

Student regent vows to be strong advocate

By BEN MCCONNELL
State Press

When he was a sixth grader at Central Junior High School in Tipp City, Ohio, Patrick S. McWhortor was an obnoxious little kid trying to run the school.

It's hard to believe he was obnoxious then, considering his mild-mannered, quiet nature now. But McWhortor, Gov. Rose Mofford's choice to be the next student regent on the Arizona Board of Regents, has since learned one does not build coalitions by alienating the eighth graders.

It took less than a few minutes for Mofford to decide that McWhortor would be the best student for the regent post, according to Mofford spokesman Vada Manager.

And McWhortor, a 23-year-old ASU political science senior, said he's ready to play hardball, if necessary, to get students' voices heard on a board that has a reputation of often brushing aside student opinions.

"You're always faced with the 'student government' aura around you that sometimes people think is not really serious," McWhortor said. "But here, you're not just a student who's a regent, you're a player."

"I'll be a strong member of the board." His nomination to the post is expected to be easily confirmed by the Senate sometime next week.

McWhortor, a 4.0 GPA student who will graduate in August magna cum laude, also has learned to exude confidence while not being pugnacious.

"He (McWhortor) pushed all the right buttons about education with Governor Mofford," Manager said.

He has learned the art of politics this semester in the Arizona House of Representatives, where he has interned with House Democratic leadership. McWhortor was part of the behind-the-scenes machinations of the impeachment hearings of former Gov. Evan Mecham, an experience McWhortor said will stay with him forever.

"I learned more in four months in the House about politics than four years in political science classes," he said.

McWhortor, who stands about five feet-seven with a scruffy mustache and a shock of dark brown hair, said he was converted from an obnoxious kid to a smooth operator while beginning his professional career the same way many politicians do: as a journalist.

He was news director for KATO radio in Safford, Ariz., then later jumped ship and worked for the competition, KFMN.

"I learned diplomacy by seeing how the movers and shakers of Gila Valley got things done," McWhortor said.

To pay for his ASU education, he produces salesmanship videos for businesses.

But McWhortor said his vocation will always be fighting for education "even if I move to Sun City when I'm old."

"Nothing should stand above education in our society."

Except for expenses, student regents serve without pay for one year. Arizona's three universities rotate having a student representative on the board. This year, ASU-ites Chris Cummiskey, former Associated Students president, and Paul Larsen, the Associated Students of Arizona regents' liaison, also vied for the regent post.

University campuses targeted by 'The Bomber'

By MIKE BURGESS
State Press

He is shrouded in mystery. His calling card is a bomb, either mailed or left behind.

The FBI calls him "The Bomber." Agents have been trying to find him for 10 years.

He meticulously constructs explosive devices from generic materials and electronic components and then leaves them at universities across the country.

The deadly creations are always disguised, like the time he encased a bomb inside a ream of paper and mailed it to a University of Michigan professor along with a letter that said it was a doctoral dissertation.

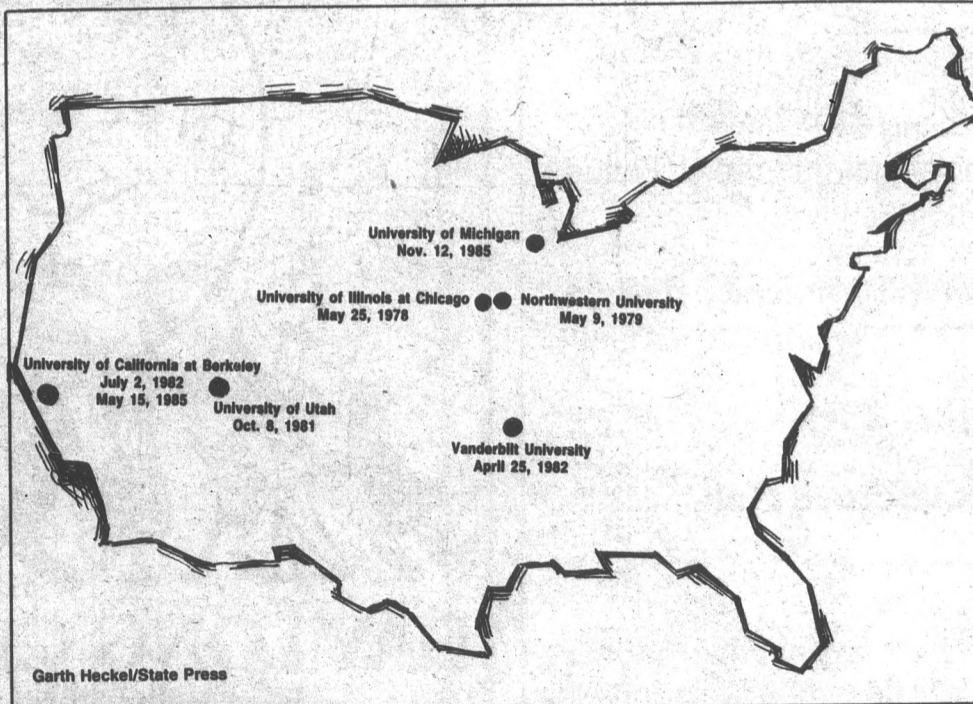

Sometimes he leaves the devices lying in paper bags waiting for a curious person to open them.

"He likes to place the bomb, stand back and see it blow up," Special Agent Clay Clegg of the FBI's Salt Lake City office said during a telephone interview. "He gets his jollies by watching it go off."

Since he first hit in May 1978, seven of "The Bomber's" 12 attacks have targeted universities or university professors in the United States.

But universities are not his only targets. The FBI believes he killed a Sacramento, Calif., computer company owner in 1985 and has injured 21 others.

He has mailed a bomb to a United Airlines executive in Chicago and one to Boeing Aviation in Seattle. He also left bombs at two computer businesses.

Garth Heckel/State Press

In 1979, one of his bombs exploded in the belly of an American Airlines jet in flight. Luckily, no one was injured.

Law officers have no idea when he will strike. His most recent bombing occurred Feb. 20, 1987, at CAAM's Inc., a computer sales and service company in Salt Lake City.

"We don't know where he'll attack again," Clegg said. "We can't tell how he places one campus over another. . . . We don't know what makes him tick."

ASU police and other campus police departments across the country were alerted of "The Bomber" a year ago by the Salt Lake City UNABOM Law Enforcement Task Force, which is made up of the FBI; the U.S. Postal Inspection Service; the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms; and the Salt Lake City Police Department.

UNABOM is the code word used for "Bomber" incidents.

"This guy is serious," said ASU Deputy Police Chief Doug Bartosh. "He is obviously out to hurt someone."

But Bartosh added, "We haven't found anything to lead us to believe we (ASU) are a target."

According to the FBI, "The Bomber" has mailed or delivered bombs to:

- University of Illinois at Chicago, May 25, 1978
- Northwestern University, May 9, 1979.
- University of Utah, Oct. 8, 1981.
- Vanderbilt University (mailed from Brigham Young University), April 25, 1982.
- University of California-Berkeley, July 2, 1982, and May 15, 1985.
- University of Michigan, Nov. 12, 1985.

A physical description of "The Bomber" was unknown until the CAAM's Inc. bombing in 1987, when he was seen putting a device in front of a car tire.

The witness described "The Bomber" as

Bush, Dukakis anticipate debates; Jackson says contest is not over

(AP) — George Bush, the apparent Republican presidential nominee, and his likely Democratic opponent Michael Dukakis set a combative tone for the campaign Wednesday, with Dukakis saying Bush has "some explaining to do" on the Iran-Contra affair.

"Let him fire away," Bush challenged.

Both said they looked forward to debates.

The other Democrat still in the race, Jesse Jackson, looked gamely ahead to the next round of primaries in Ohio and Indiana. Despite Dukakis' huge victory in Pennsylvania on Tuesday and a growing delegate lead, Jackson said the race was not over.

"I keep struggling against the odds, and I've always struggled against the odds and succeeded," Jackson said on ABC-TV. "This campaign will remain alive. It will go right down to the wire in California and New Jersey on June 7."

Bush locked up the Republican nomination, passing the required 1,139-delegate mark with an easy win in Pennsylvania against a field that had long since withered.

He lunched privately with President Reagan, who indicated the time was nearing for a formal endorsement of his vice president.

Both Bush and Dukakis said they would continue their primary-campaign efforts. But they were already providing a preview of the fall general election campaign with a long-distance debate on foreign policy and other issues through network TV interviews.

Dukakis, the Massachusetts governor, opened fire on Bush's role in the Iran-Contra affair.

The governor said: "All we know is that he sat there and did nothing while we engaged in one of the worst and one of the most misguided adventures in the history of American foreign policy," a reference to the arms-for-hostages dealing directed by White House officials.

Senate approves trade bill 63-36; supporters lack veto-proof margin

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate approved, 63-36, and sent to the White House a sweeping trade bill Wednesday, but supporters fell short of the two-thirds victory margin needed to override a threatened presidential veto.

"The minuses outweigh the pluses," Sen. Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, said of the bill. He called key plant-closing provisions that drew heavy fire from the administration "economic terrorism."

Democrats tried to win over at least 14 Republicans and thus gain a veto-proof margin. They ended up with 11 GOP senators while losing one Democrat, retiring Sen. William Proxmire, D-Wis., who was concerned about the bill's changes in the Foreign Corrupt Practices Act.

The Reagan administration lobbied until the last minute to avoid a recurrence of its defeat last week when the House passed the trade bill by a margin large enough to override a veto.

Judge threatens to dismiss charges; says administration stonewalling

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Iran-Contra trial judge accused the Reagan administration Wednesday of intentionally holding back classified documents needed by the defense, and warned that charges would be dismissed if the stonewalling continues.

U.S. District Judge Gerhard A. Gesell blamed the dilemma not on independent counsel Lawrence E. Walsh, but on an inter-departmental task force that has control over hundreds of thousands of secret documents that may be needed in the case.

"A stone wall is being built up between this court and the trial," Gesell said at the end of a day-long pre-trial hearing.

Noting that Walsh has tried to get the documents for the defense, the judge said: "The responsibility lies with the attorney general and the White House. I want to find out promptly what is taking place and what is going to take place."

Gesell said the case has encountered a serious obstacle because of the administration's "intentional withholding of documents necessary for the defense."

He also has said the case cannot go to trial unless the administration declassifies relevant documents that may be introduced into evidence.

White House and Justice Department officials could not be reached immediately for comment.

Support for housing funds voiced

By VICKIE CHACHERE
State Press

PHOENIX — About 100 homeless people and advocates of state-supported housing converged on the Arizona Capitol Wednesday to voice their support for legislation that would establish a state housing trust fund and office of housing development.

Senate Bill 1376 would create the housing development office and make it a part of the Arizona Department of Commerce and set up a housing trust fund that would use proceeds from the sales of unclaimed property to construct low-cost public housing.

In 1986, sales of unclaimed property totaled $4.5 million and was deposited in the state's general fund. The bill proposes using those funds to construct housing for the homeless and victims of domestic violence.

There are about 10,000 homeless people in Phoenix, 35 percent of which are women and small children.

Brenda Barbon, who is homeless after being evicted from her apartment and had previously spent six months living on Phoenix streets, said, "It's time that you and I, we the people, took control of our lives."

She said urban renewal has destroyed 1,800 units of low-income housing and only 483 new units have been constructed since 1986.

Furthermore, there is a four-year waiting list for public housing in Phoenix.

Alcohol for all or none

The recent indications that the Arizona Board of Regents plan to allow the consumption of beer in the luxury skyboxes in Sun Devil Stadium during Phoenix Cardinals games — while continuing to deny a taste of the hops to the masses in the cheap seats — makes one think that some board members have been hitting the bottle a little themselves.

The sale of alcohol is currently prohibited in Sun Devil Stadium, but board members, University officials and Cardinal representatives argue that in order to sell the $60,000 skyboxes — vital for Cardinals' revenue — sufficient lubrication must be available.

We won't argue that point. If a company or individual pays that much to watch a football game, they should probably be allowed a drink or two — at least to help them forget the price.

But the double-standard of only allowing skybox patrons to consume alcohol is simply unacceptable — to students and football fans Valley-wide.

There are good reasons for outlawing alcohol at sporting events — fan violence and the potential for drunken driving after the game foremost among them. And some could also well argue that controlled intake of alcohol during a sporting event heightens fans' enjoyment and should be allowed.

But whatever the final decision on alcohol use at the stadium — a public facility open for use by all — it should be equally applied to all in the arena. Not selectively based on the price of a fan's ticket.

The Regents will hold a hearing on the matter this summer — when, unfortunately, most students will be out of town. But we hope those of you who will be remaining will make plans to attend and voice support for the equal application of alcohol regulations at all stadium events — including Sun Devil games.

Right to life or sex?

Editor:

I must say that reading the opinion page of the State Press (April 27) was very interesting. Darrin Hostetler wrote a very eloquent column on Arizona Senate Bill 1200, a bill that would make abortion illegal in the state of Arizona. Unfortunately, eloquence took the place of substance in Mr. Hostetler's column.

Mr. Hostetler neglected the other half of SB 1200 that would accompany the banning of legalized abortions in Arizona.

SB 1200 would also make certain forms of birth control illegal in Arizona, specifically certain forms of the Pill. Now I wonder, Mr. Hostetler, what is your motivation behind this?

You argue that Jim Skelly is truly concerned with the protection of the fetus as a human being. Thus, Mr. Skelly is dedicated to the banning of legalized abortions. But tell me, Mr. Hostetler, what the hell does contraception have to do with the protection of the fetus as a human being?

Think about it! Contraception is used to prevent the conception of an embryo which would grow into a fetus. This is not "murdering" the fetus because the fetus does not exist when the contraception is used. Therefore, the argument that Mr. Skelly is genuinely concerned with the rights of a fetus as a human being comes into question.

It seems obvious to me that Mr. Skelly has some underlying reasons for SB 1200 (in its entirety). Could that underlying reason be religion? Probably, yes!

How would SB 1200 affect the citizens of the state of Arizona? It is not very hard to see. Those men and women who choose to engage in sex — whether in or out of wedlock — would run a very high risk of pregnancy with every act of intercourse. Thus, those men and women who choose to have sex — whether in or out of wedlock — and do not wish to have children would be very limited. In other words, your right to choose to have sex would be severely restricted.

Is this right? Should our legislature legislate our right to have sex? If the concern is the "right to life" of a fetus, then the answer is no. If the concern is one of religious morals then the answer is debatable. But according to Mr. Hostetler, the concern is the former. Therefore, the legislature has no right to legislate restrictions on our right to have sex.

You can argue until you are blue about whether abortion should be outlawed or not, Mr. Hostetler. You can argue that it is "murder" all you want. I have my opinions about that issue also. But what I am trying to say here is that SB 1200 is not just a bill addressing the issue of abortion. It is a bill that would legislate restrictions on the right of Arizonans to have sex. This has nothing to do with the "right to life" of a fetus, so leave it alone.

S. Yousef Hashimi

Junior, Aerospace Engineering

Opinion Editor's Note: SB 1200 does not prohibit the use of contraceptives — pills and devices that prevent the sperm from fertilizing the egg. It only prohibits birth control that destroys the already-fertilized egg.

Attack

Stanford murders Western culture

Ed Schubert
Asst. Opinion Editor

From time to time, educational institutions come under the attack of avowed enemies of education and reason.

It happened last summer when Christian fundamentalists succeeded in having 31 textbooks banned in Alabama on the grounds that they promoted "secular humanism."

And it happened last month at Stanford University, when academic Luddites succeeded in gutting that university's core requirements for a popular course called "Western Civilization."

This is what happened:

Heretofore, Stanford required its undergraduates to read 15 classics of politics and philosophy, which the University considered essential in understanding our culture: Plato, Homer, John Stuart Mill, etc. Eighteen other volumes were "highly recommended."

Now only six books are required and none are recommended.

Why?

Because the classics expressed a "European-Western and male bias." Which is to say they were written for the most part by white European men — dead ones, at that — and as such were considered by some to be both sexist and racist.

By whom?

By a coalition of minority students and feminists, who succeeded in goring the curriculum and replacing the previously required texts with books written by "women, minorities and persons of color."

What?

That's right. In order to combat racism, Stanford is now requiring students to read books, not because of the content of their ideas, but because of the gender and pigmentation of their authors. The previously required classics have been tossed overboard precisely because their authors were white males — to combat racism, you know.

How did all this come about?

Quite democratically. The students voted on the curriculum, and the faculty and administration acquiesced — or perhaps "abdicated" is a better word.

Wait a minute. Since when do students dictate the curriculum to the faculty?

Since March. At Stanford.

The complaint against the old curriculum was that it was "crushing the psyche of those others to whom Locke, Hume and Plato are not speaking."

Now, as I recall, both John Locke and David Hume were speaking about the problems and prospects of democracy and representative government, and they both had a strong interest in and keen insights into human psychology. Plato was concerned more with the nature of justice and with the just society.

Now just who are "those others" who find these topics irrelevant?

Why, women and minorities, of course.

No. The real racists are those who claim that our civilization somehow belongs more to white people than to blacks. The real sexists are those who suggest that Locke, Hume and Plato are inappropriate reading for women. The real bigots are those who, like the fundamentalist book banners, self-righteously extol ignorance as their chief virtue.

They are worse than racists. They represent the most narrow, bigoted and chauvinistic view of culture that can be held — a view we shall call the Myth of Progress.

What is the Myth of Progress?

Very simple. It is the notion that mankind is continually and inevitably rising to greater heights and higher achievements. From this perspective, everything that is current is good — the very pinnacle of human accomplishment — while everything that is past is bad. And the older a book is, the worse it is — all the way back to the worst book of all, the Bible.

The Myth of Progress can only be sustained through ignorance. If one has never read Shakespeare, it is easy to consider Samuel Beckett to be the last word in drama. If one has never read the Federalist Papers, it becomes possible to accept the infantile babbling of a Charles Reich as political philosophy.

But of course, there is no reason to read Shakespeare or the Federalist Papers in the first place — they're old, therefore irrelevant, end of argument. Thus the Myth of Progress is a pernicious, false and thoroughly arrogant example of temporal provincialism at its worst, based on a militant ignorance which must continually feed itself.

It's an ugly thing to see.

At one demonstration against the old curriculum, which was led (of course) by Jesse Jackson, 500 students chanted:

"Hey hey, ho ho,
Western culture's got to go."

At Stanford, it already has.

Korea

ASU students help 'shake up the bad guys up north'

By JACK BEASLEY
State Press

When I was first told that I would be going to South Korea for three weeks as part of Team Spirit, the largest military exercise in the free world, all I could picture was the opening credits to "M*A*S*H," student protests in the cities and hundreds of miles of rice paddies.

As it turned out, those mountains and hills and rice paddies make up a good 90 percent of the countryside I saw in Korea, but there were no protests — in fact, the people were very tranquil and happy to see us.

I arrived at Kimhae Air Force Base near Pusan, South Korea on a chartered 747 with the 500 men and four women of the 1st of the 180th Field Artillery battalion (Arizona National Guard), based in Mesa, and its parent unit, the 153rd FA brigade from Glendale.

About four or five ASU students would take part in the Team Spirit exercise held yearly in this country. The overall purpose is to practice joint military operations between the South Korean (R.O.K.) and the U.S. armies, but it always helps to shake up the bad guys up north a little bit — especially with the Olympics coming up.

Both countries' forces are mixed into "blue" and "orange" armies and the two go at it just like in a real war, although "kills" and "captures" are determined by neutral controllers.

We were quickly ushered through customs, despite being in full combat gear and carrying our M-16 rifles the entire time.

Up to this point, the only Koreans we had seen were the bus drivers. Our flight from Phoenix to Anchorage, and then to Yokota, Japan had been a long and boring 12 hours and the only thing I wanted to see after landing was the inside of my eyelids.

A funny part of flying 8,500 miles from home and crossing the International Date Line was that we landed the day after we took off, but at about the same time of day. We had chased the sun all the way across the Pacific and it was in the same position the entire time. So much for the flat-earth theory.

An eight-hour drive the length of South Korea broke us into the driving habits of Koreans. First of all, Korean traffic consists almost entirely of Korean-made cars and trucks with a sprinkling of U.S. military vehicles mixed in.

Before our unit was actually put into the "war," we were given a couple of days to just look around the town at which we were temporarily based. So, we quickly loaded up on won (the national currency) at 750 to the dollar and hit the high road to adventure in the little town of Wonju.

I quickly discovered that the Korean people can be very friendly to Americans in uniform. I later learned through my battery's R.O.K. army interpreter, Sgt. Kim Lee, that Koreans are very grateful for the American military presence, and because we helped them during the "1950 War," as they call it.

They aren't, however, too thrilled that Truman allowed the war to end at the 38th parallel, just north of Seoul. Much like the Germans, they would like to see Korea reunited and practically worship the memory of Gen. Douglas MacArthur, who drove to capture the entire Korean peninsula before being fired by Truman.

An Army command vehicle and an M109-A3 howitzer

At times, our interpreter said, the Koreans resent the fact that the U.S. allowed the war to end as it did. But, he admitted, there is very little that can be done to remove the political boundaries between the two Koreas at this time short of war.

In our travels through Wonju and subsequent cities in the "Land of the Morning Calm" we were most impressed by the almost total acceptance of the Korean people to our presence. Children would readily run up to us and try to speak with us while their parents watched, smiling approvingly.

Numerous times individuals would approach us and try out their command of English on us, asking questions about what part of America we were from and what it was most famous for. Almost surprisingly, Evan Mecham's name didn't seem to register but deserts and cactus did.

The countryside is extremely hilly and mountainous with small valleys containing either rivers or rice paddies. Sgt. Lee once told me that "if you stretched Korea out so that it was flat, it would be a very large country." And, since South Korea lies on about the same latitude as Colorado, it has its share of pine trees and extremely cold weather.

The 1/180's role in the "war" was to support a R.O.K. infantry division which was on the offensive. This required us to move up to three times a day — sometimes in the middle of the night with little sleep, fighting the infamous Korean traffic with our 23-ton howitzers that tore up the streets if they were turned too sharply.

We quickly discovered that the orange army was taking this war game very seriously. I figure I was "killed" twice during the three week period, both times within supposedly "secure" areas. First, by an attack helicopter which strafed our position, and the second time by enemy soldiers who had infiltrated our rear lines and attacked our base camp.

Despite the fact that we were constantly moving, we always could be assured that wherever we went there would be a kind of "mom and pop" store set up just outside of our camp within an hour of our arrival.

Set up in small tents, these Koreans would sell soft drinks, such Korean delicacies as barbeque squid, and a kind of Korean ramen noodles. Since the average American soldier would rather eat ramen noodles than field rations, I am sure they did very well. Even the squid, which tastes like a sweet fish and came in a plastic package like beef jerky, sold quickly.

Near the end of the exercise I got an opportunity to take a train to Korea's capitol and largest city, Seoul. Sgt. Lee had told me not to judge Korea by the countryside, and I could understand why.

Seoul is a sprawling city which covers the surrounding hills with wall-to-wall housing. The streets are crowded with both traffic and pedestrians — made worse by the hundreds of street vendors who set up shop on the sidewalks and try to coax passing tourists to buy anything from fake Rolex watches to dried octopus.

And let me tell you, after two and a half weeks 8,500 miles from home, the sight of a Burger King, Pizza Hut, Baskin-Robbins, Kentucky Fried Chicken and Wendy's all clustered together in downtown Seoul were a sight for sore eyes.

After three weeks in Korea, we were glad to board that 747 for home and an enthusiastic cheer rose up throughout the airplane as we lifted off. I was glad to have participated in the exercise and I really did not mind missing classes for it.

Team Spirit is a learning experience for all and I learned my fair share. As a junior army officer, I learned what a major field exercise is like and how to better perform my job. As a U.S. citizen, I learned what South Korea, the nation so often in the news, is really like. And I drew some conclusions.

Despite some in the U.S. who would say that Korea should not receive American military aid because of its history of autocracy and dictatorships, Koreans really seem to want a true democracy and have proven this by the recent free elections in that country.

They really seem to appreciate the American military presence and with such a strategic location, it would be folly for the U.S. to alter its present policies toward this growing and rapidly industrializing Third World country.

Governor, chief justice to dedicate wing Friday

Gov. Rose Mofford and Arizona Supreme Court Chief Justice Frank X. Gordon will dedicate the new wing of the College of Law Building at a 5 p.m. Friday ceremony in the college's Great Hall.

A 4 p.m. open house will precede the dedication of the $2 million law building expansion, which increased the structure's capacity from 82,000 square feet to 100,000 square feet.

The two-story expansion included 26 new faculty offices, a student services area, administrative offices, a student lounge, faculty lounge and space for the library's technical services.

In addition, 14,500 square feet of the building was renovated, including library improvements.

The project took approximately a year to complete. Armstrong Hall was constructed in 1967.

KAET-TV to give archive video of impeachment trial

From staff and wire reports

More than 113 miles of videotape of the historic Arizona Senate Court of Impeachment of Gov. Evan Mecham will be turned over by KAET-TV to a permanent archive Friday, station officials said Wednesday.

KAET general manager Charles R. Allen said he will hand over the videotapes to Neal Kurn, president of the Arizona Bar Foundation — the agency responsible for funding the archival recording.

Kurn will then present the tapes to Sharon G. Womack, director of the Arizona Department of Library, Archives and Public Records, for future use and preservation.

The Court of Impeachment, held Feb. 29 to April 6, consumed 156 hours of live television and more than 72 boxes of videotape.

KAET-TV, located in ASU's Stauffer Hall, provided live gavel-to-gavel coverage of the trial and archived the proceedings on 1-inch, three-quarter-inch and half-inch videotape.

The Arizona Bar Foundation provided $17,213 for tape stock to record the 5½-week trial.

Kurn said "the opportunity to preserve for history this complete video record will no doubt prove to be a partnership of historic importance whose significance will grow with the years."

Dan Durrenberger, KAET station manager and executive producer of the live televised coverage, said "this is the first time a gubernatorial impeachment has been preserved on videotape in the 200-year history of the United States. The archive tapes represent a unique resource for future legal scholars, political scientists and historians."

Womack said the tapes will be maintained in a vault with proper environmental controls for their preservation.

'Bomber' injures, maims 21 people with clever devices

By MIKE BURGESS

State Press

Hugh Scrutton was walking to lunch on a winter day in 1985 when he stumbled across what looked like a bag of garbage sitting in the parking lot behind RenTech, his computer rental store in Sacramento, Calif.

To keep someone from tripping over it, Scrutton, 38, leaned over and grabbed the bag.

"Seconds after he exited (the building), people inside heard a 'kaboom!'" Detective Bob Bell, a Sacramento County Sheriff's homicide investigator, said. "An employee ran out and saw him with a real stunned look on his face, and there was a large hole in his chest. His hand was also missing."

Scrutton died minutes later.

Although he is "the Bomber's" only fatality, 21 others have been injured or maimed by his cleverly disguised devices.

The FBI says he likes to target universities, especially their electronic or computer engineering departments. He also likes businesses that utilize the same type of equipment.

One of his victims, a University of California-Berkeley electronic engineering professor, recalls how one of the "the Bomber's" devices blew his fingers off July 2, 1982.

He said he doesn't want his name used because he is afraid "the guy will come back and finish the job."

"I went in to make some coffee about 7:30 a.m. and saw a piece of electronic equipment lying on the floor," he said. "Since there was a lot of construction going on I thought it belonged to one of the workers so I picked it up . . . it took my fingers off."

"The Bomber" hit again at Berkeley in 1985. A bomb hidden in a notebook almost completely destroyed the hand of an astronaut studying at the college.

"It ruined his career," the professor said, adding that Berkeley now has signs posted in buildings. The signs display a box surrounded by a circle with diagonal slash through the middle discouraging people from leaving things in hallways or picking up things.

"I doubt they'll ever catch this guy," he said.

Bomber

Caucasian, 25 to 30 years old, 5 foot 10 inches tall, 165 pounds, with reddish-blond (possibly sunbleached) hair and a mustache. He wore sunglasses and a gray sweatshirt with the hood covering most of his head.

Agents say "The Bomber" feels comfortable in the academic community and on university campuses. He has placed four devices in public areas on three campuses without arousing suspicion.

They say he has access to machine tools and woodworking equipment to fabricate and assemble the devices.

There is a $60,000 reward offered for the "The Bomber's" arrest and conviction.

Anyone with information on "The Bomber" can call any FBI office or UNABOM Task Force Center in Salt Lake City at 801/355-7521.

"This guy is a weirdo," Clegg said.

Experts gather at conference on fetal, infant AIDS

By MICHELLE ALLMAN
State Press

A conference on fetal and infant AIDS is bringing together the top AIDS experts from across the country to the Valley Friday to discuss the expected rise in the number of perinatal cases in Arizona.

"Perinatal AIDS: Responding to the Challenge" is the brainchild of Diane Kruse, an instructor in ASU's College of Nursing. The conference is designed to help prepare Arizona nurses, health care professionals and social workers to deal with the expected increase in perinatal AIDS.

Currently there are four infants with the disease in Arizona, but the number is expected to increase dramatically during the next few years.

"We want to be prepared," Kruse said, "and we want to zero in on how nurses and others can protect themselves and find out more about providing care to families who are dealing with AIDS."

Gail Lloyd, a spokeswoman for the Center for Disease Control in Atlanta, said there are 804 children under five years of age in the United States with AIDS.

The Maricopa County Health Department reports since 1981 there have been three AIDS cases and three AIDS-related-complex cases in Maricopa County in children under 13. Judy Swanson, a registered nurse with MCHD, said she believes these statistics may be inaccurately low.

"Just because it (AIDS) is reportable doesn't mean it gets reported," she said. "We have a lot of unreported cases and a lot of infants not being tested."

Swanson said reports reveal that in the state of New York, one out of 60 infants is born HIV positive.

"Right now, we (Arizona) are not a hotbed for AIDS," Swanson said. "In the future, as we see more adults being diagnosed with AIDS, I'm certain we'll see more (perinatal and infant cases)."

Steven Engender, assistant director of disease prevention at ADHS and conference speaker, also noted the contrast between Arizona and New York.

"In Arizona we don't have the same type of pattern as in New York," Engender said. "Seventy-five percent of the perinatal cases there (New York) are a result of one or more of the parents being IV drug users. Here, ours are more often the result of transfusions and hemophilia (in the child)."

Engender's speech, titled "Current Status of AIDS in Arizona," will deal primarily with the concentration of AIDS cases in Arizona in comparison with the rest of the country.

According to the Presidential Commission on the Human Immunodeficiency Virus (HIV) Epidemic's interim report, between 10,000 and 20,000 infants and children will suffer or die from AIDS in the next three years. In most cases, children contract the disease through perinatal transmission during pregnancy and the period closely surrounding the time of birth.

The conference is targeted primarily at health care professionals, specifically nurses and social workers.

Kruse says dealing with people who have been touched by AIDS involves dealing with many strong emotions — fear perhaps being the most common.

Because of the contact with blood and body secretions, there is a high potential for infection in labor and delivery, Kruse says, adding that fear is legitimate but possible to deal with.

"Fear can be reduced when the staff learns effective precautions," Kruse said. "(Reducing fear is important because) nurses and social workers need to be informed about and prepared to deal with perinatal AIDS."

Engender said he believes the medical community is becoming more informed, and therefore less paranoid, about the disease.

"We can measure the knowledge and information (of health-care professionals) as more informed than when the disease first emerged in 1981," he said. "One would hope that this knowledge would lead to the diminishing of fears."

Precautions for the protection of clinical staff and strategies that agencies can use to deal with the staff's fears of contracting AIDS will be discussed at the conference.

Barbara Wintergalen, the ASU College of Nursing program coordinator and conference organizer, said she agrees that the medical community is less fearful of AIDS but does not believe the panic has lessened any in the public sector.

"I really can't see that the public's fears are being allayed," she said.

The conference is sponsored by the ASU College of Nursing, the ASU School of Social Work, the Arizona Department of Health Services, Good Samaritan Medical Center, the March of Dimes, Phoenix Children's Hospital and the Arizona Perinatal Social Workers. It will be held at the Holiday Inn, 1600 S. Country Club Drive in Mesa.

The conference will begin at 8:45 a.m. with keynote speaker Martha Rogers, medical epidemiologist and chief of the Pediatric and Family Studies Section of the AIDS program at the Center for Disease Control in Atlanta. "The Realities of Perinatal AIDS" is the topic of Roger's address.

Rogers is responsible for monitoring the CDC national surveillance for AIDS in children. She has designed and implemented studies involving the transmission and history of AIDS in families, from mothers to infants and in other heterosexual populations.

Roxana Bacon, of a Phoenix law firm, and the Rev. Edward Sutherland of the Episcopal Campus Ministry, will address the "Legal and Ethical Issues" of perinatal AIDS.

A social worker and a nurse from the AIDS Comprehensive Family Care Center of the Albert Einstein College of Medicine in New York will describe their research and practice project that focuses on perinatal AIDS. It is through this technique that mothers and infants with AIDS from four New York hospitals are provided with health care.

Other sessions in the afternoon will address the physical, psychological and social needs of mothers, infants and their families.

For more information on the conference, contact Barbara Wintergalen at 965-7431.

Police investigating death, anesthetic shot suspected

By MIKE BURGESS
State Press

Debra Susan Tomazin lost more than the few pounds she expected from the free weight-loss operation her best friend was going to perform. She lost her life.

In March, police said Tomazin, 24, of Tempe, suffered an apparent heart attack while driving with her friend, 25-year-old Stacy Bickel. She was brain-dead and placed on life-support at Desert Samaritan Hospital where she died three days later.

police report

Bickel, an unlicensed medical assistant, told investigators she was near her office when Tomazin passed out, and drove there to call paramedics.

Now police say Bickel was attempting to perform free liposuction surgery on Tomazin. An autopsy performed by the murder. The report was returned Wednesday for revisions, police said.

"I've never seen anything like this before," said Sgt. Mike Palmer, a Tempe homicide investigator. "It's just an unusual, unfortunate case."

Palmer said Bickel, who has since been fired from her job with Dr. Richard Pavese, a Tempe plastic surgeon, told investigators she thought that since she helped doctors perform the operations she could do it on her friend.

"They were getting ready to do it," he said. "She started the actual preparation but she never got to do it."

Maricopa County medical examiner shows she died of an irregular heart beat due to the injection of a local anesthetic called Lidocaine.

On Tuesday police sent a report to the Maricopa County Attorney's Office asking that Bickel be charged with second degree

ASU theatre group presents 'exploratory' performances

By KENNETH WALSH
State Press

ASU's Interpreters Theatre Troupe will present two "exploratory" performances, depicting the lives of "Frances" and "Mrs. F. Scott Fitzgerald" at 6:30 p.m. today through Saturday in the courtyard garden between West and Dixie Gammage Halls.

Frederick C. Corey, an ASU communications professor and the show's director, said interpretation performances are "highly exploratory," because they allow the director to utilize various forms of communication.

"The interpretation and performance of literature is the study of how literary texts are transformed into staged productions," Corey said.

The show opens with a performance of "Frances." Corey wrote the text for "Frances" in which the woman becomes furious when she discovers her husband has been having an affair.

In the course of the performance, Frances tells her children a bedtime story, selecting the myth of the Greek mythological character Medea. In the telling of the story, Frances enacts the rage, revenge, jealousy and madness of Medea.

Corey said as the performance progresses, the allusion to Medea becomes an illusion on stage.

The second performance is the story of Zelda Fitzgerald. Corey said "Mrs. F. Scott Fitzgerald" explores Zelda's life and marriage in the larger context of the 1920s. He said the action will take place in Zelda's memory, transformed in a lawn party.

Corey said the spoken text is derived from Zelda's novel, "Save Me the Last Waltz," Nancy Milford's biography, "Zelda" and "The Letters of F. Scott Fitzgerald" by Andrew Turnbull.

Corey said he chose to study Zelda Fitzgerald for a variety of reasons.

"I picked Zelda because she not only represents an era, but a type of human tragedy as well," Corey said.

"She never really lived her own soul, she was always doing things for other people — mainly her husband," he said.

Corey said Zelda was "great to work with" because she is so symbolic.

Corey said the two-performance production uses a combination of movement, masks, music and language as its form of communication. He said the shows are intended for people looking for new forms of art, and they are not for everyone.

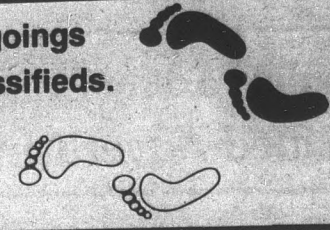

"Students who are interested in performance arts but have found themselves uninterested in conventional drama might find these shows exciting," Corey said.

Corey said both "Frances" and "Mrs. F. Scott Fitzgerald" are examples of integrated forms in the performing arts.

Corey said admission is $3 and all are welcome.

Statistics show 57 percent of rapes occur on dates

By CARRI MITCHELL
State Press

The college-age woman is walking down a dimly lit sidewalk late at night. Suddenly, out of the bushes jumps an unshaven, crazed man who throws the woman into the bushes and rapes her.

Despite belief to the contrary, this scenario does not describe a typical rape.

According to statistics gathered on 32 campuses by Mary Koss, a UofA psychologist, one in four women between the time of their 14th birthday and their college graduation will be a victim of rape or an attempted rape.

Furthermore, Koss' study also found that 84 percent of those women knew the man who had attacked them, and 57 percent of the women were on dates when the attack occurred.

Acquaintance or date rape is defined as any forced sexual intercourse by someone you know.

However, Ruth Fassinger, an ASU counselor in Counseling and Consultation, said 90 percent of all date rapes go unreported.

The reason for the silence around date rape stems from the social stigma of rape and the common reaction by the victim and her peers that she is somehow responsible, Fassinger said.

"We basically live in a culture which teaches women that they are the ones that have to set sexual limits and which teaches men that they are victims of their unbridled passions and whatever hormonal things are going on in their bodies," Fassinger said. "And basically that they are not responsible for themselves sexually."

Fassinger also said that because of society's view that women are responsible for controlling sexual situations and that if a woman is raped she somehow asked for it, the court system is not sympathetic toward the victims.

ASU Police Chief C. Russell Duncan agreed with Fassinger but said that reporting the incident is not as important for the victim as getting some kind of psychological counseling.

"I get women in here all the time who say, 'I don't want to press charges, I just want to tell someone.' I act as a referral for them," he said.

However, Fassinger said one-third of the women attacked never tell anyone about the experience.

Fassinger recommends that a rape victim should still seek medical help, even if she does not want to press charges.

When a victim of rape goes to a hospital emergency room, Fassinger said the doctors are required to call the police. However, she said that filling out a police report will not obligate the victim to press charges.

"You are in no shape to be making a decision at that time. But if you decide to press charges later, at least you will have the evidence," she said.

Fassinger said date rape is different from stranger rape because it instills a sense of guilt in the victim.

Robbie Adler agrees.

Adler was a 20-year-old undergraduate student at Penn State when she was raped by a friend.

Adler, now a doctoral student at ASU, explained that she and a group of co-ed friends often went out and "partied."

But because none of them wanted to drink and then drive, they had an agreement that they would spend the night at the party-holder's house.

"We were more like family," she said.

On one of these nights, Adler was held down on a bed and raped by one of her close friends.

Adler said at the time she only told her roommate, who did not give her any support. It was not until two years later, when she related her experience to another person, that she realized she had been raped.

Fassinger said this is common. She said only 20 percent of all date rape victims identify their situation as rape.

In a study on date rape, Fassinger said, women were asked if they had ever been forced to have sex with a man and then later in the survey they were asked if they had been raped. Only 20 percent of those answering 'yes' to the first question answered 'yes' to the second.

"There is a real stigma attached to identifying the situation as rape, which makes it very hard to deal with the problem on college campuses because women will not identify what has happened to them as rape," Fassinger said.

Adler said she thinks the key to preventing date rape is communication and awareness.

"We must get people to be more open and to communicate more in all relationships," Adler said.

In order to prevent date rapes from happening on the ASU campus, a task force was formed to study the problem.

Cynthia Gordon, the chairwoman of the Residence Life task force on date rape, said the task force was organized into two committees: the coordinating committee, made up of staff administration and faculty members; and the Residence Life committee, made up of staff members and students from campus organizations.

Gordon said the coordinating committee put together information on date rape gathered from 12 other campuses and then issued recommendations on how to stop the attacks.

The Residence Life committee is involved in distributing information on the subject, Gordon said. Last fall the committee spoke with sorority pledge classes and in residence halls and fraternities.

"We can't blame either party," Gordon said. "We must change male/female communication and change sex stereotypes."

Gordon said stopping date rape is a re-education process. She said Residence Life is going to try holding date rape seminars during freshman orientation next fall.

Fassinger said there are many things that need to be done in order to prevent date rape:

- Teach women assertiveness.
- Assertiveness training and self-defense are two really important things that every woman should learn," Fassinger said.
- Teach women to give clear messages.
- Teach men that 'no' means 'no,' and teach both sexes that women have the right to change their minds at any time.
- Teach women to talk to other women and not hide violent experiences.

Both Fassinger and Duncan said controlling alcohol and other substance intake is also important in stopping date rape.

"Ninety-five percent of the (date rape) cases I've seen involve substance abuse," Duncan said.

Fassinger said, "Alcohol impairs the ability to think clearly."

Duncan also recommends that a woman out on a date should know the person she is out with and should know where they are going. And if necessary she should be able to take a cab home.

Adler said she thinks people are too nice and that women worry too much about embarrassing the guy.

"Scream! Tell him to get the hell away from you," she said.

Adler also said women should think about what they would do if someone tried to rape them before it ever happens.

"I was in shock. I was so nice, I did not do anything about it. I wish I had kicked him in the balls — brought my knee up and hurt him," she said.

Adler said she would now recommend that rape victims report their assault, mainly so that the man cannot hurt anyone else, and also to show him he did something wrong.

"I believe for sure that the guy who did this has no clue, no clue at all what he did to me," Adler said.

Adler said she now tells men that they should not listen for the women to say "no" but for her to say "yes."

A pamphlet put out by the University of California-Santa Barbara's Rape Prevention Education Program lists some behaviors women should watch for in men.

The pamphlet said women should watch for someone who:

- Gets hostile when you say "no."
- Ignores your wishes, opinions and ideas.
- Ignores your personal space boundaries.
- Attempts to make you feel guilty or uptight about not having sex.
- Displays anger and aggression.
- Is excessively jealous or possessive.

Victim reveals personal experience of rape, life after rape

By MICHAELA GUBBELS

One out of every 10 women will be raped in her lifetime. This is a sobering statistic. Sadly, that is what it remains to most everyone, solely a statistic. Not me — I am officially a rape victim. I am writing to you today hoping that you will hear my message and that it will be powerful enough to prevent it from happening to you. There has been so much talk lately about rape, including the "Take back the night" rally and the speaker on date rape and even letters to the editor — I feel that to truly understand rape you must understand the victim, too.

As residents of Arizona, we often assume we are already out of any dangerous situation. Think again:

- In the United States, there are 36.6 rapes per 100,000 people.
- In Arizona, there are 45.7 rapes per 100,000 people.
- In Phoenix, there are 63 rapes per 100,000 people.

We are well above the national average, and being so, it is time we examined sexual assault in more detail.

Picture yourself going to sleep tonight. You are lying on your bed in the dark with your eyes closed. Now, imagine waking up to find that your arms are tied together behind your head, your face is covered, and you can barely breathe. Go further and imagine trying to move or even scream and feeling the cold edge of a knife press against your chest and hearing a male's voice whisper in your ear, "If you fucking move, I'm going to fucking kill you!" And that is only the beginning. . . . This was my life only eight months ago. I was raped. I have relived and re-experienced every moment of this assault thousands of times.

I now notice every time I am alone, whether it is walking to my car after class or going into an empty bathroom. I am alone and I am scared. The facts are scary. If you or I are not the next victims, it will probably be our mother, our girlfriend or our best friend. Sexual assault is not selective.

I wish I could be in your shoes, reading this article and feeling bad for a few moments and then moving on . . . but I have to live and deal with my rape every hour of my life. I still wake up occasionally at the exact time I was woken by that cold steel blade. I only wish I didn't have to think about it, but every second I begin to forget, I feel the blade slicing my chest and I remember.

A complete stranger has taken my security and my freedom from me. I'll never know who he was and neither will you. The fact is, he could be anyone. Look around you — rapists don't wear labels and they aren't the ones who you think look "perverted." They are average-appearing males probably with families and friends just like yours. Their only distinguishing characteristic is their demented perception of power and aggression.

Rape is not an act of sexual desire. In fact, a majority of convicted rapists report their inability to perform because they are so high on the power. It is nevertheless a sex crime. Sex is the tool used to conquer the victim — to assert dominance and superiority.

It is pretty tragic that our society can produce this demented attitude, but how far are we from it really? How many times have you heard "locker room" talk about the previous weekend or who got what? Most of these attitudes are not even as direct as this. How many of the girls at ASU have walked directly past the escort service table in the MU alone and not bothered to stop? I hate to break it to all of you, but these kinds of attitudes contribute to the phenomenon of sexual assault.

You aren't as safe as you'd like to think. I used to wonder what kind of "men-haters" used the escort service. . . . Now, I cannot believe the number of people who do not. No, it is not fair that women must take extra measures to ensure their safety, but we must. Escort services are not the only solution, but they are a start to changing attitudes and stopping sexual assaults.

A rape occurs in the United States every six minutes. I have been reduced to a six-minute statistic (kind of like a hard-boiled egg). Someone who has broken a law of our society and a fundamental human law has taken my peace of mind away. Incidentally, 98 percent of rapists will do it again and again.

The first few months after my rape, I lost a lot of sleep. Listening to every noise, watching every shadow. I have overcome my nightly terror because I sought out the excellent support our society offers. In most major cities, there are projects expressly designed to aid victims. Here in our area, it is called CASA — the Center Against Sexual Assault. I have started volunteering there in order to help the thousands of women just like me. I know how they feel and I know that it is awful. Only 11 percent of rapes are reported. That means that there are nine girls like me, suffering like me and not getting any help. That is an awful thought, and I encourage any victim of sexual assault or date rape to seek help now — there are resources available, and you can survive it with help!

A person who has been sexually assaulted has been violated. It is a violation of the self, second only to murder in its impact on the psyche . . . murder? I used to think it would have been better if he would have killed me. Now, I know that we must all think about and implement changes in our society so no one else will want to be murdered. It is sad that this kind of thought can even exist.

I cannot believe how much I have survived, but more importantly, I can't believe how much there is to survive. Something must change. I am not suggesting violent protests. I am suggesting imparting a greater sense of respect and value on each and every human being. I don't think every man is a "sex maniac," but I do believe we are all lazy until it happens to us or someone close to us. I was.

I am hoping to communicate to you my experience so you won't have to discover for yourself. Because no one should have to live through this.

I have risked humiliation and degradation in sharing my experience with you, but that isn't half the threat to me as is the threat of it happening to you. It happens and it happens here at ASU. A lot more than anyone, even the police, would ever admit.

As college students, most of us fall into the average age for both victims and offenders, and we are all young enough to still believe safety isn't quite that important.

Well it wasn't to me . . . even though I had my doors and windows locked, he still got in and he still raped me. Now I carry mace and am a white belt in karate. I am still scared, but I can assure you that it won't happen to me again. I wish I could say the same for you.

ASU is big, but not big enough not to feel the effects of the small efforts of each individual. Assert your rights as a human being! We all should be able to feel safe in our homes, our school and our city. The fact remains, though: We are not safe. I've had to learn the hard way about the vulnerability of human beings. I have learned, though, and I survived. I'm hoping I have helped you do the same. Very bad things happen to very good people.

Editor's note: Michaela Gubbels was raped in her dorm room on Aug. 16, 1987, while she was a student at Claremont-McKenna College in Claremont, Calif. Gubbels, now a first-semester psychology major at ASU, said her attacker was never caught.

Phoenix Cardinals tight end 'teeter-totter' for fundraiser

Phoenix Cardinals tight end Colin Scotts displayed his teeter-tottering skills on campus Wednesday to help the Sigma Sigma Sigma sorority and the Tau Kappa Epsilon fraternity raise money for the Robbie Page Memorial fund.

The fund, established by the parents of Page, who died from Polio in 1951, donates money to various Polio research projects around the country.

The Greek organizations, with the help of a giant teeter-totter located in front of the fountain at the MU, attracted sponsors to donate money for each hour of a 72-hour teeter-totter-a-thon, which will conclude Friday. A fishbowl has also been set up to collect donations.

Scotts, a native of Australia and ex-rugby star, said he enjoys doing charity work.

"I did a lot of charity work in St. Louis, and I plan to do a lot more here in Phoenix," Scotts said. "The people here are fantastic — they're really behind the team."

Scotts said he became involved with the fundraising effort through his earlier connections with the TKEs. Fraternity members offered Scotts lodging at their house, until he found a permanent place to live in the Valley.

UofA head football coach Dick Tomey, who recruited Scotts when Tomey was coach at the University of Hawaii, said he first noticed Scotts when he was playing in a rugby exhibition in California in 1981. Tomey said he traveled all the way to Australia to recruit Scotts.

"He's (Tomey) the man who started it all for me," Scotts said. "I was at the University of Hawaii for five years. I redshirted my first year because I had no idea what I was doing."

Last year, Scotts played defensive end for the Cardinals after being drafted in the third round. He said he was comfortable with the move to tight end.

"I'm ready to play there," he said. "I like the position; I played there in college."

Scotts said he was happy about the picks his team made in this year's draft and the way the team has been treated so far.

"From what I've heard, the first three picks were good for us," he said. "They're all good athletes."

"Everyone I've met so far is behind the team 100 percent. The other guys on the team are fired up."

Lecture series officials disappointed with student turnout

By KELLY PEARCE
State Press

Thousands of student dollars were pumped into the Associated Students Lectures Series this year to bring renowned speakers to campus, but lecture series officials are disappointed at student turnout for the speeches.

Thirteen lecturers were brought to ASU by the lecture series, including G. Gordon Liddy, an important participant in the Watergate scandal; Alex Haley, winner of the Pulitzer Prize for "Roots"; and William F. Buckley Jr., a political figure and close friend to several presidents.

Guy Roll, director of the ASASU Lecture Series, said he felt frustration and guilt about the lack of student attendance at events his department spent a lot of time and money publicizing.

"I felt guilty because the student was paying all this money and the turnout was low. It was the most frustrating part of the year," he said.

Included in tuition, students must pay a $25 activities fee for ASASU.

The lecture series office had a $71,374 budget to play around with. Breakdown of the budget included $54,530 for payment to the speakers and $1,200 to rent university cars and provide dinners and receptions for the lecturers.

Roll said the price to lure the most attractive speakers was expensive. Buckley was handed $11,000 for his visit and one-hour lecture, Haley was given $7,800 and Liddy received $4,200.

But despite the publicity and renowned speakers, students still stayed away from the events, Roll said. And the lack of student involvement was frustrating for everyone involved in organizing the speeches.

"People are ignorant," lecture series volunteer Sharon Phillips said. "They don't realize how much they can benefit from these lectures, and they don't take advantage of them. I just can't understand this."

But the year did have a lot of high points, Roll added. More than 1,200 people turned out for Liddy's speech earlier in the semester with standing room only.

Several complaints rolled into the lecture series office concerning Liddy, but the turnout shows people were curious to see the felon in person, Roll said.

And they benefitted from these lecture experiences, he added. "I think anyone who has gone to a lecture has learned something."

Roll admitted that he did. "It (being director) was a life education. You can't beat having cocktails with William F. Buckley," he said.

Similarly, assistant director Alexis Tougas said her role in bringing lecturers to ASU "was an opportunity of a lifetime" and provided her with countless connections.

"The guests are really concerned with what the students are doing," she said.

While Roll said he enjoyed his job this year, he put a lot of energy into it to make it work.

His efforts began last summer when he concocted a "wish list" naming the speakers he would like to bring to campus. Then, he browsed through brochures put out by agencies that supply the lecturers.

ASU foreign student club holds international festival

By ROBIE KAKONGE
State Press

An ASU foreign student club will hold the first-ever "Dexfest International" festival to inform the Tempe community about international issues this weekend at Tempe Hayden Square.

Dynamic Exchange is an on-campus club that has more than 200 foreign-born as well as American-born student members.

Terry Cotton, a DEX social director, said by hosting the event the club hopes to bring the Tempe community more in touch with international issues.

"We are trying to make a statement through our club that we are an action club and we make things happen," Cotton said. "We are trying to bring members of the club together with others."

The day-long, free Saturday event, which is an intercultural arts and music fair, will feature a variety of entertainment.

The event will be held from 10 a.m. to 10 p.m. and will feature appearances from local bands and possible appearances from Phoenix Cardinals football players and Tempe Mayor Harry Mitchell.

Thomas named ASU chairman

By NICK VAN NICE
Contributing Writer

A Louisiana State University professor, Jerry R. Thomas, has been named to chair ASU's department of health and physical education beginning July 1.

Thomas is a professor in the physical education and psychology department at LSU in Baton Rouge, La., where he has instructed for the last 11 years. He will replace current chair Robert P. Pangrazi.

Professor Daniel Landers, who chaired the seven-person search committee, said chairmen serve four years, and Pangrazi is serving his final year.

Landers said the search committee selected Thomas from a field of about 30 applicants, and the dean's office offered the position to Thomas in early March.

"It's hard to move full professors," Landers said. "We were fortunate in getting a good one to come here."

Thomas said in a telephone interview that he will come to ASU May 7 and stay until May 11, then settle in the Valley in mid-June.

"I'll teach some," Thomas said. "I've done research in sport skills and children's skill acquisitions."

Thomas, 47, has written four books, including "Introduction to Research and Health in Physical Education" and "Recreation and Dance," which he said is the best-selling text for graduate research methods.

"What I want to do is to enhance the really outstanding programs that they have at ASU," Thomas said.

"ASU has been recognized by the American Academy of Physical Education, which is the academy awards of physical education," he said. "I will represent the sixth member of its (ASU's) faculty of 106 active AAPE members."

"I don't believe any of the other major universities have six members."

The five AAPE members at ASU are Landers, Associate Dean Gary Krahenbuhl, Professor Charles B. Corbin, Professor James S. Skinner and Professor Christine L. Wells.

Thomas is the editor of Research Quarterly for Exercise and Sport.

"It is the oldest and probably best-known scholarly journal in the field of physical education," he said.

Thomas said that his wife, Katherine, will be a part-time visiting assistant professor at ASU, heading a clinical program for children.

McWhortor

McWhortor replaces Joe Mikitish, 21, a UofA senior economics major. Mikitish said McWhortor was an "excellent" choice as his replacement, and that McWhortor can expect to work 30-35 hours every week.

Although McWhortor's term does not start until July, he said he will closely follow the board's work, including the public hearing next month to decide whether owners of skyboxes in Sun Devil Stadium can drink booze during Phoenix Cardinals games while the rest of the 70,000 fans can't.

"I'm inclined against it (allowing alcohol at games). It displays a certain amount of elitism," McWhortor said, hinting at his liberal foundation.

But are the regents too elite for Arizona's 90,000 university students?

"I don't know. Ask me a year from now," McWhortor said.

Alan Price, a Board of Regents spokesman, said the student regent, although he or she does not have a vote, influences the body "a lot more than you think."

Mikitish, during this month's meeting in Tucson, convinced the board to schedule a public hearing on the Cardinals alcohol issue rather than letting the board vote and get the dilemma out of its hair. Price said Mikitish's persuasion was a prime example of how a student regent can work.

ASASU President Karrin Kunasek said McWhortor has the chance to make important inroads with the board that will affect university education in Arizona for the next decade.

"We have been growing along with a system that has had to deal with incredible growth but really hasn't grown up yet," McWhortor said. "We've never really sat down and said, 'What are we really going to do?'"

"This is a time to do that. This is a time to make some serious inroads."

Jack Beasley/State Press

ASU political science major Patrick McWhortor is Gov. Rose Mofford's choice for student appointee to the Arizona Board of Regents. McWhortor is waiting for confirmation from the Arizona Senate.

ASU foreign language department suffers budget cut

By NICK VAN NICE
Contributing Writer

The Arizona Legislature has enacted a state-wide budget reversion, and ASU's foreign language department will do without $3,321 in equipment and supplies to pay its share.

Foreign language department Chairman Peter Horwath said, "We've been operating on an extremely tight budget, and I'm not sure yet from which sources I can make it up."

"Lecture, travel, postage, telephone? I don't know," he said.

Gov. Rose Mofford signed Senate Bill 1110 on Feb. 26 to retrieve $25.3 million from Arizona's budget. The reversion includes more than $1.82 million from ASU.

Doug Cornell, executive coordinator for the College of Liberal Arts, said that the 30 individual budgets in the college, including foreign language, will take across-the-board cuts of 4.5 percent.

The College of Liberal Arts must return about $70,000 to the vice president for academic affairs by the end of April, Cornell said.

Graduate teaching assistant Beatriz Ramirez shares a 16-by-16-foot office with seven other instructors because the foreign language department has no other room for her.

"There is no telephone in this room," Ramirez said. "If a student has an emergency and can't come to class, you can't get the message unless you go to the (department) office."

Ramirez said that she needs to make 20 copies to give her students a quiz, so she rations her credit to the department's copier.

"We are only allowed 20 copies a day," Ramirez said. "We have to use this medieval mimeograph machine, and it's a mess to run it."

Ramirez said that mimeograph copies are often smudged or faint, and students cannot read the print.

"It's a handicap for us because the students think, 'She doesn't care,'" Ramirez said. "You can't plan anything because the machines break down."

Ramirez said the budget is a problem for instructors because they can't plan the classwork, and it is a problem for students because they don't get what they should from the classes.

Students are also having problems enrolling in classes due to limited space.

Graduate teaching assistant Patrick Sweeney said that student Lisa McDowell tried to enroll this fall and spring in Spanish 201 courses. The classes were full, even though she went through early registration, he said. Sweeney said that during a lapse between courses, students forget a language, then they are handicapped when they continue.

McDowell is one of many students who cannot get into foreign language classes because there is not enough room.

Ellie Akins, foreign language department administrative assistant, said that with early registration some students cannot get into some classes.

"We know how many teaching assistants we can hire and how many it takes to staff the courses," Akins said. "So we know how many students we can teach because of the money that comes in."

Akins said that in early registration for fall 1988, 430 students applied for 352 Spanish 101 classroom seats, and 352 students applied for 320 Spanish 201 classroom seats. This is still early registration, and the foreign language department is turning away 110 students from these courses alone, she said.

"We set these courses up in the fall, then the Legislature says it wants a budget cut," Akins said.

The foreign language department serves 5,163 students with about 50 faculty members and 40 teaching assistants, Horwath said.

"This isn't the dean's fault," Horwath added. "It's the Legislature that has let us down."

Lecture series

Most of the speakers were scheduled during a time when their speeches or backgrounds would be most pertinent, Roll said.

Cousteau Society representatives, who spoke about the Gulf of California, came to ASU just prior to spring break.

Haley visited the campus during February — Black Heritage Month.

And Jack Anderson, who unearthed "Irangate," discussed his findings when the situation was foremost on the minds of Americans.

"I worked on trying to fit people in with different things going on," Roll said.

After the speakers were scheduled to speak at ASU, posters and advertisements were drafted, he said.

Then on the day of the speech, lunches, dinners and receptions were held in honor of the lecturers.

Roll's job was not done until the lecturers stepped foot off of campus.

This year was one of the most successful years in terms of lectures, he said.

"We definitely have the best program in the state," he said with confidence.

ASU's rival UofA has a $50,000 lecture budget.

Money hindered Roll from getting Jean Kirkpatrick, former ambassador to the United Nations, for this year. Currently, she charges between $20,000 and $25,000 for public appearances, Roll said.

As prices go up to nab lecturers, universities suffer due to limited budgets, Roll said.

"Colleges kind of get screwed," he said. "But Liddy and Buckley give price breaks to universities. It is good to know individual speakers want to help universities."

Orioles lose 20th straight, tie American League mark

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — The winless Baltimore Orioles tied an American League record with their 20th straight loss Wednesday night, falling to the Minnesota Twins 7-6 when their two-run rally in the ninth inning ended as Fred Lynn grounded out.

A night that began with so much promise when the Orioles scored three runs in the first inning, finished again in failure.

Baltimore players stood in stunned silence in the eighth inning when Kent Hrbek and Tim Lardner broke a 4-4 tie with leadoff homers in the eighth against reliever Bill Scherrer, 0-1. A walk, balk and throwing error by pitcher Doug Sisk added another run, along with insult.

The Orioles never quit, however, as they managed two runs that were charged to Juan Berenguer, 3-2. Two-out RBI-singles by Cal Ripken and Eddie Murray brought Baltimore within 7-6, but reliever Keith Atherton, who allowed both run-scoring hits and earned his first save, got Lynn to end the game on a grounder to second base with runners on first and third.

The Orioles can set the league record for consecutive losses Thursday afternoon against Minnesota. They matched the mark of 20 done by the Philadelphia Athletics in 1943 and 1916 and Boston in 1906.

The modern major-league record is 23 straight losses by the Philadelphia Phillies in 1961.

Marmie hopes to fill Doll's position within few weeks

TEMPE (AP) — Arizona State football coach Larry Marmie said Wednesday that he hopes to name a replacement "within a couple of weeks" for outside linebackers' coach Kirk Doll, who has left to accept a job at another college.

Doll, 36, resigned Monday to become the new inside linebackers coach at Texas A & M after coaching at Arizona State for the last three years.

Marmie said Aggies coach Jackie Sherrill "called about a week ago and asked for permission to speak with Kirk about a job."

"It's a bit of a surprise. I hate to lose Kirk. But he feels like it's something that will help him professionally down the road."

"If I'm going to attain my goal of being a head coach at a place like ASU, I'm going to have to increase my knowledge. I also think it will be a good move for my family," said Doll, who is from Wichita, Kan. "A couple of years down the line, people will either say I was smart to go, or they're going to say I wasn't smart. It was a very difficult decision but something I felt I had to do."

Women's golf wins Pac-10 title

By DAVE BIGOS
State Press

The second-ranked ASU women's golf team does not believe in nailbiters.

The Sun Devils completed their final round of the Pac-10 Conference Championships Wednesday in Seattle, Wash., and posted a conference-record score of 1,173.

ASU finished 47 strokes ahead of second-place UCLA (1,126) and 267 strokes ahead of last-place finisher Oregon State (1,440).

Washington finished third with a score of 1,244, USC finished fourth with a score of 1,245 and Arizona finished in fifth-place, posting a score of 1,248.

Individually, the Sun Devils dominated play. Pam Wright shot a final round of 73 to give her the victory. Her total of even-par 288 was a new Pac-10 record.

Amy Fruhwirth placed second after shooting a final-round score of 74 for a total of 294. Pearl Sinn finished third with a final-round score of 75 and a 297 overall. Eve-Lyne Biron placed fifth with a final-round score of 79 and a 301 total. Missy Farr shot an even-par 72 in the final round to move her into 11th place.

Fourth-place in the tourney went to Nancy Kessler of Washington.

Three Sun Devils made first-team All-

Conference: Pam Wright, Amy Fruhwirth and Pearl Sinn. Eve-Lyne Biron made second-team All-Conference. The golfers were selected based on past-round averages and their play in the finals.

Washington's coach, Mary Lou Mulfur, received Pac-10 Coach-of-the-Year honors at the tournament.

The Sun Devils have now won two tournaments in a row (they won the Lady Sun Devil Invitational on April 13 at Anasazi Golf Course in Paradise Valley) and are hoping to carry the momentum into the NCAA Championships, which take place May 25 through 28 at Las Cruces, N.M.

Gymnast exemplifies "student-athlete" status

By GARY JACKSON
State Press

A young man wearing cruiser shorts and carrying an art bin walks into the Physical Education Building West.

He is a "student athlete."

Junior Patrick Pa lives up to the "student-athlete" reputation by balancing his role on the men's gymnastics team and as a graphic design major, a field with one of the most difficult curricula at ASU.

Since leaving Kamehameha High School in Honolulu, Hawaii, in 1985, his style has not changed much.

"A lot of times in Hawaii I'd go straight from the beach (wearing the shorts) to workout," Pa said. "That (the art bin) is just to keep all my pens in. When I leave the studio I put everything in there."

Pa strolls into the gym later than most of the athletes because of his demanding academic schedule.

"There is so much work that people can not handle it," Pa said. "Once into the program, you are not considered a student anymore. You are a designer."

Once into the gym, coach Don Robinson yells out how many sets he wants from Pa, and tells him that the other gymnasts are almost finished with their routines.

Robinson said he understands what Pa has to go through.

"Otherwise, I wouldn't mess with anybody who comes in at 5 p.m.," Robinson said. "Because of his schedule, he is limited to one event. He cannot compete in the all-around."

Practice begins at 2:30 p.m.

Pa said, along with coaching gymnastics, Robinson has helped him with his designs.

"I taught art for nine years," Robinson said. "Graphic design goes for perfection more than any other area. I'm amazed with the requirements and the work they have to do."

Graphic design is similar to advertising, Pa said, but design is more of an idea of communication rather than the selling of a product.

"I see gymnastics as a way to show my designs," Pa said. "The only way you can discipline yourself is to keep working out after everyone leaves. It's the same way for graphic design."

Sun Devil gymnast Pat Pa performs on the still rings in an earlier event. Because of academic commitments, Pa only competes in one event.

U.S. National swim team to compete at ASU

By CRIS NACKINO
State Press

Valley fans will get a chance to see several world-ranked swimmers compete as the U.S. National Swimming Team travels to Tempe for a day of top-level competition with the Sun Devils.

The meet is scheduled to begin at 7 p.m. Saturday in the Mona Plummer Aquatic Center.

The national team will include nine members of the 1984 Olympic team and several of this year's Olympic hopefuls.

"This meet should be a good time to get a close-up look at a lot of people who will be representing the U.S. this summer," ASU men's swimming coach Ron Johnson said.

The men's national team will feature three-time gold medalist Rick Carey and world-ranked freestylist Matt Biondi.

Biondi holds the world-record in the 100-meter freestyle and is considered one of the top freestylers to ever compete for the United States.

Also swimming will be Pablo Morales, the 100-meter butterfly world-record holder. Morales won three medals in the 1984 Olympics in Los Angeles.

Other swimmers for the national team include Mike Heath, who won one silver and two gold medals in the 1984 Olympics, and Tom Jager, the world-record holder in the 100 freestyle.

Although the ASU men will be facing some of the toughest competition in the world, Johnson said he remains optimistic.

"We hope to be competitive in the distance events — also in the butterfly, despite Biondi and Morales," Johnson said.

Competing for the women's national team will be Jill Sterkel, who won a gold medal in the 400-meter freestyle relay, and Betsy Mitchell, the current world-record holder in the 200-meter backstroke.

Other top competitors for the ASU women's team will be Michelle Thompson, Nancy Osborne and Jodi Quas.

ASU women's swimming coach Tim Hill said one of the primary functions of the meet is to give the public a chance to see some of the top swimmers in the country and to promote the sport in general.

Although the national team consists of several world-ranked swimmers, Hill feels his team's performance should be respectable.

"The breaststroke event should be very competitive between their girls and ours," Hill said.

"This meet will probably be the best opportunity for fans in Arizona to see so many outstanding swimmers at once," Johnson said. "It is one of the biggest congregations of star swimmers at one meet."

Baseball blight 1988: Baltimore, bailouts and balks

Dave Bigos
Asst. Sports Editor

Here are a few rambling thoughts about baseball '88:

But we can't do this without talking about you-know-who first.

If everybody loves a loser, then the Baltimore Orioles are the Mother Theresa of baseball.

Watching the highlight tapes of Baltimore games can only make one wonder, quite sadly, what they're doing in this league. Their opponents aren't winning the games, the Orioles are losing them — badly.

The O's, as they're so affectionately known, took their 0-18 mark into Minneapolis' Homerdome Tuesday night and promptly made it 0-19. The three-game series with the equally unimpressive defending World Champs is a great opportunity for a Baltimore win.

Despite their start, the Twins have to be the happiest team in baseball when it comes to the subject of Baltimore's woes. Minnesota has a 5-13 record but, as of yet, they haven't taken much of a beating from the press. Hardly a mention of the no-repeat syndrome. Tom Kelly must be relieved that he doesn't have anyone to say "no comment" to.

Something curious is happening in Baltimore, however. While the O's continue to lose on the road, ticket sales are up. At this point, more than 15,000 tickets have been sold for the Baltimore-Texas game. At the current pace, the O's will receive a better welcome on May 2 than they did opening day. Hmmm.

So what happens if they start to win? Will the fans return the tickets won a World Series since 1908 — draw 2 million in a season that saw them come in last place?

Ask a Cub fan. As long as the team proves it can't win without pitching, the fans will continue to sun themselves en masse in Wrigley. If the Cubs began to win regularly, the fans would most likely get confused and start showing up at Comiskey.

Speaking of which, the White Sox appear to be serious about moving to Florida. Who can blame them?

Comiskey Park is the oldest ballpark in the league. The White Sox moved in there in 1910. Looking at it now, you'd think the Sox have only been there since, oh, 1915 or so.

This season, the Dan Ryan Expressway is getting a major facelift. Unfortunately, this is the main artery of access for most Chicagoans into the ballpark. Attendance is expected to drop to about 700,000, and the city is dragging its feet for the construction of a new place to play. This is all fairly bad news considering the fine season the ChiSox are having so far.

The only problem I would have with a move to St. Petersburg is the fact that they want to move into a place called the Suncoast Dome. Appropriate for a Mel Torme concert, maybe, but not a baseball game.

Commissioner Peter Ueberroth, no doubt, will let the Sox head south for the good of the game. He knows the league can't handle expansion yet and this would be an easy way to get some of the heat off his back from the Florida baseball people.

Prediction: The city of Chicago will balk and the White Sox will be out by '89.

Speaking of balks (and did anyone not catch that segue coming?), this is getting out of hand. More runners have crossed home plate this year by way of balks than by Oriole bats. If umpires are going to be this hard on pitchers, than here are a couple other ideas:

- Make it illegal for that stupid fake-to-third-throw-to-first play. Pitchers should be kicked out of the game for even trying it. If a runner ever gets thrown out on that play he should get the option of being shot or traded to Baltimore.

- If a pitcher hits a batter, the batter should have the option of retaliation with a low-caliber weapon, or having him traded to Baltimore.

- If a pitcher balks more than once in an inning, he must leave the game and be forced to watch the remainder of the contest handcuffed to the third base umpire.

Final prediction: Frank Robinson will hang up on President Reagan before the season is over.

ASU archers favored to fare well at State Championships

By CHRIS PIRKEY
State Press

At the Arizona Arizona Collegiate Championships this weekend, the ASU archery team will be battling it out among themselves to see who makes the trip to the Collegiate Nationals at the end of May.

The State Championships will take place at 8:30 a.m. Friday and Saturday at Glendale Community College. The Sun Devils will not only be vying for the state title, but they will also be trying to shoot All-America qualifying scores.

Coach Sherri Rhodes said most of the team has shot qualifying scores, and expects more of them this weekend. All-Americans are determined by how well the archer does at nationals, as well as by the number of qualifying scores shot during the season. A qualifying score, in turn, is determined by the number of points an archer scores during a tournament.

The top six finishers in both the men's and women's divisions will travel to the University of Texas-Austin for nationals May 19 through 21. The ASU women's team has already earned a trip to Austin; they are the only university women's team in Arizona and are automatically entered. All the women will be going since there are only six members on the team.

Assistant coach Mark McKinney said the closest race will be for the fourth, fifth and sixth spots on the men's team.

"There are nine people who have a shot at those spots," McKinney said. "It is going to be a tough battle this weekend."

If scores are any indication, it looks like ASU's Mike Bergenheier will be able to take the state crown. McKinney said that, with the exception of Sun Devils Cope Bailey and Jim Swanson and possibly Vince Pernick of Glendale Community College, Bergenheier will more than likely place first this weekend.

At the Western Regionals April 16 and 17, Bergenheier placed first with a score of 1,481. McKinney said that was the highest score he has seen in five years, and that Bergenheier is shooting very well. Regionals were held at Navajo Community College near Window Rock, and archers had to shoot in miserable weather.

While the cold and wind affected all the archers, both Rhodes and McKinney said they were surprised at how well the ASU men shot.

"For the cold and rainy conditions, the men shot amazingly well," McKinney said.

"I hope the weather is nice this weekend so we can get some good scores," Rhodes said.

The last spots up for grabs for the trip to Austin could go to any of the following archers: Chris Castner, Dan Crain, Rob Nicholson or Dan Donally.
