Candidate: Opponent distorted facts in flier

By DARRIN HOSTETLER
State Press

A candidate for the Arizona House of Representatives in a north Phoenix district accused one of her opponents Wednesday night of "distorting" facts obtained in an interview by someone masquerading as a State Press reporter.

Susan Gerard, a Republican candidate for the House from District 18, said she is "convinced" that fellow candidate Trent Franks sent one of his supporters to interview her under the guise of obtaining a story for the ASU paper.

Gerard said the comments she made to the "reporter" were then distorted in a flier released last weekend by Frank's campaign committee. The flier said the comments were obtained in a "taped interview."

"To the best of my knowledge, the interview I gave the young man who said he was from the State Press is the only time (during the campaign) I have been taped," Gerard said.

Franks said the interview was not conducted by a supporter, but by an ASU student who told him he was speaking to all the District 18 candidates in preparation for a State Press story.

Franks said the student gave him a copy of the "story" he wrote which contained the remarks used in the flier.

The student Franks named could not be contacted by press time. He is not affiliated with the State Press.

Gerard said she was contacted by the student Aug. 11, and the interview was held Aug. 12.

"What sort of tipped me off that he wasn't really from State Press is that he didn't ask about some of the major student issues like the student regent vote," Gerard said.

"He touched briefly on tuition and then asked a lot of questions about social issues like abortion," she said.

The flier, which bore the headline "Susan Gerard is against victim's rights and parent's rights," charged the candidate with being in favor of abortion-on-demand for all teen-agers, without parental consent, and of supporting the distribution of contraceptives to students in schools without parental permission.

The flier also accused Gerard of opposing the "Victim's Bill of Rights" measure, a plan promoted by the state attorney general's office to protect the rights of victims of violent crime. The bill was defeated in the legislature earlier this year.

"What I really said was that I could not vote for the anti-abortion bills that were in the hopper this year because they were unconstitutional," Gerard said.

"And I am definitely not in favor of distributing contraceptives without parental permission."

Gerard said she would vote for a bill requiring parental permission for teen abortions if there were provisions for "judicial bypass" in extreme cases where "women just can't go to their parents."

She said she would not have voted for the "Victim's Bill of Rights" because it was "unconstitutional and gave prosecutors too much power."

"But I am certainly not against protecting victims," Gerard said.

Franks said the fact that the student was not a State Press reporter does not affect the validity of his charges against Gerard.

Fees to address regents on shortage of classes

By KELLY PEARCE
State Press

Associated Students President John Fees is expected to tell the Arizona Board of Regents today that he is alarmed about an increased number of closed classes and decreasing attention paid to undergraduate education.

"Why can't students get the classes they need?" Fees said.

Fees also is expected to push for student involvement in the selection process for a new ASU president and lobby for ASASU's resolution of a recognition day for Martin Luther King Jr.

"(These) are a few issues the board needs to be aware of," Fees said. "Generally they listen."

The ASASU president is not required to attend regents meetings, but it is the "most intelligent thing to do," he said.

"If you're going to represent students, you should go to the meetings and voice their concerns," Fees said.

Thousands of students this semester could not get into foreign language, entry-level English and lab classes because not enough sections were available.

The registrar's office reports that over 3,000 sections were closed this fall.

"Figures as to what the student population will be can be made in advance," Fees said.

Furthermore, money is available to add classes and increase staff, he added.

"I think the dollars are there. The priorities are just not in the right places," he said, adding that more Spanish instructors should be hired and additional astronomy labs need to be added.

Women's Association decries Hahn visit

By KAMILLE NIXON
State Press

The Faculty Women's Association has denounced Jessica Hahn's appearance for the Business College Council's recruitment day, saying in a memo to the council that it "perpetuates the unacceptable stereotype of women as sexual objects."

Copies of the Tuesday memo were forwarded to ASU President J. Russell Nelson, the Faculty Senate, Associated Students and the State Press.

"This event is especially offensive at a time when ASU is attempting to make this campus a more friendly and less alienating environment," the memo states. It was signed by 46 members of the women's association.

Hahn and members of her new employer, KOY-FM "Y-95" radio, appeared on campus last week to help promote the business council's drive for new members. Hahn has garnered national attention for her sexual liaison with PTL founder Jim Bakker and nude pictures in Playboy magazine.

While the group accepts the business council's contention it did not invite Hahn to be a part of the original appearance agreement, it says her inclusion was uncontested by the council and damaged the college's image.

Bush cites wrong date of Pearl Harbor bombing

LOUISVILLE, Ky. (AP) — Republican George Bush startled an American Legion convention Wednesday by mistakenly saying Sept. 7 marked the anniversary of the bombing of Pearl Harbor that led to U.S. entry into World War II.

He made the remark during a generally well-received speech in which he tried to highlight differences on military issues with Democrat Michael Dukakis.

Bush, who was a Navy flyer decorated for combat missions during the war, made the slip before about 6,000 veterans at their 70th annual meeting.

The words were barely out of his mouth before a buzz of murmurs rose among the audience. "I thought nobody would forget that date," one veteran commented to another.

A minute after his mistake, Bush stopped dead in his speech, alerted by the stir in the audience and people waving at him over his error.

"Did I say Sept. 7? Sorry about that," Bush said, adding quickly that the correct date of the attack was Dec. 7, 1941.

The audience applauded his correction and generally gave him a warm, polite reception.

One day earlier, Bush got a booing, jeering reception from shipyard workers in Portland, Ore.

Bush, before returning to Washington late Wednesday, planned an appearance in Baltimore before the B'nai B'rith.

Accounting office says Pentagon still overpaying

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Pentagon is continuing to pay tens of millions of dollars more than it should for weapons because defense contractors are hiding information that would bring prices down, the General Accounting Office said Wednesday.

Despite some Pentagon successes in halting overpriced weapons, contractors still aren't complying with a 1962 law designed to provide more information to government contract negotiators, the congressional watchdog agency told a House subcommittee.

The law, the Truth in Negotiations Act, requires disclosure to the government by contractors, of all relevant information about contracts. Companies found to be in violation can be sued for recovery of the overpricing.

"Our work shows that when contractors fail to disclose relevant cost or pricing data, the government pays higher contract prices than warranted," said Paul Math, associate director of the GAO's national security division.

House takes up new bill to combat drug abuse

WASHINGTON (AP) — The House began Congress' latest assault on illegal narcotics Wednesday, taking up a 375-page bill that would spend some $2 billion for every conceivable method of fighting drug abuse.

The House will likely labor through next week on the work product of 11 committees, which might undergo major surgery from more than three dozen amendments. Some proposed changes will provide the most controversial moments of debate.

After a day devoted to debate and explanations of the bill's provisions, the House postponed votes on amendments until Thursday.

The House took up the bill on Congress' first day back from a month-long recess.

Christmas tree applications to be distributed on campus

The U.S. Forest Service has application forms available for permits to cut Christmas trees on Arizona's national forest land. The applications can be picked up at the Rocky Mountain Forest and Range Office, located in the Forestry Sciences Lab on Tyler Mall.

Applications will be available from Sept. 9 until Oct. 7. Completed applications must be mailed to the Forest Service, with a $5 fee, by the Oct. 7 deadline.

Latin American film series to document social issues

Past and present social issues in Latin American countries are the main theme in the fall Latin American film series, sponsored by the ASU Center for Latin American Studies.

Two films will be shown today: "Children in Debt," a 29-minute film examining the controversial issue of Latin America's external debt to the United States and revealing the social impact of economic austerity programs imposed on countries already suffering from extreme poverty; and "Guazapa: The Face of War in El Salvador," showing rebel soldiers and civilians supporting one another harvesting crops, educating their children, tending the sick and wounded and fighting government forces.

The films start at 4:40 p.m. in room 191 of the Life Sciences Building. For more information, call SantaAnn Young at 965-5127.

Egyptian architecture students to spend time studying at ASU

Eight Egyptian architecture students will study at ASU from Sept. 18 to Sept. 25 in an international youth exchange program administered by America-Mideast Educational and Training Services.

Roger Schluntz, director of the School of Architecture, said ASU is one of five host sites for the five-week Egyptian Student Architects program. The selection was based on the school's reputation and its emphasis on solar and energy studies. Other sites are Washington, D.C.; Chicago; Indianapolis and Boston.

Business College publication says economy still in slump

Arizona's economy continues to remain in a slump because of a stall in the construction industry, according to the "Arizona Blue Chip Economic Forecast," a publication of ASU's College of Business.

Rising interest rates may suppress housing demand in the future, further complicating Arizona's troubled economy, the forecast predicts. The paper predicts a 14.5 percent decline in new home construction for the rest of the year.

Wall Street firm charged with slew of violations

NEW YORK (AP) — The Securities and Exchange Commission filed civil insider trading charges Wednesday against the investment firm Drexel Burnham Lambert Inc. and Michael Milken, the head of its junk bond trading unit.

The 184-page civil complaint, filed at U.S. District Court in New York alleged "fraudulent conduct involving insider trading, stock manipulation, fraud on Drexel's own clients, failure to disclose beneficial ownership of securities and numerous other violations."

The SEC had said previously that it planned to file a civil complaint against Drexel but had not released details.

The SEC's move capped months of speculation that the government had assembled an extensive case against the firm as a result of the investigation into Wall Street abuses spawned by the Ivan Boesky insider trading scandal.

According to the complaint, Drexel and Milken, of Encino, Calif., had a secret arrangement with Boesky, who was forced nearly two years ago to surrender a record $100 million in penalties and illegal profits from trading on insider information.

Federal law bars corporate executives, investment bankers and others with access to confidential corporate information from using it to trade in securities.

U.S. Attorney Rudolph Giuliani, whose office prosecuted Boesky and other Wall Street criminals, declined to comment on whether criminal charges would be filed against Drexel, Milken or any of the other defendants.

There had been speculation the SEC delayed filing its civil complaint to avoid interfering with the criminal investigation.

Drexel spokesman Steven Anreder declined to comment immediately on the SEC's move. "We have not as yet received the complaint, we'll have a statement when we read the complaint," he said.

Also included among the defendants were Milken's brother, Lowell J. Milken of Los Angeles; Cary J. Maultasch of Livingston, N.J. and Pamela Monzert of Santa Monica, Calif., all Drexel employees.

Also charged were Victor Posner of Miami, president of Pennsylvania Engineering Corp., which also was named as a defendant, and Posner's son, Stephen Posner, a director and vice chairman of the board at Pennsylvania Engineering.

Insider trading involves the use of non-public information for one's benefit in the financial markets.

Gary Lynch, the SEC's director of enforcement, said in a telephone interview that the allegations involve 18 series of transactions, including 16 involving Boesky, the former stock speculator now in prison.

Boesky was charged with violating insider-trading related securities laws in November 1986 and settled charges by agreeing to return profits and pay fines totaling $100 million. SEC charges against Drexel, with whom Boesky had worked, had been widely expected since then.

In mid-July, Frederick W. Joseph, Drexel's chief executive, told the firm's employees to expect charges, possibly soon and with little warning. Published reports quoted the firm's officials at the time as saying settlement talks with the SEC had broken down.

Lynch declined to comment regarding efforts to settle the charges with Drexel or on whether Boesky would be called as a witness.

Defrocking 101

Jessica Hahn christens 'new school' of broadcasting

Carolyn Höfig
Columnist

Senior broadcast majors should all receive special overrides, if necessary, into ASU's Human Sexuality course.

Otherwise, they may fail to meet the rigors of the standard set when KOY-FM hired Jessica Hahn to join the station's "Y-95 Morning Zoo."

In fact, the facts-and-photos approach of the University's most popular upper-division elective is undoubtedly too soft-core to help post-Hahn broadcasting grads.

The message a la KOY fairly screams: As far as a career in radio is concerned, straight 'A's on a transcript count for nothing against a pair of 'D's in a T-shirt.

The issue concerns more than a marketing strategy with a twinge of exploitation. The problem concerns integrity, fairness and ethics.

How many degree-holders — say, from ASU's journalism school — could have lent their training and their talents to the station's morning program?

Any number, but qualifications take a back seat to celebrity, at least at KOY. And considering that Hahn's brand of celebrity tends toward the cheesy, she cuts a disturbing figure for those who have invested time, money and effort into an education, with an eye on the airwaves.

It bodes particularly ill for qualified women seeking to break into journalism — traditionally male territory — in any form.

By all accounts except for KOY's, hiring a promotional object — have as yet proven to be negligible. Either way, the move has certainly garnered listeners.

But when groups like the Business College Council, who invited Hahn on campus to promote a membership drive, legitimize Hahn's media presence, what was simply odious becomes outright ominous.

Hahn's first experiences with the media — on the interviewee's end of the microphone — were hastened in on allegations that she had had sexual relations with former televangelist, Jim Bakker. The ensuing controversy reached national proportions and helped drive Bakker from gave Bakker — and then posed for Playboy magazine.

She applied the proceeds to some cosmetic surgery, breast implants, a nose-job and caps for her teeth, the results of which she unveiled in a second Playboy spread. She took up residence for a time with Hugh and crew in the Playboy mansion in California.

Then two weeks ago, Hahn brought that resume to Phoenix, when she joined the "Zoo Crew" with a 30-day renewable contract. Hahn greeted the news with a few fluffy statements amounting to, "Gee, I always thought it'd be kinda neat to work on radio."

How many ASU broadcasting students have expressed the same desire and probably more articulately?

Any number, and they have set about arming themselves with the appropriate knowledge and training.

But if Jessica Hahn is the new example to be followed, then graduates of the Walter Cronkite School of Journalism and Telecommunication may still find themselves ill-equipped.

Unless, of course, they've spent their scholarships on expanded bustlines and artificial dimples.

*'The message a la KOY fairly screams:
As far as a career in radio is concerned, straight 'A's on a transcript count for nothing against a pair of 'D's in a T-shirt.'*

Hahn ranks among broadcasting's more audacious publicity gimmicks, a bid to resuscitate the station's lagging ratings.

The station insists it employed Hahn for reasons other than her recognizability, although Hahn's radio talents — except as his million-dollar "PTL Club" TV ministry.

Attack of the 'Bike Cops'

Editor:

Welcome to ASU, home of the badged bicycle troop!

This is the only place I have ever been where the "police" merrily pedal their way in search of crime. And for the ASU ticket troop, the search is very short. The ticket troop literally waits for their prey to come to them.

So there you are. You just made a right turn and you're heading down the long stretch for home, when suddenly, a huge man blocking half the bike path signals you to stop. The ticket trooper promptly issues you an $18 fine, smiles and tells you to have a nice day. The thought races through your mind: What fool gave this man a job? You want to hurt him, but you cannot stop laughing at his straight face as he hands you the ticket.

An exaggeration maybe. But let's face it, where else but at ASU does the ticket troop perform? How many times do you remember seeing four police cars pull up at your grade school to hand out citations for illegal conduct while operating a bicycle? The fact is, if you committed the same "crime" anywhere else, a cop is not going to track you down in his car to give you a ticket. And why not? Because it is a common understanding that, unless you are at a (good-sized) intersection, there is no need to stop at every corner in town.

In fact, one of the ASU policemen told me that you don't actually have to stop, just slow down as you go around the stop sign. I didn't see anyone with a stopwatch timing me when I got my first ticket. But undoubtedly I was just going way too fast.

I guess the plain truth is that we have entered the "ASU Zone," where there is a thin line between profit and reality. I don't think the bicycle laws are being enforced in the way they were intended to be. The law has been manipulated and taken out of its original context. Now, mere words in print, bare of any meaning, are a real part of ASU. And as a result, ASU is segregated from the rest of Phoenix. When we step onto the campus, we lose rights that Phoenixians still have. Phoenixians ride in the front of the bus while ASU must sit in the back.

Primary responsibility

Early state election crucial to fate of University issues

By DARRIN HOSTETLER
State Press

ASU students don't vote.

The numbers from 1984 tell the whole story: Only about 11 percent of all registered voters in the precincts surrounding the Tempe campus — an area where thousands of students, faculty and staff live and work — turned out to vote in the 1984 primary election.

The primary, to be held this year on Sept. 13 (next Tuesday), is traditionally hampered by poor turnout and apathy. It is commonly thought of as merely a weeding-out process; only a preliminary to the main event Nov. 8 when voters can cast ballots that really count and make final selections — including the choice of the man who will serve as president for the next four years.

Indeed, the primaries are often viewed as nothing more than the cartoon before the movie — a good time to get popcorn before the main feature starts.

★ STATE ELECTIONS

Most voters don't bother to seriously look at state candidates before the November election. But taking that approach can result in disaster, because many of these races are one-act presentations — you miss the primary, you miss the plot.

And you can't get your money back at the door if you don't like the ending.

Just ask Burton Barr.

Two years ago today, the powerful Arizona House majority leader was set for a victory in the Republican primary, which was supposedly but a formality on his way to a race with Democrat Carolyn Warner for governor. Barr was (and is) the consummate Arizona political insider. His candidacy — endorsed by such notables as Barry Goldwater and Ronald Reagan — seemed a sure bet to everyone knowledgeable about state politics.

Everyone, that is, but Evan Mecham.

In one of the most startling performances in Arizona history, the Glendale car dealer, a four-time loser in gubernatorial races but backed by a hard-core following of devotees, swept over Barr, his endorsements and all the conventional wisdom before they collectively knew what hit them. The result? Gov. Evan Mecham.

Looking over newspaper clippings from that time, one word keeps coming back to haunt — turnout. Political scientists and other election-watchers were united on one major point about the election most of them described as dumbfounding — poor turnout killed Barr. His supporters thought: "The real race will be in November. Why show up at the polls until then?" They thought they had the primary in the bag. Until they turned around and saw someone in a Pontiac speeding away with it.

There is no gubernatorial contest this time around, but there are many key state legislative primary battles on tap, and many of them — including some in ASU's Tempe District 27, will effectively decide the makeup of district delegations to the state House and Senate.

The District 27 Senate race, pitting incumbent Doug Todd against challenger Bill Valentie, will decide the district's senatorial representation for the next two years.

Todd and Valentie, both Republicans, face no Democratic challenger, and thus the winner of the GOP primary goes to the capitol.

The House race features two Democrats — Jalma Hunsinger and Jim Cunningham — who will both advance automatically to the general election in November to face Republican candidates for the two House seats. But one of the three Republicans in the primary — incumbents Jenny Norton and Bev Hermon, and challenger Gary Richardson — will face elimination Tuesday night. In this heavily conservative district, the two Republican House candidates stand a strong chance of winning the seats, and thus the primary takes on special importance.

The outcome of the primaries matters a great deal to the University community. State legislators are being chosen who will decide the future of higher education, and, ultimately, how much it will cost you to obtain it.

While most of us were otherwise occupied this summer, some ASU student leaders were busy coming up with some ideas about the kind of legislators who would be good for the University community and would help students achieve a legislative agenda they have wanted and needed for years.

An agenda that includes:

1. Regent Vote: A vote for the student representative to the Arizona Board of Regents, the body that sets tuition rates and determines University policy.

2. AFAT: Legislative support for the Arizona Financial Aid Trust (AFAT) program, which would require that the state match funds taken from a 1 percent charge on student tuition for the purposes of financial aid.

3. Equity: Obtaining a lasting solution to a long-standing discrepancy in the amount of state funding for the three Arizona universities. UofA currently receives more dollars per student than ASU or NAU.

The program that grew out of the formulation of this agenda, the brainchild of ASASU and the Arizona Students Association, is called Student's Are Voting Everywhere in 1988 (SAVE '88). It has a trifold purpose — to educate and register student voters about the issues that affect them, to persuade the legislative candidates that the issues are important and use the registered student voters as muscle to force action, and to get commitment from the candidates on the issues so that when the legislative session rolls around in the spring student leaders will have a bargaining chip to use as part of their lobbying efforts.

How the legislators who are vying for your vote in District 27 stand on these issues of primary importance to ASU is now a matter of public record. Their views have been gleaned from their public statements and a special State Press survey designed to find out who would best represent ASU in the legislature. Here, at a glance, are how the candidates in District 27 stand on these fundamental issues.

They have made their commitments and delineated their stands. Which among them now gets a chance to make good on their promises is up to the student body.

If students hope to have an impact in ASU's district this time around and achieve their important agenda, voter participation in next week's primary is vital. Because if students don't choose now those candidates who support student issues, they may find that, by November, they don't really have any choice at all.

Staff may gain King paid holiday but lose Dec. 26

By SHERI JOHNSON
State Press

Some ASU staff members are upset about a proposed University holiday schedule change that would replace their day-after-Christmas holiday with a January Martin Luther King Jr. holiday, a staff official said Wednesday.

Joy Cain, chair of ASU's Classified Staff Association Committee, said the committee supports a King holiday but not at the price of losing the day-after-Christmas holiday.

"That decision will cause quite a lot of resentment among ASU's classified staff," she said. "We hope that logic will prevail and that they will choose another day to take away."

The King holiday, which is being pushed by the presidents of Arizona's three universities, is scheduled for Jan. 16, 1989. It would replace the Dec. 26, 1989 holiday, according to a holiday schedule compiled by the University.

The Arizona Board of Regents will consider the holiday schedule Friday in Flagstaff during its September meeting. The regents have the authority to set 10 paid holidays.

Cain said that because students and faculty have a semester break at Christmas, only University staff will be affected by the proposed change.

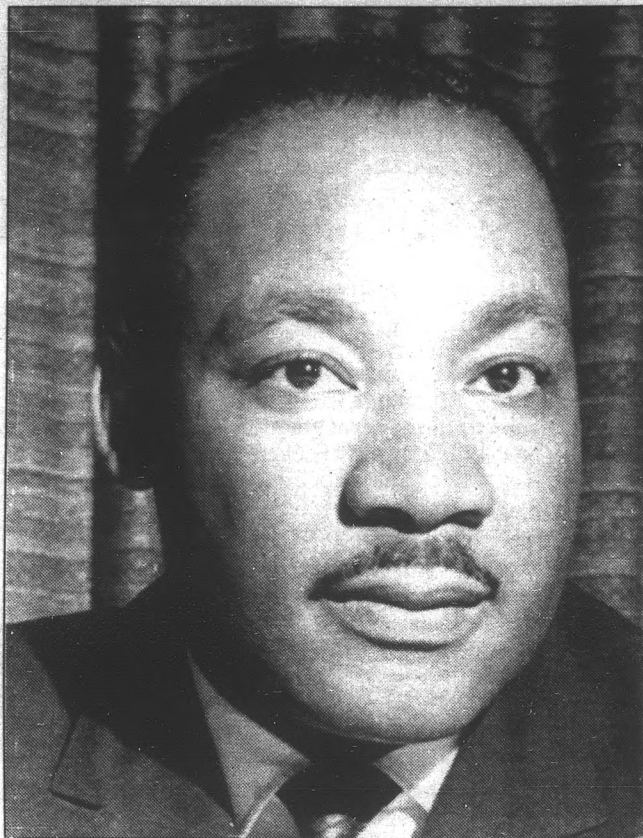

She said the staffers should not have "to pay so high a price."

"We want to have a positive image around him (King)," Cain said. "We don't want to start any animosity. The committee is in support of a Martin Luther King holiday."

ASU President J. Russell Nelson said the decision to schedule a King holiday in exchange for a current holiday was made by him but added that he talked to a number of people in choosing the December date.

"We did not want to choose a named holiday," Nelson said.

By eliminating all named holidays, Nelson said there was only two days from which to choose: the day after

Thanksgiving or the day after Christmas.

"The less disruptive day was the day after Christmas," Nelson said, adding that eliminating the day-after-Thanksgiving holiday would affect more people.

Cain said that if she had to choose a holiday to be eliminated, she would recommend Veteran's or Labor day.

Nelson said he was aware of University staff opposition to the holiday.

"Some people don't like the day (elimination) and others don't like the idea (of honoring King) at all," he said. "You do the best you can."

NAU's schedule eliminates the school's mid-semester break in October for the King holiday and UofA's schedule eliminates President's Day.

Cain said she will be at the regents' meeting to express her opposition to the proposed schedule.

Student regent Patrick McWhortor said he thinks the regents will approve the schedule.

"I think you're not going to see any opposition from the regents," he said. "The only day they (ASU) could possibly trade, without creating political havoc, was the day after Christmas."

Regent Jack Pfister said he also thinks the board will approve the schedule.

"I will certainly support it," he said.

Regent Andrew Hurwitz said he also plans to support the schedule.

"In my perspective, I'm delighted to see the King holiday at the universities," he said. "Christmas is on a Monday, so the staff will get a three-day holiday. I'm perfectly content to let the universities figure out the holiday schedules."

A majority of students polled by the State Press Wednesday, support a paid holiday honoring King.

Seventy-four of 100 students randomly polled said they think there should be a King holiday to recognize his civil rights efforts.

"I believe that he was instrumental in the civil rights movement, and he deserves recognition for his efforts in eliminating prejudice and expanding the public's awareness," one student responding to the unscientific survey said.

Students who oppose the holiday cited extra costs to the state as the reason for their disapproval.

Men with golf club beat accused watch stealer

By MIKE BURGESS
State Press

A Tempe man was beaten with a golf club and threatened with a gun after four men accused him of stealing a watch, police said.

Rubin Stigler, 24, was treated and released from a local hospital after his attack, which police said occurred Monday about 9 p.m. in the 600 block of South Hardy Drive.

Stigler was knocked to the ground and threatened with a semiautomatic revolver by one of the suspects, while another suspect beat him with a golf club.

Police arrested 20-year-old Kevin Lewis McDonald, 6155 S. Hardy Drive No. 194, in connection with the incident and charged him with one count of aggravated assault. A 17-year-old Phoenix boy also was arrested and released into the custody of his parents.

Police are still looking for the other two suspects.

Tempe police also reported:

• Four suspects were arrested Tuesday after two men were robbed of a case of soda and a gold necklace, police said.

Michael Routhier, 20, and Daniel Routhier, 17, both of 227 W. Knox Road, had purchased four cases of soda from the Bashas' store at 805 W. Guadalupe Road and put the cases in their pickup truck.

The two men then re-entered the store, and after returning to their truck, spotted four men taking one of their cases of soda. The suspected robbers fled behind the store, and the two men followed them. The Routhiers were assaulted and robbed when they confronted the suspects, police said.

The suspects jumped a fence and fled into an apartment complex at 727 E. Vaughn Drive, where they hid the case under a car. They were later arrested by undercover officers when one of the men returned for the case.

Police said the four men who were arrested in connection with the incident and charged with aggravated robbery were: Cory Andre Singleton, 17, and Armed Tolver, 17, both of 727 E. Vaughn Drive; and Andre Lemont Gardener, 19, and Mark Brennon Banks, 18, both of 6610 S. Lakeshore Drive.

ASU police also reported the following incidents:

• The Bicycle Enforcement and Safety Team issued 79 written bicycle citations, 16 warnings and 14 parking citations Tuesday, police said.

• An electric cart valued at $4,000 was stolen Tuesday morning from the south side of the Student Services Building, police said.

• Almost $1,800 worth of VCRs and other property was reported stolen from the desk office at Manzanita Residence Hall, police said. A weight curl bar was stolen from the dormitory's basement.

• A student was injured Tuesday near the Life Science Building's D-Wing when she walked into a metal pole hanging off of a truck, police said.

Connie Wiegens suffered cuts and bruises on her left eye and on the bridge of her nose. She was treated at the Student Health Center and released.

• Two bicycles were reported stolen, police said.

was stolen sometime Monday or Tuesday from the bicycle racks on the west side of Manzanita Residence Hall, police said. Loss is $400.

A men's brown 10-speed Schwinn mountain cruiser was stolen Tuesday from the north side of the MU, police said. Loss is $100.

• Someone stole a purse and its contents from Room B-3 in the Best Complex, police said. Loss is $16.50.

• Someone broke the gate arm to the northwest entrance to Lot 40, police said. Damage is $10.

Underground construction should help prevent brownouts

By TERESA OWEN
State Press

Part of the extensive construction ASU has been undergoing this year is the installation of more than $1 million of new, underground electrical units that should help prevent brownouts.

"It will make it (the system) more reliable," said Gerry White, mechanical engineering planning and construction manager. "It will improve the distribution of services."

Brownouts, which are small temporary voltage reductions that help conserve electrical power, have the potential of being a big problem at ASU because of the campus' continuing expansion, White said. With the University's current system, electricity from Arizona Public Service may have to be cut off in some buildings, he added.

Cables are old and undersized, and they caused the system to be unreliable, White said.

But the new electrical units should change that. New and larger cables with expanded voltages are part of a utility-upgrade project that began this summer, White said. The project should be completed next summer.

The electrical units are being replaced through the tunnel system underneath buildings and malls around campus. The tunnels also house other utility services, some of which are part of the utility-upgrade project.

"The tunnels are designed to expand like we are without having to tear up the ground," White said.

Another part of the utility project is the installation of improved water control valves in all buildings to improve efficiency.

Two additional water chillers also are being installed to handle increased chilled water needs on campus. The increase comes as a result of more buildings on campus and more research being conducted that requires cold water, he said.

"It will be more efficient and (water will be) better distributed throughout the campus," he said.

The water improvements, which cost nearly $4.5 million, began this summer and are expected to be completed in all buildings by next fall, White said.

Another project is automating ASU's central plant. The plant's controls will be automated for about $450,000.

Other utility improvements that should be completed within the next year but have not yet begun and are not part of the current utility upgrades, include: increasing power to the emergency power system, receiving more electrical service from APS, expanding energy management systems for all buildings currently not on the system and a thermal storage system, White said.

The thermal storage system, which will be funded by both APS and ASU, will chill water at night to help meet peak electrical daytime demand at ASU, he said.

Cosmonauts endure perilous re-entry flight

MOSCOW (AP) — The commander of a Soviet space capsule stranded in space for a day may have worsened equipment problems by not taking manual control, the government newspaper suggested Wednesday after the Soyuz TM-5 landed safely.

The government daily Izvestia said reporters questioned deputy flight chief Viktor Blagov of the Soviet space program, whether the commander, Vladimir Lyakhov, made mistakes Tuesday during attempts to fire braking rockets aboard his Soyuz TM-5 capsule.

The tiny capsule parachuted to a landing at 4:50 a.m. Wednesday, Moscow time, 100 miles southeast of Dzharkazgan in the Kazakhstan republic of Soviet Central Asia.

Despite a problem with the guidance system, the spacecraft landed within only a few dozen miles of the intended target and only 24 hours late, Izvestia reported.

An American expert on Soviet space flight said the two cosmonauts might have burned to death if the unexpected shutdown of their rocket engine had come only a minute later.

"They were seconds away from death," said James Oberg, a space engineer and author of several books on the Soviet space program, from Johnson Space Center in Houston. "The cutoff of that burn (rocket firing) was lucky for them."

Another U.S. space expert, Nicholas Johnson, said he believes the situation was much less serious than problems encountered in earlier Soviet flights.

Johnson said it is too early to make assumptions that the cosmonauts were near mortal danger and suggested that Oberg was drawing conclusions "with inadequate data." Johnson works for Telodyne Brown Engineering in Colorado Springs, Colo., a major space contractor.

Television showed the spherical Soyuz capsule floating toward the ground on a white parachute with orange stripes against a reddish dawn sky. A puff of dust rose from the ground when the capsule landed.

Abdul Ahad Mohmand, the first Afghan in space, and Soviet crewmate Lyakhov spent 26 hours aboard the cramped capsule that had enough air for only two days, dwindling food supplies and no toilet.

"Of course it was not an easy thing to sit in spacesuits for 24 hours," Lyakhov, 47, said in an interview near the charred capsule.

The problems began after the capsule undocked early Tuesday from Mir, the space station where Lyakhov and Mohmand spent six days with three other cosmonauts.

After boarding their capsule and undocking, the cosmonauts made two attempts to re-enter the atmosphere Tuesday.

Izvestia quoted Blagov as giving a philosophical answer to reporters asking whether technical problems or mistakes by mission control or the capsule crew were to blame for the landing delay.

"Life is guilty, a coincidence of circumstances," Blagov said.

Izvestia said Tuesday's first landing attempt was aborted when an infrared sensor used in guiding the spacecraft malfunctioned. The sensor locked onto the wrong tracking reference point and belatedly started an engine that slows the craft for re-entry. The cosmonauts manually overrode the system and shut down the engine, the newspaper said.

A second attempt was made three hours later. The sensor put the craft in the correct position, but an on-board computer then used an old trajectory program and an engine burn was incomplete. The old program had been in the computer since the Soyuz TM-5's last flight, with a Soviet-Bulgarian crew in June, according to Izvestia.

The newspaper then listed a question and comment it said reporters put to Blagov:

"Why, with this, did the commander, instead of turning off the computer and completely transferring to a manual control regime, again give a command to the machine which could not be corrected, for the continued working of the engine?"

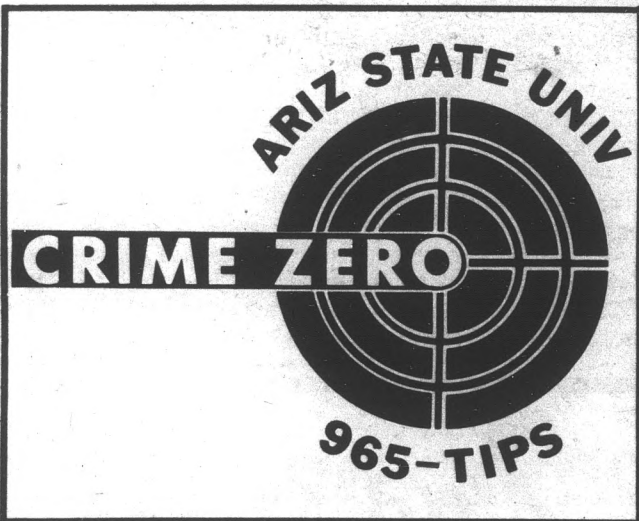

"And only when the engine was shut off by an indication of a loss of ship stabilization did he do what he should have done from the very beginning: stop the dynamic operation and wait for communication with the control center, to report about the situation."

Izvestia did not say whether Blagov responded specifically to these comments, but quoted him as saying: "We still must painstakingly study the whole situation."

The public questioning of a cosmonaut's performance was highly unusual in the Soviet space program. It reflected the more open discussion of problems encouraged by Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev under his policy of glasnost.

"If (Gerard) has changed her positions on the issues, she should say so," Franks said. "It is possible that Susan has turned into a neo-conservative; there are a lot of those running around these days."

"And a neo-conservative is just a liberal running for office."

State Press Editor Marty Sauerzopf said none of the paper's staff members contacted Gerard for an interview.

"Being in the Tempe-ASU area, we have no reason to send a reporter out to a north Phoenix district, and even if we did, we never would have released any information to another candidate," Sauerzopf said.

"The deception in all this is just amazing to me. Maybe whoever it was thought that, being a student newspaper, we had a lower profile."

"If it's true that someone sends out supporters under the pretense of working for a newspaper, I would prefer that in the future they refrain from using mine."

"And if I catch a student claiming to be from my newspaper, I won't tolerate it. The proper action will be taken," Sauerzopf said.

House GOP majority whip Jane Dee

Hull, who is running for re-election in District 18, said the latest attack on Gerard is only part of the hot battle between district Republicans.

District 18 has been the scene of the fiercest fighting between supporters of former Gov. Evan Mecham and anti-Mecham forces.

Former Mecham press secretary Ron Bellus is running for the state senate from the district, and Franks, a former state representative and member of the Mecham administration, is known as an ultra-conservative with close ties to the former governor.

Hull called the Frank's flier a "hit piece" and said that "there are some very strange people drifting into this district."

"Those of us who care about the district are running a clean campaign, but there have been incidents of suspect behavior," she said.

Copies of the Arizona Free Press, a paper published by Mecham supporters, began appearing in the district this week.

The paper targets legislators, including Hull, who opposed Mecham while he was governor.

Presidential nominees speak at B'nai B'rith convention

By The Associated Press

Republican George Bush criticized Democrat Michael Dukakis before a Jewish group Wednesday for having "trouble making up his mind" on whether to support or oppose creation of a Palestinian state. Dukakis told a college audience the vice president was "right there — all the time" when the administration cut grants and loans for students.

Bush and Dukakis were speaking to a B'nai B'rith convention in Baltimore.

The vice president was the first to address the Jewish group and he underscored the closeness of U.S.-Israel relations.

"No threat, no stone thrown, is strong enough to divide us. No wedge will be driven between us," he pledged.

Bush declared his opposition to the creation of an independent Palestinian state in the Middle East and criticized Dukakis, although he didn't mention him by name.

"My administration would not support the creation of any Palestinian entity that would jeopardize the security of our strategic ally, Israel," he said.

"Anyone who has trouble making up his mind on this issue, or who proposes to leave it open, just doesn't understand the dangers to Israel and to the United States; just doesn't understand the very real threats that continue to exist."

Dukakis has said the question of a Palestinian state should be a matter of negotiations between Israel and its neighbors.

Dukakis spoke at Kean College in Union, N.J. and asked, "Where was George Bush while his administration was doing its best to slam the door of college opportunity in the face of millions of young people across this country?"

"George was right there — all the time," Dukakis said.

"Not doing and not saying a thing."

The Massachusetts governor said he and his running mate Lloyd Bentsen "are going to stop the assault on college loans and grants, and we're going to stop it cold."

Dukakis described his own proposal under which the federal government would guarantee bank loans to college students with repayment based on a percentage of future earnings and extending over a person's working life.

Bush has proposed allowing parents to earn interest tax-free on U.S. savings bonds to help pay for college, but he has not suggested any overhaul of the loan program.

But the Reagan administration has already launched a small, experimental income-contingent loan program, with repayments pegged to students' income in later life. The Democratic-controlled Congress balked last year at a major expansion of the program, now being tried at 10 campuses.

Palms up

Valley Crest Landscape Inc. does indeed have an oversized load on its hands as it works to plant a palm tree near the new Fine Arts Complex earlier this week.

63-year-old wins $55 million in world record lottery prize

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. (AP) — A 63-year-old real estate broker, saying she was middle class "and the middle class always needs money," stepped forward Wednesday to claim a world record lottery prize of $55 million.

The winner, Sheelah Ryan of Winter Springs, said she watched Saturday's drawing on television and realized then that she had the winning ticket.

"I just kept saying 'Oh, my God,'" she told a room packed with journalists as she was introduced at the offices of the Florida Lottery Department.

Ryan said she didn't know what she'd do with her winnings but didn't think that finding things to do with the wealth would be a problem. "I've always been middle class and the middle class always needs money," she said.

The first of 20 annual installments of $2,767,361 — less 20 percent withheld for the Internal Revenue Service — is due to be paid to Ryan next week. She said she didn't know if she'd quit her job.

The native New Yorker, a single woman with no children who said her hobbies are tennis and music, moved to central Florida in 1975. She said her relatives include a brother and nephews in New York.

She said her Wednesday flight to Tallahassee to present the winning ticket was her first plane ride.

"I've had three firsts today," she said. "It has been my first plane ride. ... No. 2, this is my first press conference. No. 3, this is the first time I've ever won $55 million."

It was Ryan's third winning ticket in Florida's 8-month-old lottery — the other two prizes were for $4 each.

She picked the first six numbers she came across in various stories on the front page of The Orlando Sentinel last week and bought the winning ticket Friday at a grocery store in Longwood, like Winter Springs a suburb of Orlando. The winning combo was 3, 5, 19, 20, 27 and 35.

"These numbers were driving me crazy," she said. Ryan said she had been buying four tickets a week until Florida offered a $23 million jackpot in early August. Since then, she's been buying five tickets.

Before Ryan claimed her prize, several dozen other people claimed they had the winning ticket. It's not a crime to claim a winning lottery ticket, but it's a felony to present an altered lottery ticket for payment.

One of the claimants was Charles Hill, an elementary school janitor in the tiny hamlet of Bristol, about 280 miles northwest of Longwood.

Hill's claim was enough to get him a $23,000 Chevrolet van with no cash down, but Wednesday morning in Tallahassee, he submitted only a photostat copy of a ticket, saying the original had been damaged in the laundry.

"We have denied Mr. Hill's claim based on the fact he does not have the original of his ticket," said a statement by Tom Bell, general counsel for the Lottery Department. "The Lottery's verification procedures on the copy provided by Mr. Hill indicate that he does not have the winning ticket."

It was not immediately clear whether officials would pursue charges against Hill, based on his submission of the photostat lottery ticket. Bell was in a meeting Wednesday afternoon and not available for comment, his office said.

Tommy Thomas, owner of a Panama City Chevrolet dealership, said he let Hill drive away in a brand new mauve van after Liberty County Sheriff Harrell W. Revell told his credit manager that Hill's ticket was genuine.

"We're sorry for him, but we're not too shook up about it," Thomas said Wednesday afternoon upon learning that Hill wasn't a winner. He said he expects to get the van back and said jokingly that "maybe we'll raffle it off."

Several dozen people called the department claiming to have the winning ticket, according to Lottery secretary Rebecca Paul.

Monsoon season turns Bangladesh to flood plain

DHAKA, Bangladesh (AP) — Three-fourths of Bangladesh was under water Wednesday, and some aid donors say it is time for long-term solutions in an impoverished land that becomes a vast flood plain every monsoon season.

"We have started thinking about the focus of our development aid," a diplomat from one industrial nation said privately. "It doesn't really make sense to pour millions into this country every year and see it washed away."

Floods began in June with the annual monsoon season. They have claimed 416 lives by the government's count, which is considered low, and 1,267 on the basis of unofficial tabulations by Dhaka newspapers.

The government said Wednesday night all major rivers remained above flood stage, but that water levels fell during the previous 24 hours in all rivers except two small tributaries near the Bay of Bengal.

But people still were marooned on rooftops and scarce patches of high ground, and as many as one-quarter of the nation's 110 million citizens were homeless.

Wells and pumps have been submerged and people have begun drinking flood water, causing a rise in diarrhea cases and fear of epidemics.

On Wednesday night, the health service reported 16,813 new cases of diarrhea in the previous 24 hours, bringing known cases in the past two weeks to 119,882. Eighty-three of those people have died and are included in the official death count.

Statistics come only from areas that can communicate with Dhaka, however, so the figures probably are low.

Officials say total damage and reconstruction needs cannot be assessed until the waters recede, but President Hussain Mohammed Ershad said Tuesday the cost of rebuilding roads and railways alone would be $156 million.

Bangladeshi officials, donor nations and international organizations all say the most pressing need is a regional plan to stop flood waters that originate outside Bangladesh.

Water rushes down from the Himalayas each monsoon season in rivers that empty into the Bay of Bengal through the Bangladesh delta.

Ershad and other top Bangladeshi officials emphasize the need to work with neighboring India and nearby Nepal and Bhutan for a solution, but a senior U.N. official said he has pushed regional planning in vain for nearly a decade.

Until long-term steps are taken, major aid donors say they have no choice but to help feed the people of Bangladesh, who are among the world's poorest, and provide medical assistance.

The United States, for example, is giving Bangladesh $131.5 million in aid this year, including $73 million for food. The rest is for development assistance, but generally goes for such things as health, family planning and agricultural research.

Washington has pledged $3.6 million of flood relief but most already was in the pipeline as part of the annual aid package.

American flood relief consists of speeding up delivery of $2.5 million worth of wheat already in Bangladesh for distribution this year, plus $1.1 million consisting of seed and contributions to relief funds.

Several Bangladeshi officials handling relief said Wednesday they could not compute the total amount offered from abroad so far.

A senior U.N. official, whose office helps coordinate foreign aid, also was unable to provide a total. He said part of the problem was that much of the aid comes from funds that already had been allocated for Bangladesh but now is being applied directly to flood victims.

"The figures are changing almost every hour," he said, speaking on condition of anonymity. "A number of embassies are exploring what the scope might be and have not yet made a final commitment."

A senior Western diplomat who follows aid donations closely said, "People talk about flood control, (but) the major problem for Bangladesh is overpopulation."

Population density in Bangladesh is 2,000 per square mile, the world's highest after Hong Kong and Singapore.

While Hong Kong and Singapore are little more than city-states, however, Bangladesh is an agricultural nation of about 55,000 square miles, roughly the size of Wisconsin.

Hahn

"Inquiries of the College of Business uncovered the fact that no students had complained," the memo states. "The unfortunate highlighting of Ms. Hahn shows insensitivity to women and men at Arizona State University who consider themselves serious scholars."

Richard Huxtable, president of the Business College Council, said he "probably used bad judgement" when he agreed that Hahn could appear on campus as an employee of the radio station.

Huxtable said Y-95 had been hired to play music and attract students to the college's "dean's patio," where recruitment activities took place last Wednesday.

Huxtable said the station agreed to play music from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m., with a two-hour live broadcast from campus with the station's "Y-morning Zoo" disc jockey team. He said he hired the station weeks before Hahn became an employee.

"They (Y-95 station officials) know that they purposely took the entire program over. They were there to play a little music. ... This was not a Jessica Hahn promotion," Huxtable said.

"The whole thing is kind of sad," he said, adding that he asked the radio station to leave campus when he realized they were not going to fulfill the agreement.

"Let's use the word 'contract' here. Y-95 breached the contract," he said.

Y-95 officials did not return several phone calls Wednesday.

College of Business Dean John Kraft said he doesn't think the college's credibility has been damaged by the controversy surrounding Hahn's appearance.

"While I'm certainly not trying to minimize the Faculty Women's Association memo, I think we have an excellent record in terms of women," he said.

Kraft also said he could not have prevented Hahn's appearance because student groups have the right to promote their own activities.

"All of these student groups have rights. We can't stop these people from coming on campus," he said.

Associated Students President John Fees said he will try to prevent similar flaps in the future by creating an awareness among campus organizations about the messages their activities send.

"This message is: sexual exploitation of women. You're not going to find us asking Jessica Hahn to come to campus," Fees said. "Students were taken advantage of. We need to be careful."

Fees

Fees said he told the regents in June that enrollment would make a major leap this fall.

"I hope that the board will ask questions of our administration," he said.

A regents task force reported two weeks ago that research was overtaking attention paid to undergraduate education.

Fees said he also will tell the board about ASASU's Executive Committee resolution that calls for a day of events on campus to recognize the accomplishments of Martin Luther King.

But the presidents of the state's three universities are expected to push for a paid King holiday. The board is expected to vote Friday on the universities' 1988-1989 holiday schedule.

Fees said a paid holiday has the support of students, and student Regent Patrick

McWhortor said he will support a paid holiday.

"I think it's a very positive encouragement to the board that students support the holiday," he said.

Fees is expected to express interest in being a member of the search committee to find a replacement for ASU President J. Russell Nelson.

"It is essential for students to get in-involved in the selection of a president," he said. "We need a president that is student responsive and committed to classroom instruction."

Nelson will step down at the end of spring semester next year to become a full-time faculty member in the College of Business.

Fees said the new president must have "a vision of where Arizona State should be across the curriculum."

University Club falling short of membership goal

By DON EMPIE
State Press

Plans for ASU's long-proposed University Club may be in jeopardy because the drinking and dining facility for faculty and staff is about 300 members short of its intended membership goal, club organizers say.

Organizers hope to attract 800 members by January 1989, but as of Wednesday only 507 had joined. This has raised some concern among the organizers, who say the current membership is "not acceptable."

Associate design professor Michael Nielsen, who is the president of the club's board of directors, said the board will have to do some re-evaluations to prove a need for the club if the goal is not met.

"If we don't (reach 800 members), then we will have to find other means to determine if there is enough interest to support a club like this," Nielsen said.

"If we reach the membership we want, then the club will come to be."

Nielsen said the board of directors addresses the problem at every meeting, adding that plans are afoot to attract new members.

"We are trying to expand efforts to reach new members such as telephone recruitment and even some social events planned for the near future," he said.

Some methods are aimed at educating faculty on the functions of the club, Nielsen added.

To join the club, faculty members pay a $300 donation fee and a $125 membership fee. A $100 deposit on the fees is required, with the balance due when the club opens.

If the club proceeds as planned and doesn't hit any snags, Nielsen said he foresees the club opening sometime during the fall of 1990.

"With plan approvals, budget approvals, construction ... we are looking at 18 to 24 months before we turn the keys in the front doors of the club," he said.

If membership increases and everything goes as planned, the club hopes to become the tenant of the 80-year-old Fine Arts Annex, which has recently been "stabilized."

The "stabilization" is a strengthening and upgrading construction process, according to Jennus Burton, associate vice president for business affairs.

"It's not a rebuilding," Burton said. "The stabilization process is to bring the building back into usability. This has been completed."

Burton added that the work was not done specifically for any group or club, but rather, because of the building's need for it.

Last fall, organizers developed the idea for the club and originally hoped to attract 1,000 charter members before approving the club's construction, but the figure was reduced to 800 upon President J. Russell Nelson's approval.

Setter beats old team as ASU spikes NAU, 3-0

By JOAN MCKENNA
State Press

NAU transfer Bobbi Bloom could do nothing last year but watch from the bench as her former teammates handed ASU a frustrating home loss.

Bloom was redshirting the 1987 season. But the 5-9 setter not only got to play in Wednesday night's NAU matchup — she quarterbacked the Sun Devils through the first two games of ASU's 3-0 victory in the Activity Center.

"I've wanted to do that ever since I got here," she said. "It felt really good. I'm so glad we won it in three. Ahhh, I'm so glad."

Bloom said several close friends of hers still play for the Lumberjacks (0-4), but it did not lessen her intensity.

"Right now I want to beat them more than anyone," she said. "Most people won't admit it but you always want to beat your friends."

Acting head coach Steve Schlick said he had hoped Bloom would be fired up for the match, but his decision to start her was unrelated.

"I wanted to give her a chance to play just like I've been giving (setter) Noelle (Fridrich) a chance to play," he said.

Both juniors are vying for the starting setter spot left vacant by former Sun Devil Regina Stahl. Schlick said he probably will go with Fridrich in the Texas A&M Reebok Invitational this weekend because Bloom has developed a cough recently and could use the rest.

ASU's victory pushed the Sun Devils' undefeated record to 3-0, but Schlick said the match was less than the performance he expected.

"I did not feel like it was an impressive match at all," he said. "I didn't feel like we showed the same intelligence that we showed on Saturday" in ASU's 3-0 victory over New Mexico State.

Offensive mistakes were a recurrent problem for the Sun Devils causing their hitting percentage (.229) to drop 10 points from last year's match (.239) against the Lumberjacks.

Schlick said he had no answer for why the team lost last year but won this time around.

"We should have won last year," he said. "I don't like saying things like that, but we should win."

NAU head coach Steve Hellman said he saw a more aggressive ASU defense.

"They (the Sun Devils) dug a lot of balls that last year would have gone for kills," he said. "That kind of scrappy defense demoralizes you after a while."

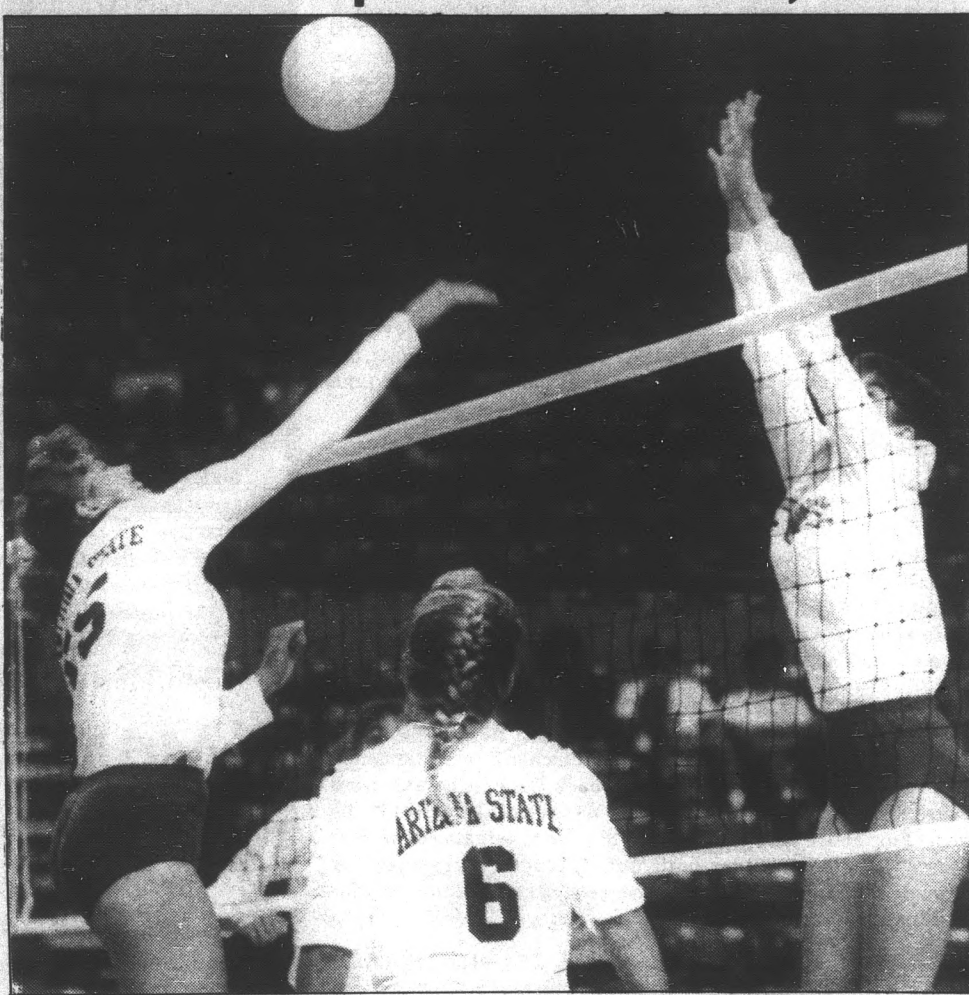

But the Lumberjacks battled down to the last points in game three, tying the score at 9-9 before ASU rallied and took it, 15-11.

Hellman called two time outs in the closing minutes but failed to break the Sun Devils' momentum.

The Sun Devils' first two 1988 matches were highlighted by ASU jumping to an early lead, but the team never pulled away from NAU, winning 15-13, 15-10, 15-11.

Team captain Christy Nore led ASU offensively, hitting .306 with 17 kills. Fridrich, starting the match as a defensive specialist and switching to setter in game three, dug a team-high 12 balls and posted a .512 setting percentage.

Freshman Jennifer Rogers made her ASU debut wearing uniform No. 8. The outside hitter from Buckeye put away four kills and scored ASU's only solo blocks (2) in the last two games.

Susan Schuman/State Press

Sue Nord (No. 15) tries to spike the ball while a Northern Arizona defender tries to block the attempt during ASU's 3-0 victory Wednesday night over NAU. The Sun Devils are now 3-0 on the season.

Malone to be Seoul ASU track representative at Olympics

By CHRIS NACKINO
State Press

For many athletes, summer marks the beginning of free time and relaxation away from the busy life of school and sports.

But one ASU athlete, sprinter Maicel Malone, spent much of her summer training and preparing for the single most important event in the country ... the 1988 Summer Olympics.

During her journey to the trials in Indianapolis, Ind., Malone brought along part of the confidence and determination she had gained during her freshman year at ASU.

As a freshman at the 1987 NCAA Championship, Malone earned three school records and captured first place in the 400-meter relay.

While representing ASU in the Pac-10, she won both the 200- and 400-meter dash and added in first-place finishes in both the 400-meter and 1600-meter relays.

At the Olympic trials, Malone was edged out in the 400-meter, but her sixth-place finish earned her a spot on the United States 1600-meter relay team and a chance to travel to Korea with several of the most celebrated athletes in the country.

"Although she had fierce competition, she was quite aggressive," assistant track and field coach Ed Gorman said. "She just ran too hard in the finals. It was bitter-sweet — she was disappointed in not making the 400-meter but elated by making the 400-meter relay."

Malone, who has spent the last few weeks in extensive training, is projected by ASU head coach Tom Jones to run well in Seoul.

"Although she sprained her ankle earlier, when I talked with (USA coach) Fred Thompson he said she was doing fine," Jones said. "Chances are that she will compete in the early rounds. If she runs well in these races, she may continue on to the finals."

Other sprinters who attended the trials but failed to earn a spot on the team were Tamika Foster, Gordon Bugg and Laura LaMena.

But the most noted disappointment for ASU at the trials was sprinter Lynda Tolbert.

Tolbert, who holds countless records both nationally and for ASU, was considered a top contender for a spot on the United States team at the trials.

Unfortunately she placed fifth in the hurdles, just two spots away from the Olympic requirement.

"She ran spectacularly well, but when she came to the semi-finals she tripped on a hurdle and finished fifth," Gorman said. "She is ranked as the second-fastest sprinter in America. Her loss was quite a disappointment."

Golf team's year-round work pays off in form of victories

By CHRISTINE PIRKEY
State Press

Year-round dedication.

That's what it takes to be an amateur golfer, ASU women's golf coach Linda Vollstedt said. With a twelve-month season, the ASU women's golf team never rests, never has a time when it is completely away from the sport its members diligently work at.

All of the hard work has paid off for the Sun Devils; they finished the 1987 season as the Pac-10 champions, and placed second at the NCAA national championships. Vollstedt said she expects no less from this year's squad.

Returning for the Sun Devils are seniors Missy Farr, Heather Hodur, Susan Perrault and Pearl Sinn. Junior Amy Fruhwirth and sophomore Mindy Bono round out the veterans. Three new golfers join the impressive list: Lynne Mikalus, Julie Shepard and Tana Figueras will be playing for ASU.

Vollstedt said her four top returners will be Sinn, Farr, Fruhwirth and Hodur.

Sinn, who won the two most-coveted tournaments this summer — the U.S. Public Links and the U.S. Amateur Open — is currently in Sweden playing in the World Amateur Open.

Vollstedt said she is pleased with Sinn's progress, despite the fact she has never won a collegiate tournament.

"Pearl had a great summer," Vollstedt said. "She's done something no one has ever done before, something she's never done before. She has been playing really well."

Both Fruhwirth and Farr have shown a lot of maturity, Vollstedt said, and expects them to help the Sun Devils place first in collegiate tournaments. She said Hodur is playing well also, and that all four are strong returners for ASU.

With the season year-round, Vollstedt said it is hard to restrain her golfers, and to some extent, herself, from peaking too early or too late.

"It's very difficult for the girls," Vollstedt said. "They have to pace themselves — keep everything in perspective. It's even difficult for me to do."

Vollstedt said one of the dreams the members of the golf team share is to become a professional after they finish their collegiate career. She said graduation, however, takes precedence over any other.

"Any of the players on the team could turn pro right now if they wanted," Vollstedt said. "It is a goal of everyone here. But it is important to graduate, too."

With the return of some powerful golfers, and the addition of some new talent, Vollstedt said she is looking forward to winning some major tournaments this year.

"This should be another really good year," Vollstedt said. "We should finish in the top three of every tournament. We will always be in contention for the top spot. It's going to be a great year."

Linda Vollstedt

GARRISON ELIMINATES NAVRATILOVA AT U.S. OPEN — Zina Garrison, winless in 21 previous matches against Martina Navratilova, ended her bid for a third straight U.S. Open title Wednesday with a 6-4, 6-7 (3-7), 7-5 victory in the quarterfinals. Earlier, top-seeded Steffi Graf breezed into the semifinals while Chris Evert, Gabriela Sabatini and Mats Wilander rallied for come-from-behind victories. Garrison, the 11th seed, blew five match points in the second set before eliminating Navratilova, the second seed who failed to reach the semifinals for the first time since 1982.

GIAMATTI COULD BECOME BASEBALL COMMISSIONER TODAY — Baseball owners began a two-day meeting Wednesday in Montreal with the possibility that National League President A. Bartlett Giamatti would be elected commissioner Thursday, succeeding Peter Ueberroth. The American and National Leagues met separately Wednesday and were scheduled to meet jointly Thursday. At Thursday's meeting, Milwaukee Brewers owner Bud Selig and New York Mets co-owner Fred Wilpon are scheduled to give a report on the selection process for a new commissioner.

3 MORE NFL PLAYERS SUSPENDED FOR SUBSTANCE ABUSE — Charles White of the Los Angeles Rams, the NFL's leading rusher last season, and a pair of Chicago Bears, star defensive end Richard Dent and running back Calvin Thomas, were suspended by the league for 30 days Wednesday for violating its substance abuse policy. All three will have to remain out of their teams' training facilities until Oct. 7, league spokesman Joe Browne said. In all, 17 players have been suspended this year for violating the league's substance abuse policy.

HOGOBOOM WANTS TRADE AFTER TRUDEAU NAMED STARTER — Jack Trudeau was named starting quarterback for the Indianapolis Colts on Wednesday and veteran Gary Hogeboom, shocked by his sudden demotion, told Coach Ron Meyer he wants to be released. Meyer said it was a "long and heavily evaluated move," but he didn't think waiving Hogeboom or making a trade was feasible at this time.

MIAMI HEAT SIGNS SEIKALY — The Miami Heat signed its top draft pick, Rony Selkaly of Syracuse University, Wednesday. Officials of the NBA expansion club would not disclose terms of the contract for the 6-foot-11 center, although The Miami Herald has reported the deal to be worth $4 million over five years.

Have you seen the ASU Student Handbook and Calendar? It's a handy pocket-size book, filled with everything you ever wanted (or didn't want to) know about college life. It's even got a daily reference calendar! The really neat thing about the Handbook is that it's produced by ASU students. That's right. Students gather the information, write and edit the copy; shoot the photos; design the cover and inside pages and last, but certainly not least, they design and sell the advertising that supports this annual event. Students spend long hours with creativity flowing, ideas exchanging and the fulfillment of producing their very own handbook. We'd like to offer you the chance to join this team and gain invaluable experience while you're in college. We need several advertising sales representatives to create, design and sell advertising to local retail businesses. If you have a strong commitment to excellence and pride in a job well done, we'd like to speak with you. You must be self-motivated, punctual, a good time manager, own a car and be a people person. Please call today and join a team of dedicated ASU students who are committed to making the 1989-90 ASU Student Handbook and Calendar the best. Call Dan Ellstrom 965-6555 TODAY!

Stars & Stripes thrashes New Zealand in America's Cup

SAN DIEGO (AP) — Dennis Conner took Stars & Stripes on a Sunday sail Wednesday, thrashing New Zealand, as expected, in the opening race of a best-of-three America's Cup series.

New Zealand's 34 crewmen, including owner Michael Fay, could only perch on their giant yacht's overhanging deck and watch like seagulls as Conner's 60-foot catamaran disappeared towards the horizon to win the 40-mile race by a country mile. Stars & Stripes reached the finish line 17 minutes, 55 seconds ahead of the sloop.

The 133-foot Kiwi challenger was out of the race soon after taking the start by 10 seconds. Conner, reining in his swift flier with its upright airplane wing to avoid gear breakdown, just sailed away in 6-15 knot winds over a calm Pacific Ocean.

"When he wants to go faster, he can," said Marc Pajot, a spectator and skipper of French Kiss, a failed challenger in the '86-87 Cup series in Australia.

The only competition for Stars & Stripes, which covered the course in 4:54:06, was from porpoises playing alongside the twin-hulled yacht that at times sailed as fast as the wind.

The next race is scheduled for Friday and if New Zealand were to win, the deciding race would be Sunday.

The start was far more gentlemanly than the suits and angry words that have marked this court-directed race. Both yachts stayed clear of each other after Conner simply sailed away from a pre-race maneuver by Kiwi skipper David Barnes.

A flotilla of 1,000 spectator yachts watched the start of the Pacific Ocean's first Cup race. Only the higher-powered boats could keep up as the racers headed to the first mark, 20 miles upwind. Stars & Stripes took 2:36:00 to reach the mark in a dying and shifty zephyr.

Tyson reportedly trying to attract attention in alleged suicide attempt

NEW YORK (AP) — Mike Tyson, who is reported to have threatened suicide before smashing his car into a tree, may have been trying to attract more attention from a wife who is ignoring him, a source close to the heavyweight champion said Wednesday.

While everyone close to Tyson rejected the suicide report, Tyson's manager, Bill Cayton, did confirm Wednesday that the fighter's actress wife, Robin Givens, and her mother have urged Tyson to see a psychiatrist specializing in athletic stress.

Cayton, however, said he hasn't talked to Tyson for nearly two weeks. He said he was prevented from visiting Tyson in the hospital by Givens, her mother Ruth Roper and Tyson's new publicity agent, Howard Rubenstein.

It was apparent that while Tyson was recovering from a concussion sustained Sunday when his car ran into a tree, a mean-tempered rift between the Givens group and the boxing group that includes Cayton and trainer Kevin Rooney was widening.

"Without me, there'd be no Mike Tyson," Cayton said. "And suddenly, these people are interested in his welfare, and I'm not. I am outraged."

The New York Daily News on Wednesday quoted unidentified sources close to Tyson as saying the heavyweight champ told his wife he was going to kill himself, then got into his car and ran it into a tree in Catskill, N.Y., where he trains. Doctors said Tyson sustained a concussion and amnesia and was unconscious for about a half hour.

One source close to the Tyson camp told The Associated Press on Wednesday the fighter had been "brooding all week" because Givens chose to remain in New York rather than be with him during his training at Catskill. The source said she wanted to "hang out with her fancy friends at the U.S. Open."

The source, however, said any threats of suicide were "idle threats" and said those close to Tyson believe he was "just looking for a little attention" from his wife.

"Mike is very insecure when it comes to her," the source said.

Tyson originally was taken to a local hospital, then transferred to Columbia-Presbyterian Medical Center in New York City, from which he was released Wednesday night.

The Daily News story, also accused Cayton and Rooney of being more concerned that an Oct. 22 title defense against Frank Bruno was postponed indefinitely than they were about Tyson's health. Givens, Roper, Rubenstein and Tyson's two lawyers, Peter Parcher and Steven Hayes, were described as those truly concerned with the fighter's welfare.

"This is disgusting, false," Cayton said. "It seems to me the story emanates from people who are described as nice people — Peter Parcher, Steven Hayes — people who are worrying about Mike's future. White knights. And Bill Cayton, who has protected and taken care of Mike for eight years, since he was 14, is now worried only about making money on Mike. It's deplorable. It's not true."

"It's a pack of falsehoods and untruths — despicable lies."

Cayton joined Roper and Tyson's surrogate mother, Camille Ewald, as saying they did not believe Tyson had tried to take his own life. The 82-year-old Ewald, an in-law of Tyson's first trainer, the late Cus D'Amato, witnessed the incident that triggered the suicide reports.

"I don't think it has any validity," Cayton said of the suicide reports. "If someone was trying to commit suicide, would he do it with a car in his backyard?"

"I don't know why this happened," Ewald said. "But suicide? Definitely not. I've known him since he was 13."

Ewald admitted Tyson was a little unhappy but said he understood that "Robin had to attend to her own affairs."

Givens was to leave Thursday for the Soviet Union to film two episodes of her television show, "Head of the Class." Rubenstein said contractual commitments would force her to leave on schedule.

The schism between Cayton and Givens began shortly after she married Tyson last February. Roper and Givens have openly accused Cayton of trying to take Tyson's money, and Tyson sued Cayton to break their contract last July. The suit was settled out of court, with Cayton remaining manager for a smaller percentage of the take, but the rift has never healed.

Cayton said he first heard about attempts to get Tyson to a psychiatrist Monday when he met with Roper, Givens and Rubenstein, who had contacted a Manhattan psychiatrist named Henry L. McCurtis, described as an expert on athletic stress.

"They wanted Mike to be visited by him," Cayton said. "They asked me if I had any reservations. I said absolutely not, if you think it's indicated. I have no problems with that."

McCurtis, who refused to tell the Daily News or not he was seeing Tyson, could not be reached by the AP. His answering service said he was out of town.

Cayton said he hadn't talked to the champion since he was hospitalized, either in person or by telephone. "I was not permitted to come up to see him," Cayton said. "I tried to come to the hospital Monday."

Tyson, 22, moved in with Ewald in her 14-room house on the Hudson River in Catskill when he was 13 and has lived there off-and-on since. It was at her house that the accident occurred.

"He was going to try to go out and get some papers, some magazines to read," Ewald said in a telephone interview with The Associated Press. That was about 10:30 p.m. Sunday, and "he said he'd be right back."

"In the meantime, he got a phone call. I ran outside to tell him he had the call. He was just starting the car, and I was at the edge of the porch."

It had been raining, and Tyson's car was parked on the grass in front of the house, near the coops where he keeps pigeons. When he stepped on the gas, the tires of his silver BMW began to spin.

"Then, I suppose he put more pressure on and the car shot up, hit a tree. He lost control, and it ran into some shrubbery."

Tyson regained consciousness only briefly after Ewald reached him, and an ambulance arrived about 10 minutes later, she said.

Stallings plans changes; 7,220 tickets remain for opener

TEMPE (AP) — Phoenix Cardinals coach Gene Stallings, whose defensive secondary was burned for three touchdown passes in last Sunday's 21-14 loss at Cincinnati, said changes are in store for Monday night's NFL game here against Dallas.

"I've got to do something," Stallings said. "I'm getting the same results and I'm going to change. I may get the same results, but it will be from different folks. We have got to play better defense and stop giving up the big play."

Stallings still is fuming over the 61-yard touchdown pass from Bengals' quarterback Boomer Esiason to a wide-open Eddie Brown in the third quarter.

Cardinals cornerback Cedric Mack missed the coverage assignment on the play.

Phoenix cornerback Carl Carter also was victimized in the season-opener as Esiason hit James Brooks with a 25-yard scoring pass in the second quarter and Mike Martin on a 15-yard touchdown toss for the eventual winning points with 11:15 remaining in the game.

Stallings said he was studying several options as his squad resumed practices Wednesday at Phoenix's East High School.

One might be to bench Mack, switch veteran free safety Lonnie Young to cornerback and replace Young with second-year safety Tim McDonald.

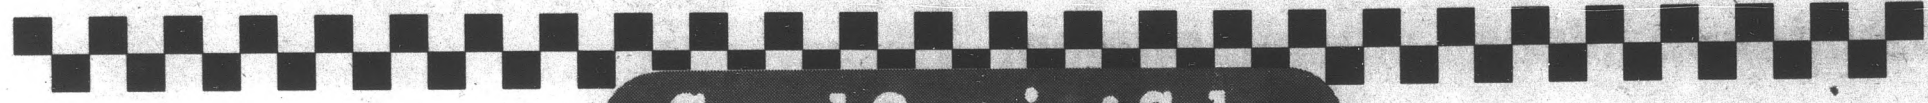

Meanwhile, Stallings has indirectly criticized Cincinnati coach Sam Wyche for encouraging the Riverfront Stadium crowd of 50,404 to cause noise in the waning minutes of Sunday's game as Phoenix was nearing the Bengals' goal line.

Cardinals quarterback Neil Lomax said his teammates had trouble hearing his signals and that contributed to the loss and Cincinnati's goal-line stand.

"My personal standpoint is the game is settled in the arena. I want the excitement of the home team, but I still feel the opponent is entitled to snap the ball," Stallings said. "You'll never see me personally inciting the crowd. For some reason, that doesn't turn me on. That's not my style."

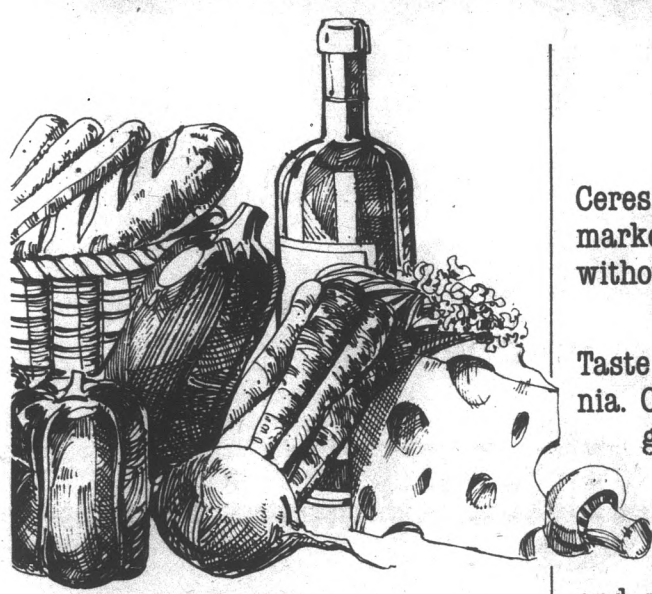

The Cardinals announced late Wednesday that 7,220 tickets remain at 72,168-seat Sun Devil Stadium for the Cowboys game Monday night.

All must be sold by 5 p.m. Friday or the home-opener will be blacked out on local television under the NFL's 72-hour rule.

HAVE YOU seen the ASU Student Handbook and Calendar? It's a handy pocket size book, filled with everything you ever wanted (or didn't want to) know about college life. It's even got a daily reference calendar! The really neat thing about the Handbook is that it's produced by ASU students. That's right. Students gather the information, write and edit the copy; shoot the photos; design the cover and inside pages and last, but certainly not least, they design and sell the advertising that supports this annual event. Students spend long hours with creativity flowing, ideas exchanging and the fulfillment of producing their very own handbook. We'd like to offer you the chance to join this team and gain invaluable experience while you're in college. We need several advertising sales representatives to create, design and sell advertising to local retail businesses. If you have a strong commitment to excellence and pride in a job well done, we'd like to speak with you. You must be self-motivated, punctual, a good time manager, own a car and be a people person. Please call today and join a team of dedicated ASU students who are committed to making the 1988-89 ASU Student Handbook and Calendar the best. Call Dan Ellstrom at 965-8555 today! P.S. If you are wondering what in the heck a Student Handbook is, stop by Student Publications in Matthews Center and get a free copy!

I WAS IN THE PEACE CORPS

A recent study, presented to the American Psychological Association, revealed some interesting facts about former Peace Corps Volunteers. For example:

- Over a five-year period, college faculty with Peace Corps experience averaged almost double the salary gains of Fulbright scholars.
- 250 Congressional aides and 10 percent of all Foreign Service officers are Returned Peace Corps Volunteers.
- From 1980 to 1985, former Peace Corps Volunteers outperformed national average salary gains for health service workers by 40.1%, educators by 13.5%, and public sector employees by 10.6%.
