By TYRONE MEIGHAN
State Press

Some Arizona lawmakers and members of the Arizona Board of Regents said Wednesday they support the idea of an ASU branch campus in Maricopa County, but they need more details.

"I am one who believes the regents need to start planning for another branch in Maricopa County," said Regent Jack Pfister. He added that further study must be done to determine the location of the branch and how it will be funded.

The regents' Task Force on Excellence, Efficiency and Competitiveness reported last fall that ASU needs to look for a branch campus to provide for students' needs in the future.

ASU officials have indicated that the branch should be in the southeast Valley and have set up a study committee to examine the prospects of an ASU East Campus.

Student regent Pat McWhortor said the board is looking at the the task force's recommendations and that he agrees there is a need for ASU to deal with its growth.

"We need to make some tough decisions about the Tempe campus and its growth," he said. "We have to ask ourselves if we can effectively deliver education to the students."

He added that creating another branch campus will be difficult.

"The practicality of another branch campus is not good," he said, adding that it will be difficult to get the funds for a branch campus.

Sen. Doug Todd, D-Tempe, said that ASU's West Campus should be a model in studying the prospect of another branch campus.

"We have a success pattern at ASU West," he said, and added that growth is a major problem facing ASU in the decades to follow.

Regent Andrew Hurwitz said he wants to see more

Disabled decry access to new library

By ROBIE KAKONGE
State Press

Disabled students have complained to University officials that ramps in the new underground addition to Hayden Library are not accessible for wheelchairs and a construction delay has left disabled students with limited access to the facility.

George Carrillo, who is director of Educational Development and is currently acting as the associate director for Disabled Resources, said he has been receiving complaints from disabled students since the library opened Monday.

The students most often complain that the ramps leading from the underground expansion to the original structure are too steep and too long. The ramps make it difficult for those with hand-operated wheelchairs to move from one area of the library to the next.

"Disabled students have approached me with concerns about the new library and I have asked them to be patient," Carrillo said.

Furthermore, students are upset because the elevator,

Official says sexually active people will meet with disease

By LORI ZUBALIK
State Press

Anyone who is sexually active will eventually come into contact with a sexually transmitted disease, an ASU health official said Wednesday.

Chuck McDuffie, the coordinator of health education at ASU's Health Center, said STD examinations and treatments rank among the top five reasons why students go to the Health Center.

Other major reasons include colds, influenza and blows to the body.

Patty Hunt, a certified nurse practitioner at the Health Center, said chlamydia and genital warts are the most predominant STD's treated at the Center.

Chlamydia, dubbed the "silent STD" because it often goes undetected by its victims, is a bacterial infection that is spread through sexual intercourse and oral and anal sex.

Genital warts, or condylomata, are fleshy growths which appear in the genital area. They are caused by the papilloma virus and are usually contracted through sexual intercourse. "If they (victims) are lucky they have symptoms that bring them in," McDuffie said.

Common STD symptoms are painful or burning sensations experienced during urination, and an unusual discharge from the penis or vagina.

However, some STDs go unnoticed because their carriers don't have any symptoms, McDuffie said. This can be particularly hazardous to people because some diseases, such as chlamydia, can lead to pelvic inflammatory disease in women and nongonococcal urethritis in men.

Pelvic inflammatory disease is a condition that causes inflammation of the entire female reproductive system. Each year an estimated 11,000 women in America become sterile from PID and 3,600 suffer ectopic or tubal pregnancies, according to Abbot Laboratories in Abott Park, Illinois.

In males, chlamydia is the leading cause of nongonococcal urethritis, an inflammation of the urethra. If untreated, NGU can lead to epididymitis, an inflammation of the testicles that can cause sterility.

However, Hunt said chlamydia is easily and painlessly treated with antibiotics after it has been detected.

Hunt said that she finds an STD in about every three out of five women who come in for their annual pelvic exam.

"The woman is usually suprised to find she's got an STD," Hunt said, stressing that many STDs are hard to detect.

Taking a culture for chlamydia is a normal procedure at the Health Center when a patient comes in for a pelvic exam.

"A lot of times students come in because of the signs accompanying the STD but don't realize that their problem is

4-mile-long ditch to stem drug smuggling U.S.-Mexican border

WASHINGTON (AP) — A four-mile-long ditch that a Justice Department official compared Wednesday to a "buried Berlin Wall" is planned for a stretch of the U.S.-Mexican border to stem drug smuggling into Southern California.

But the plan is being criticized as "too little too late" by a group that advocates building fences along the border and blasted as "repressive" by immigrant rights organizations.

Associate Attorney Gen. Francis A. Keating II said he proposed the idea last fall as a way to discourage drug smugglers from driving loads of cocaine, marijuana and heroin across the border near San Diego.

The plan being undertaken by the Immigration and Naturalization Service was approved last month by Attorney General Dick Thornburgh, Keating said.

The ditch, which Keating likened to "our buried Berlin Wall" will be deep and wide enough to discourage smugglers from driving trucks and cars across the border along a four-mile stretch of flat desert east of San Ysidro, Calif.

The associate attorney general, who is leaving office with the start of the Bush administration, said the desert stretch in the Otay Mesa area east of San Ysidro is a major drug smuggling route.

"The cocaine, marijuana and heroin from Mexico is being carried across the border between the points of entry" that are operated by the Customs Service, Keating said.

Reagan contracts publishing company to print memoirs

NEW YORK (AP) — Ronald Reagan has signed a contract with Simon & Schuster to write his memoirs, the publishing house said Wednesday.

The financial arrangements were not disclosed. "The terms are private between President Reagan and Simon & Schuster," said Reagan's spokesman Mark Weinberg.

Before the announcement, literary agent Irving "Swift" Lazar, a longtime Reagan friend, said every major publisher was bidding for the Reagan book. He added, "It will probably bring $5 million to $7 million."

Father of Contra movement assassinated by gunmen

TEGUCIGALPA, Honduras (AP) — The former armed forces chief who founded the Nicaraguan rebel movement in Honduras was assassinated on Wednesday by six men who riddled his car with gunfire, officials said.

Former Gen. Gustavo Alvarez Martinez died of gunshot wounds near his home in the capital's Florencia district, said Salvador Lobo, director of emergencies at the State Hospital School.

Radio America, a local station, said anonymous callers claimed responsibility on behalf of the Popular Liberation Forces, a leftist group, but police said they had no evidence to confirm the claim.

It was the third assassination in Honduras in the last three weeks. The previous killings involved a Nicaraguan rebel commander and a reputed druglord's lawyer.

As head of the national police in 1981, Alvarez became the godfather of the Contras by telling CIA director William Casey that anti-Sandinista forces could operate from Honduran territory.

Senate sponsors rejection of proposed pay raise

WASHINGTON (AP) — Nearly a quarter of the Senate sponsored legislation Wednesday that would reject a proposed 50 percent congressional pay raise and would roll back the increase if the House lets it become law by ducking a vote.

The senators, 10 Democrats and 13 Republicans, made clear they wanted to turn up pressure on the House, which appears headed toward allowing the increase to become law automatically.

Senators Larry Pressler, R-S.D., and Charles E. Grassley, R-Iowa, chief sponsors of the legislation, said the rollback feature would keep pressure on the House even if the raise becomes law through House inaction.

If the increase takes effect, Grassley said, House opponents of the raise could try again and again to attach a rollback to crucial legislation.

Former President Ronald Reagan proposed increasing rank-and-file congressional salaries from $89,500 a year to $135,000, a raise that becomes law Feb. 8 unless both the House and Senate vote to stop it.

Senate Majority Leader George Mitchell, D-Maine, has promised a vote on rejecting the raise before the deadline, but House leaders have expressed no interest in allowing such a vote.

Until now, critics of the raise have centered on stopping the increase by the deadline.

The Pressler-Grassley bill and comments by lawmakers in both houses Wednesday, have raised the possibility of action after the deadline to reduce the raise.

Also, Senators Robert W. Kasten Jr., R-Wis.; Nancy Kassebaum, R-Kan.; Tom Harkin, D-Iowa; Christopher S. Bond, R-Mo.; Richard H. Bryan, D-Nev.; Pete V. Domenici, R-N.M.; Dan Coats, R-Ind.; Rudy Boschwitz, R-Minn.; Carl Levin, D-Mich.; Richard C. Shelby, D-Ala. and Don Nickles, R-Okla.

Mitchell told reporters: "I favor a comprehensive approach that includes enactment of the ethics bill the president vetoed, campaign finance reform, a ban on honoraria and enactment of compensation to offset the loss in honoraria."

The ethics bill, vetoed by Reagan and introduced again Wednesday by Thurmond, would restrict lobbying by former members of Congress, their staffs and top executive branch officials. Campaign finance reform would impose limits on campaign spending.

Rep. Barney Frank, D-Mass., sponsor of the House version of the ethics bill, said he believed the House also would address the pay raise as part of a reform package after the increase went into effect.

Frank said he favors a package that includes the post-employment ethics bill, elimination of honoraria and a $27,000 pay raise that would be a tradeoff for the honoraria loss in the House.

Death penalty

Barbecues, talk-show host trivialize gravity of capital punishment

David Jordan
Columnist

With the execution of Ted Bundy on Tuesday, the impassioned advocates on either side of the death penalty have once again taken center stage on an issue that has twisted the conscience of this nation into knots. Moralists ranging in stature from Supreme Court Justices to college newspaper columnists have expressed the dire consequences that will befall society if we continue or discontinue the modern death penalty.

But this particular execution seems to have brought a more fevered pitch to the age-old "to be or not to be" debate. The killings of Ted Bundy were so well publicized that advocates and antagonists of capital punishment alike have had to continue this debate with the sickening realization that in this case, we were dealing with a truly deranged psychopath.

I have often reminded myself of the social justifications for capital punishment. Between deterrence and retribution, I can see the value in a system that promotes consequences for violent criminal behavior. The death penalty, it seems, is the ultimate expression of moral outrage.

What has been disturbing about the affair, however, has been the amount that people have trivialized his execution. Bundy barbecues have abounded. A bar in Denver offered "Burn, Bundy, Burn" beer. A T-Shirt in Florida read "Roast in Peace." His final moments were met with firecrackers, sparklers and cheers. As Bundy's last moments ticked away, a collective bloodlust crept across the nation.

It was not our proudest moment. ASU's addition to the effort will be the Morton Downey Jr. show. In an ongoing attempt to ensure that all of the most important issues of our day are treated as frivolously as possible, Morton Downey Jr. will have a show at Gammage at 7:30 p.m. on Saturday. During his show, which will not be aired, Downey will "discuss" with a panel the controversies surrounding the death penalty. Not since USA Today introduced color weather maps has such a blow been struck for the cause of superficial journalism.

As anyone who has ever seen Downey in action can attest, such panel discussions have nothing to do with the rational discussion of issues. Instead, Morton Downey Jr. merely uses significant topics as an excuse to let loose a bloodthirsty crowd on a panel of innocents.

I am at a loss to explain what the fascination is with trivializing the death penalty in general, and the execution of Ted Bundy in particular. Execution is not a joyous occasion. It is not a great achievement of modern civilization. Capital punishment is a tragedy, it is an acknowledgement by our society that one of our members was so psychotic, so maladjusted, that he can no longer be tolerated as a living being.

Perhaps it is the truly shocking nature of the crimes of Ted Bundy that fuels "Bundy Barbecues." And yet, I can't escape the feeling that if revenge alone justifies our actions, then we have evolved little from the Middle Ages. We seem to have left the days of "an eye for an eye" behind us, and yet to watch men like "Mort" one could almost believe that we have changed little since the days of trial by sword.

And yet civilized society tells us that there are good justifications for the modern death penalty. Despite the incredible debate on the issue, there does appear to be some deterrent effect from executions. And the same policies that justify taking away the liberty of criminals — namely a retributive idea that the criminal somehow deserves to pay for his crimes — can apply by extension to the societal taking of a life.

My problem is that while I can see society justifying the death penalty, I can't see treating it frivolously. The USA Today mentality may help soothe our conscience regarding executions, but it does not encourage the serious reflection that the taking of a life must always command.

Morton Downey Jr. may make us feel less disturbed about capital punishment. I think, however, that on this issue it is important to be disturbed. The very fact that executions do disturb us ensures that we will use this penalty in only the most extreme cases. It will serve as a continuing check on our use of the ultimate penalty.

So perhaps we shouldn't use this cathartic response — we shouldn't justify men like Morton Downey Jr. and the approach they take by buying tickets and attending. Maybe it is time to make a true statement for the sanctity of life by not participating in this event.

But if you do go, you'll probably see me there.

Morton Downey Jr.

Ritter cartoon pushes wrong 'buttons'

Editor:

I am writing this letter to express my displeasure with Mike Ritter's political cartoon of Jan. 24, 1989. It is the definition of bad taste. The comparison of the murderous killing spree (of children) to anything is sickening. Not only is this a pathetic cartoon, Mr. Ritter portrays the killer as a larger-than-life, muscular, "Rambo"-type macho man. Don't glorify a weasel who turned an automatic weapon not on his drug competitors, not on his ex-boss, not even on his unfaithful wife but on a schoolyard of totally innocent children! Show him for what he was — an asshole.

The civil rights and the abortion comparison don't deserve any acknowledgment.

We do need people like Mike Ritter to push our buttons and make us think, I commend him for this. However, he should rethink his views on violence and its glorification.

Students need day off in mid-semester, not after Christmas break

Editors:

Well, it was great to start the semester a day later than we should have, thanks to President Nelson giving the University the day off due to the celebration of Dr. Martin Luther King's birthday. However, this day off, as does everything else at this University, comes at the students' expense or without the students having a chance to voice their opinions.

Because Dr. Nelson decided that the school should have the day off to honor Dr. King, he arbitrarily decided that the school would have to compensate by not taking Presidents Day off. Thank you, Dr. Nelson; just what the students want: A day off from school after we've just had a month off for Christmas break. From a student's perspective — and we all know that our's is the last to be taken into consideration at ASU — we don't need a day off attached to what is already a month off. We would much prefer the day off after we've been in school for six weeks without a break in our routines. As it is, Presidents Day was conceived to remove a day off from our schedules. Remember when we used to get both Lincoln's and Washington's birthdays off?

Proverbial American Dream isn't all it's cracked up to be

By G. LYNN NELSON

"The world is a mystery," he said. "And it is not at all as you picture it."

— Don Juan in Castaneda's "Journal to Ixtlan"

The other morning, I drove out to the reservation to Delmar's place. I parked my truck beside his old adobe house that blends with the desert, turned off the engine and just sat there for a while in the sunshine and silence.

The dog came first — tail wagging, smiling. I scratched his ears and talked to him for a while. Then Delmar appeared, walking in from the trail that leads back to his ceremonial grounds in the desert. His long, raven hair was pulled back in a ponytail. As always, his dark Apache face was open and clear and friendly. We shook hands Indian-style, gently.

He rode with me to show me where to find some willows for my meditation-hogan. As we drove down a back trail past some desert that was being bulldozed for cotton crops, Delmar pointed to a lone cottonwood tree in the distance. "There's a hawk nest in that tree," he said quietly. "They raised two babies in the spring. I was afraid the Farms people would bulldoze it."

As we got closer, I could see the nest high up in the tree — and a large red-tailed hawk on a branch nearby. About twenty yards out from the tree in each of the four directions, someone had placed tall branch-poles in the ground. From the top of each pole fluttered a small rag of color marking that sacred direction. And the bulldozers had turned aside.

So here we are at ASU, ready for another semester of partying and fraternity riots and "getting an education." So why am I talking about some Indian out in the desert?

Because that Indian out there in the desert represents a slim but growing hope for the future of the world. You and the world would be much better off if you spent four years studying with him than four years here at ASU.

Because the leading edge of our yet small knowing is coming back to his vision — away from the bulldozer of the American Dream and back to the tree and the hawk and the sacredness and unity of all things.

A people's dreams arise from their vision, from their "picture" of the world, from their paradigm of reality. "Paradigm" is a word coined by the scientist Thomas Kuhn to describe the structure of beliefs and assumptions through which we view the world, it is the accepted view of reality. It is the frame of the window through which we see. Therefore, it is seldom questioned — except by poets and prophets and children and the insane. And it is always questioned at great price (witness Socrates, Jesus, Copernicus and Galileo).

'Business-as-usual is killing the earth . . . The American Dream is filling our air and polluting our water and washing up on our beaches from sea to shining sea.'

because egos and empires are built upon it.

The American Dream arose from a vision of reality, a paradigm, brought here from Western Europe and shaped by several hundred years of a growing and relentless reliance on science, on left-brain logic and its dualistic-mechanistic perceptions of reality. And over the last two centuries, some amazing technological feats have been accomplished within the narrow bounds of this vision. But its terrible flaws were there from the beginning.

The same vision of reality that gave birth to the American Dream also allowed us to "discover" a country that was already inhabited — by a people of another vision — and to destroy them. It further allowed us then to occupy and exploit that country through the enslavement of yet another people. So, the Dream that was born in sickness has done its clever tricks and danced its frantic dance.

But now the paradigm is changing — and the American Dream must change too, or it will, like Ahab's twisted vision, drag the ship of the world down with it. Because now science itself — the heart of the old paradigm, the god of the American Dream — has seen beyond its own narrow vision into a work of mystery and wonder. A work that people of another vision knew was there all along. Listen first to one of Delmar's people, Chief Seattle, speaking in 1855 (when the bulldozer of the American Dream was decimating the last of his people):

"Humankind has not woven the web of life. We are but one thread within it. Whatever we do to the web, we do to ourselves. All things are bound together. All things connect. Whatever befalls the earth befalls the children of the earth."

And then listen to Fritjof Capra, a theoretical physicist, writing in 1975 in his book "The Tao of Physics":

"Quantum physics forces us to see the universe not as a collection of physical objects, but rather as a complicated web of relations between the various parts of a unified whole."

This is the heart of our changing paradigm. This is the vision of the future — if there is to be a future.

But sadly, this is not the vision you will be helped to see here at ASU. What you will get at this University (as at most American educational institutions) is a traditional training for business as usual, life-as-we-see-it, get a degree and buy a Mercedes and grab a chunk of the American Dream.

But business-as-usual is killing the earth. And life-as-we-see-it has become a narrow, materialistic, left-brained, tinsel coffin. And the American Dream is defunct. The American Dream is filling our air and polluting our water and washing up on our beaches from sea to shining sea.

So, whether we care enough to recognize it or not, we are at a turning point in the history of humanity on Earth. We must now begin to embrace a new vision of life and a new way of being, or perish. And this is not evangelistic Armageddon crap. This is simple fact. Acid rain is falling on our parade. The American Dream is over. The earth cannot afford it any longer.

And that is what we should be teaching here at ASU — in every class, in every department. But for the most part we won't tell you that. We will, in fact, do very little to help you see a better vision of the world, a better way of being. Because you want your Mercedes and we want your tuition (and grants, awards and "prestige"). And because old dreams die hard.

So we will take your tuition and go on teaching you the old lies, the lies that are killing us physically and spiritually. Einstein described it this way:

"A human being is part of the whole called by us the universe . . . He experiences himself, his thoughts and feelings, as something separated from the rest, a kind of optical delusion of his consciousness. This delusion is a kind of prison for us . . . Our task must be to free ourselves from this prison by widening our circle of compassion to embrace all living creatures and the whole of nature in its beauty."

So you would do well to be aware of these lies so that you might attend ASU not as a school of technology only — and not allow us to further imprison you in this "delusion of our consciousness."

Because we will, for example, instill in you the lie that rational, logical, linear knowing is all-knowing. In this way, we will teach you that feelings do not count. We will teach you to be unfeeling. This lie will ruin all your relationships and give you ulcers and cancer and make both you and your life so incredibly empty and boring that you will probably have to drink a lot and take lots of drugs during your lifetime in order to feel anything at all.

And by the way that we teach you and by what we teach you, we will lead you to believe the lie that learning is basically the memorization of facts — that all knowing worth knowing can be found in Hayden Library and stored in a computer and carried in a briefcase. We will not teach you to seek and learn from solitude, to "be still and know." We will not point out to you — because we will have forgotten to wonder ourselves — how those such as Jesus, Buddha, Gandhi, Schweitzer and Mother Theresa were able to do their work without a briefcase and a computer. Thus, we will say to you, "Lo, here it is," or "There" (always pointing away from yourself) — but we will not suggest to you that

(according to both Jesus and current holographic theory) there might be a kingdom within you.

We will lead you to believe that learning and knowledge is purely a linear and incremental affair which, if you choose, you can follow to its ultimate (a Ph.D.). The implication being that you will then know all there is to know. We will not tell you that this educational track is too often a process of learning more and more about less and less. We will not tell you that Ph.D.s, too, quarrel with their lovers and lie awake at night in fear of death and wonder how far out the stars must reach and how a bumblebee can fly.

These lies are just part of a greater and more general lie that we teach you by implication — the lie that we humans know what is going on in the universe. We will not teach you the truth that neither we, your parents, the president nor anyone else really knows what it's all about. Seldom will we remind you that if we put the history of the universe (16 billion years?) on a scale of one year, that humanity's time on earth has been only the last thirty minutes of that year. We will not tell you that by the universal clock, we have just gotten here — that we are but infants in the universe, children of the earth.

So we will not teach you to have soft eyes and a beginner's mind. Rather, we will teach you to have hard eyes and an expert's mind, teach you to pretend, give you the dangerous illusion that you know a lot because you have memorized

'We will not tell you that this educational track is too often a process of learning more and more about less and less. We will not tell you that Ph.D.s, too, quarrel with their lovers and lie awake at night in fear of death . . .'

some tiny facts within the narrow band of knowing which we call reality. Seldom will we suggest to you (because we ourselves forget) that this narrow band we call reality undoubtedly exists within some immense spectrum of knowing most of which we have not yet even dreamed. In this way, we will do little to teach you to treat the world with humility and awe.

Rather, we will teach you to drive bulldozers over the earth and each other — when we should be showing you how to tie rags of color to mark the sacredness of all things.

Thus we will not teach you that real learning involves us wholly (holy) — body, mind and spirit — that it is a wondrous, wild circling that never ends, and that it is forever filled with pain, fear and sweet joy (but never boredom). And so we will not teach you reverence and love, which mostly the world needs from you.

Tempe Police divers recover stolen Jeep from lake

By MIKE BURGESS
State Press

Police scuba divers recovered a stolen truck Tuesday from the bottom of a Tempe lake where it had been submerged since September.

The $28,000 1988 Jeep Cherokee, which was reportedly taken from Earnhardt's Jeep Eagle, 3230 N. Scottsdale Road, was discovered about 6:30 p.m. Monday by a resident who was boating in the The Lakes community near the 1100 block of East Lighthouse Lane, police said.

The man told police the propeller on his boat hit a large submerged object, and on Tuesday divers determined it was a Jeep lying in about 15 feet of water.

police report

A suspect in the theft was arrested by Scottsdale police in September.

Tempe police also reported:
•A bandit who handed a bank teller a hold-up note Monday took off with an undetermined amount of cash.

The suspect robbed the Merabank branch at 1745 E. Guadalupe Road about 3:58 p.m. No weapon was seen.

ASU police reported the following incidents ending 7 a.m. Wednesday:

•The ASU Police Department's Bicycle Enforcement Safety Team issued 29 citations.

•Two students were arrested early Wednesday after they were seen urinating on the north side of the Physical Education West Building. They were cited and released.

•A student's purse and contents valued at $10 were stolen Tuesday from the main lounge at the MU while she was reading a newspaper.

•Three bicycles were stolen Saturday from the bicycle racks outside the entrance to Packard Stadium. Loss is $450.

•A student was arrested on a driving-under-the-influence charge in the 900 block of East University Drive.

He added that although some people suspect they have contracted an STD, they deny it.

"The signs may go away, but the STD isn't going to," he said. "Many people feel that they are 'bad' people if they are diagnosed as having an STD.

"The viruses are not distinguishing between 'good' and

Officials discussing east Valley campus

By RICHARD VIGIL
State Press

ASU officials are investigating the possibility of building a new branch campus in the east Valley that would be similar to ASU West Campus.

Brent Brown, ASU's university relations vice president, said Tuesday that a study committee has been set up by President J. Russell Nelson to study the needs of east Valley residents.

"Student population is going to increase by the year 2000, and we need to start planning for it now," Brown said Monday.

It has been projected that ASU's enrollment will reach 60,000 by the turn of the century.

A September 1988 report from the Arizona Board of Regents' Task Force on Excellence, Efficiency and Competitiveness called for immediate planning for additional learning facilities away from the main campus.

The report called for "an additional upper-division and master's degree branch campus or learning centers in Maricopa County."

The study committee, formed by Nelson in response to the EEC report, is comprised of all six university vice presidents and Frank Sackton, director of the Affirmative Action office.

ASU Provost Richard E. Peck, chairman of the study committee, said the group will decide whether there is a need for a new facility and where it is needed most.

Richard Peck

Peck said the committee's first step will be to examine demographic data being gathered by an independent group.

He said that while a new branch campus is not out of the question, the committee will also examine the possibility of opening learning centers similar to ASU's downtown facility.

ASU is currently leasing from the state of Arizona 1,200 acres of land in east Mesa as a possible site for a branch campus.

"It would be foolish to build there if the need isn't there," Peck said.

Brown said if a branch campus is to be built it will have to be on ASU-owned land. If the east Mesa site is chosen, the land will have to be acquired by the University.

which eventually will allow disabled students to enter through the underground facility, is not operating.

The University posted a sign outside of the partially completed elevator directing students to an entrance in the original building until Feb. 7.

Lynn Park, a communications graduate student who is confined to a wheelchair, said the underground library is "one more hard thing for me to get around on this campus."

"Life is hard, but it is even harder in a wheelchair," said Park, who has a manual wheelchair and said the most difficult thing will be trying to push herself up the ramp while holding books on her lap.

Jane Conrow, assistant dean of planning and space management for Hayden Library, said the elevator is not operating because the wrong parts were ordered. She said University officials did not realize that the elevator would not be working in time for the library's opening until the final stages of construction.

Conrow said she does not see a solution to shortening the length of the ramp.

"I don't think there will be any adjustments on the ramp because there are standards that must be met when you build a ramp that connects two buildings," she said.

Conrow said if the ramp had been shorter, the incline would have been steeper and more difficult for manually operated wheelchairs.

Chad Johnson, vice president of Nielsen Construction Company, the Tempe-based company that built the underground addition, said the elevators are not functioning because the doors are not operable.

"Basically it is not anyone's fault at ASU, nor is it a design problem," he said. "When the project was completed the elevator doors were reversed; we are working on it and it should be settled in a week."

Carrillo said he plans to bring in an orthopedic doctor within the next few weeks to identify other possible problems for disabled students in the library.

Jamie Lytle/State Press

A student attempts to get her hand-operated wheelchair up the underground ramp leading from the Hayden Library expansion to the original structure. Disabled students must enter and exit through the tunnel until the new building's elevator is functioning.

details about a third ASU branch campus.

"I want to know more," he said. "But I have no objection to providing services to people in the east Valley."

McWhorter said that a third ASU branch campus doesn't have a lot of support yet.

"There's not a consensus that we need to do it," he said. "But we need to do it."

Goldwater's memorabilia chronicles 60 years of flying

By MICHELE McDONALD
State Press

A collection of retired Sen. Barry Goldwater's military memorabilia adds a new dimension to his legislative career, the director of the Arizona Historical Foundation said Tuesday.

Barry Goldwater

The "Pilot's Log" collection, recently received by the Foundation, is on display through January in the lobby of the First Interstate Bank Plaza in Phoenix. The lobby is open 9 a.m. to 4 p.m., Monday through Thursday, and 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. on Friday.

"(The display) helps people to gain an understanding of Barry Goldwater's long love affair with aviation and his tremendous support of the Air Force," Richard Lynch said.

The exhibit shows a collection of photos, paintings, plaques and books written by or about Goldwater.

"It is a very handsome display and we are very proud of it," Lynch said.

A photograph of nationalist Chinese air cadets trained by Goldwater during World War II, "is a very human part of the display," Lynch said. The cadets signed their names in Chinese above the picture calling Goldwater "our dear instructor."

Also on display is a photograph titled, "The Man from Phoenix," in which Goldwater is shown sitting in a jet plane. Along side of the photograph is a poem about his significant effect on aviation.

The viewer comes away understanding Goldwater's involvement in aviation and flying, Lynch said.

The Goldwater Squadron, which was formed in 1981 to promote the Air National Guard of Arizona, obtained the collection from Goldwater's congressional office when he retired.

"It (the collection) demonstrates that the senator is a multi-faceted Arizonan who not only has been a concerned citizen but contributed on an international and national level," said Bill Bonelle, president of the squadron.

"He exemplifies the type of individual that we look back at in history," he added.

Lynch said the collection pays tribute to Goldwater for supporting the military and for his commitment to passing legislation for aviation.

Goldwater has been piloting since 1929, and continues to fly for a hobby. In 1967 he retired from the military as a major general after serving 37 years in the U.S. Army Reserves and Air Force Reserves.

The foundation, custodian of the collection, is a private non-profit organization created in 1959 by Goldwater. Located in the Hayden Library, the foundation also houses the Goldwater Congressional Papers and the Goldwater Family Collection.

However, these documents do not display as well as the "Pilot's Log," which will create an awareness of the foundation, Lynch said.

The exhibit, the foundation's only military display, is the second collection sponsored by the foundation to tour the state of Arizona.

The display will travel to the annual air show at Luke Air Force Base in March, and ASU may have the display later this spring, Lynch said.

Berkeley 'safe-sex kit' proposal sparks debate

BERKELEY, Calif. (AP) — City officials hoping to stem the spread of AIDS are considering a proposal that would require innkeepers to put safe-sex kits beside the 'good book' in each hotel room.

"Certainly if hotels can have a Gideon Bible in every room, they can include a safe-sex kit," said nurse practitioner Leland Traiman, a clinical AIDS researcher who proposed the idea.

"There could be a sign with each kit saying, 'The Bible may save your soul, but this will save your life,'" said Traiman, who served on the city's AIDS health commission last year.

The proposal was on Wednesday's agenda for the City Council's Committee on Public Safety and Health and is also scheduled for a hearing before the city's Community Health Advisory Committee next month.

City Councilwoman Ann Chandler, who chairs the council committee, said she is not sure safe-sex kits should be required by law. But she added, "Given the crisis caused by AIDS, we must do all we can to educate the community. It's an issue that needs to be discussed."

Each kit would contain condoms and information about how AIDS is transmitted.

David Morris, chairman of the Community Health Advisory Committee, said he knows very little about the proposal but that it "didn't seem like a half-bad idea."

Not surprisingly, some hoteliers disagree.

"My boss is hitting the ceiling," said Doris Flood, manager of Traveler's Lodge, a few blocks from the University of California.

"He's called the home office, and the home office has called England, and I'm not even going to tell you what England said," said Flood, whose hotel is owned by the British-based Trustforte Inc.

"We are three blocks from the University. A lot of our clientele is associated with the University. They are mostly older people or professors or people from Europe; it's not conducive to our clientele here," Flood said.

She also worried that a faulty condom could leave the hotel vulnerable to a lawsuit.

Steve Rodri, general manager of the Berkeley Marina Marriott Hotel, said his Mormon-run franchise places the Book of Mormon in each room and doesn't even allow Playboy Magazine in the gift shop. He said the hotel is not about to place condoms in the rooms.

"The Marriott organization has always stood for high morals and professional ethics," Rodri said. "I think it could be difficult to ask a housekeeper of deep religious convictions to handle these types of items."

Traiman said the idea was born last year when the city's Health Commission tried to persuade hot tub and sauna owners to post AIDS warnings and to provide safe sex information. The managers of one sauna refused.

"They told us they wouldn't cooperate until there are safe-sex kits in all hotel and motel rooms in Berkeley," he said. "Voila!," we said. We all thought it was such a good idea that we decided to pursue it."

Virgin Mary statue sparks small-scale religious war

LYNN, Mass. (AP) — A nine-inch statuette of the Virgin Mary that a police official put on his desk sparked a dispute with his deskmate that has spiraled into a debate on the division between church and state, authorities said Wednesday.

The small-scale religious war erupted last year between Lt. Eugene V. Begley and his supervisor, Capt. Bruce Hogan, when Hogan placed the pale yellow plastic Madonna on their desk.

The officers, who were commander and second-in-command on the evening shift, began trading insults and jibes as the argument escalated last fall.

Hogan alleged that Begley shrouded the religious icon in newspaper whenever Hogan stepped out for a meal and ordered him never to touch the statue.

"I never touched it," responded Begley. "I just put the cup over it."

The spat came to an abrupt conclusion in November when Chief John F. Hollow transferred Begley to dayside detective duties. Hollow has said the transfer had nothing to do with the religious dispute.

On Tuesday, a state arbitrator heard Begley's claim that the transfer, which he says will cost him thousands of dollars a year, was indeed religiously motivated and was improper. Three more hearings are scheduled through March.

Lynn, a factory city of about 78,000, has seven Roman Catholic Churches and a police force of 180 officers.

"I'm as good a Roman Catholic as anybody, but that statue has no place on a police captain's desk," Begley said. "We have Catholics, Protestants, Jews and I'm sure a few Moslems in this department. Hogan has no right to push his religion on other people. He should not be flaunting it."

Calls to Hogan's office Wednesday evening were answered by an officer who said that department employees had been ordered not to discuss the case with the news media.

David Hoffman, an attorney for the Civil Liberties Union of Massachusetts, said the group had not been asked to become involved in Begley's case but said it raised important issues.

"(We) are often concerned when government officials in a position of authority use displays of religious objects in a way that might suggest to the public or to employees that there is a particular religion that is favored by the agency," Hoffman said.

"Such a symbolic link between church and state raises issues under the establishment clause of the First Amendment."

Begley claims the transfer cost him $45,000 in annual pay because by working days he can no longer accept extra assignments for traffic control on road construction projects.

Department officials had little comment on the case Wednesday.

"It should never have left the in-house stage," said Lt. Joseph Rowe, Hollow's spokesman. "The department certainly didn't plan to go public with it."

Former ASU professor 'manages it all' in new book

By MICHAEL VAN DYKE
State Press

Nine years after leaving the University because of a "research over teaching" emphasis, a former ASU professor has written a book that explains how to better manage both business and personal affairs.

In his book, "Manage It All," Robert Ripley tells readers they can learn to manage their boss, control other people in meetings and effectively control stress.

Ripley, an ASU graduate school professor in the College of Business for 13 years, resigned from the University in 1979 to devote himself to his consulting practice and to "search for the true meaning of success."

The book, released last week, is available at the ASU bookstore and every community college bookstore in the Valley.

In the book, Ripley explains why he left ASU.

Ripley said that while at ASU he encountered controversy because he considered teaching to be more important than research.

"As a professor at the University your duty is to be a teacher first and a researcher second," Ripley said in an interview.

He added that while at ASU, his desire was to research the phenomenon of personal success and to teach it to graduate students.

In his book, Ripley writes that he is concerned with the techniques of teaching emphasized at ASU and other American universities.

"Universities are primarily achievement-oriented in their teaching instead of success-oriented (inner-directed),"

Ripley states.

Ripley began his research on success in 1977.

"The first step in my research was to go to the University library and ask for a computerized search on personal success development," Ripley writes.

"However, to my surprise only a few articles on the subject were found, and those dealt mostly with achievement."

Refusing to be discouraged with the lack of results, Ripley asked the librarians to inquire about materials at the University of Southern California, Harvard University and the University of Minnesota libraries.

But again the research provided nothing.

Ripley was forced to research the subject himself.

"I had to go to the public bookstores and used bookstores throughout the United States to find material on the topic," Ripley said.

He then researched the topic for more than two years. Ripley stated that in 1979, after considerable difficulty, he received permission from ASU to teach a seminar for one semester on personal success development to 25 graduate students.

"One of the women in the class has been named the National Outstanding Community College Administrator and is now a consultant to presidents of community colleges," Ripley said.

"Others (from the class) include a Dean of Women at a prominent college, a vice president of a large company, a television personality, a head of staff development for a large city hospital, a founder and president of a highly successful company and on and on."

At the completion of the course in 1979, Ripley resigned from the University.

"To prove to myself that the subject of personal success development could be taught, I resigned from the University and devoted all my time to consulting with individuals and organizations on building and maintaining their success," he said.

Since leaving the University, Ripley has served as a consultant for the U.S. Department of Labor, U.S. Department of Education and various corporations, including Motorola and Bobby McGees Conglomeration.

With a doctorate in Educational Psychology, Ripley has always been a follower of the American pragmatic method of applied psychology, according to his wife Marie Ripley.

"I feel he is one of the few who has been able to defend the behavioral sciences in the business world," she said.

"Rip has been able to make a case for the validity of the behavioral sciences that stands up to the engineers and scientists."

Because of his desire to prove that psychology should be incorporated in the business world, Ripley said he decided to write a book on the topic.

"This book is the result of the struggle of several years to bring enlightened behavioral sciences to America's talented scientific and business community," Ripley said.

In the book Ripley discusses eight of the areas that he was executed most often about while training corporate executives and workers.

"If you are a college business major and have an interest in understanding how to be a successful business person, or if you just want to know more about better managing yourself and others, then this book is for you," Ripley said.

Esperanto: Jes, you too can do the 'linguistic handshake'

By KATHLEEN WINSTEAD
State Press

Foreign language professors say there are certain words and phrases that every student learning another language should know, like jes (yes) and ne (no) and kie estas la plej proksima necesejo (where is the nearest bathroom?)

But learning a foreign language can be time-consuming and tedious to some — that's why the language Esperanto was created.

Jay Kamchi

Esperanto is spoken around the world by people in more than 100 countries, said Jay Kamchi, president of the Esperanto club.

"Esperanto is a linguistic handshake across lands and across countries," Kamchi said.

Esperanto is designed to be the international second language, and not a substitute for national or ethnic languages, said Mickey Giannini, who teaches a beginner's class in Esperanto.

Bill Shanks, the founder of the Esperanto club at ASU said, Esperanto is very easy to learn because there are only 16 rules of grammar, with no exceptions, no irregularities and no masculine and feminine nouns to learn.

Esperanto is 10 times easier to learn than any other language and once it has been learned, will aid students in learning a second language four times as fast, said Kamchi, a 21-year-old computer science major at ASU.

Esperanto has been used in elementary school systems in Hawaii and California to teach the basics of the English language and foreign language exploration, he said.

Esperanto helps students learn English in two ways, said Bill O'Ryan, who teaches the advanced classes in Esperanto at ASU.

First, the grammar follows a set pattern and gives the student a feeling for grammatical concepts, he said. Second, the parts of speech in Esperanto are indicated by the endings on the words.

In Esperanto, verbs end in "i," nouns end in "o," adjectives end in "a" and adverbs end in "e."

"Learning any language makes learning another easier," O'Ryan said.

O'Ryan said, Shanks, who sometimes teaches Esperanto language classes, said that a wide variety of individuals attend the classes. He said that most of the students are American, but that 10 to 20 percent are not.

Janell Larson, a former ASU student who attended Esperanto language classes for a year, said that she became interested in Esperanto not only because she wanted to meet new people, but because she heard that learning Esperanto would make it easier to learn Spanish.

Esperanto vowels are similar to those in Spanish and Italian, while the Esperanto alphabet is very similar to the Latin alphabet, Kamchi said.

About 80 percent of the Esperanto vocabulary is derived from Latin roots. Latin, Spanish and Italian are romance languages, which makes Esperanto very similar to Spanish and Italian, O'Ryan said.

Esperanto is easier to learn than Spanish because the grammar is much more regular, O'Ryan said. There is only one sound for each letter.

Bundy remained 'cold-blooded' despite pleas

SEATTLE (AP) — Despite his tears, executed killer Ted Bundy remained cold-blooded and manipulative to the last day as he dribbled out information on his victims in hopes of delaying his execution, an investigator said Wednesday.

Robert Keppel, a state attorney general's investigator who tracked Bundy for nearly 15 years, said he believes Bundy may have killed more than 100 girls and women.

As Keppel spoke at a news conference, the Florida prosecutor who sent Bundy to the electric chair Tuesday estimated he may have slain as many as 50 young women. The FBI said it was still analyzing the confessions given to a parade of law enforcement officers Bundy invited to the Florida State Prison beginning late last week.

"The whole thing was orchestrated from the very beginning," Keppel said of the confessions, in which he participated. He dismissed as phony Bundy's final interview putting some of the blame for his activities on pornography.

"Pornography is maybe one one-thousandth of the whole problem he had," Keppel said, adding that the interview with James Dobson, a religious broadcaster and psychologist, "was totally self-serving."

He said the only remorse Bundy felt in his final hours was for himself.

Bundy, 42, admitted during his final days to killing 23 women, including 11 in Washington state, officials said. He was convicted of killing three others.

Keppel said he believes the toll is much higher, and that the exact numbers and details will never be known.

"My feeling is he has killed way over 100," said Keppel, who as a King County detective investigated the eight "Ted" killings in the Seattle area that occurred in 1974.

Bundy confessed to those crimes, and to killings in Utah, Colorado and Idaho.

Keppel has interviewed Bundy several times in the past few years, and said he would take the information gathered in his latest sessions and present it to other law agencies in hopes it will help solve still-unexplained murders.

During the final interviews, Keppel also questioned Bundy about the Green River killings of western Washington and Oregon, primarily to gain insight into how a serial killer thinks and acts. Bundy was imprisoned in Florida when the Green River killings began in the early 1980s.

Keppel played a tape he had recorded during a session with Bundy on Friday, when the former Tacoma resident and law school dropout admitted to killing the eight "Ted" victims.

In the tape, Bundy describes how he lured a University of Washington student, Georgann Hawkins, to his car, beat her with a crowbar, and then drove her to a secluded, grassy spot in the hills near Issaquah, east of Seattle.

Keppel would not play the part of the tape where Bundy detailed how he killed and apparently mutilated her and other victims, out of respect for the families of the victims.

"I was shocked," he said of the way the victims were treated. He said investigators hadn't known Bundy's methods because the victims were found weeks and months after their deaths, and many bones had been strewn by animals.

Keppel said Bundy used stalling tactics during the last days, even as he invited law enforcement officers from various states to the prison to talk about murder cases.

Bundy would "let 'em squirm, let 'em dangle, for a little more information," said Keppel, hopeful that such tactics would win him a last-minute respite from the death penalty, if only temporarily.

However, it was only because death was imminent that Bundy did confess at all, added Keppel. Had the Florida governor indicated in the slightest way he would spare Bundy to allow law officers more time to question him, Bundy would have clammed up, Keppel said.

Patterson hoping for a 'W' against ranked Wildcats

By GARY JACKSON
State Press

Tonight at 7:05 p.m., a capacity crowd in the University Activity Center will have the opportunity to check out the talent of the sixth-ranked UofA basketball team.

Last season the Wildcats qualified for the NCAA Final Four, where they were defeated by the national champion Oklahoma Sooners.

However, the Wildcats are not on tour, making a guest appearance in the UAC.

The ASU basketball team will take the court with hopes of upsetting its rival opponent.

"We're not looking for a moral victory — we're looking to win," Sun Devil coach Steve Patterson said. "We're going to give everything we've got. We want a 'W.'"

Perhaps for two Sun Devils there is more at stake than winning the game. Starting guards junior Mike Redhair and freshman Adrian Brown are Tucson natives.

"I think we'll play harder," Redhair said. "It's a big opportunity for Adrian and I to play well, and not have to hear our friends joke about it when we go back to Tucson."

"I think any time you play a top-20 team that there's a reason to get excited, and the rivalry really adds to it."

A victory will not be an easy task for the Sun Devils (9-7, 3-5 Pac-10). UofA (13-2, 7-1) leads the series, 106-68, and has a 9-1 advantage in the previous 10 games.

ASU will have to take the court without the services of senior forward Torin Williams, junior guard Tarence Wheeler and sophomore center Emory Lewis.

"I'm trying to put all the injuries aside," Redhair said. "I'm looking at it (the game) as how we can beat these guys."

Although most people have ruled out a Sun Devil victory, Brown said he will be playing with intention to win.

"This game means a lot to me," Brown said. "I want to play well in this game, obviously. I want to get a 'W.'"

Earlier this season, ASU had a balanced attack and the ability to earn the respect of its intrastate rivals.

Now the strength of the offense is possessed by the frontline: senior forward Trent Edwards, junior forward Alex Austin and junior center Mark Becker.

"They have had to pick up the slack,"

Patterson said. "Inside scoring is really our strength. The rock is our inside."

Patterson said Edwards, who is the foundation for the team, has been the most productive for the Sun Devils this season.

"Right now people are loading up on him and concentrating on shutting him down," Patterson said. "He's our man inside and I don't expect him to let down."

"I wish I had three or four more guys like him."

On defense, the Sun Devils take pride in its half-court traps and man-to-man coverage, Patterson said.

"When we work at it we are a pretty good defensive team," he said. "We just have to be a blue collar team on defense."

The hard work has to carry over for the entire team to be successful, Patterson said.

"Everyone has to be serious on the floor," he said. "Although we have had setbacks, we're continuing to improve as a team."

Although ASU's performance began to decline after suffering a loss of personnel, Patterson said the team is on the rise.

"We haven't given up on this season by a long shot, but it hasn't gotten any easier," Patterson said. "They are great. They pick themselves up, dust themselves off and try again."

"We want to get better every game, with improvement a lot could happen."

Anything is possible, especially during rival match-ups, but the UofA has been a powerhouse since Lute Olson took office in 1984.

"Sean Elliott is probably the best player in the country and Anthony Cook is a very strong inside scorer," Patterson said. "They have a tremendous 1-2 punch."

"I don't think we can get into a running game — We have to be patient in order to be successful."

The Wildcat defense provides an equal threat, Patterson said, pointing out the team's quickness and ability to create pressure for opposing ball-handlers.

"They're a good defensive team," Patterson said. "Everyone knows they're a good offensive team, but you don't hear too much about how good a defensive team they are."

Last season UofA won both encounters with ASU, drenching the Sun Devils 99-54

Sellout expected for UofA game

By KELLY PEARCE
State Press

There will be two rarities tonight in the University Activity Center when the Sun Devils attempt to upset the sixth-ranked Wildcat basketball team — a sold-out crowd that is dominated by ASU fans.

ASU has not drawn a crowd to its 14,287-seat Activity Center of more than 14,000 since 1981, although attendance has exceeded capacity seven times in the past, including a record crowd of 14,733 to see the Sun Devils play Alabama in the NCAA playoffs on March 15, 1975.

At press-time Wednesday, only a handful of tickets were left in the ASU student section, and Sun Devil Ticket Office Supervisor Diney Mahoney said those were expected to be sold by the end of the day.

"For this game we have opened up more sections than we usually open up," Mahoney said.

These are sections that last year were filled by cheering UofA supporters.

Before the 1988 UofA-ASU game in the UAC, between 6,000 and 7,000 tickets were put on the market for the general public. UofA fans quickly bought a majority of the tickets and dominated the audience at the game.

To prevent another UofA-ruled crowd this year, a massive marketing campaign was conducted to increase the number of ASU fans.

This drive was organized by the "Dirty 30," a group of ASU alumni and boosters who often play dirty tricks on the UofA. Their plan was a success and only 2,000 were left for the public.

Also Wednesday morning, 700 tickets in the ASU student section were put on sale, but they did not sell out.

ASU head basketball coach Steve Patterson said that he was disappointed in the lack of student turnout at the box

The ASU women's golf team rallied to win the team title at the USC Yamaha Invitational in Glendale, Calif. Wednesday after entering the final round trailing by nine strokes.

This tournament crown marks the first ASU victory of the campaign after earning four successive top-four finishes during the fall season.

ASU entered Wednesday's action nine strokes better than the Aggies, who led after both the first and second rounds.

Individually, Michiko Hattori of Texas recorded the day's best score with a two over par 74 and won the event by six shots over San Jose State's Pat Hurst. Sun Devil all-America Pearl Sinn placed third for her fourth consecutive top-10 finish.

Sinn's teammates, Lynne Mikulas and Phoenix's Missy Farr, finished sixth and seventh, respectively.

The Sun Devil women's golf team returns to action on Feb. 13 at the Arizona Invitational in Tucson.

Ciak becomes dominant force

By KYLE D. ENG

State Press

Height is not the only reason women's basketball center Fran Ciak is looked up to.

The junior hoopster, who stands 6-foot-2, leads the conference in rebounding, hauling in 10.3 a game. Ciak is also second on the team in scoring, averaging 13.3 a game.

Both statistics should make her a candidate for the most improved player on the team, which is 7-9 overall and 1-5 in the Pac-10.

"Fran Ciak is having the best year of her career, including her high school days," Assistant Coach Debra Stephens said. "She was a student of the game for two years and now she has become a player."

As evidence, Ciak averaged only 4.8 pts. and 3.7 rebounds in her first two seasons for the Sun Devils.

Her career-highs were previously 11 points and 10 rebounds, until this year. Ciak has scored 22 points and has grabbed more than 10 boards in a game seven times.

Ciak said she feels she owes some of her improvement to others.

"We owe a lot to the fans for the way we are playing on the road," she said. "It just doesn't seem we can put together and play a solid 40 minutes of basketball."

"I think we also owe a lot to Coach (Maura McHugh) for not giving up on us. We've just got to get the five girls that are out on the floor for us to play 100 percent for the entire time they're out on the floor."

Ciak is no stranger to being a leader.

"I think the girls look up to her as being the leader as far as playing with emotion," Stephens said. "There's always one girl on your team that pumps up the rest the girls, that's what Fran does for this team. Fran is just a great team leader. When she does something the girls listen and follow. She pumps them up."

Ciak was a First-Team All-State, All-County and All-Metro while a prep at Roselle Park High School in New Jersey. In her senior season she averaged 23.6 points and 14 boards a game.

Ciak and the Devils will take their act to Tucson Friday, were they will take on Arizona at 7 p.m.

ASU will be trying to end a four-game losing streak, a streak that has put them ahead of only Arizona (5-11, 0-6) in the Pac-10 standings.

Ciak has a prediction.

"The streak will end here. After Friday night we will have ended the losing streak. We have practiced hard, and we're ready for the Wildcats," Ciak said. "I've got too many friends who play down there to lose to them."

Stephens echoed the same victory prediction for Friday's game.

"Since Coach McHugh has been here we haven't lost to them. I don't think the girls want to start either. We want to be 3-0 against Arizona," she said.

Ciak said she's looking for a good game from Arizona but added, "We'll win. Were pumped, and were definitely due."

at McKale Center and 101-73 at the UAC.

However, last year's victory at ASU was not as easy as the score indicated, Olson said.

"We played as well as we could in the first half," he said. "We were lucky to go into the locker room with the lead."

Despite having strong support from Tucson fans and Phoenicians who would like to see an Arizona team achieve national success, Olson said the Wildcat's will treat this like any Pac-10 road game.

UofA's next opponent will be Stanford, who ended the Wildcats 14-game conference winning streak this season.

"There's a possibility they could be more concerned with the game on Saturday against Stanford, but there is the rivalry and I don't think they'll take us lightly," Patterson said.

Court decision allows NCAA to keep secret files

MISSION, Kan. (AP) — The NCAA's ability to investigate schools might have ended abruptly if the Supreme Court had not protected its right to keep secret files, the NCAA's chief enforcement officer said.

In that sense, this recent Supreme Court decision was much more significant than the earlier, highly publicized case of Nevada-Las Vegas basketball coach Jerry Tarkanian, David Berst said Wednesday.

"If we had lost this second case, I think it would have had a chilling effect on our ability to conduct investigations," Berst said in an interview. "It could have been very detrimental to our efforts."

By refusing to hear an appeal from the 5th U.S. Court of Appeals on Monday, the Supreme Court let stand the lower court's decision involving the NCAA and the Texas open records law.

A suit filed by the A.H. Belo Corp., owners of The Dallas

Morning News and Dallas television station WFAA, against the NCAA and the Southwest Conference sought to force the NCAA to turn over records and documents involving the Southern Methodist football scandal.

A state court ruled in favor of Belo, then the NCAA won a reversal at the appellate level. NCAA investigators have been at odds with news organizations in several states over open meetings or "sunshine laws," and Berst said the high court's decision is an important precedent.

"I don't think we could continue on if we had to face that kind of release of information in every state," he said. "I would definitely say this is more important to us than the decision in the Tarkanian case."

The high court ruled 5-4 late last year that the NCAA did not violate Tarkanian's constitutional right to due process in ordering Nevada-Las Vegas to suspend the basketball coach for two years. Tarkanian was not suspended while he appealed, and since then, the NCAA has delayed a decision on what punishment Tarkanian will eventually receive.

"This case is more important because it involved the ability of media representatives to gain access to our official files, memos and documents during the course of our investigation," Berst said. "We would have had to investigate and turn over the information to the public as we gathered it. I think that would have assured that we would have been unable to develop any significant infractions cases."

"We believe we could operate quite well if we had lost the Tarkanian case. But in this case, if we had to give up our files and information as we gather it, I really don't know how we could proceed."

The NCAA is hopeful the Supreme Court's action will supercede efforts by news organizations to invoke sunshine laws in other states.

Martin to trade football for a baseball bat

By DEAN GYORGY
State Press

Key injuries have taken some steam out of the Sun Devil baseball express, but the track is still laid, and the first tie is one day away.

Broken bones suffered Tuesday in the wrists of starters Steve Willis and Eric Helfand have the Devils scrambling to prepare for the season opener at 2:30 p.m. Friday at Packard Stadium.

"When it first happened, I think everybody was a little down," senior captain Kevin Higgins said. "But we had a little team meeting after practice (Tuesday), and just decided everybody else is going to have to turn it up a notch to make up for their loss."

The abilities of Willis and Helfand will undoubtedly be missed, but there are a number of people and possibilities to plug in during their absence.

ASU coach Jim Brock said Wednesday that sophomore Steve Martin will replace Willis at first base. Martin, a wide receiver for the Sun Devil football team, was originally recruited for both football and baseball, but an injury suffered just before the the Rose Bowl game in 1987 kept him off the diamond until now.

Martin had been working at the middle infield positions, and must now learn the mechanics of first base. He batted .500 as a senior at Tucson Saguaro High School.

"Even before the injuries, we felt Martin was among the top nine offensive players," Brock said. "He has very good bat speed, runs very well, and is a great competitor."

There are three candidates to replace Helfand at catcher; sophomores Jim Henderson, Tucker Hammargren, and freshman Dave Robson. Brock said there are 11 games, including junior varsity contests, before the team travels to play

Florida State, Feb. 4 and 5.

In that time, under the close scrutiny of the Sun Devil coaches, all three will get playing time and the opportunity to emerge as players.

Helfand had great knowledge of the pitching staff, and the coaches had confidence in his game-calling ability. Without him, pitching coach Dub Kilgo said he will have to call the pitches from the dugout, which is not as effective as from behind the plate.

"The hardest part about opening day is the loss of our starting catcher (Helfand), because he was a big part of our pitching staff," Kilgo said.

"I feel that at the start of the season anyway, we're going to be somewhat hampered. I would guess somewhere around a two-run differential when we change catchers initially, but before long we hope to narrow that gap a little bit."

The early prediction is that Willis will miss six conference games, and Helfand will miss 12 because everyone heals at different rates.

Higgins said he broke the same bone as Helfand did, the navicular, in his first year at Harbor Junior College. Higgins' cast was off in three weeks, and he was playing within a month. Helfand is expected to be out eight to 12 weeks.

For Willis, sitting on the sidelines may be just as painful as the injury itself.

"It's going to be really, really tough, especially since it's my last year of college baseball," he said. "Injuries are just part of the game, and I've been fortunate up to this point because this is the first time I've been hurt. But I've been working really hard this year, making some changes in my swing, and that makes it hard."

Crowd

office.

"There were very few student tickets sold," Patterson said. "I guess there will be less than 1,000 (ASU) students in the section."

"This is very disheartening to a team that has worked so hard. I'm disappointed that there is not better student support."

The remainder of the ASU student tickets will be sold to the general public at the box office before the game. UofA will once again have the opportunity to snag the tickets.

"There will be UofA people in our student section next to our band," the coach said.

Patterson said he did not understand why students did not seize the opportunity to not only get a chance to see a state rivalry, but see a nationally-ranked basketball team in action.

Even though there was a setback to the marketing attack, the basketball coach is excited that there will most likely be more maroon and gold than the red and blue of the UofA in the stands.

"This is a real departure from the past," Patterson said. "It is always nice to play in front of a big crowd — it is always nice to play in front of a crowd that's rooting for you."

He added that this will be one of the first years that ASU will have the home-court advantage.

Only 500 student tickets were available to the Wildcat fans, said Larry Woo, accounting clerk in the ticket office.

But UofA head basketball coach Lute Olson said his supporters could have utilized additional tickets.

"From what I understand, not that many tickets were allotted to us," he said. "We're hoping that they (UofA fans) found some tickets someplace else."

ASU was only provided with a mere 100 tickets for the upcoming contest against the Wildcats in Tucson Feb. 23.

Mahoney said the ASU-UofA matchup in the UAC was also a sellout last year, but only 12,785 people showed up for the 101-73 Wildcat victory over the Sun Devils.

After the game, Olson said he was upset that tickets were distributed for $1 each if bought in lots of 20 to attract a larger ASU crowd.

If the tickets had been sold at face value, Olson said there would have been a larger number available to the general public, and more UofA fans would have made the trip to see the game.

"I think it's unfortunate, if there are people who want to watch the game, to not sell the tickets to them," Olson said. "I think it would be nice for both teams to have a full house, regardless of the distribution."

Also during that game, a few ASU fans shouted obscenities and personal remarks at former UofA guard, Steve Kerr (now wearing a Phoenix Suns jersey). The University made a formal apology to the Tucson school for the embarrassing behavior.

Jordan reaches milestone

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Chicago's Michael Jordan scored his 10,000th NBA point Wednesday night in the Bulls' game against the Philadelphia 76ers, reaching the career milestone in fewer games than all but one other player in NBA history.

Jordan, who started the game despite a sore knee, hit an 8-foot bank shot with 5:39 to play in the fourth period to give him 33 points in the game and exactly 10,000 points in his NBA career.

When the feat was announced over the public address system, Jordan received a minute-long standing ovation.

The game was Jordan's 303rd. Wilt Chamberlain reached the milestone in 236 games.

Chamberlain and the Los Angeles Lakers' Kareem Abdul-Jabbar, who did it in 318 games, are the only players to reach 10,000 in their first four seasons.

Jordan easily would have been in that category if he had not missed 64 games of his second season because of a foot injury.

Hersey Hawkins, the 76ers' rookie assigned to guard Jordan, led the NCAA in scoring last season at Bradley.

Asked Tuesday what he thought about 10,000 points, Hawkins said: "It makes me think he's in a league by himself. It would seem by now people would have come up with something to stop him. But he's still a mystery."
