Free at last! Whales heading for home

By BRUCE BARTLEY
The Associated Press

BARROW, Alaska — Two whales headed for the open sea Wednesday after nearly three weeks of imprisonment in the arctic ice, freed by Soviet and American icebreakers who hacked a path to freedom.

"The whales are loose and in the channel and headed out," said Lt. Mike Haller, a spokesman for the Alaska National Guard.

"They looked good all afternoon," Haller said. "To look at them, you'd have thought they had their bags packed and were ready to head south."

Work to free the migrating California gray whales surged on Tuesday when two Soviet ice-breaking vessels began smashing the ice that kept the pair imprisoned. A third whale, also trapped, is believed to have died last week.

"They're in the main lead, and I can't help but think they'll keep on truckin'. I don't know how much more we can do," said rescue coordinator Ron Morris of the U.S. National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration.

Morris, who followed the whales by helicopter, landed a little after 4 p.m. (6 p.m. Arizona time) to report that the whales had moved from the final man-made breathing hole to the slushy path the Soviet icebreaker Vladimir Arseniev had cut Tuesday night.

Rescue officials were worried that the whales would have trouble breaking air holes through the partly frozen ice, but around 4:30 p.m. rescue workers found the two whales had opened a small hole and were sharing it.

But one of the whales was bleeding enough to stain the water red.

Spectators watched anxiously, waiting for the whales to surface in the new waterway. The assembled crowd cheered joyously when the whales broke the surface.

Scientists and others involved in the rescue may never know the fate of the whales. Rescue officials decided not to put electronic tracking tags on the already stressed animals.

"A lot of people really didn't want to know," said Jim Harvey, a federal marine biologist.

Before their liberation, as the Soviet icebreakers drew near, the whales were "acting in a very excited manner, almost like they (could) sense freedom," said Sgt. Ian Robertson, an Alaska National Guard spokesman.

By midday, the Soviet icebreakers were a quarter-mile from the line of breathing holes being cut by Americans working in the opposite direction, he said.

Later Wednesday, rescuers began to use a gargantuan,

Report recommends mandatory student health insurance

By SHERI JOHNSON
State Press

Arizona university students should be required to have medical insurance before registering for classes, according to recommendations of a report given to the Arizona Cost Efficiency Commission on Wednesday.

The report, prepared by Arthur Young & Company, also recommends that the Student Health Center charge students $5 per visit. Full-time students at the state's three universities are not charged if their visit does not require treatment.

The efficiency commission postponed voting on the recommendations until next month because a quorum was not present.

"If all students are required to demonstrate adequate health coverage, either through coverage under their parents' policies, through employer policies or through student health insurance plans, then the universities would be able to generate revenue" through insurance company reimbursements, the report states.

Since 1985, expenditures for university student health services increased 22 percent at ASU, 21.3 percent at NAU and 12.5 percent at UofA, the report states. The 1987-88 budgeted expenditures for ASU's Student Health is about $2 million.

The efficiency commission, formed last year by former Gov. Evan Mecham and also known as the mini-Grace commission, wanted an audit of student services at the state's three universities and recommendations for cost-reductions.

Monty Roth, ASU's director of Student Health Services, said he was reluctant to comment on the recommendations

Police: Rise in crime may relate to ASU

By MIKE BURGESS
State Press

Serious crime in Tempe during the first three quarters of 1988 was up 3.6 percent over the same period last year, and police said ASU students and the city's rapid growth may be responsible.

According to Tempe Police Department statistics, robbery, assault, theft, auto theft and arson all increased during the first nine-months of 1988, while burglaries and reported rapes dropped. The number of murders was the same as in 1987.

"Generally, the University population is younger than in other cities, and younger people commit more crimes and are the victims of more crimes," Tempe police spokesman Roger Austin said.

Austin also said most of ASU's 43,000-plus students are more transient than other area residents and are less likely to form neighborhood block watches to prevent crimes.

Tempe's booming population is another reason for the increase in crime, Austin said.

Nearly 146,000 people live in Tempe, an increase of about 13,000 from two years ago. The city's population has been predicted to hit 190,000 by the year 2000 even though it's landlocked in a 38.5 square mile-area bordered by Phoenix, Mesa, Scottsdale, Chandler and Guadalupe.

Arson increased the most; it rose 48.5 percent. There were 33 arsons during the first nine months of 1987 while 49 blazes were set during the same time this year.

Tempe fire officials could not provide a reason for the large increase in arsons.

Assault had the next-highest increase, climbing 24.5 percent. There were 345 assaults this year and 277 last year.

world/nation in brief

Dukakis insists there is still time to overtake front-runner

(AP) — Michael Dukakis insisted Wednesday he is making "real progress" and shrugged off a double-digit deficit in new polls. Republican George Bush renewed his charge that Dukakis lacks the necessary experience to govern the nation.

"The pollsters are not going to call the election," Dukakis said in a statement to reporters in Denver. "It's people who are going to be voting."

Dukakis met with Hispanic leaders in tossup Colorado before traveling to Illinois. Bush delivered a speech on economics Wednesday in Detroit before traveling to South Dakota and Montana. Democratic running mate Lloyd Bentsen was stumping in Montana and California.

President Reagan ventured into the Democratic stronghold of Maryland and noted the Democrats' complaints about the negative tone of the campaign.

"Well, I think they're squirming because George has shown America how far outside the mainstream they really are," Reagan said.

Republican vice presidential candidate Dan Quayle, in Florida campaigning for Senate candidate Connie Mack III, talked as though the election were over. He noted the difficulty of a White House that has to deal with an opposition-controlled Congress. "When you're in the minority, the majority controls the gavel. They're able to set the agenda in Congress," Quayle said.

With less than two weeks remaining until Election Day, Dukakis insisted in a late-night television interview Tuesday that there was still time for him to overtake front-runner Bush.

Justice O'Connor released from hospital after undergoing surgery

WASHINGTON (AP) — Supreme Court Justice Sandra Day O'Connor was released Wednesday from Georgetown University Hospital, five days after she underwent surgery for breast cancer.

O'Connor returned to her home in Chevy Chase, Md., and is in good condition, said Supreme Court spokeswoman Toni House.

O'Connor, 58, reportedly underwent a mastectomy in which a breast and the lymph glands under the arm were removed.

Soviet space shuttle scheduled for blastoff on maiden flight

MOSCOW (AP) — The Tass news agency said today the Soviet space shuttle will blast off on its maiden flight Saturday morning, making an unmanned trip into space designed to break the U.S. monopoly on reusable spacecraft.

"The Energia system is to blast off at 6:23 (a.m.) Moscow time on Oct. 29," Tass said in its brief dispatch.

Tass said final checks were being made on systems aboard the orbiter, named the "Buran" (Snowstorm), and the Energia booster rocket that will carry it into orbit.

The shuttle is also being prepared for fueling, Tass said.

Illinois officials question credibility of super collider report

By DENNIS CONRAD

Associated Press

SPRINGFIELD, Ill. — An economist whose study is critical of the proposed superconducting super collider said the report isn't biased, even though he has been a vocal critic of the project since he found out it may be placed near his home.

The report by Craig Jones, released Wednesday by the Chicago-based Heartland Institute, said the federal government's proposed $4.4 billion atom smasher would cost Illinois taxpayers $1.7 billion and would produce as few as 500 permanent jobs.

State officials questioned the report's credibility, saying Jones is a founding member and a director of Citizens Against the Collider Here, a group leading opposition to the project.

"I think the arguments in the paper stand for themselves," Jones said in a telephone interview Tuesday from his home in Campton Township.

Jones said that he never considered the possibility that his ties to CATCH might raise doubts about the report.

He said his initial opposition to the super collider was based on the fact that his Campton Township home is in the area where the project would be built.

Arizona also hopes to land the collider and build it about 35 miles southwest of Phoenix in the Maricopa Mountains. Two families would have to move if the state won the project.

Jones said his research also shows other reasons why Illinois citizens should oppose the project in their state.

"Perhaps the most crucial point to be made is that the $1.7 billion cost to Illinois taxpayers of the SSC project could be spent just as productively by the private sector," Jones said in his report.

Gov. James R. Thompson's chief of staff, Jeffrey Miller, said the report is full of "misinformation and misrepresentations" of state studies.

"The question is, why would they hire a guy with his known attitude going in?" Miller said. "Don't you think it's odd they hired someone in announced opposition to the project to do the study?"

William Denham, research economist for the state Department of Energy and Natural Resources, said Jones has "obviously got a hobby horse he wants to ride."

"The question is whether the data permit him to ride it, and they don't," Denham said.

As an example, Denham said, Jones' economic calculations failed to consider the impact of 700 manufacturing jobs that Denham said would be created to build equipment for the super collider.

Illinois is one of seven states still in the running for the giant research project, which would include a 53-mile, underground ring of magnets that would allow scientists to learn more about the nature of matter.

Thompson and other state leaders have urged federal officials to build the super collider in Chicago's far western suburbs. The state Department of Energy and Natural Resources claimed earlier this year that the project would create 6,000 jobs during construction and an additional 3,600 permanent jobs.

The federal Department of Energy is expected to announce a tentative site for the super collider in November and confirm the selection in January.

Gary Miller, the Heartland Institute's public affairs director, said Jones was hired to do the study because "he was the one economist Heartland knew of that was doing research on the issue."

The Heartland Institute, which describes itself as a non-partisan research center, did not mention Jones' ties to the anti-collider group in the report or in a press release describing its conclusions.

Gary Miller said the study was reviewed by a panel of 50 academic advisers to ensure that it contained "hard facts" and was not tainted by Jones' associations with super collider opponents.

"I guess we just didn't consider it important," he said. "We wanted people to concentrate on his economic background and that he had looked into the facts."

U.S. high schools fail in instruction of English, math

Carolyn Höfig
Columnist

In its two-tone simplicity, the ASU Bulletin of classes for spring 1989 represents some of the most positive advertising for the University.

The multiplicitous course listings fairly ooze with evidence that ASU takes seriously its commitment to educate its graduates for the modern world: a rich variety of classes in several disciplines offer emphasis on Latin American studies or Asian studies; computer science instruction ranges from the most fundamental functions to the highest tech; upper division business courses are taking on an increasingly international flavor.

But among proud peaks of progress there lurk a few depths, and at the lowest points lie the most basic of the basics: math and English.

The ASU bulletin for spring offers 10 sections of English 071, Review of English Fundamentals, and 10 sections of Math 077, Introduction to Algebra. These courses are decidedly positive as far as ASU is concerned, but they certainly raise some questions about education in general.

Take the English review for example. Even if the classes turn out to be intimate groups of 12 and if two of the sections don't fill out, 100 students are still expected to study at the university level, despite their inability to compose a paragraph to meet the standards of freshman composition.

Furthermore, if any of the nearly 2,000 students at the University from non-English speaking countries want to brush up on the finer points of the language, the English department offers a two-semester sequence — ENG 107 and ENG 108 — of English for Foreign Students. The classes are the equivalents of Freshman Composition, ENG 101 and ENG 102, but they are taught specifically for foreign-speakers.

A Hispanic-American student who had trouble with his English could likely obtain permission to take ENG 107 and ENG 108, according to the English department.

So who would take ENG 071? Any student who did not pass the placement exam into freshman-level English. He must pass the remedial course with a "C" or better before he can take ENG 101.

The situation is similar in the math department. For ASU's part, the courses stand out as forward thinking. The classes offer students with faltering English or math skills a last chance to catch up.

But the question is: Why is the last ditch at the university level?

How can a student get through high school — with sufficient success to impress the University — and still suffer a serious deficiency in something as fundamental as English or basic algebra?

In many cases, it is because high school has become a grotesquely specialized affair. Something as dry as the basics are sure to pale in comparison to specialty classes that are more along the lines of students' interests and future plans. Typing is practical; algebra is just theoretical. Who cares about dead poets when we can study accounting/photography/auto shop?

The tenets of algebra just happen to make up the foundations of a bundle of scientific and technical principles.

The dead poets wrote well; learn their tricks, and you probably will, too.

Most of ASU's degree programs seek to postpone intensive specialization for two years or so. High schools could take the hint.

Strict adherence to a comprehensive core-curriculum gives rise to much wailing and gnashing of teeth among high-school students. But they will emerge the better-rounded and better-equipped graduates — and then university students — for it.

ASU's Spring Bulletin boasts a broad spectrum of courses in the College of Education, all aimed at producing the best and the brightest.

Perhaps someday some of them will come back to lecture on the re-reformation of the American school system.

Or on that short-lived academic aberration, remedial basics at the university level.

'Melonhead'

Editor:

We're writing this letter in regards to the comic strip "Melonhead" on Oct. 24. We, being strict vegetarians, found the reference to bacon extremely tasteless and offensive to our lifestyle. In the past few days, Mr. Heckel has successfully offended not only vegetarians, but mutes and engineering students as well.

Actually, we're not vegetarians. We're just your everyday students who enjoy reading the State Press. We just feel that "Melonhead" is neither funny nor visually interesting. Mr. Heckel is probably a very nice person, but we feel that a successful career in comic strip writing is not in his immediate future.

Or, as Lloyd Bentson would say, "Son, you ain't no Gary Larson!"

Thank you.

Hostetler misjudges campus group

Editor:

After reading Darrin Hostetler's column discussing racism and bigotry among campus supporters of Vice President George Bush in your Oct. 25 issue, I find Mr. Hostetler's views misinterpreted.

First, Mr. Hostetler is in no way out of line by comparing Bush supporters to worms. This is guaranteed by the First Amendment to the U.S. Constitution. His justification for this comparison, however, is wrong. His attendance at just one meeting is not proper basis for his opinion. Mr. Hostetler should not judge a book by its cover. If he had attended some of the past meetings, as I have, he would have found the references to "WASP" and "lesbian" as the first instance of "bigoted" talk. If he had attended past meetings — meetings open to all students and faculty — he would have heard some of the local Republican candidates such as Tom Agnos and Rick Romley and other speakers such as Knox Kimberly and Jack Lunden. Keith DeGreen Jr., son of the Republican candidate for the U.S. Congress, has also spoken at the meetings. Every speaker has presented a very professional attitude and has offered some very enlightening information to those in attendance.

Of the meetings I have attended, the instance to which Mr. Hostetler refers is the first of so-called "bigotry." Besides, if a person who does not agree with the feelings of a lesbian is a bigot, then Republicans are bigots for not agreeing with the feelings of Michael Dukakis and Democrats are bigots for not agreeing with the feelings of George Bush. Therefore, only the undecided voters are not bigots.

Second, Mr. Hostetler's depiction of Robert Davis, Youth Director in Arizona for the Bush/Quayle campaign, is written as a personal attack. Hostetler makes it seem wrong for Mr. Davis to dress professionally — "short black hair, a fondness for blue suits and red ties." If this attire is wrong for conducting business, why do so many large corporations such as IBM and General Motors stress this image? After all, Davis works for the state headquarters and should convey a professional appearance. Would Hostetler prefer him to wear a beard, cut-off shorts and walk in bare feet while conducting his business?

Hostetler also looks down upon Davis' position in the state campaign. Yes, Davis was president of the College of Liberal Arts Council, who was appointed to a smaller — compared to Texas and California — state campaign. But, as with all forms of employment, a person must start somewhere. Davis' position, I am sure, is just the beginning of a long career in politics — a career in which Hostetler makes it seem a crime to be enthusiastic and heavily involved. Is it wrong for me to want to graduate from this University's Architecture program as quickly as possible just because I am anxious to start my own work? If so, pardon me for enjoying my work. And I pardon Mr. Hostetler for enjoying his.

The bottom line is Bush supporters are not bigots. If Mr. Hostetler, or anyone for that matter, still feels differently, perhaps they should attend a few more meetings. They may also want to talk with some of the Hispanic members of "Students for Bush."

Economy, Quayle and hungry kids make four more years unbearable

By DARRIN HOSTETLER
State Press

Four more years. Well, it seems likely that the nation is going to choose just that on Nov. 8.

Although Ronald Reagan is concluding his reign as president, the Great Communicator is leaving behind his erstwhile adversary and current left-hand man, Vice President George Bush, to assume the helm.

It's not too late for a sudden change in the political winds — brought on by some kind of damning revelation about Bush or a stunning power surge by Mike Dukakis — that would propel the Massachusetts governor into the White House. But the odds are against it, and the smart money is on a Bush victory and an accompanying continuation of the basic Reagan policies of the past eight years.

Reflecting on the past two or three months, one wonders how Dukakis managed to blow a seemingly invincible double-digit lead in midsummer and how Bush has been able to circumvent all the potholes in his candidacy — the multitude of reasons not to vote for the vice president that seemed to be as obvious to a majority of the electorate as the fireworks that exploded overhead on July 4.

Since then, of course, "peace and prosperity" and the issue of Dukakis' lack of "likeability" have obscured the real meaning of the campaign: the long-term devastating effect another term of a Reagan/Bush/Quayle-type presidency will have on the country. In case the August heat or a Labor Day beer binge made you forget, the reasons to pull the lever for anyone but George Bush are still around:

•Prosperity?

Ronald Reagan kept asking the voters one question in 1980 — "Are you better off today than you were four years ago?" The question applies, with slight modification, to 1988 as well — "Will you be better off four years from now under George Bush?"

Although the economy feels healthy to the average American, the current level of prosperity is illusory and disguises a root-level rot of the system that must be dealt with in the coming four years — regardless of who is president.

All the while touting their administration as the producer of the longest period of growth in history, the team of Reagan/Bush has accumulated more national debt in their eight years in the White House than was accumulated in the previous 200 years. Since January 1981, America has borrowed more than $20,000 for each family of four — a debt that will come due in the near 1990s. Just to pay the interest on 1987's national debt, the United States had to spend all the taxes collected from every citizen west of the Mississippi.

As stunning as those facts are, the average consumer isn't feeling the pinch now. But as we are forced to pay off the principal on the huge loans the Reagan administration has taken out to finance a seven-year buy-now, pay-later recovery, we will be transferring purchasing power to foreign creditors.

'...the current level of prosperity is illusory and disguises a root-level rot of the system.'

The result, as U.S. News and World Report put it, is capitalism without capital — and an inevitable recession with a decline in our global competitiveness.

The Reagan administration has mortgaged our financial future to pay for a huge arms buildup, and George Bush has shown no indication that he plans on breaking with the Reagan philosophy.

This is the issue of the campaign and of our time. As Lloyd Bentsen has said, "If you let me write $200 billion worth of hot checks every year, I could give you an illusion of prosperity, too." But the debt is out there, lurking like a slimy creature from the deep, and the longer we put off dealing with him, the fouler he becomes.

•Iran-contra

Where was George? We really don't know. Bush's involvement in one of the greatest abuses of executive power in the 20th century has never been fully explained, and while that fact alone doesn't make him unqualified to be president, it raises an

By DAVID JORDAN
State Press

The greatest surprise regarding the "Massachusetts Miracle" is that Massachusetts is still standing.

It is no surprise that George Bush is ahead of Michael Dukakis in the polls. The policies of the current administration have unquestionably developed the longest period of sustained growth since World War II and one of the most peaceful periods of time we have seen this century.

The question posed by the 1988 last six years, the Massachusetts fiscal budget increased over 68 percent. Had he done this as president, next year's budget would be $257 billion more than is budgeted for next year.

Massachusetts paid for this spending spree through a strong reliance on taxes. The Bay State did not come by its nickname "Taxachusetts" by chance. Perhaps the most important decision to be made in the 1988 election is whether the country desires to continue to lower tax rates that have helped fuel the current expansion or to return to the tax frenzies of the past.

The impact that he has had on his domestic economy has been dubious as well. From June 1984, shortly after Dukakis regained his position as governor, until January of this year, Massachusetts lost 89,600 manufacturing jobs, a decline of about 13.2 percent. The country as a whole declined only 3.4 percent during that same period. Manufacturing there has been much slower in recovering as well.

Defense — The other half of the "peace and prosperity" equation compels rejection of Dukakis as well. Here, the Reagan Administration has reason to be proud. The past eight years have witnessed democracy spreading through Latin America, an end to the Iran/Iraq war, the Soviet withdrawal from Afghanistan and the first nuclear treaty to actually reduce the number of nuclear weapons in the world.

The foreign policy successes of this administration have been because of a simple truth that Ronald Reagan has put to light: strength works. Michael Dukakis condemned Reagan for placing missiles in Western Europe, yet it was those same missiles that brought on the historic INF treaty.

The situation in the world today compels a rejection of Dukakis' way of thinking. The Soviet Union still possesses 12,000 nuclear warheads. And there is a bipartisan belief in Congress that we must develop a means of increasing the survivability of our land-based missiles. Congress has developed two systems to accomplish this end, the Midgetman missile and the MX missile.

Despite this bipartisan consensus, Michael Dukakis has opposed both plans and has not offered a realistic alternative. Instead, he has endorsed a nuclear freeze and joined the advisory board of Jobs for Peace, which called for $70 billion in defense cuts.

Changing direction on foreign policy now would be a terrible mistake. The advances made in the past few years in Central America, the Middle East, Asia and Europe have largely derived from America's strong presence. To retreat now would be disastrous to the efforts that have brought us to the widespread peace we now enjoy.

Although there are certainly other good reasons to reject Michael Dukakis, such as his positions on crime and abortion, his record on the economy and defense are certainly the most compelling. In this year's election we are asked to choose between the vice president, who is easily one of the most qualified men to run for president this century, and his opponent, whose record is questionable and whose views are clearly out of step with conventional wisdom in America.

'The policies of the current administration have unquestionably developed the longest period of sustained growth since World War II.'

I believe the choice is clear.

GEORGE BUSH AND MICHAEL DUKAKIS SHARE THE 1988 NOBEL PIES FOR SORRY POLITICAL CAMPAIGNING.

Today's Insight page has been divided between State Press columnists Darrin Hostetter and David Jordan, who present opposing views on the choice for the next President of the United States.

In keeping with the negative spirit of the 1988 presidential campaign, however, the authors chose not to extol the virtues of their preferred candidate, but rather to detail why his opponent — George Bush or Michael Dukakis — is not fit to become our nation's chief executive.

interesting question.

Bush said he was "out of the loop" on the little matter of subverting congress and violating federal law, but that just doesn't jibe with his often-repeated boasting reference to his presidential experience: "I'm in on everything. If our policies aren't working, I can't say 'Wait a minute, I'm not to blame.'"

Bush can't have it both ways. What went on in those secret White House meetings you attended, George? Too bad Dukakis didn't ask that question in August, or even in the last debate. The polls might look a little different.

•Dan Quayle

Even Bush's media mogul Roger Ailes calls Quayle "Senator Danny." One could go on for volumes as to why Danny the Draftdodger is the least qualified candidate in memory to sit a gunshot, or plane crash, or heartattack away from the Oval Office. Unfortunately, I can't.

I'm out of space. No time to discuss issues like Quayle's competency. Or Bush's lackluster performance in the only meaningful assignment of his vice presidential tenure: the anti-drug war. Or his anti-terrorism report that was declared "useless" by Justice Department officials. Or his flip-flops on major issues like abortion.

Or the fact that in our period of Reagan/Bush economic growth, one out of six children in the United States still go to bed hungry every night.

But that's OK. We'll have four more years to talk about those things.

What's the hurry?

presidential election is simple: Should the Reagan Revolution proceed? The Republican candidate, George Bush, has been an integral part of the policies of this administration and has pledged to continue this success. His Democratic challenger has instead attempted to cast doubt on the wisdom of following in this course.

Sadly for the Democrats, their standard bearer has seemingly failed in his attempt to convince Americans in the need for change. When one examines how he stands on the issues, the reasons become apparent.

Economy — The "Massachusetts Miracle" is a lie. Dukakis would have us believe that he would be able to better deal with the deficit. As evidence he offers the fact that he has balanced nine budgets in as many years.

This claim, however, is very misleading. For instance, it hides the fact that Dukakis lost his first bid for re-election partially because of his inability to adequately deal with the budget. He was fixing the problem he created.

The "balanced budget" claim also hides the fact that Massachusetts has a balanced budget amendment. Dukakis had no choice but to balance his budget. Despite this amendment, Dukakis was somewhere between $250 million and $500 million short this year in revenue creation. He was late to the Democratic Convention specifically because of the Massachusetts Constitution's requirement to deal with this shortcoming.

The final reason to fear Dukakis' budgetary policies is that his past two terms have been plagued by constant budget increases funded by more taxes. Over the

Officials expect liberal arts classes to close early

By MICHELLE ALLMAN
State Press

Several classes within the College of Liberal Arts are expected to close quickly during the early registration period that starts Monday because ASU does not have enough money to add new classes, a University official said Wednesday.

"The problem is the total budget the University is given to work with," said Marilyn Dantico, an assistant to Paul Hubbard, an assistant vice president for academic affairs. "It is clear that the Legislature is not willing to give us the money we really need."

Although representatives from seven of the nine colleges at ASU said they do not anticipate problems with early registration this semester, assistant deans from the College of Public Programs and the College of Liberal Arts said students may have difficulty getting into classes.

"We'd like to be confident we could definitely offer all the classes needed, but it's always a money issue," said Assistant Liberal Arts Dean Brice Corder. "Once we see what the demand is going to be, we can work with that."

"I have to assume many classes will fill up early," said Dudley Melichar, assistant dean for the College of Public Programs. He said communication classes will probably close the earliest.

In 1987, one-quarter of all ASU students were enrolled in degree programs offered by the College of Liberal Arts. There were nearly 28 students for every professor, compared to the University-wide average of nearly 23 students to every professor.

The College of Nursing has the lowest student-to-faculty ratio, about 7:1.

Like most of the other colleges, liberal arts and public programs did not add classes for the spring semester.

The regents always battle with the state Legislature over the University's budget, said Allan Price, the Board of Regents' associate director for public affairs.

"The University and the regents always submit basic budget requirements, but the legislature doesn't fully fund those," he said. "It's a constant struggle between us and them. The money is there, it's just not funded to all of the places it needs to go."

ASU College	1988-89 budget	Total student credit hours	Money received for each student
Architecture & Environmental Design	$ 2,877,518	10,886	$264.33
Business	14,984,628	64,382	232.75
Education	8,361,364	23,795	351.39
Engineering/Applied Sciences	20,311,939	47,975	423.39
Fine Arts	8,311,606	31,426	264.48
Law	3,700,865	7,136	518.62
Liberal Arts and Sciences	37,677,161	223,169	168.83
Nursing	2,636,834	4,813	547.86
Public Programs	5,148,807	25,715	200.23
Social Work	1,612,017	5,259	306.53

For the 1988-89 academic year, the College of Liberal Arts was budgeted $37,677,161. That meant the college had $168.83 to spend on each student, compared to the $547.86 the College of Nursing had for each student.

Although liberal arts students generally are less expensive to educate than students in other colleges, Dantico said the University can only give the liberal arts college a certain amount of money.

"There is just no place to take the money from," she said. "And we just can't hire people on the money the state gives us."

Ted Ferris, the director of the Joint Legislative Budget Committee for the Legislature, did not return several phone calls.

"The stream of revenue that supports the state budget just isn't adequate," Price said. "They have to decide, 'Do you fund education, police, social programs or what?'"

Loud band leads to arrest of restaurant manager

By MIKE BURGESS

State Press

The manager of a Tempe restaurant was arrested Tuesday night after he reportedly refused to quiet a band that was playing at the Beverly Bar and Grill, 1320 E. Broadway Road, police said.

Police said John Hiss, 45, was cited for disorderly conduct and released on his own recognizance.

Hiss was arrested at about 9:44 p.m. after police received several complaints about a band playing at the restaurant.

Police said officers warned Hiss earlier that if they had to come back to the restaurant again, he would be arrested.

Police also reported the following incidents:

•Someone damaged the north end zone goal post in Sun Devil Stadium sometime between Monday afternoon and Tuesday

Kids will vote for Bush, Dukakis or Guns 'N Roses

By STACY HAYMES
State Press

On Nov. 8, election day, about 7,200 youngsters from East Valley schools will go to the polls and cast their ballots for either George Bush, Michael Dukakis or Guns 'n Roses.

The votes of children in grades three through 12 will not count, of course, especially for Guns 'n Roses because the heavy metal favorite of today's teenagers is not on the official presidential ballot.

But putting the pupils in voting booths should make them interested in elections, according to a coordinator for Kids Voting Inc.

"The program is designed to increase adult voter turnout and instill lifetime voting interest in students," said Cyndi Newburn, the Tempe-area coordinator of the project.

The idea was borne in the back seat of a taxicab on a fishing trip taken by three Mesa businessmen in Costa Rica in February 1987, said Bob Evans, co-chairman of Kids Voting.

"We got well-acquainted with a cab driver and began talking politics," Evans said. "The driver told us how the Costa Rican children are taught the importance of self-government and exercising their rights."

Evans, Charles Wahlheim and Max Jennings — members of the East Valley Partnership, a consortium of local business leaders — brought the idea to Arizona. Voter turnout in the state ranks 46th among the 50 states.

"We found out that Costa Rica has about 90 percent voter turnout, and it's because the children start voting in first grade," said Wahlheim, president of the East Valley Partnership. Jennings, who was executive editor of the Mesa Tribune at the time, has since moved to Ohio.

Valley National Bank put up $20,000 for the project with the East Valley Partnership in charge of organization.

The children will vote on mock ballots printed on scantron sheets. Like their older counterparts, the youngsters will vote for school board judges, legislators, congressmen and presidential candidates, said Donna Green, the program coordinator.

In order to participate in the mock voting, the students' parents had to be registered voters. When they cast their ballot, the pupils in grades three through eight will have to be accompanied by a parent or guardian.

Students in 41 schools in the East Valley have been studying candidates and political issues so they can make informed votes on election day, Green said.

The project has garnered plenty of attention. The U.S. Senate passed a resolution this summer to promote the project in other parts of the nation and will be watching its outcome. An article about the project is scheduled to appear in Newsweek magazine soon.

Project organizers said they will promote the idea throughout the United States after the election.

"It would be a giant step forward if the (mock) election would expand," Evans said.

ASU geography professor specializes in tropical storms

By KELLY PEARCE
State Press

While tropical storms brew and spew in other parts of the world, an ASU weather expert sits in sunny Tempe and analyzes their development.

"It seems weird for a person at ASU to be involved in hurricanes," said Randy Cerveny, an ASU geography professor who specializes in tropical storms, including recent hurricanes Gilbert and Joan as well as current Typhoon Ruby.

Hurricane Gilbert, the most powerful storm to hit the Western Hemisphere this century, left more than 500,000 Jamaicans homeless and destroyed $500 million worth of property.

Earlier this week, Hurricane Joan ripped through Nicaragua and killed at least 50 people. The hurricane turned into Tropical Storm Miriam when it crossed into the Pacific Ocean.

Currently, Typhoon Ruby is raging with 140 mph winds, leaving at least 100,000 Filipinos homeless as of Wednesday.

Cerveny, who is involved in ASU's four-year-old hurricane program, has been working to create a model of a hurricane on a computer. ASU's new supercomputer will aid the mathematical approach to the model.

"We will be able to do what used to take one or two weeks in a half hour," Cerveny said.

Cerveny said hurricanes have been occurring since the beginning of time, but the extensive news coverage of recent tropical storms makes it appear otherwise. Increasing populations in areas susceptible to hurricanes compels the media to report damages and deaths, he added.

Some have suggested that the world is experiencing an increase in hurricane frequency. Cerveny said that the greenhouse effect, which is raising the earth's temperature because of increasing carbon dioxide levels in the air, may be a reason for the recent storms.

"Hurricanes occur because of warm water," he said. "If the water is 80 degrees or lower there won't be a hurricane."

Cerveny added that the only difference between a hurricane and a typhoon "is the name." A hurricane becomes a typhoon when it enters the West Pacific Ocean.

Melvin Marcus, an ASU geography professor, knows first hand what a tropical storm involves. While serving in the U.S. Air Force in 1954 in Japan, he lived through two typhoons.

"The reality of the eye of the storm was what struck me," he said. "I couldn't stand up. The winds went from 125 mph to 0 mph. It was a stunning experience.

"It lasted 15 minutes, and you didn't know what would happen next. It made a believer of me."

Marcus was outside of an airbase when one of the typhoons sped onto the land. He said the storm "tore the air base apart."

Cerveny said the hurricane season in the Northern Hemisphere lasts from May to November, with September being the most active month.

"This is why weather forecasters in Miami were so intrigued with (Hurricane) Joan, because it occurred so late in the season," he said.

These weather disturbances acquire their titles from a list of names, Cerveny said. There are twelve different lists with names ranging from "A" to "Z". Each year, the lists rotate between the geographical areas of the world and are repeatedly used.

Until several years ago, every name was feminine, but "it was bad to give the appearance that all hurricanes are feminine," Cerveny said.

Equal rights groups insisted that masculine names be used as well, he added.

ASU graduate running for corporation commission

By CHUCK HADD
Contributing Writer

Her receptionist is a phone answering machine. Her office is a desk in the corner of the living room. The sign above the desk says, "Some leaders were born women."

"Having a man who stands besides you helps a lot, too," said Kate Lehman, a 1987 ASU graduate who is running for a seat on the Arizona Corporation Commission. Lehman's husband, Ted, and their five children stand by her in her first bid for office.

Lehman was a senator for the College of Public Programs while she worked on her degrees in broadcasting and political science.

Now running for state-wide office, Lehman, a Democrat, faces incumbent commissioner Dale Morgan, a Republican, in the Nov. 8 general election. Libertarian candidate Rick Fowlkes also will be on the ballot.

Morgan said that having three Democrats on the commission would not be a good idea.

"I don't think having a single party on the board is in the best public interest," Morgan said.

But Lehman dismissed Morgan's suggestion and said her political science degree, which focused on regulatory politics, makes her qualified for the job.

The Corporation Commission, an independent state agency, regulates utility companies, including phone and railroad firms. The commission can investigate the business practices of any corporation conducting business in Arizona.

The commission's three members serve staggered, 6-year terms and are paid $50,000 a year.

Lehman said she spends 90 to 100 hours a week campaigning. In the last six months, she has driven more than 26,000 miles criss-crossing the state, she added.

"Of course the campaign is a strain on the family," Lehman said. "My husband has to do the added housework. I miss my kids' activities."

"But it's a strain on the family regardless of which spouse in a household runs for public office."

The two Democrats already on the commission, Chief Commissioner Renz Jennings and commissioner Marcia Weeks, have endorsed Lehman's candidacy.

"Kate is smart and she's well-read on regulations," Jennings said. "If she's elected, there will be a consumer-oriented continuity in the commission."

A pressing issue before the commission is whether it should react only to utilities' requests for rate hikes or if it should create long-term policy, Lehman said.

Utilities in Arizona have little competition and the laws of supply and demand do not work, she said.

"With a great deal of supply, prices should go down. But in Arizona, we have an excess of capacity and yet prices still go up because prices and profits are tied to the amount of investment a utility makes."

"There's no real incentive for utilities to save money or explore ways to conserve energy. This is what my campaign is about."

Ribbon distribution promotes drug-free awareness

By TERESA OWEN
State Press

Associated Students joined a nationwide effort Wednesday by distributing red ribbons that exalt a drug-free society.

This is the first time ASU has participated in Red Ribbon Week, which encourages drug awareness and education in honor of Enrique Camarena, a federal drug enforcement agent who was murdered by drug traffickers in 1985.

The ribbons said, "The choice for me, DRUG FREE!" They also had a picture of a Phoenix Cardinals football helmet.

"It's been extremely successful," said Alex Romero, president of Arizonans for Drug-Free Youth, which is sponsoring the Arizona campaign. Romero is an instrument designer in the College of Engineering.

"The most important thing is that (students are) beginning to get the message," he said. "This campaign is bringing up the awareness. It all starts with individual people; people have become the agents of change."

Vince Micone, Associated Students campus affairs vice president, said ASASU volunteers in front of the MU gave away about 200 ribbons an hour.

Volunteers had distributed about 5,000 ribbons by mid-afternoon and left about 3,000 ribbons at residence halls, he said.

"We have gotten a lot of very positive responses," he said. "Red Ribbon Week is beneficial to students because it is heightening awareness about the drug abuse problem that exists."

Micone said ASASU will more than likely participate in the Red Ribbon Week campaign next year.

Dan Devine, ASU's director of community education and substance abuse, said Red Ribbon Week would have been more effective if more students lived on campus.

"When you have a lot of students who live off campus, they lose a lot of closeness of all University activities," he said.

Possible ASU tuition hike exposes student gripes

By ROBIE KAKONGE
State Press

The possibility of a tuition hike at ASU has brought groans from students, but one University administrator says the increase could improve the quality of education.

If the Board of Regents approves preliminary figures calculated by its staff, tuition may increase by up to $156 for in-state students and by $938 for non-residents for the 1989-90 academic year.

Tim Ault, an ASU budget systems analyst, said the tuition hike will not put a big dent in enrollment.

"Sure we are going to lose some people but in general, tuition increases tend to improve the chances of improving the quality of education. We will also attract other students," Ault said.

Ault said students usually do not drop-out when there is a tuition increase. Instead, they tend to adjust their credit hours or find other ways to adapt to the increase.

"There might be a lot more people part-timing it, or even taking up summer school or combining University and community college education," he said.

Ault also said the regents plan to discuss a possible increase of financial aid, tuition wavers and other educational support programs to "reduce the blow from the increase."

"Compared to most major universities in the same ball park as we are, ASU is relatively inexpensive," he said. "We've always been a pretty good bargain."

The regents' policy calls for a yearly tuition increase of .5 percent over a period of five years. In-state students eventually will pay 22.5 percent of their total education costs and out-of-state students 83 percent.

The regents' resources committee will discuss tuition hikes at its Nov. 4 meeting at ASU, then vote Nov. 10 on a recommendation for the regents. The regents will make a final decision Dec. 2 in Flagstaff.

In- and out-of-state students said increases seem to be "inevitable," and may force them to leave ASU.

In-state student Tom Hughes, a senior sociology major, said, "If they up the price, it is going to be a lot harder to come up with the funds, and I think the talk about using the money to improve education is just an excuse."

Out-of-state student sophomore Suzanne Welsh, a sociology major, said the regents' plan is too much.

"If they go ahead with it I don't know if I will be back," she said.

Out-of-state freshman Monica Morganthal, a journalism major, said although she considers ASU to be relatively inexpensive, continued tuition hikes will eventually put students in financial difficulty.

"I am lucky that my parents are paying my way because if they were not, I might have had to drop out," Morganthal said.

In-state senior Terri Hoffman, a political science major, said the increase is inevitable.

"I fought and lobbied against the tuition increase a few years ago when I worked with ASASU (as state relations director) so the proposed increase doesn't surprise me," she said. "But the regents will have to provide more financial student assistance."

Crime

During the first nine months of 1988, police also reported 559 auto thefts, up 16.9 percent and 144 robberies, up 11.6 percent.

Police said the increase in assaults also can be attributed to the city's youthful population. The median age of a Tempe resident is 26.9 years.

Austin said most assaults occur at night or during the weekend.

He said auto thefts in the city have steadily increased with the population because with more residents come more cars.

The vehicles most often stolen in Tempe are customized pickups, Austin said. Most stolen vehicles are taken to "chop shops" in Mexico where the vehicles are torn apart and the parts are sold. The primary cause of vehicle theft is keys left in the ignition, he said.

Austin said police believe the increase in robberies can be attributed to drug abuse. Drug users will commit robberies for quick cash to support their habits.

Many robberies often occur at the same businesses, Austin said. Some robberies take place near the city's borders because fleeing into another city gives a robber a sense of security.

But Circle K and 7-11 convenience stores are being robbed less because the businesses are using cameras and placing height charts on doors. The stores also keep small amounts of cash in store registers.

Although the number of reported rapes dropped 33.9 percent, police do not believe the figures are accurate because many rapes go unreported.

There were 37 rapes reported during the first nine months of 1988 while 56 were reported last year.

because he had not seen them. But he said the University has explored both issues.

The student health services departments from the state's universities last year studied the need for mandatory health insurance, but Roth said there weren't any overwhelming conclusions.

"We were concerned, not from the revenue-generating side, but that a student without health insurance might have a medical bill that they couldn't pay for that would cause them to drop out of school," he said.

Cheryl Stecher, an Arthur Young representative, presented the company's recommendations to the commission.

"We're recommending as a revenue enhancing mechanism that the universities look at charging a nominal $5 per visit fee, which would generate . . . well over $800,000 in revenue, which could be used to offset the cost of the student health services," she said.

Roth said he is concerned that some students may not be able to afford a $5 per-visit fee.

"It would not create a financial barrier to some students, but it may be a barrier to some," he said, adding that ASU's health center's mission is to provide care so the health problems of students will not impair their education.

While full-time students at all three universities are not charged for a clinical visit, part-time ASU students are charged $5.00. NAU charges part-time students $12. There are no charges for part-time UofA students.

"Certainly student health is one of the key things that parents look at when they come on campus," Stechter told the commission. "There's a lot of data that shows that student services are very important to the whole university environment as far as the retention of students and the ability to attract them to the university.

"Looking at the increases in the amount of state appropriation and the increases in the budget dollars that are going to the student health center, it is clear that there needs to be some cost containment or some mechanisms to enhance revenue," she said.

The health center is financed by the state, tuition and patient charges for laboratory work and x-rays.

tractor-like device propelled by pontoon augers to clear the ice cut by the icebreaker, Robertson said.

Morris said the weather was "positively balmy" — 5 degrees Fahrenheit, Robertson said.

The breakthrough in the effort to free the came after more than a week of delays and disappointments.

"We feel very good about it," said Rear Adm. Sigmund Petersen of NOAA. "The cooperation has just been fantastic. The Soviets came in here with a very positive attitude and went to work immediately."

On Tuesday, the Americans moved the huge mammals around a shoal that had stymied progress for three days. Eskimos with chain saws cut a detour in the ice so the whales could swim around the shallow water they had refused to pass.

When the Eskimos started cutting the air holes, the whales "followed the water right to the end. They like that deeper water," Petersen said.

Working in the other direction, the Soviet icebreakers reduced to rubble the ice ridge that stood between the whales and open water. The ridge, formed by colliding ice masses, was a jumble of ice blocks as big as small houses.

The icebreakers — the Admiral Makarov and the Vladimir Arseniev — flew the flags of the Soviet Union and the United States as a sign of cooperation between the nations.

The ships had been returning to their home port of Vladivostok when they were diverted, said Alexander Patzevich, chief officer and second in command.

Although the Admiral Makarov has been at sea for six months and "everybody is tired," none of the crew of 78 complained about the diversion, Patzevich said.

"It's very nice to work together," he said of the U.S.-Soviet effort.

First Mate Vladimir Moroz, who said he was the ship's political officer, said the Soviets were happy to help. He said he spoke to a Moscow newspaper by telephone.

"They're receiving many, many calls asking about the whales," he said. "Our country is watching like everyone else. We love animals, just as everyone."

Crime

Austin said the number of rapes in 1988 may be down because the city set a rape record in 1987. He said rapes have increased because of increased reporting by victims and education programs.

Austin said the most surprising decrease was burglary, which fell 5.6 percent. Police reported 1,218 burglaries this year and 1,290 last year.

He said most residential burglaries occur during weekdays when people are at work. Burglaries of businesses mostly occur at night.

The department has about 230 uniformed officers, making for 1.5 officers for every 1,000 residents. Phoenix has two police officers per 1,000 residents.

The offenses that make up the city's crime index are: murder, rape, robbery, assault, burglary, larceny, auto theft and arson. The index only consists of crimes reported to police.

Police voluntarily report the crimes to the FBI for their annual Uniform Crime Report.

Ducks shoot for first win over Devils Saturday

By GARY JACKSON
State Press

Twelfth-year Oregon head coach Rich Brooks said he and the No. 20 Ducks are optimistically looking forward to postseason action.

But they are not as confident about their chances of beating ASU Saturday in Eugene.

Since joining the Pac-10 in 1978, ASU has beaten Oregon six consecutive times, including a 37-13 victory last season. The Sun Devils lead the overall series, 8-0, with two wins while a member of the Western Athletic Conference.

"The mood of our team is one of apprehension, I'm sure — we've never beaten Arizona State," Brooks said. "In fact we haven't even played them very well. They've handled us easily almost every time we've played them."

"It's a big game for us, obviously, to stay in the conference race."

The Ducks (6-1, 3-1 Pac) hope to stay in Rose Bowl contention by extending their six-game winning streak in Autzen Stadium with a win over ASU (4-3, 1-2).

Oregon is one game behind league leaders No. 1 UCLA (7-0, 4-0) and No. 3 USC (6-0, 4-0) after losing, 42-14, to the Trojans earlier in the season.

Last season, Oregon quarterbacks Bill Musgrave and Pete Nelson were injured during a 20-6 loss to California. The next week the Ducks played in Tempe, where they were beaten, 37-13, by ASU.

"We started Tony Hargain, a wide receiver, at quarterback," Brooks said. "We brought Nelson off the bench — he was playing hurt and left the game in the fourth quarter with a back injury."

"It's pretty hard to function in this league without healthy quarterbacks."

Oregon had won four of its first five games, including victories over Washington and Southern Cal. But the ASU loss was the Ducks' fourth consecutive loss to Pac-10 teams on their way to a 6-5 season.

Oregon has rebounded from last year's performance and is anticipating a bowl berth this season, Brooks said.

"The players were young and immature last year," Brooks said. "They learned from our mid-season slump last year and knew they didn't want to repeat that."

'The mood of our team is one of apprehension, I'm sure — we've never beaten Arizona State. They've handled us easily almost every time we've played them.'

ASU, Tempe rugby clubs to scrimmage in 'tune-up'

By CHRIS NACKINO
State Press

The ASU rugby club will engage in a competitive, yet friendly 15s match this Saturday against the top-ranked Tempe Old Devils at Tempe Diablo Stadium.

The match, which begins at 1 p.m., should help the team prepare for the Michelob Continental Classic in Tucson Nov. 4-6, ASU club president Luis Castano said.

"This will help us get in gear for Tucson," Castano said. "Although we won't be competing against Tempe there, it should be a great warm up to get us ready."

Competing in a very difficult draw last year at the Tucson tournament, ASU defeated national runner-up Air Force Academy and lost a hard-fought match to national champion San Diego State.

The Old Devils, Arizona Rugby Football

Union champions for seven of the past eight years, have ties to the ASU program. Formed by a nucleus of ASU rugby players, Tempe currently has ASU alumni and students on its roster.

The ASU ruggers will have a chance to face tougher competition than they have faced this season during the Old Devil game, Castano said.

In addition to dominating Arizona rugby, Tempe finished sixth on the powerful West Coast in last season's Pacific Coast Rugby Football Union Championships. This season Tempe has won the Flagstaff 10s tournament and was a semifinalist in the High Desert Classic earlier this month in Albuquerque, N.M.

Tempe has players playing on select, or all-star teams at levels ranging from

Complicated Pac-10 race clears up as season winds down

Dave Hodges
Sports Editor

Only four games remain for most Pac-10 teams, and this week's schedule may begin to unravel the complicated pieces of the bowl puzzle.

There really are no games involving two upper-division teams Saturday, with most of the action centered in the Northwest as the two Oregon schools and Washington play at home.

The most interesting game of the weekend is Arizona State at Oregon.

The 20th-ranked Ducks are coming off their second consecutive victory over rival Washington — a feat that had not occurred since 1969-70.

The Ducks really are the surprise of the conference with a current record of 6-1, 3-1 in the Pac-10 — their best start since 1964. Their lone loss was to Southern Cal, 42-14, at the Los Angeles Coliseum.

Oregon virtually can wrap up its first bowl berth since 1963 with a victory over the Sun Devils — a team they have never defeated (0-8).

The Ducks always seem to have bad luck against the Devils. Last season, in a 37-17 loss at Sun Devil Stadium, Oregon played without starting quarterback Bill Musgrave, who missed the game with a bruised thigh.

This season, the Ducks may be without Derek Loville, the nation's 11th-leading rusher. Loville is listed as doubtful, due to a pinched nerve in his neck.

ASU (4-3, 1-2) played its most complete game of the year Saturday in a 31-28 victory over then-20th-ranked Washington State.

Quarterback Paul Justin, making just his second career start last week, was named Pac-10 Offensive Player of the Week as he threw for 321 yards against Washington State.

Justin perked up an offense that was held to three points in losses to Washington (10-0) and Stanford (24-3). Was it a fluke? Can the Devils be on the rebound?

Realistically, the Devils have a shot at winning three of their last four games, excluding Southern Cal. With two more upsets against UO and Arizona, the Devils would be 7-4 and could still receive a bowl berth, believe it or not.

But a win over the Ducks is a must . . . Oregon, 24-21.

There were some strange games last week, contributing to last week's record of 2-2-1 (.500) and a season record of 17-5-1 (.761).

This week's ABC television broadcast features top-ranked UCLA and Washington State (1-3, 4-3).

The Bruins (7-0, 4-0) continue to roll along, defeating Arizona, 24-3, Saturday at Tucson. UCLA leads the series with the Cougars, 29-7-1, and is 17-2-1 in the last 20 games.

UCLA quarterback Troy Aikman continues to impress in the battle for the Heisman Trophy, but still trails WSU's Timm Rosenbach in most categories. Rosenbach leads the nation with a 173.9 rating (although ASU handled him quite well last week), and Aikman is second with a 170.8 rating.

Be prepared for an air raid, but the Bruins should win the battle . . . UCLA, 49-21.

Third-ranked Southern Cal travels to Oregon State after a week off to recover from its close call against Washington.

The Trojans (6-0, 4-0) have won the last 16 games against the Beavers, and this one should not be any different.

USC ranks first in the conference in total defense and third in total offense, while OSU ranks ninth on defense and fifth on offense.

Yawn . . . Southern Cal, 38-14.

Arizona plays host to California in a game that was expected to be a little more important than it actually is.

California and Arizona both were expected to be much improved teams, and both sport 4-3 records, although the Wildcats appear to be the better team and have played tougher opponents.

UofA has an absolutely murderous schedule and already has played Oklahoma, UCLA and USC. But the remaining games for the Wildcats are also tough, with games at Washington and home against Oregon and ASU.

It will be tough for the Cats to get a bowl bid, but a winning record still is likely . . . Arizona, 31-14.

Stanford visits Washington in another battle of mediocre teams.

The Cardinal (3-3-1, 1-2-1) only managed a 20-20 tie against Oregon State after whipping ASU. Washington lost to Oregon for the second consecutive year.

Something has to give . . . Washington, 33-10.

statewide to international.

"It is foolish not to play them," Nelon said. "The only way rugby players can improve is through high levels of competition.

"They called to ask for a game, and I jumped at the chance. I'm not going to the game with false illusions — if I felt the game was going to abuse the guys, I wouldn't do it. Tempe plays good rugby."

Because of the heat and the necessity of playing more than 15 players, the match will be played in three, thirty-minute periods. ASU will also have a chance during the period breaks to discuss strategy and improve on weaknesses.

"We will have the opportunity to stop and talk about the mistakes," Castano said. "It will be like a sophisticated practice, and it should help us to improve."

At first glance, the game could be seen as a mismatch. Tempe's forwards are larger, stronger, more experienced and have played together longer than ASU's. Rugby games usually swing on forward play because the forwards, like football linemen and linebackers, must win the ball in order for the backs to be able to attack.

"I think it's obvious that a club side should have an edge on a college team because they've been playing together a lot more and have more experience," ASU coach Jim Nelon said. "Typically, the best clubs act as a magnet to draw the best athletes, which causes them to have the better teams."

Castano is more optimistic.

"It is exciting because we have nothing to lose, but everything to win," Castano said. "If we beat them then it will show we're a great team, but if we lose it will still be a great workout."

"I feel like this will be a great experience. I have a feeling that we are going to give them a harder time than they think."

is better and the talent is better. We have better players than I have had in the past."

Second-year senior outside linebacker Mike Blakey suffered a head injury during the Stanford game and will be out for the season. Junior inside linebacker Bjarne Jensen replaced Blakey, but he was hurt the next week during the USC game.

"Those two injuries in particular really hurt our linebacking corps," Brooks said. "We need to stay healthy at that position to keep up our good defensive play."

Although Musgrave ranked 13th in the nation last season, his performance has been hampered because of ligament damage to his right ankle.

"Musgrave was playing very well prior to his injury in the Stanford game," Brooks said. "He came back for limited duty two weeks ago against Idaho State. He threw the ball fair. He did not throw it particularly well against Washington."

Musgrave completed 10 of 25 for 116 yards in OU's 17-14 victory last week against Washington, driving the team 55 yards in the final minutes for the game-winning touchdown.

Oregon lost two more players to injuries against the Huskies.

Senior defensive end Joe Taylor sustained ligament damage to his left knee in the game and will be out for an indefinite period of time. Junior tailback Derek Loville, the No. 11 rusher in the nation, was also hurt and is not expected to play this week.

"Derek Loville looks doubtful with a pinched nerve in his neck that affects his shoulder a little bit," Brooks said. "Loville has rushed for over 800 yards. If he's not able to play it's obviously going to have a major impact."

In his third year as the head coach, Brooks directed the Ducks to a 6-5 finish, their first winning season in almost a decade. And now Oregon is in the running for a bowl bid.

"At this point in the first year I took over we were one-and-six on our way to a two-and-nine season," Brooks said. "I think we've made some progress."

Brooks has led the Ducks to four six-win finishes, and will most likely surpass that mark this year. Oregon has not won seven games in one season since 1964 when the Ducks were 7-2-1.

Although in past years most teams could often count on a victory over the Ducks, this season Oregon is a threat in the Pac-10.

"It's a long hard process — you've got to get players, you've got to build confidence," Brooks said. "It's not an overnight process when you inherit a program that has been losing for a long, long time."

"People get used to losing and it's hard to change that."

Lomax says he can play; Mitchell might not be so lucky

PHOENIX (AP) — Phoenix Cardinals quarterback Neil Lomax declared himself ready to play in Sunday's game at Dallas but running back Stump Mitchell said his ankle injury may sideline him for another week.

Lomax, who has directed the NFL's No. 1 offense, had to leave last Sunday's 29-21 loss to Cleveland after suffering a contusion on his arthritic left hip.

On Monday, Lomax was walking with a noticeable limp. But after having Tuesday off to rehabilitate himself, he was running the offense with no apparent problems in Wednesday's practice.

"I feel good. The hip's feeling better," Lomax told reporters. "I think I'll be able to play."

"I thought he moved fine. I really did," Cardinals coach Gene Stallings said. "It looks to me like he'll be able to play Sunday."

Mitchell, the team's leading rusher this season and second all-time leading ground gainer, sat out last week's game with a badly sprained right ankle suffered in the 33-17 loss Sept. 25 at Washington.

He was dressed for practice Wednesday, but did carry the ball in drills.

"The ankle is not coming along as good as I thought," Mitchell said. "I still can't cut on it. Right now, I can't play."

"It's hard to tell about those ankles," Stallings said. "Ankle injuries are as hard a thing to get over as anything. I'm not going to play Stump until he's ready."

Stallings said rookie Tony Jordan will start again Sunday if Mitchell can't play.

Cardinals' Noga, brother receive death threats

HONOLULU (AP) — The lives of two brothers who play for the National Football League have been threatened by people associated with organized crime in Hawaii, the FBI said.

The threat against Niko Noga, 26, a linebacker with the Phoenix Cardinals, and Al Noga, 23, a rookie defensive end for the Minnesota Vikings, came from friends of some men the brothers beat up during a fight at a Honolulu discotheque in July, said Eugene Glenn, special agent in charge of the FBI office here.

"The cast of characters makes this serious," Glenn said Tuesday. "These are physically powerful people. I would say we're talking about an organized criminal activity, although not in the same vein as an East Coast 'family.'"

"There appear to have been previous encounters between the Nogas and the other group," Glenn said. "So the July brawl was probably a culmination of hard feelings and the death threat an escalation."

The threat was learned "on the street" and came to the FBI's attention in September from "a person who has been reliable in the past," Glenn said.

"We certainly consider the information worthy of concern," Glenn said. "But it wasn't something that had a time frame to it. That is, the threat wasn't going to be carried out in 24 hours."

"There wasn't quite the urgency because the Nogas are not in Hawaii (now)," Glenn said. "So it wasn't like the Cuban missile crisis."

The FBI notified its agents in Minneapolis and Phoenix, who interviewed the brothers who gained fame while playing for the University of Hawaii.

Larry Wilson, general manager of the Cardinals, said the team has taken "extra security precautions and they are ongoing."

Wilson would not comment on the situation Wednesday. Neither would Cardinals coach Gene Stallings or Edward Gooderham, an NFL security representative who was at Wednesday afternoon's practice at Phoenix's East High School.

"I can't make a comment about anything," Gooderham said.

Niko Noga said Wednesday, "The FBI, they got to do what they got to do. I'll do what I got to do."

"If they come try to put my lights out," Al Noga said, "I hope they try to do it with no weapons. Why do they have to shoot unless it's because they can't handle us with fists?"

"The only thing I'm afraid of is if I wake up some morning and I have no arms or legs," Niko Noga said. "I heard two guys are after us. It's real strange because I respect those people who are supposedly after us. I just hope they don't mess with my family. But I really don't expect anything to come of all this."

Glenn said efforts are underway to resolve the conflict before it escalates out of control.

"There have been some contacts made to try to resolve the whole matter," Glenn said. "This is a fight that evolved into a feud and it needs to be brought back into perspective."

Dodgers receive presidential treatment at White House

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan saluted the world champion Los Angeles Dodgers at the White House on Wednesday, saying it was their sheer "guts and determination" that confounded expert predictions of an also-ran season.

"Let's remember that before this season started, few baseball writers expected the Dodgers even to win their division," Reagan told the Dodgers in a Rose Garden ceremony.

"Yet, you fellows took the National League West, tripped up the powerhouse New York Mets in the League Championship Series and then wrapped up the title by beating the Oakland Athletics in five games," said the president, flanked by his wife, Nancy, and Dodgers manager Tommy Lasorda.

Reagan, a native of Dixon, Ill., who moved to California to begin an acting career long before the Dodgers arrived there in 1958, joked about how he had found it difficult to remain impartial.

"In my job, you're president of all the people and you're not supposed to play favorites," he said. "But I must confess that after the World Series began, I just knew the winner was going to be a team from California."

The Dodgers, 73-89 in 1987, moved into first place on May 25 and stayed there the rest of the season despite losing pitcher Fernando Valenzuela to a shoulder injury. In the playoffs, Kirk Gibson was hobbled by knee and thigh problems.

Los Angeles Dodgers beat the Mets 4-3 in the playoffs and then took four of five from the A's, winners of a major-league leading 104 games.

While wives of the Dodgers and several other invited guests awaited the manager and players, laughter could be heard from the Oval Office, where Reagan was meeting privately with Lasorda and his players.

Reagan didn't say what went on inside, but he did poke fun at Lasorda, known for his fondness for Italian cuisine.

"Tommy's already volunteered to cook lasagna, and I want to give him enough time in the kitchen," the president said. "You never want to rush an artist, you know."

At one point during the meeting, the White House said later, teammates prodded second baseman Steve Sax to do his well-practiced imitation of Reagan. After initially declining, Sax did a Reagan shoulder-shrug, brought a quizzical look upon his face and said, "Well, it's a pleasure."

Pitcher Orel Hershiser, the first player to win the Most Valuable Player award in both the playoffs and the World Series in the same year, said he thought the players were overwhelmed by the White House setting.

"Our ballclub was never so silent," he said. "I mean, there was a reverence there, and everybody was standing there just listening to every remark out of Mrs. Reagan and the president's mouth. And . . . I know how exuberant they are and how gung-ho they are in the locker room. They never shut up."

During the ceremony, Reagan singled out Gibson's dramatic, game-ending home run in the first game of the World Series, which gave the Dodgers a come-from-behind 5-4 victory over the Athletics. Gibson, who was able to appear only that one time during the series, was not present at Wednesday's ceremony.

Forgetful AP football voter fesses up to balloting mistake

EDITOR'S NOTE — One of the 60 voting members of The Associated Press' football poll forgot to list Florida State last week, setting off an outcry in the Sunshine State. After remaining anonymous for more than a week, Ronnie Christ of the Harrisburg (Pa.) Patriot decides to fess up.

By RONNIE CHRIST
Harrisburg (Pa.) Patriot

OK, all you Florida State people. I got the message. I know how much those national football polls mean to the folks around Tallahassee. Probably a lot more than any of those presidential polls. I mean, those folks get serious about their football.

I read all about it in the personal and confidential letter Wayne Hogan, the university's sports information director, sent all 60 voting members in The Associated Press poll.

I got the message in the copy of the Fort Lauderdale Sun-Sentinel that was enclosed with the letter. "Seminole players, fans mad at poll's forgetfulness," screamed the banner headlines. The paper even printed the poll the way it should have been alongside the actual poll.

"I don't think we've been this upset since we lost to Miami 26-25 in 1987," tackle Joey Ionata said. "I guess no one gives us any respect."

Florida State made sure the voters got the message by running up the score in a 66-3 rout of poor Louisiana Tech.

"I hope the pollsters noticed," FSU safety Stan Shiver said. "We felt like we lost respect."

"We had to beat somebody like Nebraska does," cornerback Deion Sanders said. "We had to get attention."

All of this not because Florida State was kept from being No. 1, but because it slipped from No. 5 to No. 7.

All of this because Herschel Nissenson, college football editor of the AP, wouldn't reveal the name of the dastardly voter so he could be tarred and feathered.

Well, Florida State, if it makes you feel any better, I confess. I'm the voter who forgot to list the Seminoles on my ballot a week ago.

In attempting to decide where to rank Miami after its loss to Notre Dame, I left Florida State off the ballot.

I've got you covered this week, but you might not like that vote any better than you did the previous one. That 66-3 romp impressed me so much I voted Florida State No. 7, the same place I would have put the Seminoles a week ago.

It looks like some other voters weren't too impressed, either.

Florida State is sixth in this week's poll, a notch down from where they should have been last week.

In his letter to the 60 voters, Hogan said there is too much at stake to let this slide without correction.

If Hogan thinks he has problems with the polls, consider the case of West Virginia. The Mountaineers buried Boston College 59-19 last week. That made West Virginia 7-0 going into Saturday's clash with Penn State.

What did West Virginia get for its victory? The Mountaineers dropped from sixth place to seventh.

Does that mean the next voice we hear will be from Morgantown? Will Coach Don Nehlen complain about his unbeaten team being ranked behind three teams that have lost a game?

"I don't plan on sending out any letters to anybody," said Shelly Poe, West Virginia's sports information director. "We did have some concern that the Florida State letter might have an adverse effect on us."

ARTIST WORKSHOP with Wilfred Stedman, MD. Anatomy for the Artist, December 5-9, 1988. It is a thoroughly modern approach to learning the essentials of classic anatomy. A fascinating experience for the beginning artist as well as the experienced professional. Special attention is given to details of the anatomy, of the eye, ear, head, and neck, as well as the problem areas such as the back of the shoulder, spine, and hand. Balance, proportion, age changes, and structural differences between the sexes are included. Sketches may be in pencil, pastel, acrylics, or plasticine clay, according to the student's preference. Doctor Stedman is a gifted teacher as well as a full-time figure sculptor. His knowledge of anatomy is the result of his medical studies combined with years of experience as an orthopedic surgeon. Open enrollment, no prerequisites. For further information call Scottsdale Artists school, 990-1422.

ARTIST WORKSHOP with Joseph Sheppard, Oil Painting- Still Life, December 5-9, 1988. In his book, Bringing Textures to Life, Joseph Sheppard states the important thing is not your finished picture, but the knowledge and experience you gain from working through the techniques, and the same approach will govern this class. The specific technique to be taught is known as the Maroger technique, which is named after the great M. Jacques Maroger under whom Sheppard studied. Open enrollment, no prerequisites. For further information call Scottsdale Artists School, 990-1422.
