A U.S. Department of Energy panel listens to state officials and citizens voice concerns and support for Arizona's bid to lure the superconducting super collider to the state. State officials voice support for collider bid

By SHERI JOHNSON
State Press

About 20 state and local officials stood in strong support of Arizona's bid to land the $4.4 billion Superconducting Super Collider during a U.S. Department of Energy forum Monday at ASU.

The hearing was a chance for citizens to air their concerns about the project's affect on Arizona's environment.

Compared to some other forums in states that are bidding for the project, Arizona's hearing in ASU's Great Hall was unique: No one opposed Arizona's application because of serious environmental concerns.

That was in contrast to the DOE's Sept. 26 hearing in Texas — about 20 percent of the 120 people who attended opposed the collider. In Colorado hearings Sept. 29, one person opposed that state's bid.

The DOE also held a forum in North Carolina on Monday. The agency's last hearing is scheduled for Illinois on Oct. 6. About 260 people are slated to speak at that forum.

At ASU, about 20 people, including legislators, business leaders and community members, told the four DOE officials that Arizona is the project's ideal home.

A few of the supporters took the offensive during the hearing, saying that some of the DOE's critical findings in an environmental report about Arizona's site were unfounded.

Nelson to work to understand needs of blacks at ASU

By ROBIE KAKONGE
State Press

ASU President J. Russell Nelson promised Monday during a meeting with officials of the Black Caucus that he will work harder to understand the needs of blacks at the University.

"They have reasonable concerns, which could help direct the University to a better understanding of all minority concerns," Nelson said.

Caucus officials met with Nelson to review the president's "Action Now" program for hiring and retaining minorities at the University. Black Caucus co-chair Juliette Moore said she was pleased with the meeting.

"He (Nelson) was very receptive to our concerns and seems to have gained a full awareness of our needs," she said. "And we are also pleased that the communication lines are opening because we intend to use them."

Black Caucus chair V.P. Franklin said one of the caucus' major concerns is the lack of parity in the distribution of funds and programs aimed at improving the status of minorities at ASU.

"Funds appropriated by the Arizona state Legislature or the Board of Regents specifically aimed at minorities should be equitably distributed among blacks, Hispanics and Native Americans," he said.

Franklin, an ASU history professor, said although scholarship funds seem to have been distributed equally, other areas need immediate attention.

In a recent proposal for increasing minority access and retention, University officials made little or no attempt to insure equity, the caucus said in a recent statement addressed to Nelson. It also states that the plan, which was submitted to and rejected by the Board of Regents, directed most funding to Hispanic programs.

The statement says: "The Caucus is trying to insure that all interested black students, not just those blacks recruited through the athletic programs, are provided with financial and academic resources to attend and graduate from ASU."

It also states that although recent statistical information suggests that blacks make up only 2.2 percent of the student body and an even smaller proportion of the faculty and administrative staff, they make up between 20 and 25 percent of the ASU minority population.

Manuel Medina, president of the Arizona Chicano Coalition, which has had an ongoing battle with ASU and administration staff, they make up between 20 and 25 percent of the ASU minority population. Medina said that if the Hispanics are getting most of the funding, he assumes it is because they represent the biggest minority group on campus.

"The idea here should not be the old divide-and-conquer issue; this diverts attention and energy from all the minorities who should be working together with the administration," Medina said.

Medina added that the administration should stop studying minority problems and "start taking action."

5,000 welcome Discovery crew in Texas

HOUSTON (AP) — Nearly 5,000 well-wishers, waving Texas and American flags, turned out at a Houston airport Monday night to welcome home the five Discovery astronauts after their mission that carried Americans back into space.

"We were privileged to go around the earth about 64 times since we left you," Commander Rick Hauck said at ceremonies at Houston's Ellington Field.

"We saw some beautiful sights and we've lived in a wonderful machine and it was wonderful to come back to Edwards Air Force Base (Calif.). But it's even more wonderful to come back home," he said.

The astronauts strolled from their NASA jets, which carried them and their wives on a three-hour flight from Edwards, where they landed Discovery safely earlier in the day.

They walked along a red carpet and through a tunnel of American flags, some of them pausing to hug their children. Then they climbed a stairway to a blue drape-clad stage backed by a large red, white and blue sign which proclaimed: "NASA & Houston, Back On Top To Stay."

"We just got back from the greatest adventure of our lives and it was a whole lot of fun," Mission Specialist Dave Hilmers said. "But you shared this adventure as much as we did, and you're just as much the heroes as we are."

"Back in the dark days after the Challenger accident, folks in Houston never lost faith in NASA and folks at NASA never lost faith in Houston. Let's go back to work tomorrow and make this adventure happen again and again and again."

The welcome home was a far cry from the return to Houston shuttle astronauts had become accustomed to. In flights before the Challenger accident, the return had become so routine that only a handful of family members and

Libya, Chad relations restored after years of conflicting wars

PARIS (AP) — Libyan leader Moammar Gadhafi and Chadian President Hissene Habre, bitter enemies in a long desert conflict, restored diplomatic relations between their nations Monday and agreed to solve their differences peacefully.

A statement issued in both countries and in Lome, Togo, said Chad and Libya would "scrupulously respect the Sept. 11, 1987 cease-fire" that ended the fighting in northern Chad.

The agreement, mediated by Togolese President Gnassingbe Eyadema, comes at a time when the mercurial Gadhafi appears to be showing signs of some moderation, at least with regard to his neighbors in North Africa.

It also comes a year after Habre's forces, in a series of lightning battles, succeeded in driving the Libyans out of northern Chad after years of occupation in support of Chadian rebels.

The statement did not mention the Aouzou Strip, a 44,000-square-mile band of territory across the northern border of Chad that was seized by Libya in 1973. The Aouzou is the subject of a dispute going back to pre-World War II days before either Chad or Libya became independent.

The French, who have a 1,200-man intervention force in Chad, welcomed the diplomatic move. The French Foreign Ministry called it a "decision that opens the way to peace and the establishment of neighborly relations between the Libyan and Chadian peoples."

Some observers feel Gadhafi's less radical approach to foreign policy lately might be the result of the influence of Omar al-Muntasser, who became prime minister earlier this year.

Nation's hospitals in declining financial health, study finds

CHICAGO (AP) — The financial health of the nation's hospitals is taking a turn for the worse, which could lead to more hospital closings and a decline in the quality of patient care, an industry group said Monday.

The main cause of the hospitals' financial woes is less-than-adequate payments under government Medicare and Medicaid programs, said the Healthcare Financial Management Association, citing a survey of 1,400 hospitals. There are about 7,000 hospitals in the country.

"We believe government and employers must . . . make decisions for payment of health care services that meet the financial needs of hospitals that conscientiously manage their costs," association President Richard L. Clarke said.

"I think what we'll find in the future is that more hospitals will close, others will eliminate unprofitable services such as emergency rooms, and others will have no ability to borrow money to replace aging plant and equipment," Clarke said.

Supreme Court begins new term, will hear religious display case

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court, beginning a new term Monday, set the stage for an important church-state ruling in a Pittsburgh dispute over religious displays and expanded its study of drug testing in the workplace.

The justices issued orders in some 1,000 cases as they returned to the bench after a three-month summer recess. They agreed to grant full review in 20 of them.

Most significantly, the court said it will decide whether displays of a Christmas nativity scene and a menorah, symbolizing the Jewish holiday of Hanukkah, should be allowed at two government buildings in Pittsburgh.

Many experts believe the court may be poised to make dramatic changes in the constitutional tests applied in certain freedom-of-religion cases.

In a separate action, the justices said they will decide whether a railroad routinely may require its employees to take drug tests.

Candidates will modify campaign tactics, pros say

By LORI HENDIN
Contributing Writer

As the race for the U.S. presidency moves into its final month, Michael Dukakis and George Bush will likely make adjustments to their campaigns to break the deadlock in their neck-and-neck race, two ASU political science professors said.

To date, the political strategies of Dukakis and Bush have been working only to a limited degree: neither candidate has been able to charge ahead of the other, for any length of time, in public opinion polls.

While some polls have shown the race is virtually dead even, a few polls have given Bush a slight edge.

ASU political science professor John Geer said Dukakis' strategy has been to campaign over the entire United States. His aim has been to force Bush, who is concentrating his efforts in large states, to spread himself thin.

"As the election nears, the candidates will try to solidify their base, and at the same time go after close states with large electoral votes," he said.

California, Texas, Pennsylvania, Michigan, Illinois and Ohio will likely be key electoral college states come Nov. 8, Geer said.

Bush or Dukakis will have to win at least 270 votes of the electoral college to win the election.

Geer predicted that Dukakis will try to become more responsive to the middle class, while Bush will try to show that Dukakis' "liberalism" puts him out of touch with the American people.

Both candidates have often relied on negative campaigning to gain momentum, said ASU political science professor Keith Nicholls, who also was a Dukakis delegate to the Democrats' nominating convention in Atlanta.

The Bush camp has made Dukakis' veto of a bill that would have made the Pledge of Allegiance mandatory in Massachusetts schools a central issue. The Dukakis entourage said Bush was involved in the trading of arms to Iran to fund the Contras.

Nicholls predicted the candidates will continue to criticize each other, and the presidential race will become even dirtier over the next four weeks.

Geer said, however, that the widespread use of polling may change that.

"The bottom line is, if voters don't like it, the candidates will change," he said.

Both Geer and Nicholls agreed that the candidates' interactions with each other will be crucial in the coming weeks. In addition, how they and their running mates perform in the next two debates should be a deciding factor, Nicholls and Geer said.

If Bush's vice presidential pick, Indiana Sen. Dan Quayle, can hold his own in Wednesday's debate with Texas Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, Bush should retain his slight lead, Nicholls said.

"In the case of a draw, the advantage would go to Quayle," he said.

Geer gives Bush a 70 percent chance of winning, but Nicholls' prediction is like that of many Americans right now: "It is too close to call," he said.

Report says AIDS spreading 1 victim per minute worldwide

The AIDS virus is spreading at the rate of one victim per minute worldwide, with 150 new cases likely this year, according to a report published by an independent study group.

The study also reports that an estimated 1 million new AIDS cases will be reported in the next five years. Currently, the total number of cases worldwide is estimated at 250,000, and five to 10 million people are infected with the virus but have not yet shown symptoms of the disease.

During the drive, a table will be set up in front of the MU to collect cans of food.

KAET-TV to air programs dealing with AIDS

Public Broadcasting System affiliate KAET-TV, Channel 8, will present two programs dealing with AIDS starting at 8:00 p.m. Thursday, Oct. 13. The first program, "What Ramon Did," is about the fears and uncertainties of young people as they confront the realities and dangers of the virus.

"I Have AIDS: A Teenager's Story" focuses on a 16-year-old hemophiliac who contracted AIDS through a blood transfusion. Both programs will offer complete, accurate AIDS information.

Studies show sugar may be good for teeth

Laboratory studies suggest that certain chemicals in sugar may actually be good for teeth, and a scientist is working to develop a sugar substitute made from the chemicals.

The chemicals are called "glucanase mimics" because they imitate glucans, a sticky substance that is the major component of plaque.

Studies showed that the chemicals took the place of real glucans to block the plaque-forming activity in the human mouth. Although the chemicals haven't been tested yet on animals or humans, they or similar substances may soon be developed for use in toothpastes and mouthwashes.

Just say no: English-only is a dangerous limitation

Darrin Hostetler
Columnist

Before supporters of Arizona Proposition 106 began touting the measure, which would make English the official state language, they should have taken a few writing courses.

If they had, they would have learned that vague writing not only makes for bad grades in English classes, it also makes bad law.

And the law that would be established by Proposition 106, an ambiguous, potentially dangerous limitation of the rights of non-English speakers, spells trouble — in any language.

In fact, the proposition, which obligates the state to "take all reasonable steps to preserve, protect and enhance the role of the English language of the state of Arizona" and forbids the state to act in any language but English, is so vague that it has some judges quivering underneath their robes at the prospect of having to interpret the damn thing.

Because approval of the proposition by the voters in the Nov. 8 election could result in a number of judicial and governmental restrictions that might cause many citizens to turn the air blue with choice, distinctly expressive English phrases of angry frustration.

For instance, Proposition 106 could prevent non-English speaking Arizona residents from using interpreters during civil court cases, where plaintiffs and defendants face the complex problems of financial disputes, child custody and divorce proceedings.

Ironically, English speakers in a civil action would thus not be able to admit the testimony of a non-English speaker either — even if the speaker was a key witness.

And any judge who allows an interpreter to act in a civil case may face a lawsuit of his own — filed by the other party in the case, who can claim he violated Proposition 106.

Although interpreters would be allowed in criminal cases, Proposition 106 would have an undeniable chilling effect on minorities attempting to seek remedy through the civil system.

What kind of justice can residents hope to achieve if they and the judge can not communicate?

In addition to this obvious limitation on •Eliminate adult English proficiency classes, supported by the state because teachers are acting as employees of Arizona in the classroom.

•Restrain state social and health workers from telling non-English speaking parents where they can have their children immunized for various diseases.

The operative word in all these horrific scenarios, proposition supporters say, is could. The nightmare cases described by 106 opponents are ridiculous worst-case examples — they could never happen because that's not what the initiative was written to mean.

Maybe not, but no one knows exactly what it does mean. And common sense dictates

A kind offer, to be sure, but an essentially meaningless gesture. Will the pro-106 organizations still be in existence in five years when a Hispanic is unable to claim damages he is entitled to in a civil proceeding because he lives in a different linguistic world from the judge and jury?

Not likely.

We can all agree in principle with the idea that United States residents should speak English — it is good for them and good for the country.

And we can agree that by necessity the state must operate primarily in the language of the vast majority — and that it already does, except in cases where the well-being of residents is at stake or it is practical to do otherwise.

But where is it written that the state must be forbidden from communicating with a segment of the populace simply because they don't speak the majority tongue?

Certainly not in the Constitution.

There are good reasons why the Arizona Judges Association and the Council on Judicial Administration are opposing Proposition 106.

And there are good reasons why, in whatever language one speaks, that voters should say "nyet," "non," "nein," or a simple English "no" to the proposition in November.

Robert Park, chairman of Arizonans for Official English and Armando Ruiz, chairman of Arizonans Against Constitutional Tampering, will face off tonight in a debate at the College of Law's Great Hall. The topic will be Proposition 106, and the 7:30 p.m. event will be moderated by Law Dean Paul Bender.

The debate is sponsored by the Political Union of Associated Students of ASU, the Chinese-American Professionals Association of Arizona, the Asian-American Faculty Staff Association of ASU, the Chinese American Citizens Association and the Arizona Asian American Association.

access to the court system, if passed the initiative could:

•Forbid state-supported "signing" for the deaf and Braille documents for the blind in the courtroom.

•Prevent the state from printing thousands of foreign language tourism brochures that are distributed worldwide that attract millions of dollars of travel business to Arizona.

that we should not approve a law without being assured of exactly what kind of impact it may have.

Yet that is exactly what proposition supporters suggest: attempting to lure voters to their cause with the promise that pro-106 organizations will aid anyone who has been unfairly treated as a result of the proposition with legal assistance.

Go West, young man!

Editor:

Monique Cordova's column (Sept. 26) concerning Stanford University's recent changes in its Western culture curriculum provided several observations.

Initially, Ms. Cordova is correct in recommending that, instead of simply dropping the Western culture program (because of its alleged "white, male, Eurocentric" bias) and replacing it with the "Culture, Ideas and Values" program (with the new emphasis on "women, minority and class issues"), Stanford should require year-long courses in both Western and non-Western culture. The University of Chicago has done this for many years.

I am, however, quite resentful of Ms. Cordova's repeated description of the Western intellectual tradition as "white, male and Eurocentric." Implicit here is the notion that one's world view is a product of one's race or gender. Such thinking is commonly employed by rabble-rousers in advancing such preposterous assertions as that all blacks agree with Jesse Jackson. By the same token, the authors of the "Great Books" do not march in intellectual lockstep. Rather, as former Education Secretary William Bennett has stated: "The classics of Western philosophy and literature amount to a great debate on the perennial questions."

In a well-publicized speech he delivered at Stanford, Bennett emphasized the incredible "complexity and diversity and depth" of the Western intellectual experience. (Italics mine.) He mentioned several examples of significant disagreements among the great minds of the West: "On the ends of government, whom do we follow, Madison or Marx? On the merits of religious life — Aquinas or Voltaire?" On the origin of man, which is correct, Genesis or Darwin? On the rights of the individual against the state — Hobbes or Locke? The study of Western thought, then, is not the mere reiteration of the same ideas by different individuals throughout the centuries. Rather, the Great Books of the West contain diversity and variety unparalleled by any other civilization.

Additionally, Stanford undergraduate Isaac D. Barchas weighed in with a quite eloquent criticism of Stanford's curriculum change in the Wall Street Journal of Jan. 21. Mr. Barchas takes issue with the idea that the Great Books — because they were written by white, European men — are mere racist, sexist, elitist apologies for the reactionary status quo of their societies. Plato, Barchas states: "rejected an aristocracy based on wealth or birth for one based on intellect." Galileo, Luther, Darwin, Rousseau, Burke, Marx, Mill and Freud were all outspoken critics of the social, political and religious norms of their societies. Indeed, Jesus and Socrates were killed because of their dissenting views. These men can hardly be criticized as having a "past-oriented world view," as Ms. Cordova would have us think.

To be sure, non-Western voices need to be heard; they have many worthwhile lessons to teach us. Bennett reminds us, however, that, with all its faults, the West "has set the moral, political, economic, and social standard for the rest of the world." The West permits a greater measure of tolerance and diversity than anywhere else. Thus, it becomes frivolous for Ms. Cordova and her ilk to demean the West's intellectual tradition, which has blessed us with such freedom, because of the accidental physical characteristics of its most significant thinkers.

Dr. Martin Luther King acknowledged a major debt to the great philosophers of the West. To paraphrase Dr. King, I anxiously await the day when we again judge the authors of the Great Books, not by their gender or the color of their skin but by the intellectual content of their character.

Mistaken identity

Confused columnist doesn't know Hawkeye from Hoosier

Mike Royko
Tribune Media Services

All those unflattering comments I've made about Indiana in recent weeks — I take them all back.

It appears that I've made a terrible mistake, and I owe the people of Indiana an apology.

I discovered my error this way:

A friend of mine, who is a Hoosier, suggested that he take me on a tour of Indiana.

"Believe me," he said, "when I show you what a wonderful place it really is, you'll change your mind."

"Never," I said. "I've been to Indiana, and nothing you show me can convince me that it is not the dullest, most miserable state in the union."

"That's what has me confused," he said. "I don't understand how you could say that about such a lovely state."

"Because it's true," I said.

"Why don't you take just one more look," he said. "I appeal to your sense of fairness."

"All right," I said. "But I warn you that nothing you can show me will change my mind because I've already seen it."

So we set out for Indiana.

Within the hour, I knew something was wrong.

"Isn't that a pretty sight?" he said, pointing to a part of the countryside.

"You're right," I conceded. "I don't understand how I could have overlooked it."

A little later, he showed me something else.

"Isn't that beautiful?" he said.

Once again I had to agree.

Finally, I blurted out: "Something's wrong. I'm thoroughly confused. I've never seen any of these things before."

He said: "I can't understand that. If you've been to Indiana, then you couldn't have overlooked these pleasant sights."

"Are you sure this is Indiana?" I said.

"Of course," he said. "I lived here most of my life."

"Then there's something I have to confess," I told him. "I don't think I've ever been in Indiana before. This is all new to me."

He said: "But you said you had been in Indiana. You wrote that in your column."

"I've been to Indiana and nothing you show me can convince me that it is not the dullest, most miserable state in the union."

"I meant it. I thought I had been in Indiana. But none of this is familiar."

It was a baffling mystery. But we finally got to the bottom of it and discovered how I made the mistake.

First, I have to explain that I'm not very good at reading road maps. They all look the same to me, and I'm always turning onto the wrong highway.

Also, I have a poor sense of direction — especially when I go beyond the city limits, which is why I seldom travel outside the city. I was once lost in Schaumburg for two days. It was such a frightening experience that my hair turned white almost overnight.

So what apparently happened was this: when I went to Indiana, I must have turned on the wrong road. And I ended up somewhere else.

But the question was, where?

My friend provided the solution. He got out a book that has pictures of towns, cities and the countryside in every state. And we went through the book, page by page, hoping that I would see something that looked familiar.

"How about this?" he asked.

"No. There was no seashore with a rolling surf. I'd remember something like that."

"And this?"

"No. Those are skyscrapers. I didn't see anything taller than a silo. Lots of silos."

We were about to give up, when he turned a page and I said: "That's it! I've seen that town before — that's Indianapolis."

My friend shook his head. "No, that's not Indianapolis."

"Then what is it?"

"That's Des Moines, Iowa."

"Iowa?"

"That's right. When you thought you were in Indiana, you were actually in Iowa. And when you were in Des Moines, you thought you were in Indianapolis."

"So all those things I said about Indiana . . ."

"You were really talking about Iowa."

"Amazing."

"Well, mistakes will happen. But you really should apologize to the people of Indiana."

He was right.

Revolver-toting bandit robs Tempe gas station

By MIKE BURGESS
State Press

A gunman robbed a Tempe gas station of $380 Sunday night, police said.

The bandit entered the Carioca Oil Company station at 1380 N. Scottsdale Road at about 8:30 p.m., pulled a short-barrelled revolver from his waistband and demanded cash from the register and safe, said Tempe police spokesman Sgt. Al Taylor.

Taylor said the suspect took the cash and fled north from the station on foot.

Police described the suspect as black, in his mid-20s, 5 feet 10 inches tall, 180 pounds with black hair and brown eyes.

Police said the shots were reportedly fired at about 11:30 p.m. near another vehicle on Broadway Road.

•Four people were arrested Sunday on alcohol charges in front of Palo Verde Main Residence Hall, police said.

•A black Schwinn 5-speed cruiser was stolen from Ocotillo Residence Hall, police said. Loss is $100.

Police said the theft occurred sometime between Friday and Sunday.

•Two exit signs on the sixth floor of Manzanita Residence Hall were damaged Sunday, police said.

Bike safety class teaches riders to go with flow

By TERESA OWEN
State Press

Accidents between bicyclists and cars on campus is on the rise because cyclists ride against the flow of traffic, according to an ASU police officer who conducts a bike safety class.

Not only do bicyclists risk injury by riding against traffic, they have a good chance of getting an $18 ticket — the most common citation issued by ASU police officers, said Sgt. William Wright, one of three officers who teach a bicycle safety course as an alternative to paying an $18 ticket.

The course is held Friday afternoons and the first Saturday morning of each month.

Failing to make required stops, which accounts for 33 percent of the citations, is another common violation, Wright said during a course held Saturday.

Other violations include: failing to yield to other bicycles or pedestrians, two people on one bicycle, illegal parking, riding in prohibited zones or without hands, equipment violations and not riding on bicycle paths, he said.

About 40 to 50 tickets are written each day for bicycle violations, Wright said. About 30 of the 160 people cited each week attend the class, which can accommodate up to 90 students.

When the course first began, an average of 20 students showed up per class.

Wright said attendance is low because students tend to have busy schedules and often forget they need to register for the class within 30 days of being cited.

"It's not a matter of people not wanting to take the class — it's procrastination," he said. "The class is designed to prevent you from getting in an accident, prevent you from getting a ticket and prevent your bike from being stolen."

The course includes two hours of lecture, a movie and a 20-question, open-book test. All students must pass the test before the fine is erased.

"Writing tickets doesn't do a darn thing for us, but we have a responsibility to the public to ensure safety," said ASU police Chief C. Russell Duncan.

The 30 students who attended Saturday's class at 8 a.m. appeared disinterested at first but gradually became more attentive.

James Mumaugh/State Press

ASU police officer Al Phillips instructs a class for students who have been cited for riding in areas restricted to bicycles.

Wright said most people come in with "a chip on their shoulder," but they leave more knowledgeable.

"We see a change of attitude," he said. "Their behavior is altered and that's what we want."

German educators visit ASU on fact-finding tour

"German universities look to the United States in a close way. We've always copied things you have done," said Hans Haenisch, a West German education official who is on campus this week with three other German officials for a fact-finding tour.

ASU is the fourth stop in the officials' six-week tour of 24 U.S. universities.

The officials serve in administrative and faculty positions in Germany and hope to see how Arizonans in similar positions deal with problems in running a university, said Otto Khera, assistant director of ASU's Consortium of Atlantic Studies.

Khera, who planned the Arizona leg of the tour for the Germans, said: "This is definitely something that will get ASU recognized as being interested in international programs."

The Fulbright Commission is sponsoring the tour as part of its ongoing program to increase mutual understanding between people of the United States and citizens of other countries, said Frederick Olls, an executive of the Council for International Exchange of Scholars.

Olls, who coordinated the German officials' tour, said he chose ASU as part of the program because the University has a rapid rate of growth and good contacts in state government. Olls also said he is pleased that ASU is involved with international programs.

"I've been very happy with the cooperation and enthusiasm of our friends at ASU," he said.

In a group interview Monday, the officials said so far they have learned a great deal on the tour.

"Here we have the possibility to ask questions, which is very important," said Helmut Breitmaier, senior department head at the Baden-Wuerttemberg State Ministry of Finance in Stuttgart.

"I want to learn about the education experience in America because the goals are the same," said Haenisch, who is program officer for research and evaluation of schools and teaching for the North Rhine-Westphalian State Institute for Schools and Continuing Education, in Soest.

After finishing their visit in Arizona, the officials will go to San Francisco and then New York before returning to Germany.

Collider

ASU physics professor Joseph Comfort, who also is an associate project manager for Arizona's bid to land the project, told the panel members that he disagreed with the DOE's suggestion that the collider might be "visually incongruous" at Arizona's site, 35 miles southeast of downtown Phoenix.

"Architecture that is environmentally sensitive is possible and should be mentioned as a mitigation," he said. "In fact, infrastructures impairing visual resources already exist. The most important Eastern portion of the site is on land that has been overgrazed and has revegetated with creosote brush."

The department issued its findings about the seven states that are competing for the project in a 4,700-page environmental impact statement.

Jack Davis, manager of power contracts for Arizona Public Service, also disputed some of the findings. The DOE's impact statement said getting electricity to the site could be a problem.

"APS is ready, willing and very capable to service the SCC load," he said. "Electric service for the SCC site does not pose a problem."

George Brooks, a land owner in Mobile, which is close to the proposed site, told the panel that he and many other community members support Arizona's bid for the collider.

"I think the SCC would be a tremendous guide in developing intellectual and environmental sense of growth for this area," he said.

The draft statement on the Arizona site shows it would require 100 miles of new roads. It also says construction could threaten a rare vine called the Tumamoc globeberry.

However, state officials say they probably could design the site in such a way as to protect the vine.

Today, a delegation headed by Gov. Rose Mofford is in Washington to lobby for Arizona. The DOE will select a preferred state by mid-December.

When built, the super collider will be a 52-mile underground oval that will hurl protons into each other at the speed of light, opening new horizons of research and technology.

friends were on hand to greet them.

Monday's event, however, was intended to show the support of the Houston-area communities for the space program, organizers said. "We want to welcome you back as neighbors," Houston Mayor Kathy Whitmire said.

"We had a special ceremony out at Edwards and that was kind of a welcome home for the country and it was very special," Mission Specialist Pinky Nelson said. "But this is more special because we're coming home to our friends and coworkers and the people who made it happen."

A high school band and flag-waving troupe entertained the crowd in the hours before the astronauts arrived at the same field where a week ago they left for Florida and the launch of Discovery.

"This is much like the first flight's return," said Gerry Griffin, former director of the Johnson Space Center and now president of the Greater Houston Chamber of Commerce, one of the organizers of the Monday airport event.

Tommy and Molly Lowe, of Houston, brought their two small children to the airfield and waited nearly four hours for the astronauts. "It's worth it," Mrs. Lowe said.

Lowe said his daughter, Megan, was born 2½ years ago and arrived home from the hospital the day the Challenger exploded. "You feel like it was part of you on the shuttle," he said.

"We've watched it from the start to finish," Mrs. Lowe said of Discovery's mission. "We were on pins and needles. But this is just a part of American pride."

Marmie still looking for improvement from Devils

By DEAN GYORGY
State Press

Monday is a day of transition. Larry Marmie and the ASU football program confess their gridiron sins and begin anew, looking forward to the next opponent.

Saturday's game with Lamar was not pretty, but it was a victory. The problems chasing the Sun Devils for the last four weeks have not lost any ground.

"The best thing about the game is that we won," Marmie told the media at his weekly luncheon. "We should be making more improvement than we have at this point.

"Offensively we're not executing — which is a very important factor in this game — and our consistency has been way below par of what we'd like for it to be. I don't think we can be the kind of football team that we need to be or want to be without improving in these areas."

The Devils pushed their first runner over the 100-yard plateau Saturday, as David Winsley gained 104. Marmie said that was encouraging, but overall he is not happy with the running game.

"The linemen aren't blocking well enough and the ballcarriers aren't running well enough," Marmie said. "They're not getting it done as a unit. I think we've got to run the ball better and more consistently than we have to win in this league."

"This league" is facing the Sun Devils like an oncoming train. They play Pac-10 games for the rest of the season, the first of which is Saturday at home against 19th-ranked Washington.

The Huskies are 3-1 overall, having lost their first and only conference game last week against UCLA. The Bruins are the second-ranked team in the country, and it was close.

Washington coach Don James said his team will be hungry to avoid another setback.

"From a league standpoint, you're not going to stay in the league race too long with two losses," James said.

For the Sun Devils, it will be a real test. One that counts toward the final grade.

"We've got a good football team coming in here this week," Marmie said, "and we'll probably find out a little bit more about just exactly how we can stack up."

"They certainly looked like a mighty fine football team against UCLA."

Washington is led by junior quarterback Cary Conklin, who was 19-of-37 for 163 yards last week. Conklin has great talent and

'We've got a good football team coming in here this week, and we'll probably find out a little bit more about just exactly how we can stack up.'

— Larry Marmie

should be the next in a successful line of Washington quarterbacks, which includes professionals Warren Moon, Steve Pelluer and Chris Chandler.

"I know he (Conklin) was very highly recruited and very highly thought of," Marmie said. "I think he's probably the key to their offense."

ASU strong tackle Scott Kirby sprained an ankle during Monday's practice. ASU officials said they do not expect it to be serious, but it will be looked at more closely today.

Grant moves to guard; battle for center position eases

By CHRIS NACKINO
State Press

The battle for starting center has been put to ease with the announcement by head football coach Larry Marmie that Eddie Grant will start at strong guard Saturday against Washington.

Grant, a junior who has been vying for playing time at center, will move to the guard position, while still sharing in center duties with senior Steve Spurling.

"We need someone who can rotate both center and guard and we need fresh linemen in the game," Grant said. "I think I am ready for that job."

Grant said the transition for him will not be as difficult as it would if he was moving to the center position.

"You can always move a center to guard, but moving a guard to center is much harder," Grant said. "He directs traffic."

The strong guard position has been thinned with an injury to junior Tony Sherman, who tore ligaments in his knee against Colorado State. He had reconstructive surgery Saturday and will be out for the season.

The Sherman injury left only Scott Claypoole to fill the position, who is currently nursing a swollen left knee.

Expected to play against the Huskies,

Claypoole will share playing time with Grant.

Against Lamar on Saturday, Claypoole was backed up on several downs by Grant, the No. 2 center. Marmie said he liked the versatility he saw and awarded Grant the starting honors.

"Eddie Grant is a very intelligent football player," Marmie said. "I think it's easier for a guy like Eddie who has football savvy and football smarts."

On a 30-yard touchdown run by tailback David Winsley, Grant aided in the blocking as a pulling guard.

Phoenix Cardinals beginning to hurt ASU; spirit level is down

Dave Hodges
Sports Editor

The arrival of the Phoenix Cardinals to the Valley already is starting to take its toll on the ASU football team.

The Sun Devils are 3-1. The Cardinals are 3-2. The records are similar, but the attitudes toward each team aren't.

Super Bowl fever has begun to surface among some Cardinals fans, after Phoenix surprisingly won three straight games, including Sunday's impressive 41-27 victory over the previously unbeaten Los Angeles Rams.

There were approximately 20,000 no-shows Saturday at Sun Devil Stadium when ASU struggled to beat Lamar, a Division I-AA school.

Although none of the four Cardinals home games have been sold out, the crowds have been lively. The Dallas Cowboys game had to be delayed for a short time because the crowd noise was so loud. The Cards may get their first sellout Sunday when the Pittsburgh Steelers visit town.

The crowds for ASU games, on the other hand, have been disappointing. The numbers are there (the season average is over 70,000 because they obviously did not count actual people in attendance Saturday), but the spirit seems to be waning.

The student section sits for most of the game, something that has not happened for several years. And the noise just is not as loud as it usually is.

One reason is the Cardinals. It seems nobody really cares about ASU football anymore. Everywhere you look, Phoenix coach Gene Stallings is on a television commercial promoting something. Most of the area media are reporting every single thing the Cardinals do.

This is the way it used to be for the Sun Devils. But now the pros are here. Sometimes ASU doesn't make the evening news or is buried at the back of the sports section.

It was to be expected, but the recent winning streak by the Cardinals could prove to be devastating for ASU.

Most members of the ASU athletic department probably won't admit it, but they would just as soon have the Cards lose every game they play, so ASU could regain some of the headlines it has lost.

The mood on campus is different this year, too. There have been no big pep rallies. The number of game shirts being hoisted in front of the MU has dwindled, and perhaps the most obvious display of the lack of spirit this year overlooks the entire city.

The big "A" on Tempe Butte (also known as "A Mountain") has not been painted for more than six months. It has sat there the entire summer in a bland white, covered by various bits of graffiti.

Traditionally, or at least for the past few years, the "A" has been painted gold at the start of the football season. But this year it has remained unpainted because nobody seems to care.

Hopefully it will be painted gold before Saturday, as ABC plans to televise ASU's game with the Washington Huskies. Game time has been moved to 12:30 p.m. to accommodate the network.

Of course another reason the spirit is gone is because the team has not looked impressive, despite compiling a 3-1 record.

ASU almost suffered one of the most embarrassing upsets in recent history Saturday, as the Lamar Cardinals, who are not nearly comparable to their Phoenix counterparts, overcame a 17-point first quarter by the Devils and had a chance to score the go-ahead touchdown in the game's final minute.

Only a four-down stand deep in Lamar territory by the Sun Devil defense and a touchdown with 15 seconds left, gave ASU an 11-point margin that it didn't really deserve.

But ASU coach Larry Marmie, always the realist, said before the game that he expected a close matchup. But did he really think the Devils would be that close with the Cardinals?

Marmie has invoked shades of former coach John Cooper, by saying the fans will have to help the Devils out Saturday by playing the role of the 12th man against the 19th-ranked Huskies.

"I can't remember if John asked for that (crowd reaction)," Marmie said. "I think it came when he stood up on that bench and waved the towel."

Marmie said he won't be waving a gold towel, but anytime ASU plays a top-20 team, the crowd and the Devils seem to rise a few notches. A sellout crowd is expected, the game is being televised by ABC and it's going to be a hot one, with temperatures expected to be around 100 degrees.

Washington head coach Don James knows the crowd could play a big role. James, who coached his team to a valiant effort against second-ranked UCLA Saturday before losing in the final minute, said he is expecting a loud crowd this week at ASU.

"Turnabout is fair play," James said. "(But) I don't give much credit to the stadium. It's the 11 guys that you put out there that makes it tough."

Last year, James invoked the wrath of the Washington crowd by saying his team needed their support in order to beat ASU. Husky fans responded by setting a stadium attendance record in cheering Washington to a 27-14 rout. Quarterbacks Paul Justin and Daniel Ford were given fits because of the crowd noise, and the Devils only gained 14 yards on the ground.

"I don't see any hatred or revenge factors that you get with some of your backyard rivalries, but I think our players have so much respect for USC, UCLA and ASU," James said. "When you get teams with mutual respect, you just get good ballgames."

The fact remains, however, that the Sun Devils are 3-1 and do still have a shot at a Rose Bowl berth, simply because they have not played a conference game yet. But stranger things have happened. Look at the Cardinals.

Hawaiian, ASU intramural referees exchange experiences

By CLAY TUCKER
State Press

At Glendale Community College Friday night, the referees would have felt more comfortable wearing their own multi-colored flowered Hawaiian shirts than the traditional black and white stripes.

But for the six-man officiating team visiting from Honolulu, Hawaii, stripes it would be.

Six Hawaiian officials flew to Phoenix last week to participate in the fourth annual Arizona/Hawaii Football Officials Exchange. The team officiated the Cactus/Peoria High School football game Friday, which Peoria won, 19-16.

As the Hawaiian officials called the Cactus/Peoria game at Glendale Community College, a team of officials from Phoenix was calling another high school game at Aloha Stadium in Honolulu.

The visiting crew, made up of Carl Patrick, Abe Keliinui, Arnold Queypo, Danny Bayne, Arthur "Bunny" Mahoe and Pat Silva, is very unique. Most officiating crews are four men or less.

These officials belong to the Interscholastic League of Honolulu, which primarily officiates private high school games, and some of the officials also work in the Western Athletic Conference. They have officiated games for such schools as the University of Hawaii, Brigham Young and the University of Wyoming.

Head referee Patrick spoke to a group of 40 ASU intramural officials Friday afternoon about officiating and its importance to the game.

"You as an official could throw a flag on each and every play," Patrick said. "But don't. Be patient and know when to step in and take control."

Patrick also said he and the team enjoy coming to Phoenix because of all the new people they meet and experiences they learn as a result of the exchange.

"We become more experienced, understand new rules that are different than our own, and learn new mechanisms," Patrick said. "We take our knowledge and new experiences back with us to help improve football in Hawaii."

Both the Hawaiian and ASU officials exchanged some of their past experiences, and in the process the Hawaiians learned a few new things, Patrick said.

ASU Intramural Assistant Director Bob Gildersleeve said he was excited to have the officials speak at ASU and add their experience to help the intramural program grow.

"We all shared the feeling of the Hawaiians coming out here," Gildersleeve said. "Their help and experience are what makes the ASU program a model for others to follow."

Just as any football team does after a game, the Hawaiian officials meet to review films of the previous game. Each Tuesday night at 8, the crew gets together to discuss its performances. They talk about their bad calls that need to be improved, the game's good calls and they take the opportunity to prepare themselves for the next game.

Dodgers, Mets ready to square off; Tudor injured

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Dodgers manager Tommy Lasorda said Monday that left-hander John Tudor will not start Game 2 of the National League playoffs against the New York Mets.

Tudor suffered hip spasms in the second inning Friday night against the San Francisco Giants and had to leave the game. During a workout Monday, Tudor threw with slight pain, according to team physician Frank Jobe.

Lasorda said rookie Tim Belcher, 12-6, will now pitch Game 2 Wednesday night against the Mets' David Cone, 20-3.

"We thought giving Tudor the extra rest would help," Lasorda said. "He probably could have pitched, but we didn't want to take any chances."

Tudor is now scheduled to pitch Game 3 Friday night in New York against Ron Darling, 17-9.

In another development, Lasorda also scratched pitcher Fernando Valenzuela and infielder Dave Anderson from Los Angeles' post-season roster.

Valenzuela went on the disabled list in late July with a sore shoulder and made two relief appearances in September.

"We felt it was asking too much from Fernando to pitch in the playoffs," Lasorda said. "He's made excellent progress and we didn't want to hurt him."

Anderson suffered a spinal sprain in pre-game warmups a week ago. His spot on the roster will be taken by Mike Sharperson.

The Mets arrived in Los Angeles after completing the third 100-victory season in their history, including 10 wins in 11 games against the Dodgers. New York outscored Los Angeles 49-18.

"They have an outstanding team and are strong in every area," Lasorda said. "But we have outstanding pitching, too."

Lasorda will go with his best arm, right-hander Orel

Hershiser, in Game one of the playoffs tonight at Dodger Stadium against Dwight Gooden, 18-9.

Hershiser, 23-8, finished the season with 59 consecutive scoreless innings to break Don Drysdale's 20-year-old record.

"I started to think about the Mets as far back as the night right after I got the record," Hershiser said. "The Mets have always been more important to me, even more than the streak, because of the fact that it was a team-related thing."

"There's 24 guys when I walk out onto the mound. People talk about how pitching is 70 or 80 or 90 percent of the game, but I'm walking out there with 80 or 90 percent of the feelings of 24 guys and a coaching staff. And for me to be thinking about a streak would be wrong. So I'm thinking about the Mets."

Hershiser's last defeat was a 2-1 setback against the Mets on Aug. 24 at Dodger Stadium. He pitched a complete game and allowed seven hits.

After that, Hershiser was unbeatable.

"It's probably the sharpest I've been mentally my whole career," he said. "With the pennant race, the close games, the lack of run support, just going out there throwing up a whole bunch of zeroes, not just worrying about giving up a run but losing. I was out there pitching for wins in a pennant race, not a streak."

Hershiser didn't get much support during the streak — the Dodgers scored only 13 runs through it all. Belcher said watching Hershiser has been an inspiration to the rest of the staff.

"It's a thing that snowballs," Belcher said of the Dodgers' excellent pitching of late. "With Tudor, Orel and (Tim) Lary throwing all these shutouts this season and lately, everybody just takes the field and expects a line of goose eggs."

Hershiser finished the season with a 2.26 earned run average and struck out 178 batters.

"He's the best pitcher in the National League, he should win the Cy Young Award," Dodgers second baseman Steve Sax said of Hershiser. "He takes command early in a game, throws strikes and controls the game."

Hershiser may just have to keep throwing shutout innings to beat the Mets. Gooden loves pitching in Los Angeles, and his record shows it. In six career starts at Dodger Stadium, Gooden is 4-0 with a 0.32 ERA.

"I like the mound at Dodger Stadium," Gooden said. "It's high and firm and you seem closer to the batter."

Mets third baseman Howard Johnson said the mound also works to Hershiser's favor.

"He seems to have 17 different kinds of curve balls, and they come to you from all sorts of angles," Johnson said.

"It should be a low-scoring series, and the team that scores first will have a big advantage," Gooden said.

The Mets scored the first run in seven of the 11 games with the Dodgers and five of the six at Dodger Stadium.

"The first game is very important," Mets first baseman Keith Hernandez said. "If we can beat them and Hershiser, it will have to make them think. But if they win, it would help their confidence against us."

Gooden was 3-0 against the Dodgers this season. In 35 1-3 innings he allowed 25 hits and six runs while striking out 22.

Belcher, 12-6, was 0-1 with a no-decision against the Mets. Cone won his last eight decisions and finished with a 2.22 ERA and 213 strikeouts in 231 innings.

May 22 in Los Angeles, Cone beat the Dodgers 5-2 and also was part of a bench-clearing brawl.

Cone hit then-Dodger Pedro Guerrero with a pitch and Guerrero threw his bat in the direction of the mound. The night before, Gooden hit shortstop Alfredo Griffin with a pitch and broke his wrist.

Stallings not surprised by Cards' recent success

PHOENIX (AP) — The Phoenix Cardinals, who many experts predicted would be 0-5 at this stage of the NFL season, instead are 3-2 and tied for first place in the NFC East. But coach Gene Stallings said Monday he isn't necessarily surprised.

"As long as you're playing hard, good things will happen to you eventually," Stallings said. "We're making some progress. We're playing tough, we're hustling and we're working hard, and that's what I like about it."

"It's early in the year. We've only played five games. But we're playing good."

Sunday's 41-27 road win over the Los Angeles Rams was the Cardinals' third straight victory — the first time that's happened in Stallings' three-year tenure.

Phoenix rolled up 517 yards total offense and held the previously undefeated Rams to just 85 yards rushing.

The win also was the Cardinals' first over Los Angeles since 1976 and avenged last year's 27-24 loss when the Rams drove 94 yards on 23 plays in the final 11 minutes.

"They drove 90-something yards last year against us. We drove 90-something yards against them this year," Stallings said of the Cardinals 96-yard, 11-play drive for a 17-14 second-quarter lead. "Some things are going our way now."

"The offense is playing well. We're performing pretty well, and that all starts with the quarterback. Neil (Lomax) had a great game against Los Angeles (28-of-43 for 342 yards and two TDs). And (tight end) Jay Novacek is awfully important to us right now. He caught nine balls (for 92 yards and one touchdown) Sunday and recovered an on-sides kick. He really made some big plays."

Placekicker Al Del Greco, in danger of being released after an 0-for-2 start, now is 5-for-8 after kicking a 43-yarder and a career-best 51-yarder against the Rams.

"Here's a guy that had problems three weeks ago and now he's at the top of his game," Stallings said. "He's probably thinking he can kick anything now and we are, too."

"Could things be any better? Yeah, if we were just playing better in some areas. But I'll say this — it's a good feeling. The players should feel good about what they've accomplished. You can't dwell on it. But part of the game is enjoying it a little."

Stallings said his club still has some glaring weaknesses, particularly at cornerback after the Rams threw for 300 yards.

"We can't afford to give up 300 yards passing. It's awfully hard to win that way," Stallings said. "We need to improve on our pass defense. We've got to get our defensive backs playing their technique better. We can't be looking for other cornerbacks all the time. The ones we have just have to play better."

"We also need to get more production out of our linebackers. And we need to improve on our special teams. We've had five good tough weeks. Every game we're going to play is going to be a tough game. It will be a major struggle every week for us. We have to minimize our mistakes. We can't self-destruct."

Stallings said his club, which hosts the Pittsburgh Steelers on Sunday, is making giant strides to accomplish its goal set in training camp.

"Our goal is to try to make the playoffs. We're playing with confidence right now," Stallings said. "You win a couple of close games and you feel like you can do it again."

"I'm not predicting we're going to win the division. That puts you out on a limb a little bit. Who knows what will happen from here? All I know is we have a tough game coming up this week against the Steelers. I won't speculate any further than that."

A's, Red Sox try to relax before start of League Championship Series

BOSTON (AP) — Roger Clemens and the Boston Red Sox hit golf balls while the Oakland Athletics hit the road Monday, two days before the start of the American League playoffs.

"This is a good way to relax. No one can get me on the telephone and no one can find me, especially where some of my drives go," Clemens said during a celebrity tournament sponsored by former Boston star Carl Yastrzemski.

Outfielder Dwight Evans and pitcher Bob Stanley also took part in the tournament, played on a sunny afternoon.

Boston manager Joe Morgan, however, was hoping for "a ton of rain." He wanted to spend the day picking mushrooms near his home.

"You've got to do it right after a heavy rain, no other time," Morgan said. He said determining the difference between the poisonous and non-poisonous variety is difficult.

"It can be a tough call. It's like when you're waiting for that slider and the heater comes right for the coconut," he said. "That's a tough call."

The Athletics spent the day flying across the country and Oakland manager Tony La Russa anticipated some tough choices for Game 1 Wednesday afternoon. Dave Parker and Glenn Hubbard are ailing and may not be able to start.

"We may go down to the wire on those," La Russa said. "The answer might not come until we see what happens in Tuesday's workout."

The Red Sox and Athletics planned afternoon practices at Fenway Park, although rainy weather was in the forecast.

Boston is rated a slight favorite in the best-of-seven series, although many of the numbers point to the Athletics. Oakland won nine of 12 games against the Red Sox this season, including all six on the West Coast.

The Athletics won 104 games, most by an AL West team since the division was formed in 1969, while Boston's 89 victories are the fewest ever by an AL East club for a full season.

The Red Sox finished poorly, losing six of the last seven games.

"Now we have another challenge in front of us; it's David against Goliath," Boston's Marty Barrett said. "They're the big guys, but when David and Goliath met, David won."

Grant

After training hard during the past months, Grant said he feels confident in his new job.

Against Lamar on Saturday, Claypoole was backed up on several downs by Grant, the No. 2 center. Marmie said he liked the versatility he saw and awarded Grant the starting honors.

"Eddie Grant is very intelligent football player," Marmie said. "I think it's easier for a guy like Eddie who has football savvy and football smarts."

On a 30-yard touchdown run by tailback David Winsley, Grant aided in the blocking as a pulling guard.

After training hard during the past months, Grant said he feels confident in his new job.

"I worked this summer to play — I thought I'd play at center, but strong guard is just as good," Grant said. "Anytime I get to play I am happy."

The two fierce battles for the starting position of center and strong guard had been fought since preseason at Camp Tontozona.

With the talent of Spurling and Grant, Marmie was confident that either could start at center for ASU.

Spurling, who has been listed as the No. 1 center for the past two seasons, started in all 12 games for ASU in 1987, while Grant took care of long snaps during kicking situations in 1987.

Another battle surfaced for the starting position of strong guard during preseason play.

Claypoole had earned Marmie's approval to start over Sherman for the 1988 season.

Claypoole was No. 2 last year, playing behind Todd Kalis. He played two years at Phoenix College before redshirting the 1986 season at ASU.

WHAT DO YOU WANT TO DO WITH YOUR ACCOUNTING DEGREE?

You'll soon be finishing up that accounting degree at Arizona State University, and a number of accounting firms will be offering you career opportunities.

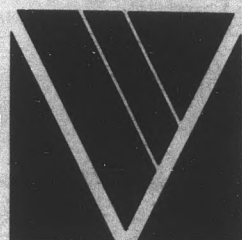

You'll probably have several interviews and face all kinds of questions.

But most accounting firms won't ask the most important question — "What do you want to do?"

At McGladrey & Pullen, you'll have a voice in your future.

You can go as far as you want as fast as you want. We're big enough, the nation's 11th largest accounting and consulting firm, to offer you virtually limitless opportunities, yet small enough to let you decide which ones to pursue.

See us on campus October 10 to discover what we can offer you.
