Regents study plan to expand financial aid

By TYRONE MEIGHAN
State Press

The Arizona Board of Regents is considering the first draft of a financial aid proposal, which would benefit minorities and other under-represented students.

The proposal, designed by the Council of Presidents, was submitted Friday to the regents' Committee on University Access and Retention.

The plan targets older students, minorities and single parents attending the state's three universities. Moderate- to middle-income students will also benefit from the plan.

"We might approve this as a conceptual plan," said regent Andrew Hurwitz. "But we will want more detail."

Hurwitz said he introduced the proposal at the meeting Friday to get feedback from the committee members.

"I haven't gotten any (feedback) yet," he said, adding that he has concerns about the proposal because it lacks specifics.

Hurwitz said that the proposal was vague on whether the money would be used for in-state or out-of-state students.

"We need to make sure it's used for in-state," he said. "As a first draft it (the proposal) is pretty good."

The regents will discuss the plan at their February meeting.

A portion of the program's funding will come from $1.5 million in new tuition revenues. The regents approved the use of these funds in December.

Other funding will come from the Student Financial Aid Trust Fund. The trust fund includes collecting a $6 registration surcharge from full-time students and a $3 surcharge from part-time students.

The regents approved the trust fund's concept in October. Allan Price, the regents' public affairs director, will submit the fund's plan to the Legislature during its current

Starsky remembered as controversial ASU figure

By STACY HAYMES
State Press

Colleagues of Morris J. Starsky, the former ASU philosophy professor who died last week, remembered him Monday as a man who sparked controversy on campus.

Starsky, who led the University's anti-Vietnam effort and became the target of an FBI letter campaign, died of a heart ailment at his home in Cincinnati, where he had worked as a part-time professor at Cleveland State University.

He is survived by his wife, Lorraine, and two sons: Ben, 4, and Sam, 15 months.

Starsky, 55, characterized himself as a socialist or a communist "with a small c," according to Donald Gieschen, an ASU professor who was one of his colleagues in the philosophy department.

His colleagues remembered him as a man who sparked controversy on campus and in the national academic community when he was fired in 1970 for cancelling a class so he could attend an anti-war rally in Tucson.

His 6½ year battle with the University brought national focus to the issue of academic freedom and how professors' personal beliefs fit into their roles as educators.

In January 1970, six months before he was fired, Starsky told the State Press: "People are afraid because I am involved on the side of the students, against the wary, against racism and the like."

"Whether I win or lose, our academic freedom has already suffered and has been jeopardized," Starsky said in 1970, referring to threats that he would be fired by the Arizona Board of Regents.

"The University and the regents and the legislators are made up of the ruling class, and they naturally get edgy when somebody like me, who speaks for the students and the oppressed, challenges them," Starsky said in 1970.

Ross Rice, an ASU political science professor who headed the Faculty Committee on Academic Freedom and Tenure, which conducted a hearing on Starsky's employment at ASU, said Tuesday: "I did not agree with his views, but he was free to hold and express views that others did not share."

"His style of dealing with people I think caused him to ruffle feathers and he seldom went out of his way to get along with people."

Rice said Starsky did not lead any campus organizations, and was "one person expressing his own views."

Starsky earned a B.A. degree from the University of Rochester and M.A. and Ph.D. degrees in philosophy from the University of Michigan.

Gieschen said: "Morris was probably the most vocal, most evident and the most visible in the anti-war movement."

"He was opposed to dictatorships and totalitarianism yet he still subscribed to some form of economic socialism."

Starsky's firing centered around his decision to cancel a class on Jan. 14, 1974, to speak at a student protest rally in

Lawsuit against fraternity to go to trial

By MICHAEL VAN DYKE
State Press

A 1987 lawsuit filed by a former ASU student against the Sigma Alpha Epsilon fraternity will go to trial in a Maricopa County Superior Court today.

Judge Alfred J. Rogers will preside over the court hearing. The jury selection is expected to begin at 9:30 a.m.

Former ASU student and SAE pledge Gregory B. Running claimed in a lawsuit filed against the national SAE chapter that permanent damage was inflicted to his left eye when he was allegedly kicked in the head during a 1985 hazing incident.

Running, who withdrew from ASU in the spring of 1985 and transferred to San Diego City College, claims that he endured "vicious hazing" during his period as a pledge of the fraternity.

The fraternity denies involvement in any hazing activities or that Running was kicked.

The lawsuit said that Running was injured when about 60 actives, who reportedly had been drinking, allegedly forced pledges to exercise in the house's courtyard while being yelled at and threatened.

Running was then kicked in the left eye, by an unidentified fraternity member, while doing push-ups, the suit said.

Running claims in the suit that he suffered a concussion and "serious and permanent injury to his left eye" as a result of the blow.

Upon returning to the Sigma Alpha Epsilon house in the spring semester of 1987, Running charged that he was subjected to more hazing.

His room was vandalized and dead rodents and human fecal material were placed inside, the suit claims.

Then Running was again physically threatened and given the silent treatment at all meals, the suit said.

Running developed a peptic ulcer as a result of the alleged incidents, his attorney said in 1987.

Stuart Smith, Sigma Alpha Epsilon president at the time of the alleged incidents, denied that Running was kicked. He added that the house does not practice hazing.

According to Smith, Running was hit in the eye with a football the night before the incident but never reported the injury.

Government says U.S. controls North's withheld notebooks

WASHINGTON (AP) — The government said Monday that fired National Security Council aide Oliver North has no Fifth Amendment privilege to withhold notebooks he compiled of his daily activities in the Iran-Contra affair.

Independent counsel Lawrence Walsh said in a court filing that North's notebooks are "presidential records over which the United States has complete ownership and control."

North last week formally challenged Walsh's efforts to obtain a subpoena for the notebooks, and a hearing is scheduled Wednesday before U.S. District Judge Gerhard Gesell.

"Production of organizational records is simply not protected by the Fifth Amendment, whether the documents incriminate a little or a lot," Walsh's court filing said.

North, whose criminal trial is scheduled to begin Jan. 31, logged his daily activities in dozens of spiral-bound notebooks and removed the last of them from his NSC offices when he was fired on Nov. 25, 1986.

The struggle to obtain the notebooks has been going on since prior to North's indictment.

Engine supports questioned as part of probe on Boeing jet

CHICAGO (AP) — A jet whose engine fell off just after takeoff last week from O'Hare International Airport had not gotten ordered safety modifications on its engine mounts, officials said.

The Piedmont Airlines Flight 1480 from O'Hare to Charlotte, N.C., was a Boeing 737-200, a type of aircraft which the Federal Aviation Administration decided in November needed additional engine supports after investigating a similar 1987 incident.

However, the FAA order was not effective immediately and the airline may have been within the allowed time lapse, said William Bruce, who is heading an investigation of the Friday incident for the National Transportation Safety Board.

U.S. war veterans are returning to Vietnam to build health clinic

BANGKOK, Thailand (AP) — A dozen U.S. war veterans are returning to Vietnam to build a rural health clinic "to help the Vietnamese and also help ourselves," members of the group said Monday.

Ground-breaking for the project — believed to be the first reconstruction effort by U.S. veterans in Vietnam — is scheduled for Jan. 31. The group, which includes carpenters, electricians and architects, is to spend 10 weeks building an eight-room clinic in the southern seacoast town of Vung Tau.

"It seemed like a way to heal the insanity of the war itself," said Ruben Robert Gomez of Santa Cruz, Calif.

Members of the Veterans-Vietnam Restoration Project, a small California veterans group, say the clinic will meet an urgent need for better medical care in rural Vietnam; help foster U.S.-Vietnamese ties; and perhaps serve to alleviate individual psychological and moral problems from the war.

Renovation includes skyboxes for football stadium

By KELLY PEARCE
State Press

Sun Devil Stadium will not look quite the same when the 1989 ASU and Phoenix Cardinal football seasons kick off next fall, and University officials are glad.

Last week, the sounds of demolition filled the stadium when the press box area on the west side of the stadium was torn down to make room for 60 luxury skyboxes, eight skybox suites, a new press box and elevators. The renovation carries an $11.8 million price tag.

Even though the additions were requested by the Phoenix Cardinals, ASU will benefit from the construction by boosting the Valley's chance for luring the Superbowl to Tempe and by upgrading the appearance of the stadium, University officials said.

"They will clearly be an asset," said Victor Zafra, vice president for business affairs. "They can be used for development purposes."

The business affairs office represented the University in negotiating the construction of the skyboxes.

Lonnie Ostrom, ASU director of development agreed with Zafra.

"I think it is a major investment to improve the stadium," he said. "I think it's another addition that will provide flexibility in viewing the games."

Ostrom is working on behalf of ASU to market the skyboxes that will include wet bars, lounges, sofas and private restrooms.

All but 10 of the skyboxes have been sold to individuals or organizations thus far. The boxes sell for $140,000 each.

Ostrom said it is difficult to sell the boxes

"when you find our economy like it is."

While the sale of the skyboxes continues, so does the construction phase. The Metropolitan Phoenix Sports Alliance Inc., a non-profit corporation that helped entice the Cardinals to make their home in the Valley, is in charge of selling the luxury accommodations.

The alliance hired HuntCor Inc., a Phoenix-based construction company, to design and construct the stadium additions that are slated to reach completion in September.

Tom George, a member of the alliance, said the building of the skyboxes is fulfilling a promise. The sports alliance told Phoenix Cardinals owner Bill Bidwill they would make the additions if he brought his franchise to Phoenix.

"It's going to bring in a lot of revenue for the Cardinals and ASU," George said.

He added that if the Valley ever wants to host the Superbowl, they need the skyboxes and new press area.

The proposed facilities will consist of a three-story structure located on the west side at the top of the grandstand. It will not be connected to the stadium but will match the recently constructed Intercollegiate Athletic Building at the south end.

Lonnie Ostrom

Monies to build the skyboxes will come from skybox holders, Bidwill and ASU. The University will pay $1.1 million to supply utility lines within five feet of the skyboxes, and future upgrading.

ASU will offset those costs through the sale of tickets from the additional 1,420 seats.

Ooow! James Brown not 'feelin' good' following sentencing

AUGUSTA, Ga. (AP) — Soul singer James Brown received a six-year prison term Monday after pleading guilty to an array of misdemeanor weapons and traffic charges.

In addition to the prison term, Brown, who also pleaded no contest to charges of driving under the influence, was fined $1,000 by Judge Gayle B. Hamrick.

Adrienne Brown, the singer's 33-year-old wife, was given probation and a $600 fine after pleading no contest to a charge of driving under the influence. It resulted from a September 1987 incident in which she was charged with driving under the influence, speeding and criminal trespass.

Brown's sentence would run concurrently with a six-year term he is serving in South Carolina, Hamrick said. The charges in both states stemmed from a two-state car chase last September.

Brown, 55, disrupted an insurance seminar in an Augusta office building by walking in with a shotgun, officials said. Before officers could arrive, Brown left the building, and the chase began.

Brown said in an interview reported Monday in USA Today that he was "dealing" with being in prison.

"A lot of people would like to see me fall, but you can't make a winner a loser," he said.

During his problems last year, he said he was in constant pain from a series of tooth implants and that he was "messed up" on pain killers.

"They catch you and say you're under the influence of drugs," he said. "But doctors, they shoot you up with drugs. You don't know what you're getting on or what it's going to do."

Brown said he spends his time "autographing 10,000 pictures" for fellow inmates and their families, and his message to fans is, "Stay on the good foot and give me your love."

Brown pleaded guilty to having no state license tag, reckless driving, driving with a suspended license, attempting to flee or elude police, carrying a deadly weapon to a public gathering, simple assault and improper lane change.

editorial Issues for the year

Now that most of us have squared away our schedules, bought books, paid for parking decals and dispensed with other semester preliminaries, it's time to start thinking about the issues facing the student body in the coming year.

The new year holds the promise of remarkable student gains on the campus and state levels in areas of crucial interest to us all. But student involvement is vital if anything is to be accomplished. Here are a few items to consider during the coming months:

Student Regent Vote

House Bill 2021, the long-awaited measure that would grant full voting privileges to the student member of the Arizona Board of Regents, is now in the hopper at the Arizona House of Representatives. The bill enjoys almost universal support in the House, and is expected to pass easily.

But tougher times await in the Senate, as the opposition — led by Sen. John Hays, R-Yarnell — threatens to quash the measure, claiming that "students are (at universities) to learn," not help make the detailed financial planning decisions the regents often face.

What Hays and other senators are afraid of, however, is not that the one student regent appointed yearly will be distracted from his studies, but that the student body might actually gain a real say in vital university affairs like tuition hikes. The battle to pass HB 2021 over such thinking will be difficult, but even the nine-member board itself feels the time has come to enfranchise its student member. With enough student support — i.e., writing/calling your legislator — this bill can become a reality before the end of this legislative session.

Equity

For too long, ASU has gotten the short end of legislative funding battles, and it's time that all three state universities receive equal proportions of the state appropriations pie. The UofA has received more "dollars per student" from state lawmakers than ASU for years, and this inequity must be corrected.

Working through ASU's student representatives, who will be lobbying heavily at the Capitol for the necessary budget adjustments that will equalize ASU with the Wildcats to the south, the student body can lend support to the equity drive. The benefits are tangible — with the extra dollars from the Legislature, ASU would be able to keep open sufficient class sections of required classes, like freshman English and foreign languages.

This battle will also be hard fought, and met with stiff resistance from the rival UofA, which will have to give up a percentage of its funding to ASU. But if students make as much noise about the equity issue as they do at ASU/UofA football games, the Sun Devils may break their losing gridiron streak against the Wildcats — and win an important dollar game at the Legislature.

Enrollment control

"Enrollment control" might seem like a strange euphemistic solution to the problem ASU now faces — which might be better termed "enrollment out of control." But controlling, or rather limiting, the flood of students pouring into the University is exactly what we must now do.

The cancerous over-growth that now plagues ASU is evident in every area of University affairs. Cars glut our parking lots, classrooms are jammed beyond capacity, and the quality of education plummets as students are unable to obtain individual attention from an overwhelmed faculty.

It's time to consider "capping" enrollment at ASU. Dealing with the problems that accompany that move will be difficult, as criteria will need to be established for admittance that will exclude some students who would now qualify. But if the academic integrity of the University is to be preserved, immediate steps must be taken.

By reducing a proposed $156 tuition hike last semester, students proved they have the muscle to make a difference at the University. If given student attention, these issues can also be resolved to the benefit of all members of the ASU community.

Foreign instructors must master language first

Editor:

Recently I attended my first statistics class. The instructor arrived promptly at 11:40 and began to introduce herself. As soon as she spoke the entire class groaned; our instructor could barely speak English! Needless to say I have dropped that class and have added another statistics class with another foreign instructor. His English is at least comprehensible.

Now, I have nothing against people from other countries coming to America to live, learn, teach and what have you. I've had a couple instructors at ASU that were not born in America and their English was as good as mine, even better. But this was different. This woman had to pause before she spoke in order to think of what she wanted to say in her own language and then how to translate the message into English.

My blame does not fall on the instructor in the least. In fact, I felt sorry for her because I could tell she was as frustrated as we were. I do, however, find fault with the administrators and the upstairs decision-makers who allow a person who cannot speak English to teach. I think it's fair to say that the majority of students at ASU speak English and I don't think it's asking too much for the instructor to speak English as well. After all, we are paying for this (not to mention the upcoming tuition increase).

Something must be done; the whole education system breaks down when the student and the instructor are unable to communicate. Either different instructors should be hired or the current ones should be given more time to master the English language before they are allowed to teach.

King observance lauded

Editor:

I would like to congratulate the ASU College of Law for their second annual celebration of Dr. Martin Luther King Jr.'s birthday on the night of Tuesday, Jan. 17. I was pleased to see such strong support for the celebration of his birthday. I would like to see Dr. King's dream become a reality, so please continue your efforts to keep the dream alive.

I was also very impressed by the dramatic reading by third-year law student Joe Rogers. Mr. Rogers' reading of the famous "I Have a Dream" speech sounded so similar to Dr. King that I felt as though I was present at the time of the actual speech. It was very touching to listen to the speech while reminiscing about the events of the 1960s. Mr. Rogers, I compliment you on a job well done.

KASR: Students need own station

Editor:

I am glad to see that the new semester has brought the support of the State Press to KASR 680 AM. The articles last week reminded me to tune in this semester to ASU's (and Arizona's) only progressive music source.

I was a DJ at KASR. I met a lot of interesting people, and got to play some great music. "DJ-ing" was a volunteer job for me that would not benefit my career the way it would the broadcasting students of this University.

I got discouraged when the school decided its priorities were not with the students. I am referring to the lack of support they show towards giving the students a station that can be heard. It wasn't much fun playing records to the few dorms that could hear KASR knowing the potential listening audience of Tempe.

Classical music is very nice, but Sun City has an excellent station that has been established as the Valley's classical station (KONC). Why would Arizona State University want to compete with a classical format when they could dominate the college music scene? It's time to support the new bands and local music scenes. After all, this is one of the largest schools in the United States, don't the students deserve more than a transmitter station?

I gave up on ASU growing from conservative to alternative. I won't give up the idea of a radio station for the students, run by the students. I hope no one else does either.

New beginning

President Bush should be given the benefit of the doubt

Jeff Greenfield
Universal Press Syndicate

When Richard Nixon was working his way up the political greasy pole in the 1950s, liberal cartoonist Herblock never drew Nixon without including a sinister 5 o'clock shadow. But when Nixon was elected president in 1968, Herblock drew a barbershop that promised every new president a clean shave.

That spirit has governed the coverage of George Bush from Election Day up to Inauguration Day. The one-time preppy wimp is now described as a self-confident, relaxed, assured figure who knows the workings of government, who has modeled an administration in his own centrist, insider image, and who lives by the values of family, tradition and patriotism — values that Ronald Reagan articulated but did not embody.

In fact, there is nothing wrong with this kind of optimism. In the first place, it makes historical sense; few contemporaries of Lincoln, FDR or Truman thought them capable of greatness when they assumed the presidency. A sense of hope is appropriate, even if, as Francis Bacon once said, "Hope is a good breakfast, but it is a bad supper."

That kind of anticipation is also part of our national character. We are a nation whose history teaches that a citizen can leave his home, cross the ocean or frontier, put the past aside and re-invent himself. If a penniless immigrant or an itinerant laborer can become a multimillionaire, and his daughters social arbiters, then why can't a president re-invent himself with the massive supporting apparatus of a White House?

To his credit, the new president and his staff accomplished part of this process before the votes were counted. The inarticulate Bush became a Gary Cooper-type — the "quiet man who hears the quiet people others don't..." The wimp became the tough-minded protector of cultural conservatism, the protector of America's peace through strength.

Now the question moves beyond politics. What kind of possibilities reside in George Bush — a man who, in a quarter-century of public life, has projected almost nothing of what he really believes in, what really drives him, what he hopes to do with the mantle he has sought for so long?

First, and most likely, is the possibility of decency. Even during his darkest hours, no one challenged Bush's fundamental decency. This means more than written thank-you notes to the staff. It could mean a renewed insistence on ethical conduct, a subject that was usually treated by Ronald Reagan as nothing more than a political attack on his good friends.

Bush's transition staff has already spread the word that the new president will seek a strong code of ethics. But that is only the beginning. If he projects a determination not to let his insiders trade access for cash, if he continues to attack the idea that our lives should be aimed at the mere accumulation of wealth, he could do much to help change the "I've got mine" philosophy that is one of Ronald Reagan's least appetizing legacies.

Second is the possibility of a renewed sense of citizenship. However overdrawn the "thousand points of light" image was, there is something deeply right about the encouragement of voluntary associations for civic betterment — something that has always been part of the Eastern Establishment of which George Bush is undeniably a part.

From the days of the Grange in rural America to the settlement houses of New York's East Side, people of means have helped people without to better their conditions, and thus have nurtured the sense of possibilities that is at the core of American optimism. The Reagans talked this game; the Bushes have lived it. A government whose tax policy and other incentives encouraged such involvement could leverage its limited financial resources to do much good.

Third is a possibility of political courage. To be sure, there is nothing in George Bush's public past — save for a vote in Congress 20 years ago on an open housing bill — that demonstrates this trait. During his climb to the presidency, it seemed as if he would embrace any position — on taxes, abortion, Watergate — that would minimize political risk.

But now the job is his; now he has nothing to lose by facing the fact that we have potential disasters on our hands in corners ranging from the inner cities to the region south of the border. And, in contrast to Ronald Reagan, George Bush has at least been willing to acknowledge that such conditions exist — a minimum first step toward accepting some responsibility for bettering those conditions.

These possibilities are just that; there is no good reason to believe that the new president will fulfill them. But columnist, no less than cartoonist, should be willing to put a clean shave, or a good face, on the new leader of the land.

Bumper crop of bachelors hits ASU; likely to last

By CAROLYN HOFIG
State Press

Attention marriageable Sun Devils: the demographic tables have turned, according to one ASU researcher, and available bachelors have begun to outnumber female takers.

This national trend could well result in "a scramble for the available women," said Paul Glick, an adjunct professor of sociology at ASU.

Glick, a former chief demographer with the U.S. Bureau of the Census, projected the guy glut will last until the end of this century.

Glick examined national trends, but the proof of his findings may already be afoot at ASU, where the Institutional Analysis Office shows a total enrollment of 22,062 men to 21,364 women in the fall of 1988.

Glick's study represents a "hard demographic fact," he said, adding he hesitates to apply his statistics too liberally to human nature and behavior.

But he said the pending surplus of swains will spell some other significant changes. For one thing, women may now find themselves able to select among potential suitors, Glick said. Could the "old lady" soon find herself treated more like a lady?

Also, couples will marry younger, he said, and those unions will be more stable, "all other things being equal."

Glick attributes the divorce epidemic of the last decade to the relative scarcity of marrying-aged men. If a man became disgruntled with the married life — and if he could forget the bit about "til death do us part" — he could leave. "There were a lot of other women out there," Glick said. But now men, like it or not, have become the majority.

But even as the quest for the infamous "MRS. degree" gives way to the pursuit of the Ph.D., Glick's findings suggest women will probably find themselves treated more to their likings. If not, their men may find themselves replaced.

Futuristic heaters could help to warm homeless

By JOANNE ASQUITH
State Press

Someday, less trash may clutter the streets of Tempe because it may be burning in portable heaters for the homeless.

The heaters, which would be operated by garbage converted into "trash pellets," are a concept developed by four ASU industrial design students for the Osaka Design Competition in Osaka, Japan.

ASU seniors Jon Lindholm, Susan Cessor, Brad Grannis and Jim Luther designed a conceptual heater model last semester in their Senior Design Projects class taught by professor William Sadler.

"It was a very timely idea with so many homeless people and the trash problem that was going on in New York," Cessor said.

The international competition takes place every two years, and this year's contest drew about 3,000 entrants, including some professional firms. The contest's theme is "The New Role of Fire in the 21st Century."

The students will find out in February if they are among the contest's 50 finalists. They will then have until early May to enter a more developed explanation of their concept.

The portable heater would be about 16 inches wide and 12 inches high.

"There would be a fan attached (to the heater) to blow out warm air and a (fire-retardant) bag that could be used to sleep in," Cessor said.

The trash pellets would be derived by taking trash to a machine, compacting it, and mixing it with other chemicals.

"This technology is almost in effect now," Luther said. "You can compare it to making charcoal."

The students said they hope local companies donate metals to make the heater.

By using the trash pellets, the heaters could help eliminate trash on the streets, and a filter attached to the heater keeps harmful fumes from getting into the air, the students said.

But because the trash pellets are a "futuristic idea," Lindholm said the group is looking for temporary heat sources, including compressed gas, for the heater.

The homeless would have access to the heaters through government subsidized shelters and would be able to bring in their trash to have it converted into pellets.

The students said that although their main concern was for transients and the homeless, the shelters would also consider low-income families for the heater's use.

"It could help for disaster relief like the floods in Bangladesh and the big earthquake in Armenia," Lindholm said.

In determining how to design the heaters, the students interviewed some of the homeless people living under the Central Avenue bridge.

"It had to be self-explanatory and the ASU seniors Jon Lindholm, Susan Cessor, Brad Grannis and Jim Luther designed a portable heater which would be operated on garbage and given to the homeless.

directions had to read easily," Cessor said.

Grannis added, "The heaters could establish a sense of ownership for the transients."

Sadler said his students worked very hard on this project and wanted to combat the problems of the homeless.

"They took their own design specialties and by working together they synthesized a portion of this wicked problem," he said.

Starsky

Tucson.

An ad hoc committee was formed by then-acting University President Harry Newburn to investigate the issues relating to Professor Starsky's dismissal.

Rice said, "We (the committee) attempted to give him due process and recommended that he be censured or reprimanded but did not recommend that he be dismissed from the faculty."

Gieschen said: "Part of the University faculty was unhappy with him because he caused bad publicity for ASU. They didn't always defend his rights.

"Starsky never propagandized his own political ideas in his classes. He would be somewhat outrageous in getting people's attention," he added.

On June 10, 1970, Starsky was fired by the Arizona Board of Regents. They offered him a sabbatical leave with 60 percent of his pay.

Starsky accepted the sabbatical and filed a lawsuit against the regents demanding $100,000 in damages from Newburn, the governor and each member of the board at the time he was fired.

The incident prompted a seven-year censure of ASU by the American Association of University Professors, who urged professors not to take jobs at the University. The ban was lifted in 1981 after ASU officials agreed to pay Starsky $25,000 in back pay.

Starsky's case drew national attention in 1975 when it was discovered that the FBI had sent an anonymous derogatory letter to the faculty committee encouraging Starsky's dismissal.

Proposal

session.

If the trust fund is approved, the Legislature will appropriate more than $1 million to match the funds generated by the surcharges.

Regent Edith Auslander said the board will probably support the proposal.

"I'm supportive of the concept," she said. "The regents have been supportive of financial aid in the past."

The council's proposal states there is an increasing need for financial aid because "the federal government has re-defined the financial aid eligibility requirements creating a growing 'notch group' of individuals who qualify for little or no aid."

Mesa man arrested on drug possession charges

By MIKE BURGESS
State Press

A Mesa man was arrested Friday after Tempe police served a search warrant at his apartment and seized small quantities of heroin and marijuana, police said.

Ernest D. Swoffer, 35, of the 400 block of West Holmes Circle, was arrested about 4:55 p.m. on charges of possession of marijuana for sale and possession of a narcotic drug for sale.

In addition to drugs, police seized $683 cash and a 1978 Corvette.

Tempe police also reported:

•Two unidentified men armed with a pellet gun riddled about 25 car windows early Monday.

police report

Windows were damaged throughout the city and the suspects were last seen near 44th Street and University Drive where they ditched a victim who chased them. The men were also reportedly seen shooting car windows in Phoenix.

•Two men were arrested Sunday in connection with unrelated burglary incidents.

A 19-year-old Tempe man was arrested at 11:10 p.m. after he allegedly took clothing and stereo equipment from an apartment above his located in the 1100 block of East Apache Boulevard. His neighbors, who were at a party at the time, caught him as he tried to leave.

A 23-year-old Phoenix man was arrested 1:05 p.m. after he allegedly stole a VCR from a home in the 900 block of East Lemon Street.

ASU police reported:

•Someone stole the soft-top roof from a red Suzuki Samurai parked in Lot 55 on Sunday and also took four audio cassette tapes and an Arizona driver's license. There are no suspects or leads and loss is estimated at $225.

•A men's black and yellow Murray 10-speed mountain bicycle was stolen from Sahuaro Hall sometime during the weekend. Loss is $170.

Tutoring program helps minorities stay in school

Bernard Jackson

By MELISSA MICHAEL
State Press

Educational Support Program is offering a variety of new programs this semester, including services aimed at helping minority students stay in school and self-paced tutoring assistance, the program's coordinator said.

Bernard L. Jackson, who founded ESP in 1969, said that ESP, ASU's free tutoring program, will help 2,500 students this semester.

The self-paced tutoring program, the Computer Assisted Instructional Lab, has been expanded this semester to include instruction in subjects ranging from vocabulary improvement to engineering equations.

The program is open to all ASU students.

Jackson said students must attend a half-hour orientation session before using a computer or meeting with a tutor.

Currently there are 89 tutors who each have a cumulative GPA of 3.0 and a 3.5 in their tutoring area.

ESP also has added the Ethnic Scholars Program, which sends ESP student workers to ASU activity meetings to recruit minority students who may need help in their classes.

Jackson said the program is designed to deal with the high dropout rate of minority students.

Jackson said "often minority students feel isolated and alienated."

"By having a minority recruiter, they feel that they have someone to relate to that they can call and talk to," he said.

Jackson added that the student recruiters make up the "aggressive end of recruiting minority students to ESP."

Last fall, ESP received 100 applications each day for tutoring help, Jackson said.

Students should anticipate their problem areas and come in as soon as possible, Jackson said.

ASU freshman June Tsai heard about the tutoring program and signed up early "to straighten out unclear material and get help working out problems" in her physics and engineering courses.

Tsai said "one big concern of mine is that ESP is free.

"I already pay enough for tuition," she said.

Tutor Kevin Berger said "students already paid for this in their tuition, so they may as well use it."

Berger said that most of his (tutored students) have problems understanding the concepts in course materials, and he helps them by providing a different viewpoint.

"Teachers sometimes tend to confuse and we try to add another approach," Berger said. "It's a friendly atmosphere here and it's not like a student/teacher relationship at all.

"I also want to stress that it is not students who are failing out that come in for help. It is usually students who want to continue doing well."

Number of parking tickets declines as decal costs rise

By KATHLEEN WINSTEAD
State Press

ASU Parking Services will ticket fewer motorists and issue more warnings because University officials want a "more consistent and equitable parking policy," an ASU administrator said Tuesday.

Richard Landreth, assistant director of parking services, said that beginning this semester, ASU parking services officers will be less stringent in writing tickets. More gate controls will help control illegal parkers, he said.

Last year, parking services issued 93,000 citations, which brought in $711,000.

Landreth predicted next year's revenues to drop to $700,000 and continue decreasing to $650,000 in 1990.

The decrease in citations is part of a five-year plan to decrease citation revenues. The revenue loss will be offset by an increase in parking decal fees next fall that was approved by the University Budget Council.

The parking rates will go before the Arizona Board of Regents for final approval in February. Next year's increase would be the last for the next five years, according to the University's proposal.

The University Budget Council, in a December meeting, also approved increasing the cost of parking in Lots 40 and 58 from $60 this year to $85 next fall.

Rates for Disabled parking decals will increase to $60, up from $47. The rates will continue to increase in increments during the next four years to $105, Landreth said.

Two new parking structures are under construction in Lots 42 and 53. Rates for a Lot 42 decal will cost $85. Lot 53 will be set at $45.

Landreth said visitor parking fees will be increased. Visitor lots, now $2.50 for each day, will cost $3, while the parking structure visitor section will increase 50 cents to $4.

Fees for the three parking structures and lots at Gammage, the Law College and adjacent to the Engineering Center will be raised to $105 from $90.

Rates for perimeter parking and the residence halls will increase $8 to $45 next fall.

The additional funds from the rate increases will be used to pay for additional tram service and expanded tram routes, while some money will be used to pay for campus construction, said Associated Students of ASU President John Fees.

The increase will provide $60,000 to pay off bond debts on the Memorial Union, $96,000 for the Sun Devil Expansion Program, and $624,000 for the student recreation building.

Tram service to and from Lots 40 and 4 will be upgraded and running nearly every eight minutes, Landreth said. Currently, the trams run every 15 minutes.

Fees said he supports the increase because there has not been a rate hike in the past four years.

Sun Devil tripped up by top-ranked matmen

By CHRIS DORSEY
State Press

The Main Event features the greatest professional wrestlers such as "Hulk" Hogan, King Kong Bundy and other so-called mat heroes. These athletes — or actors — bring in crowds of enormous size, but in the world of college wrestling two schools are capable of filling the seats, and that they did.

Top-ranked Oklahoma State and the Sun Devils met Saturday in Stillwater, the home of the Cowboys. It was the second meeting of the two perennial powers and the contest had the same results as the first earlier this month.

ASU, ranked second by Amateur Wrestling News, suffered its second duel loss to its opponent in a 23-10 match in front of an OSU home crowd. The two squads competed in the championship round of the Virginia Duels and the Cowboys were victorious, 22-13.

For Sun Devil coach Bobby Douglas it was a return to where he starred in college.

Oklahoma State improved its record to 16-0 while ASU recorded a 13-2-2 mark.

"We definitely wanted to win in Stillwater," 118-pounder Zeke Jones said. "Everytime we wrestle them we can't get it all together at the same time."

As expected, the opening match provided excitement for the crowd as 118-pounders Cory Baze and Jones, 28-5, faced each other.

"Every time we wrestle it is an all-out

war," Jones said.

Jones, a junior, has had trouble in the past with the Cowboy, but took the skeletons out of the closet and wrestled like a new man defeating the fourth-ranked Baze, 3-2.

The match went down to the wire as a 1-1 tie was broken when Jones shot in for the takedown and converted the maneuver with 11 seconds remaining on the clock.

"We have wrestled so many times and he has got the better of me," Jones said. "As the season comes to end, I feel I am beginning to gel."

But it did not take long for OSU to take the lead at 4-3. Kendall Cross scored a major decision over Sun Devil 126-pounder Marco Sanchez, 11-1.

The Cowboys went on to record three straight wins in the 134, 142 and 150 pound matches and jumped out to a large advantage.

With ASU behind, 158-pounder Dan St. John put the Sun Devils back on the board with a major decision over Jeff McAllister, 13-4.

Douglas' squad could only muster one more win in four matches and went home being beaten by the team that prevents ASU from obtaining the number one ranking.

John Ginther (190 pounds) defeated Randy Couture, 3-2, to round out Sun Devils scoring.

But ASU did not come home empty-handed. Douglas' crew downed Boise State and Missouri, 35-12 and 34-9, respectively.

Junior Dan St. John holds the best record on the team with a 32-1 mark. He is currently ranked second in the country.

The Sun Devils were without the services of 177-pounder Jim Gressley, 21-4, during the road trip. He is out with a shoulder injury, and it is not certain when he will return to action. The senior placed third in last season's National Championship.

The middle weights showed their toughness: Junior Saunders (142 pounds) scored two wins jacking his record to 28-5, while Thom Ortiz (150 pounds) earned three victories upping his tally to 28-3.

National champion contender St. John finished the road trip with four wins and currently holds the best record on the team, 32-1.

"He is an animal," Jones said. "I haven't even seen him have a close match yet this season. I feel he is the best man in his weight class."

Since returning to the lineup in January, Ginther has boosted his tally to 12-4-2.

The Sun Devils return to action Feb. 4, in the UAC against Oklahoma State for the third of four duel meets with the Cowboys

ASU badminton squad looks forward to San Diego Open

By CHRIS PIRKEY
State Press

The collegiate nationals, March 3 in Philadelphia, are the ultimate goal of the ASU badminton team, but for now they are setting their sights on the San Diego Open this weekend in California.

Head Coach Guy Chadwick said his team will be conditioning throughout all of the tournaments they are playing in until they reach the big one — the nationals. He said both the men's and women's teams are looking like championship material, led by men's leader Tom Carmichael and women's leader Liz Aronson.

"Liz is just having a fantastic year," Chadwick said. "She is really playing well — she has won the last three tournaments she has played in. Tom, who had to sit out last year because of a glitch in his schedule, is also playing well. He was second to Benny Lee when he was a junior."

Despite only having one home meet, which took place in October, Chadwick said this year's schedule is really not that bad. He said although he would have liked to have been a host to a spring tournament, there would not have been enough participants to warrant one.

"It would have been hard to get the high schools involved here, since so few offer badminton," Chadwick said. "And since there is no men's badminton here in the high schools, we basically would have been playing ourselves."

Chadwick said most of the tournaments are held in badminton hot spots — places where there is a lot of support for the sport. California, the eastern states and some states in the Midwest are basically the places to play badminton, he said. So tournaments are set up in those states, with anyone who wants to participate in them having to travel to that particular site, Chadwick said.

"Especially in California and on the East Coast, tournaments are there because there are so many players they don't need to travel," Chadwick said. "We need to go to where the competition is. Tournaments are open to anyone who can get there. But they are disjointed as to when they happen across the country."

The fact that Arizona does not have much of an environment for badminton is demonstrated in the amount of Arizonans receiving scholarships to ASU. No one currently on the ASU team is from an Arizona high school — something that hurts the team in terms of scholarships, Chadwick said.

"There are no boys from Arizona to offer scholarships," Chadwick said. "What's fortunate is that the badminton community is small and we have no trouble recruiting people. There are people who want to come to us to play. There hear about us through tournaments and such. I've never had to buy someone from another school."

Despite this being Chadwick's inaugural year as a head coach, he said the experience thus far has been terrific. He said one advantage has been the fact that he has playing experience and can relate to the athlete's in that way.

"I have just come off of being an active player myself," Chadwick said. "I've had no problems. The team has really encouraged me — I'm really the first coach they've had with badminton experience. They don't have to worry about coaching any more."

The ASU Lacrosse Club kicks off a new season under the leadership coach Clark Mercer, and is looking to earn its third consecutive playoff berth.

Lacrosse starts new season

By KELLY PEARCE
State Press

The ASU Lacrosse Club may not have a field to call their own, but Coach Clark Mercer is confident that this season will lead the team to their third consecutive playoff berth.

"This is the first year we haven't had a central place," he said.

The team has used Sahuaro Field for the last 19 years, but an ASU dormitory is taking form there. Mercer said the field between the softball field and the new golf course is the next alternative.

Lacrosse is similar to baseball in that hand-eye coordination is essential. The game is a combination of ice hockey and soccer, and sticks with nets on the end hurl the ball and retrieve it as it sails through the air.

The lacrosse team will face UofA Feb. 11 in Tucson, and Mercer said his club is ready for the Wildcats.

Spring practice for the 13-game season began Saturday, as 20 returnees took the field with sticks and face masks.

"Our strategy this year will be a defensive-oriented game," the coach said. "The scores will tend to be lower."

"They (UofA) have a very consistent, steady team down there."

ASU will play host to Pepperdine Feb. 24,

and UCLA Feb. 26.

Mercer, who works at the reception desk at Tempe's Sheraton Mission Palms Hotel during the day and attends Mesa Community College at night, said he predicts a winning season.

However, Mercer is not only setting his eye on the 1989 season — he wants to make lacrosse a varsity sport at ASU.

"We have seen a lot of growth," he said. "And we've gotten support from the athletic department and lacrosse alumni."

Presently, the club is a part of ASU Intramurals and each player must pay to play. Dues are submitted at the beginning of the season to cover road trips and equipment.

"As a club sport, this is one of the unfortunate things that happens," said Mercer, who does not get paid for his coaching services. "We are a strict club because we want to go varsity."

Until then, Mercer said he wants to drum up as much fan support as possible. Last season, an average of 100 fans cheered the team on at home appearances, he said.

Lacrosse is a popular sport in the East, but does not get much recognition in the Southwest.

"The sport originated with the North American Indians in the Northeast," Mercer said. "It's slowly coming to ASU."

For Sun Devil coach Bobby Douglas it was a return to where he starred in college.

Oklahoma State improved its record to 16-0 while ASU recorded a 13-2-2 mark.

"We definitely wanted to win in Stillwater," 118-pounder Zeke Jones said. "Everytime we wrestle them we can't get it all together at the same time."

As expected, the opening match provided excitement for the crowd as 118-pounders Cory Baze and Jones, 28-5, faced each other.

"Every time we wrestle it is an all-out

war," Jones said.

Jones, a junior, has had trouble in the past with the Cowboy, but took the skeletons out of the closet and wrestled like a new man defeating the fourth-ranked Baze, 3-2.

The match went down to the wire as a 1-1 tie was broken when Jones shot in for the takedown and converted the maneuver with 11 seconds remaining on the clock.

"We have wrestled so many times and he has got the better of me," Jones said. "As the season comes to end, I feel I am beginning to gel."

But it did not take long for OSU to take the lead at 4-3. Kendall Cross scored a major decision over Sun Devil 126-pounder Marco Sanchez, 11-1.

The Cowboys went on to record three straight wins in the 134, 142 and 150 pound matches and jumped out to a large advantage.

With ASU behind, 158-pounder Dan St. John put the Sun Devils back on the board with a major decision over Jeff McAllister, 13-4.

Douglas' squad could only muster one more win in four matches and went home being beaten by the team that prevents ASU from obtaining the number one ranking.

John Ginther (190 pounds) defeated Randy Couture, 3-2, to round out Sun Devils scoring.

But ASU did not come home empty-handed. Douglas' crew downed Boise State and Missouri, 35-12 and 34-9, respectively.

Junior Dan St. John holds the best record on the team with a 32-1 mark. He is currently ranked second in the country.

The Sun Devils were without the services of 177-pounder Jim Gressley, 21-4, during the road trip. He is out with a shoulder injury, and it is not certain when he will return to action. The senior placed third in last season's National Championship.

The middle weights showed their toughness: Junior Saunders (142 pounds) scored two wins jacking his record to 28-5, while Thom Ortiz (150 pounds) earned three victories upping his tally to 28-3.

National champion contender St. John finished the road trip with four wins and currently holds the best record on the team, 32-1.

"He is an animal," Jones said. "I haven't even seen him have a close match yet this season. I feel he is the best man in his weight class."

Since returning to the lineup in January, Ginther has boosted his tally to 12-4-2.

The Sun Devils return to action Feb. 4, in the UAC against Oklahoma State for the third of four duel meets with the Cowboys

ASU badminton squad looks forward to San Diego Open

By CHRIS PIRKEY
State Press

The collegiate nationals, March 3 in Philadelphia, are the ultimate goal of the ASU badminton team, but for now they are setting their sights on the San Diego Open this weekend in California.

Head Coach Guy Chadwick said his team will be conditioning throughout all of the tournaments they are playing in until they reach the big one — the nationals. He said both the men's and women's teams are looking like championship material, led by men's leader Tom Carmichael and women's leader Liz Aronsohn.

"Liz is just having a fantastic year," Chadwick said. "She is really playing well — she has won the last three tournaments she has played in. Tom, who had to sit out last year because of a glitch in his schedule, is also playing well. He was second to Benny Lee when he was a junior."

Despite only having one home meet, which took place in October, Chadwick said this year's schedule is really not that bad. He said although he would have liked to have been a host to a spring tournament, there would not have been enough participants to warrant one.

"It would have been hard to get the high schools involved here, since so few offer badminton," Chadwick said. "And since there is no men's badminton here in the high schools, we basically would have been playing ourselves."

Chadwick said most of the tournaments are held in badminton hot spots — places where there is a lot of support for the sport. California, the eastern states and some states in the Midwest are basically the places to play badminton, he said. So tournaments are set up in those states, with anyone who wants to participate in them having to travel to that particular site, Chadwick said.

"Especially in California and on the East Coast, tournaments are there because there are so many players they don't need to travel," Chadwick said. "We need to go to where the competition is. Tournaments are open to anyone who can get there. But they are disjointed as to when they happen across the country."

The fact that Arizona does not have much of an environment for badminton is demonstrated in the amount of Arizonans receiving scholarships to ASU. No one currently on the ASU team is from an Arizona high school — something that hurts the team in terms of scholarships, Chadwick said.

"There are no boys from Arizona to offer scholarships," Chadwick said. "What's fortunate is that the badminton community is small and we have no trouble recruiting people. There are people who want to come to us to play. There hear about us through tournaments and such. I've never had to buy someone from another school."

Despite this being Chadwick's inaugural year as a head coach, he said the experience thus far has been terrific. He said one advantage has been the fact that he has playing experience and can relate to the athlete's in that way.

"I have just come off of being an active player myself," Chadwick said. "I've had no problems. The team has really encouraged me — I'm really the first coach they've had with badminton experience. They don't have to worry about coaching any more."

The ASU Lacrosse Club kicks off a new season under the leadership coach Clark Mercer, and is looking to earn its third consecutive playoff berth.

Lacrosse starts new season

By KELLY PEARCE
State Press

The ASU Lacrosse Club may not have a field to call their own, but Coach Clark Mercer is confident that this season will lead the team to their third consecutive playoff berth.

"This is the first year we haven't had a central place," he said.

The team has used Sahuaro Field for the last 19 years, but an ASU dormitory is taking form there. Mercer said the field between the softball field and the new golf course is the next alternative.

Lacrosse is similar to baseball in that hand-eye coordination is essential. The game is a combination of ice hockey and soccer, and sticks with nets on the end hurl the ball and retrieve it as it sails through the air.

The lacrosse team will face UofA Feb. 11 in Tucson, and Mercer said his club is ready for the Wildcats.

Spring practice for the 13-game season began Saturday, as 20 returnees took the field with sticks and face masks.

"Our strategy this year will be a defensive-oriented game," the coach said. "The scores will tend to be lower."

"They (UofA) have a very consistent, steady team down there." ASU will play host to Pepperdine Feb. 24, and UCLA Feb. 26.

Mercer, who works at the reception desk at Tempe's Sheraton Mission Palms Hotel during the day and attends Mesa Community College at night, said he predicts a winning season.

However, Mercer is not only setting his eye on the 1989 season — he wants to make lacrosse a varsity sport at ASU.

"We have seen a lot of growth," he said. "And we've gotten support from the athletic department and lacrosse alumni."

Presently, the club is a part of ASU Intramurals and each player must pay to play. Dues are submitted at the beginning of the season to cover road trips and equipment.

"As a club sport, this is one of the unfortunate things that happens," said Mercer, who does not get paid for his coaching services. "We are a strict club because we want to go varsity."

Until then, Mercer said he wants to drum up as much fan support as possible. Last season, an average of 100 fans cheered the team on at home appearances, he said.

Lacrosse is a popular sport in the East, but does not get much recognition in the Southwest.

"The sport originated with the North American Indians in the Northeast," Mercer said. "It's slowly coming to ASU."

Roadtrip unsuccessful; Devils drop two games

By KYLE ENG

State Press

LOS ANGELES — Every frequent traveler knows that taking too many trips can really take its toll on the body.

The Sun Devil women's basketball team is beginning to learn that the hard way. ASU was in Los Angeles this weekend to take on UCLA on Friday night and USC on Saturday afternoon.

The Sun Devils lost both games and now have dropped all of their Pac-10 away games.

"It's always tough to play on the road," ASU assistant coach Debra Stevens said. "There are places where the girls team plays in a small gym, and they pack it with people and a band. It's like they're (the fans) right on top of you."

But Stevens said the team is learning to adapt to an opposing crowd.

"At first some of the girls would get frustrated with the crowd for what they were yelling," she said. "A couple of times it got to the point where a few of our girls wanted to yell back."

"It's almost a funny thing — The girls have to realize they cannot expect the same kind of hospitality on the road as they receive at home. In fact they have to accept some type of hostility in some places."

And the Sun Devils will most likely hear unfriendly remarks Friday when they play the Wildcats in Tuscon. ASU will try to snap a four-game losing skid that has knocked them down to ninth place in the Pac-10 standings.

The Sun Devils lost in overtime to UCLA Friday, 85-81. ASU center Fran Ciak, who scored 22 points and pulled down 14 rebounds, led the team in scoring for the first time this season. Sophomore guard Karen O'Connor contributed 19 points.

The Sun Devils overcame a 16-point halftime deficit and pulled ahead of UCLA, 77-75, with only 11 seconds remaining. But Bruin forward Sandra VanEmbricqs sank two free throws before time ran out.

Late in the overtime period, with the score tied 81-81, VanEmbricqs scored a bucket and added a free throw to put the Bruins up by three. Teammate Michele Wooton added a free throw, giving UCLA their margin of victory.

On Saturday, the Devils traveled to USC to play the Trojans. Although it was a different gym, the Sun Devils experienced similar results, losing 78-58.

The game was tight throughout the first half and ASU led only once. Guard Lisa Jones tipped in a missed shot as the buzzer sounded, giving the Sun Devils a 31-29 lead.

The Sun Devils led early in the second half, but the Trojans made a quick comeback with fast-break layups and a strong inside game.

O'Connor led ASU with 20 points, and junior guard Rosalind Senior added 14 points.

Stevens said the team will concentrate on the basics and try to regain some strength in preparation for Friday's game.

"We have to work on our post defense and our perimeter shooting," she said. "I think basically this week we'll give the girls some rest and work on some fundamentals."

Board votes in favor of new grade ruling

PHOENIX (AP) — The state Board of Education voted 7-0 Monday to require that students pass all their required courses beginning next year before they can take part in competitive sports or non-academic clubs.

Teachers also will have to feel the student is making "satisfactory progress" toward graduation, under the new policy.

In other action at a day-long meeting, the Board approved sex-education programs submitted by four elementary school districts from Prescott, Tempe, Tolleson and Fort Huachuca.

The board's prior policy concerning the so-called "no-pass, no-play" rules had left it up to each individual district to set its own standard.

But lawmakers voted last year to require that the board establish a statewide minimum, and board members agreed Monday on new minimum rules for middle schools and high schools.

The new rules require districts to declare a student ineligible for sports and clubs as soon as the student flunks one required course, no matter how well the student does in other classes.

Under the old rules, some districts had let students who failed one course continue to participate as long as they had an overall average of "C" or above.

Districts are free to set tougher minimums, such as a "C" average in addition to no failing grades, but must submit detailed plans to the state Department of Education by July 1, said C. Diane Bishop, who heads the agency and sits on the board in her capacity as superintendent of public instruction.

"It's a file-and-use kind of thing," she said, explaining that school policies would be presumed valid unless departmental staff found a problem.

Students would be evaluated at least once every nine weeks and, if declared ineligible due to grades, would remain ineligible for as long as it takes to get back on track, Bishop said.

The old rule applied to elementary schools as well as middle schools and high schools, but the new rule exempts elementary schools because they don't have many extra-curricular activities in any case, Bishop said.

The definition of extra-curricular activities remains unchanged in the new rule and covers any interscholastic activities "of a competitive nature," such as sports or debating, as well as any clubs where no academic credit is granted.

The definition is an effort to protect academically oriented activities such as music practice from the ban on other activities such as football, Ms. Bishop said.

The new policy also requires that districts offer remedial help to students who fail a course.

Curly 'shuffles' way out of childhood memories

Chris Dorsey
Asst. Sports Editor

Can you ever remember having a childhood hero that you always looked up to and dreamed of meeting someday down the road?

While growing up in a rural Midwestern town, I can recall the Harlem Globetrotters were always a popular attraction when they came to play.

Such fabled heroes as Meadowlark Lemon, Geese Ausbie, Marques Haynes and the crowd pleaser, Curly Neal, would excite the entire town and leave them in awe.

It was all the rage: the lunch boxes (which I took proudly to school, safeguarding my bologna and cheese), comic books and cartoons on Saturday morning. They were bigger than life.

The Globetrotters have been goodwill ambassadors all over the world for years, bringing smiles to children of all ages.

Curly was always my favorite.

Yesterday, those feelings changed in a heartbeat.

It was scheduled that the Legend would come down to the State Press sports office for a promotional interview dealing with Friday night's Globetrotter game in the Activity Center.

We were psyched.

A fellow sports writer, who also dreamed of meeting his childhood hero, was going to do the interview with me. We told our friends and even called our mothers long distance.

Curly was worth that.

So we thought.

Everything was set: clean office, coffee brewing and a photographer standing by.

We waited.

And waited.

For three hours, we paced, drank all the coffee (plus two more pots) and began to wonder if our encounter would go through as planned.

Denied.

Remember the confetti stunt he used to pull, by throwing it in someone's face? Well this time I got the water — in my face.

Mr. Neal called four hours after the scheduled interview, explaining the situation. He was not going to make it.

Depression set in.

It was apparent that he is a busy man. He now deals in public relations for the Globetrotters now after a 22-year career on the court.

The chat lasted 10 minutes, because he had to go. But I was able to talk to Curly and get some insight on the game.

He was pumped up and excited that the Globetrotters continue the tradition of spreading joy throughout the world. And that is something to be proud of, considering the dismal attitudes of many people today.

By the end of the interview, the aggression and anger inside my mind was gone and the same feeling of excitement came back when I finally realized this was a once-in-a-lifetime chance.

This is a day that will be long remembered. Especially every time I glance at the old, battered lunch box that rests in my closet. I will recall the trouble and excitement of talking to one of the biggest names in basketball — Curly Neal.

Cincinnati, fans disappointed with Super Bowl

CINCINNATI (AP) — A few straggling Cincinnati Bengals fans remained downtown long after the 20-16 Super Bowl loss to San Francisco, trying to figure out how the 49ers did it.

Cincinnati lost when 49ers quarterback Joe Montana hit John Taylor with a 10-yard touchdown pass with 34 seconds left in the game. For orange-and-black-clad Cincinnati fans, the party was over — immediately.

Some cried, others shrugged as they left Fountain Square Plaza and downtown bars Sunday night. All were quiet.

Police said a crowd of about 600 people watched the game on a giant television screen in the plaza.

Meanwhile, Cincinnati officials announced plans to welcome home the team today in a downtown celebration at 4:30 p.m. at Fountain Square.

"Once we lost (Tim) Krumrie, the pressure was off Montana and he could handle the Bengals (defensive backfield)," said Dennis Middenforf of Cincinnati, talking with Steff Reff of Detroit in a downtown bar. Krumrie, an all-pro nose tackle, suffered a broken leg in the first quarter.

"Boomer just wasn't throwing — He couldn't hit the side of a barn," Reff said of Boomer Esiason, Cincinnati's quarterback. "I mean, the 49ers (defense) was good but they're not that good."

The 49ers also beat Cincinnati, 26-21, in the 1982 Super Bowl.

"I really didn't see it coming, I thought we'd win," said Ken Blagg of nearby Covington, Ky.

Gerry Washington of Cincinnati said he was disappointed but still proud of the Bengals for coming so far after last season's 4-11 record.

"I guess I knew San Francisco would win because they were the favorite, but in my heart I hoped Cincinnati would win," Washington said. "I'm proud of Cincinnati. Nobody would give us a chance before the season."

Police reported no incidents following the game, just disappointment.

"It was the same thing when we lost in 1982," said police Capt. Robin Hochstrasser.

Jeff Watson, of College Park, Md., said he grew up with Esiason and also attended the University of Maryland.

"I lost $500. It had to be his finger, that's why he didn't pass well against Buffalo, Seattle or here," Watson said.

Esiason had injured a finger on his left, throwing hand, which teammates said hindered the quarterback's throwing somewhat in the NFL playoffs.

"Cheer up," said another man. "Cincinnati beat the point spread."

The Bengals had been one touchdown underdogs.

"We had a full house until the Bengals lost," said Julie Harmon, manager of Barleycorn's, a popular sports-oriented downtown bar.

"It's depressing. You know, Cincinnati fans are different," Harmon said. "In Cleveland, they are do-or-die with (the Browns). Cincinnati fans are fair-weather fans. Last year, when they were losing, people were on me for going to all the games. Now they'll be on the Bengals."

Early in the game, the fans at Barleycorn's suddenly grew quiet when Krumrie broke his leg.

"It was like the air went out of the place," said one fan. "Everybody had their fingers up to their mouths wondering what was going to happen to the defense."
