Nelson offers to exchange staff holidays

By TERESA OWEN
State Press

Presidents Day will be eliminated from ASU's 1989 holiday schedule if the Board of Regents approves ASU President J. Russell Nelson's decision to cancel the Feb. 20 holiday.

Nelson had eliminated Dec. 26 as a holiday in exchange for the [Jan. 16 Martin Luther King Jr. holiday. Under Nelson's plan, Presidents Day would replace the Dec. 26 as a workday, and will be effective this February if the regents approve it Saturday.

Nelson said he chose Presidents Day because he believes it will cause the fewest problems.

"I thought it was the most broadly accepted alternative," he said.

Two weeks ago, Nelson asked the Classified Staff Association, Associated Students and the Faculty Senate for alternatives to the 1989 holiday schedule because ASU staffers complained that working the day after Christmas would disrupt time with their families.

In addition, staffers also were upset because a Dec. 26 workday would not have affected students or faculty because it was during a semester break.

In its suggestions, the 3,000 member association recommended they work Veterans Day in order to observe the Martin Luther King Jr. holiday. The staffers chose Presidents Day as their second choice.

Associated Students did not make a suggestion, and the Faculty Senate recommended exchanging Veterans Day or Presidents Day for the King holiday.

J. Russell Nelson

"I do not see eliminating Presidents Day, Labor Day nor Independence Day, as these are distinctly Americanized holidays," said John Fees, Associated Students President, in a letter to Nelson.

State law allows state employees, including ASU staffers, 10 paid holidays.

Vince Micone, Associated Students campus affairs vice president, said ASASU is pleased that the University is recognizing the King holiday, but he said ASASU's "first choice was and still is Dec. 26 because it would affect students the least," he said.

Micone said Presidents Day will affect everyone equally, but he expects many students to respond negatively.

"Everyone will share the same responsibility," he said. "But Presidents Day is recognized to represent the history of our nation. Neither Veterans Day nor Presidents Day should be negated to observe the Martin Luther King Jr. holiday."

Associate professor Barbara Lafford, left, and Peter Horwath, chairman of the Department of Foreign Languages, are faced Tuesday with having to turn away more than 1,000 students who pre-registered for foreign language classes. Officials said the problem is due to lack of classroom space, not interest in expanding the curriculum. The Language and Literature Building houses the department.

ASU department runs out of room

By SHERI JOHNSON
State Press

More than 1,000 ASU students who pre-registered for foreign language classes for the 1989 spring semester will be shut out.

And one language professor said that even if the University were to add 100 teachers and sections to accommodate the students, there wouldn't be any place to put them.

"There just simply isn't any more room," said Barbara Lafford, an associate language professor. "With all of this construction going on, not one of those buildings contains a classroom (for language students).

"It just makes me so sad to see these kids, who now have a tuition hike, and they can't get into any of the classes that they're required to take."

Lafford said the department tried to accommodate more students this semester by giving about 60 overrides, but it did not work out.

"This last fall we let in about two or three people in each section," she said, adding that there were a lot of complaints because there was not enough lab space.

"It was, in retrospect, a very bad decision," she said.

Peter Horwath, chairman of the Department of Foreign Languages, said the department cannot accommodate all of the students who applied because it does not have the money to offer enough foreign language classes.

"It's not a University problem, nor a College of Language and Fine Arts problem," he said. "It's a state of Arizona problem. Do you raise taxes or not?"

Horwath said the lower-division Spanish and French classes closed first.

"In most sections, but especially in French and Spanish, we have to turn away students left and right," he said.

Although 1,906 students applied for lower-division Spanish courses, only 1,248 were placed. Also, 794 students requested lower-division French classes, but only 672 were admitted.

Two signs taped to the counter in the foreign language office warn students that no overrides will be given for the lower-division Spanish and French courses.

Other closed sections are German 201, Italian 102, Russian 101 and Japanese 202.

One incoming transfer student, who asked not to be named because she is afraid she may lose a scholarship opportunity if identified, was one of the students denied a Spanish 101 class.

"I'm just about ready to quit school over this whole thing," she said. "I'm up against a wall."

The 38-year-old student is a mother of two boys, one of whom has a respiratory disease. She said she has to take all of her classes in the morning to be available for her 9-year-old son in the afternoon.

"I promised my children I wouldn't go to school at night," she said.

State in 'economic tailspin,' experts say

By TYRONE MEIGHAN
Contributing Writer

Not too long ago, Arizona led the nation in employment. The construction industry was booming and the state was gripped with a build, build, build fever.

But in the last two years, high vacancy rates and low numbers of new residents have driven the state into an economic tailspin that some economists say will be difficult to come out of.

And the state continues to keep building.

"If the other states remain stable, it would drop us to something like 40th to 44th" in the total number of jobs available, said Sharla Kivett, research analyst at the Arizona Real Estate Center at ASU.

The state currently is 37th in employment in the United States with Nevada at number one.

Kivett said Arizona usually does better than its surrounding states, but a frenzy of construction in the early 1980s has left the state overbuilt and short of new job possibilities.

"Except for recessions, this is the first time since the late '60s that we have performed worse than the states around us," she said.

'We got so used to being number one in job creation . . . that some people thought it was going to go on forever.'

— Lee McPheters

Lee McPheters, an economics professor and director of ASU's Economic Outlook Center, said the good times of a booming economy from 1980 to 1986 made state planners complacent.

"We got so used to being number one in job creation, we got so accustomed to having as many as 2,000 people a week moving to the metropolitan Phoenix area that some people thought it was going to go on forever," he said.

In 1985, Arizona had a net in-migration of 65,000 people, but the figure dropped to 20,000 this year.

McPheters said the loss of construction jobs and the drop in job growth has created a less-than-desirable state for young people to migrate to.

"Job growth in construction is always very strong in an economic expansion in Arizona, but in the last two years, we've lost over 20,000 construction jobs," he said. "In California, in the same period, they've added about 50,000."

Workers migrate to California because, since August 1987, it has been adding 4,000 new jobs a month and Arizona has been losing 1,000 a month. Arizona currently has about 93,000 construction jobs.

"Nobody has given serious thought to what comes next in Arizona," said ASU finance professor Marie Sushka. "I don't

Iranian government links efforts to free foreign hostages

TEHRAN, Iran (AP) — A government official indicated Tuesday that Iran is linking efforts to free foreign hostages in Lebanon with the fate of Iranians believed held there.

"There aren't just American hostages in Lebanon, but there also are Iranian hostages, who are in the hands of Christian militiamen," said Mohammed Javad Larijani, Iran's deputy foreign minister.

He made the comment after meeting with West German Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher, whose three-day visit to Tehran was dominated by the hostage issue.

Larijani was referring to three Iranians who disappeared with their Lebanese driver in 1982 and were presumed kidnapped by Christian Phalangist gunmen. The four are widely believed to have died. No group claimed responsibility for their kidnapping.

"Western nations, especially the United States, have close ties to (the Phalangists)," Larijani said. "We want all hostages to be free, the Iranians as well, and we will work as much as we can so that they are freed."

Genscher has offered to act as mediator in gaining the release of 14 Western hostages, including nine Americans, believed held in Lebanon by pro-Iranian Shiite Moslem extremists, West German government sources in Bonn said.

Longest held of the 14 hostages is Terry Anderson, 41, chief Middle East correspondent for The Associated Press, who was kidnapped in Beirut on March 16, 1985.

In addition Peter Winkler, 32, a Swiss employee of the Red Cross, was abducted by three unidentified gunmen Nov. 17 in Sidon, 25 miles south of Beirut. No group has claimed responsibility for the kidnapping.

Commission orders inspection of nation's 110 nuclear plants

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Nuclear Regulatory Commission has ordered the nation's 110 nuclear plants to locate and test possibly counterfeit and faulty circuit breakers installed in safety systems, an NRC spokesman confirmed Tuesday.

Spokesman Frank Ingram said a Nov. 22 bulletin issued by the commission found that recent inspections "indicate a potential safety concern regarding electrical equipment supplied to nuclear power plants."

However, a counterfeit or faulty breaker has never been blamed for any kind of incident at a nuclear plant, Ingram said.

Justice Department will review DEA drug seizure practices

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Justice Department said Tuesday it will review a Drug Enforcement Administration practice of sometimes arranging for local police to make well-publicized seizures of drugs brought into the United States under the control of DEA operatives.

Associate Attorney General Francis Keating, the No. 3 official in the Justice Department, plans to meet with DEA officials to discuss the matter, said Loye Miller, a department spokesman.

The meeting stems from a Houston Chronicle story Sunday which said the DEA had arranged at least two drug seizures by state or local authorities in the Houston area to generate false news reports, which would protect the identity of DEA undercover operatives.

The undercover operatives sometimes pose as middlemen and ship loads of narcotics into the United States for South American druglords.

The DEA on occasion then arranges for local law enforcement agents to seize the incoming drug shipments in an attempt to insulate the operatives from disclosure, said DEA sources, speaking on condition of anonymity.

Students line up for measles vaccinations Tuesday

By MICHELLE ALLMAN
State Press

Nearly 350 students lined up for measles vaccinations Tuesday, an effort organized by ASU and county officials who hope to stem a possible epidemic of the disease on campus.

Nurses with the Maricopa County Health Department joined nurses with the Student Health Center for more than six hours to administer special measles vaccinations for anyone who felt they could be infected.

The free immunizations, which will continue today in the MU and year-round at the Student Health Center, were stepped up following the measles diagnosis last week of Sun Devil linebacker Drew Metcalf.

"We've had a fair response, especially from the football team and athletic department," said health center nursing supervisor Deon Rasmussen.

Students in Metcalf's classes are advised to get a measles shot if they were immunized before 1968 or before they were 15 months old, Rasmussen said. Students who are unsure of their inoculation date also are advised to get the shot.

The gestation period for measles is about 14 days — the exact amount of time between Metcalf's suspected exposure to the disease and his diagnosis. The most communicable period of the disease came when Metcalf was unaware he had measles and was attending classes.

Meanwhile, Metcalf is recovering well, said Dr. Monty Roth, the director of ASU's Student Health Center. The starting linebacker for the Sun Devils was hospitalized Thursday and released Monday.

"It sure is a sobering experience for him," Roth said.

A spokeswoman for Arizona's Department of Health Services said state health officials fear that Metcalf's measles could spur an epidemic similar to the one in 1985-86 at Northern Arizona University.

"We want to prevent that from ever happening again," said B. J. Laing, Department of Health Services nursing consultant for vaccine-preventable diseases.

"This is a highly communicable disease. There could definitely be another epidemic."

Laing said college-age students are at the highest risk of being seriously ill with measles.

"They get higher fevers and more secondary infections," she said, adding that most people 18 years and older who get measles spend time in a hospital.

Laing said there currently are several suspected cases at ASU, although none have been reported to the University or Maricopa County since Metcalf's diagnosis.

"So far, there have been no other cases," said Charles Juels, the Maricopa County Disease Control director. "There is always a chance, though, that some people caught it before they got shots."

U of M presidency finalists discuss experience

The Associated Press

MINNEAPOLIS — Talk of experience in dealing with university problems was a common thread Tuesday as the three finalists for president of the troubled University of Minnesota discussed their qualifications for the position.

A Swedish-born vice president of the University of Arizona with 18 years' experience at Minnesota; the Minnesota Law School dean, and the University of Maryland's interim president held news conferences the day before one is to be named to head the 54,500-student University of Minnesota system.

"I am a relatively low-key person and I don't think I scare people," said Nils Hasselmo, 57, who noted his handling of a dispute involving Arizona's Mexican-American community and the University of Arizona's Spanish and Portuguese departments.

Hasselmo, who joined the University of Minnesota in 1965 as an assistant professor in the Scandinavian department and rose to vice president of administration and planning before leaving in 1983 for Arizona, also emphasized his rapport with those outside the university community.

"Through my work as a linguist . . . I felt I got to know rural Minnesotans," Hasselmo said.

While doing research on Swedish settlers in the Chisago Lakes area of Minnesota in the late 1960s, the Swedish-born Hasselmo said, he made lasting friendships while interviewing and staying with elderly immigrants.

Hasselmo said he is being considered for other jobs but declined to identify them.

William E. Kirwan, interim president of the University of Maryland, initially said he had not made up his mind about whether he would take the Minnesota job if chosen. Later, when asked about his reservations, Kirwan, 50, said he didn't have any. "My expectation is that I would accept it if offered," he said.

Kirwan stressed his outsider's fresh perspective, and his handling of the fallout from University of Maryland basketball player Len Bias' cocaine-induced death in 1986 and a merger that expanded the university system from five to 11 campuses.

"When you're in the center of the maelstrom, so to speak, you get the perception that things are worse than they really are," he said. "This institution is much larger than any particular set of circumstances that occurred."

Stein, 50, like Hasselmo is a former vice president of administration and planning at Minnesota. He has been dean of the university's Law School since 1979. Most recently he's been interim President Richard Sauer's liaison with athletic programs since men's athletic director Paul Giel was fired in July.

"Although we have been through some difficult times in recent months, there is much to look forward to with high expectations," said Stein, who emphasized a desire to put behind the university's troubled past and restore trust.

"I believe the '90s can be a golden era for the university — a time of renewal and revitalization," he said.

The candidates' public interviews with the Board of Regents will start Wednesday morning, with the selection to follow.

The new president will replace Kenneth Keller, who resigned March 13 amid a controversy over cost overruns in the remodeling of his campus office and official residence. Sauer, who said from the beginning that he did not want the permanent position, recently announced that he will leave at the end of the year to head the National 4-H Council in Chevy Chase, Md.

Hasselmo, Kirwan and Stein were selected as finalists from a pool of 227 applicants and nominees.

Tuition vote

Compromise is the way

It's going to be freezing in Flagstaff this weekend.

But it's going to be boiling inside the building at NAU where the Arizona Board of Regents will meet to discuss the hot topic of tuition hikes — and to decide if some students are going to be forced out of school and into the cold.

The 500-plus students who jammed into the Great Hall at ASU's College of Law three weeks ago to protest a proposed $156 tuition hike did have an impact, at least on Arizona Board of Regents member Andrew Hurwitz.

And when the regents head for the high country Friday to debate and cast their final votes on the fate of financially strapped students at Arizona's three universities, that impact may produce tangible results.

Hurwitz, arguably the most student-conscious regent on the 11-member board, has come up with a brilliant plan for his colleagues to discuss. A plan that is the perfect compromise; because while it acknowledges that tuition must rise somewhat, it provides help for those students who simply can't squeeze out another dime for academic fees.

The proposal calls for either a $84 or $118 tuition hike, with a so-called "harmless clause" attached that would give waivers to students who qualify, exempting them from paying the increase.

The plan demonstrates that at least some of the regents recognize the validity of what hundreds of students told them during the tuition hearing at the Great Hall — that a large number of students are going to be forced out of college and out of an education if a large increase is approved.

There are some questions about the Hurwitz proposal — such as which students will qualify for the waivers and how their need will be determined — and such a plan would thus require careful and constant attention on the part of student leaders to ensure it is executed fairly. But the idea is innovative and speaks to the major concern of the student body — protecting the educational future of those who are living on the edge of exclusion from the University.

The idea is a good one, but the battle is hardly won. There will be opposition by those who don't fully understand what is at stake for some students.

If the plan is to succeed, inspired efforts by student leaders will be necessary in these final days before the Flagstaff meeting to get enough regent votes lined up on the side of the $84 compromise. And that means the Arizona Students Association, made up of delegates from the three universities, must present a united front up North and firmly endorse the Hurwitz plan — which is probably the best chance students have to cut a workable deal with the regents. And it means that students should let the regents know their feelings about it, too, with last-minute phone calls to their offices.

Never before have Arizona students turned out in such force to fight for their educational opportunity, and a student victory, of sorts, is possible this weekend. Let's hope that the regents keep in mind the stories they heard three weeks ago as they meet on the icy campus of NAU. The stories of students who are struggling for the basics of life — food, clothing and shelter — while fighting to get their degree.

And let's hope they exempt such students from any tuition increase.

That way, no one will be frozen out of a college education.

Day care a necessity

Editor:

I, for one, applaud Mr. Hostetler's series of columns involving the necessity for adequate day care for ASU faculty and students.

Drop in services are not a luxury, they are a necessity for a progressive university that cares about community involvement and availability of higher education for all.

The ASU administration must recognize that a university is not successfully marketed solely with high-tech research contracts and 8 by 10 glossy catalog photos of impressive buildings and "green space." The University has an obligation to stand behind the needs of the people they hire and minds and attitudes they help form.

Column repeat unfair

Editor:

I am writing this letter in response to the editorial article by Darrin Hostetler that appeared on the opinion page of the State Press on Nov. 18, and which originally appeared on July 21.

My wife and I are the parents of the 15 year old who has been charged with the murder of Christine Buffone. I emphasize the word "charged" because he has not been proven guilty in a court of law for the crime, just charged.

When the article in question originally ran on July 21, my wife and I were upset because it seemed to us that our son was being tried and convicted in the press. It wasn't only this article, but all of the other articles that had run in all of the Valley newspapers. It upset us then and it really upsets us now. The second time it was run, Nov. 18, all of the details in the article had nothing to do with appealing to ASU to provide child care facilities.

I personally feel that if Maricopa Community College can afford to have a child care facility for its students, then why can't Arizona State University. It's not like the parents/students are asking for the world, but for a place where their children can be taken care of while they are attending classes and/or labs.

Richard A. Mellem

Majority rules

Editor:

I have a question about Carolyn Hofig's article of Nov. 17. In her column titled "Mofford should reconsider signing 106 into law" Hofig asks if "a 'majority' is always right — or simply more numerous?" Well isn't the point of a general election that the majority is both?

Our nation's system of government is based on the fact that no power may govern without the consent of the governed. More than 50 percent of the voting population of this state voted "yes" on Proposition 106. It must become law just as the next gubernatorial candidate who receives more than 50 percent of the vote must become governor.

If there is something illegal about 106, let the Supreme Court declare it unconstitutional. Or better yet, in the next possible election another proposition should be put to the voters to repeal 106. If the majority of voters wish it to be so, it will be.

A confusing message would be sent to the public if our government were to say, "Everyone get out there and vote, not that it really matters. If we don't like the results we will do what we feel is correct." The rights of the minority must be protected. But never at the expense of the power of the vote.

Pro-lifers, wake up!

Editor:

Up until recently, I have taken comfort in calling myself "pro-life" and in donating money to the pro-life cause. I am grateful that through my recent pro-life, direct-action involvement and my participation in Operation Rescue, I am now painfully aware of how little I have done. Those of you who, like me, know that abortion is murder and do so little, wake up!

Oh, that poor little aborted baby. How her heart beat and how she moved around, avoiding that suction machine in her last few moments of life!

And how we shall grieve when we look upon that tiny child; no name, no baptism, no funeral.

Oh, and how with accusing eyes she should look at us, we who knew.

King holiday: How about Fourth of July?

Editor:

I have an idea concerning the Martin Luther King Jr. holiday. Why not celebrate him and what he fought for on July Fourth? It is my understanding that this day is the day we celebrate our independence.

My impression is that Dr. King wanted all men and women to be included in that celebration. Now thanks partly to him, it is a day on which we can fully celebrate the freedom and independence of all men and women in America without ignoring our veterans. It seems to me that if we give Dr. King a holiday we would need to give serious thought to giving Susan B. Anthony a holiday.

Let's celebrate their memory by celebrating their message on the day that has already been set aside for it — July Fourth.

Good loser

One Democrat's complacency takes all the fun out of GOP win

Mike Royko
Tribune Media Services

The scowl on the face of my conservative friend Grump was even deeper than usual, which surprised me. So I asked what was troubling him.

"Obviously, I am depressed," he said, sipping his martini. "Any idiot, even a pinko fool such as you, should be able to see that."

But why should you be depressed? You have won. George Bush will soon be at the helm of our ship of state. J. Danforth will be assured of choice tee times at the finest courses in the nation, drug kingpins will be dangling from tree limbs, our children will be pledging allegiance and all will be well with the world. I should think you would be elated.

"I'll tell you why I'm depressed," Grump said. "I'm depressed because you're so damned cheerful."

Why shouldn't I be cheerful? It's a pleasant evening, my day's work is done, a cool beer stands before me and my wife is preparing a bubbling stew for our evening meal. What more could a person ask?

"You lost, man, you lost, can't you realize that? Hasn't it sunk into your shallow L-word mind?"

Of course it has. But what's the big deal? It's over.

"Then why can't you have the common decency to provide me with the satisfaction of seeing you miserable and grief-stricken? Can't you display even a bit of good sportsmanship by admitting you are suffering?"

But, Grump, I just don't feel bad.

"Hah. It is a pose. You're acting this way to irritate me, to deprive me of my hard-earned and sadistic joy in seeing you slinking like a whipped dog."

Grump, believe me, it's no big deal. The fact is, I expected to lose. Those tagged with the L-word usually do. I predicted defeat the first time I heard the little bugger talk about competence being the issue. If we wanted competence, we'd become Japanese. I'm accustomed to losing and would have gone career when he's shown some liberal tendencies.

"Be careful, you cur, you are coming dangerously close to slander."

It's true. How can I not dislike him? George Will, the leading conservative journalist, dislikes him and even called him a lap dog. If Will doesn't like him, Bush must have some admirable qualities. So I'm sure he'll make a competent president. Who knows, he might surprise us by being exceptional.

"Damn it man, stop it. You have no right to be optimistic. I demand that you show gloom, dread, fear and apprehension."

Of what?

"Our agenda. You know it terrifies you.

'I predicted defeat the first time I heard the little bugger talk about competence being the issue. If we wanted competence, we'd become Japanese. I . . . would have gone into shock if little Mike had won.

into shock if little Mike had won. Besides, I don't think George is such a bad fellow. I kind of like him.

"How dare you say that. You have absolutely no right to like him. That is in total violation of all the rules. I formally reject your liking him. In fact, I forbid it."

But I do. I'm not crazy about him, of course. But he seems like an OK guy. After all, he's not part of the extreme right. He's basically a moderate and always has been. And there have even been times during his

Confess."

Nonsense. An agenda is just campaign blabber. Everybody knows that.

"Blabber? You don't believe that children there will be saying the pledge? You don't believe we will outlaw abortion and keep people like Willie Horton behind bars?"

Oh, I suppose some kids will say the pledge, which many already do, although I think it should be required of those who work on Wall Street every morning. I said it as a student, although I wondered why we wanted an invisible nation. And no, there will be no formal prayer in the schools, although any child is perfectly free to pray at any time. I used to pray the teacher wouldn't call on me for an answer. And abortion will remain legal. And until the taxpayers are willing to spend billions for new prisons, which they aren't willing to do, the furlough programs for new convicts will continue and a small number of them will commit crimes, as Horton did.

So none of that will change. Besides, those aren't the real issues that mattered to Bush. His media schemers cooked them up and he went along with the game. Face it: if Reagan, a true believer while awake, couldn't ram through your agenda, why should Bush? No, he just told you what you wanted to hear.

"You dare question his sincerity?"

Not at all. He knew that TV hokum wins elections, and he wanted to win. But now that he's done it, he'll get on to more important business, the trade deficit, world economy, cutting deals with the Soviets, playing footsie with a Democratic Congress and figuring out how to get away with raising our taxes without moving his lips.

"You take all the fun out of winning."

No, Grump, the fault is yours. You put yourself in your own depressing situation.

"What situation?"

For four years you won't have anything to be grumpy about. And if you do, who you gonna blame?

Students celebrate Partition Day despite unrest

By KELLY PEARCE
State Press

While social unrest between Israelis and Palestinians in Jerusalem continued Tuesday, claiming 20 casualties, some ASU students celebrated Partition Day, the day 41 years ago when the United Nations made Israel a Jewish state and Palestine an Arab state.

The event, far away from the unrest in the Middle East, was part of the third annual Israel Awareness Week that began Tuesday. Yousef Hashimi, president of the ASU Israeli education society and a senior engineering major, said the events scheduled for the week try to look past the fighting.

"This is a chance to get away from the turmoil — get away from the war," he said. "There is peace in the everyday sense. They put their pants on the same way that you and I do."

More than 7,000 Palestinians have been wounded in a year of rebellion against Israeli occupation of the West Bank and Gaza Strip. At least 316 have been killed. Israel is 78 percent Jewish, 17 percent Arab and 5 percent other.

During Partition Day Tuesday, ASU Israeli club members served Eastern food and provided information via maps and videos about the history of the country to students, faculty and staff.

Barbara Hamilton and Frank Cutrufo, staff members in the physical education department, joined other students who sat in the sun outside of the MU Tuesday eating the delicacies.

"I have an adventurous palate," Cutrufo said.

Jacque Hundley, a senior elementary education major, studied a map of Israel as she reflected on the importance of education.

"I think that the American people aren't very educated in other countries," she said.

Sandee Phillips, a freshman psychology major and member of the American Israel Cultural Society, had taken a trip to Israel a few years ago and was intrigued with the food — but she could never acquire a taste for it.

Today is Kibbutz Day — a day to educate the University community about local communal societies unique to Israel. Each society is involved in a particular industry such as farming, Hashimi said.

"No matter what background you come from, no matter who you are it is important to become educated about Israel," Hashimi said. "This is what this week is all about. We want people to learn about the cultural and social aspects of Israel."

Hashimi, explaining the unique societies, said children live in dorms instead of with their parents who are busy working in the fields. Dinnertime is family-time and the entire commune eats in a gigantic dining hall.

"It (Israel) is the only place that has these societies," Hashimi said.

A mini kibbutz will be set up on the west side of the MU today. Music and videos will accompany a representative of such a society.

Diversity Day will be held Thursday to present "the many faces of Israel," Hashimi said.

A Bedouin tent will be erected to symbolize the lives of the nomadic people that help to make up the 5 percent of the Israeli population.

Hashimi said since many Bedouins live in tents, he wants people to become aware of this type of lifestyle.

"There are not just Jews in Israel," he said.

A replica of the Western Wall, the holiest site in the Jewish religion also known as the Wailing Wall, will be set up Friday.

But this is not the first time the foreign language department has had to turn students away, and Horwath said he doesn't see an immediate solution.

"The budget (this year) did not change from last year's," Horwath said, adding that next year will "probably be the same."

About 250 students were denied entrance into Spanish classes in the 1988 fall semester, he said.

Gail Guntermann, associate professor in foreign languages, said the department allowed the extra students as a favor to graduating seniors and students who urgently needed the classes.

"Maybe we were also discriminating against all those others who didn't get in," Guntermann said. "I guess we just can't give overrides. We just can't let people in."

Horwath said the department is taking names from students who were denied. But he said there are no guarantees that anything can be done.

Buy Direct from the Indians

The Southwest is abundant with legends, but there is one that rises above in Tempe history. This legend is Chief Dodge, who can be seen daily at his Indian Jewelry store in Old Town Tempe.

While visiting his store, you can see him busily designing and selling his quality works of art.

For over 15 years, Chief Dodge has been in Tempe. He has been involved with Indian arts all of his life. His family is also involved in the business. Everyone contributes their different area of expertise to make this a successful operation. All are knowledgeable, not only on the subjects of new and older jewelry, but also in the area of pottery and rugs.

Visiting the gallery-like store can be very educational, as the Chief and his family are available to answer any questions you may have concerning Indian art and folklore. The Chief even offers appraisal services for insurance purposes.

Chief Dodge's aim is "to create quality jewelry that records the Indian culture." When creating Indian symbols, he wants to create each piece as an heirloom to pass from one generation to another.

The store offers a wide variety of Indian art, as well as jewelry. Items such as unique Kachina dolls, handmade pottery and sand paintings.

As a customer of Chief Dodge's, you can involve yourself in the entire process of creating a custom item, from helping with the design to watching the piece being made.

Customers can select sterling silver and gold as settings for turquoise and other stones.

Chief Dodge is proud to have custom jewelry for President Reagan, Barry Goldwater and rock groups such as U2, White Snake and Guns and Roses.

With this notoriety, Chief Dodge has a fine reputation and has become a trusted name in jewelry.

Masked bandit robs Tempe business

By MIKE BURGESS
State Press

Tempe police are looking for a gunman who robbed a Tempe business of $780 Monday night after he forced employees to crawl to a safe and open it, police said.

The masked bandit confronted employees at Federal Express, 4435 S. Rural Road, as they were leaving work through a rear door about 7:04 p.m., police said.

The suspect used a long-barreled semi-automatic handgun to force the employees back into the business, where he had them crawl to a safe, police said.

He took the cash and an undetermined amount of money and credit cards from an employee's purse before he fled on foot. A police canine was called to the scene but could not track the suspect, police said.

Police described the suspect as black, possibly in his mid-20s, about 6 feet and 190 pounds. He was last seen wearing a ski mask, gloves, blue jeans, a yellowish sweater and white high-top shoes.

Police also reported the following incidents:

•Someone stole 87 compact discs from a room on the 14th floor of Manzanita Residence Hall sometime last week. Loss

police report is $870.

•Someone stole a black 1987 Honda Spree scooter from the south side of Ocotillo Hall sometime between Monday night and Tuesday morning. Loss is $850.

•ASU students Sheri Lynn Pleasants and Kimberly Jane Conlon were arrested Monday at Sahuaro Residence Hall for investigation of possession of marijuana.

•Someone stole a $250 time card clock Friday from the University Activity Center.

•Someone stole a men's black Fuji 10-speed bicycle from the courtyard at McClintock Residence Hall. Loss is $250.

•Someone stole a men's Shogun 26-inch mountain bicycle from between the A and C Wings at Best Hall sometime last week. Loss is $250.

•Someone caused $100 damage to the north side basement door of Matthews Center.

•Someone stole a beige telephone handset from an emergency call box in Lot 11 last week. Loss is $10.

Economy

think there's been any focus on what it is that Arizona should strive for."

Sushki added that real estate markets around the country are weakening, but Arizona is especially hurt.

"Since we are so heavily committed in it, we are perhaps hurt even more," she said.

Tom Rex, manager of ASU's Center for Business Research, said overbuilding has largely put the wild pitch and yaw into Arizona's economy, forcing people to leave because of few job opportunities.

"We overbuilt in the mid-1980s, and vacancy rates went way up," he said. "The construction industry currently is in a recession."

A good measure of a recession is looking at employment, he said.

In 1986, the construction industry employed 115,000 workers, but in 1988 it has employed only 93,000.

In addition, the people who are getting forced out are the ones who most often move to the state — the 20 to 29-year-old workers, a prime segment of the workforce, Rex said.

Even apartment complexes are affected by overbuilding, especially in the student-rich East Valley. In 1985, the vacancy rate for apartments was below 5 percent, but this year the rate is 15 percent while office vacancies are 20 percent.

"Every sector of real estate is overbuilt right now," Kivett said. Overbuilding in 1986 was due much to apartment builders trying to get tax breaks before tax incentives created in the early '80s were taken away, she added.

"Apartment builders were wanting to go ahead and get these permits out and get these units on line while they could take advantage of the tax breaks," she said. "We had an extra amount of construction."

But despite the overbuilding in Arizona, the area around ASU does especially well in single-family housing sales, said Linda Shank, office manager at RE-MAX Anasazi Realty in Tempe.

But she added that in Maricopa County alone, there are over 200 foreclosures every month and over 3,000 this year.

"I don't know if it will ever be booming again," she said.

Kivett said foreclosures and bankruptcies in Arizona are higher than they've ever been, adding that bank officials deny they have foreclosures but the numbers tell a different story.

"Somebody is not telling that they've got foreclosures," she said. "They don't want to say our bank has a ton of them."

With construction a losing proposition for the state, Rex said the state's economy is shifting its dependence to the service industry.

"The service industries as a whole are probably where the strength is today," he said. "But they're not going to be the creator of new jobs."

Arizona has 1.4 million total employees and the services industry, including finance, insurance, real estate, government and retail industries, employs 1.1 million people.

But construction and manufacturing must improve and drive the economy again before the services industry can create new jobs, Rex said.

"If you've got a good-producing industry like construction in a recession, it's going to have an impact on everything else," he said. "Even though they're (services) the bulk now in the employment and output, they still have to wait for the others."

Rosemary Reardon, an economist for the Arizona Department of Economic Security, said that while the service industry is helping Arizona where other industries aren't, the economic outlook is still bleak.

Rex said Arizona can continue to build and prolong its long-term problem or build less and have a severe short-term problem.

Construction workers tear down the old ticket booths at the south end of Sun Devil Stadium earlier this year to make way for new athletic offices. Building projects have become a common sight at ASU as well as in the Valley, despite what experts see as an economic tailspin existing in the state.

"Just as during the early '80s things fed upon themselves in a positive sense, things are chipping away at themselves in a negative sense," he said. "It will probably be three to four years before you get vacancy rates even down to an average level."

The average vacancy rate level for Arizona is 6 percent, compared to Arizona's current rate of 15 percent.

So, why is there still so much building in Arizona?

"You've still got a group of people today that are highly optimistic about what's going on," he said.

"We have real estate consulting firms in the Valley that are not saying anything to anyone about 'don't do this,'" he said. "They may be cautioning them in some regard, but basically they have a very positive outlook."

"Doing so at times gets you into trouble — like now."

THE THIN BLUE LINE

A Miramax Films Release, An American Playhouse Theatrical Presentation directed by Errol Morris, musical score by Philip Glass. Opens Dec. 2.

Twelve years ago, Dallas policeman Robert Wood and his partner pulled over a car traveling without headlights at night. Wood approached the car and was shot five times and killed. Wood's partner didn't bother to take down the car's license number and couldn't remember the make.

One month later David Harris, a 16 year old from Vidor, Texas, was arrested after boasting to his friends that he'd "offed a Dallas pig" — Harris claimed that he'd only been joking.

And although the murder weapon was found in a swamp near Vidor, and he admitted to stealing a car and driving to Dallas at the time of Wood's death, Harris said 27-year-old Randall Adams was responsible for the officer's death.

Harris, who had a lengthy criminal record, was set free. Adams, whose record is without blemish, was convicted and sentenced to death.

Errol-Morris' new film "The Thin Blue Line" examines the Wood murder as a classic case of perverted justice. "In many ways," Morris said, "it's a terrifying story about ends justifying means — and here the prosecution is the most culpable. They broke the rules in order to get a conviction."

The director certainly seems to understand the case from a particular perspective but, as he explains, the film attempts to maintain some objectivity: "We talk about truth as something obvious, something that hits us over the head, but it's often quite elusive. Finding it isn't all that easy."

The film features several interviews — including talks with Adams and Harris — and a recreation of the crime and subsequent events.

"The recreations," the director said, "don't mean to tell you what happened. There's no way I can tell you that. I only know what people say they saw or believe they saw. I have no privileged access to reality."

Morris enlisted the aid of Philip Glass, who composed for films like "Mishima" and the critically acclaimed cinematic duo, "Koyaanisqatsi" and "Powaqqatsi" and has worked on several operas, to write the stirring movie score.

"The challenge for us," Glass said, "was to create a separate atmosphere for each character in the music without interfering with the dialogue. . . . I had to write music which would work with each real-life character, as well as enhance the overall drama of the film."

Glass seems to have involved himself nearly to the extent that Morris has.

The director has, in his own words, become obsessed with the Wood's murder case. "I've been trapped by this story. It has taken control of my life."

MY STEPMOTHER IS AN ALIEN

A Weintraub Entertainment Group film starring Dan Aykroyd, Kim Basinger and Richard Benjamin, directed by Richard Benjamin. Opens Dec. 9.

The press release begins as follows:

Dan Aykroyd, a dedicated scientist searching for extraterrestrial intelligence, has an unexpected close encounter when he becomes romantically entangled with beautiful Kim Basinger in "My Stepmother is an Alien."

What to think?

Probably that this latest Richard Benjamin escapade, due

Kim Basinger and Dan Aykroyd star in the questionable comedy, "My Stepmother Is An Alien." The film, due for release Dec. 2, was directed by Richard Benjamin and tells the story of a man who marries an extraterrestrial.

Director Errol Morris of the "Thin Blue Line," an unusual drama based on the true story of a mysterious 1976 Dallas cop killing. Minimalist composer, Phillip Glass composed the musical score for the film which will be released on December 2.

for release over the upcoming Christmas season, will be another of his stale, tongue-in-cheek attempts to muster nothing more than confused giggles from a handful of movie goers.

There may be some remote possibilities that could save what appears to be two hours of the sophomoric humor that Benjamin occasionally dishes out.

One is if the chunky Aykroyd proves he is not the comical/acting misfit that we see on the screen (i.e. be funny and believable at the same time and quit serving us "Saturday Night Live" leftovers).

The other is if Kim Basinger disrobes frequently throughout the movie and keeps her mouth shut. Well, that may be a bit harsh, but Ms. Basinger has revealed just about everything except her acting abilities. On the other hand, with those skyscraping legs, pouty lips, billowing hair and, of course, the bountiful bust, who needs depth or talent?

According to Benjamin, Basinger was perfect for the film. "We said our actress had to be absolutely beautiful and warm and funny. The list isn't that long. The movies have been looking for this girl since there have been movies. Jean Harlow, Marilyn Monroe, Carole Lombard, I mean the list is short. Kim has all the right, wonderful combinations," he said.

You can interpret that literally, if you like.

"Alien" has Aykroyd playing a widowed scientist who stumbles upon a buxom extraterrestrial. The real fun starts when his 13 year old begins to have serious developmental problems with her soon to be stepmother who looks nothing like E.T.

Sound interesting, mildly amusing or down right nauseating?

Maybe, on all three counts.

Remember, kids, having only a press release, pictures and the aforementioned folks' track records allows barely enough room for speculation. But, in spite of what we have, this may be one movie to judge by its title.

TEQUILA SUNRISE

A Warner Bros. film starring Mel Gibson, Michelle Pfeiffer, Kurt Russell and Raul Julia, written and directed by Robert Towne. Opens Dec. 2.

"The script (of "Tequila Sunrise") depicts a wonderful story about friendship, betrayal and loyalty, what price those traits exact from us in life and what we're willing to pay for them," said the film's producer, Thom Mount.

"What also struck me was that this was a truly adult film for our generation, like (Robert) Towne's 'Shampoo' was 10 or 12 years earlier."

The film centers on the relationship between two high school friends whose lives have gone in two very different directions. Mac McKussic (Mel Gibson) is a drug dealer looking for a way to exit his rather unpopular profession, while Nick Frescia (Kurt Russell) is a cop assigned to provide his friend with an even less popular exit — into a jail cell.

Meanwhile, Jo Ann Vallenari (Michelle Pfeiffer), a restaurant owner, is torn between her emotional involvement with both of them.

"This is a story about drug dealing," explains the film's director Robert Towne, "But it's also about love and friendship and what it takes to love somebody, whether it's a guy who has been in trouble, like McKussic, or a man who is in a respectable position, like Frescia.

"Jo Ann falls in love with the man who trusts her the most, the one who is consistently truthful to her.

"Because of his candor and honesty, she has enough faith in him to trust his future is what he tells her it's going to be — regardless of the past."

"Tequila Sunrise" is more than just another suspense film for its cast and director, though.

It has been heralded as the film that will bring Mel Gibson into recognition — apparently all we've seen of Gibson is potential.

It has been regarded as the film that will bring Michelle Pfeiffer out of her pretty-girl-with-the-blond-hair mold and garner her some long-awaited praise.

And it has been viewed as the film that will allow Kurt Russell to graduate to more "mature" roles in the future.

That's a lot of responsibility for one film.

But that's not the end of it. Many critics see this as a breakthrough for director Robert Towne who hasn't seen his name in credits since 1982 when he directed "Personal Best." Premiere Magazine has called "Sunrise" Towne's "come back victory," and claims that "Robert Towne is too good to linger in the shadows."

Thom Mount agrees. "As a producer I always try to support a specific passionate vision. 'Tequila Sunrise' was a project very close to Robert's heart — a contemporary film about an area he grew up in and for which he had a personal fondness.

Movie hits on video arrive on time for gift season

By The Associated Press

There have been far funnier movies in the past couple of years than "Three Men and a Baby" but none that have made as much money — a phenomenal $167 million at last count.

Any film that successful has to have something going for it. In this case it's one awfully cute baby (played by 5-month-old twins Lisa and Michelle Blair) and three awfully cute grown men — Tom "Magnum P.I." Selleck, Ted "Cheers" Danson and Steve Guttenberg of "Diner," "Cocoon" "Police Academy" and other movies.

In this adaptation of the French comedy "Three Men and a Cradle," the men play well-to-do bachelors whose carefree, romantic lives on Manhattan's Upper West Side are rudely interrupted by the arrival on their doorstep of a baby girl.

It seems Danson, who plays an irresponsible, not-too-bright actor, is the father, and the mother is a struggling actress who temporarily just can't cope with both motherhood and a career.

At first the guys are horrified, but gradually they learn to bathe the baby, change her diapers, hold her when she cries — and finally, to love her and want to keep her.

This makes for some good-natured fun, needlessly complicated by a subplot involving drug dealers whose smuggled heroin has been dropped off in the bachelor pad.

Selleck, whose previous film roles as a romantic swashbuckler left audiences cold, is appealing in a low-key way; Danson is more or less the same egotistical clod he plays on television; Guttenberg comes across as the most genuine of the three.

The movie was directed by Leonard Nimoy, Mr. Spock of "Star Trek" fame. His style is efficient but unimaginative, perhaps in keeping with his television roots.

"Tokyo Pop" (Warner Home Video; VHS-Beta, $89.95; Rated R)

"Tokyo Pop" is a fairly routine story of young love, dressed up in punk clothes and shipped off to Japan. Still, it's charming and fun.

Wendy (Carrie Hamilton) yearns to move from backup singer to lead in New York City's downtown music scene. Down on her luck, she gets a post card from a friend in Tokyo, and decides to join her.

Hiro (Yutaka Tadokoro of the Japanese band Red Warriors), meanwhile, is a very westernized Tokyo rocker, singing "Blue Suede Shoes" in a band whose members are convinced they will make it big if only they can find a gaijin, or foreigner, to sing with them.

You can guess most of the rest of director Fran Rubel Kuzui's film, though there are twists along the way to Wendy's becoming lead singer in Hiro's band.

For all its rebellious appearance, "Tokyo Pop" is moralistic. There are no drugs, and the characters drink only moderately. Wendy and Hiro do wind up in bed, but there's no promiscuity. What the kids in the movie want is a straight version of success and happiness.

The small touches of the movie give it its charm. Wendy, finding her friend has gone to Thailand, spends her first night in Tokyo in an inn called Mickey House and lavishly overdecorated with Mickey Mouse paraphernalia.

Scenes of young Japanese imitating Western rockers in a park are fun, as are other signs of the mix of East and West in modern Tokyo.

But the movie misses its chance to explore deeply the inevitable culture clash between Hamilton and Tadokoro are quirky, energetic and engaging and keep "Tokyo Pop" from being merely the kind of fluff Wendy complains about having to sing.

"The Seventh Sign" (RCA-Columbia Pictures Video; VHS-Beta $89.95; Rated R)

God has just about had it up to here with humanity, and anybody who rents this hokey bit of dreck about a modern-day biblical apocalypse will understand why.

It's a miracle that director Carl Schultz wasn't struck by a bolt of lightning.

We know the world's up the proverbial creek without a paddle because God's pock-marked messenger (Jurgen Prochnow) is making all these nasty things happen.

It's snowing in the Israeli desert; a

Nicaraguan river runs bloody; there are all these dead fish off the Haitian coast and let's not forget the rotten weather they're having in Southern California, what with golf ball-sized hail, hurricane-force winds and earthquakes.

Naturally, the only person who can deliver the world from God's wrath is a pregnant yuppie, played by Demi Moore with all the passion and perception that has marked her many other unforgettable performances.

The seventh sign has to do with Demi's baby; when it's born, dead and soulless, that's all, folks. Unless Demi can come up with a miracle.

If you can hang on that long — that in itself would be a miracle — there's a hilarious scene at the end where Demi goes through the shortest labor in history while bleeding profusely from a major bullet wound during an earthquake that would have caused California to drop into the ocean.

Don't bother.

Demi Moore's hair wasn't the only thing that was all wet in Tri-Star's "The Seventh Sign."

Fan support vital for wrestlers against OU, PSU

By CHRIS DORSEY
Contributing Writer

ASU wrestling coach Bobby Douglas is hoping his 10 wrestlers get some help in crowding out two national wrestling powers today.

The second-ranked Sun Devils return home today in their final match of 1988 to face Portland State at 1 p.m. and 12th-ranked Oklahoma at 7:30 p.m. in the University Activity Center.

The Sun Devil Ticket Office estimates a crowd of about 1,000 people, but Douglas said he is hoping for a much larger home-court advantage.

"We need a crowd," Douglas said. "If we can get a crowd we will go after them hard."

Students are admitted free with a validated ASU ID.

ASU (4-0) notched three dual victories to its credit after a trip to California over the weekend.

"It will be an exciting dual meet with Oklahoma," the ASU mentor said, referring to the wish of filling up the University Activity Center seats.

Last season, the Sun Devils downed Oklahoma 25-15 and 27-14. However, in the series the Sooners hold a 9-4 advantage.

"They have a lot of talent and are well coached," Douglas said.

ASU boasts four undefeated wrestlers: Junior Saunders (7-0), Thom Ortiz (6-0), Dan St. John (6-0) and Jim Gressley (6-0).

"We didn't look that good last weekend," Ortiz said. "But we plan to do better starting Wednesday."

Since returning to the practice room on Monday, Douglas has had the team working on wrestling on the mat, an aspect that did not please him in California.

"They had a good week of practice," Douglas said. "Their intensity level is up. I thought we needed to work on conditioning."

On paper, the Sun Devils and Sooners appear very similar.

"We match up fairly even with Oklahoma at this time of the season," Douglas said. "The heavyweight contest could determine the winner, but the 134- and 177-pound matches could be the highlights of the meet."

T.J. Sewell returns for the Sooners at 134 pounds, where he will face Andy McNaughton, who has a 4-2 record for the Sun Devils.

"We will know how good of team they (the Sun Devils) really are after Oklahoma and Portland State," Douglas said.

The Sun Devils will be without redshirt freshman G.T. Taylor (167 pounds), who has been sidelined for a week with a skin infection. Senior Travis Fagen (4-3) will fill his shoes.

ASU will go with the usual lineup: Zeke Jones (6-0), 118 pounds; Marco Sanchez (3-3-1), 126 pounds; McNaughton, 134 pounds; Saunders, 142 pounds; Ortiz, 150 pounds; St. John, 158 pounds; Gressley, 177 pounds; Kelly Gonzales (2-4), 190 pounds; and Mike Anderson (4-2-1) at heavyweight.

"We are going to have to have a good showing from our veterans," Douglas said. "They bear the responsibility of the mat."

Dan St. John (right) and his teammates are hoping for good crowd support today when the Sun Devils play host to Portland State at 1 p.m. and 12th-ranked Oklahoma at 7:30 p.m. at the University Activity Center.

Portland State is an NCAA Division II powerhouse, placing seventh at the Division II championships last year.

Dan Russell won a national title at 150 pounds and has jumped a weight class to 158 pounds.

"Portland State has some outstanding people," Douglas said.

Following the dual meet, ASU will travel to Las Vegas for the annual Las Vegas Invitational Dec. 2 through 3.

"We have to take one match at a time," St. John said.

Cards self-destructing as penalties, turnovers, losses mount

Neil Lomax

By The Associated Press

Phoenix coach Gene Stallings said Tuesday that his Cardinals are self-destructing and will have to make a late-season rally if they hope to make the playoffs.

"We had five offsides penalties last week. That really hurt us. At one time, we had the fewest amount of penalties in the National Football League. Now, we have the fifth or sixth fewest (with 79 for 666 yards)," Stallings said at his weekly news conference. "There are two ratios we're always emphasizing — turnovers and quarterback traps. Instead of being plus 5 in turnovers as we once were, now we're minus 3. And the quarterback traps (49) compared to our sacks (32) is becoming an area of concern."

Phoenix, 7-6 after a 31-21 loss last Sunday at Philadelphia, has now lost two straight games and must win its remaining three to stay in contention for at least a wildcard berth.

The Cardinals play at the New York Giants this Sunday, then return home to face the Eagles again Dec. 10 and close out the regular season by hosting Green Bay on Dec. 18.

New York and Philadelphia are both tied atop the NFC East with 8-5 records.

"I don't see how we can get in if we don't win this game," Stallings said. "Of course, I thought last week's game was a must game, too. I thought the easiest way to make the playoffs was to win all four of our last games. Now, even if we win three, we still might not get in.

"But we need to get some help now somewhere down the line. Somebody has to beat the Giants or Eagles for us. You got to split with the teams in your division. We've done that with Dallas and with Washington. We beat New York (24-17 here Nov. 13) and we can possibly sweep. We still got to come back and split with the Eagles.

"Last week, I thought we lost our poise. It's the players' job to perform. I think all of our jobs are on the line every week — mine included."

Stallings said kick returner Vai Sikahema and quarterback Neil Lomax, both two-time Pro Bowlers, are expected to return to practice Wednesday and may play Sunday.

"I think Vai's definitely OK and Neil feels like he's going to be able to maneuver," Stallings said. "As of right now, I think both of them will be able to practice. We'll have to see later in the week if they can start."

Stallings said Earl Ferrell, despite making a costly fumble at the Philadelphia 3-yard line last week, is having a Pro Bowl season with 853 yards and six touchdowns on 175 carries — the best totals of his seven-year NFL career.

"He's got a 4.9-yard average. That's No. 4 in the league. He's on his way to a 1,000-yard season and that's a lot of yards for a fullback," Stallings said.

For better or worse: Devils were both in Marmie's 1st season

Dave Hodges
Sports Editor

It wasn't that bad.

ASU head football coach Larry Marmie ended his first season with a 6-5 overall record and a fifth-place finish in the Pac-10 — very respectable numbers for a team that was expected to be worse.

The Devils lost some games they should have won (Washington and Stanford) and beat some teams they maybe shouldn't have (Washington State and Oregon on the road).

But the two that hurt the most were the 50-0 rout by Southern Cal and Saturday's 28-18 loss to Arizona.

Yes, the streak continues. ASU has not defeated UofA in seven consecutive tries now, but it's not the end of the world. Really.

Despite some presumptuous talk by UofA players, ASU will beat UofA again.

Why didn't ASU beat UofA Saturday? The Devils simply were outplayed in the second half, when the game was on the line.

Who's fault is it? Nobody's really. Sure the kicking game had its problems and probably cost the Devils six points with a missed field goal and a missed extra point, which carried over to two missed two-point conversion attempts.

And it's certainly not Marmie's fault.

Marmie's Army displayed courage in its effort at Arizona Stadium. There was emotion there. Marmie (and his players) did not underestimate the importance of the Big Game.

Although he does not look the stereotypical football coach and he wears that God-awful tie, Marmie will be a success at A-State.

The players like him. That's part of the trick. When you have the respect of your team, it's easier to teach and point out mistakes without a mutiny.

Former coach John Cooper, who already is feeling some heat at Ohio State, openly criticized his players and blamed them for losing games.

Marmie blamed himself for ASU not winning a few more games.

At the beginning of the season, the Pac-10 Skywriters, a group of West Coast journalists that evaluates each team, predicted a seventh-place finish for ASU. The State Press predicted a fifth-place finish in September, which is where the Devils ended up.

ASU was plagued with injuries all year. Throw in a few vehicular accidents and a case of measles (thanks, Rodney) and the Devils were operating on a skeleton crew. In fact, Terence Johnson was thrust into the inside linebacker spot (a position he had never played before) against the Cats, after some more ASU injuries.

There are many good, young players at ASU and the future looks very promising. Marmie will end the losing streak against Arizona.

But it will be 12 long months of UofA gloating before that can happen.

One streak did end over the weekend — an even longer one. After 10 consecutive losses, the ASU men's basketball team finally won a game, defeating Baylor Saturday in the consolation game of the Central Fidelity Classic at Richmond, Va.

The Devils led by as many as 26 points on their way to an 89-73 victory over the Bears. ASU (1-1) lost the first round game to eventual-champion Alabama, 79-78 in overtime.

If the tournament is any indication of what is to come, guard Tarence Wheeler could be on his way to a great year. Wheeler was named to the all-tournament team and was absolutely deadly from three-point range.

Head coach Steve Patterson's squad appears in much better mental shape than last year's. ASU has been picked to finish in ninth or 10th place in most preseason polls, but don't be surprised if the Devils surprise a few teams.

The next chance to see ASU in action is at 7:30 p.m. Thursday against Indiana State in the University Activity Center. The Sycamores are led by Eddie Bird, the brother of the Boston Celtics' Larry Bird.

The Grapevine by Bill Synstad

There's more to Spain than Rioja and bullfights. More good wines from other parts of the country are now coming our way.

The newest "denominacion de origen" is Ribiera del Duero. The vineyards surround the same river that's known as Douro in Portugal. The native grape is Tempranillo, but some vintners plant Cabernet Sauvignon, Merlot and Malbec to make a famous Bordeaux-type blend.

Penedes, too, sends us good red wine, thanks to enterprise of one or two top winemakers. They offer excellent value, good wines at reasonable -- even bargain -- prices.

Full-bodied, rich-flavored red wines also come from the Toro region. These are big wines, more like Chateauf-neuf-du-Pape than Bordeaux, and of high quality.

But Rioja remains Spain's biggest name. That's where French winemakers went to make wine after France's vineyards were destroyed by phylloxera. The classic Riojas are big and somewhat oaky, but some wines are made lighter for more modern tastes.

Spanish wines? Si, si. You'll find a good selection chosen for your enjoyment at

Loy hoping that history, Sun Devil men's golf team both repeat

By DEAN GYORGY
State Press

It is said that history repeats itself, and the ASU men's golf team is hoping this week that it does.

The Sun Devils play their final round in the Las Vegas Intercollegiate tournament today, the final event of the fall season.

The Devils came from behind in the final round last year to pass Oklahoma State and win the tournament.

Last season's Las Vegas victory also vaulted ASU to the top of the national rankings, and ASU coach Steve Loy can see the same scenario building.

"It's quite possible we could do the same thing this time around," Loy said.

After two rounds of play, Loy's prophecy remains intact. ASU is in first place by two strokes over Oklahoma State, 589-591.

Two Sun Devil golfers are in the top five. Phil Mickelson with a pair of even-par rounds of 72 sits in second place, four strokes off the lead. Todd Kernigan is tied for fifth at 74-72-146.

The Devils were ranked ninth going into the Nov. 17 tournament at Hilton Head, S.C. ASU came away with a second-place finish and what Loy called "definitely the best outing of the year." Loy said he felt that performance would push the Devils to "no worse than fourth or fifth" nationally.

No new rankings were available before Las Vegas, but by being the defending champions and one of the favorites, ASU could move into the top spot with a win, something Loy and company have been desperately seeking.

"Everybody's on a real high," Loy said. "We want to finish our season with a big win."

Other Devils competing this week are Jim Strickland, Per Johansson, who is tied for eighth, and Brett Dean.

Study shows athletes tend to ignore academics, have less money

WASHINGTON (AP) — Most college football and basketball players devote more time to athletics than academics, and most of them claim to have less money for personal expenses than other students, a study released Tuesday showed.

The study, commissioned by the NCAA Presidents Commission at a cost of $1.75 million, was based on interviews with 4,083 college athletes and students who participate in extracurricular activities such as the band and the student newspaper.

"I do not believe there are any great surprises in these results," said Martin Massengale, chairman of the NCAA Presidents Commission. "But they will provide data for us to use in considering policy issues for many years into the future."

According to the report, college football and basketball players spend 30 hours a week practicing and playing in games when their sport is in season. In contrast, the average player uses 12 hours to study and 14 hours attending classes, and misses about two classes per week.

NCR SALUTES: THE WINNERS OF THE STAKEHOLDER ESSAY COMPETITION

"Progressive companies have begun to think beyond the traditional relationship of the firm to society and have begun to manage all of the relationships upon which they depend for survival. Firms that don't follow suit may regret their short-sightedness."

Murray B. Low, Winner
NCR Stakeholder Essay Competition

Some of today's most important ideas are held in trust by the leaders of tomorrow.

More than 2,500 such leaders, college students from all over the country, recently competed in an NCR-sponsored essay competition. The topic: "Creating Value For Stakeholders In Corporations And/Or Not-For-Profit Organizations." At stake: $300,000 in awards. And at even greater stake: a chance to affect the way the world does business.

NCR is proud to salute the first prize winner, Murray B. Low of The Wharton School, The University of Pennsylvania; and the second prize winner, Ron Gilbert of The University of Iowa. NCR also congratulates the 98 national and state award winners, as well as their schools. Their names are listed below.

Our sincere thanks to all who entered the competition. Their ideas promise a bright future—for themselves, and for business the world over.
