Old smokey

A Phoenix fireman continues to spray water on a wood-pile blaze at the old Reynolds Aluminum plant at 111 S. 41st Avenue. The fire was started at around 2 a.m., possibly by vandals according to one fireman, and still burned past dusk Wednesday evening. Smoke from the fire could be seen from ASU's campus in Tempe.

Computer printout on students missing

By MIKE BURGESS
State Press

A computer printout that contains personal information about foreign ASU students was taken from the Student Life office sometime in the past two weeks, and University officials say they are worried the papers might end up in the wrong hands.

"We are concerned," said Leon Shell, ASU Dean of Student Life. "We don't want any information on a student compromised."

The printout was taken from Room B-225 in the Student Services Building and was reported to police Wednesday after officials discovered its disappearance. There are no suspects, police said.

The printout contained the names, home addresses and phone numbers of international students. Also listed were the students' home countries and visa status.

Shell said the printout is updated each semester and is used for administrative purposes. The Student Life office has several copies of the printout, he added.

He said most of the information can be found in student directories but added that some students may have requested that their personal information remain confidential.

"A student has a right to privacy," Shell said. "We don't know what it (the printout) is going to be used for."

In July, a computer printout of ASU students was taken from a trash can on campus by a man who allegedly used it to sell furniture, said ASU Police Chief C. Russell Duncan.

Duncan said the list was recovered after police served a search warrant at the man's home. No charges were filed because the Maricopa County attorney's office refused to prosecute, he said.

Student to join design board for first time

By KELLY PEARCE
State Press

For the first time in ASU's history, a student will join the University's Design and Review board, the body that approves the construction and destruction of campus buildings.

"This is great news," said Associated Students President John Fees, who learned of the news Wednesday. He has been pushing for a student member for nearly a year. "It is a major step in the right direction."

New bike paths, page 8.

The board advises the University president on campus development and reviews all major projects that have a physical impact on ASU.

The University is currently undergoing over $100 million of new construction.

ASASU had wanted a student member since last year when West Hall, located just west of the Hayden Library expansion project, was slated for destruction. ASASU successfully fought for its preservation.

ASU President J. Russell Nelson approved the student member idea Wednesday in a letter to Fees. Nelson could not be reached for comment.

John Meunier, chairman of the review board and dean of the College of Architecture and Environmental Design, said a student's viewpoint on the board will be an asset.

"My experience with students is that I have yet to be disappointed," he said.

Meunier said he and Nelson had been discussing expanding the board to include a student for "some time now."

Fees said the student member should be either a senior or graduate student majoring in architecture with a technical background.

"The student should have a good background and be sensitive to student needs," Fees said.

But Meunier said the student is not on the board to represent the student body.

"The important thing is not to represent students but to give the best council to the president," he said.

Fees said he will work with Nelson and Meunier to develop a workable selection process.

The $100 million in new construction currently underway is the most ambitious in the University's history.

The $16.4 million Fine Arts Complex and the Paul V. Galvin Playhouse are 90 percent completed. The complex, at the corner of Mill Avenue and 10th Street, will add 126,000 square feet for arts programs.

The project should be completed by November with plans for expanding the complex already underway. An additional $20.9 million construction on the complex will begin in late 1992.

Law to stiffen penalty for killing on-duty cop

By MIKE BURGESS
State Press

Beginning Friday, people had better think twice before killing a cop.

Under a law enacted by the Arizona Legislature earlier this year, people who kill an on-duty police officer and are convicted of first-degree murder could be sentenced to death.

*Officer's widow,

The change in the state's criminal code will be listed among reasons a judge may rely on when ordering the death penalty for a convicted felon.

Death by lethal gas can be ordered if the judge thinks the aggravating circumstances outweigh the mitigating factors in first-degree murder cases, according to the state's death penalty statute.

When considering punishment at a presentence hearing, a judge receives a list of aggravating and mitigating circumstances.

The law comes in the shadow of a rash of police killings in the state over the last year.

A Maricopa County sheriff's deputy, a Department of Public Safety officer, a Mammoth police officer, two Navajo officers and a Hopi officer have been killed while on duty this year.

The new law would not affect the driver involved in the hit-and-run death of Tempe officer Robert Hawk last Saturday.

A Phoenix police officer was gunned down this summer by assailants who were robbing a Phoenix bank, but the officer was not on duty.

Top local lawmen like the new law.

"I favor it," Tempe Police Chief David Brown said. "There's a lot of concern about the number of cops being killed in the line of duty. It may help prevent the loss of life."

ASU Police Chief C. Russell Duncan said he is "hopeful but not enthusiastic" about the new law.

He said most police officers are killed during acts of violence where a suspect doesn't care who they kill.

Noriega charges indictment part of political scheme for Canal

MIAMI (AP) — Defense motions unsealed today in the case of Panama's military ruler Gen. Manuel Antonio Noriega charge that his indictment on drug charges was part of a scheme to renegotiate the Panama Canal Treaty.

That treaty, signed during the Carter administration, turns over control of the canal to Panama at the end of this century.

"There were attempts to modify aspects of the treaty," Noriega's attorney, Neal Sonnett, said Wednesday. "We argue that it was one of the circumstances leading up to a decision to attempt to get Noriega out of power."

The 65-page motion requesting dismissal of the indictment accuses the U.S. government of selective prosecution and questions its authority to indict the head of a sovereign nation.

The document, dated Sept. 14, had initially been ordered sealed by U.S. District Judge William Hoeweler at the request of prosecutors.

At the time, Chief Deputy U.S. Attorney Richard Gregorie said he feared the motions might contain information that could be used to influence the U.S. presidential election.

Noriega has claimed previously he has information that would hurt George Bush's electoral chances.

But Gregorie said Wednesday after reviewing the motions, he had found nothing "shocking" in them and had himself moved to unseal the document. He said he would respond next month to the dismissal motions.

The 12-count indictment returned by a federal grand jury in Miami in February accused Noriega of accepting $4.6 million in bribes from Colombia's violent Medellin drug cartel. A grand jury in Tampa indicted Noriega on three marijuana importation counts at the same time.

House hopes revamped defense bill will escape Reagan veto

WASHINGTON (AP) — The House Armed Services Committee on Wednesday endorsed a new Pentagon budget bill shorn of provisions on Star Wars and arms control that had helped attract a presidential veto last month.

The full House was tentatively scheduled to vote later Wednesday and the Senate will follow later in the week, according to the committee chairman, Rep. Les Aspin, D-Wis.

The defense authorization measure, which was endorsed on a voice vote, differs only slightly from the $300 billion package Reagan vetoed Aug. 3, but it does remove one restriction on Star Wars anti-missile spending and another limitation on arms control policy.

Fitzwater said the administration was particularly pleased that restrictions had been removed on the Strategic Defense Initiative, as Star Wars is known formally.

Security tightened as Olympic games near their final days

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — The South Koreans, world-class friskers and scanners, are drawing their tight security net even tighter around the Olympics as the sports spectacular heads toward its final days.

Seoul's tough-talking student radicals are threatening to disrupt Sunday's marathon. A U.S. security specialist said his biggest worry is the anti-Americanism surfacing among ordinary South Koreans.

One Korean official finds the real security threat coming from the athletes themselves — one might defect and put the Olympic hosts in an awkward position.

After 12 days of Games, the security concerns at Seoul are often in the eye of the beholder. But by Wednesday everyone could see the new Olympics-wide clamp down.

For the first time, for example, police bomb-sniffing dogs were deployed at the Olympic weightlifting hall. At the Olympic press center, the security men blocked driveways with more steel barriers, checked car trunks and undercarriages for bombs and closely searched visitors and journalists.

Students content with education, not administration

By SHERI JOHNSON
State Press

A recent survey by an ASU professor shows that, compared with other U.S. universities, ASU undergraduates are not as happy with the University's administrative procedures, but they are content with the education they are receiving.

Kathleen Church, an ASU professor of zoology, recently released the results of the Student Reaction to College survey. It was conducted last semester by the Excellence, Efficiency and Competitiveness task force and the Arizona Students Association.

The survey also shows that ASU students rate the University's library and bookstore higher than students on a national average.

But no large urban universities comparable to ASU were used for comparison, Church said.

"The comparative data is not very good," Church said, adding that most of the schools used were small and private.

"Apparently, large public universities rarely seek the opinions of their undergraduates."

The students' lower-than-the-national-average rating of the administrative process includes a dislike of having to go from one office to another and going through a "long administrative process that seemed senseless," the survey states.

About 32 percent of the ASU students surveyed responded favorably to the administrative process while 50 percent of the students nationally responded favorably.

In rating the library and bookstore, the positive response nationally was 60 percent, while ASU's was 71 percent.

"The students were very favorable about extracurricular activities on the campuses, the libraries . . . , the bookstores . . . (and) food services compared with the national group," the survey states.

But the bulk of the survey shows that nationally, student responses were similar, Church said.

"There wasn't much difference in students' perspective anywhere," she said.

A "modified random sampling" technique was used to determine who would be surveyed, and the comparative data included 12,133 students from 59 colleges surveyed between 1979 and 1983.

The survey, designed by the Educational Testing Service, consisted of 548 students from ASU, 447 from UofA and 596 from NAU. The students answered questions from 18 categories ranging from quality of instruction to perceptions of food services.

"Students all over appear to be quite positive by the quality of instruction," Church said.

When asked if professors are easy to talk to or if students talked to professors about "non-class things," ASU students rated the University below the national average.

But the students said they didn't feel a lack of sensitivity from the professors, the report shows.

Black Caucus chair says group will advance all black concerns

Black Caucus chair says group will advance all black interests

The chairman of ASU's Black Caucus said Wednesday that the organization must act as an umbrella to further the interests and needs of black faculty, staff and students.

"Issues of black retention and recruitment will continue to dominate our attention," said V.P. Franklin, an ASU history professor and chairman of the caucus, during a group meeting.

"The caucus is here for you, and like in the past we will continue to serve as a political vehicle for any of your concerns."

Last spring, the caucus issued its "Strategic Plan of Action," which was circulated to University officials and leaders in the local black community. The plan dealt with recruitment and retention issues.

Franklin said the caucus will meet with ASU President J. Russell Nelson Monday to further discuss the plan.

"We are very vulnerable on this campus because we are few in numbers, so we need to reach out to those around us to help us," Franklin said. "We need the Urban League and the black community leaders, such as pastors."

Juliette Moore, the caucus' co-chair, stressed the importance of student involvement. "You are the reason we're here," she said to the group's student members.

Improvements in recruiting increase minority admissions

Staff and wire reports

The number of black and Hispanic students at ASU has made its biggest jump in years.

Figures released Tuesday show that the number of black students has jumped 10 percent this year compared to a 1.4 percent increase last year. Blacks now make up 2.2 percent of the University's student population.

The number of Hispanics rose 6.4 percent, compared with a 1.8 percent rise last year. Hispanics comprise 5.1 percent of the student body.

The number of Native American students rose 0.8 percent, down from an 11.6 percent increase in 1987. Indians make up 1.1 percent of the student population.

Peggy Jordan, ASU's associate director of admissions, said improvements in recruiting from schools with high percentages of minority students attributed to the increases.

"We visited the target schools probably more frequently last year than we did the prior year, and we were much more effective in promoting scholarships that were available," she said.

ASU President J. Russell Nelson said he was delighted with the figures but said the figures are not up to what the Arizona Board of Regents wants.

"We've certainly worked hard for this . . . but the figures are not as high as the regents would like, which is 10 percent," he said. "But we're going in the right direction."

Scientific creation

Compelling theory of origin quashed by scientific community

Darrin Hostetler
Columnist

An 18-year-old sophomore music major is driving ASU science professors and students ape by insisting that mankind appeared as the result of creation rather than as the product of a long evolutionary process.

And by so doing she is demonstrating that, if what distinguishes man from beast is the well-developed ability to reason, some members of the biology, anthropology and geology departments haven't yet evolved far enough.

Stacy Coar has turned her belief in "scientific creationism" into a crusade aimed at educating ASU students about the fact that the theory of evolution is just that — a theory. And she is trying to provide balance to a classroom environment where the idea that man descended from chimps reigns as the ultimate, guiding truism.

Coar has spent $300 of family funds to make 800 copies of a pamphlet called "The Scientific Case For Creation," which she has been distributing to students enrolled in several science classes where evolution is dealt with extensively. Capsulizing a very complex argument, her point is this: there are more holes in the theory of evolution than a slice of Swiss, while there is a very compelling argument for the theory of creation. So why not teach the two, side by side in the classroom, giving scientific creationism at least a mention as another possible answer to the ultimately unknowable question of the origin of the human race?

"No matter what anyone says, evolution is being taught as fact in ASU classes," Coar said. "I just want to show people that there is a scientific case for creationism."

Her case is thoroughly expressed in 120 "categories of evidence" supplied by the Center for Scientific Creationism and summarized in her handout — all of which are based on scientific observations and the scientific method. And hold on to your fossils — none of the 120 categories mentions the Bible even once.

Coar started looking into the evolution vs. creationism debate when she was in high school because she "couldn't accept all the contradictions" she found inherent in the evolutionary theory. And while she admits to being a Christian, she disputes the charge that she is motivated solely by religious motives.

"Everyone seems to think that I am just doing Bible thumpin'," Coar said. "They think I must be some kind of religious freak."

"But the information I'm presenting isn't of a religious nature, and it's not old fashioned. It's new scientific evidence."

"This is not something that you believe in just because the Bible tells you that you must blindly believe."

But despite her rational approach, Coar's pamphlet, combined with a letter she wrote to the State Press two weeks ago, has touched off a flood of response — most of it indignant, presumptuous and condescending.

For instance, a letter written by Robert Dietz, ASU Professor of Geology Emeritus, that was posted on the fifth floor of the Physical Science Building F-Wing is typical of the many responses sent to the State Press.

Dietz urged Coar not to "march with the armies of the night," and summarized the apparent consensus among local academia:

"Creation science is an oxymoron . . . the fact is evolution has happened . . . Hey man, face reality. The chimpanzee is your close relative . . ."

"You are here at ASU to be educated and not indoctrinated or brain stamped. You are here to learn the facts, man, just the facts — good, bad or indifferent."

The prevailing opinion is that poor little stupid Stacy, a lobotomized follower of Judeo-Christian myth, is trying to persuade enlightened ASU students to follow her back into the middle ages.

Well, I've read her arguments as I'm sure many of you have — and they aren't simplistic, they aren't mystical, and they don't even require the reader to believe in the Bible.

What they do require is that students of mankind's history challenge their evolutionary beliefs. And that they engage in debate, discussion and research into the big question — "Where did we come from?"

Where is the indoctrination if all sides are presented openly?

If scientific creationism is such a paper-thin theory, professors should spend some time matching it up to evolution in class — let the best theory win. That's what the academic community is all about. Coar should be praised for challenging entrenched beliefs with hard evidence, not derided as a simpleton.

No one knows for sure whether life slithered onto shore out of a pool of organic soup long ago in the misty annals of earth's history or originated suddenly as a result of the creative forces of a universal being.

But by treating serious scientific inquiry in such a close-minded way, some ASU scientists and scientists-to-be are exhibiting behavior that indicates they are opposed to free discussion of the matter.

And that they really don't want to know.

Washington, Ike, Kennedy . . . Quayle?

Editor:

I have just completed reading Ed Schubert's article "Chicken-hawk" in the Sept. 20 issue regarding Republican vice presidential candidate Dan Quayle's National Guard service. I have also been exposed to many other articles on both sides of this issue and would like to offer a different perspective.

I served in the military during the Vietnam War era along with many other young men and women. I was fortunate not to have served directly in Vietnam and never faced the spectre of death in a foreign country away from home, unlike many who did and died. I was fortunate to meet people in the Army, many of whom were drafted and served unwillingly, who were very intelligent, energetic, honest and obviously misplaced. I also met a few who served and died. Some of those were equally talented. I've often speculated what our world might be like if those that died had survived.

What if George Washington had died at Valley Forge, Eisenhower in Europe, Kennedy in the Pacific? Too remote for memory to consider? What about our own parents or other relatives, many of us suffered a great loss.

We are struggling in America today, and throughout the world, to determine who among us can lead. Effective, fair, honest, trustworthy, men and women who have the courage to stand before the nation, and say with conviction, "I can lead." We meet people every day who are outstanding school, business and local community leaders, but few are those who can stand the heat of a national limelight. This has been evidenced by the likes of Gary Hart, Geraldine Ferraro, our own Bruce Babbitt, Judge Bork and others. When we find someone with the talent and ability to lead, must we insist that they have risked their very lives for the "opportunity to serve"? As an employer, I have reviewed thousands of resumes, not one said "I killed people and avoided being killed in Vietnam," and it certainly would not be a criteria for which I would judge one's capacity for any position.

Our nation's official policy for those draft evaders who retreated to Canada and other points of the world, has been to welcome them back with no questions asked. The majority of us feel, we paid enough for the Vietnam War already, perhaps too much. Maybe we lost a Kennedy, or another Washington, or Ben Franklin, or how about Socrates or Plato or Homer or Michelangelo or . . . ?

Greeks contribute to ASU

Editor:

This is in reponse to Darrin Hostetler's opinionated article entitled "Shut Them Down" (Sept. 22). Darrin seems to feel that the ASU administration should "order (fraternities) to remove (themselves) immediately." Apparently, Mr. Hostetler is not fully aware of the immense contributions that the individual fraternities and the greek system as a whole have made to ASU and the community. It appears that he has, as usual, presented a biased, one-sided analysis of something he seems to know nothing about.

I'm not trying to invalidate or disprove the sparse, yet discriptive examples of fraternity behavior given by Mr. Hostetler. As a member of the greek system for two years, I have also been aware of the incidents that have gone on within fraternities. But really Darrin, are you trying to say that you feel the offenders have not been sufficiently punished? Social probation for semesters on end or being expelled from campus is not enough to satisfy you? Obviously, you are not aware of the value the greek system adds to Arizona State University and the surrounding community. Fortunately, the administration here is. For example, various fraternities have recently raised thousands of dollars for Muscular Dystrophy and the Make-a-Wish foundation. And what about the $16,000 the Greek Week raised to benefit Disabled Student Resources and the Make-a-Wish foundation last spring?

Mr. Hostetler also claims that "ASU's greek system is out of control." I will admit that 20 years ago it probably was. Hazing and abuse were rampant. But so it was nationwide, not just here in Tempe. So should all fraternities around the United States be expelled from their respective campuses? And is there no praise for trying to dissolve the unfortunate reputation greeks have had since they first began? Consider, Mr. Hostetler, the many chapter sponsored seminars and lectures, by well known speakers as Will Keim and Ed King, dealing with hazing, alcohol awareness, AIDS and leadership. These have all remarkably improved the behavior and attitudes of greeks on this campus. In addition, what about the contributions many greeks make to other organizations such as ASASU and Reach? Just to name a few. I imagine that if you research the tremendous amount of greek participation in these organizations alone, Darrin, you will be very surprised and maybe even a little embarrassed.

My point is that Mr. Hostetler has, on many occasions, portrayed greek organizations as a disgrace to the ASU system. However, he has never once considered their positive aspects. Maybe there's one other person around here that needs to "grow up" and stop speaking for the ASU administration.

Banned books

Week commemorates freedom to read, warns of censorship

By ED SCHUBERT
State Press

Larry was the only black student in my high school English class in which we were reading "Huckleberry Finn." He was also very bright and popular and almost perfectly self-conscious about being a minority.

But the acid test of his self-confidence came about three pages into the novel when another student, reading aloud about daily life on the Widow Douglas's plantation, came to: "By and by they fetched the niggers in and had prayers . . ."

The student suddenly stopped out of embarrassment and everyone turned to Larry. Larry, surprised at being so suddenly the center of attention, simply remarked: "I'm sure glad there aren't any niggers in here."

The tension instantly dissolved in laughter and applause.

Most of us, black or white, can understand that a term that today is a vicious racial epithet did not carry the same connotations when Mark Twain wrote his novel. We also recognize in "Huckleberry Finn" a truly anti-racist novel, in which a young white boy escapes his alcoholic, abusive father and finds an ideal adult role model in an escaped slave. There is no doubt that Jim is one of the most noble characters in American literature.

Nevertheless, from time to time we hear demands that "Huckleberry Finn" should be banned simply because it uses the N-word, or that a book by Kurt Vonnegut should be banned because it contains the F-word, or that a film about Jesus should be banned because it will offend someone's religious sensibilities.

For all these reasons, the week of Sept. 23 to Oct. 1 has been proclaimed Banned Books Week by the American Library Association, the purpose being to celebrate the freedom to read and to remind ourselves of the dangers of censorship.

Censorship has its seductions. With regard to Huck Finn, one might argue that, yes, the work has obvious literary and social merits — but why should blacks have to endure the perpetuation of a derogatory racial slur simply because it was acceptable a century ago?

A good question. As a Jew, I found myself struggling with a very similar problem this past summer when I read, for the first time, Shakespeare's "The Merchant of Venice."

English teachers had always told me the Jewish moneylender, Shylock, is really a sympathetic character, his seeming depravity is the result of the cruelty he has suffered at the hands of the Christian community; Shakespeare's intent in writing "The Merchant of Venice" was to denounce the anti-Semitism of his age.

So I read "The Merchant of Venice" well predisposed to accept it as a sympathetic portrayal of Jews and . . .

It ain't there, folks.

True, there are flashes of humanity in Shylock, as well as glimpses of cruelty in his Christian counterpart, Antonio. Shakespeare even gives Shylock the wonderful speech:

"I am a Jew. Hath not a Jew eyes? Hath not a Jew hands, organs, dimensions, senses, affections, passions? Fed with the same food, hurt with the same weapons, subject to the same diseases, healed by the same means, warmed and cooled by the same winter and summer as a Christian is? If you prick us, do we not bleed? If you tickle us, do we not laugh?"

All interpretations that see the play as sympathetic to Jews rely upon this passage because that's about all there is to support it.

But almost immediately afterward, Shylock curses his daughter, Jessica, who has eloped with a Christian and taken some jewels:

"Why there, there, there, there! A diamond gone cost me two thousand ducats in Frankford! The curse never fell upon our nation until now; I never felt it till now. Two thousand ducats in that, and other precious, precious jewels. I would that my daughter were dead at my foot, and the jewels in her ear: would that she were hearsed at my foot, and the ducats in her coffin!"

The first thing a Jew thinks when he reads a passage like that is: "Wait a minute, we're not like that."

The second thing he thinks is: "How much has this one play done to promote anti-Semitism? How many Jews have been persecuted and killed because of the stereotypes this play has popularized?"

If ever there was a case for the censorship of literature, it is the case against "The Merchant of Venice."

But how could we ban "The Merchant of Venice"? It's too beautiful, anti-Semitism and all.

Besides, if Jews were able to ban all books that were anti-Semitic, and blacks were able to ban all books that were racist, and feminists were able to ban all books that were sexist, and Christians were able to ban all books that were anti-Christian, and the Moral Majority were able to ban all books that used offensive language, then Western civilization would be shut down overnight.

Minorities and other groups that have been abused in literature simply have to bear the insult with dignity and good humor.

But there are ways to mitigate the harm that results from derogatory stereotypes in literature.

If English students read in "The Merchant of Venice" that Judaism is a religion based on law to the exclusion of mercy, then they should also be exposed to the ethical genius of the Talmud and learn what Judaism really teaches about mercy.

And if schoolchildren read "Huckleberry Finn," then they should also read books about the black experience written by blacks, such as "Roll of Thunder, Hear My Cry," by Mildred Taylor and "The Autobiography of Malcolm X."

But never censorship.

The trick is to always read more; never less.

Unpopular, 'bad' ideas have place in free society

"I cannot praise a fugitive and cloister'd virtue, unexercis'd and unbreath'd, that never sallies out and sees her adversary, but slinks out of the race, where that immortal garland is to be run for, not without heat and dust."

John Milton
Areopagitica

John Milton argued passionately that the free flow of ideas — including patently bad or dangerous ideas — was essential to the survival of republican government. A bad idea will weed itself out where truth is left free to combat it: "For who knows not that Truth is strong next to the Almighty; she needs no policies, nor stratagems, nor licencings to make her victorious."

By contrast censorship, even of bad ideas, always weakens a republic. When a government "protects" its citizens from the influence of bad ideas, it deprives them of the ethical discernment they would have otherwise developed in exercising their own judgement. To the extent that such a citizenry is virtuous, their virtue is "cloistered" and unreliable, having never been put to the test.

For these reasons, bad ideas have a place in free society: they form the ground against which we recognize better ideas.

Milton's views on censorship and freedom of thought form much of the basis of democratic government. Indeed, it is hard to imagine how democracy could function without a Miltonian view of human freedom.

Nevertheless, there remain instances where democratic societies practice censorship. These must be studied on a case by case basis.

For example: how should a free society handle a scandalous, anti-Semitic tract such as the The Protocols of the Elders of Zion?

But first, perhaps we should ask: what exactly is The Protocols of the Elders of Zion?

The Protocols is perhaps the most bizarre and successful forgery of all time. It purports to be the record of a secret meeting of the leaders of "world Jewry," during which they discuss plans to destroy Christianity and enslave the world. This "record" of roughly 80 pages is divided into 24 sections, or protocols.

But in fact, the Czarist secret police forged the Protocols early in the 20th century. Their purpose was to ferment pogroms against the Jews, the traditional scapegoat of the Czars.

Although the origin of the Protocols has been established beyond doubt, they nevertheless continue to flourish in fever swamps around the globe. Hitler was convinced of its authenticity and even urged his followers to emulate the ruthlessness of the "Elders of Zion." Today, the forgery has immense influence in the Arab world, as well as among political extremists of all stripes in Europe and the Americas.

On the surface, this is hard to understand. The book is downright wacky. Chapter headings proclaim: WE SHALL DESTROY GOD, WE CAUSE DEPRESSIONS, WE SHALL BE CRUEL, GENTILES ARE CATTLE, WE CONTROL THE PRESS, WE SHALL FORBID CHRIST, WE ARE WOLVES.

But beneath all the zaniness there lies an ingenious fascist manifesto. What the forgers of the Protocols cause the "Elders" to say, in effect, is this: "We Jews know that democracy will never work, that human beings are too debased to be free, and that only a ruthless autocracy can preserve order and safety. Therefore we will support democracy and human rights precisely to undermine and destroy the existing, legitimate autocracies, and then establish our totalitarian world government in their place."

Thus the forgers of the Protocols simultaneously advanced an essentially fascist philosophy of government, defended Russia's Czarist status-quo and, by putting their words in the mouths of Jewish "elders," gave both the Czar and, later on, the fascist movements a scapegoat and enemy to rally against.

Pretty damn clever.

Not surprisingly then, The Protocols of the Elders of Zion has been banned throughout the western world. The ban is not a legal one; anybody with connections with neo-Nazi organizations can get a copy. But how many of us have ties with neo-Nazi organizations?

Thus the Protocols are under a cultural (as opposed to legal) ban — a sort of universal gentlemen's agreement that the book must be suppressed.

But should the ban be lifted?

Shouldn't a book that has had roughly the same relationship to fascism as "The Communist Manifesto" has had to the communist movement be more readily available to scholars?

And would it be a bad idea to publish an edition of the Protocols with an introduction explaining its forged origins and historical importance, just as Hitler's "Mein Kampf" is published today?

It might be argued that, "Well, the Protocols might be fine for you and me to read, or any reasonable adult, but what happens when the loonies get their hands on it?"

But the problem is that the loonies already have it.

Drop in on Muammar Kadaffi and he'll be glad to give you a copy. Visitors report that he has a pile of them on his desk, and urges his guests to read this "most important historical document."

And when Louis Farrakhan blew into town a while back, the Protocols were on sale in the lobby of the hall in which he spoke.

The ban actually gives the Protocols a certain mystique to the Walter Mitty types who give it credence. To make the book available to anyone — not just kooks — would take some of the fun out of anti-Semitism. (Imagine how influential "Mein Kampf" might still be if it had the good fortune of being banned.)

No, the Protocols is too important to keep under ban. They are absolutely essential reading for anyone who would study anti-Semitism, fascism or political extremism in general.

Of course, the ultimate purpose of studying fascism and anti-Semitism is to defeat them. To destroy one's enemy, one must know them. And to know the enemy, it's never a bad idea to read their books.

ASASU to hold debate on 'English only' proposition

By KELLY PEARCE
State Press

Should English be ordained the official language of Arizona?

Associated Students will help students, faculty and staff decide with an "English Only" debate at 7:30 p.m. Tuesday in the College of Law's Great Hall.

The "English Only" amendment, or Proposition 106, will be on the Nov. 8 ballot. It seeks to make English the state's official language.

Jennifer Martin, director of the ASASU Political Union, said a big turnout is expected, with politicians from across the state participating.

"By far this is the most controversial issue in the November election," she said.

Arizonans for Official English collected more than 200,000 signatures earlier this year in order to place the proposal on the ballot. The amendment seeks to promote the use of the English language by assuring that "the government functions primarily, but not absolutely, in English."

Robert Park, founder and chairman of Arizonans for Official English, will present the group's views that support the amendment. Rep. Armando Ruiz, D-Phoenix and chairman of Arizonans Against Constitutional Tampering, will provide the opposition. College of Law Dean Paul Bender will moderate.

Park and Ruiz will present five-minute opening statements. Then they will answer questions from each other and written questions from the audience.

"A lot of people have heard about this proposition, but they don't understand it," Martin said. "There is a lot of ignorance in the community."

Martin said ASASU sent invitations to honorary committee members of AACT, which was formed to defeat Proposition 106. Members include Gov. Rose Mofford,

John Fees

Study shows government jobs get frustrating, humiliating, demeaning

WASHINGTON (AP) — The federal government is becoming a frustrating place to work, salaries are low, prestige is falling, offices are seedy and workers are subjected to humiliating experiences and sapped of initiative, according to a study ordered by Congress.

As a result, the study says, at the very time the work is becoming increasingly complicated and technical, the government is losing its ability to attract qualified employees and it is left with "what some have suggested, only half jokingly, is the best of the desperate," the report said.

"The federal government faces a slowly emerging crisis of competence," concludes the study, which was conducted for the Office of Personnel Management by the Hudson Institute, a conservative think tank, after Congress directed that OPM look into "the long term work force needs of the federal government."

OPM Director Constance Horner, submitting the report Tuesday, urged Congress to pay attention "for without a strong and well qualified civil service we endanger the democracy which it serves."

The report said the government's "ability to recruit and retain the best" already has deteriorated.

It said applicants scored lower on civil service exams than they did in the 1970s; the number of graduates of schools of public administration entering federal service has dropped 25 percent since 1979; the Internal Revenue Service hires accountants from the 54th percentile of the national Certified Public Accountant exam, compared to candidates from the 86th percentile hired by the major national accounting firms; and at former Democratic presidential candidate and Arizona governor Bruce Babbitt, Phoenix Mayor Terry Goddard, U.S. senators Dennis DeConcini and John McCain and Arizona U.S. representatives Morris Udall and Jim Kolbe.

Also invited were proponents of the proposition, including state Sen. Carl Kunasek, R-Mesa and ASU history professor Lewis Tambs.

"I think it's going to be hot," Martin said. "There are letters to the editor in papers every other day. It (the proposition) will affect everybody's lives dramatically if it goes through."

ASASU Activities Vice President Todd Martensen said the debate will help clarify this emotional topic.

"I think it's a great opportunity for students to find out about issues on the ballot," he said.

Meanwhile, debate about the measure, which would amend the state's constitution, has been hotly contested in the press and among academics and ASU officials.

ASASU President John Fees said he doesn't think the proposal will pass.

"The community will be in a world of hurt if it passes," he said. "Most people at ASU are against it."

Proponents of the amendment say people will be encouraged to learn and speak English, thus, creating a cost-effective government. Opponents say the amendment is intentionally vague and would result in the elimination of bilingual ballots and education.

"If they abandon the other languages, they will lose a unique feature in this state — national cultures," Japan Association President Masahiro Honda said.

Raymond Padilla, associate professor of educational leadership and policy, said the proposition is ill-conceived.

"It doesn't help to solve any problems," he said. "It only shows a personal view of the world."

But senior business major Dan Hagen, who last year was the College of Business president, disagreed.

Hagen favors Proposition 106 because he said Arizona citizens should learn English.

"My idea is not to exclude anyone," he said. "I would hope that people would take pride enough in their country to learn English."

Murat Eren, president of the Turkish Student Association said, "in the short run it won't have a big effect, but in the long run it will be bad."

some Veterans Administration hospitals intensive care beds are unavailable because of a shortage of nurses.

The report cited these factors for those conditions:

- Pay. It quoted a study which said federal workers on average get 24 percent less than comparable workers in the private workforce. In high-wage areas and high-ranking jobs, "the federal wage disadvantage is even greater," it said.

- Esteem. Over the years, candidates who campaigned for office by running against Washington have changed the public view of government work "into a mood of outright disdain and hostility," it said, and as a result "fewer of the most talented individuals have entered government service."

- "Needless aggravations." Among them: limited advancement opportunities, poor working conditions, random drug testing even for those who are not suspected of drug use, the practice of monitoring phone calls to check for personal calls and federal offices that are "drab or even seedy."

"In addition, federal workers often see that unproductive employees are retained, while those making extra efforts are not always rewarded," the report said.

"Regardless of the attitudes they bring with them to government, many federal workers soon come to believe that energy, initiative and risk taking are less-valued behaviors than 'going by the book' and staying out of trouble."

The Hudson Institute is headed by Mitchel E. Daniels, former political director in the Reagan White House.

Fees nominates student replacement committee

By KELLY PEARCE
State Press

Associated Students President John Fees has nominated himself and two other ASASU members for a student position on the committee that will search for a new ASU president.

The Arizona Board of Regents will select either Fees, ASASU state relations director Paul Larson or Clifton Bachelor, an assistant to Fees. The selection committee will include 11 members and two members at-large.

The committee will search for a replacement for ASU President J. Russell Nelson, who will step down from his post in July. He plans to take a sabbatical and then return to the faculty in the College of Business.

Regent President Herman Chänen said he hopes to have the committee's makeup completed by the end of the month.

"We're anxious to move ahead as quickly as we can," he said.

Fees said his three selections are equally qualified to sit on the committee.

"We need a student who has been involved in a diversity of experiences," Fees said. "I tend to be a student spokesman, and I want to serve in this capacity."

Larson, who said he was "naturally delighted" by the nomination, said he would add depth to the committee because of his experience as a lobbyist for ASASU.

"I feel confident that I could bring a lot to the committee," he said. "Whenever a president changes, there are a lot of changes that need to be made, and I feel I can share my ideas with the committee."

Bachelor could not be reached for comment Wednesday.

While Fees is hoping to be selected for the position himself, he said he wants to make it clear that it is not "an insider job."

Fees praised Larson and Bachelor, saying, "I have complete confidence in them. I know they would do a great job."

Board reviews plan to ease bike traffic on campus

By TERESA OWEN
State Press

The ASU Design Review Board is considering a plan that should help relieve the congestion of bicyclists and pedestrians on University malls.

The plan, which calls for new bike paths to be built on the perimeter of the campus, should be approved within the next two months, said C. Russell Duncan, ASU police chief.

The review board will make a decision and give its recommendations to ASU President J. Russell Nelson for final approval.

About 15,000 students, faculty and staff bike to campus.

The plan was initiated by the Bicycle Advisory Committee in January to alleviate problems on campus when bicycle riders and pedestrians mix, said bicycle committee member and ASU police Sgt. William Wright.

"We can no longer afford to mix them," he said.

The plan calls for adding, updating and removing existing bike paths and creating physical barriers between bicyclists and pedestrians. It should reduce the number of bicycle-pedestrian accidents, Wright said.

Most people who have seen the plan like the idea of reducing traffic congestion on campus, but some disagree with the plan's specifics.

Bill Rowe, assistant campus planner, said the review board rejected a preliminary plan Sept. 22 that suggested bike paths cross through the middle of campus.

The board recommended that the new paths circle the campus and feed into bike parking areas.

Review board member John Meunier, who also is the dean of the College of Architecture and Environmental Design, said the center of campus should be strictly for pedestrians.

"We feel putting bikes on campus will generate uncomfortable conflicts," Meunier said.

In addition, the board suggested that bicyclists be given more freedom before 8 a.m. and after 5 p.m., when there is less pedestrian traffic, he added.

Although bicyclists would have to travel further on paths circling the campus, it wouldn't take more time because there would be less pedestrian traffic, Rowe said.

"Both plans have pluses and minuses," he said. "The Bicycle Advisory Committee needs to go back to the drawing board to do another study like the DRB suggested."

Vince Mincone, campus affairs vice president who serves on the committee, said he has some reservations with the original plan.

Mincone questions whether two bikes traveling in opposite directions would collide. If the new bike paths are identified and marked like the current paths, they will not be effective, he said.

"It's not just a bicycle problem, it's a traffic flow problem," Mincone said.

Lecture to outline business advantages of Southwest

By ROBIE KAKONGE
State Press

Some of the Valley's top businessmen will speak Friday on the advantages of going into business in Arizona and other Southwestern states.

The lecture, sponsored by ASU's chapter of the International Association of Students in Economics and Business Management, will be from 9:30 a.m. to 11:30 a.m. in the MU Arizona Room. Students with an I.D. get in free.

The speakers will be Ed Beauvais, CEO of America West Airlines; Lewis Wright, vice chairman of Western Savings; and Douglas Yearly, executive vice president of Phelps Dodge Corp.

Beauvais and Wright will speak about the effects their companies have on Arizona's economy while Yearly is scheduled to address financial investments in the state.

Chapter president Kathy Martin said the group pursues "the goals of promoting international understanding and developing international business skills through project and programs."

The club is structured and operated like a corporation and is entirely student run. Members pay a $30 membership fee to interact with community leaders and participate in foreign exchange programs.

The idea of AIESEC started 40 years ago when students from seven European nations organized the club. There are chapters in over 67 countries.

Work on the $11.5 million Hayden Library expansion is 75 percent complete. Crews currently are waterproofing the underground building's roof.

Cady Mall should make its reappearance sometime in December, and construction of the building should be finished sometime in February. Move in is scheduled for late spring.

The $8.9 million addition to Sun Devil Stadium is nearly complete with newly-constructed offices set to open in mid-

October.

The project has added 1,600 loge seats, a weight room, a sports medicine area, classrooms and a new locker room for the Sun Devils.

Construction of the stadium's skyboxes will begin in January, after the Fiesta Bowl, with completion targeted for August 1989.

The $12.2 million expansion of the Architecture Building on University Drive and Forest Avenue is about one-third complete. The four-story building will provide 110,000 square feet of space. Aerial walkways will connect the expansion with the current Architecture Building.

The project should be finished by May.

Construction on the $20 million Student Recreation Complex is yet in its infancy stages. The 135,000-square foot center will house a swimming pool, gymnasiums, racquetball courts, weight rooms, locker rooms and tennis courts.

The project also will extend Palm Walk from Orange Street to the complex's front door.

School of Accountancy given $60,000 for professorship

The Phoenix office of the Arthur Andersen & Co. public accounting firm has given ASU a $60,000 grant for a professorship in the University's School of Accountancy.

The Arthur Andersen/Don DuPont Professorship will give $15,000 every year for four years to a professor in the school as a salary supplement. Recipients will be selected from current accounting faculty on research, teaching or service qualifications.

The professorship is named for Don DuPont, a former managing partner in the company's Phoenix office who now is managing director of human resources for the entire firm.

Arthur Andersen & Co. employs about 150 ASU graduates.

Civil engineering senior wins $5,000 scholarship

Brian von Allworden, a senior civil engineering major, has won a $5,000 scholarship that encourages greater undergraduate interest in structural steel design.

The Stupp Bros. Bridge and Iron Co. of St. Louis, Mo.

chose Allworden from contestants who applied from Arizona, Nevada, Alaska, Hawaii and non-urban areas of California.

Allworden had earned a bachelor's degree in architectural design from ASU in 1986. He works as a computer specialist with the U.S. Geological Survey in Phoenix.

Class to be offered explaining radon gas

The University will offer a special-interest class next month to explain the intricacies of radon gas.

The course will introduce the various types of radiation and their potential dangers.

Concern about radon gas, a colorless, odorless gas that exists in the foundations of many homes in the United States, has been building throughout the last year. Arizona is especially prone to the gas which is primarily found near underground mines.

The U.S. Environmental Protection Agency and the U.S. surgeon general recently encouraged all homeowners to buy a kit to test for radon.

The course is called "Understanding Radon: Facts and Fiction about Radon Gas" and will be offered from 6:30 p.m. to 9:30 p.m. Wednesdays at Corona del Sol High School in Tempe. A $45 fee pays for the course's six meetings.

ASU research specialist John L. Haldane will teach the non-credit course. For more information, call 965-6563.

New associate vice president for student affairs named

Christine Wilkinson has been named associate vice president for Student Affairs, replacing Marvalene Hughes.

Hughes left the University last month to become the vice president for student affairs for the University of Toledo in Ohio.

ASU Vice President for Student Affairs Betty Turner Asher said Wilkinson should easily fill Hughes' shoes.

"Christine is one of the nation's leaders in enrollment services and an exceptionally able campus leader," Asher said. "I am delighted that she has agreed to serve in this capacity."

Wilkinson will be in charge of career services, student health services, the MU, registrar, student financial assistance as well as undergraduate admissions.

She has been an ASU administrator since 1970. She earned her bachelor's and doctoral degrees from ASU and received her master's from the University of California at Berkeley.

EPA forced to regulate infectious medical waste disposal

WASHINGTON (AP) — Legislation to force the Environmental Protection Agency to regulate the disposal of infectious medical waste was approved Wednesday by the House Energy and Commerce Committee.

The voice-vote action all but guaranteed that, before adjourning next month, Congress will respond to the tides of used syringes and AIDS-contaminated materials that washed up on beaches and lakefronts this summer.

"The illegal disposal of medical waste is spreading like an epidemic," said Rep. Thomas Luken, D-Ohio, principal sponsor of the bill. "Much of this waste is infectious. It can literally kill people. All of it is repulsive and frightening."

The bill, similar to a plan passed by the Senate in August, would require EPA to set up a system to keep track of infectious medical waste generated in New Jersey, Connecticut and the eight states bordering the Great Lakes.

The regional demonstration program could become national in scope because the Luken bill would allow any state to opt for coverage under rules that would require a paper trail from waste generation to disposal.

"Tracking helps stop midnight dumping," Luken said. "Hospitals and clinics will now know where their medical waste is going, and so will the EPA."

The bill proposes stiff penalties: a civil fine of up to $25,000 for each day of violation and a maximum criminal penalty of 15 years in prison and daily fines of up to $50,000.

Committee members said Congress is being forced to act because EPA failed to issue regulations — first proposed 10 years ago but then quickly dropped — ensuring proper disposal of waste created in hospitals, laboratories and clinics.

"This is not just a question of a bloody syringe washing up on a beach on the East Coast," said Rep. Ron Wyden, D-Ore. "The medical waste system in this country is broken and inefficient and is regurgitating what it can't keep down."

Rep. Dennis Eckart, D-Ohio, said his state has experienced problems beyond the wastes found floating in Lake Erie. A truck supposedly carrying household garbage overturned in Ohio, spilling out "bags and bags of infectious medical waste," he said.

Luken said that in Youngstown, a physician put used syringes in a trash bin. "Kids found the needles and played 'doctor' with them, giving each other injections that could have proved fatal."

The push for control legislation also involves lawmakers from New York and New Jersey, where beaches were shut down for periods this summer after medical waste washed ashore.

"In my district on Long Island, medical waste is a very real and significant problem," said Rep. Norman Lent, R-N.Y., who placed partial blame on small clinics and small hospitals trying to save on disposal costs.

The bill would require EPA to study the problem of increasing amounts of medical waste.

Dukakis criticizes Bush for lack of ethics in administration

GREENSBURG, Pa. (AP) — Democrat Michael Dukakis, pledging to shut a revolving door between government jobs and private lobbying, derided George Bush on Wednesday for an administration he said was "a wheel of fortune for future foreign agents."

Maintaining an aggressive assault on his Republican rival, Dukakis also ridiculed Bush's new tax-deferred savings plan. Waving a $20 bill to represent the amount an average family would save in a year, he declared: "George Bush plays Santa Claus to the wealthy and Ebenezer Scrooge to the rest of us."

Before a large crowd that filled a street at the center of Greensburg in western Pennsylvania, the Democratic presidential nominee sought to link the vice president with allegations of ethical violations and illegalities by former officials of the Reagan administration, and the lobbying for foreign governments of Bush's own associates.

"George Bush may be satisfied with this administration's Hall of Shame — dozens and dozens of top administration officials who broke the law or violated the public trust," Dukakis said.

"He may be satisfied with letting Japan make the cars while his former colleagues make the license plates. I say America can do better than that."

Later, the Massachusetts governor met for an hour in New York with Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard Shevardnadze in a session Dukakis said was "just a chance to get acquainted."

Bush met last week with Shevardnadze, who told reporters the vice president had been involved in past high-level U.S.-Soviet meetings.

Dukakis said afterward: "I made clear to the foreign minister that I was not here to negotiate or discuss specific proposals. We have one president, and I support President Reagan's effort to move forward on these issues right up to the end of his term of office."

But Dukakis also said he brought up the plight of Soviet Jews and the pace of the Soviet withdrawal from Afghanistan.

Shevardnadze, asked which of the two candidates he preferred, said: "I'll tell you after the election."

Dukakis was meeting later with West German leader Hans Dietrich Genscher and planned a Thursday morning meeting with French leader Francois Mitterand.

In Pennsylvania, Dukakis pledged to sign "the day I take office" an executive order toughening restrictions on lobbying by former administration officials. An accompanying statement said he would issue a second order curbing government contacts with former members of Congress "for some period of time."

"In a Dukakis administration, we're not going to turn the White House into a wheel of fortune for future foreign agents," Dukakis said. "In a Dukakis White House, the staff is going to pledge allegiance to only one flag, and that's Old Glory."

Bush said last spring that he was "tired of being embarrassed" by ethical lapses in government and said he would establish a new ethics panel in the White House if elected to try to "avoid the excesses of the past."

He did not go into detail.

Dukakis, in renewing his assault on the administration's ethical record, cited the lobbying work of a firm whose members include Bush campaign manager Lee Atwater and other campaign advisers.

"George Bush may be satisfied that some of his top campaign aides were hired guns for a Bahamian government whose leaders are under investigation for drug activity. I say America can do better than that," he said.

Bush tours towns calling Dukakis inexperienced liberal

OTTAWA, Ill. (AP) — George Bush toured the small towns of central Illinois in a bus caravan Wednesday, painting Democratic opponent Michael Dukakis as "an inexperienced liberal governor" bent on beefing up the police powers of the Internal Revenue Service.

Stressing policy differences with Dukakis and suggesting more than once that the Massachusetts governor would make it easier for the IRS to go after ordinary citizens, Bush declared: "I am with the American people."

Bush's eight-bus caravan, complete with an entourage of country music entertainers, wended its way north on U.S. Highway 51, passing farm after farm and stopping at towns like El Paso, population 2,700, and Mionok, population 2,250.

Bush's trip was intended to galvanize Republicans and lure away Democrats in central Illinois to offset the traditionally large Democratic vote in Chicago and Cook County.

"He wants to squeeze another $35 billion bucks out of the taxpayers' pocket," Bush said, claiming the IRS would have to double its workforce to 200,000 people under Dukakis in order to carry out his proposal to collect billions of dollars in delinquent and evaded taxes.

"I have confidence in the honesty of the American people,"

Bush said. "I am not for a program that is going to increase IRS seizures and give the IRS more power."

Bush rode in the first bus, accompanied by his wife, Barbara, and country music singers Loretta Lynn, Crystal Gayle and Peggy Sue Wright, who warmed up the crowds with favorites such as "Coal Miner's Daughter" and "Praise the Lord, I Saw the Light."

Bush told voters he has come under attack for criticizing Dukakis' veto of a bill that would have required public school teachers to lead students in reciting the Pledge of Allegiance. Dukakis acted after an advisory opinion from the state Supreme Court said the bill was unconstitutional.

"The liberals hate it," Bush said, referring to his criticism. "They can't stand it. But I am right and I am with the American people on this and on voluntary prayer in school and a whole bunch of things I consider fundamental values."

He stressed that he supports the death penalty and Dukakis opposes it.

Bush said the United States was able to sign a nuclear-arms treaty with the Soviet Union last December "because we strengthened America and knew how to negotiate with the Soviets."

"And I don't think this is any time to turn to an inexperienced liberal governor of Massachusetts to handle the national security matters of the United States of America," Bush said.

After six stops and six speeches, Bush was having some trouble getting his message out. He told a small audience at a Del Monte corn packing plant that the Reagan administration had achieved success in dealing with the Soviets because "strength through peace works, and we'd better never forget that."

With 25 electoral votes, Illinois is one of the big prizes in the presidential race, and Bush has made five visits here since mid-summer seeking an edge in a neck-and-neck contest.

"Illinois is vital to the election," Bush said at a Illinois State University rally in Normal at the start of the day. "And before Nov. 8, I'm going to be back again and again because the land of Lincoln is going to be absolutely critical in choosing the next president."

At the rally with students, Bush attacked Dukakis' college-loan proposal, under which funds borrowed for school would be repaid over a long period by deductions from paychecks.

Officer's widow wants sons to understand death

By MIKE BURGESS
State Press

Toni Hawk wants her two sons to know their daddy died doing a job he loved.

She can't explain it yet to six-month-old Adam because he's too young. Her other son, Matthew, 2½, understands as best as he can but he misses his father.

"He would be happy to just be a patrol officer for the rest of his life," Hawk said of her husband, Tempe police officer Robert Hawk, who was killed Saturday when he stopped a motorist and was struck by a hit-and-run driver on the Superstition Freeway. "He looked forward to going to work."

Toni Hawk, 28, gently clutched the hand of her brother-in-law, Phoenix police officer Philip Hawk, as she spoke with a small group of reporters Wednesday at Tempe police headquarters.

Hawk, a soft-spoken woman, fought back tears at times but smiled shyly as she talked about her husband. Robert Hawk was the second Tempe officer to die in the line of duty.

The couple had been married for almost eight years and knew each other since seventh grade.

They fell in love while working at a Smitty's store in Scottsdale. Robert was a night manager at the store before enrolling at the police academy.

She said her husband realized his life-long dream when he graduated from the academy in August 1987.

The rookie patrolman never talked about dying.

"It was not a major concern for him," Toni Hawk said. "He enjoyed police work. This is what he had wanted to do.

I'm glad he finally had the chance," she said.

Hawk said she has no ill feelings toward the suspect in her husband's death, 27-year-old Robert Loren Brown of Ahwatukee. Brown surrendered to police Monday after a three-day search and was charged with leaving the scene of a fatal accident.

"He is a person like the rest of us," she said. "Robert always saw the best in us.

"I am very thankful he turned himself in and is helping with some of the investigation as far as the truck," she said. "Being left hanging, not knowing when, or who, or what, would be worse."

Hawk said she did not get a chance to say goodbye in person to her husband on the day he died. He was sleeping when she left for her job as a draftsman for an engineering firm.

"We talked twice on the telephone," she said. "We did a lot of our communicating on the telephone."

Hawk looks back fondly on her life with her husband.

She remembers him as a person who cared, like the time he got her to help him give a needy family a Christmas to celebrate. He met the family on a disturbance call.

She also remembers him as a family man. Hawk wasted no time when asked if she would let either of her sons become a police officer.

"You betcha," she said. "(Being) a police officer is a good profession."

Police arrest four men in undercover narcotics sale

Police arrested four men Monday after a month-long undercover operation that netted $35,000 worth of cocaine, $1,000 cash, two cars and an undisclosed amount of weapons.

The men were arrested at about 8:30 p.m. in a parking lot near 48th St. and Baseline Road after they allegedly tried to sell 4½ pounds of cocaine to Tempe undercover narcotics officers, said Roger Austin, a Tempe police spokesman.

Arrested were Dario Chavez Estrada Jr., 29, 4445 S. 8th St., Phoenix; Amando F. Salazar, 21, address unknown; Juan Lopez, 22, address unknown; and Nathaniel F. Ortiz, 24, 2242 N. 28th Place, Phoenix. Each was charged with attempted sale of a narcotic drug, Austin said.

In other incidents:

•A Tempe man was arrested Monday in connection with an Aug. 17 burglary at an ASU fraternity, police said.

David Rittershaus, 711 E. Bunker Hill Drive, was arrested at about 8 p.m. after officers served a search warrant at his home, ASU police Sgt. Keith Bailly said. He was charged with possession of stolen property.

police report

Bailly said Rittershaus allegedly possessed property stolen from 701 Alpha Drive in addition to obtaining a credit card number, which police believe was used to purchase merchandise.

Rittershaus was arrested after the credit card owner received a bill and contacted police. Police later found the address where the merchandise was delivered.

Some of the stolen property was recovered, Bailly said.

•A 38-year-old man was arrested Monday in connection with 10 harrasing phone calls that were made to students in two ASU dormitories in the past three weeks, police said.

Phillip Vernon Stanley, address unknown, was charged with one count of misuse of a telephone, ASU police Sgt. Keith Bailly said.

Bailly said Stanley was arrested at about 7:30 a.m. at a home in Scottsdale, where he was renting a room. Stanley apparently told students he was lonely and sometimes gave a phone number. Police traced the number to the Scottsdale home, he said.

Stanley was arrested by Tempe police in 1986 in connection with 20 harrasing phone calls to residents of University Towers.

•A man unaffiliated with ASU was questioned Tuesday after he was seen carrying a 9mm semi-automatic pistol on Cady Mall, police said. He told police he was carrying the weapon for self-protection and was advised of the University's weapon policy.

•The ASU police department's Bicycle Safety Team issued 31 bicycle citations Tuesday and 48 warnings.

NASA space shuttle ready to fly; overnight countdown underway

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — Discovery's five astronauts, anxious to break an agonizing 32-month drought in American spaceflight, were "elated to be headed for space" Wednesday as the overnight countdown began for a Thursday midmorning launch.

NASA officials were admittedly nervous, but confident. "The space shuttle is ready to fly," said shuttle administrator Richard Truly, adding, "Even the weather is looking good."

Late Wednesday night, Air Force weather spokesman Mike Beeman estimated there was a 90 percent chance the weather would permit a launch Thursday. But he said winds that were currently 10 knots out of the north were expected to shift to east-northeast by morning, which would blow across the landing runway. Launch criteria allows no more than a 12-knot crosswind, in case the orbiter must return for an emergency landing.

"We're real concerned about what those winds are going to do tomorrow morning," Beeman said. "It's something we're watching real, real closely."

The ship, obscured for weeks behind a giant scaffold, stood in full view after NASA retracted the structure. The process took place hours early, so "workers will have a head start" on final countdown procedures. The count resumed at midevening Wednesday after a daylong, scheduled hold.

Fueling was to begin at about 1:40 a.m. EDT, with the craft bathed in brilliant spotlights.

"This has been a long 2½ years," Truly said of the difficult period since the Challenger accident in 1986. Liftoff was scheduled for 9:59 a.m. EDT, with a 2½-hour window to take care of weather or technical delays.

After launch officials gave preliminary go-ahead for overnight fueling of Discovery, Truly passed the news to Frederick H. Hauck, the shuttle commander. "The best way to describe him is elated to be headed for space," Truly said.

The crew studied updated flight plans and received weather briefings before an early bedtime.

Around the Kennedy Space Center area, excitement was mounting. Campers and recreation vehicles found good viewing places across the Indian River. Souvenir sellers set up shop. NASA's Visitor's Center sold out of the commemorative envelopes that feature the crew patch.

Arnold Aldrich, director of the shuttle program said: "Tomorrow the shuttle should return to its proper place in the sky and launch us into a new era."

Hauck and his four-man crew had an easy day, relaxing at the crew quarters seven miles from launch pad 39B. Their wives were there, too.

They were to be awakened at 5 a.m., for breakfast, a last-minute weather briefing and time to get into their cumbersome flight suits.

The four-day Discovery mission will be the first shuttle flight since Challenger exploded in a fireball 73 seconds after liftoff from the same launch pad on Jan. 28, 1986. The accident ceded manned space to the Soviet Union, which has put 16 cosmonauts into orbit since then, aboard six flights.

Asked what would be going through his mind as the count ticks down, the center's deputy director, Tom Utsman, said: "I'll be saying that hopefully we have done all the right things, that we haven't taken any shortcuts, that we haven't overlooked anything."

"I'd be a liar if I said I wasn't nervous, but I also am confident."

As a result of investigations since the accident, the shuttle fleet and NASA's management have undergone major changes. The shuttle itself has had 210 modifications, including the addition of an escape system that would enable the crew to bail out if the ship had to ditch in the ocean. The escape system would not have saved the Challenger crew.

Stringent anti-pornography bill passes in Senate

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate on Wednesday unanimously approved a stringent anti-obscenity measure that would give prosecutors new ways to crack down on child pornography and other obscene materials and stiffen penalties for those who sell or possess them.

Some senators said they had concerns about the constitutionality of portions of the measure — including a provision making it a crime to simply possess obscene materials on federal lands, from national parks to the halls of Congress.

But, as Sen. Joseph Biden, D-Del., noted wryly: "This is not the season when anyone is going to stand up on the Senate floor and say: 'I oppose a child pornography bill.'"

The vote was 97-0. Not voting were Sens. Lloyd Bentsen, D-Texas, and Dan Quayle, R-Ind., the two vice presidential nominees, and Spark Matsunaga, D-Hawaii.

The pornography measure was added to a bill requiring large companies to offer at least 10 weeks of unpaid, job-protected leave to employees with medical emergencies or new babies.

With conservatives strongly opposed to making any new demands on the business community, the fate of the double-barreled bill was uncertain.

A string of senators rose to make ringing denunciations of child pornography and "the money-hungry, illegal, immoral sex industry of this country," as Sen. Dennis DeConcini, D-Ariz., put it.

The amendment sponsored by Sen. Strom Thurmond, R-S.C., creates new crimes and new punishments. Among other things, it would:

- Ban the buying and selling of children for use in child pornography.
- Ban the use of computers to distribute or advertise child pornography.
- Require producers of sexually-explicit material to document the ages of persons appearing in the material.
- Stiffen penalties against those convicted of selling or possessing with intent to sell child pornography and obscene materials.
- Give states clear authority to regulate indecent programming on cable and subscription television services.

- Make it illegal to sell or possess obscene material or child pornography on federal lands.
- Make it easier for prosecutors to file civil forfeiture suits against people possessing obscene materials. If a judge anywhere rules a piece of material is obscene, prosecutors could file civil suits against individuals all over the country without first obtaining a similar judgment against the material in each jurisdiction.

Sen. Arlen Specter, R-Pa., said there were constitutional problems with the last two provisions.

He said the "very troubling" federal lands provision would encompass the entire Virgin Islands and Indian territory, national parks, military bases and federal buildings. The Senate is trying to protect children, "not trying to reach a soldier who has an obscene book in his car," Specter said.

He also expressed concern that individuals hit with civil actions would have less protection than in the criminal trials now required before the civil suits can be filed.

Rasp moves from defense to offense for ASU

Mike Rasp

By GARY JACKSON
State Press

The ASU football staff discovered a defensive player who could provide depth for the team at tight end, a position that was becoming an endangered species for the Sun Devils.

Until this week, sophomore Mike Rasp had played at defensive end but was moved to offense because injuries had put a serious dent at tight end.

After his second day of practice Tuesday, Rasp said he was tired but not as physically worn out as the day before.

"I didn't know the offensive linemen go through that much. It's a lot of hard work," he said. "When you are on defense you hit the guy and then go for the ball, but on offense you have to block the guy 10-15 yards."

At defensive end last season, Rasp made six unassisted tackles, two quarterback sacks, forced two fumbles and deflected one pass.

Tight end and offensive tackle coach Bill Stewart said Rasp was told that he would play immediately and was not being switched to tight end to be a backup.

Senior Gary Knudson is out for the season because of a broken left fibula and junior Scott Veach is questionable due to a sprained ankle.

Sophomore Ryan McReynolds moved up from the No. 2 position to start against Nebraska last week, but the Devils still lack depth at that position.

Stewart said freshmen Mike Everitt and Andy Ingram are available to use if necessary. However, because of their inexperience, Stewart said it would be better not to rush them and would prefer to redshirt them instead of pushing them into a game situation.

Rasp will be used for goal line and short-yardage situations, Stewart said. If Rasp is allowed to develop slowly, experience some success at the position and build his confidence, he will make great contributions to the team, he said.

"I think his future is on our side of the ball," Stewart said. "He's blocking the guy at the position he used to play. He ought to know what the guy on defense is going to do."

Rasp was recruited as a tight end in 1986, but after three days he was switched to defensive end. He played both positions at Norwin High School in Irwin, Pa.

While coaching at the University of North Carolina from 1985 to 1987, Stewart scouted in the area that Rasp competed in, just outside of Pittsburgh.

Stewart said he had hoped to have Rasp and his twin brother John play bookend tight ends in college, but they were recruited by separate universities. His brother, who attends the University of Pittsburgh, has since dropped football to devote more time to basketball.

Rasp had cartilage removed from his knee last week, having twisted it on defense at the beginning of the season.

This week Rasp said he was learning the plays and pass patterns and how to evade the defensive end who will line up against him during a game.

The change in positions has provided Rasp with the opportunity to see action on the playing field, he said.

"I told coach (Larry) Marmie that I would play anywhere that would maximize my efforts to help the team," he said. "I was ready to play. This is my third year — I want to get on the field anywhere."

Rasp, who is able to play on each side of the line of scrimmage, said he would like to make big plays on both.

"Playing both positions in one game and getting a touchdown and a (quarterback) sack would be one of the best feelings," he said.

Badminton team to debut coach, new players at tournament

By CHRIS NACKINO
State Press

The ASU badminton team will unveil both a new head coach and two new players as it travels to St. Louis, Friday through Sunday, to play in its first match of the 1988 season.

Head coach Guy Chadwick, who replaces former head coach Carol Fisher, will debut two new players, John Manha and Erika Von Heiland, in a meet that will primarily focus on learning.

"This meet is basically for the experience of the younger players — to get the season rolling," Chadwick said.

The team, which will be without senior

Tom Carmichael until January, will rely on the strength and leadership of all-American triple champion (single, doubles, mixed-doubles) junior Liz Aronsohn, along with four additional returners, including senior Joel Goldstein, juniors Joel Keirnan and Pam Rekiere and sophomore Lori Lichay.

"Next January we should be strong . . . when some of our stronger players begin to play," Chadwick said. "We should be a favorite to take another national title this year."

Suffering the loss of three starters, including all-American Ben Lee, Chadwick said the team will emphasize unity, rather than individuality.

"I think with the team we have this year, they'll be good enough to win again," Chadwick said. "However, we will win with team depth, rather than individual talent."

The team, which has won eight of the last 10 men's and women's national collegiate titles, will play host to the Merle Packer Invitational in a two-day tournament Oct. 15 through 16.

All levels of competition will be represented and anyone interested in playing can call 965-7398 for more information.

2 games highlight 1st big weekend of Pac-10 competition

Dave Hodges
Sports Editor

The Pac-10 begins a shift into high gear with two important conference games on the schedule for this weekend.

Taking a look at the standings in the Pac-10, we find Oregon, of all teams, is atop the Pac at 2-0, with victories over Washington State and Stanford.

Oregon, which has now won five straight dating back to last year, leads the conference in scoring defense, allowing only 10.3 points per game. Last week the Ducks beat the Cardinal, 7-3.

"It looked like a perfect game against a no-hitter out there," Oregon coach Rich Brooks said. "It was a great defensive game, if you're into those kinds of things."

The Ducks are, but they also have some offensive production, ranking third in the Pac-10 in scoring offense at 33 points per game. Tailback Derek Loville is second in the conference in rushing, averaging 127 yards a game.

The Ducks, who have outscored their competition, 99-31, have an off day this week before a big game at Southern Cal. Oops, Oregon plays Saturday at San Diego State, but isn't that the same thing? . . . Prediction: Oregon 42, San Diego State 14.

One of two big Pac-10 games this week matches second-ranked UCLA and Washington in front of an ABC television audience.

Both teams are 3-0 and the series has been a close one, with the Bruins holding a slight 24-23-2 edge. But the Huskies will be trying to avenge a 47-14 loss to UCLA at the Rose Bowl last year.

Although Husky Stadium can be an intimidating place to play (just ask ASU), the Huskies will have their hands full. The Bruins lead the conference in rushing offense, total offense, scoring offense, passing defense and total defense. The scoring and total offense totals also lead the nation.

Heisman candidate quarterback Troy Aikman easily leads the conference and is among the nation's best in passing efficiency with a rating of 193.

It will be a tough task for the Huskies, maybe too tough . . . UCLA 35, Washington 21.

The other big game is down the road in Tucson, where the third-ranked Southern Cal Trojans face the Arizona Wildcats.

Saturday's game marks the return of Larry Smith to Arizona Stadium. Smith, now USC's head coach, was the coach at Arizona for seven years from 1980 to '86.

Smith left Tucson rather abruptly, and Arizona fans have been looking forward for this game for more than a year. Don't expect them to present Smith with roses, either.

The Trojans and Wildcats both are 1-0 in the conference. The only differences in their records is that Arizona lost to Oklahoma, 28-14, while the Trojans beat the Sooners, 23-7.

The Trojans faced Stanford's run-and-shoot offense two weeks ago, and controlled Oklahoma's wishbone last week. This week, they get to face a combination of the two.

Arizona's a pretty good team, and USC is missing several key players, including leading scorer and rusher Aaron Emanuel. The ingredients are there . . . Arizona 24, Southern Cal 21.

ASU will be the only Pac-10 team without a conference game under its belt after this weekend. The Sun Devils open Pac-10 play Oct. 8 against Washington.

The Devils have to get by Lamar University first — a late replacement after New Mexico found out it had two games scheduled for the same day and did not want to play a doubleheader. No problem . . . ASU 55, Lamar 13.

Oregon State opened up the season in surprising fashion by playing a good game against Arizona. The Beavers have continued to play pretty well, beating San Jose State, 41-27, and talented California, 17-16, before losing to a good Colorado team, 28-21.

The victory against California, however, should not have happened. An extra minute was somehow added to the game, and OSU kicked a game-winning field goal.

But the Beavers have talent. Quarterback Erik Wilhelm is second only to Aikman in total offense in the conference. He is throwing for 281 yards a game.

This week the Beavers meet Fresno State before playing at UCLA next weekend. Don't look ahead . . . Oregon State 31, Fresno State 28.

California, which had a tough time for a while with Kansas before beating the Jayhawks 52-21, meets San Jose State in a series that dates back to 1899.

Cal leads the series 20-6, but the Spartans have won three of the last four. Not this year . . . California 42, San Jose State 21.

The Big-10 buster, Washington State, has had a week off to think about its 43-28 loss to Oregon. The Cougars had defeated Illinois, 44-7, and Minnesota, 41-9, on the road to open the season.

Is this team good? Who knows. Maybe we'll find out this week as the Cougars travel to Tennessee to meet the struggling Volunteers (0-4) . . . Washington State 33, Tennessee 17.

Finally, the Stanford Cardinal is sitting in the Pac-10 basement at 0-2. But are they that bad? The Cardinal barely lost to both USC, 24-20, and Oregon, 7-3. They also beat San Diego State, 31-10.

But Stanford faces a tough challenge as the Cardinal travels to South Bend, Ind., to meet fifth-ranked Notre Dame in a nationally-televised game on ESPN.

But, in all honesty, we don't know how good the Fighting Irish is — its three wins have come against Big-10 teams . . . Notre Dame 31, Stanford 21.

Bidwill hints he won't lower ticket prices next year

PHOENIX (AP) — Phoenix Cardinals' owner Bill Bidwill, vilified by some fans for having the NFL's highest average price at $38 per ticket, hinted Wednesday that the cost probably won't be lowered next season. "I can't see that right now," Bidwill told the weekly meeting of the Phoenix Press Box Association. "But we're not making any decisions on ticket prices for next year at this time."

The Cardinals, who moved to Arizona from St. Louis last March, have yet to officially sell out a home game at 72,175-seat Sun Devil Stadium.

Bill Bidwill

They drew 51,987 for their Aug. 12 debut in a preseason game against New Orleans and 46,429 for the exhibition finale against Minnesota.

Phoenix's Sept. 12 game against Dallas in the first NFL regular-season game ever played in this state was not blacked out locally only because KTVK-TV and KDKB radio bought the remaining 3,105 seats before the 72-hour deadline.

Still, just 67,139 people attended that nationally televised Monday night game. There were 5,036 no-shows.

Last Sunday afternoon against the defending Super Bowl champion Washington Redskins, the Cardinals drew 61,973. There were 659 no-shows.

Some NFL coaches and officials have joked about the cost of Cardinals' tickets, many of which contain costly premiums ranging from $50 to $900 per ticket. Some have called it gouging since the ticket price is almost twice the league average and $12 higher than the closest competitor.

"I really haven't heard any comments from them," Bidwill said. "No one has sent a check back. I was reading a business magazine piece recently that said Miami may average $46 at its new stadium. And if Washington ever gets its new stadium built, they may average at least $75 a ticket."

Bidwill moved his team out of 54,392-seat Busch Stadium in St. Louis — the NFL's second-smallest facility — because he said he could not compete financially with the rest of the league.

Under terms of an agreement with the cities of Phoenix and Tempe and ASU, Bidwill is projected to earn $17.5 million this season in ticket and concession revenue. His team reportedly grossed only $3.8 million last year.

Critics charge that Bidwill should have showed some public-relations savvy and kept ticket prices down the first year to build a solid fan foundation.

"Hindsight's always easy," Bidwill said. "In hindsight, I probably would have been more aggressive in the marketing area. However, we were not allowed to do marketing until June. We didn't sign our lease with the (state) Board of Regents until the 22nd of July."

"We felt we were under some restraint there. In hindsight, we didn't expect to get so many premium seats back (15,000). . . . We also weren't set up for single-game sales until very late. But I think we will have some sellouts by the end of the year."

Despite the problems, the 55-year-old Bidwill said he has "no regrets" about moving to Phoenix.

"The decision that was made was really a gut feeling — that this community would be the best place the Cardinals could be," he said. "I thought the combination of the fans and the environment of the community would spill onto the team. For the most part, I think it has. Last week's game was great. They're great fans and God, I like those fireworks" which are set off after each Cardinal touchdown.

The 30-21 win over the Redskins evened Phoenix's record at 2-2 and put the Cardinals in a four-way tie for first place in the NFC East with Washington, Dallas and the New York Giants.

"I think the team has played well most of the year. They made a lot of mistakes during the (1-3) preseason. Errors here, errors there. But they played well against Washington. It was a good win," Bidwill said. "Anytime the forces of good triumph over the forces of evil, you're happy."

Bidwill, minus his customary bow tie and uncharacteristically cracking jokes among reporters, still bristles whenever realignment is brought up or why his team isn't called the Arizona Cardinals.

"When the move was made, if someone said it was conditional only if we were put in the (NFC) West, I would have said yes. The fans in Phoenix didn't have any traditional rivals. They watched whatever game TV gave them," Bidwill said.

"I thought it would be wise to get involved with Los Angeles and San Francisco. But the Cardinals had rivals back East. To them, we were the S.O.B.s who came in every year. Those teams didn't want to give up 35 to 40 years of rivalry."

"As far as the name, there was only one other team called Phoenix here already (the NBA's Phoenix Suns). There are three universities with the name Arizona. And three straight professional teams named Arizona went out of business" — the last being the USFL's Arizona Outlaws in 1986.

Hershiser breaks record of 58 consecutive scoreless innings

SAN DIEGO (AP) — Orel Hershiser broke Don Drysdale's record of 58 consecutive scoreless innings, shutting out the San Diego Padres for 10 innings Wednesday night.

Hershiser extended his streak to 59 innings, but his Los Angeles Dodgers were also unable to score and the game was 0-0 through the 10th. Jesse Orosco relieved Hershiser to start the 11th.

Hershiser, trying for his sixth straight shutout, gave up just four hits and did not allow a runner past first base until the 10th.

Marvell Wynne struck out to open the 10th but reached base on Hershiser's wild pitch. Benito Santiago sacrificed and Wynne took third on Randy Ready's groundout. Garry Templeton was intentionally walked and ran to second, but Hershiser retired pinch-hitter Keith Moreland on a fly ball for the record.

With a crowd of 22,596 cheering for Hershiser, the Dodgers streamed from the dugout to congratulate their ace right-hander, who broke the mark set by Drysdale in 1968 with the Dodgers.

"I really and truly did not want to get the record," Hershiser said in a dugout interview with Drysdale, now a Dodgers' broadcaster. "Out of respect of the man next to me, I feel I should have stopped at two-thirds. I wanted to just put the ball down out of respect for the guy next to me and baseball records."

"But the guys next to me in the dugout kind of convinced me to go for it," Hershiser said.

Said Drysdale: "If I had known that I would have been down there kicking you by the seat of the pants."

Drysdale was among those on the mound to hug Hershiser. "It was the mental groove, more than the physical," Hershiser said. "I was out there pitching for wins in a pennant race, not a streak."

Hershiser, 23-8 after getting a no-decision, will start for the Dodgers in Game 1 of the National League playoffs against the New York Mets on Tuesday night.

"You get one and the next and then about the third one, you think about a streak," he said. "The odds were 1,000-to-1 when I had four. Then after the last one, it's still 30-to-1. And then this one happened. I did not think about the streak until the seventh inning tonight."

Hershiser struck out three and walked one in breaking the record. On July 19, 1987, he pitched into the 11th inning against Houston in his longest career outing.

Hershiser, like Drysdale, had his streak prolonged with an umpires' call.

In Hershiser's last start, a 3-0 win at San Francisco, the Giants appeared to break through for a run on Ernest Riles' one-out grounder, which would have ended the streak at 43 innings.

But umpire Paul Runge ruled baserunner Brett Butler interfered with the relay from second base to first and Riles was declared out to close the inning and erase the score.

In a 1968 game against San Francisco, Drysdale hit a batter with the bases loaded, but umpire Harry Wendlestedt ruled the hitter, Dick Dietz, leaned into the pitch rather than try to get out of the way. The umpire refused to allow the walk and Drysdale then retired Dietz.

Though Drysdale actually pitched 58 2/3 scoreless innings in his run from May 14, 1968 to June 4, 1968, the fractions are not recognized. Baseball's official statisticians decided 20 years ago that in terms of a scoreless or hitless streak, a starting pitcher should not be credited with a partial inning if a run comes in during that inning.

Standing between Hershiser and Drysdale was Walter Johnson, the American League record holder with 55 2/3 scoreless innings. Johnson gets credit for the fractions on his record because he made two relief appearances during the streak.

Awalt injures ankle; could be out 3 weeks but says he can play

PHOENIX (AP) — Phoenix Cardinals starting tight end Robert Awalt tore two ligaments in his left ankle during practice Wednesday and team doctors said he could be sidelined up to three weeks.

However, Awalt said he still hopes to play in Sunday's NFL road game against the undefeated Los Angeles Rams.

"I think I can play if I'm taped right," said Awalt, leaning on crutches after returning from a local hospital. "If they can immobilize it and the swelling doesn't get too bad, I think they can tape it real tight and I can put on a high-top cleat and play. That's the best scenario if it's pain-free. The worst scenario is I'm out two to three weeks."

The 6-foot-5, 248-pound Awalt, who was one of the league's top rookies last season with 42 receptions for 526 yards and six touchdowns, has nine receptions for 70 yards so far this year for the 2-2 Cardinals.

Awalt said his injury occurred during the afternoon practice at East High School when he slipped running a routine pass route.

"I hit a patch of wet grass. My foot caught a little bit and then gave and I rolled over the ankle pretty good," he said. "The X-rays were negative. Nothing's broken. But I tore two ligaments and (team orthopedist) Dr. (Russell) Chick said it could be a 2-3 week thing."

"But my attitude right now is I want to play. I don't want to miss this game. Physically, I think I'll be alright."

Cardinals coach Gene Stallings is not so sure.

"I'm not going to play him if he's not ready to play. The doctor will make the final decision," Stallings said. "He'll be out a week or two probably. I saw it happen. He just slipped. I hate it, but it's part of the game."

Stallings said backup Jay Novacek, a fourth-year pro who has 12 catches for 241 yards and two touchdowns this season, will most likely start against the 4-0 Rams.

As backup tight ends, Phoenix may use special teams standout Ron Wolfley and rookie snapper Mark Walczak.

"We got some possibilities," said Stallings. "But it still makes a difference to lose one of your starters. I need to get him back as quickly as possible."

Joyner-Kersee, U.S. women's basketball team win gold

Carbajal advances to final

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — U.S. women did what the men couldn't do in basketball, America's can-do boxers conjured memories of Montreal, and Jackie Joyner-Kersee won her second gold medal Thursday at the Seoul Olympics.

The American women beat Yugoslavia 77-70 for the gold medal, providing some consolation for Wednesday night's 82-76 loss to the Soviet Union in the men's semifinal.

"All the griping and complaining about hard work paid off today when we pulled off this victory," Teresa Weatherspoon said after running along the baseline with an American flag. "It's a feeling you just can't explain. When you hear that anthem being played, you just can't explain it."

Teresa Edwards had 18 points for the Americans, 14 in the second half when the United States took command with a 12-6 run. The U.S. team led by 17 points with less than five minutes to play.

The Soviet women got the bronze. Three U.S. boxers — members of a team some had called America's worst ever — advanced to the finals Thursday morning, and three more were waiting in the wings. With eight boxers getting at least to the semifinals, the U.S. team already was guaranteed more total medals than the seven from 1976.

Michael Carbajal of Phoenix, Kennedy McKinney of Killeen, Texas, and Ray Mercer of Jacksonville, Fla., became the first three U.S. boxers into the finals.

Carbajal scored a 4-1 decision over Robert Isaszegi of Hungary in the 106-pound class, and McKinney stopped Phajol Moolson of Thailand in the first round of their 119-pound bout.

"The competition is there, but I'm not giving them a chance," McKinney said. "I'm just blowing them away."

Mercer, at 27 the oldest man on the team, battered European champion Arnold Vanderlijde of Holland and stopped him in the second round of their 201-pound bout.

"He really didn't have any heart," Mercer said, "and I was going to take what heart he had."

Romallis Ellis of Ellenwood, Ga., lost a unanimous decision to Andreas Zuelow of East Germany in the 132 pound semifinal, and Kenneth Gould of Rockport, Ill., dropped a 4-1 decision to Lauraent Boudouani.

Both will get bronze as consolation, and still lined up were Riddick Bowe, Roy Jones and Andrew Maynard — waiting to challenge the record of the fabled seven who won five gold, one silver and one bronze in 1976.

Joyner-Kersee, who also won the heptathlon, added the women's long jump title with a leap of 24 feet, 3 1/2 inches, breaking her own Olympic mark of 23-10 1/4, set in winning the heptathlon in 1984.

Heike Drechsler of East Germany won the silver with 23-8 1/4, and the bronze went to Galina Christiakova of the Soviet Union at 23-4.

In the 13th day of Games, the medal standings looked like this: Soviet Union 88 total, 37 gold; East Germany 74 total, 29 gold, and United States 59 total, 21 gold.

A doctor for the Canadian Centre for Doping in Montreal, meanwhile, revealed Wednesday that Ben Johnson's male hormone levels were so low when he won the 100 meters last Saturday in Seoul that it could only have been from extended steroid use.

Johnson was stripped of the gold medal when he tested positive for steroids, but his agent had said the sprinter was sabotaged by a stranger with a bottle of "sport drink" containing a "goopy yellow substance" that smelled bad.

The coordinator of doping control here also said Johnson admitted he took three medications, one of them by injection, before his race. One of them was a partially banned corticosteroid which "could be suspicious," Dr. Lee In-joon said.

The Soviet Union defeated the United States in their first Olympic basketball meeting since the controversy of 1972 in Munich. The United States now has lost only two of its 87 Olympic games, both to the Soviets.

And Carl Lewis lost the 200 meters to teammate and friend Joe DeLoach. Lewis won the long jump and got the 100-meter gold when Johnson was stripped for taking steroids. He still has the 400-meter relay, but the best he can do now is three gold, not four like in the Los Angeles 1984 Olympics.

On Thursday, a silver medal-winning weightlifter from Hungary became the eighth athlete caught using drugs. Andor Szanyi, who finished second in the 100-kilogram class, tested positive for the same drug Johnson used, stanozolol, and was stripped of his medal.

A total of five weightlifters now have tested positive for drugs, and the International Weightlifting Federation said it would consider lifetime bans for first-time offenders.

"The effect of these positives is terrible," federation president Gottfried Schottl said. "You cannot say with words how much."

America also won the gold in the demonstration sport of baseball behind the complete-game pitching of Jim Abbott and the two homers of Tino Martinez, beating Japan 5-3.

The Soviets added their 37th gold when Alexandre Kurlovich, crowned the "world's strongest man" won the super heavyweight division in weightlifting. Kurlovich, a 292-pound sports instructor, lifted a total weight of 462.5 kilograms (1,019.3 pounds).

In tennis, Americans Ken Flach and Robert Seguso, the No. 1 seeds, defeated Czechoslovakians Milan Srejber and Miloslav Mecir 6-2, 6-4, 6-1 to reach the doubles final against Emilio Sanchez and Sergio Casal of Spain. The Spaniards beat Stefan Edberg and Anders Jarryd of Sweden 6-4, 1-6, 6-3, 6-2.

John Thompson of Georgetown joined Hank Iba as the only U.S. Olympic coaches to lose a men's basketball game.

"You feel extremely disappointed because you came here to win the gold medal," Thompson said. By the same token, he said: "I think they'll let us back in the country."

HAVE YOU seen the ASU Student Handbook and Calendar? It's a handy pocket-size book, filled with everything you ever wanted (or didn't want to) know about college life. It's even got a daily reference calendar! The really neat thing about the Handbook is that it's produced by ASU students. That's right. Students gather the information, write and edit the copy, shoot the photos; design the cover and inside pages and last, but certainly not least, they design and sell the advertising that supports this annual event. Students spend long hours with creativity flowing, ideas exchanging and the fulfillment of producing their very own handbook. We'd like to offer you the chance to join this team and gain invaluable experience while you're in college. We need several advertising sales representatives to create, design and sell advertising to local retail businesses. If you have a strong commitment to excellence and pride in a job well done, we'd like to speak with you. You must be self-motivated, punctual, a good time manager, own a car and be a people person. Please call today and join a team of dedicated ASU students who are committed to making the 1988-89 ASU Student Handbook and Calendar the best. Call Dan Ellstrom at 965-6555 today! P.S. If you are wondering what in the heck a Student Handbook is, stop by Student Publications in Matthews Center and get a free copy!
