

ASU costs expected to go up, up, up

'Just say no!':
Protesters shout
down tuition hike

By ROBIE KAKONGE
State Press

Chanting "hell no, we can't afford to go," a throng of nearly 350 ASU students protested outside the MU Wednesday against a proposed $156 in-state tuition hike.

Students held signs that said, "Stop tuition pollution before students become an endangered species," and "Only snakes steal from students." The crowd cheered student leaders who railed against the Arizona Board of Regents and its proposed hike.

"We are really glad to see all of you here today," said Associated Students President John Fees. "But don't stop here — call the regents or write to them and tell them how you feel, and I guarantee that they will listen."

*Hostetler column,

Fees urged students to attend a 2:45 p.m. hearing today in Great Hall of the College of Law. The regents' resources committee is scheduled to listen to students and their complaints about the proposed hike.

"We can't afford to be pushed any further," Fees said. "We have to let them know that they have been inconsistent and that they are not doing their job."

The regents have raised tuition every year for the last five years for a total of $328. During that time, they have compromised twice with students on an increase. Currently, tuition is $1,278 per year, and the regents' proposal would raise it to $1,434 a year.

Brad Golich, executive director of the Arizona Students Association, called the $156 increase ridiculous and unfair.

"The situation is next to impossible," he said. "How the hell are we supposed to do good in school if we are working all the time to get money to pay for classes?" His comments drew cheers and applause from the hundreds of students.

"What do they think? That we all drive Porsche's and BMW's and have mom and dad sending in checks from

Susan Schuman/State Press

California? That's the perverted idea the regents and legislators have of us. They should go to parking lot number 59 and see what most students drive.

"Students are having to work 20, 30, even 40 hours a week to pay for tuition. How the hell can we do well in school if we're working all the time?"

Spontaneous chants erupted during the hour-long rally, and students yelled out their complaints like it was an old-time revival. One student in the crowd yelled that ASU President J. Russell Nelson received an $8,000 raise this year "while they can't hire some decent people to teach a math course!"

Students broke into a chant of "just say no! just say no!" to a tuition hike. Student Regent Patrick McWhortor said:

Room, meal fees for dormitories
to rise on July 1

By KELLY PEARCE
State Press

Rising food costs and an 11th ASU dorm on the drawing board will make dormitory room and board fees jump at least 5 percent next fall, ASU officials said.

Some of the funding from ASU's proposed $10 million dorm, slated to be built east of Sahuaro Hall, will be paid by the increase, according to Cliff Osborne, ASU director of residence life. In addition, students living in dorms where a meal plan is required will pay more because the University's food supplier, the Marriott corporation, will be raising rates.

The increases will go into effect July 1, 1989. About 5,000 ASU students live in University residence halls.

Osborne said the 5 percent figure is conservative, and that the jump may be as much as 10 percent depending on the cost of the new dorm.

"The rest of the residence halls have to support the whole system," Osborne said. "We hope to keep it below double digits."

He said annual increases are inevitable, "just as in every household things cost more money as time goes by."

In the past three years, room costs in ASU dorms have risen between 3 and 5 percent each year, while board fees remained steady.

Randy Johnson, associate director of the MU and liaison between Marriott and residence life, said food charges in the dorms should be kept as low as possible.

"We want to protect prices for students," he said.

Johnson said Marriott decided in 1986 that it would not raise food costs in dorms because it did not want to jeopardize its chances of a new contract. When the contract was renewed, ASU and Marriott agreed prices would not change until the third year of the five-year contract.

Marriott is making up for the lost revenues with steep price increases, he added.

Robert Dreger, senior food service director for Marriott, attributed the fee hikes to inflation.

Engineers to request Rio Salado funding

By KAMILLE NIXON
State Press

Developing the dry riverbottom of the Rio Salado will cost Tempe taxpayers at least an additional $208,739 if the Tempe City Council approves funding requests of city engineers tonight.

The project is a growing idea that has run into at least four snags, one of which is with ASU. While the snares continue to grow, the city pours more money into the project.

City engineers want $64,000 to pay a private engineering firm to design maps of one section of the Rio Salado Parkway between Farmer Avenue and Priest Drive. The parkway is the east-west road that runs just north of Sun Devil Stadium and Lot 59.

Improvements should begin early next year and could take six years, according to Atis Krigers, a planner for the Tempe Community Development Department.

"It (the request) is not particularly unusual," Krigers said. "If they (the council members) are committed to the project (of redeveloping the Rio Salado Parkway), then this is what they're going to have to spend."

ASU planners want the parkway to be a flood control project and a center for parks, hotels and businesses. They also envision it as a project for architecture students to tackle.

But Tempe officials are wary of the cost of ASU's plans.

A second snag is that the engineers want an additional $50,000 to design an alternate intersection for the parkway at the Mill Avenue Bridge. They say it would bypass annual floods that usually wipe out the area and cause traffic problems.

A third snag is that the engineers want the city to pay $94,739 to a second private engineering firm to explore adding at least one traffic lane to the Mill Avenue Bridge.

The city has already paid ASU's College of Architecture $60,000 to study the area surrounding the parkway between Rural Road and Mill Avenue north of Tempe Butte and south of the proposed East Papago Parkway. ASU spent $35,000 of its own money in the research.

A city engineer said his department needs the additional money because existing maps and plans of the area are insufficient.

"It has become apparent that there is a need for more comprehensive mapping of the area in order to make intelligent planning and engineering decisions," supervising engineer Howard Hargis said in a summary report to the council.

The parkway is being designed and built in phases because some sections of the road are problematic while others are relatively simple. The problem-free areas should be built while kinks in other portions of the road are ironed out, Krigers said.

The fourth snag is who should pay for flood control for the area between Rural Road and Mill Avenue. The Arizona

PLO requests U.S. visa for Arafat in order for him to address U.N.

UNITED NATIONS (AP) — The Palestine Liberation Organization said Wednesday it has requested a U.S. visa for chairman Yasser Arafat so he can address the General Assembly after his organization decides whether to declare an independent Palestinian state.

Secretary of State George P. Shultz said in a letter made public Wednesday that Arafat is not welcome in the United States. A spokeswoman for the U.S. Mission indicated, however, that Arafat and two other officials of the PLO were likely to be granted limited visas for U.N. business.

"We do have an obligation to grant a visa to Arafat under the (U.S./U.N) Headquarters Agreement," said the spokeswoman, Anne Stoddard. She said visas also had been requested for two other PLO officials, who were not immediately identified.

Under the Headquarters Agreement, the United States agrees not to obstruct transit of people invited to the United Nations on official business but reserves the right to deny visas to people it considers security threats.

Washington views the PLO as a terrorist organization and has no direct relations with it.

Embassy hostages freed after gunman holds two-hour seige

KHARTOUM, Sudan (AP) — A gunman raided the United Arab Emirates Embassy on Wednesday and took the ambassador and eight other people hostage, but commandos stormed the building and freed the captives, officials said.

The gunman was arrested after the two-hour siege and no casualties were reported after the six-man police unit stormed the embassy building.

Released captives said the gunmen had spoken by telephone with an official at the office of Sheik Zayed Bin Sultan Al Nahyan, the United Arab Emirates president, and demanded the release of political prisoners.

Opposition hopes to oust ruling party in Mexico elections

MONTERREY, Mexico (AP) — Political opposition supporters from the right and the left went to the polls in Nuevo Leon municipal elections Wednesday aiming to wrestle several cities from ruling party control.

The governing Institutional Revolutionary Party, which controlled all 51 municipalities in this border state, has pledged to recognize opposition triumphs under the new era of "political modernization" called for by President-elect Carlos Salinas de Gortari.

"If a majority of the people vote in favor of a party that's not the PRI, like what happened in the federal elections, the triumph will have to be recognized," said Jose Natividad Gonzalez, state secretary and president of the PRI-controlled State Electoral Commission.

Rally

"I'm going to tell the regents that I had an angry mob surround me Wednesday afternoon and told me they can't afford to go to school!"

"This is not just a dream," he said. "We don't have to pay $156 more next year because it is too much. We have some powerful people behind us. I talked to (Arizona Gov.) Rose Mofford, and she said she is behind us."

Mofford is an ex-officio member of the regents.

In response to questions from students about the impact of the proposed hike, McWhortor said a financial aid program could help counter a tuition increase.

"We are really working on ... the Arizona Financial Aid Trust Fund," he said. The fund would be composed of $6 contributions from students as a financial aid pool for needy students.

Paul Larson, director of state relations for ASASU, told the crowd that Arizona is the second-worst state in the country in supplying financial aid to college students.

College of Engineering Sen. Yousef Hashimi questioned the validity of the proposed hike when hundreds of classes were closed and canceled this semester in the College of Liberal Arts.

"You are not getting much from your money right now," he said over the din of an electric saw that was being used nearby at the Hayden Library expansion. "Why should we pay a $156 increase when students aren't going to benefit from it?"

Confusion over the time of today's hearing, which originally had been scheduled for 1 p.m., had angered Fees, who called the confusion a travesty. It is the second time in as many years that a cloud has hung over a tuition hearing. In 1987, a tuition hearing scheduled at ASU was moved to Phoenix at the last minute.

Fees encouraged students to meet at the MU at 12:45 p.m. today and march to the tuition hearing at Great Hall.

"I urge students to participate because we can make a difference," he said. "The ASU band will be there, we will have picket signs, but most of all, we will have a chance to let them know that we care."

"Ignorance isn't an excuse for apathy at this point."

After the rally, organizers said they were overwhelmed by the turnout.

"I don't remember seeing anything like this at ASU," Fees said. "In tuition, especially, we've been impotent in a lot of ways."

Golich said, "I've been here five years, and this is the largest organized effort I've ever seen."

Regents: Tuition hike would end students' education

Darrin Hostetler
Columnist

Thank you for speaking out for the "physically tired and financially exhausted." It's about time someone did.

I am a hearing-impaired, head of household mother of four children who is trying to get off the welfare roles. . . . It doesn't look as if it's going to happen.

Getting an education is the only way I can get out of the welfare trap.

But they (the regents) assume I can miraculously come up with more money while I am attending school, working a college work-study job, presiding as secretary of Delta Sigma Omicron (the disabled student organization on campus), as well as do my homework and manage to hug and feed my kids once a day.

Last week I had to go to the food bank to get groceries for my family. It was either that or not have any money for gas to get to class today. It hurts to share this, but dammit, someone should know that a lot of other people have done the same thing for the sake of an education.

I know of at least four women who are in the same boat I am, or worse. Feel free to use my name, and anything else that might have the affect of helping students in the same boat.

My boat has already sunk, maybe theirs won't.

Michele Martinez
Senior, Journalism

Welcome to Reality 101, ASU style.

The invitation issued in this space Monday to students, requesting that they relate why the proposed $156 tuition increase under consideration by the Arizona Board of Regents is intolerable, has definitely gotten a response. And the results aren't at all surprising:

There are a lot of students out there who are going to spend next fall looking for work, rather than looking for their classroom building, if the monumental tuition hike gains approval.

Michele Martinez is typical of hundreds of students who exist on the edge of the University dropout abyss. Her problem is simple: limitations on the amount of federal aid she can receive may prevent her from making it through ASU, getting a good job and becoming the productive member of society that she desperately wants to be. State aid is non-existent or inadequate, and tuition hikes stretch this taut situation to the breaking point.

Michele wants to get off the public dole. And the state of Arizona wants her off it, too. But like other poverty-stricken students who share her plight, her dreams of success and financial independence cannot endure an additional $156 bill that will take food off her children's dinner table.

Yes, students like Michele are out there — and they are the ones who would suffer the most severe and immediate aftershock from an exorbitant tuition hike.

But students at or near the poverty level aren't the only ones who stand to take a beating.

I am a member of the biggest minority group to be hurt by the proposed tuition increase. This group consists of the working men and women of this state that are putting themselves through school. We were not fortunate enough to be born rich, nor were we poor, but we were born right in the middle.

This misfortune of birth equates to not qualifying for financial aid and not having parents rich enough to put us through school. This means we must work full time at not only one, but two jobs, in order to pay for school and provide adequate living conditions for oneself. By raising the tuition, it is even harder for students like me to continue my education.

Roger D. Simpson
Sophomore, Business

The Arizona Students Association 1989-90 tuition report points out that those students of "middle income find it most difficult to attain a higher education in this state."

It's no wonder. Caught in the infamous middle-class collegiate Catch-22, many students have been effectively classified as too rich to get help, while in reality being too poor to eat.

Financial assistance to such students in some "middle income" brackets (i.e., from families earning $20,000 to $25,000 per year) has decreased 13 percent since 1982. As in the nation at large, the middle class takes it on the chin. But while a tuition hike would be uncomfortable for this large group of students, many would manage to stay in school.

The injustice, for them, is that they expect to see benefits from the monies they are forced to cough up — and instead they see only a declining quality of education and a series of pocketbook-draining fees.

'In other words, students are being asked to purchase an increasingly inferior educational product at an increasingly higher sticker price.'

Because the cost of almost everything affiliated with ASU is shooting into orbit — parking, health services, dorms, registration and, most noticeably, a new mandatory $50 fee to pay for the new student recreation center — students are being "nickle and dimed" to death by extraneous charges.

And even though tuition has risen annually for the past five years, class sizes are ballooning and sections of classes required for graduation are being closed by the score, while expensive parking garages and office buildings pop up hither and yon as capital improvement consolation prizes from the University.

In other words, students are being asked to purchase an increasingly inferior educational product at an increasingly higher sticker price.

In the business world, companies who pull tricks like that end up in Chapter 11.

But unlike buying a car or microwave, many students are dependent upon an ASU brand education. Like Paul Argyropoulos, a broadcasting major from a one-parent family who faces an even steeper out-of-state student tuition bill and is watching the tuition battle with a nervous eye.

Paul wrote: My dad died when I was 12, and his Social Security checks stopped when I was 16. My mom makes an hourly wage, and works 60 hours a week. I've tried getting financial aid, but because of my mom's overtime, I'm not "need based."

The sorry thing is that I am not a worst case scenario. There are a lot more people out there whose mom does not pay their tuition. I'm one of the lucky. I love ASU, but if the regents continue putting the one-parent students through the wringer, we will be forced to say, "see ya."

We read on this page yesterday how the regents have developed what might be charitably termed "creative calculations" to formulate an inflated tuition bill for students. We know that our tuition monies are not being returned to us in the form of an increased quality of education. And we know of the human costs a $156 tuition hike would incur.

Student leaders have done their homework on these issues and have presented an impressive report to the regents. But they've done that before — to no avail. The only thing that can stop the proposed tuition increase is a full house at the Great Hall in the ASU College of Law, today at 2:45 p.m., when the regents will be on hand to get student input concerning the matter. For those of you who can't make it then, a group of students will march from the Cady Mall fountain to the law school at 12:45 p.m. for the beginning of the regent meeting.

This year, the anti-tuition hike forces are organized to fight the $156 increase all the way to the Dec. 2 regent vote on the issue.

And we can win. But you've all got to show up, to show the regents that the students who will be affected by their actions aren't just numbers on a fact sheet.

They are real people, working and fighting for their futures.

Real people, like Michele, Roger and Paul.

Plagiarist given slap on wrist

Editor:

It's OK to cheat even if you do get caught. That is basically what Superior Court Judge John Seidel is saying to Kieth Booker and ASU. Even though the Student Handbook and the University Code of Conduct warn of disciplinary action for cheating, plagiarism, etc. Judge Seidel seems to be in favor of wrist slapping plagiarists — and I am outraged.

I'm a hard working student here at ASU and I'm sure that there are thousands out there like me who work their butts off to get the grades that they do, then this guy comes along and not only cheats and steals someone else's hard work, but also gets away with it.

How is the University supposed to enforce their laws if the courts overrule their disciplinary actions. Judge Seidel says, "Since the plaintiff was found 'not guilty' of the May incident there would be no reason to consider the March incident." in the suspension (State Press Nov. 7).

Does that mean that if someone is found not guilty of one murder, rape, etc. that he or she can't be punished for a rape, murder, etc. that they admitted to committing before? If that is the case then it is time to re-evaluate our justice system and the people in it.

Bush, Quayle

Quayle's 'life of privilege,' family pull assisted political ascension of VP-elect

By EILEEN PUTMAN
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON — Dan Quayle was born into a life of privilege that took him from the golf course and fraternity row to the marble halls of Congress with wondrous ease.

At 41, the next vice president is an ardent conservative who is praised by some for his quickness and derided by others as a lightweight whose best assets are his blond good looks and capacity to charm.

His upbringing as the scion of a Midwestern publishing dynasty was a comfortable existence, one in which Quayle acknowledged "I never had to worry about where I was going to go."

James Danforth Quayle was born in Indianapolis, oldest son of James and Corinne Quayle. His maternal grandfather, Eugene C. Pulliam, was a self-made millionaire with newspapers in Indiana and elsewhere.

As a teen-ager in the small town of Huntington, Ind., Quayle attended Republican rallies and played golf, which his father called "his first love and his passion."

"In golf, what it gets down to is you're competing with yourself," his mother said. "He could be so hard on himself sometimes."

Quayle chose not to apply that competitiveness in the academic arena.

At DePauw University, a small private school heavily endowed by the family, Quayle was only a C student. Affable and outgoing, he was often at his fraternity, Delta Kappa Epsilon, where he was vice president.

Although those years were stressful for many young people, Quayle apparently sailed through without confronting such burning issues of the times as drugs and Vietnam. He says he never used marijuana.

His graduation in 1969 would have made him eligible for the draft, but Quayle asked his parents to help him enter the National Guard. He insists he wasn't trying to avoid the draft but wanted to fulfill his military obligation while attending law school.

His grades weren't good enough, but Quayle convinced Indiana University Law School that he was qualified. He was accepted after meeting with the admissions dean, a Republican judge in Lebanon, Ind., where the family owns the local paper.

It was at law school that Quayle met Marilyn Tucker. Everything clicked, and they were married after a whirlwind 10-week courtship. They have three children: Tucker, Benjamin and Corinne.

It was also in law school that Quayle is said to have become enthralled with politics when he saw a bargain matinee of "The Candidate."

That is the Robert Redford movie about a handsome blond politician whose qualifications for office are little more than good looks and charm. Mrs. Quayle dismisses the story, saying he actually saw the movie years later.

'... when George Bush plucked Quayle from relative obscurity ... signs taunted: "But can he type?"'

Quayle says the size of his wealth also is exaggerated. While the Pulliam family trust is reported to approach $1 billion, Quayle receives no income from the trust's assets until after the deaths of his step-grandmother and his mother. The assets cannot be dissolved until 21 years after the death of his oldest son Tucker, now 14.

Quayle's meteoric rise in politics came after a desultory brush with the law practice he and Mrs. Quayle set up above his father's newspaper. The Huntington Herald-Press, where Quayle was also associate publisher. He defeated an eight-term congressman in 1976 and in 1980 ousted Democratic Sen. Birch Bayh, with a little help from Ronald Reagan's long coattails. Quayle easily won re-election in 1986.

Orvas Beers, the GOP official who talked Quayle into running for the House, calls him "a real charmer."

"I thought he'd get a lot of the women's vote because of his friendliness, his personality and his good looks," Beers said.

Charm aside, many Republicans were stunned when George Bush plucked Quayle from relative obscurity over more senior lawmakers. On the campaign trail, signs taunted: "But can he type?" and "This Quayle Won't Fly."

In Congress, Quayle was never viewed as a heavy-hitter. But he touts his legislative accomplishments, co-sponsoring a jobs training act with Sen. Edward Kennedy, D-Mass., and his work on arms control measures like the Intermediate-range Nuclear Forces Treaty.

He also supported Contra aid, voted to sustain President Reagan's veto of a civil rights bill, supported the death penalty for drug kingpins and voted for the Supreme Court nomination of Robert H. Bork. He opposes abortion.

By LAWRENCE L. KNUTSON
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON — George Bush finally won the biggest poker game in American politics, not so much following the gambler's shrewd instincts as trusting in the luck of the draw.

In 1980, Bush heard Kenny Rogers' hit song, "The Gambler," played incessantly on his campaign bus. "You've got to know when to hold 'em, know when to fold 'em," went the refrain.

That May, Bush folded his cards and ended his two-year quest for the presidency. But a couple of months later, he got lucky again. He was tapped as Ronald Reagan's running mate and spent the next eight years as vice president.

This year, Bush played his hand according to a carefully scripted media campaign. He bested five Republican primary rivals and then trounced Democratic candidate Michael Dukakis to claim the jackpot.

"You get a good bounce in life, and then one event feeds on another," Bush once told a reporter.

George Herbert Walker Bush, the resume candidate: Ivy League education at Yale

Bush was an intensely loyal vice president to Reagan. He made few waves and submerged any political or personal differences they might have had.

"He's the dog that doesn't bark," said Richard Viguerie, the direct-mail fundraiser for conservative causes. Viguerie said in 1983 there was little evidence of Bush's impact on White House policy decisions.

Bush insisted he was "out of the loop" and played no part in the Iran-Contra affair last year.

Later, he said he had some misgivings about the arms-for-hostages deal with Iran, in which weapons profits were diverted to the Nicaraguan Contra rebels. But Bush refused to say precisely what advice, if any, he gave the president.

The vice president did not escape criticism so easily when he praised Ferdinand Marcos at a dinner in Manila, telling the repressive Philippine president before his ouster that "we love your commitment to democracy."

Bush also created a furor when, during a visit to NATO headquarters in Brussels, Belgium, he said Soviet tank mechanics could teach Detroit auto workers a thing or two.

Perhaps the most controversial entry on the lengthy Bush resume is his one-year hitch as CIA director beginning in 1976, at a time when Panama's military ruler, Gen. Manuel Noriega, was on the spy agency's payroll as an informant.

Bush has largely avoided questions about any relationship with Noriega, who was subsequently indicted by two federal grand juries in connection with his alleged involvement in drug trafficking.

Bush dismisses suggestions that his CIA tenure would be a liability as president.

"I led something at a very difficult time," he said. "I went in there when it had been demoralized by the attacks of a bunch of little, untutored squirts from Capitol Hill

"And I stood up for the CIA then, and I stand up for it now. And defend it. So let the liberals wring their hands and consider it a liability. I consider it a strength."

Bush campaigned as a Goldwater Republican when he first ran for Congress in 1966. When he sought the presidency in 1980, he shifted to a more moderate position, referring to Reagan's supply-side proposals as "voodoo economics." He defends those same policies as vice president.

Bush has provoked enduring suspicion among some conservatives, summed up in a 1980 article in the conservative weekly, Human Events.

"Bush was not anything close to being a Goldwater conservative," the article said, noting that his ratings by the conservative Americans for Constitutional Action dropped from a "respectable" 83 to 58 in three years as a congressman.

"Bush might as well have been in another party," the article said.

Bush can joke about his standing among

'George Herbert Walker Bush ... had a hard time disguising his preppy origins.'

conservatives.

The day in May 1980 when he pulled out of the presidential race, Bush was serving beer, cheese and crackers to campaign reporters in the living room of his Houston home.

Someone teased him about having a copy of William F. Buckley's conservative magazine, National Review, on top of a pile on his coffee table.

"Well, that doesn't have to be there any more," Bush said, and slipped it to the bottom of the stack.

Bush's choice was widely seen as a move to appease conservatives and bring him a malleable vice president without his own political agenda.

During the campaign, Quayle demonstrated that he was eager to please, from his exhortation to Bush at the GOP convention to "go get 'em" to his travels to sometimes obscure rallies selected by Bush strategists.

Although occasionally frustrated by the controls imposed by the Bush camp, Quayle followed his script and played the role of dutiful No. 2.

A scandal that brushed Quayle early in his political career resurfaced during the campaign when a former Washington lobbyist, Paula Parkinson, claimed he had propositioned her on a 1980 Florida golf outing with several lawmakers.

Quayle angrily denied the accusation and said he had gone there only to play golf.

Most people who know Quayle say he is a straight arrow who is devoted to his wife and family. Marilyn Quayle had the last word during the Parkinson episode with a line she has repeated over the years: "Anybody who knows Dan Quayle knows he would rather play golf than have sex any day."

University, decorated Navy combat pilot in World War II, successful Texas oilman, two-term House member from Houston, unsuccessful Senate candidate, ambassador to the United Nations, chairman of the Republican National Committee, director of the CIA, vice president, president-elect.

Son of a wealthy two-term senator from Connecticut, grandson of the man who donated the Walker Cup to golf, Bush has sought to conceal his Eastern Establishment heritage with humor, occasional annoyance and some good-ole-boy gestures that don't always ring true.

But try as he might, Bush had a hard time disguising his preppy origins.

He drew hoots when he was defeated in an Iowa GOP straw poll last year because his supporters were "off at the air show, they were off at their daughter's coming-out party, or they were off teeing off on the golf course."

Although Bush declared he was "not going to mess up" his campaign against Dukakis, and largely succeeded, he stirred controversy when he tapped Sen. Dan Quayle of Indiana as his running mate. But Bush held his cards and rode out the storm over Quayle's military service and academic performance.

Energy department to announce home of super collider

From staff and wire reports

WASHINGTON — The Department of Energy said secretary John Herrington will announce today the preferred state to become home for the $4.4 billion Superconducting Super Collider.

State officials and congressional delegations from seven states picked as finalists for the collider — Arizona, Illinois, Colorado, Michigan, North Carolina, Tennessee and Texas — were advised of Herrington's plans on Wednesday.

"We're supposed to hear sometime between 7 a.m. and 9:30 (a.m.) if we've gotten it," said Vada Manager, spokesman for Arizona Gov. Rose Mofford. "We all have our fingers crossed."

An independent panel appointed by the Energy Department reviewed 35 bids from 25 states before picking the seven sites as finalists.

The collider, a giant nuclear particle accelerator, is viewed as a plum for its host state because of the economic benefits it will provide: thousands of construction jobs, permanent employment for as many as 3,000 people and an annual budget of $270 million.

In Arizona, the collider is expected to bring thousands of scientists annually to ASU, bolstering the University's physics department by leaps and bounds.

The collider would be a 53-mile, underground ring of magnets capable of whipping proton beams together with 20 times the force of the world's most powerful existing accelerator, the Tevatron at the Fermi National Accelerator Laboratory in Batavia, Ill.

Scientists hope to learn more about the nature of matter from studying the subatomic particles created by the proton collisions.

Congress has appropriated $205 million for the collider, including $100 million for research and development in fiscal 1989, but has not authorized its construction.

Robber punches motel clerk's wife

By MIKE BURGESS
State Press

A man asking for change at a Tempe motel early Wednesday grabbed money out of a register then punched the motel clerk's wife in the head before fleeing, police said.

The suspect entered the All Star Inn, 513 W. Broadway Road, at about 7:10 a.m. and struck up a conversation with the clerk, police said. He asked for change and forced his way into the register when it was opened.

He assaulted the clerk's wife when she came into the lobby and fled on foot with an undetermined amount of money, police said.

Police described the suspect as black, 30 to 35 years old, 5 feet 11 inches tall and 150 pounds with a dark complexion. He was last seen wearing beige pants and a pink shirt.

Police also reported the following incidents:

•A man pretending to have a gun in his waistband robbed a Tempe convenience store early Wednesday.

The suspect walked into the Circle K store at 3408 S. Mill Ave. at about 1:30 a.m., told the clerk he had a gun and demanded cash.

The clerk complied and gave the suspect, who fled on foot, an undetermined amount of cash.

Police described the suspect as black, 25 to 30 years old, 6 feet tall, 140 pounds with yellowish teeth. He was last seen wearing a red shirt and gray pants.

•A 41-year-old Tempe woman fended off a "smelly" attacker Tuesday night by biting him.

The woman was unloading groceries in the 5600 block of South Marine Drive at about midnight when the man grabbed her from behind.

She described the suspect as Caucasian, about 5 feet 6 inches tall with a heavy build. She said he smelled.

•A 36-year-old man, who was arrested Tuesday on suspicion of two burglaries, was bitten by a Tempe police dog used to force him out of a house he allegedly broke into. The man, who was bitten on the back of the leg, was not injured.

police report

•ASU police arrested a California fugitive Tuesday after an officer had stopped to help the man with his car in Lot 59.

The officer ran a warrant check on the man, Jeffrey C. Robinett, and found he was wanted for a parole violation. Robinett was arrested without incident at about 9 a.m. and booked into the Maricopa County Jail, where he will await extradition to California.

Robinett was on parole for convictions of unlawful imprisonment, rape and armed robbery.

•A 25-year-old Illinois woman, who was going door to door selling magazines at a Tempe apartment complex, was sexually assaulted Monday night by two men who dragged her into an apartment.

The woman was dragged into an apartment in the 2000 block of South McClintock Drive at about 7:15 p.m. The suspects fled the apartment after she bit one of them on the genitals.

The suspect who dragged her into the apartment is described as black, in his 20s, 6 feet 3 inches tall, 190 pounds, with ringlets in his hair and unshaven. The second suspect was Caucasian, 6 feet 3 inches tall, 190 pounds with brown hair parted in the middle and tied in a ponytail.

•An ASU student injured his left shoulder Tuesday when he fell from his bicycle after trying to jump a curb. He was treated at Tempe St. Luke's Hospital.

•A University employee tripped over a typewriter cord and injured her neck, lower back and left arm. She was treated at the Student Health Center.

•A man unaffiliated with ASU was injured Tuesday when he fell from a ladder at the Hayden Library expansion construction site. He was taken to Tempe St. Luke's Hospital.

•Someone stole an ASU seal from a podium that was at the Old Main park Saturday. Loss is unknown.

Dormitory delegates travel to conference

By TERESA OWEN
State Press

Thirty-nine ASU delegates representing the Residence Hall Association left town Wednesday night for an annual conference that should give them new ideas about social and educational issues.

The delegates, which include RHA council members, resident hall assistants and faculty members, will participate in the Intermountain Affiliate of Colleges, Universities and Residence Halls convention at Brigham Young University in Provo, Utah.

"The purpose of the conference is to bring information together to enhance the RHA program at ASU and other universities," said Pedro Cordova, national communications coordinator for RHA.

During the regional conference, delegates from universities throughout Arizona, Montana, Colorado, Utah, New Mexico, Idaho and Wyoming will give presentations on leadership, careers, drug abuse and relationships, he said.

Cordova said the conference should benefit ASU because the delegates will gather new ideas on how to improve ASU's residence halls.

"We go there to learn and then to use ideas at ASU," Cordova said. "It really helps us."

The ASU delegate costs of $108 per person plus traveling expenses are paid by the University's RHA.

Kevin Connell, ASU resident hall president, said the conference should spark ideas to update ASU programs.

ASU junior enters sixth year in battle with cancer

By MICHELLE ALLMAN
State Press

It was the day before Thanksgiving six years ago when doctors told Kim Radke she had cancer.

Radke, who was 14 at the time, had been looking forward to spending the holiday season with family and friends. Instead, she was thrust into a nightmare of surgery and chemotherapy, of fear and disbelief that she could have leukemia.

"I thought I was going to die," recalled Radke, now a junior at ASU majoring in interior architecture.

"I remember sitting in this huge black chair. They told me, and I just had this sick, sick feeling. I was in a total state of shock."

That day, Radke was one of 25,000 Americans under 30 who are diagnosed each year as having one of the 200 known forms of cancer, according to the National Cancer Institute.

After one month of intensive treatment, Radke continued therapy for two years and went back to leading a fairly normal life.

She was one of the lucky ones. Each year, about 1,200 people between the ages of 15 and 34 die from cancer.

Doctors told Radke that if she had delayed her physical exam two weeks more she probably would have died.

"I feel lucky just to be here," Radke said. "I'm glad we caught it in time."

Health experts agree that early detection is vital in the treatment of cancer, the disease that will be responsible for one in four American deaths this year.

"Early detection is the name of the game," said Nancy O'Conner, an oncologist at the internationally-recognized University of Arizona Cancer Center. "We never know for sure how fast cancer grows and spreads, so the earlier we catch it the more localized it is."

Elizabeth Johnson, 42, wishes she'd known more about the importance of early cancer detection 12 years ago. It was then that she believes her rare form of untreatable ovarian cancer developed.

"It's human nature to think 'it can't happen to me,'" said Johnson, who works for Marriott concessions at ASU. "But it does happen. Women and men have got to get their total exams. It's not pleasant, but it will save your life."

The National Cancer Institute reports that 38 out of 100,000 people between the ages of 20 and 24 develop cancer yearly. About 8 percent of the people in the age group develop breast or testicular cancers — cancers that are easily detected by self-examinations.

"There are swarms of cancers that aren't caught by young people," O'Conner said. "When older patients come here they are very surprised at the number of people under 30 we treat."

Cancer has been a recognized disease since the Stone Age, according to "Target: Cancer," a book researched and authored by ASU journalism professor Edward Sylvester.

According to the book, the Greek philosopher Hippocrates called the disease carcinoma, referring to the crab-like appearance of a tumor reaching out with arms to invade other tissues of the body.

The most common types of cancer in young people are leukemia, testicular, breast, brain, cervix and skin cancers and Hodgkin's disease, or cancer of the thyroid.

In the Southwest, skin cancer is the most prevalent. The American Cancer Society reports that there are about 26,000 new cases of malignant melanoma of the skin diagnosed annually, and 7,800 deaths from the disease.

About 80 percent of all cancer cases are, like melanoma, partly the result of lifestyle. The sun is known to be the most dangerous environmental cancer-causing agent.

Jamie Phillips, a 28-year-old ASU public history graduate student, is familiar with the dangers of the sun. Her parents, both 65, have been battling melanoma for the last 20 years.

Because she lives in Arizona and has a family history of skin cancer, Phillips is terrified that she also will get the disease.

"I don't go anywhere without heavy

Kim Radke, 20, is an ASU junior majoring in architecture. She was diagnosed with leukemia in 1982 but has been in remission for five years.

sunscreen on," Phillips said. "If I get any color on my skin it's like, 'Oh, Lord, is this the burn that's going to do it?'"

By wearing sunscreen Phillips is taking an important precautionary measure. "Target: Cancer" reports that guarding against the sun, eating a high-fiber, low-fat diet and not smoking are key ways to avoid cancer.

Sylvester reports that smokers are 10 times more likely to get cancer than people who don't smoke.

"Lung cancer is the deadliest by far of all the major cancers," Sylvester wrote. "It is caused virtually entirely by smoking."

Deaths from lung cancer totaled 136,000 in 1987, and there were 150,000 new cases reported.

The National Cancer Institute reports that nearly half of all cancer patients can be cured, and cancers in young people are declining steadily.

"But it's there," Phillips said.

"Young people are far from being immune, even though most feel that they are. You don't have to let it happen — just show some common sense. Be aware. This is your life we're talking about."

While losing presidency, Democrats gain in Senate

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON (AP) — Democrats, while losing the White House by almost landslide proportions, managed to boost their majority in the Senate by at least one vote, and possibly two, depending on the outcome of a cliff-hanger race in Florida.

More than 24 hours after the polls opened for Tuesday's election, there still was no winner in the race for the Senate seat in Florida being vacated by Democrat Lawton Chiles.

With only a portion of an estimated 100,000 absentee ballots still uncounted among 4 million cast, Republican Rep. Connie Mack overtook Democratic Rep. Buddy MacKay and began building a slight lead.

A victory by Mack would leave Democrats with 55 of the 100 Senate seats, up one from the 54-46 majority they held during the last Congress. Should MacKay win, Democrats would hold a 56-44 edge.

Democrats lost seats in Montana and Mississippi; Republican seats changed parties in Connecticut, Nebraska, Nevada and Virginia.

Even if Democrats were to lose in Florida and Connecticut, where a recount is possible, they still would have the majority, which carries with it the chairmanship of every committee and the right to set the Senate's agenda.

Some key lawmakers indicated that does not necessarily spell trouble for President-elect George Bush.

Sen. Joseph R. Biden Jr., D-Del., chairman of the Judiciary Committee, said he and other chairmen "are prepared to work with President Bush and do that straight up, no holds barred, and find whether he means what he says when he says that he expects to have a close relationship with the Senate and the House."

Sen. Pete Domenici, R-N.M., predicted budget issues will dominate the attention of the Senate and House next year. The new president's oft-repeated opposition to higher taxes "will be the big sticking point" in his dealings with Congress, Domenici added.

Bush, who regularly reviled liberals during his campaign, will find himself having to deal with some powerful Senate liberals who easily won re-election.

Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., chairman of the Labor and Human Resources Committee, took 66 percent of the vote in winning a fifth six-year term. Sens. Donald Riegle, D-

Mich., Banking Committee chairman, and Quentin Burdick, D-N.D., who heads the Environment and Public Works Committee, were re-elected with 61 percent each.

In fact, landslides were the order of the day in the Senate races. Twenty-two of the 33 seats up for grabs were won with at least 57 percent of the vote.

While 10 new senators were elected Tuesday, there will be 11 new faces when the Senate convenes in January. The governor of Indiana will name a successor to Sen. Dan Quayle, who was elected vice president.

In the Arizona Senate race, Sen. Dennis DeConcini, a Democrat and one of the wealthiest senators, won 61 percent of the vote and a third term.

Despite the defeat of Michael Dukakis, Democrats on Wednesday expanded their majority in the House of Representatives, where 99 percent of incumbents seeking re-election were returned to office.

The day after the elections, three House races were still too close to call. But all three were led by Democrats, who would end up with a net gain of five seats if they held those leads.

Democrats took 259 of the 459 House seats. Republicans held 173 seats, down from 178 in the last Congress.

'English only' opposition says court challenge 90 percent sure

By VICTOR BARAJAS
State Press

Opponents of the recently-passed "English Only" amendment say they are 90 percent sure they will challenge the constitutionality of the measure in court.

Rep. Armando Ruiz, D-Phoenix, said Wednesday that Proposition 106 violates the First and 14th Amendment rights of non-English speaking minorities because it denies them free speech in government and equal rights that English-speaking people enjoy.

"We're huddling with our attorneys and trying to put together the best challenge possible," Ruiz said.

The amendment requires that voting ballots be printed only in English. But both sides have acknowledged that the measure would not affect the federally-required use of non-English languages used in bilingual ballots.

Proposition 106 narrowly passed by a 51 to 49 percent margin early Wednesday. Pre-election polls had pointed to an easy victory for the measure, despite active opposition by prominent public figures.

Bob Park, chairman of Arizonans for English, denied that the measure violates the rights of anyone, adding that the amendment is a "unifying force."

"It's just common sense that government certainly should function primarily in the English language," Park said.

Opponents had contemplated asking for a recount but decided the margin of roughly 9,000 votes was too large.

Proposition opponents claimed a moral victory with the tight race. Members of U.S. English, the national organization that aims at making "English Only" federal law, claimed they were inching closer to their ultimate goal — an amendment to the U.S. Constitution.

"I don't think that's going to happen," Ruiz said. "The momentum they had coming in here was cut right from under them; they're going to limp away from Arizona."

President-elect George Bush has said he would oppose

"English Only" on the national level because it is unnecessary.

Two other states, Florida and Colorado, overwhelmingly passed "English Only" amendments during Tuesday's general election. Seventeen states have now passed laws or amendments designating English as their official language. The official English campaign is expected to turn its attention now to Texas, Massachusetts and New Jersey.

"I don't look on it as a defeat but as something that has awakened the hibernating 'Hispanic bear,'" Ruiz said.

"Most of the people . . . who voted in favor of it came from an era — World War I and World War II — who heard people speak other languages, and they were the enemy."

The campaign had been marked by lawsuits and resignations of key proponents, including former CBS anchorman Walter Cronkite, who said he believed the Arizona proposal could hurt minorities.

Open meeting issues inspire controversy

By KELLY PEARCE
State Press

Bicycling and West Hall were hot topics during the first-ever public meeting of the ASU Design Review Board Wednesday, a hearing that at times roared with the heat of intense debate.

Discussions and criticisms about campus bicyclists created a fervor among some of the 50 participants at the meeting, held in the Nursing Building.

Kelly Morris, a 21-year-old senior who said he doesn't ride a bike to school, stood up and defended the bicyclists.

"Bicycling is the mode of getting to classes," Morris said. "Sometimes you need to go through the core of campus."

Morris admitted that bicycle/pedestrian confrontations sometimes lead to injury, but he proposed that a bike path be built only for bicyclists.

But John Meunier, chairman of the DRB and dean of the College of Architecture and Environmental Design, said ASU is a pedestrian campus.

"Bikes would change the character of the campus," if bike traffic remains the same, he said.

"We encourage the use of bikes to get to and from campus, but we don't encourage them to get around campus. They should walk around like anyone else on campus."

However, ASU police Sgt. William Wright said he does not support a bike ban.

"The total banning of bikes is biting off more than I can chew," he said.

Others brought up West Hall, which was slated for destruction by the DRB, an advisory board to President J. Russell Nelson that reviews campus construction and destruction.

"You only like history when it's convenient," Associated Students President John Fees said. "I would like you to have open hearings on historical buildings, like today, to consider all facets of the issue."

The ASASU Senate passed an amendment to save the building, and 90 percent of the student population also voted to save the hall in last year's general election.

Rio Salado

Department of Transportation should provide flood control since ADOT will build the Papago Parkway on the north side of the Salt River, Krigers said.

But ADOT is trying to save money and does not want to pay for flood control east of Mill Avenue, according to Krigers and Tempe Engineer Lee Quaas.

But it may be impossible to build the freeway without flood control, they said, adding that Arizona has a number of options to control floods.

•ADOT could pour concrete into the riverbed and form a riverbank similar to what exists near some Los Angeles freeways.

But Tempe officials have squelched that idea, Krigers said.

"We don't want L.A.," he said. "They (ADOT designers) know that we don't want the L.A. river. They're playing hardball here."

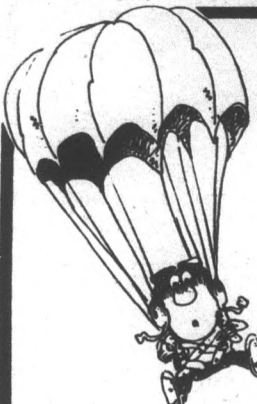

•The state could contribute money to the plans Tempe and ASU have devised.

But the state is reluctant to contribute money to something they don't view as necessary, Krigers and Quaas said.

"ADOT doesn't want to spend money on (flood control) if they don't need to," Quaas said. "And rightly so. If the taxpayer is paying for it, it should be absolutely necessary."

If all the snags are ironed out, two roads will border the dry Rio Salado just north of downtown Tempe. With or without ASU's input, the East Papago Parkway will run along the north side of the river and Tempe's new version of the Rio Salado Parkway will run along the river's southern lip, Krigers said.

Meunier said the destruction of West Hall "is not a closed issue."

Nelson spoke before the meeting, stressing the importance of such events.

"Public hearings are excellent ways for ideas that begin in the University to be discussed before they are actually adopted," he said.

Meunier presented a slide show depicting the DRB's "principles to guide the development of the main campus of ASU," using pictures of buildings and landscapes.

He said the open forum would "have a final impact on the principles."

Revenue trickle-down funds ASU's minor sports

Editor's note: This is the second of a two-part series examining the revenues the ASU athletic department receives. Today's article deals with the distribution of those funds in the University's intercollegiate athletic community.

By CHRISTINE PIRKEY
State Press

Twenty-five varsity sports. Thirty-three full-time employees. More than 1,400 scholarship athletes. All, to some extent, benefit from the approximately $11.5 million the ASU athletic department will make this year.

Although about 82 percent of ASU's athletic revenue is produced by the football program, ASU Athletic Director Charles Harris said other sports also benefit.

The benefits come in the form of financial aid, facilities, sports medicine and continuation of programs in a decade that has seen other Pac-10 schools drop non-revenue producing sports.

Harris said the athletic budgeting process provides each of 25 varsity sports with the maximum number of NCAA scholarships each year. Money is allocated to each sport based on the budget, a budget that he said does not favor any single sport.

"When you run a program with 25 varsity sports like ours does, competes on a national level like ours does and have enjoyed the kind of success that our program has," Harris said, "I don't think you can single out any sport that has benefited more or less."

Scholarships and Tuition waivers.

Since 1985, the ASU athletic department has provided scholarships or tuition waivers to 1,477 athletes, according to figures in the 1987-88 "local" budget. This budget is comprised of revenues not allocated by the state Legislature. Approximately $4.5 million has been spent on both resident and non-resident athletes.

During 1988, 415 scholarships, totaling more than $1.2 million, will be awarded to students from the athletic department.

Harris said that because of the revenue from the football program, the athletic

ASU quarterback Paul Justin was able to practice Wednesday, and coach Larry Marmie said Justin will be the starting quarterback Saturday when the Sun Devils play host to the second-ranked USC Trojans at Sun Devil Stadium.

Devils hope to knock No. 2 USC Trojans off high horse

By DEAN GYORGY
State Press

Many of the Sun Devils could be preparing for the game of their lifetime, as the Southern California Trojans ride into Tempe on Saturday.

"There's probably a little more gleam in their eyes," ASU coach Larry Marmie said. "It's not every week we play the No. 2 team in the country."

"The kind of challenge and opportunity we have this week is something special."

When USC coach Larry Smith was at Arizona before taking the Southern Cal job a season ago, he relished the role of the underdog.

His Wildcat teams not only haunted Arizona State, twice knocking the Devils out of the Rose Bowl, but they had a reputation for knocking other powerhouses off their high horses.

Under Smith, the Cats beat No. 2 UCLA in 1980, No. 1 USC in 1981, No. 9 Notre Dame in 1982, No. 3 SMU in 1985 and No. 4 ASU in 1986.

Not a bad report card. But now Smith is at heritage-rich USC, home of 25 Rose Bowl teams and four Heisman Trophies. Being the underdog can no longer be an advantage or much of a possibility.

"Every team you play is going to play their best football against you," Smith said. "You're not going to sneak up on anybody. There are no gimmicks at (USC)."

Marmie and the Sun Devils are hoping to put together their best game and continue the success ASU has enjoyed over USC in the past.

The Devils have won four of the last five games with USC. They are 3-1 in Sun Devil Stadium. But history is just that, and each game begins with the score 0-0.

USC has the No. 1 defense in the Pac-10 this season. ASU's offense is ranked eighth. On the other side, USC's offense is third, while ASU's defense is seventh.

Leading the Sun Devil offense will be sophomore quarterback Paul Justin, who was forced to leave the Oregon State game with bruised ribs.

There was some doubt this week whether Justin could return from the injury. Marmie said earlier that the Devils' heaviest practice days are Tuesday and Wednesday, and that if Justin could not practice by that time, Daniel Ford would get the call.

Justin did practice Wednesday, and although he said his chest was sore, it did loosen up and he was able to go full out.

Facing USC is something Justin wants to put above any pain.

"I was so mad when I got hurt," Justin said. "This is what I wanted, what I was looking forward to — national TV against USC."

"We probably won't know until he gets hit, how he will survive something like that," Marmie said. "I guess we just don't let him get hit."

Smith said his defense has been "bothered by inconsistency" despite its premier conference ranking. It is a young defense, as only three seniors appear on the two-deep chart.

3-2 victory gives ASU season sweep of U of A

By JOAN MCKENNA
State Press

The ASU volleyball team found an interesting sign hanging in a UofA locker room Wednesday night prior to the Sun Devils' 3-2 win over their rivals in Tucson.

It listed the Wildcats' three goals for the season, with the No. 1 one being to beat ASU both at home and away.

"We kind of struck out their first goal," assistant coach Steve Schlick said after the 2½-hour battle.

The Sun Devils had won their previous UofA match, 3-1, in Tempe.

"I think it (the sign) gave them a lot of incentive," Schlick said. "They were joking about it before the match."

But Schlick said the team "started off a little slow, losing the first game, 15-7, in seven rotations.

"You start to think, 'What's wrong?' and about what changes you need to make," he said. "But we really didn't make any. We just had to keep our heads up and keep plugging."

Perhaps the worst plugging came in game five, when the Wildcats went up early, 5-1. ASU came back from a 12-8 deficit to win the game, 15-13.

"It was a great comeback, really," Schlick said. And when pressed to pick out the one influencing factor, he said, "It goes back to the same thing I always say, and that is Christy Nore."

"She's just everywhere. I don't know how else to say it." Schlick gave examples of several times that Nore would alternate making offensive and defensive saves within the same rally.

"That aggressiveness and never-quit attitude spreads," he said. "I think she did a real good job leadership-wise."

But Schlick added he thought the whole team played well, and "both middles played really well."

"I think UofA is sixth in the nation in blocking. We were basically even with them."

Scores for the match were 7-15, 15-7, 15-12, 13-15, 15-13.

But the Sun Devils will have little time to rest on their laurels, as they head to the Western Michigan Spiker's Club Classic. They open Friday night with a match against seventh-ranked Texas-Arlington.

USC fights 10-year old ghost, deja vu Saturday

Dave Hodges
Sports Editor

The year was 1978. USC's football team entered Sun Devil Stadium with a 4-0 record and a No. 2 national ranking.

The Trojans went on to win the national championship that year, but ASU handed USC its only defeat, 20-7.

It is now 10 years later. USC's football team enters Sun Devil Stadium Saturday with an 8-0 record and a No. 2 national ranking.

Will history repeat itself? The game will be interesting, to say the least.

For USC (6-0 in the Pac-10), it will be a challenge to see if the Trojans can keep from looking ahead to the next two weeks, when they play No. 6 UCLA for the Pac-10 title and No. 1 Notre Dame for a possible national title.

Patterson signs 2 all-stars to letters

By GARY JACKSON
State Press

Two high school seniors committed Wednesday to play for the ASU men's basketball team.

Marlon Jones, a 6-foot-7 forward from Mesa Dobson High School and Brian Camper, a 6-foot-5 guard from Lakewood High School in Calif., signed national letters of intent Wednesday.

"I felt that Arizona State would be the best place for me to get a quality education, as well as participate on a basketball team on the rise," Jones said.

Jones, who was named second team all-state by The Arizona Republic, averaged 20.5 points and 8.5 rebounds per game on the 19-9 Dobson squad that advanced to the quarterfinals last season.

"We feel that Marlon is an outstanding player," ASU head coach Steve Patterson said. "He is a tough, physical player who has very advanced post moves."

Camper, who was the No. 7 vote-getter in the Long Beach Press Telegram's "Best of the West" list, scored 18.5 points, grabbed 6.5 rebounds and passed out five assists per game last season. He led his conference in scoring as Lakewood registered a 19-8 record on the way to its second consecutive C.I.F. 5A semifinal appearance.

Camper was also a first-team member of the all-C.I.F., The Los Angeles Times' all-South Coast and the all-Moore League squads.

"Brian really represents a breakthrough for Arizona State basketball," Patterson said. "He is a blue-chipper who ranks among the top players in the country."

"Brian is a classic big guard who comes from an outstanding high school program. He's a good ball-handler and a good shooter, and he's a proven winner."

department is able to fund scholarships and other programs, such as the sports medicine clinic, for athletes.

"Our commitment here is to provide our student athletes and coaches with every opportunity to be successful athletically and academically," Harris said. "It is also the reason why we have every available scholarship that the NCAA allows funded, to the extent that people can go off and compete.

"We're proud of the ability to be able to fund our programs like that."

'Our commitment here is to provide our student athletes and coaches with every opportunity to be successful athletically and academically.'

— Charles Harris

Other expenditures.

The ASU athletic department also pays money to Student Health Services for medical services, ASU Public Events for staffing and pays for equipment for the varsity sports.

These expenditures eat up approximately $809,000 of the athletic budget. Added to that figure is $113,200, the amount the athletic department estimates it will spend on the upkeep and maintenance of the Mona Plummer Aquatic Complex, according to the local budget.

Athlete of the Week awards.

Some athletic-related funds, specifically Athlete of the Week awards, benefit the entire University, Harris said.

For example, the Honda Motor Co. donated $1,000 to the ASU general scholarship in the name of linebacker Mark Tingstad earlier in the semester.

Harris said this money will benefit the school as a whole, and not the athletic department, as most people would assume.

"That money actually goes back into the general University scholarship fund," Harris said. "Those programs, when set up initially, are specifically designated to go into the general University scholarship fund for non-athletes.

"In that way, some student out there, with absolutely no relationship to the athletic department at all, is going to benefit from it."

Guarantees.

The athletic monetary trickle-down is not limited to ASU. The athletic budget also pays out money to other teams, in the form of guarantees, Harris said. Approximately $1.5 million is paid to universities that play at ASU.

Similarly, ASU is paid almost the same amount in guarantees from other institutions for playing away games, Harris said.

Budget deficit?

Despite its size, Harris said the athletic department faces the same constraints as any other entity trying to make income match expenditures.

While the athletic department began the 1988-89 fiscal year in what looks like a $261,200 debt, Harris said it is a matter of "balancing the books," rather than a debt.

"It just depends on when the books were closed for the fiscal year," Harris said. "When we closed out the books, some of the checks we thought we would get didn't come in.

"It is really a misnomer to categorize it as a debt. It's really a cash-flow issue. We're just out of balance with the general University fund."

Football funds other programs.

While some programs, like baseball, volleyball and gymnastics appear like they can be self-sufficient, they too depend on revenues generated by the football program, Harris said.

Although these sports are not self-sufficient, some coaches agree that, if marketed right, sports such as baseball and gymnastics could support themselves.

Jim Brock, head coach of the Sun Devil baseball team, said the ASU baseball program could be profitable and believes marketing the team would be an important part of that profitability.

But Harris said because of competition with Major League spring training, baseball at ASU will probably never have a chance to stand on its own.

"Our primary enterprise is to have young men come here in the sport of baseball, have them play, have a good experience but really to get a degree," Harris said. "That doesn't put us in the position to have two-night doubleheaders on Tuesday night when the crowds might be better.

"We're satisfied with where we are in baseball. I think we could do more — but I certainly wouldn't get away from the type of scheduling that we have just for the sake of income."

Brock said he is pleased with the way the baseball program is running financially and said it comes close to "maintaining the program, salaries, etc."

But he said it would not be realistic for his program to try to run without revenues created by the Sun Devil football program.

"We're very happy the money is here," Brock said. "Not only do we have tremendous expectations of the program, but so does the community.

"We would not be able to meet that level of expectation if we did not have enough money to travel, recruit or participate to the extent we have.

"We have one of the top two or three programs in the country — if we didn't have the funds, we would have to scale back our operations."

Brock said that in order for the program to be successful, it needs the all of the money it makes at the gate, as well as that from the athletic department. He said without those revenues, the ASU baseball team would have some serious problems.

"If we had the situation here where we didn't get as much money as we do, we would have to scale down our operations," Brock said. "We would have to do less recruiting, be less competitive and it would not be a good situation for us."

Don Robinson, head gymnastics coach, said a few sports at ASU could be profitable for themselves, with gymnastics being one of them. He said it would take money, however, in order to make the gymnastics program able to stand on its own.

"It takes money to make money," Robinson said. "It's very expensive to promote and advertise athletics.

"A few sports could be revenue sports if they do it right, but it's very expensive."

Supporting all of the varsity sports at ASU is important, Robinson said, not only to his team, but to the entire Sun Devil program.

"It's important to us that an athletic department can afford 23 to 25 athletic departments at this school," Robinson said. "Football takes care of all of us — football is big bucks.

"I think we have an outstanding sports department."

Harris said the department tries to allocate the funds that the various athletic programs need, even though it may not always be the amount requested.

"We don't sit around and try to figure out who got the better end of the deal and who did not," Harris said. "The question is if a program is good, makes sense and is within the goals and philosophies of the University, then you try and do it.

"It's that ability that makes this a great institution."

Suns beat Mavs for 1st win

PHOENIX (AP) — Eddie Johnson scored 37 points and Armon Gilliam had 11 of his 19 in a pivotal third period as the Phoenix Suns overcame a shaky start to beat the Dallas Mavericks 111-103 Wednesday night.

The Suns, now 1-2 under new coach Cotton Fitzsimmons, made just six of 22 from the field in the first quarter to fall behind 31-14.

They trailed 38-15 early in the second quarter before Johnson reeled off 17 points on two free throws and seven jump shots — including a 3-point goal — to bring Phoenix within 54-47 at halftime.

Gilliam capped a 25-16 run with a 10-foot jumper to put the Suns ahead to stay at 72-70 with 5:56 left in the third quarter, and rookie Dan Majerle added eight points a 90-82 lead at the end of the period.

Dallas closed to 98-95 with 5:04 to play on Rolando Blackman's turnaround jumper, but Johnson scored eight points in a 10-4 Phoenix run for a 108-99 lead with 2:07 remaining.

The Mavericks never got within five down the stretch.

Viola Cy Young winner; 1st on 27 of 28 ballots

NEW YORK (AP) — Frank Viola, the Minnesota Twins left-hander who led the major leagues in victories in compiling a 24-7 record, was named winner of the 1988 American League Cy Young Award on Wednesday.

Viola received 27 of a possible 28 first-place votes and 138 of a possible 140 points from the Baseball Writers' Association of America. Dennis Eckersley of the Oakland Athletics got the other first-place vote and was second with 52 points.

Mark Gubicza of the Kansas City Royals was third with 26 points. Dave Stewart of Oakland had 16, Bruce Hurst of the Boston Red Sox had 12 and teammate Roger Clemens, Cy Young winner in 1986 and 1987, had eight.

"I didn't know what to expect," Viola said from his Orlando, Fla., home. "I didn't want to worry about it. You don't want to get your hopes too high so that they get shot down."

Viola, the first Twins player to win since Jim Perry in 1970, said there was no reason to be upset that he wasn't a unanimous pick.

"Twenty-seven out of 28, that's not bad, is it?" he said.

Viola, most valuable player of the 1987 World Series, had a 2.64 earned-run average this season and 193 strikeouts, ranking third in the AL in each department.

"It took me five-plus years to find this kind of consistency. This year is just a carryover from last year," Viola said just before the season ended. "It's been a dream. Any pitcher who tells you he doesn't dream of winning 20 games or starting the All-Star Game or winning the Cy Young is a flat-out liar. I know that after the season ends, it will have been a pretty good year to look back on."

Viola, 15-2 at the break, was the winning pitcher for the American League in the All-Star Game. His 20th victory of the season came on Aug. 30 against Texas. It also was the 100th victory of his career.

"Actually, the goal of winning 100 was more important to me," Viola said. "It means you go out there every fourth day, be consistent and stay healthy. I just hope the next 100 are a little easier than the first 100."

Viola won 19 consecutive games in the Metrodome over 25 starts between May 22, 1987, and last July 27. And he won two more home starts during the 1987 World Series.

Twins Manager Tom Kelly said Viola's performance created expectations that were impossible to fulfill.

"He doesn't have an 'S' on his shirt," Kelly said. "A lot of people around here think he's Superman and is strong as an ox every three or four games. There's just no way."

Although he has settled into Minnesota life, Viola is a native New Yorker and at one time wanted to play in his hometown.

"I'd be so close to home and I'd have a chance to make so much money in commercials," he said. "I was MVP of the World Series in Minnesota last year and, except for Disney World, I haven't endorsed anything."

Now he's not so sure he wants to go home.

"The more I've learned about baseball organizations, the more I've realized that it would be hard to go home again," Viola said. "We may not get the big commercial money here in Minnesota, but we do get some privacy and some peace of mind."

He's so well-liked in Minneapolis that when a poll was held asking whom the Vikings should start at quarterback, Viola got five votes.

Oregon in critical game after consecutive losses

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP) — Oregon coach Rich Brooks knows a victory over Arizona at Tucson on Saturday is imperative if the Ducks hope to get a bowl bid for the first time since 1964.

"A win is critical," Brooks said Wednesday in his weekly telephone news conference. "A lot of bids are made after this week's games. Both Arizona and us have an opportunity for postseason play."

The Ducks, after an impressive 6-1 start that saw them vault into the Top 20, have dropped two straight games. The Ducks are 3-3 in the Pac-10 Conference after their 16-6 loss to UCLA.

Arizona, 5-4 overall and 3-3 in the Pac-10, is coming off a big 16-13 victory over Washington.

Stopping the wishbone run-and-shoot offense of the Wildcats will be a major task, Brooks said.

"It will be an adjustment for our defense, to defend their wishbone run and shoot combo. It will require a tremendous amount of discipline," he said. "My biggest concern is that we don't take fakes. We can't get fooled."

Offensively, the Ducks have stumbled in recent weeks. While much of that can be attributed to the season-ending injury of starting quarterback Bill Musgrave, Brooks said his team has failed to make the big play.

"We've fallen into the funk of not coming up with the big plays. We haven't broken any runs or hit any long passes," he said.

The key to Oregon offensive success Saturday will be how the Ducks control the line of scrimmage. "My main concern is whether we can block up front. I'm impressed with their physical defense. The last two or three weeks they have really played outstanding," Brooks said.

And, once again, quarterback Pete Nelson will be in the spotlight. Brooks praised Nelson, even though he threw no touchdowns and two interceptions in the UCLA loss.

"He just needs to be more consistent in his technique of stepping up into the pocket," the coach said. "He's just got to settle down, relax and learn to read defenses a little more. He's got to let his ability take over."

Familiarity part of Wheeler's, Waller's game in backcourt

By GARY JACKSON

State Press

Basketball guards are supposed to work together and know each other's moves. And even though Ron Waller is a freshman and Tarence Wheeler has a year's college experience, these two guards may be more familiar with each other's game than most backcourts.

"We've been playing together as long as I can remember," Wheeler said. "I know him backwards and forwards, and he knows me backwards and forwards."

"We're like brothers and he listens to me."

The two lived around the corner from each other growing up in Detroit.

"He's like a big brother," Waller said. "He gets on me when I'm not doing well."

"He knows I have the potential to do better."

Although Wheeler is less than a year older than Waller, he is two years ahead of him in school. Despite Wheeler's jump on experience, he said he does not expect a huge gap in abilities.

"At first he may have a few nervous moments, but he'll be fine," Wheeler said. "Mental preparation is the only difference between him and me and now we're in Arizona, not Detroit."

Both athletes hail from Southwestern High School in the highly-competitive Detroit school system. Wheeler said their coach, Perry Watson, made them play at both guard positions to prepare them for collegiate play.

Wheeler is renowned for his abilities as both a point and scoring guard.

"In this day and age, I think it's best to be more well-rounded," Wheeler said. "The more flexible you are the more chances you have."

Wheeler said that raw talent also plays a factor in being interchangeable at guard. Like Wheeler, Waller has played the two positions in high school and is practicing both at ASU.

During practice the two often have a chance to go up against each other, Wheeler said.

"After practice we talk about who gets who," he said. "If he get's me, I'm going to get him back."

After playing against him in Monday's scrimmage at Scottsdale Saguaro High School, Wheeler said Waller played his best since arriving at ASU.

"I knew he wasn't going to come in here and lie down because of the way we were brought up," Wheeler said. "He might earn playing time after the first 10 games."

"It depends on how fast he picks up on the system and how fast he produces."

Waller scored 20 points, taking the ball to the basket in

Hodges

For the Sun Devils (6-3, 3-2), the stakes may not be quite as high, but a victory would raise ASU's record to 7-3 and virtually assure ASU of a minor bowl bid. A loss would keep the bowl picture clouded, depending on the outcomes of other games.

Is there any magic left on the Tempe Turf? After last weekend's late-game heroics by the Sun Devils and the Phoenix Cardinals, it is not known how much more excitement the stadium can take. The field may be in bad shape, but think how crazy the crowd will be if ASU beats the Trojans and the Cards beat the New York Giants. Can you say dementia?

In fact, ASU could break the all-time attendance record in Sun Devil Stadium this weekend. With the south end zone expansion, the stadium's capacity now is listed at 72,168. The largest crowd at Sun Devil Stadium was 72,345 against Arizona on Nov. 23, 1985.

The game also will be televised to 70 percent of the country on ABC-TV. The Arizona sunshine and wild gold-clad fans always look good on television and is an important, albeit subtle, recruiting tool.

But with all the hype and hoopla surrounding the game, how about the teams? Are our players good enough to beat theirs?

Well, our players are injured and theirs are not.

Their starting quarterback is a Heisman Trophy candidate. Ours is hurting.

But ASU is the only Pac-10 team with a winning record against the Men of Troy. Can history repeat itself? Yes. Will history repeat itself? . . . USC 28-21.

Last week's picks finished 4-1 (.800) and the season record is 23-9-1 (.712).

ASU's bowl hopes may depend on the outcome of the Oregon/Arizona game in Tucson.

The Wildcats (5-4, 3-3) kept their bowl hopes alive with an upset victory over Washington. A win this week could set up the possibility that the winner of the ASU/Arizona game later this month would go to a bowl game.

Oregon (6-3, 3-3) can clinch a bowl bid with a victory. The Ducks have lost to ASU and UCLA during the last two weeks and really must win Saturday to gain back any sort of momentum.

UO still plays at Oregon State Nov. 19 and at Hawaii Dec. 3.

The Ducks may slowly be sinking . . . Arizona, 17-14.

UCLA may have the same problem USC has — looking ahead to its matchup Nov. 19. But the sixth-ranked Bruins (8-1, 5-1) have a somewhat easier foe — the Stanford Cardinal.

UCLA was involved in a defensive struggle in its 16-6 victory over the Ducks last week, but quarterback Troy Aikman should have the Bruins back on track. After all, it's a must-win game for UCLA. A loss by the Bruins, combined with a USC win over ASU, would give the Trojans the Pac-10 championship . . . UCLA, 28-13.

Other Pac-10 games:

Washington 21, California 10.

Washington State 35, Oregon State 17.

several one-on-one situations.

"Sometimes I surprise my own self," he said. "I'm in control when I'm in the air."

Although Waller was impressive in the intra-squad meet, Wheeler said the level of competition in a scrimmage does not compare to playing teams like UCLA and Stanford.

Since arriving at ASU, Waller has been learning the Sun Devil offensive style to enhance his play at point guard.

"I'm not trying to rush anything," Waller said. "I played point guard in high school, but high school is different than college."

"I just have to learn the system and I'll be fine."

Waller said he is progressing at a fast pace because of the examples set by Wheeler, who is in his second year at ASU.

"He's always been a great competitor because he's so self-motivating," Waller said. "We're best friends until we step onto the basketball court."

"When you're playing basketball you don't have any friends — you have a job to do."

Wheeler was his best friend in high school and has been a mentor here, but Waller said he also shares several similarities with Adrian Brown, another Sun Devil freshman who plays guard.

Both have the ability to play at either guard position and are expected to play a dominant role in ASU's future.

Waller came to ASU after assistant coach Bob Schermerhorn saw him play in an all-star game in Indiana.

Schermerhorn then asked Wheeler about Waller's past, but the junior really did not act like a middleman in persuading Waller to come here.

Along with ASU, DePaul and the University of Southern Florida recruited him heavily, Waller said. But DePaul did not seem to be as disciplined in the coaching style as ASU, he said.

Waller said all the turmoil with last year's team is in the past and he is happy to work under Coach Steve Patterson and the staff.

Tarence Wheeler (left) and Ron Waller, both members of ASU's basketball team, went to the same high school in Detroit. Both men are expected to play a large role this year for the Sun Devils, who open the season Wednesday against Athletes in Action at the Activity Center.

Cross country runners to enter district meet as individuals

By GARY JACKSON
State Press

Although ASU will not enter cross country teams in Saturday's NCAA District VIII Championships, four Sun Devils will compete in the Fresno, Calif., meet.

Senior Teresa Barrios, junior Amy Komitzky, junior Mike Frick and sophomore Todd Lewis, competing as individuals, will take their first steps toward possibly earning national titles.

The top two teams and three fastest individual finishers not competing with a team, will continue on to the Nov. 21 NCAA Championship meet at Iowa State University.

Although the district meet would provide experience for the younger runners, cross country coach Ken Lehman said it may be harmful to send them if they are tired or injured at this stage of the season.

"Any big race is good experience for any runner," Lehman said. "But this may discourage them more than help them."

"You also have to be a little realistic in who can do what in the district meet."

Although Barrios finished fourth in the Oct. 31 Pac-10

Conference Championship at Stanford, the other ASU runners failed to place in the top 30.

When young and inexperienced runners compete on a tough course such as Stanfords, results like those of the conference meet can be expected, Lehman said.

Lehman said he had been optimistic about Barrios' potential throughout the season, and she finally proved it to herself in the conference meet.

"I think she'll do really well because she gained a lot of confidence in the Pac-10 race," Lehman said.

Barrios said she has high expectations for the upcoming race.

"I think I can run better than I did a couple weeks ago," she said. "I just wasn't feeling well the week before."

"I had a little bit of a virus, but I'm over that and feeling good."

Although she competed at the Fresno course before, while attending Mira Costa College in Calif., Barrios said it would not be an advantage because most of the other teams in the district frequently run there.

Barrios said teammate Komitzky deserves to go to the meet, which will prove to be an advantage for her when she competes next season.

"She has worked really hard," Barrios said. "She's one of the hardest workers on the team and will benefit the most on the team."

Mike Frick has progressed steadily throughout the season, which is why he is going to the district meet, Lehman said. The flat course at Fresno also better suits Frick's track-style of running as opposed to the hills of Stanford, he said.

Frick, who finished 39th in the conference meet, beat Lewis, who was 45th, although he normally had produced the top performances for the men's team.

"Both of them are going to have to run really well — better than they have all year," Lehman said.

Lewis said he is expecting to improve his marks for the district meet.

"I wasn't really happy with what happened at the Pac-10s," he said. "I'm going into districts with an attitude that I can only get better."

Devils to host Jayhawks in first home swim meet

By CHRIS NACKINO
State Press

ASU men's and women's swim teams will play host to its first collegiate competition Saturday against the University of Kansas at the Mona Plummer Aquatic Center.

Competition for both the men's and women's teams will begin at 9:30 a.m., and men's head coach Ron Johnson said he expects the team to turn in top performances.

"This will be a tough meet," he said. "University of Kansas is a pretty good team... they are strong in the sprint freestyle, backstroke and relay events. They can give us a good meet."

The men will be led in the freestyle events by two-time NCAA qualifiers Eric Fuchs and sophomore Scott Benesch.

"Our strongest events are in distance freestyle — the 200, 500 and 1000-meters," Johnson said. "Although we will be without returning Olympian Paul Howe, we should provide tough competition."

Howe, a junior, returned from his trip to the Olympics last Monday and is expected to compete for the Sun Devils within the coming weeks.

Also expected to provide strength in distance events are four talented freshman: Mark Arnold, Cliff Arslanian, Bob Childs and Craig Day.

Leading the men in the butterfly event will be freshmen Terry Flock and Keith Dennison, along with two NCAA qualifiers, senior Rich Shinnick and junior David Fix.

Senior Marc Strauch and sophomores Bill Bass and Kurt Van Ness will provide depth in the breaststroke.

The men earned their first collegiate victory last weekend against UNLV. Although the team consists primarily of freshmen and sophomores, Johnson said he was pleased with the performance.

"I was happy with the outcome of the meet," Johnson said. "This is a better class than I expected and I think that we have a super-talented group. If they keep going like this, we should have a great season."

Last year the men placed fifth in the Pac-10 and finished 17th at the NCAA Championships.

The women's team also will be led by the strength of freshmen Heidi Hendricks and Kristen Neidhoefer, along with several 1987 all-Americans like juniors Susie Mortenson and Bente Rist.

"Kansas is a pretty good team," Hill said. "They've been in good standing in the Big 8 and they scored at Nationals. They are pretty solid."

The women's team will look to surpass last year's record of 15-8-1, which included a fifth place finish in the Pac-10 and 6th at NCAAs.

"We have some girls out of the water right now," Hill said. "But we will see how they'll do."

"I expect us to win."

Tendinitis plagues Bird; surgery a consideration

BOSTON (AP) — Larry Bird of the Boston Celtics is suffering from a recurrence of tendinitis in his Achilles tendons and surgery is a possibility, team officials said Wednesday night.

"We don't want to do anything unnecessary, but there won't be any procrastination," General Manager Jan Volk said. "We don't want to wait until February or March to make a decision."

Bird was in two minds about his situation. "I had the same problem two years ago, so I'm not really concerned now," he said. "I'm always concerned because I want to play, and it's early in the season."

Dr. Arnie Scheller, the Celtics' physician, said Bird aggravated the condition in games on consecutive nights against the New York Knicks and the Philadelphia 76ers last Friday and Saturday.

Scheller said Bird's therapy and medication were modified and the superstar's condition would be reassessed after Wednesday night's game with the Chicago Bulls at Boston Garden.

"Some treatments we would consider would be an injection to relieve the swelling," he said.

He added that surgery is a possibility, but a decision on that is not likely for "the next two or three weeks."

The doctor confirmed earlier reports that if surgery is necessary Bird would be sidelined for 10 to 12 weeks.
