ASU tutoring program given $28,000 donation

By TERESA OWEN
State Press

An ASU fund-raising organization has donated $28,000 to the University's financially troubled Educational Support Program, a free tutoring service that has a history of running out of money soon after school starts.

The ASU telefund, which has been soliciting donations from students' parents for more than a week, hopes to raise a total of $150,000 for ESP by the end of the month, said Betty Welton, the fund's director.

Bernard Jackson, director and founder of ESP, said tutoring programs have been closed to students who did not sign up before Sept. 9.

During the first two weeks of classes, 2,140 students enrolled for tutoring services. Jackson said it usually takes seven to eight total of 618 minorities, Jackson said.

Jackson said ESP's $60,000 budget was balanced before the two factors appeared.

"If you don't have the dollars, you can't give the service," Jackson said. "We've clipped and chipped many programs."

For example, testing preparation programs for students have been cut because of the lack of funds, he said. Tutors used to help prepare students entering graduate school with a 17-week preparation course, but ESP will no longer provide this service.

Students who need tutoring will now be forced to use off-campus services that can charge up to $15 per hour, Jackson said.

Tutors' work hours also have been reduced because of the shortage. Some of the tutors' hours have been cut from 20 hours per week to 16 hours or 14 hours, Jackson said.

In addition, the number of tutors this semester has declined from 104 tutors last year to 80 this fall.

Jackson said this is partly due to the depleted funds, but is also because tutors find other jobs.

But Leon Shell, dean of student life, said although he did not know how many students would be affected by the closed program, some students are going to be hurt because they may not be able to be tutored.

"Some would obviously be impacted," he said.

Shell added that some additional openings for tutoring may open later this semester.

"We're going to evaluate week by week to see if there are any open spots," he said.

In addition, Shell said he is looking at ways to give ESP more money.

"We have recognized that we do need more funds and we have asked for it in our five-year strategic plan," he said.

'If you don't have the dollars, you can't give the service.'

weeks before that many students enroll in the program.

"The program is filled," he said.

ESP has run out of money early in the fall semesters of 1985 and 1986.

This year, increasing student enrollment and the implementation of the "Action Now" minority recruitment plan have exhausted program funds because they were not in the budget, Jackson said.

ESP has increased the number of minorities it helps by 200 students, for a

Carter upholds role-model image

By ROBIE KAKONGE
State Press

To many, he is known as the ASU assistant dean of student life.

But to others, Art Carter, one of the most visible black administrators on campus, is a role model.

Art Carter

Carter, a soft-spoken, 44-year-old Pennsylvanian who has been at ASU for seven years, sits behind a well-kept desk in his office in the Student Services Building.

He said that although he loves working with students and takes a special interest in minority students, his role model demands can be frustrating.

"There is a need for more role models at ASU," he said. "Minority students need more people who are willing to work with them and help them shape their success."

Carter said his life's greatest challenge has been "not to view myself as black and struggling, but rather as an individual who is to gain the recognition of being capable and competent in what I do."

And being a minority professional can be a "catch-22," he added.

"It can be limiting because you are expected to perform your normal job requirements as well as help minority students in need... this is not an expectation for white professionals."

"When you do make a commitment to help minority students, you do it at a cost to your professional growth because there is less time to spend in professional organizations," he said, adding that the time is spent to help students with basic problems like helping them find money for food and housing.

"What is interesting is that in situations like these, the most disappointing things also turn out to be the most positive. It keeps me going. As soon as you work out one problem, another one is on hand."

Carter said his desire to succeed goes back to his parents.

"I was born and raised in Pennsylvania, and my neighborhood had Protestants, Jews, Catholics and a bit of everyone, and so I learned at an early age to get along with everyone," said Carter, who holds a Ph.D. in counseling from

Malfunction causes Tempe traffic jams

Traffic in Tempe was backed up for about a half hour during the evening rush hour Tuesday because a computer system that controls the city's traffic lights malfunctioned.

A power surge during Monday night's thunderstorm apparently caused the malfunction, police said.

Traffic was heavily congested from about 5:20 p.m. to 5:50 p.m., said Karen Wolf, a Tempe police communications supervisor.

Wolf said officers were stationed at the busiest intersections and manually controlled traffic lights. The officers radioed one another on when to change light signals, she said.

Motorists who normally wait one light to make it through an intersection had to wait at least three or four lights, officials said.

The computer malfunction should be fixed late today when new computer software arrives.

Until then, police have a word of advice: "People who want to move around easily should avoid Tempe," said Tempe police spokesman Sgt. Al Taylor. "It will not be the most desirable place."

Hispanic vote key in November election

By The Associated Press

The outcome of closely fought presidential races in Texas and California may hinge on whether George Bush or Michael Dukakis captures the Hispanic vote, but both candidates seem surprisingly inept in pursuing this fast-growing electorate.

Although the Democratic nominee speaks Spanish, the Dukakis campaign only recently has begun scrambling to deal with what some observers say is a dangerous lack of local organizing and his half-hearted, post-primary courting of Hispanics in California.

"At this moment it (the Hispanic vote) is in jeopardy," said Ruben Bonilla, director of the Mexican-American Democratic Political Action Committee. "There are certain things that need to be done, and we're in danger of running out of time."

At the same time, Bush's own Hispanic initiative hasn't lived up to his Republican supporters' expectations, and has been weakened by highly publicized comments by the vice president that some Hispanic leaders found offensive.

U.S. to offer more than $550 million for use of military bases

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — U.S. and Filipino officials reached tentative agreement for Washington to provide compensation of more than $550 million a year to use its six military bases in the Philippines, sources said Tuesday.

The sources, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said the two sides had nearly finished reviewing an agreement governing the bases, which are the largest U.S. garrison in southeast Asia. An accord on new compensation terms through 1991 is expected within a week, they said.

In Washington, a U.S. official who has kept a close eye on the negotiations denied there was an agreement. The official refused to be identified.

The United States now pays about $180 million a year for the bases.

The sources in Manila, who are close to the talks, said negotiators agreed on a basic annual compensation package of $550 million to $580 million in economic support, military assistance and commodities, mostly wheat.

Filipino negotiators in Washington were bargaining for an additional loan of $100 million to purchase U.S. Treasury bonds, said the sources. The bonds would be used to pay off $200 million of the Philippines' $28 billion debt.

Three Manila newspaper said such a loan would be made, but they did not say for how much.

Iranians in arms deal thought Bush pulled strings, book says

WASHINGTON (AP) — Iranians involved in the Iran-Contra affair thought George Bush was the "most powerful man in the world" and the person pulling the strings from behind the scenes, according to a new book.

The book is written by Michael A. Ledeen, a former consultant to the National Security Council who played a role in the earliest stages of the affair. He says the Iranians overestimated Bush's importance because the vice president was a former CIA director.

Ledeen said his book is an attempt to shed light on how the Iran-Contra affair happened and "set the record straight about myself and my role in the affair."

Michigan girl visits Panama as guest of Gen. Manuel Noriega

PANAMA CITY, Panama (AP) — Sarah York celebrated her birthday a few days early with children from the low-income neighborhood of San Miguelito and then returned home Tuesday to Negaunee, Mich.

Sarah, who turns 11 on Friday, arrived in Panama last Wednesday as a guest of the country's de facto ruler, Gen. Manuel Antonio Noriega. She spent Monday at the mayor's office, the local military headquarters and with other children who sang "Happy Birthday."

She smiled broadly when presented with a cake with the Panamanian flag drawn on top. Children also gave her a doll in native dress, a blouse with detailed applique work done by the Kuna Indians and a bouquet of flowers.

Relations between Panama and the United States have been strained by U.S. pressure on Noriega to resign as chief of the Defense Forces and leave the country. U.S. drug trafficking charges were leveled against him in February.

Noriega denies any wrongdoing.

U.N. Day to include fanfare, peace pole dedication

By KELLY PEARCE
State Press

"Let there be peace on earth, and let it begin with me."

So heralds a song that will be sung at ASU during United Nations Day Oct. 24, when fanfare, music, speeches and discussions will mark U.N. Day, a day to remember peace at ASU.

Associated Students will co-sponsor the event, which recognizes the United Nations for its international peace-keeping efforts. United Nations peace-keeping forces won this year's Nobel Peace prize.

Vince Micone, ASASU vice president of campus affairs, said a peace pole, located in front of Danforth Chapel, will be dedicated to Victor Baumann, an ASU education professor who died last year after being a United Nations Association musician and peacemaker.

"Our focus for the day is not politics — it's educational," Micone said.

The United Nations, which finds peaceful solutions to international disputes, has existed for 43 years. This will mark the 41st time the day will be celebrated nationally.

ASU's peace pole is one of 600 in the country. Its inscription reads, "May Peace Prevail on Earth." Each of the four sides of the pole has the inscription in a different language — English, Japanese, Russian and Spanish.

There are more than 61,000 similar poles in 70 countries.

Nemi Jain, co-chair of U.N. Day on campus and an ASU communications professor, said students should think beyond their own country and recognize how the United Nations helps all people.

"It (U.N. Day) will help bring more global awareness in terms of ASU students," he said.

Micone agreed, saying, "We should understand the United Nations. Our generation sometimes loses sight of the last world war where millions of people were killed. The United Nations deals with international problems like this and tries to avoid them."

The dedication and jam-packed day of events also celebrates the 40th anniversary of the adoption of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, which Micone says recognizes basic international rights.

"It is one of the most significant things the United Nations did," he said.

The day's events include:

- A lecture by U.N. National Field Director James Olson, "U.N.-U.S. Developments," will be held at 10:40 a.m. in the MU Pima Room.

- A lunch conversation will be held at noon in the MU Santa Cruz Room. Sylvia Urrutia, student chair of ASU's Coalition for World Peace, and Ken Maxwell, president of the greater Phoenix chapter of the United Nations Association of the USA, are scheduled to speak.

- Current issues will be addressed in a panel discussion at 2:40 p.m. in the MU Arizona Room. A sampling of these U.N. issues include peace-keeping, human rights, global education, hunger and disarmament.

- The peace pole dedication and fanfare will be held at 4:30 p.m. on Cady Mall. "Let There be Peace on Earth" will be sung at the end of the celebration.

Architectural historian to lecture on Wright

William J.R. Curtis, an architectural historian, critic and author, will lecture on Frank Lloyd Wright at 5:30 p.m. today in ASU's Neeb Hall.

Curtis is the College of Architecture and Design's first Frank Lloyd Wright scholar. Curtis will discuss the nature and tradition of Wright's architectural designs and how his achievements are being reevaluated by design theorists.

One of Wright's more famous creations is ASU's

Gammage Center for the Performing Arts.

Curtis teaches part-time at Washington University in St. Louis and has authored several books on architecture.

ASU departments to sponsor conference on languages

Several ASU departments will co-sponsor a "Discourses of Power" conference to be held Oct. 20-22 in the MU.

Conference sessions will discuss the role that language plays in promoting or retarding revolutionary situations, the degree to which discourses can be consciously manipulated and the problem of identifying competing discourses.

"Distinctions of the use of language and style of turn-taking in debates between female and male politicians suggests that there are some differences in the way males and females assert authority and represent power," said Karen Adams, an assistant professor of linguistics and one of the conference organizers.

ASU's English department, humanities computing facility, Center for Medieval and Renaissance Studies and graduate college are sponsors. For more information, call Karen Adams at 965-3810.

Student VP comes up short fulfilling campaign promises

David Jordan
Columnist

"Students are the ones that pay the money so they should reap the benefits."

— Todd Martensen
April 5, 1988

I realize that campaign promises are rarely taken seriously by politicians when they run for office. The prevailing view is that if you say whatever is necessary to get into office, voters will ignore you once you're there.

Occasionally, however, broken promises become more than just political strategy or clever deceptions of the voters. Occasionally, public servants will demonstrate such mismanagement and poor judgment as they are breaking campaign promises that their constituents are forced to take notice.

Enter Todd Martensen.

Last April, Martensen spent $1,542 — more than any other runoff candidate — to convince ASU voters that as activities vice president he would provide programs that would not only give students their money's worth, but would also be programs that the students wanted to see.

"You... are the lifeblood of the school," he professed, "and you deserve the best."

Big promises. And such a bright, promising candidate. Plus, he is a Sigma Nu, and we all know what great leaders they are.

If only his real life performance was as bright as this illusion...

The major victim thus far has been one of ASASU's biggest programs — Lecture Series. With total budget well over $50,000, Lecture Series has in the past brought such speakers as William F. Buckley, Hunter S. Thompson, G. Gordon Liddy, President Gerald Ford and Alex Haley. This program has arguably been one of the finest student-run programs anywhere on campus.

Martensen's choice for director was his fraternity brother, David Symms. Symms has complained bitterly that his program was cut back to the paltry 50 grand that the ASASU budgeting process has provided for the year.

The question of course, is not how much money Lecture Series begins the year with, it is what they do with the money. Sadly, Lecture Series has fallen short this year in three categories: choice of programming, cost of programming and advertising.

The first event of the year, a lecture by Mayor Henry Cisneros of San Antonio, Texas, was unquestionably a good choice for a program. Cisneros has become a symbol of good leadership for his culture and for the nation at large. Though a worthy effort, the costs of the event and the advertising for it were a disaster.

Cisneros cost the students almost $8,500 when you look at the entire cost of the lecture. By comparison, that is more than any lecture last year save William F. Buckley, an event which drew a crowd of over 800. The event cost almost twice what students paid for G. Gordon Liddy who drew a crowd of 1,200. What makes the price tag for Cisneros even more amazing is that he received his honorary doctorate from ASU. I find it nearly impossible to believe that Martensen or Symms couldn't negotiate the price down. The truth is they didn't try.

Despite the Pentagon-sized cost of this lecture, it would certainly be worth that cost if a large number of students turned up to see Cisneros speak. Unfortunately, the lecture attracted an audience of less than 200. The turnout for Cisneros' lecture was such a complete disaster that Ishtar paled in comparison.

One of the reasons for this poor showing was the paltry advertising for the lecture. Posters went up two days before the event and Symms took out only one State Press ad — the day of the event.

The focus of the appearance by Mayor Cisneros was not his lecture to students, who were paying for the event. It was a luncheon for a select group of invitees who were able to meet and chat with the mayor before the lecture. Even though only a small group of people were invited, ASU students picked up the check, which was an impressive $750.

Today, Symms presents the second installment of this year's Lecture Series. The overpriced speaker du jour is Cathy Rigby, who is charging us around $4,250. That is about the same honorarium that we paid G. Gordon Liddy last year. I have a hard time imagining a large amount of interest for an Olympic participant who won her medal over a decade ago.

Of course there were those ads...

Though we are paying a good amount for this lecture, the advertising has been almost non-existent. Outside of the ASASU offices, I have yet to see a single poster advertising the lecture on campus.

To finish off the semester, Lecture Series proposes to bring Jeremiah Denton and Phil Gramm. Denton is a former senator from Alabama and Gramm is currently a senator from Texas. These arch-conservatives are not only likely to say many of the same things, but will also have little name recognition with most students.

The mismanagement of Lecture Series has not been Martensen's only error in judgment. Martensen appointed Derrick Hall, another fraternity brother, as Concerts coordinator. Hall's deep caring for the Concerts department was demonstrated by the fact that he made but a brief cameo appearance at the beginning of his first event — a concert by the group Fishbone — and didn't return until well after it was over.

Fortunately, it is early in the year, and indiscretions of the past can still be corrected. Martensen is far from fulfilling his promise that students would "reap the benefits" of the money they were spending. Lecture Series has yet to confirm its speakers for next semester and Concerts has many events left to produce. Hopefully, the Activities Department will learn from the mistakes of the past.

Until then, Martensen, Symms and Hall will remain the three blind mice of ASASU politics.

Desperately seeking Fiji

Editor:

In light of the present upheaval concerning the fraternity system at ASU, I felt compelled to enter my own two cents worth.

A few months back I had the opportunity of having a 1980 Ford attempt to run me over as I was riding my motorcycle at the corner of Southern and Dobson. Somehow making it to the side of the road, I glanced back to the street to see only the 1980 Ford driving off. For 20 minutes not one person ever stopped to help. Finally a young man pulled over to see if I needed help. He pulled the remnants of my motorcycle to the side of the road, called the police and ambulance, and even accompanied me to the hospital. At the hospital I was sedated and when I came to, he had departed. Although I never knew his name, I did remember him wearing a shirt with Phi Gamma Delta printed on it.

If I am correct, Phi Gamma Delta is the fraternity known as the FIJIs which has received much press in the past year. I read these articles and opinions in the State Press criticizing the fraternity system. Do these people even know any of the guys in the fraternities? All I know about them, and Phi Gamma Delta specifically, is that the only person who stopped to help me in what I loosely call a time of crisis, was a member of that fraternity. I only regret that I don't know his name. If I were younger (I am 25) I would gladly pledge Phi Gamma Delta.

So before you judge the entire Fraternity system (this means you, Darrin Hostetler), remember that at least one fraternity member is not so bad. You can't judge the whole group by the actions of a few. If that were the case, and I judged the State Press by the articles that Hostetler writes, I would say that the State Press sucks, but I don't feel that way. I am not so close-minded.

Dear Mr. Bush:

Candidate must find convictions as GOP victory draws near

Jeff Greenfield
Universal Press Syndicate

NEW YORK — Dear Mr. Vice President: It is more and more apparent that, barring a disaster by you or your running mate, you are likely to become the next president of the United States.

You're ahead in the polls, experts say that at this point you've successfully secured more than half of the electoral votes you need to win, and your campaign has — by methods impressive and ignoble — defined the agenda to your benefit and to Michael Dukakis' pain.

As a political matter, this achievement is most impressive, particularly to those of us — of whom I am one — who believed you would have a very difficult time in winning the nomination, much less prevailing in November.

In part, it is due to a brilliantly run campaign; in part it is due to the failure of will, imagination and strategy on the part of your opposition; and in substantial part it is due to a general sense of well-being and satisfaction among most Americans.

So now the question becomes not just whether you will win, but how you will win. If election night produces the victory that now seems likely, how will you — how will we — feel about that victory?

Will it be greeted with a genuine sense of anticipation? Will you have won an office or a mandate for a course of action that might begin addressing what needs to be done?

It must be apparent to you that many people — including many who will vote for you for president — really do not know who you are or where you wish to lead us. As of now, you have apparently convinced most Americans that you are a preferable alternative to Michael Dukakis. That, however is only the first step in leadership; gaining the levers of power is not the same thing as convincing the voters that you know to what ends that power ought to be directed.

We know that when you speak the words of your extraordinary speechwriter Peggy Noonan, you are the exemplar of a quiet, compassionate populist, in touch with the values and aspirations of ordinary citizens, determined to bring a streak of moral solidity to government. But when the speeches are over, where is the evidence of that passion? You say you are "haunted" by the lives led by the children of the inner cities. But what have you done in your quarter-century of public life that shows a hint of that concern? (And please don't tell us of your dreams of "enterprise zones" in the inner cities, a program towards which neither you nor Ronald Reagan expended an ounce of political capital.)

'Time after time, those who worked with you — in the CIA, at the United Nations, in the Reagan administration — describe you as a pleasant, decent man with no real sense of what he believes in ...'

I worked for a man who spoke often of the lives of those inner-city children. But Robert Kennedy not only talked about those children, not only went back again and again into those mean streets, but spent much of the last years of his life trying to turn that concern into a model of community-based regeneration. Twenty years after his death, the Bedford-Stuyvesant restoration program is still trying to beat back the waves of hopelessness that daily threaten to engulf the citizens of that neighborhood.

You say that the greed and compromises of daily life make you wonder if we have forgotten who we are. But where in your public life is there any sense that you have tried to bend public discourse to this inner sense of right and wrong?

Time after time, those who worked with you — in the CIA, at the United Nations and in the Reagan administration — describe you as a pleasant, decent man with no real sense of what he believes in, of what he's willing to fight for. Are they all wrong? Have we missed something in your public life that defines you as a public figure with any sense of how you want to shape the direction of this country?

The values you assert — patriotism, crime fighting, low taxes — are no doubt popular positions that have helped you rise in the polls. They may or may not be bedrocks of sound public policy. But do they connect with any real ideas of yours?

For example, the idea of a "police corps," which would take inner-city and working-class youths and pay for their college education in return for three years of service on our police forces, could well be a breakthrough concept of increasing both the educational opportunities of our young and police presence in the street, while re-establishing the link between opportunity and obligations.

Do you like that idea? Have you even heard of it? Or is your "tough on crime" posture just that — a chance for photo opportunities with our men in blue?

The vision you paint of an economy moving forward without government restraint is appealing, but have you any sense of why, for instance, our steel and auto and other manufacturing centers have suffered so much in the past two decades? Is there anything to the idea that labor and management shortsightedness contributed to our current condition? And is that something you feel comfortable talking about it in the midst of a campaign?

You can probably win this election without dealing with any of these questions. But the larger question for us is: If you win by clever stratagems, what kind of presidency will that portend?

Republicans," said Richard Santillan, a professor at California State Polytechnic University at Pomona.

"Both campaigns are doing the same thing — taking the Hispanic vote for granted," he said.

At stake in the Hispanic community, ironically, are enough votes to tip the balance of victory in a close contest.

In the past 12 years, rapid population growth and massive voter registration efforts have nearly tripled the number of eligible Hispanic voters. More than half of all Hispanics live in California, Texas and New Mexico, which together carry 81 electoral votes, or 30 percent of the 270 electoral votes needed to win the presidency.

Pollsters say the presidential races in California and perhaps in Texas may come down to margins of about 100,000 votes either way. Hispanic groups have registered 100,000 new voters in California and 70,000 in Texas this year.

In Arizona, where Hispanics make up about 16 percent of the state's population, the race may be just as close. Margaret Hance, a former Phoenix mayor and Bush's local campaign director, said the vice president could be in for a showdown in winning the state's seven electoral votes. Forty-seven electoral votes are up for grabs in California and 29 in Texas.

"Since the the election is going to be close, Hispanics are going to play a crucial role," said ASU political science professor John Geer, adding that Bush and Dukakis have been courting middle class voters more than minorities.

To provide the margin of victory over Bush, who leads in most polls, analysts say Dukakis would have to win upwards of 75 percent of a large Hispanic turnout. Bush is seeking at least one-third of the vote or else a low turnout.

Hispanics traditionally have low turnout rates in presidential elections. Excitement about Dukakis and the prospect of helping to decide a close race led experts to predict record numbers of Hispanics casting ballots on Nov. 8.

Those predictions may now be in doubt. In poorer Hispanic neighborhoods, which usually are Democratic strongholds, the key to winning is effective door-to-door campaigning, high-profile rallies and workable get-out-the-vote machinery. There also must be a close race, where Hispanics believe their votes can make a difference.

"The burden really is on Dukakis to convince people, and for his machine to get people to come out and vote," said Cal Tech's Santillan, an expert on voting trends and ethnic studies. "I don't know if he's been able to do that."

Said Richard Martinez, California director of the non-partisan Southwest Voter Registration Education Project:

"The longer they wait, the more options they cut off. The key for the Democrats is, are you going to be smart enough to make the investment and get out that 75 percent you need? Are you going to play your Hispanic card?"

Bush has tried to corral Hispanic voters by stressing his stands for a strong military and against abortion and crime, and pointing to the Reagan administration's new Hispanic education secretary, Lauro Cavazos.

"When I was going through school I was motivated by the need to make my parents proud, and to provide for myself job security and other things my parents did not have," he said.

Along the way, Carter's commitment to helping students has paid off. He has won several recognition awards for things such as outstanding adviser to various student clubs and community organizations.

"What I do is very exciting," he said. "I enjoy working with students who are exploring different routes to get to where they want to go.

"It used to be that students would come to college and think about what they are going to do after graduation, but now, students are taking the challenge and are actually trying to start that small business or work for that big firm while they are in school."

Carter said ASU needs to strengthen academic advising and counseling services for minority students. He added, "Increased activities are needed that assure that minority students are able to work together and achieve success in areas other than sports."

Fire guts Tempe apartment, labeled 'suspicious'

By MIKE BURGESS
State Press

A first-alarm fire gutted most of a Tempe apartment Tuesday morning and caused $40,000 in damages, authorities said.

The blaze at 1850 E. Hayden Lane, Apt. 212, is suspicious in origin, said Tempe Assistant Fire Chief Jim Gaintner. There were no injuries.

Gaintner said firefighters got the call at 5:53 a.m. and arrived on the scene about two minutes later.

"There was heavy smoke and fire coming out of the windows," Gaintner said. "We did a good job of keeping it from extending to other apartments."

He said firefighters had the blaze under control in about 15 minutes.

Gaintner said most of the fire damage was to the roof of the second story apartment. There was some smoke damage to an adjoining apartment.

In other incidents:

•Tempe police have identified a man who was beaten and found Saturday lying nude and unconscious in a vacant lot in north Tempe.

The man is Russell Escarsega, 19, of Bapchula, Ariz., said Tempe police spokesman Sgt. Al Taylor.

Escarsega is listed in serious but stable condition at Scottsdale Memorial Hospital-Osborn where he is recovering from severe head injuries.

Taylor said Escarsega told police he got drunk at a bar in police report

Escarsega was hit in the head several times with some sort of blunt object, Taylor said.

•The ASU Police Department's Bicycle Enforcement Safety Team issued 33 bicycle citations and 45 warnings Monday.

•A Physical Plant employee told ASU police he heard obscene radio traffic broadcasted on his walkie-talkie. He said it could be construction workers using the same radio frequencies and that he would tell police if it continues.

•Police warned a man who was selling ski equipment on Adelphi Drive about trespassing and soliciting on ASU property.

•Someone stole a Liz Claiborne wallet and its contents from a purse that was left unattended in the first floor restroom of the Physical Science A-Wing, police said. Loss is $65.

•Someone shattered the rear window of a Residence Life vehicle parked in Lot 63, just north of Cholla Apartments, police said. Damage is $250.

•A black Schwinn Sierra 12-speed bicycle was stolen from the bicycle racks at Palo Verde Main Residence Hall, police said. The theft occurred sometime Saturday or Sunday and the loss is $250.

•Four hubcaps were stolen Monday from a vehicle parked in Lot 63, just north of Cholla Apartments, police said. Loss is

•A female student suffered a minor cut to her left foot Monday when she lost control of her bicycle while riding in the Grady Gammage Auditorium parking lot, police said. She was treated at the Student Health Center.

•An ASU van sustained $100 in damages Monday when the driver backed it into a dumpster behind the Engineering Resource Center to avoid hitting a bicyclist, police said.

•Someone damaged the outside door to the elevator room on the roof of Manzanita Hall, police said. The door apparently jammed and was pried open. Damage is $60.

•A female student told police she saw two boys take a moped from behind ASU police headquarters and leave it in the courtyard at Irish Hall. The two youths were about 14 years old and both wore T-shirts and jeans.

•Police impounded a vial Monday from the Agriculture Building that contained a powdery substance. The substance will be destroyed, police said.

•A purse was taken Monday from a locker in the Physical Education East Building, police said. Loss is $80.

•A men's blue Schwinn 10-speed bicycle was stolen Saturday from the bicycle racks at Manzanita Residence Hall, police said. Loss is $60.

•A male student was arrested Monday in connection with an Aug. 8 criminal damage incident at Cholla Apartments.

•Police discovered a water leak Friday on the fourth floor of Hayden Library during a routine security check. The information was given to the ASU Central Plant.

Tempe residents engage in citizen police academy

For the next nine weeks, 24 Tempe residents will leave their everyday jobs for a few hours and strap on a badge and holster.

They will play cops and robbers starting tonight and every Wednesday night at the Tempe Police Department's Citizen Police Academy.

"We're trying to get citizens involved in police work so they can understand what we do," said Sgt. Al Taylor, a department spokesman. "It's not going to be as intensive (as a real police academy) but more of an overview."

Taylor said the academy, the first of its kind for the city, is part of the department's Community-Based Policing, in which police and citizens work together to fight crime.

It will give citizens hands-on experience in narcotics enforcement, SWAT team methods, searches using police dogs, law and court procedures, property crimes, traffic investigation, homicides, sex crimes, robbery, fraud, defensive tactics and firearm usage.

The idea for the academy came from Tempe City Manager Terry Zerkle, who recently moved to the city from Arlington, Texas, Taylor said. The Arlington Police Department had a citizen's academy.

To qualify for the academy, Taylor said applicants had to be at least 21, live or work in Tempe, have no prior felony convictions and have no misdemeanor arrests in the last six months.

Artistic manna found in New Hampshire hideout

By The Associated Press

PETERBOROUGH, N.H. — A few months ago, Linda Clark struggled in Brooklyn to write the opening pages of her first novel, "Familiar Voices."

Two or three nights a week, after commuting home from a job writing technical manuals in Manhattan, she would scribble ideas in a spiral notebook or capture a passage or two on her IBM Selectric typewriter.

She'd tell friends she had a class, but still the phone would ring periodically, or she'd get hungry or a growing laundry pile would cast a dim shadow over her prose.

Her novel's gestation period lengthening with each passing day, Clark mailed off an application to use an isolated artist's studio at New Hampshire's MacDowell Colony. She was one of more than 220 writers, painters, composers, sculptors and photographers granted temporary use of 31 secluded wilderness studios this year.

The day-to-day routine at the 450-acre colony is not real life, nor does it try to be. Founded in 1907 by the widow of composer Edward MacDowell, it's a place, President David Heleniak said, "where life is simple, where artists work well."

That simplicity includes a private one-room cabin in the woods, a basket lunch catered to fussy diets and delivered daily, and the guarantee of distraction-free seclusion from breakfast to dinner.

Total price: whatever the artist can pay toward the $90-a-day cost.

Apparently the formula works. In 81 years, 43 Pulitzer Prize and 41 Prix De Rome winners have found tinder for their creative fires in the woods of MacDowell, the nation's oldest — and some say most prestigious — artists' colony.

It's not for everybody. Some artists can't stand the isolation and, in fact, need diversions to work. But for the right person at the right time, a stay at MacDowell can be manna from heaven.

Pulitzer Prize-winning dramatist Thornton Wilder said the colony gave him kindness when he needed it and "a place to hear myself think." Composer Aaron Copeland said it carried out its goals magnificently and "has provided a unique contribution to American cultural life." Composer-conductor Leonard Bernstein said MacDowell inspired works of "vastness . . . dealing with subjects of astronomical, if not mystical and astrological dimensions."

"You have a perfect day, and then you realize you're going to have another," the Pulitzer Prize-winning historian Barbara Tuchman said.

For the 28-year-old Clark, privacy and support of her fellow artists provided the atmosphere for her to produce almost a third of her book in the first four weeks.

"I even took a day off and finished a story," she said. "I've never been able to write a story this fast."

The scene of this epic productivity was Watson Studio, a 1915 gray stucco bungalow graced with six grand white pillars mimicking a Southern plantation house. One of the colony's only live-in studios, this miniature Tara lies nuzzled in the woods at the end of a dirt road marked with the threatening sign: "No vehicles or viewers beyond this point."

Other artists sleep in homey dormitory rooms and trek each morning — down roads marked with similar warnings — to their studios.

Clark's typewriter sits on a chunky Victorian table in the 20-by-30 foot room, which is decorated in a style described by a former resident as "impoverished nobility." Other furnishings include a grand piano, an antique bed, a gilt chandelier and a threadbare couch.

Enhancing this obvious long history are 10 wooden plaques — "tombstones" — hanging on the walls beside Watson Studio's red brick fireplace. They contain the many signatures of the studio's famous and not-so-famous previous occupants dating back to the 1920s. Author James Baldwin signed his name in the '60s; Bernstein's appears several times in the '60s and '70s.

For some, the idyllic conditions, the isolation or the legacy of success create stifling fears.

"I don't think I would be constitutionally able to head off into the woods after breakfast and hear nothing until dinner except the thump of the lunch basket on the front porch," author William Styron said in August before receiving the 1988 MacDowell Medal for his life's work. "In fact, I think my sanity might be at risk."

Some colonists have been known to turn over the tombstones in their studios to escape the scrutiny of hundreds of absent artists.

"The first time I was here, when I was younger, I freaked out the first three weeks," said Debra Weisberg, 35, a sculptor from Somerville, Mass. "It was just paralyzing. It's perfection, and you feel like if you don't do the best work you ever did, then you're not using this well."

Ten years after her initial visit, Weisberg says she's matured as an artist and is comfortable working at Mixer, a slate-roofed stone cottage whose latticed windows look out on a dark pine forest. This time she's concentrating on

Tom Hanks fans beware! He has and can do better

Sally Field proves she can tell a joke, but Tom Hanks falls flat as an aspiring comedian in "Punchline."

By JILL HERBRANSON
State Press

"Punchline."

Or: "Tom Hanks Tells A Few Funny Jokes."

We all love Tom, and he is definitely making the most of his place in our hearts. He has been riding the wave of his comedic success to no end, to our great, and up until now untiring, pleasure.

But in this most recent cinematic attempt with ex-Gidget Sally Field at his side, the tide is definitely ebbing.

And Hanks, along with his fans, is left dead in the water. "Punchline" is essentially about the trials, triumphs and tribulations of one of today's most gutsy professions: stand-up comedy.

Tom Hanks plays Steven Gold, a seasoned and embittered comedian, who, though the crowds love him, has never received that one break which would get him out of the fifteen-dollar-a-night dives and into the big time.

Sally Field, fondly remembered as "The Flying Nun", trades in her habit for a microphone as she co-stars with Hanks as housewife-turned-comedienne Lilah Krystick.

Lilah, opposing her husband's will, attempts to juggle motherhood, homelife and a career in comedy.

This would probably be easier if she were any good.

But she's not.

Not at first, at any rate.

Desperate, Lilah secretly spends the family's vacation money on jokes, which she buys from a shady "dealer". The jokes are prehistoric and stinky.

She somehow survives this setback and goes another route. Lilah, who has long admired Steven's magical gift for comedy, begs him to teach her the tricks of the trade.

Steven is an insecure, lonely and emotionally-unstable man who is kept alive solely by comedy. As a defense mechanism, he opens up enough to let people laugh at him and love him, and then turns on them — both on stage and off. He is at first intolerant of this amateur's pleas, and his viciousness would put a pit bull to shame.

But Lilah is compelled by her dream to be a comedienne and, though a little shaken up, is not put off by Steven's treatment of her. She knows the only way she can make it is through his tutelage.

The big controversy over this film is: can Sally Field tell a joke?

Yes. She can.

After Steven takes her under his wing, Lilah quickly learns to abandon contrived jokes and draw from personal real-life experiences.

And she does it well. Field, as Lilah, tells some jokes well.

No one rolled in the aisles, mind you, but it was a good try.

And I wouldn't go casting another Hanks/Field duo film, either. But she definitely does not deserve the lambasting she is receiving from the press regarding her ability to be funny.

Yes, it was a good try.

But Hanks, funny as he may be, is fighting a losing battle against a film which is just not up to his level.

Hanks fans: keep your image of your idol pure, and forget about seeing this movie.

Weisberg said she's learned to trust her instincts about when to work and when to take a walk or write a letter or just think: "You're not a factory. You're not a machine. You have to take care of yourself physically and mentally and spiritually to keep making artwork."

Making the decision to set aside five or six weeks for work also seems to help artists get into the right mental state to write, paint, compose or edit.

Author Martha Weinman Lear credits the "formalization of commitment."

"A writer does not come here to have writer's block," she wrote. "Not to deny or be disrespectful of the muse . . . it simply isn't done."

"In this New England climate, not parsimonious, but spare, commendably frugal, a writer's block, which in New York is something to dine out on and bemoan in a boastful way, like New York itself, would be a frivolous shame and a waste."

In 1928, Virginia Woolf wrote the essay "A Room of One's Own" about the conditions artists — specifically women artists — need to create works of genius. Her conclusion was that, in addition to education and a sense of tradition and history, an artist needs a private room in which to work and an independent income.

"Imaginative work . . . is not dropped like a pebble upon the ground," she said. "Fiction is like a spider's web, attached ever so lightly perhaps, but still attached to life at all four corners. . . ."

"But when the web is pulled askew, hooked up at the edge, torn in the middle, one remembers that these webs are not spun in midair by incorporeal creatures, but are the work of human beings and are attached to grossly material things, like health and money and the houses we live in."

MacDowell temporarily provides a room and the illusion of independent wealth. And when an artist's stay ends, perhaps he or she has the momentum to move beyond life's mundane chores.

Weisberg said she's learned to trust her instincts about when to work and when to take a walk or write a letter or just think: "You're not a factory. You're not a machine. You have to take care of yourself physically and mentally and spiritually to keep making artwork."

Making the decision to set aside five or six weeks for work also seems to help artists get into the right mental state to write, paint, compose or edit.

Author Martha Weinman Lear credits the "formalization of commitment."

"A writer does not come here to have writer's block," she wrote. "Not to deny or be disrespectful of the muse . . . it simply isn't done."

"In this New England climate, not parsimonious, but spare, commendably frugal, a writer's block, which in New York is something to dine out on and bemoan in a boastful way, like New York itself, would be a frivolous shame and a

Two hits to rent: 'Zelly' and 'Best Seller'

(AP) — Dennis Meechum is an honest cop who became rich and famous by writing crime books — a Celluloid Joseph Wambaugh without Wambaugh's wit. Into his life — like an unwanted maggot — comes Cleve, a professional hit man looking to retire from the business and settle a few scores along the way.

The "marriage" of Meechum (Brian Dennehy) and Cleve (James Woods) forms the substance of "Best Seller," a slow paced thriller about corruption, murder and extortion.

Cleve is looking for revenge against the industrialist who fired him and promises Meechum the details of every crime in which he participated. Meechum, of course, stands to get a best seller out of it.

Larry Cohen's screen play has enough twists and red herrings to satisfy the most ardent crime and mystery fans. However, most of his diversions end up being fairly predictable. Others are so out in left field that it's hard to get through the tangle and believe the plot.

Cleve wants fame and respect. He tells Meechum: "I've got to be sympathetic or the book won't be good."

He leads Meechum on a tour of mayhem and murder, as he tries to prove his story that the industrialist David Madlock (Paul Shenar) is a crook. The danger woven around the pair extends to Meechum's daughter and literary agent/lover (Victoria Tennant).

Dennehy tries hard to be convincing as a police officer who's tough enough to kill and be shot at but sensitive enough to indulge his literary talents and mourn his wife's premature death. But he never quite finds the balance.

Woods does a better job as the slick and obsessed hit man Cleve. Would you buy a used car from this man? Probably not.

Directed by Joe Flynn, "Best Seller" is a decent enough diversion for the small screen.

"Zelly and Me"

"Zelly and Me" is a woman's movie with a female writer-director and a cast that only briefly and peripherally includes men. However, it is a movie that should appeal to both men and women. It shows the ties that bind two women to a girl and the pain they can cause each other.

Zelly (Isabella Rossellini) is governess to an orphan (Alexandra Johns) who lives on a Virginia estate in 1958 with her wealthy grandmother, Co-Co (Glynis Johns). Co-Co is a lonely, possessive woman unable to ask for love or give it freely.

Rossellini is beautiful and touching as Zelly, a gentle, loving woman far from the brooding, frightened character she played in "Blue Velvet." Zelly and Phoebe, the orphan, have a sweet, nurturing relationship; Co-Co is unpredictable, from doting to devilish.

Tina Rathbone's 1988 movie is very pretty, as Zelly and Phoebe frolic in the gardens, put on a wedding for two stuffed animals and share their fascination with the legend of Joan of Arc. Into this idyllic life comes Co-Co, who destroys her granddaughter's play things and tries to estrange Zelly and Phoebe as she lashes out from her jealousy and isolation.

The film successfully, and occasionally too cloyingly, puts viewers into the life of this pretty, vulnerable child. The climax comes with the opportunity for Zelly and Phoebe to escape Co-Co, and the resolution is satisfying and realistic.

Spikers crush Nevada-Reno, play U of A tonight

By JOAN McKENNA
State Press

The ASU volleyball team showed a crowd of 259 several new unpolished ways to score Tuesday night, as the Sun Devils shut out Nevada-Reno, 3-0, in the Activity Center.

"We won, but it wasn't pretty," ASU setter Bobbi Bloom said.

Even less pretty was watching Sun Devil offensive leader Dawn Meidinger (hitting .400 for the match) twist her ankle and drop to the floor in the closing minutes while jumping at the net.

"I just came down on it wrong," she said after the match while stretched out on some chairs staring at the ice-wrapped injury.

Bloom rushed up offering her father's set of tools at home to fix it. And ASU head coach Debbie Brown whispered something in her ear, trying to cheer up the obviously disappointed middle blocker.

The injury could keep Meidinger from playing against arch-rival Arizona tonight in the first of two Pac-10 matchups this season.

Meanwhile, her teammates expect a showdown during the 7:30 meeting in the UAC.

"We always get psyched up," Bloom said. "But we need a big crowd. We kind of like to show off or something."

"It's true," she added after being ribbed by other teammates. "Give me a break."

But team captain Christy Nore said, all fun aside, the match will be crucial.

"It's going to decide a lot," she said. Brown agreed.

"It's probably our most important match to date as far as the Pac-10 race," Brown said. "Arizona beat a couple of teams that we haven't. I don't mean that we're going to win (the Pac-10). But it's a real important match."

The 17th-ranked Wildcats (11-4) are in fifth place in the conference with a record of 5-3. The three losses have come against top-ranked UCLA, No. 2 Stanford and No. 13 Washington.

No. 18 ASU (12-5) is sixth in the Pac-10 and 3-5 on the season after losses to the above teams, and Oregon and Southern Cal.

Wildcat head coach Rosie Wegrich voiced the same concern over the match.

"We really need this game because this chops off the halfway point for both schools," she said. "We'd like to finish the first half at 6-3."

But UofA is in a slightly better position, due to what Wegrich calls a new philosophy for her players.

"We're focusing on going after each ball 100 percent," she said. "We're not focusing on the outcome. If all of us do our own part, the win will take care of itself."

"It's just a minor thing, but it seems to be working."

ASU played a mixed squad of starters and reserves against Nevada-Reno, allowing non-regulars to get some court time.

And Brown said it was a chance for Meidinger to see more action from the back row, as she usually is substituted when it is her turn to serve.

"Obviously now I'm concerned if Dawn's going to be able to play," she said. "If she can't, (middle blocker) Tina (Berg)'s been playing really well, and I'll put her in."

ASU's Jennifer Rodgers goes for the spike against Nevada-Reno's Denise Marsh during Tuesday's 3-0 win over the Wolfpack. The 18th-ranked Sun Devils play host to the 17th-ranked Arizona Wildcats at 7:30 p.m. today at the Activity Center.

Eager men's gymnastics team conducts intrasquad meet

Paul Linne

By GARY JACKSON
State Press

Eager to get a jump ahead of upcoming opponents, the ASU men's gymnastics team had an intrasquad meet Tuesday, even though the season will not begin until late January.

"There's more of a challenge this semester than normal," assistant coach Scott Barclay said. "I think we're a lot farther ahead than we've ever been."

Barclay said the gymnasts usually do not perform full routines at this stage of the season, but this year they are starting early.

The men compete in six events and may receive up to 10 points in each. When the season begins, six gymnasts will perform per event and the top five scores contribute to the team's point total.

"As far as the competition goes, I think there was some good hunger there that produced some good work," Barclay said.

Senior Paul Linne, who scored 55.6 points, won by a narrow margin over sophomore Jody Newman, who finished with 55.2. Sophomore Licurgo Diaz-Sandi was third in the meet with a 54.4 score.

Linne will represent the men's team, and will team with a gymnast from the ASU women's squad to compete in November at a mixed-pair meet in Illinois. ASU will battle six other teams in the meet, sponsored by Southwest Airlines.

Before the meet, ASU coach Don Robinson said there would be a fierce battle between Linne and Newman, and Diaz-Sandi could surprise both.

Vying to be the No. 1 man on the team, Linne and Newman could not hide their intensity, while Diaz-Sandi contained his emotions. Although this was just the first intrasquad meet of the season, the gymnasts performed as if it were the real thing.

"I was very pleased with the meet," Robinson said. "This was the first time the gymnasts had to put their reputation on the line."

The meet began with the floor exercise and the pommel horse. Although the season has just begun, the gymnasts' skills did not seem to show signs of rust.

But in the last two events, parallel bars and high bar, Newman slipped, seemingly giving Linne the advantage. But Linne produced the same results, keeping the competition even.

"I think Jody and Paul both had a rough time because of the pressure and slipped up," Barclay said. "Either one of them could have given up, but neither one did."

"That is going to have to be indicative for our team as a whole."

The team will face tough competition throughout the year, but it can be successful as long as the Sun Devil gymnasts hang tough and don't give up, Barclay said.

The meet results for all of the gymnasts will be released today.

Robinson said the gymnasts with the top nine scores will represent this year's squad. Those athletes will provide experience and depth on the squad, but if there are any injuries, the team will be hurting, he said.

Randy Scott will not return for the team this season. Scott tore a ligament in his left leg during a dismount from the vault at the Turn to Gymnastics, page 20.

Golf teams prepare for Tulsa tournament

By DEAN GYORGY
State Press

Both the men's and women's golf teams are on their way to Tulsa, Okla., for one of the biggest tournaments of the year.

The country's top nine teams of both genders will gather Friday for the annual 54-hole Tour Tulsa Invitational at Meadowbrook Country Club.

The third-ranked men's team will make its third appearance of the year after collecting a pair of second-place finishes.

Coach Steve Loy returns six golfers who played regularly last season, but he will be without the services of Bill Mayfair, who graduated.

"Certainly anytime you lose the U.S. Amateur champion and four-time all-American, you're going to miss him," Loy said. "We miss Billy terribly."

But in the same breath, Loy said this year's club is in no way lacking talent, and should improve on last year's 10th-place

NCAA finish.

"We could be a great team before the year is over," Loy said.

Making this weekend's trek will be senior captain Jim Strickland, juniors Scott Frisch and Todd Kernaghan, and booking their third straight trip are a couple of newcomers, Phil Mickelson and Per Johansson.

Mickelson is a three-time National Junior champion from San Diego. Johansson hails from Sweden, via Alexander City Junior College in Alabama. Loy said both should play consistently within ASU's top five, but the lineup is subject to change.

"We're still trying to learn the chemistry of our team," Loy said. "We're still trying to determine the top five players. Obviously if we can win in the process it's going to be an important asset to the team."

Women's coach Linda Vollstedt said that, after a second-place finish in this event last year, she expects her team to finish in the top three again.

"We feel like we're ready for this tournament," Vollstedt said. "We've always done well in Tulsa."

The women's contingent will include Pearl Sinn, the top amateur in the nation, who is making her season debut after a spectacular summer.

Also going are preseason all-Americans Amy Fruhwirth and Missy Farr, freshman Lynne Mikulas and senior Heather Hodur.

The women are ranked No. 1 in a preseason coaches poll. Although it is too early in the season for the computer rankings to back that up, Vollstedt said the team is flattered by the subjective opinions.

"It's nice to know that we're looked at right now as the top team in the country,"

Vollstedt said the confidence and experience levels are high, and a good tournament is expected.

"If we could win this it would be a great start to the year," she said.

Cone helps Mets stay alive, beat Dodgers to force Game 7

LOS ANGELES (AP) — David Cone wrote a different story in Game 6 of the National League playoffs, pitching a five-hitter as the New York Mets beat the Los Angeles Dodgers 5-1 Tuesday night to tie the best-of-seven series at three games apiece.

The decisive seventh game will be played at 5:22 p.m. today at Dodger Stadium. Orel Hershiser, a 23-game winner, will start for Los Angeles against Ron Darling, 17-9.

Hershiser started Games 1 and 3 without getting a decision, and got a save in the Dodgers' 12-inning, 5-4 victory in Game 4.

Kevin McReynolds, with a two-run homer among his four hits in four at-bats, provided the offense against loser Tim Leary. McReynolds, who also had a sacrifice fly, drove in three of the five runs as New York provided the scoring Manager Davey Johnson had promised for the sixth game.

The four hits tied an NL playoff record accomplished by eight players, the last Tito Landrum of the St. Louis Cardinals in 1985.

The Mets dominated the season series against the Dodgers, winning 10 of 11. But Los Angeles won two of three games at New York to take a 3-2 lead into Game 6 and the warmth of the swaying palm trees.

After the Mets won the first game 3-2 with three runs in the ninth off Hershiser and Jay Howell, Cone wrote in a first-person article for the New York Daily News that Howell looked like a "high school pitcher" and Hershiser was "lucky" to throw eight shutout innings.

The Dodgers, inspired by Cone's prose, chased him after two innings of Game 2, scoring five runs on five hits en route to a 6-3 victory. It was Cone's shortest outing as a starter this year, and his career as a columnist lasted only one more day.

Cone then came back and got the last three outs of the Mets' 8-4 victory in Game 3 on Saturday but still wanted a chance to prove his 20-3 season was not a fluke.

After a shaky first inning, Cone shut the Dodgers out on one hit until two were out in the fifth when reliever Brian Holton singled, Steve Sax walked and Mickey Hatcher singled in a run to make it 4-1. Holton was 0-for-10 this season and 1-for-20 lifetime.

Cone ended the threat by getting Kirk Gibson to pop to third. Cone, who didn't make his first start until May 3, walked three and struck out six. The Dodgers' 3-4-5 hitters were hitless in 16 at-bats.

In each of the first five games the Dodgers took the lead, while during the regular season the Mets scored first in seven of the 11 games.

This time, the Mets came out running — and scoring — against Leary.

Leary, a former Met, was 17-11 during the season but lost three of his last five decisions. He was 0-2 against New York, allowing nine runs and 13 hits in 12 innings.

After fouling off several pitches, leadoff hitter Len Dykstra hit a shot to first base that Hatcher bobbed for an error. Wally Backman, moved from eighth to second in the order, dropped a perfect hit-and-run single in front of a hobbling Gibson in left to send Dykstra to third.

Keith Hernandez struck out and, after Darryl Strawberry walked to load the bases, McReynolds hit a sacrifice fly to right field. McReynolds had 19 game-winning RBI during the season and hit .309 with runners in scoring position.

Strawberry, 9-for-26 in the series, and McReynolds led off the third inning with singles and two outs later Kevin Elster hit an RBI double. Elster was 3-for-4 against Leary with two home runs in two games this season.

Leary walked Strawberry leading off the fifth and McReynolds followed with a home run over 370-foot sign in left field. McReynolds also homered in Game 4.

Gymnastics

NCAA Championships in April.

"Randy was very good — you could always count on him in competition," Robinson said. "Now we have two to fill the spot of one."

Two freshmen from Albuquerque have been added to this year's team. Both come from Gold Cup, a gymnastics club that Robinson said is one of the best in the nation and produces the top gymnasts.

J.J. Sanchez, who finished first in the Class I Junior Nationals in June, and Eric Brown, who finished 10th, began working with the ASU squad in mid-August.

Robinson said one gymnast excels in some events, while the other is better on different apparatuses. Brown should have finished higher than he did at the Junior Nationals, but had a bad day in the gym, Robinson said.

Barclay said he expects Linne, Newman and Diaz-Sandi to help and push each other to perform at their bests. The two freshmen will also benefit the team because their abilities may put them among the top Sun Devil veterans.

Although the season has just begun, the gymnasts have to be able to perform well in their routines, Robinson said.

"This is about the time a guy panics — when he knows he's not ready," he said.
