities, and it will feature Paul J. Freedenberg, the undersecretary of commerce.

"We've just started, and we've hit the ground running," Kleinfeld said.

A consortium is a means of bringing colleagues together; it helps them do things they couldn't do separately, Kleinfeld said.

"It has the potential of involving a great many faculty and students on campus and serving them," Kleinfeld said.

CAS consists of a director, an assistant director, an advisory committee at ASU and external contacts around the world. The organization has contacts with colleagues in Europe through a computer network called Bitnet that connects scholars around the world, Kleinfeld said.

The three "pillars" of CAS are: research, a teaching and assistance factor, and the recognition that the university is a citizen of the community.

We need an awareness of Western Europe, because of its increasing role in the economic arena, Kleinfeld said.

"Western Europe is a world economic power whose consumer spending is larger than that of Taiwan, Japan, Korea and Singapore together," Kleinfeld said.

He said it is predicted that in 1992, the remaining economic barriers will come down, creating an estimated 1.8 million jobs and an annual growth rate of 5 percent.

"It's important to study the region in which we are, and it is also important to study the world in which we are," Kleinfeld said.

Raffle for free tuition increases response to charity drive

By ROBIE KAKONGE
State Press

Do you want free tuition next semester?

For a dollar, a lucky student may purchase a winning raffle ticket possibly good for free in-state tuition.

The contest, which is a first at ASU, will be held April 12 through 22 in front of the MU and is sponsored by Phi Kappa Psi for their biggest annual charity fundraiser.

John Hale, chairperson of the contest, said the student response has been better than expected.

"We are really excited about this because the money raised works both ways — it helps the community on one hand and gives students a chance to win something beneficial in terms of academics," he said.

Hale said the event, which is called the Psi 500, relates to the Indy 500 and is "fast becoming a national tradition among the fraternity."

Brad Hoover, a fraternity member, said the proceeds will go to the Make-A-Wish Foundation.

"We will be selling other items as well — cups, tank tops, and a sorority calendar, all of which will promote the '500,'" he said.

Hoover said they plan to raise $1,300 from ticket sales and more than $3,000 in other sales.

"This whole thing is really working out great because there is a great amount of participation from the brothers and the pledges. We are all enjoying working together and interacting with campus life," he said.

Hale said the fraternity will hold an all-night party this Saturday at the house in celebration of the fundraising event.

Phi Kappa Psi fraternity was established at ASU in 1962 and has more than 50 members.

ASU English professor awarded $26,000 fellowship

By NICK VAN NICE
Contributing Writer

Albert A. Rios, ASU associate English professor, has been awarded a $26,000 fellowship by the John Simon Guggenheim Memorial Foundation to assist him in writing poetry for one year.

Sen. Simon Guggenheim of Colorado set up the Guggenheim Foundation in 1925 to support scholars in the fine arts. Based in New York City, the foundation issues about 300 fellowships annually to permanent residents of the United States, Canada, Latin America and the Republic of the Philippines.

Rios is the fourth member of ASU's faculty to be awarded a Guggenheim fellowship. The others are English professors Norman Dubie, Rita Dove and Mark Harris.

Rios said he plans to spend the fellowship grant beginning fall 1989 by traveling to his father's birthplace, Tapachula, Mexico, to write poetry about language.

"Some people have called my work 'artfully awkward'," Rios said. "It may be the syntax of Spanish coming through into English. One of my projects will be an exploration of whether or not that is true."

"The work will not be essays but examinations of language. I'm required to write poetry (to use the grant)."

Rios said the ASU art department's Pyracantha Press is printing a limited edition of his "Warrington Poems," and it is printing 30 of the 130 copies on paper made from his own clothes.

"The words came from me," he said, pointing to his mouth. "And so did the paper," he added, waving his hands about his shoulders.

The poems are based on a trip to his mother's hometown of Warrington, England, Rios said.

"I'll use the Guggenheim to cover my father's side," he said. "This is a very exciting time."

"I will work on a number of projects. I'm working on a song project with a musician in New York. He wants to do songs from poets, rather than lyricists."

Rios was born in Nogales and earned a master's degree in creative writing at UofA in 1979.

He was named the director of the ASU creative writing program in 1986, and he is a tenured associate English professor.

Rios has written seven books, including five that are available at Hayden Library: "Five Indiscretions," "The Iguana Killer," "Whispering to Fool the Wind," "Sleeping on Fists" and "Elk Heads on the Wall."

Rios said he will file a report accounting for his use of the money at the end of the grant period.

"My primary charge is to write, and since that's what I do, that's great," he said.

Pre-veterinary club sells 'Pet Love' tags

By CARRI MITCHELL
State Press

Losing a pet or having one run away can be a traumatic experience, but ASU's Pre-Veterinary Club has come up with a way to help pets return home easier.

The club is selling "Pet Love" tags made out of aluminum, brass or stainless steel. The tags are engraved with the pet's name and the owner's phone number, city and state.

The tags come with "S" hooks that attach to the animal's collar. The tags enable anyone who finds the animal to be able to contact the owner and return the animal easily.

The cost of each tag is $5. Plastic tags that are not engraved are also available for $4 each. The tags are also useful for luggage, medical identification, key chains or for child identification.

Pettit

Pettit was awarded an $80,000 grant by the National Cancer Institute and the National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases, a division of the National Institutes of Health.

Pettit's AIDS research directly relates to his cancer research because AIDS patients often develop cancer during the late stages of the disease, he said.

"We have already discovered several substances that are good candidates, so the initial evaluation is underway," Pettit said. "The substances have well-established anti-cancer activity, and we're now seeing how this will transpose to the AIDS problem."

Pettit said the best prospects in the development of anti-AIDS drugs are from oceanic life forms.

"They (marine animals and terrestrial plants) have very unique chemical structures... that no organic chemist ever would have thought of," Pettit said.

As of March, 54,000 patients in the United States were diagnosed as having the full AIDS disease, according to the national Center for Disease Control in Atlanta.

"That indicates there are anywhere from 1.5 to 2 million people affected," Pettit said, adding that health experts say for every one diagnosed case, there may be another 30 undiagnosed cases.

Pettit said experts expect 30 percent of those infected will develop the disease within five years. Approximately 30,000 AIDS patients have already died from the disease.

In Arizona, about 500 people have been diagnosed with AIDS, which means 15,000 may be infected, Pettit said.

Pettit says the problem is reaching global proportions. Ten percent of Africa's population may be infected — a figure Pettit calls "pretty staggering."

The development of a new anti-AIDS drug will take several years at best, according to Pettit.

"The AIDS virus may turn out to be even more refractory than now suspected, and the timing of the discovery of a curative drug may be pushed back substantially," Pettit said.

Three other institutions are involved in the project: the University of Miami; the University of Birmingham, England; and Mount Sinai University.

More than 20 ASU scientists are working in drug discovery research under Pettit's direction. Several substances isolated and purified in Cancer Research Institute laboratories are now in pre-clinical and clinical development.

The ASU institute uses private and philanthropic support to supplement the funds (from the grant).

Election not 'bought,' outcome shows

By VICTOR BARAJAS
State Press

All four runoff executive candidates took advantage of the unlimited spending bylaws during the '88 Associated Students elections, but the election coordinator said Monday that nobody "bought the election."

Eliminating last year's $500 spending limit, the ASASU Senate allowed all executive and senate candidates unlimited spending, making way for what elections coordinator Shannon Sellers called "creative campaigning."

But the big spenders did not prove to be the big winners: in the presidential race, Mark Stark was by far the biggest spender, totaling more than $2,000, but Stark came in last in the four-way race.

Terri Hoffman was the second-biggest spender after the general election but came in third.

During last week's runoff election, Patrice Cabianca, who had entered the race having spent less than any other presidential candidate, spent the most during the runoff and lost to John Fees. Cabianca spent more than $202 in the runoff and a total of $1,212.93 during her quest for the presidency.

Fees spent $35.42 during his successful runoff campaign and $1,250.42 total.

"I think it really shows that nobody can buy an election," Sellers said. "I think it came down to the issues and not the flash."

Fees said the campaigning for the candidates was "too expensive."

But in the runoff for activities vice president between Todd Martensen and Mark Collins, the more expensive campaign was victorious.

Martensen, in his decisive victory over Collins, spent $1,542 on his campaign, including $107.75 during the runoff. Though Collins only spent $1,036 during his entire campaign, he spent more than Martensen in the runoff ($180).

Martensen, who agreed that nobody "bought" the election, said he did not expect to spend as much money as he did, but he doesn't regret his strategy.

"In fact, I'm for spending limits, but if the limits aren't going to be there, then I'm going to try and get the best products for the least amount of money," Martensen said.

Sellers said she was disappointed with the overall turnout for elections, which was about 10 percent, adding that students don't realize how much trouble it is to organize an election on their behalf.

"It's a tough job," Sellers said. "They told me it was a tough job, but nobody could imagine how tough it really is until they do it."

In other ASASU election news, President-elect Fees has not been notified when his hearing for his appeal of penalty points will be heard by the Elections Commission. Fees was penalized 16 points, four short of disqualification, when he allegedly printed campaign posters larger than the bylaws allowed.

In his appeal of the decision, Fees claims the commission "erred procedurally" by not placing the decision in candidates' mailboxes and "contextually" by not specifically defining the "time, place and manner" restrictions.

Despite winning the election, Fees asks for the penalty points to be dropped and the term "miscellaneous campaigning" to be clearly defined.

On-campus survey to gauge need for child care

By CARRI MITCHELL

State Press

A random sampling of ASU faculty, staff and students is being taken this week and next to help determine the feasibility and need for child care on campus.

Kathleen Ritchie, the head of President Nelson's Child Care Steering Committee, said 250 faculty and staff members as well as 250 students will receive telephone calls asking about child care on campus.

The surveys are being conducted by the Tucson Association for Child Care, a consulting firm hired by the steering committee to investigate the issue on campus, Ritchie said.

Ritchie said the surveys are being conducted over the phone because more information can be obtained on a one-on-one interview than in a mailed out questionnaire.

The surveys take 15 to 20 minutes and Ritchie said she hopes people will take the time out to answer the questions.

"Even if they don't have kids, . . . it's important to see how they see child care impacting on their colleagues," she said.

Ritchie said the steering committee is trying to address a broad variety of child care issues besides just day care, including providing child care in the evening for night students and providing care for sick children.

Ritchie said the committee is even looking into providing care after school for older children.

Ritchie said the issue of child care is a factor in all areas of business and is important in attracting faculty, staff and students, as well as retaining them.

"It's on the agenda of every educational institution; some do have centers, others have learning labs they are converting to centers," she said.

Ritchie said currently there are two learning labs on campus which offer a limited enrollment to anyone in the community.

Currently both centers have waiting lists to get into the program, she said.

Ritchie said the committee should be ready to submit their finding to ASU President J. Russell Nelson sometime in June. She said they hope to have a short-term plan and a long-term plan that can be used to help get around budget cuts.

"It does not have to be all or nothing," Ritchie said.

Ritchie said the committee is also looking into providing child care as part of employees' benefit packages as well as offering the care at a price students can afford.

Davis could miss year after suffering injury

TEMPE (AP) — Arizona State junior nose guard Richard Davis underwent surgery Monday after breaking his left elbow for the second straight year and could be lost for another football season, school officials said.

Davis, a native of Jenks, Okla., suffered the injury Saturday morning in the Sun Devils' final spring practice before this Friday night's scheduled scrimmage.

It's the fourth time in his college football career that Davis has been hurt in the final drill before a game or scrimmage.

ASU remains 3rd in latest baseball poll

TUCSON (AP) — The top eight spots remained unchanged in this week's Collegiate Baseball-ESPN poll of college baseball teams, with Oklahoma State ranked No. 1 for the 11th straight week.

The Cowboys, 35-2, have won 29 of their last 30 games, while No. 2 Fresno State, 40-6, and third-ranked Arizona State, 43-8, each have won 23 straight games.

Texas, 44-7, was again fourth; followed by Texas A&M, 41-8; Miami, Fla., 37-7-1, Loyola Marymount, 39-10, and California State-Fullerton, 31-11. Mississippi State, 29-10, climbed from 10th place to ninth, bumping Louisiana State, 29-11, back to 12th, and Clemson, 38-6, jumped from 13th to 10th.

Rounding out the top 25: Michigan, 31-7; Louisiana State; Stanford, 28-14; Oklahoma, 31-10; Hawaii, 30-14; California, 29-18; Auburn, 32-9; Washington State, 31-10; Nevada-Las Vegas, 30-13; San Diego State, 31-13-1; Wichita State, 27-9; Arkansas, 28-14; Brigham Young, 24-9; James Madison, 31-3-2, and Florida State, 33-11-1.

Also for the Sun Devils, Gordy Farmer was named the Pac-10 Southern Division's Pitcher of the Week.

SOFTBALL — ASU plays host to the rival Arizona Wildcats in a doubleheader beginning at 6 p.m. today at Sun Devil Club Stadium.

Softball team splits 2 with Ducks

By CHRIS DORSEY
State Press

Ann Rowan hit her third triple of the year, driving in two runs, to pace the Sun Devils to a 2-1 Pac-10 victory in the second game of a doubleheader over the Oregon Ducks at Sun Devil Club Stadium Monday.

The ASU softball team (25-18, 8-8 in the Pac-10) was in the position to move into sole possession of third place in the Pac-10 with two wins over the Ducks. But it was not to be, as the Sun Devils lost the first game, 1-0.

In game one, veteran second baseman Karen Fifield chalked up the only hit of the game. She is leading ASU with a .320 batting average.

During the second game, Rowan, the team's RBI leader with 14, came through in the third inning when she brought ASU from a 1-0 deficit. The freshman from Tempe scored teammates Karen Fifield and Becky Davis from second and third base, respectively.

The Sun Devils, behind the arm of ace Donna Stewart, held off Oregon for the remainder of the game. Stewart, 11-9, picked up both a win and a loss on the afternoon.

"Donna definitely pitched better," coach Mary Littlewood said, comparing her performance to the previous day. "She was more effective and hit her target better, and her change-up kept them off balance."

"I calmed down and realized I wasn't going to be able to fight the umpires," Stewart said.

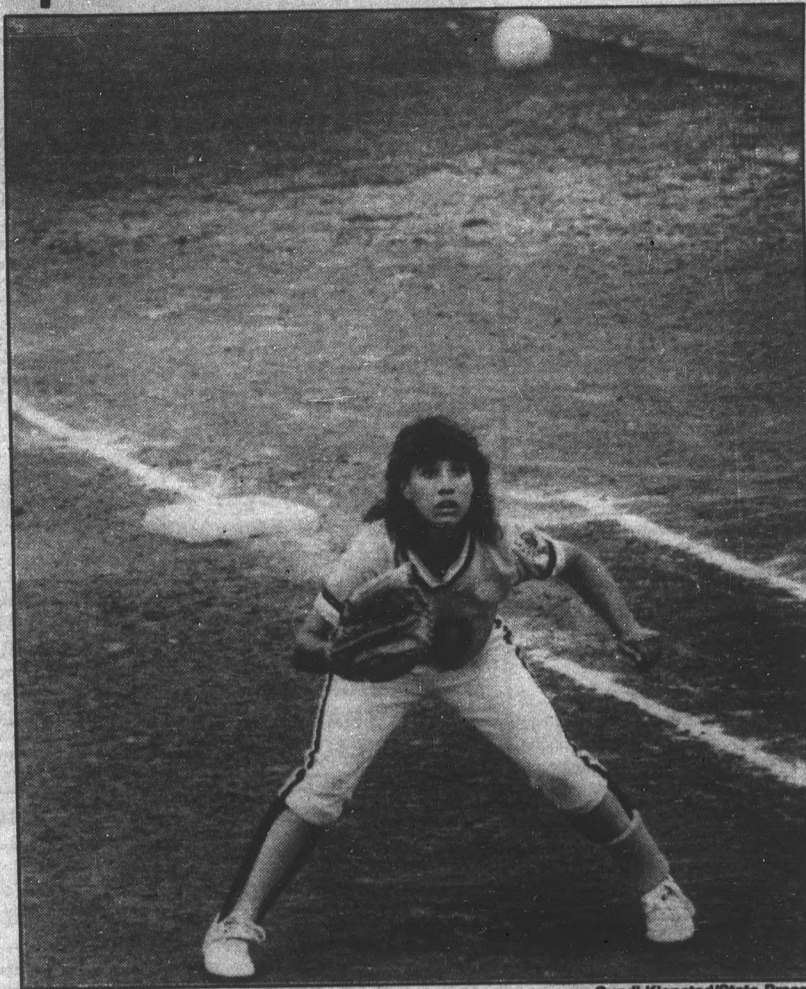

Offensively, the Sun Devils swung the bat well, pounding out eight hits.

Centerfielder Yvette Baltazar, who has been on a tear recently, went three-for-three at the plate, raising her .182 batting average to .203.

Natalie King, hitting .287, added two hits to ASU's winning cause.

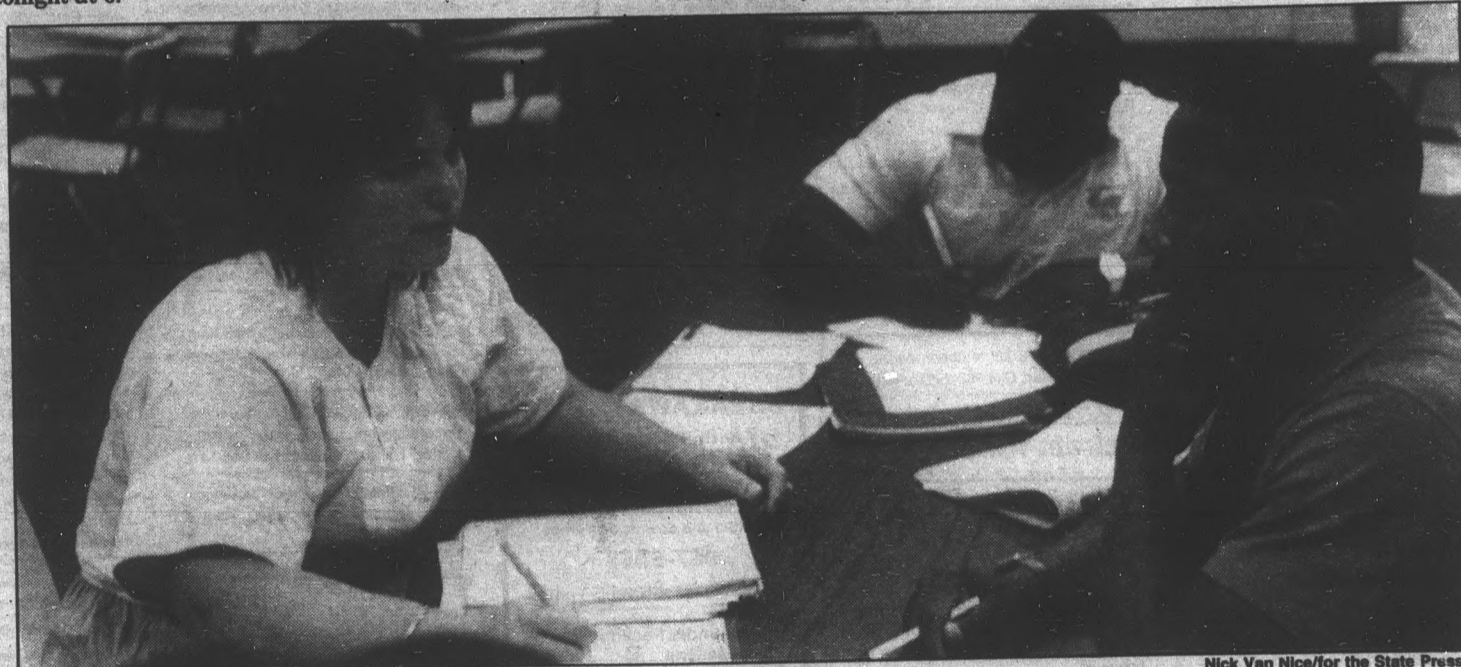

"I thought we swung the bat better in the second game," Littlewood said. "The first game was the pits."

ASU will conclude its homestand at Sun Devil Club Stadium in a doubleheader with intrastate rival Arizona tonight at 6.

ASU first baseman Cheryl Smith awaits a pop-up during Monday's doubleheader with Oregon. ASU beat the Ducks in the second game, 2-1, but lost the first, 1-0.

ASU athletic tutor Lynn Bellman instructs student-athletes David Winsley (center) and Kelvin Fisher in communications skills last week at the University Activity Center.

Tutors help athletes receive higher grades

By NICK VAN NICE
Contributing Writer

Lynn Bellman, a 27-year-old athletic department tutor, sat at a table with three football players in the classroom Monday. At desks spread around the room, tutors and athletes chatted in hushed tones.

"Keep studying, keep reviewing your notes, and read this chapter," Bellman said.

The ball players at Bellman's table gathered their papers and walked out to the basement hallway in the Student Activities Center.

"I love doing this," Bellman said.

Bellman, who has a bachelor's degree in communication from Purdue, is one of 73 tutors who have helped ASU student-athletes raise their grade-point averages dramatically.

Program Coordinator for Academic and Student Services Karl Mooney said: "Four years ago we only had 33 B-or-better averages. Now we have 184 B-or-better averages."

"We've seen good successes with our athletes."

Mooney oversees the tutors and monitors the athletes' academic progress.

He said that he determines whether athletes are earning credit toward a degree and whether they are in good standing to make them eligible to play.

The number of athletes at ASU has remained at about 700 and the number of tutors has increased from about 43 to 73 since 1984, he said.

Athletes must meet National Collegiate Athletic Association and ASU academic requirements to play, and they must also devote several hours each day to practice. Tutors help about 400 of ASU's athletes.

"Tutors never put pen in hand," Mooney said. "They give examples of problems, but they don't edit."

Athletic tutors must have bachelor's degrees appropriate to the subjects they teach. They earn $7.10 per hour and work with students for up to 20 hours each week.

"I'm basically self-employed," Bellman said. "That's the nice thing about it."

"I've never lost a student. I've come close, but in the end, they all come through."

Darrel Banks, a 20-year-old physical education and nutrition major, said he must raise his four-semester grade-point average from 1.99 to 2.0 in order to play football next season.

"My second semester I saw more tutors, and my grade point has increased each semester," he said.

"A lot of people think if you need a tutor you are stupid, but they (tutors) aren't doing the work, they just help you understand it better," Banks said.

Students often have problems understanding an assignment, Bellman said. "It's either real concrete, or it's incredibly vague."

"Generally they have their girlfriends look at their papers, and their girlfriends give them bad advice," Bellman said.

After students have done an assignment wrong, they are more apt to listen, Bellman said.

"I don't edit papers or change the style," she said. "I tell them where to make improvements."
