Committee backs student regent vote

By TYRONE MEIGHAN
State Press

PHOENIX — The state House Education Committee unanimously voted Wednesday to pass a bill giving the student member of the Arizona Board of Regents full voting rights.

The crowd, mostly students, cheered as the unanimous vote was announced by committee secretary Marian Groener.

The next step in the legislative process is for House Bill 2021 to be heard by the full House of Representatives.

The student regent is the only non-voting member of the board. The Legislature created the position in 1978 after a four-year legislative battle, but lawmakers approved the post on the grounds that students would not be allowed to vote.

Rep. John Wettaw, R-Flagstaff, co-sponsored the bill and told the committee that legislators should not have the fears they originally had when the position was created.

"The student regent has been a very productive member of the Board of Regents," he said. "We've had a 10-year trial period and there's no reason that we should not give the student regent the right to vote."

In 1987, the Legislature approved a bill that made the student regent a permanent member of the board. The position has been subject to review every three years.

At the time, lawmakers feared that making the position permanent would open doors to student voting.

Student Regent Pat McWhortor told the committee that the past success of student regents is one reason the bill should be passed.

"Every year we're able to be that much more effective," he said. "Given the right to vote would only increase the level of responsibility that a student member of the Board of Regents gives to the position."

Rep. Brenda Burns, R-Glendale, said she thinks a voting student regent could cause a conflict of interest because the the board deals with student issues.

But McWhortor said a student regent voting on student issues is not a conflict of interest. It is much like lawmakers voting on laws they have to follow, he said.

Burns said she would vote to pass the bill to the House but will want more information.

"I don't understand why the strong desire for the vote and what difference it makes," she said. "I'm not convinced there's a lot to be gained."

McWhortor told the committee that the student regent is sometimes excluded from regent discussions because of the lack of voting power.

"The student perspective is very important for the Board of Regents to see," he said.

Rep. Nancy Wessel, R-Phoenix, asked Wettaw if the idea of a professor on the board of regents had ever been discussed.

Jury finds SAE liable, awards Running $8,865

By MICHAEL VAN DYKE and LORI ZUBALIK
State Press

PHOENIX — A Maricopa County Superior Court jury awarded Greg Running $8,865 in punitive damages Wednesday after determining that the Sigma Alpha Epsilon fraternity was liable on two counts of negligence stemming from a 1985 hazing incident.

After five hours of deliberation, the jury found that the SAE national chapter was liable for injuries suffered by Running, a former ASU student and SAE pledge, when he was kicked in the head during a Sept. 18, 1985 fraternity line-up where pledges were forced to perform strenuous exercises.

Running claimed in a 1987 lawsuit that he has suffered permanent damage to his left eye from the incident, and later emotional anguish when he withdrew from the University.

Running, now a student at San Diego State University, returned to San Diego early Wednesday afternoon and could not be reached for comment.

Running

During closing arguments, Running's attorneys asked the jury for a minimum of $25,000 in damages.

Leonard Greer, Running's attorney, said he was disappointed with the award.

"This was one of those cases where if you get the jury on your side you can win a lot of money," Greer said. "The jury clearly found that there was liability, but there was difficulty in determining a dollar award for damages."

Jury foreman John Bunch said: "There was no doubt that there was negligence on the part of the fraternity. However, the one skepticism we had was whether or not there was any long-term or residual damage done."

Bunch also said that the jury came to the conclusion that Running was kicked in the eye, discarding SAE member Tom Welch's Tuesday testimony that Running was hit in the eye with a football.

During closing arguments, attorneys disagreed on what was the main issue in the trial.

"Greg went to ASU to fulfill a childhood dream of his," said Randy Sausman, one of Running's attorneys. "Greg was a Sun Devil from early in his life. He wanted a diploma that matched his dad's."

Mother Teresa of Calcutta spends a quiet moment in thought at a homeless park Wednesday after a busy press conference earlier at Sky Harbor Airport. The 78-year old nun is in the Valley to open a new convent.

Mother Teresa makes visit to Valley

By RICHARD VIGIL
State Press

Mother Teresa of Calcutta arrived in Phoenix Wednesday with four of her followers to open a new convent.

The 78-year-old nun flew into Sky Harbor Airport and landed at a private hangar, where she was greeted by about 150 invited guests and media members.

"We give to the poorest of the poor," Mother Teresa said at a press conference following her arrival.

The smiling 4-foot-7-inch nun was received as she stepped off a private plane by 11 nuns of the Missionaries of Charity, the religious order which she founded in 1948.

A group of children also welcomed her with a banner reading "Welcome Mother."

The 1979 Nobel Peace Prize winner will open the 16th Foundation House in the United States. The Missionaries of Charity operate more than 400 such houses in 87 countries.

"She likes to be on hand when a new foundation is established," said Father Jack Spaulding, a Scottsdale priest.

Other U.S. cities in which Mother Teresa has opened convents include New York, San Francisco and Detroit.

Born Ganxhe Agnes Bojaxhiu in Serbia in 1910, she devoted her life to God at age 12.

She began her work in Calcutta in 1931 teaching school and caring for the sick. In 1946 she asked the Vatican for permission to establish the Missionaries of Charity. The order, which gained its first followers in 1949, now has more than 3000 nuns worldwide.

The sisters of the order take vows of strict poverty and live in convents established in the poorest sections of cities.

The sisters will work with the homeless in Phoenix as well as the chronically mentally ill.

In addition to the Nobel, she has won many other awards for her charitable work, including the Albert Schweitzer International Prize.

Her visit to the Valley, organized by the Catholic Diocese of Phoenix, was arranged mostly through the

Congressional agency pegs 1990 deficit at $120 billion

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Congressional Budget Office estimated Wednesday that former President Reagan's final budget proposal would produce a deficit of $120 billion, far above the limit allowed by law.

Reagan had said his $1.15 trillion spending plan would leave an imbalance of $92.5 billion. The Gramm-Rudman deficit reduction law sets a target of a $100 billion shortfall for the 1990 fiscal year, which begins Oct. 1.

The Congressional Budget Office also said the effect Reagan's budget would have in future years would be vastly different from what the former president estimated. In 1993 — the year Gramm-Rudman requires a balanced budget — Reagan projected a $2 billion surplus, while CBO said there would still be $80 billion in red ink.

CBO said that if none of Reagan's proposals are adopted, next year's deficit would be $146 billion, $5 billion more than the office projected last month, and would shrink only slightly to $135 billion by 1993. The administration has said the deficit, without Reagan's proposed savings, would be $127 billion next year and $37 billion in 1993.

The gaps between the congressional and White House estimates were caused by different assumptions about the future performance of the economy and estimates of how much money would be spent by various government programs.

North says remember the past in relation to Gorbachev, Arafat

WASHINGTON (AP) — Oliver L. North urged a religious group on Wednesday to "remember the past" before embracing Soviet President Mikhail S. Gorbachev and Palestinian leader Yasser Arafat.

North, delivering a hard-line anti-communist speech less than an hour before the second day of his trial in the Iran-Contra case was to resume in U.S. District Court, said he has "watched in absolute amazement" as politicians, the media and intellectual leaders praised Gorbachev's reforms.

"Until we see real changes, we must be wary of what is taking place" in the Soviet Union, North told a packed audience at a downtown hotel.

"Today we are being asked to ... believe that Gorbachev is good and Arafat is all right," North said. "It would be better to remember the past."

Bells ring across Iran to mark 10th anniversary of revolution

NICOSIA, Cyprus (AP) — School bells pealed across Iran on Wednesday and hundreds of prisoners were freed as the country celebrated the 10th anniversary of the Islamic revolution that ended 2,500 years of monarchy.

The bells on the schools and Armenian churches began ringing at 9:03 a.m., the moment on Feb. 1, 1979, when Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini arrived home from exile to a tumultuous welcome by millions of his supporters, Tehran Radio said.

The festivities — which include sports tournaments, cultural festivals, firework displays and street reenactments of revolutionary events — are the first held in peacetime since 1980, when the Iran-Iraq war began.

The celebrations will climax Feb. 11, the anniversary of the day the last government formed by the late Shah Mohammad Reza Pahlavi collapsed and the revolutionaries took over to proclaim the Islamic republic.

The front-page headline in Tehran's Abrar daily said: "Iran full of joy and light on the anniversary of the Imam's (Khomeini's) return."

efforts of Bishop Thomas O'Brien. O'Brien invited her in December 1987 to open a convent here.

Mother Teresa's flight into Phoenix was delayed an hour and a half because the nun stopped on the way to the airport in San Francisco to visit the poor.

"Mother Teresa is the kind of individual who will stop and talk to a person even if she's walking out the door," Spaulding said.

Phoenix Mayor Terry Goddard greeted Mother Teresa at the press conference, calling her "one of the great humanitarian figures of this age."

Wednesday night, Mother Teresa addressed 200 members of the International Association of Co-Workers of Mother Teresa at a private dinner. She spent the night at the convent, which will be officially opened at a private ceremony today.

She will speak at a prayer service at 7:30 tonight at Veterans' Memorial Coliseum. Doors will open to the public at 6 p.m., and people are asked to bring cans of food for the poor.

Vote

Wettaw said he doesn't support the idea.

"I don't think it's necessary," he said. "Adding a professor has nothing to do with this bill."

Regent President Herman Chanen, who gave a presentation to the committee after the unanimous vote, said the student regents have been very productive.

"Our student regents have made significant contributions to the deliberations of the board," he said. "And have shown that they are capable of handling the responsibilities inherent in obtaining voting privileges."

McWhortor said getting HB 2021 through the House Education Committee was only the first step. He added that students can help get the bill through the legislature.

Students "can write letters to their representatives and let them know that the student regent should have a vote," he said.

Classroom blues

Faculty problems abound, but solutions may be in sight

David Jordan
Columnist

(First of two parts)

ASU has provided material for a fair amount of controversy lately. From Nelson's leaving to the new Fine Arts Building (easily the ugliest thing to happen to ASU since USC shellacked us 50-0), this has been quite a year.

Few issues, however, seem as persistent as problems among the faculty. From year to year we hear that the faculty is underpaid, understaffed and that their classroom performance has suffered. Such issues have been dismissed by some as mere grumbling, and yet others feel that faculty troubles represent the key to our problems in undergraduate education.

I must admit that I originally was in the former category, feeling that the issues brought up by our teachers were little more than complaining by people who will never be satisfied. I can now freely admit that I was wrong. There are real problems at this University and it is having a real effect on the faculty's morale and ultimately their performance in the classroom.

There appear to be two types of problems for teachers: those that can be solved from within campus and those that must be solved from without. The first category, those that can be solved through existing mechanisms, covers a broad range of problems, including such diverse items as staff support, affirmative action and payment plans. The second category is narrower in scope, but it focuses on the most important concern among faculty members today: compensation. I will deal with this issue tomorrow.

As a student, one of the biggest problems that I have found has been classroom instruction. Poorly motivated professors and enormous classes have impaired classroom learning. I was surprised to learn that one of the biggest reasons for poor motivation in the classroom is the fact that there is almost no incentive for excellent classroom performance.

To understand why, it is helpful to examine how professors are paid. The University has a merit system where professors are assigned a number based on their performance. Meritorious professors are assigned a 3B (highest merit), 3A (merit), 2 (satisfactory), or a 1 (unsatisfactory). Professors are evaluated by their peers according to their performance in the classroom, in research and in service.

One disincentive to good classroom performance is the fact that teachers are evaluated by their peers, who usually know what other professors have published and what they are doing in service, but often have no idea how the teacher performs in the classroom.

A second disincentive is the weight attached to each category. One college at ASU rates professors 50 percent for their research, 25 percent for their service and 25 percent for their teaching. While I understand the importance of research, I refuse to believe that it is twice as important as teaching students.

A third disincentive stems from the fact that merit pay is often quite small. Last year 3Bs — the most meritorious professors — only succeeded in minimizing their net pay cut when the rate of inflation is considered. Those professors who are fortunate enough to be in fields that are attractive to the private sector can often make two to three times as much money by teaching and consulting at the same time. It is easy to see why classroom education suffers.

I have to wonder, though, if we are so willing to treat the teaching of students as our second or third responsibility, why does ASU exist? Education is what makes us a university — not merely a foundation or research institute. There is an ethical dimension to teaching which focuses on the fact that this University represents the opportunity for many students to begin their careers, to improve themselves. If the University ignores that responsibility, then ASU does more of a disservice to the state of Arizona than anything else.

There are many other internal concerns that face the faculty. Included in these concerns is the fact that professors often lack support staff, which means they have to spend much of their time copying or typing when they should be researching or teaching. Other problems include class size, affirmative action, academic freedom and a feeling of powerlessness among faculty members.

Fortunately, these problems do not have to go unresolved. I recently had a conversation with Dr. Kristen Valentine, Chair of the Faculty Senate. While I have typically thought that the administration is insensitive to faculty concerns (Provost Peck recently referred to the problem of class size as "a public relations problem"), she informed me that the administration has been very receptive to her requests. In fact she told me that it is unusual for the Provost or the President to take more than a day to respond. She explained that they both have emphasized the importance of faculty self governance.

For many of the major concerns of the faculty, there exist channels for grievances which have so far had a reasonable level of success. For instance, there is the Faculty Ombudsperson, Retha Warnicke, whose job it is to intervene on behalf of the faculty when problems arise. The Faculty Senate has several committees which specifically address problems such as curriculum, physical plants and personnel. There is also the President's Consultative Committee, which is made up of faculty senators-at-large and meets directly with the president every three weeks.

Admittedly, it is easy to doubt the administration's sincerity in listening to these channels. The fact is that there has been some success in accomplishing changes through these mediums to date, and only greater participation by the faculty can assure success in the future.

I realize that it often seems like there is no solution to many of our problems at this school. Truthfully, however, many of the most pressing issues can be addressed through existing mechanisms if they are used. The administration's record in the past hasn't been the best, but Dr. Valentine assured me that that trend has been changing. I know it's hard to believe, but as Alexander Pope once promised, "hope springs eternal."

Local 'peasantry' unable to appreciate architectural art

Editor:

Darrin Hostetler, you peasant! How dare you, a non-architect ("Architectese" for "tasteless ignoramus"), criticize the Fine Arts Complex (Jan. 23)? Whoever said that something like a Fine Arts Center should appeal to the general public?

The notion (this is a condescending term used by Architects when referring to sincere beliefs held by others) that Architects

(always capitalized) should actually design buildings in which people can comfortably live, work and play went out long ago. Architects are artists. They sculpt buildings. Buildings are sculpture. Why, if it weren't for slob like you, Darrin, architects wouldn't have to punch doors and windows into their creations, clutter them with light fixtures, litter them with bathrooms. The fact that the Fine Arts Center actually lowers itself to acknowledge "the simpler forms of Native American responses to the climate, landscape and light of the Southwest" is mere coincidence. Don't you know that the Southwest is trendy and in? That's the only reason we got it included in this building. Next year, when pagodas are in, that's what we'll build on campus and declare it internationally "sensitive."

Darrin, this building was built for "connoisseurs" to pilgrimage to from all over just to look at. So don't bother even trying to get in there to see a play. You're obviously not a connoisseur.

Besides, I doubt there's a stage in there, anyway.

Christine Shaw
Graduate Student, Landscape Architecture

While thumbing through the Thesaurus . . .

Editor:

In reference to Mike Ritter's cartoon of January 30, concerning the Fine Arts complex and Fine Arts majors, I assert the following:

Pleasing to some, displeasing to others, the Fine Arts Complex stands and will stand, quite firmly I might add. That being the case, Ritter ought to keep germane with architectural criticism, if he is able and refrain from interpolating his rather disparaging and licentious portraits concerning what he supposes artists to be. Some self-restraint on his part would be welcomed, unless, of course, his experiences limit him to prejudice and slant without refinement or conscience.

Ritter also ought to be cautious when tagging and entire class of persons as being without eyes. He would be more apropos to state that others do not have his eyes — which, if an alternative to blindness, would make sight not so endearing a sense.

For one, I have become increasingly annoyed with the inordinate rise of an impish and socially irresponsible editorial cartoonist, who prepares ink-and-ziptone regurgitations — such as the one in question — as if they were worthy of publication.

If it were still vogue and legal, I would like to take to pistols and 10 paces with Ritter — provided he would not fire at the eighth pace — for his lack of sensitivity and reason.

As it is, I only recommend that he read "The Fountainhead" and that he take the counsel of an "eyeless Fine Arts major," who roughly said, there are more things in heaven and earth, Ritter, than are dreamt of in your philosophy.

ValTrans

Prop. 300 could ease Valley's transportation woes

By CAROLYN HOFIG
State Press

A streamlined train glides to a halt on its elevated tracks. Students and staff from Mesa and Chandler disembark at the ASU station, while others board the train, which will continue to Sky Harbor International Airport, downtown Phoenix and the west side.

Sound like science fiction?

It's actually part of a planned county-wide mass transit program.

If voters approve Proposition 300 March 28, the Regional Public Transit Authority will set to work on ValTrans, a combination of freeway improvements, expanded bus service and a light-rail network designed to move the Valley smoothly into the 21st century.

One aspect of Proposition 300 involves a half-cent sales tax increase that would partially fund the $8.4 billion project.

The University would be one of the planned system's first stops.

By the year 2020, ValTrans would phase in a mass transit network that could accommodate the 5 million people who are projected to be living in the Phoenix area in 30 years.

Ultimately, the Maricopa County network would include 103 miles of light-rail transit, 56 miles of new freeways and a fleet of 1,500 buses, RPTA officials say.

Planners say the first stages will be complete by 1995, when project designers will regroup and decide how best to expand the system.

Those initial steps would bring about significant changes in the way students get to class, according to the RPTA, including seven-day-a-week and late-night bus service to the University. Additionally, the first 22 miles of the elevated light rail system will include a station at ASU.

"It will allow students who live far from campus to reach ASU," said Sharad Mistry, manager of rapid transit corridor planning for the RPTA. "Also, it will enable students to get to the West Campus easily" with bus connections.

How many students might be affected?

Some 38,000 students commute to ASU, according to Pat Schweiss, director of Off-Campus Student Services. Most of them depend on their cars for transportation.

Mistry, who also instructs a transportation class at ASU, said the train's proposed route will come east from Sky Harbor, cross the Salt River bed near Mill Avenue and follow the Southern Pacific railroad tracks behind the Tempe Mission Palms Hotel toward Sun Devil Stadium.

A stop near the stadium will serve downtown Tempe and ASU, Mistry said. The train will then turn south along McAllister Avenue.

Another stop for the University is planned at McAllister and Orange Street.

Artist's conception of what ValTrans could look like when completed.

Vancouver's Sky Train is similar to the light-rail network that would be built in the Valley if Prop. 300 is approved.

From there, the line will turn east to follow Apache Boulevard, eventually reaching Power Road, Mistry said. A branch of the line will turn south on Dobson Road, servicing Fiesta Mall in Mesa and Chandler.

The exact details for the elevated rail system's alignment and appearance will have to wait for the passage of Proposition 300 to be worked out. But the train will certainly be electric-powered, and they will be shorter and narrower than their heavy-rail counterparts in New York and Chicago, Mistry said.

He said the RPTA is looking into three kinds of elevated trains: a system that runs with steel wheels on steel tracks, a system with rubber wheels on concrete or a magnetic levitation system.

Mistry said the RPTA will decide which kind of train best meets its requirements once the referendum passes.

The ValTrans light-rail network will not be a monorail, Mistry said.

Mistry said the system would be computer-controlled, allowing more trains to run faster than systems with human drivers. The network would be monitored via closed-circuit television.

"You get much greater human contact with a computer-controlled system," Mistry said. "If you're driving a train, are you going to stop driving and help someone in back?"

Additionally, some of the proposed system's general characteristics have already taken shape, and Mistry said the RPTA is "extremely happy" with what it has seen.

"This (system) cuts above anything that was done before," Mistry said. "It's an aesthetic exercise."

Mistry credits architect Allen Parker with designing "something especially for Phoenix."

Parker, manager of urban design at Kaiser Engineers Inc., and consultant to the RPTA, has come up with prototypical drawings of both the light-rail system's elevated track and its stations.

"He (Parker) has paid attention to the way things fit together," Mistry said.

The train would ride on a guideway about 22 feet high, supported by twin sets of concrete columns every 75 to 100 feet.

The guideway would interfere only minimally with life at ground level, Mistry said.

"You're looking at a footprint for two three-foot circles every 75 to 100 feet," he said.

As for the view of Phoenix' skyline, Mistry said he thinks the rail system would "enhance it."

"Now you'll be able to look at it from above," he said.

Furthermore, the guideway could be adapted to fit the characters of the respective neighborhoods through which it would pass, Parker said. One idea concerns "clip-on art."

Parker said the clip-on elements could be ornamental, like sculpture or functional, like lighting.

"We have the basic guideway design," Parker said. "We feel the community should have the opportunity to embellish the guideways in any way it likes."

The stations also are being designed to fit in as well as possible with the surroundings, Parker said.

The stations, which would range from half a mile apart downtown to two miles apart in the suburbs, would be about 300 feet long and 70 feet wide at platform level. Escalators would bring passengers to the boarding platforms.

The entry structure could be either fully or partially enclosed, depending on the needs and location of the station, Parker said. Another possibility, particularly practical downtown, incorporates the station into a building, with office space above and shops below the platform.

Parker said the primary concern in designing Phoenix's elevated light-rail system is the natural environment, namely the desert's temperamental temperatures.

"Shade is a major concern," Parker said. "Where it's critical is at platform level — that's where you're going to wait."

Parker, who also helped design the Sky Train elevated rail system in Vancouver, British Columbia, examined and discarded a number of shade-related strategies.

For example, stations along Baltimore's rail system boast skylights.

"But you can't have skylights in Phoenix," Parker said. "You'll fry people."

His studies suggest a cover over the whole platform would prove most effective. However, Parker said, a solid, 300-foot-long shade 10 feet over passengers' heads would also be "oppressive."

Parker's suggestion mixes solid and cloth "canopies" to achieve the most satisfactory effect. He said he hoped the solid canopies could be constructed of copper, a material native to Arizona.

The solid sections would also support "cool towers," which would blow cool air onto the platform almost like air conditioning.

Parker said researchers at UofA are currently helping devise the cool towers. If the referendum is approved, ASU may also contribute to the development, he said.

He said engineers will require about a year after the passage of Proposition 300 to hash specifics out of the "generic" ValTrans plans.

In the meantime, a mock-up of a light-rail train and a section of Parker's projected station are on display in the Valley. The temporary exhibit opened Wednesday at MetroCenter.

Of course, if the ValTrans proposition is approved in March, students could wait a few years and experience the real thing.

DPS official says library addition meets 'stringent' fire code

By KATHLEEN WINSTEAD
State Press

ASU students are concerned that the Hayden Library addition may be a fire hazard, but an ASU official said the building meets the "stringent" fire code.

"There are sufficient emergency exit doors, and they are alarmed," said Sylvester "Andy" Anderson, coordinator of health and safety for the ASU Department of Public Safety.

Although the library has only one entrance/exit, it has been approved by State Risk Management, the state fire marshal, and the ASU fire marshal, Anderson said Monday.

Earlier this week, students expressed concern about getting out of the building during a fire.

"It is a pain in the ass to get out," said Mike Rothweiler, a 19-year-old ASU business management major. "I think it could be a fire hazard."

William Owens, a 21-year-old ASU accounting major, said: "It might be a fire hazard. They should have another entrance."

Jeannie Corderella, a 21-year-old nursing major, said that although there aren't many people using the library, "the elevators are really slow and it's a fire hazard."

But Jane Conrow, assistant dean of planning and space management, said traditionally there has only been one entrance and exit to the library because of the book security system. She added that those students worried about the potential fire hazard should remember that the original building also had only one entrance and exit.

Conrow said there are more safety features in the new library than were in the old. She referred to the six emergency exits that flash for the deaf and emit sound for hearing students.

"I certainly feel we've met the fire codes," she said. "I'm very comfortable with it."

Anderson added that there is also an extensive sprinkler system in the new library.

He said that although having only one entrance/exit is inconvenient, in case of an emergency, visitors to the library can go to the nearest emergency exit.

The maximum distance that someone would have to travel to get from any point in the new library building to an emergency exit is 200 feet, he said.

In the library's original building, there are four stairways on each floor so that visitors can escape in case of an emergency.

Also, the library staff in both the old and the new buildings are trained in what they need to do in case of an emergency, Anderson said.

Lawsuit

Michael Running, the plaintiff's father, is an ASU graduate and a past president of the University's alumni association.

Running told jurors during the trial that he withdrew from the University in September 1985, shortly after he was injured, for medical reasons. He returned to ASU in January 1986, but withdrew again in February 1986, claiming he was being harrassed by SAE members.

Running's room at the fraternity house had been vandalized, and he testified that he believed his life was in danger.

"The case isn't really about the monetary damages," Sausman added. "It's about losing the dream."

"And one penny less than $25,000 is selling out for less than what those intangible items are worth."

David Ganoa, the attorney for SAE, said the case should have never been brought to trial.

Ganoa alleged that Running couldn't manage both a social life at the fraternity and do well academically, and that led to his conflict with the fraternity.

Students voice concerns to legislators at luncheon

By ROBIE KAKONGE

State Press

PHOENIX — Arizona legislators met with more than 175 university students from ASU, NAU and UofA Wednesday in an attempt to cultivate student interest in the law-making process.

During the informal luncheon at the state Capitol, students expressed their concerns and complaints to the lawmakers.

Sen. Tom Patterson, R-Phoenix, said, "I had a pleasant time talking to the students and finding out what they are concerned about."

"Most students said they are frustrated with the parking. There was a student who was very candid with me about her bad experiences with the Education college and their teachers' requirements in particular."

Brad Golich, executive director of the Arizona Students' Association, said interaction between students and lawmakers is critical for the future of higher education.

"Lawmakers of this state need to focus on the value of higher education because this will ultimately affect the economy of this state," he said.

Golich said lawmakers this year will be hearing a number of bills affecting students, including The Student Financial Aid Trust Fund, program changes and the universities budgets.

John Fees, president of Associated Students, said Wednesday's event was to let students know that they can help lobby for legislation.

"By interacting with the lawmakers, students are no longer passive observers," Fees said. "They have now become active participants in their education."

Shawn Whaten, an ASU student and a luncheon participant, said: "I decided to come and meet them because I was curious to find out what they are like."

"You hear about who they are and what they do, and I just wanted to find out what they are like and how responsive they are to students."

The free luncheon was sponsored by ASA and cost the organization approximately $1,200.

ASU student Frank McCune, said, "I got positive responses from the people I talked to, but I hope that something can be done about getting classes that I need to take."

McCune, a political science major, said he told the lawmakers that he was tired of taking classes he did not want because the classes he needed were full.

Senate committee advances bill to spend $3.75 million

PHOENIX (AP) — Half the member of the state Senate have gone on record in favor of spending an extra $3.75 million over the next five years if Arizona State University wins a $37 million federal contract for high technology research.

Arizona State and a coalition of high-tech companies are competing against similar groups from Georgia and Texas, Illinois, Ohio and Pennsylvania for a five-year grant from U.S. Defense Logistics Agency to operate an experimental factory for precision gears used in jet engines and other high-performance machinery.

The project is known officially as the Instrumented Factory for Precision Gears, or INFAC.

Lawmakers on the 15-member Senate

Appropriations Committee, frustrated by Arizona's loss of other high-technology projects such as Sematech and the Superconducting Super Collider asked whether backers of Arizona's INFAC effort would be coming back for additional monies.

But the backers told them that the legislature will have to pay its share only if it gets the project and that there isn't enough time between now and when the grant will be awarded for any more monetary requests.

Arizona State and a coalition of companies including McDonnell Douglas Helicopter Co. and Allied-Signal Aerospace Co. have already committed several million dollars more in hopes of landing INFAC.

House to vote on paid holiday honoring King

PHOENIX (AP) — House lawmakers have decided to dispose of the Martin Luther King holiday controversy early in the session and dump the issue in the lap of the Senate, which killed the proposal last year.

House Speaker Jane Hull, R-Phoenix, told members of the Republican caucus Wednesday that she would call for a vote on the bill shortly after the House convenes this morning.

"There's no point in having it hanging around," she said. "It is extremely important to certain people and I would like to have it treated with respect."

Mrs. Hull said it appeared that there were "34 or 35" votes for the bill, which requires 31 for passage. Floor speeches will be limited to remarks by the bill's sponsor, Phoenix Democrat Sandra Kennedy, Mrs. Hull said.

House Minority Leader Art Hamilton, D-Phoenix, said he agreed with that plan, adding that he did not believe anyone's mind would be changed by anything that might be said.

Rep. Brenda Burns, R-Glendale, said she was prepared to offer an amendment to the bill calling for a public vote on the holiday, but was not sure that she would introduce it.

"I've been talking to people about it and I'm about talked out of it," she said Wednesday. She did not return telephone calls to her office Wednesday evening.

Mrs. Hull said it appeared that backers of the holiday had the votes to defeat such an amendment.

Mrs. Burns said she was considering the amendment "because my constituents feel very strongly about it (the King holiday). Most of them are opposed to it."

"Most of my people, those for or against it, feel the people should have a vote," she said.

Hamilton said he would oppose the amendment if Mrs. Burns introduces it.

"We've made it clear to members of the caucus that we'd like to see the bill passed as introduced without that kind of an amendment," Hamilton said. "I'm hopeful that if an amendment of that kind is offered it will be defeated."

Mrs. Burns said that she opposed the bill because "I am concerned that it might diminish the feelings we have for our presidents."

Knife-wielding bandits rob convenience store

By MIKE BURGESS
State Press

Two men, one of whom was armed with a knife, robbed a Tempe store late Monday of an undisclosed amount of cash, police said.

The stickup occurred about 11:41 p.m. when the men entered the Circle K store at 939 W. Baseline Road, said Tempe police spokesman Sgt. Al Taylor.

Taylor said one of the suspects approached the female clerk, brandished a knife and demanded money while the other suspect forced a customer to lay face down on the floor.

The suspects then left the store on foot heading westbound, Taylor said. A police canine was called but could only track the suspects to an apartment west of the store where officers found a tennis shoe that may have belonged to one of the men, he added.

Police described the suspect with the knife as a black male, 25 to 35 years old, 5-foot-9-inches and 145 pounds. He was wearing a red tank top and blue jeans. The second suspect was also a black male, 25 to 35 years old and 180 pounds. He was seen wearing a blue sweatshirt and jeans.

Tempe police also reported:

•Arrest/auto theft, trespassing, assault: 12:07 p.m. Monday, 300 block of West Pebble Beach Drive. A 16-year-old boy was arrested after he allegedly stole a 1984 Honda motorcycle from an apartment patio and then got into a scuffle with one of the apartment's residents. He was turned over to juvenile authorities.

•Arrest/aggravated assault: Tuesday, Curry and Scottsdale Roads. An 18-year-old Tempe man was arrested after he allegedly

Devils defeat Cal-Poly with late-game effort

By DEAN GYORGY
State Press

Scoring four runs in both the seventh and eighth innings, the Sun Devils pulled away from a close game and buried Cal-Poly Pomona, 10-2, on Wednesday at Packard Stadium.

ASU has not lost at home since last March 18, producing a string of 26 straight regular-season games. The streak is the fifth-longest in ASU history, coming in behind the 33 in a row of 1976-77.

The lackadaisical approach that angered Coach Jim Brock after Tuesday's contest was erased by Wednesday's intensity.

"It was the kind of game where for a while nothing was going right for us," Brock said. "We still stayed in and battled and got out of some tough situations."

"I thought that was the type of emotion we should expect."

The Devils fell behind early, as senior lefthanded pitcher David Cassidy yielded hits and eventual runs to the first two Bronco hitters he faced.

ASU tied the score in the second inning after Dan Rumsey singled, Mike Kelly doubled, and Anthony Manahan scored the pair with a double to left field.

The game then settled into a stalemate, although Cassidy continued to toil in his first start of the year. He retired the side in order only once in his 5 1/2 of work. Devil double-plays in the second and fourth innings helped keep the Broncos from inflicting further damage.

"It was not vintage Cassidy," Brock said. "He was definitely struggling, but he made some great pitches to get himself out of trouble."

Freshman Kip Vaughn (1-0) took over for Cassidy in the sixth, and was on the mound when the already-depleted ASU catching ranks suffered another possible setback.

With two outs, Bronco Dan Fouts broke from third base to the plate, hoping to rush the freshman Vaughn into a balk. But Vaughn stepped back off the pitching rubber and threw home. Catcher Tucker Hammargren fielded the throw in plenty of time and blocked the plate. Fouts crashed into him, shoulder down, but Hammargren held onto the ball and Fouts was called out.

Although Brock said he thought the play was legal, the umpires felt otherwise and ejected Fouts from the game.

Hammargren suffered a bruised left knee and a sprained right ankle. It is not clear if he will be able to compete this weekend when the Sun Devils travel to Florida State.

The Devils finally found the offensive groove in the seventh inning.

Tommy Adams hit a solo home run to left field making it 3-2. Two singles and a walk later, Mike Kelly cleared the bases with a three-run double to left-center, giving the Devils a 6-2 lead.

In that seventh inning, senior Bob Dombrowski entered ASU trivia history. His bunt single was the 20,000th base hit of the Sun Devil baseball program, which began in 1959.

ASU scored four more times in the eighth, and Oscar Rivas came on to earn his second save of the year.

"We came out a little bit more fired up today," senior co-captain Kevin Higgins said. "We were trying to pick each other up a little more, getting more excited about things that happened in the game."

Olympics are over but ASU track has just begun

By KELLY PEARCE
State Press

Carl Lewis and Florence Griffith-Joyner sprinted into the limelight this summer during the 23rd Olympiad and made a name for the sport of track and field.

The glory of those 1988 Summer Games may be fading, but a look in Sun Angel Stadium would reveal javelin, hammer, shotput and discus throwers, pole vaulters and high jumpers working hard to be the best, said assistant men's and women's track and field coach Ed Gorman.

"The United States had a successful Olympiad and this can only help track in the U.S.," he said. "We're going to be thin in number and talent this season, but we have a lot of quality athletes."

There may only be 10 returning field event participants, but Gorman said his athletes have donned a positive attitude.

"If you are negative, you're going to get negative results," he said. "We are going to do the best we can do."

The ASU track program was stricken with probation last summer following an investigation of NCAA infractions by former coach Clyde Duncan. The investigation led to restriction of off-campus competition and recruitment for two years.

"The only people I feel bad for are the people who were not involved (in the probation) and are being punished for something they didn't have anything to do with," Gorman said. "But these are the cards we were dealt."

"The team has come through the adversity great. There is light at the end of the tunnel."

When the tracksters come out onto the field March 4 against Texas Tech and UC-Irvine, in their first of four home meets, they will have the talents of sophomore shotputter and discus thrower Shane Collins and junior decathlete Matt Zuber.

Great things are expected of Collins, who is also a defensive lineman on the ASU football team. He placed second at the Pac-10 championships last year in the shotput.

"Shane is a national caliber athlete," Gorman said. "He had a fine year last year, but we're not satisfied with that. This year we're looking to see even more great things."

Zuber took second in the 1988 Pac-10 championship in the decathlon, his first year competing in this event.

"He is a quality athlete with a lot of potential," Gorman said. "He is in the same boat, development-wise, as Shane is."

Even though Gorman said there are tracksters on the rise, there are still problems ahead for the field squad.

First, the team lost athletes to graduation, including Mark Gersten and David Barlia. Gersten holds the school record in indoor pole vaulting. He did well in this event at the Pac-10 championships last season and qualified for the NCAA championship. Barlia achieved the same feats as Gersten only he did it throwing the javelin.

Second, the field program lost heptathlon participant Lennon Gardner when she broke her ankle before Christmas.

Third, because of the probation a majority of the field team will redshirt this season so that they will not lose eligibility. Gorman said the number of redshirts has not yet been determined.

"But I'm optimistic and realistic," he said about the team's obstacles.

Even though the probation affected the team's talent-base, Gorman said it did not affect his coaching.

Last season he became the interim head coach following the dismissal of Duncan.

Head Coach Tom Jones was hired in August, allowing Gorman to devote more time to coaching on the field.

"It (the probation) affected me in a positive way," he said.

Because the team has only four home meets, Gorman said intrasquad drills are held to strengthen the athletes.

"We use it as a barometer," he said. "They are hungry for competition, and this is a way to have some fun."

"You have to have an extremely organized plan of attack with their workouts."

However, most of the field squad will compete unattached in the indoor track season now in progress. They must pay their own way or run for a club.

Gorman said he tries to forget about the probation that hangs over the team's head.

"When you're on the field, you don't know there's a probation going on," he said.

Women's basketball coach pushes for Pac-10 tourney

By KYLE D. ENG
State Press

ASU women's basketball head coach Maura McHugh would like a chance to go to the NCAA tournament, even if the Devils don't win the Pac-10 in regular season play.

McHugh's solution . . . a Pac-10 women's tournament. It would be similar to the men's year-end annual tournament, which automatically sends the winner to NCAA post-season play as the conference champions, regardless of its regular-season finish.

"I would really like to see it happen, next year," said McHugh. "We have a long way to go before we can convince some of the other coaches that it should be done."

The Pac-10 and the Big 10 are the only Division-I conferences in the NCAA that do not hold a year-end tournament, according to Assistant Executive Director for NCAA championships Trisha Burke.

"The Pac-10 is one of two conferences who don't automatically qualify a conference champion through a tournament," Burke said. "All indications are that through the other conferences it (the tournament) works rather well."

Burke also added that though the Pac-10 is a minority among the NCAA by not having a tournament, "the choice of whether or not a conference wants a tournament is ultimately up to the individual conferences; that's where the decision lies."

McHugh said the league playoffs can do nothing but help the conference.

"I think it's a situation where it gives a team something else to play for," said McHugh, whose teams participated in the Big 8 tournament when she coached at Oklahoma. "It gives you that extra incentive, it gives your underclassmen more experience, and it gives your seniors one last chance."

In August at the head coaches conference, the idea of a tournament was discussed by the Pac-10 coaches, but was turned down by a margin of six votes to four.

One of the major opponents of the Pac-10 tournament is USC head coach Linda Sharp who led the Trojans to a national championship in 1984.

"At this point, I am just not in favor of having a tournament for the ladies," Sharp said. "I think there is one reason you have a post-tournament and that is for the money created by the television exposure."

Sharp said playing each team twice was enough, and that another tournament would only mean loss of school time for the players.

"I think there may be a possibility for it in the future, but right now it's not the time for it," Sharp added. "You can never really rule it out though."

McHugh said playing in a tournament has more benefits.

"I think there are two arguments, from the teams who finish at the bottom and the teams who finish on top," McHugh said. "If you're on top you don't want to play because you fear if you lose you could lose a tournament bid, and if you're on the bottom you want a tournament because you have really nothing to lose."

"I feel that if you're on top, it would be a good tuneup for the NAAs and if you're on the bottom all it takes is three

Even though Gorman said there are tracksters on the rise, there are still problems ahead for the field squad.

First, the team lost athletes to graduation, including Mark Gersten and David Barlia. Gersten holds the school record in indoor pole vaulting. He did well in this event at the Pac-10 championships last season and qualified for the NCAA championship. Barlia achieved the same feats as Gersten only he did it throwing the javelin.

Second, the field program lost heptathlon participant Lennon Gardner when she broke her ankle before Christmas.

Third, because of the probation a majority of the field team will redshirt this season so that they will not lose eligibility. Gorman said the number of redshirts has not yet been determined.

"But I'm optimistic and realistic," he said about the team's obstacles.

Even though the probation affected the team's talent-base, Gorman said it did not affect his coaching.

Last season he became the interim head coach following the dismissal of Duncan.

Head Coach Tom Jones was hired in August, allowing Gorman to devote more time to coaching on the field.

"It (the probation) affected me in a positive way," he said.

Because the team has only four home meets, Gorman said intrasquad drills are held to strengthen the athletes.

"We use it as a barometer," he said. "They are hungry for competition, and this is a way to have some fun."

"You have to have an extremely organized plan of attack with their workouts."

However, most of the field squad will compete unattached in the indoor track season now in progress. They must pay their own way or run for a club.

Gorman said he tries to forget about the probation that hangs over the team's head.

"When you're on the field, you don't know there's a probation going on," he said.

Women's basketball coach pushes for Pac-10 tourney

By KYLE D. ENG
State Press

ASU women's basketball head coach Maura McHugh would like a chance to go to the NCAA tournament, even if the Devils don't win the Pac-10 in regular season play.

McHugh's solution . . . a Pac-10 women's tournament. It would be similar to the men's year-end annual tournament, which automatically sends the winner to NCAA post-season play as the conference champions, regardless of its regular-season finish.

"I would really like to see it happen, next year," said McHugh. "We have a long way to go before we can convince some of the other coaches that it should be done."

The Pac-10 and the Big 10 are the only Division-I conferences in the NCAA that do not hold a year-end tournament, according to Assistant Executive Director for NCAA championships Trisha Burke.

"The Pac-10 is one of two conferences who don't automatically qualify a conference champion through a tournament," Burke said. "All indications are that through the other conferences it (the tournament) works rather well."

Burke also added that though the Pac-10 is a minority among the NCAA by not having a tournament, "the choice of whether or not a conference wants a tournament is ultimately up to the individual conferences; that's where the decision lies."

McHugh said the league playoffs can do nothing but help the conference.

"I think it's a situation where it gives a team something else to play for," said McHugh, whose teams participated in the Big 8 tournament when she coached at Oklahoma. "It gives you that extra incentive, it gives your underclassmen more experience, and it gives your seniors one last chance."

In August at the head coaches conference, the idea of a tournament was discussed by the Pac-10 coaches, but was turned down by a margin of six votes to four.

One of the major opponents of the Pac-10 tournament is USC head coach Linda Sharp who led the Trojans to a national championship in 1984.

"At this point, I am just not in favor of having a tournament for the ladies," Sharp said. "I think there is one reason you have a post-tournament and that is for the money created by the television exposure."

Sharp said playing each team twice was enough, and that another tournament would only mean loss of school time for the players.

"I think there may be a possibility for it in the future, but right now it's not the time for it," Sharp added. "You can never really rule it out though."

McHugh said playing in a tournament has more benefits. "I think there are two arguments, from the teams who finish at the bottom and the teams who finish on top," McHugh said. "If you're on top you don't want to play because you fear if you lose you could lose a tournament bid, and if you're on the bottom you want a tournament because you have really nothing to lose."

"I feel that if you're on top, it would be a good tuneup for the NCAAs and if you're on the bottom all it takes is three consecutive wins to win the tournament. All you have to do is get hot for one weekend."

The four-day tournament would be identical to the men's tournament:

- On the first day the seventh-place and 10th-place teams would play along with the eighth-place and ninth-place teams.

- The winner of the seventh/tenth-place game would then play the first-place team on the next day of competition.

- The winner of the eighth/ninth-place game would then play the second-place team. Also competing on the second day would be the third-place and sixth-place teams, while the fourth- and fifth-place teams would go head to head.

- On the third day the winner of the first-place game would advance and play the winner of the fourth/fifth-place game. The other matchup would pit the winner of the second-place game and the winner of the third/sixth-place game.

- The championship would take place on the fourth and final day, matching the two winners from the third-day's action.

The winner receives an automatic ticket to the field of 48 teams which compile the NCAA women's basketball tournament.

Christine Hoyles, the Pac-10 assistant commissioner in charge of tournaments, said the Pac-10 has been considering it for many years.

"I think pretty much the vote has been right down the middle, half of them for it, half of them against it," Hoyles said.

McHugh said she hopes to bring up the matter again when the coaches meet after the season.

"I really don't think that the winner of the conference in regular season will lose their bid if they lose in the tournament," McHugh added. "It would do nothing then to help and promote women's basketball."

Sun Devils face Stanford

By GARY JACKSON
State Press

Eight games are all that is left in regular season for the Sun Devil basketball team to put together a lineup that can secure a winning season.

But at 7:30 tonight in the University Activity Center ASU plays host to Stanford, a Pac-10 powerhouse that could prove to be a major obstacle in the Devils' path.

ASU (10-8, 3-6 Pac-10) is trying to maintain a team bond after suffering devastating injuries in hopes of salvaging the season and improving its standings in the conference.

Stanford (15-5, 7-3) is looking to steal first-place honors in the Pac-10 from Arizona (14-2, 8-1) and increase the possibility of post-season action.

The Cardinal top gun is senior guard Todd Lichti, an All-America candidate who averages 20 points per game.

"Lichti is an ace, a wiz in the open court," ASU coach Steve Patterson said. "My concern, more than Lichti, is their inside game. Their inside players scored 64 points in the last ball game — 12 or 13 of those baskets were off of offensive rebounds. I'm more concerned about neutralizing those guys."

Stanford's big men consist of 6-foot-8 seniors Howard Wright and Eric Reveno and 6-foot-7 sophomore Andrew Vlahov.

To fill the ASU gap left by center Mark Becker, who is out for the season due to a fractured navicular bone in his right hand, small forward Alex Austin will move to two positions he has played in reserve situations this season.

On offense, Austin (6-foot-6) will move to center and on defense he will guard at power forward. Patterson said Austin's experience at playing the post position in high school will aid him in the transition.

Guard Matt Anderson, who has often played a reserve role at small forward, will move to take on a full-time status at that position.

"I feel pretty good about Alex and (6-foot-7 forward) Trent (Edwards) playing the inside positions," Patterson said.

"One of the things that this will give us is a quicker lineup, particularly with our little guys, (guards) Adrian (Brown) and Ron (Waller)," he said. "We can do some things with their quickness, with some pressure that will neutralize the lack of size."

Stanford's strength in rebounding could offset ASU's quickness — possibly Patterson's best weapon against the Cardinal. During the 94-65 loss to Stanford earlier this season, the Cardinal outrebounded the Devils, 42-17.

"They don't have great quickness, but they're a surprisingly good running team," Patterson said. "Their running comes after steals and after missed baskets. We have to take care of the ball and do an effective job of scoring on the offensive end."

Patterson said Stanford's depth enables it to have fresh players on the court, and the key to beating the Cardinal will be to allow the Sun Devils' front line to rest as well.

Torin Williams, who missed three games due to strep throat, will be the first — and perhaps the only Devil — to provide relief for the power forwards, Patterson said.

"He is making very slow progress — he is a long way from being 100 percent," Patterson said. "Right now I don't think we can look at him for more than four or five minutes in a stretch."

Another Sun Devil possibility is sophomore Emory Lewis, who has been out all season with an ankle fracture, but was cleared to play by team physicians Monday.

"There is no longer a sixth-year possibility for a medical redshirt," Patterson said. "The five-year clock is counting."

Patterson said the halfcourt trap was effective against the Stanford, who was the victim of an uncharacteristic 18 turnovers during the teams' last meeting in January.

"Stanford is a very pattern-orientated team," Patterson said. "I think you have to try to disrupt their patterns, and I think you have to try to keep the ball out of Lichti's hands as much as possible."
